Saṁyutta Nikāya

The Book of the Kindred Sayings

Translated from the Pali
by Mrs. Rhys-Davids
and F.L. Woodward, M.A.

Saṁyutta Nikāya

The Book of the Kindred Sayings

Translated from the Pali by Mrs. Rhys-Davids and F.L. Woodward, M.A.
Assisted by Sūriyagoḍa Sumangala Thera

e-Book Version 2.0 — 2025 Dec 25

Copyright The Pali Text Society
Commercial Rights Reserved
Creative Commons License

Namo tassa Bhagavato arahato Sammā-sambuddhassa

Honour to that Exalted One, Arahant, the Fully Enlightened One

Credits

Original Texts: Pali Text Society (PTS)

This collection of e-books has been compiled from the ongoing and continuously updated HTML source files found on BuddhaDust.net . Although there may be errors related to the Optical Character Recognition (OCR) that was used to scan the original books, it was felt that this edition of the e-book was good enough for release in its current state. If there are any doubts concerning the changes made by the editors, the original scans can also be found here on the website.

There have been some good faith alterations to the original hard copy text, and many of the suttas which were abridged originally have been fully rolled out. Some archaic word spellings have been modernized, but most words were left as they were in the original. Certain editorial comments contained in the text and made by the BuddhaDust editor are identified by [Ed.:] in the footnotes.

This December 2025 edition includes minor spelling corrections, formatting consistency improvements, and additional rolled-out sections that were abridged in the previous editions.

I give much appreciation and gratitude to Stephen J. Torrence, who spent many tedious hours writing RegEx macros to transform the Buddhadust.net website into a proper e-book. Stephen also did the covers and many other action items including manually creating the Tables of Contents for the SN and AN. Without his help, this project would probably never have come to fruition or would have been far from the professional “look and feel” I believe we have achieved.

I would also like to thank Brad Garrison, Michael Rickicki, and Peter N for helping with the spell checking process, and especially Lean Lim who checked several batches I sent her. It is also worthe noting that the most recent updates were facilitated by AI tools Google's Gemini and Anthropic's Claude.

May all beings share in the fruits of this great merit!

— Bhante Bhikkhu Subhūti

The original scanned texts (in image format) can be found at:
http://buddhadust.net/backmatter/indexes/idx_downloads.htm#pts_pdfs

Issues or mistakes may be reported on https://github.com/bksubhuti/buddhadust/issues

Recent versions can be found at https://github.com/bksubhuti/buddhadust/tree/master/pts-ebooks

Table of Contents

Title
Credits
Table of Contents

Part I: Kindred Sayings with Verses
1. The Devas
1. The 'Reed' Suttas | 1-10
2. The 'Paradise' Suttas | 11-20
3. The 'Sword' Suttas | 21-30
4. The 'Satullapa-Group' Suttas | 31-40
5. The 'Burning' Suttas | 41-50
6. The 'Decay' Suttas | 51-60
7. The 'Over-Under' Suttas | 61-70
8. The 'Slaughter' Suttas | 71-80
2. The Sons of the Devas
1. Kassapa | Suttas 1-10
2. The 'Anāthapiṇḍika' Suttas | 11-20
3. The 'Divers Sectaries' Suttas | 21-30
3. Kosala
1. Bonds | Suttas 1-10
2. Childless | Suttas 11-20
3. [Untitled] | Suttas 21-30
4. The Māra Suttas | 1-25
5. Suttas of the Sisters | 1-10
6. The Brahmā Suttas
I: Suttas 1-10
II: The Quintuplet | Suttas 11-15
7. The Brāhmana Suttas
I: Arahants | Suttas 1-10
II: The Lay Adherents | Suttas 11-21
8. The Vaṅgisa Suttas | 1-12
9. The Forest Suttas | 1-14
10. The Yakkha Suttas | 1-12

11. The Sakka Suttas
I: Suttas 1-10
II: Suttas 11-20
III: The Sakka-Quintuplet | Suttas 20-25
Part II: On Cause and Other Subjects
12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause
1. The 'Buddha' Suttas | 1-10
2. Sustenance-Suttas | 11-20
3. The 'Ten Powers' | Suttas 21-30
4. Kaḷāra the Nobleman | Suttas 31-40
5. The Housefather | Suttas 41-50
6. 'The Tree' Suttas | 51-60
7. The Great Chapter | Suttas 61-70
8. Recluses and Brahmins Suttas | 71-81
9. Abridged Contents Suttas | 81-93
13. On Understanding | Suttas 1-11
14. Kindred Sayings on Element
1a. Internal Element | Suttas 1-5
1b. External Element | Suttas 6-10
2. Suttas 11-22
3. Suttas 23-29
4. Suttas 30-39
15. On the Incalculable Beginning
1. Suttas 1-10
2. Suttas 11-20
16. On Kassapa | Suttas 1-13
17. On Gain and Favours | Suttas 1-43
18. About Rahula
1a. The Eye (a) | Suttas 1-10
1b. The Eye (b) | Suttas 11-22
19. On Lakkhana's Questions
1. Suttas 1-10
2. Suttas 11-20
20. On Parables | Suttas 1-12
21. About Brethren | Suttas 1-12
Part III: Kindred Sayings on Elements

22. Sensory Existence and Other Subjects
I.1. On Elements (Khandhā) | Suttas 1-11
I.2. On Impermanence | Suttas 12-21
I.3. On the Burden | Suttas 22-32
I.4. On Not Yours | Suttas 33-42
I.5. On Being an Island to Self | Suttas 43-52
II.1. On Attachment | Suttas 53-62
II.2. On the Arahant | Suttas 63-72
II.3. On what Must be Devoured | Suttas 73-82
II.4. The Elders | Suttas 83-92
II.5. On Flowers | Suttas 93-102
III.1. Suttas 103-112
III.2. Suttas 113-125
III.3. Suttas 126-135
III.4. Suttas 136-148
III.5. Suttas 149-158
23. On Rādha
I. Suttas 1-10
II. Suttas 11-22
III. Requests | Suttas 23-34
IV. Confidential | Suttas 35-46
24. On Views
1. The Stream-Winner | Suttas 1-18
2.1. First Repetition | Suttas 19-36
2.2. Second Repetition | Suttas 37-44
3. Third Repetition | Suttas 45-70
4. Fourth Repetition | Suttas 71-96
25. On Entering | Suttas 1-10
26. On Genesis | Suttas 1-10
27. On the Corruptions | Suttas 1-10
28. On Sāriputta | Suttas 1-10
29. On Nāgas
Suttas 1-10
Suttas 11-20
Suttas 21-30
Suttas 31-40

Suttas 41-50
30. On Harpies | Suttas 1-46
31. On Gandharvas | Suttas 1-112
32. On Cloud-Spirits | Suttas 1-57
33. On Vacchagotta | Suttas 1-55
34. On Jhāna (or Samādhi) | Suttas 1-55
Part IV: On the 'Six-Fold Sphere' of Sense and Other Subjects
35. On the Sixfold Sphere of Sense
I.1. On Impermanence | Suttas 1-12
I.2. On the Pairs | Suttas 13-22
I.3. On the All | Suttas 23-32
I.4. On Quality of Rebirth | Suttas 33-42
I.5. On Impermanence | Suttas 43-52
II.1. On Ignorance | Suttas 53-62
II.2. On Migajāla | Suttas 63-73
II.3. On the Sick Man | Suttas 74-83
II.4. On Channa and Others | Suttas 84-93
II.5. The Chapter of the Six | Suttas 94-103
III.1. On Winning Security | Suttas 104-113
III.2. On the Worldly Sensual Elements | Suttas 114-123
III.3. On the Householders | Suttas 124-133
III.4. On Devadaha | Suttas 134-144
III.5. On 'New and Old' | Suttas 145-154
IV.1. On the Destruction of the Lure | Suttas 155-166
IV.2. The Sixty Summaries | Suttas 167-186
IV.3. On the Ocean | Suttas 187-196
IV.4. On the Snake | Suttas 197-207
36. Kindred Sayings about Feeling
1. With Verses | Suttas 1-10
2. On Solitude | Suttas 11-20
3. The Method of the Hundred and Eight | Suttas 21-29
37. Kindred Sayings about Womankind
First Repetition | Suttas 1-4
The Dark Side 1 | Suttas 5-14
The Dark Side 2 | Suttas 15-24
Suttas 25-34

38. About Jambukhādaka | Suttas 1-16
39. About Sāmaṇḍaka | Suttas 1-16
40. About Moggallāna | Suttas 1-11
41. About Citta | Suttas 1-10
42. About Headmen | Suttas 1-13
43. About the Uncompounded
I. Suttas 1-11
II. Suttas 12-44
44. About the Unrevealed | Suttas 1-11
Part V: The Great Chapter
45. Kindred Sayings on the Way
1. On Ignorance | Suttas 1-10
2. Dwelling | Suttas 11-20
3. Perversion | Suttas 21-30
4. On Conduct | Suttas 31-40
5. Of Other Views | Suttas 41-48
The Sun i. | Suttas 49-55
The Sun ii. | Suttas 56-62
One-Condition i. Seclusion | Suttas 63-69
One-Condition i. Restraint | Suttas 70-76
One-Condition ii. Seclusion | Suttas 77-83
One-Condition ii. Restraint | Suttas 84-90
Gaṅgā i. | Suttas 91-102
Gaṅgā ii. | Suttas 103-114
Gaṅgā iii. | Suttas 115-126
Gaṅgā iv. | Suttas 127-138
Gaṅgā v. | Suttas 139-148
Gaṅgā vi. | Suttas 149-160
Gaṅgā vii. | Suttas 161-170
Gaṅgā viii. | Suttas 171-180
46. On the Limbs of Wisdom
1. The Mountain | Suttas 1-10
2. The Sick Man | Suttas 11-20
3. Udāyi | Suttas 21-30
4. On Hindrances | Suttas 31-40
5. Roller of the Wheel | Suttas 41-50

6. Perseverance | Suttas 51-56
7. Breathing | Suttas 57-66
8. Cessation | Suttas 67-76
9. Gaṅgā Repetition | Suttas 77-88
10. Earnestness | Suttas 89-98
11. Deeds Requiring Strength | Suttas 99-110
12. On Longing | Suttas 111-120
13. The Flood | Suttas 121-130
47: On the Stations of Mindfulness
1. Ambapālī | Suttas 1-10
2. Nālandā | Suttas 11-20
3. Habit and Permanence | Suttas 21-30
4. Unheard Before | Suttas 31-40
5. The Deathless | Suttas 41-50
6. Gaṅgā Repetition | Suttas 51-62
7. Earnestness | Suttas 63-72
8. Deeds Requiring Strength | Suttas 73-84
9. Longing | Suttas 85-94
10. The Flood | Suttas 95-104
48. On the Faculties
1. Purity | Suttas 1-10
2. In A Less Degree | Suttas 11-20
3. The Six Faculties | Suttas 21-30
4. The Faculty of Ease | Suttas 31-40
5. Old Age | Suttas 41-50
6. Untitled | Suttas 51-60
7. On the Side of the Wisdom | Suttas 61-70
8. Gaṅgā Repetition | Suttas 71-82
9. Earnestness | Suttas 83-92
10. Deeds Requiring Strength | Suttas 93-104
11. Longing | Suttas 105-114
12. The Flood | Suttas 115-124
49: On the Right Efforts
1. Gaṅgā-Repetition | Suttas 1-12
2. Earnestness | Suttas 13-22
3. Deeds Requiring Strength | Suttas 23-34

4. Longing | Suttas 35-44
5. The Flood | Suttas 45-54
50. Kindred Sayings on the Powers
1. Gaṅgā Repetition | Suttas 1-12
2. Earnestness | Suttas 13-22
3. Deeds Requiring Strength | Suttas 23-34
4. Longing | Suttas 35-44
5. The Flood | Suttas 45-54
51. On the Bases of Psychic Power
1. Cāpāla | Suttas 1-10
2. The Shaking of the Terraced House | Suttas 11-20
3. [Untitled] | Suttas 21-32
4. Gangā-Repetition | Suttas 33-44
5. Earnestness | Suttas 45-54
6. Deeds Requiring Strength | Suttas 55-66
7. Longing | Suttas 67-76
8. The Flood | Suttas 77-86
52. Kindred Sayings about Anuruddha
1. In Solitude | Suttas 1-10
2. Thousandfold | Suttas 11-24
53: On the Four Trances
1. Gangā-Repetition | Suttas 1-12
2. Earnestness | Suttas 13-22
3. Deeds Requiring Strength | Suttas 23-34
4. Longing | Suttas 35-44
5. The Flood | Suttas 45-54
54. About In-Breathing and Out-Breathing
1. The One Condition | Suttas 1-10
2. The One Condition 2 | Suttas 11-20
55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning
1. Veḷudvāra | Suttas 1-10
2. Thousandfold, or Royal Park | Suttas 11-20
3. Sarakāni | Suttas 21-30
4. Flood of Merit | Suttas 31-40
5. Flood of Merit with Verses | Suttas 41-50
6. Discreet | Suttas 51-61

7. Great Insight | Suttas 62-74
56: Kindred Sayings about the Truths
1. Concentration | Suttas 1-10
2. The Foundation of the Kingdom of the Norm | Suttas 11-20
3. Koṭigāma | Suttas 21-30
4. Siṅsapā Grove | Suttas 31-40
5. The Precipice | Suttas 41-50
6. Comprehension | Suttas 51-60
7. Cyclic-Repetition | Suttas 61-70
8. Few Abstain | Suttas 71-80
9. Uncooked-Grain Repetition | Suttas 81-90
10. More Numerous | Suttas 31-101
11. The Five Destinies | Suttas 102-131

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
1. Devatā-Saṃyutta
I. Naḷa-Vagga

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

1. The Devas[1]

I. The 'Reed' Suttas[2]

Suttas 1-10

Honour to that Exalted One Arahant Buddha Supreme!

---

[1] [1]

Sutta 1

Ogha Suttaṃ

Crossing the Flood

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain deva,
when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the whole Jeta Grove,
came [2] into the presence of the Exalted One,
and coming, saluted him and stood at one side.

So standing he spake thus to the Exalted One: —

"Tell me, dear sir,[3]
how didst thou cross the flood?"[4]

[The Exalted One: —]

"Unstayed, friend, and unstriving
did I cross the flood."[5]

"But how didst thou, dear sir,
without stay, without striving,
cross the flood?"

"When I, friend, kept myself stayed,
then verily I sank;
when I, friend, strove hard,
then verily was I whirled about.[6]

And so, friend,
unstayed, unstriving
did I cross the flood."

[The deva: —]

"Lo! now what length of time since I beheld[7]
A perfect saint[8] [from evil] wholly free,
One who, nor stayed nor striving in the flood,
Hath safely crossed where all the world sticks fast."[9]

[3] Thus spake that deva,
and the Master approved.

And the deva, noting that approval,
made salutation 'by the right'[10]
and vanished there and then.[11]

Sutta 2

Nimokkha Suttaṃ

Deliverance

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain deva,
when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the whole Jeta Grove,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and coming, saluted him and stood at one side.

So standing he spake thus to the Exalted One: —

"Dost thou, dear sir, know for them that live deliverance, freedom, detachment?"[12]

"Yea, I know, O friend, for them that live deliverance, freedom, detachment."

"As what, dear sir, dost thou know for them that live deliverance, freedom, detachment?"

"When life-lust,[13] when becoming is no more,
When mind that marks and works by sense is dead,
When feeling's turmoil ceases, laid to rest: —
I know, 0 friend, that thus, to them that live, Deliverance, freedom, and detachment come."

Sutta 3

Upaneyya Suttaṃ

Led to It's Doom

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain deva,
when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the whole Jeta Grove,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and coming, saluted him and stood at one side.

So standing, the deva spoke this verse before the Exalted One: —[14]

[4] "Life to its doom is led.[15] Our years are few.[16]
Led to decay, for us no shelters stand,
Whoso doth contemplate this fear of death,
Let him so act that merit brings him bliss."

[The Exalted One: —]

"Life to its doom is led. Our years are few.
For us, led to decay, no shelters stand.
Whoso doth contemplate this fear of death,
Let him reject the bait of all the worlds.
Let him aspire after the final peace."[17]

Sutta 4

Accenti Suttaṃ

Passing by

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain deva,
when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the whole Jeta Grove,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and coming, saluted him and stood at one side.
So standing, the deva spoke this verse before the Exalted One: —

"The hours[18] pass by. Nights drive us ever on.
Stages of life in turn abandon us:—
Whoso doth contemplate this fear of death,
Let him so act that merit brings him bliss."

[The Exalted One: —]

"The hours pass by. Nights drive us ever on.
Stages of life in turn abandon us.
Whoso doth contemplate this fear of death,
Let him reject the bait of all the worlds,
Let him aspire after the final peace."

---

[5]

Sutta 5

Kati Chinde Suttaṃ

How Many Should He Cut?

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain deva,
when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the whole Jeta Grove,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and coming, saluted him and stood at one side.
So standing, the deva spoke this verse before the Exalted One: —

"How[19] many should he cut? How many leave?
How many should he further cultivate?
How many ties transcending can he win
The name of Brother 'Who-hath-crossed-the-Flood'?"

[The Exalted One: —]

"Tis Five that he should cut, Five should he leave,
And Five that he should further cultivate.
Five ties transcending, his it is to win
The name of Brother 'Who-hath-crossed-the-Flood.'"

Sutta 6

Jagara Suttaṃ

Vigil

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain deva,
when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the whole Jeta Grove,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and coming, saluted him and stood at one side.
So standing, the deva spoke this verse before the Exalted One: —

"How[20] many sleep, when others are awake?
How many wake, when others are asleep?
How many working, do we gather dust?
And through how many are we wholly cleansed?"

[The Exalted One: —]

"Tis five that sleep for five that are awake,
And five that wake whenother five do sleep.
By work of five it is we gather dust,
By five again are we made wholly clean."

---

[6]

Sutta 7

Appaṭividitā Suttaṃ

Not Grasped

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain deva,
when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the whole Jeta Grove,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and coming, saluted him and stood at one side.
So standing, the deva spoke this verse before the Exalted One: —

"They who ne'er having pierced[21] the truth of things[22]
Are led astray errant 'mong other creeds,
Asleep they waken not. Now is the hour
For them to wake!"[23]

[The Exalted One: —]

"They who well having pierced the truth of things
Are nowise let astray 'mong other creeds,
Wholly awake are they, they fully know,[24]
Walk through th'uneven with an even stride."[25]

Sutta 8

Susammuṭṭhā Suttaṃ

Wholly Blurred

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain deva,
when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the whole Jeta Grove,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and coming, saluted him and stood at one side.
So standing, the deva spoke this verse before the Exalted One: —

"In whom the truth of things is wholly blurred,[26]
And they thus led astray 'mong other creeds,
Asleep they waken not. Now is the hour
For them to wake!"

[7] [The Exalted One: —]

"In whom the truth of things is nowise blurred,
And they not led astray 'mong other creeds,
Wholly awake are they, they fully know,
Walk through th'uneven with an even stride."

Sutta 9

Mānakāma Suttaṃ

Desire for Delusion

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain deva,
when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the whole Jeta Grove,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and coming, saluted him and stood at one side.
So standing, the deva spoke this verse before the Exalted One: —

"Are vain conceits[27] wished for by him and welcomed,
Ne'er wins he here taming [of mind and body].
Lone in the woods though he dwell, if he daily,
Ne'er may he pass over the Death-realm confines."

[The Exalted One: —]

"All vain conceits leaving, well concentrated,
Lovely in heart,[28] wholly emancipated,
Lone in the woods dwelling at work and earnest,
Well may he cross over the Death-realm confines."

Sutta 10

Araññe Suttaṃ

In the Forest

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain deva,
when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the whole Jeta Grove,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and coming, saluted him and stood at one side.
So standing the deva addressed the Exalted One in a verse: —[29]

"Who in the forest make their wonted haunt —
The saintly livers of the holy life —
Who by one daily meal do break their fast:
Tell me how look they so serene of hue?"

[8] [The Exalted One: —]

"They make no lamentation o'er the past,
They yearn not after[30] that which is not come,
By what now is do they maintain themselves;
Hence comes it that they look serene of hue.[31]
By yearning after that which is not come,
By making lamentation o'er the past,
Hence come it that the foolish wither up
E'en as a tender reed by sickle shorn."

---

[1] Devatā The term, literally 'diety,' refers to a being difering only in details of physical constitution, and in habitat from a human being, and may mean either a deva, devaputta, or a devadhītā (daughter of the gods, goddess; see below I, 4, § 9). [?] This deva, says the commentatarial tradition, is one who in past ages had beheld, since the last Buddha, Kassapa, passed away, no other like him till this occasion. His beauty (abhikkantavaṇṇa) lay in the luminance emitted by his skin. As a Rūpa-world or higher heaven) deva, he had to assume a grosser materialization than a lower deva need do, or he could not have moved in this atmosphere (cf. Dialogues of the Buddha, ii, 244). Devas usually visited Buddhas and their disciples just beffore dawn. Comy. JetaGrove, presented by Anāthapiṇḍika the merchant millionaire, to the Buddha, implies the vihāra built there. This has been recently excavated.

[2] So named after the simile in Sutta 10, p. 8: 'a tender reed.'

[3] Mārisa. B. assigns to this word the meaning niddukkha, 'sorrowless one,' and calls it a kindly fashion (piya-samudācāra) of address customary among devas.

[4] I.e. the fourfold wave of craving for sensual joys, rebirth, erroneous opinions, and ignorance-begotten desires. Comy.

[5] The Buddhas, says B., teach either by reproving or by encouraging. This deva is conceited, deeming he knows all about the saintship of a Buddha. Hence he is reproved by an enigmatic reply, forcing him to put a further question.
The key to the little riddle is, that a wrong support of footing, and misdirected effort are as fatal as drowning straight away. 'Nor unstayed, nor without effort, absolutely, but rightly stayed with right effort, did I cross.' ... The Comy. names seven pairs of wrong supports and efforts.

[6] Nibbuyhāmi.

[7] Some Singh. MSS. read passāma 'we behold.' His beholding includes siritual discernment, says B.

[8] Brāhmaṇa, with all kilesa's (passions) extinct.

[9] B. here drops the false etymology of visa, 'poison,' in visattika Attasālinī, 264), and calls craving (taṇhā) the cause of cleaving āsatta-visattanādīhi kāraṇehi; /saj).

[10] Keeping his right side toward the saluted one as he passes round and away — a mark of respect.

[11] Lit. 'just there' 'There and then' is our equivalent idiom.

[12] These three terms nimokkha, pamokkha, viveka — are exegetically identified by B. with the Path, Fruition, and Nibbāna respectively, or all three of them, with Nibbāna alone. The deliverance is from kilesa's — let us say 'sin' — the 'detachment' is from misery, sorrow.

[13] Nandi, 'delight-in,' is the root, bhava, 'becoming,' is the kamma-bhava, or activities, whence comes rebirth. B. sees in these, and in the next two lines, as he is apt to do, a statement of the four 'khandhas' making up our mental personality.

[14] The text leaves us to upply the introductory description as in §§1, 2.

[15] The verb is in either the middle or passive voice: approaches death, as cattle are led by the cowherd. Comy. Cf. Dhammapada, 135. The verses recur below II, 2, §9; the former half occur A. i, 155; the first quarter, Jātaka iv, 398.

[16] A span of life is short as a whole and also in its component procedure, for at every moment of consciousness a being ceases and is reborn: such is the gist of B.'s discursus here. The deva, he thinks, considers his own heaven as a 'bait' to stimulate deeds of merit. The rejoinder sweeps aside all heavens.

[17] 'The final peace (accanta-santi) termed Nibbāna. Pekkho: wishing for, aspiring to.' Comy.

[18] Lit. times. 'Nights' corresponds in Indian poetry to our 'days.' Cf. the repetition of the first three lines, with varying conclusion in Jāt. iv, 487.

[19] Dhammapada, 370; Theragāthā, 15. The four Fives are by B. explained as in the Commentaries on these works, viz.: (1) the first 'five fetters,' (2) the second do., do.; (3) the five spiritual powers; (4) the five ties (sangā). See Pss. of the Brethren, p. 20, n.2. Cf. Also Rhys David's American Lectures, 1896, pp. 142-50.

[20] This riddle is held to refer to the Five Hindrances and the Five Spiritual Powers, which sleep and wake respectively, and soil or cleanse, according to the spiritual health of the individual. 'Dust' (raja) is always symbolical of worldly interests. Cf. below, VI, 1, § 1.

[21] Nāṇena paṭividdhā. By an exegetical pun, B. indicates the intuitional nature of the cognitive act in paṭividitā.

[22] 'The doctrines (or matters) of the Four Truths.' Comy.

[23] I.e. the great conjuncture of a Buddha's advent. Comy. To waken and to be wise are both conveyed by the word pabujjhanti.

[24] The wholly awake, the rightly buddhā, says B., are the enlightened who are (1) omniscient, (2) paccheka (i.e. cannot save others), (3) masters of the four truths, (4) learned. The lines refer to the first three.

[25] Lit. 'Walk evenly in the uneen.' 'The uneven' may refer to one's environment, one's sphere of being, or to moral corruptions. Comy. Thus in A. i, 35; iii, 50, it is rough or inaccessible places; ii, 74 f. astronomical irregularities; i, 154, conduct. Cf. M. i, 36; S. iv, 117. The Mininda frequently uses the term.

[26] Su-sammuṭṭhā, a strong term from muyh; cf. moha. B. illustrates by a man who having ploughed two fields and sown one, sees only the other lying fallow and laments that no crop appears.

[27] Māna, often rendered pride, but always implying the illusions or conceits besetting pride. 'Imagining a vain thing' in Psalms ii, 1, is māna. Error about the soul is often referred to it.

[28] Sucetaso: 'A beautiful consciousness conjoined with insight.' Comy. B. has here a discursus making out that the first three phrases refer to the three-fold sikkhā, or training in ethics, mental control, and insight (cf. Buddhism, Lond. 1912, p. 199 f.).

[29] This devatā. unlike those of the preceding verses, says B., was just a forest-dwelling fairy, impressed by witnessing the simple life of brethren in the woods.

[30] Pajappanti = patthayanti. Comy.

[31] After their meal, they retire to meditate, and attain to 'one-pointed' consciousness, distractions to the attention being overcome; and thought becomes coherent and concentrated. Thence the mind grows serene, thereby the blood is soothed and physical results generally are cleansed, and the complexion is cleared and beautified — so the Comy.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
1. Devatā-saṇyutta
II. Nandana Vagga

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

1. The Devas

2. The 'Paradise' Suttas

II.
The 'Paradise' Suttas

Sutta 11

'Paradise'

---

[8]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And the Exalted One addressed the brethren saying, "Bhikkhus!"

"Lord," they replied.

And he said:

"In times gone by, bhikkhus, a certain deva of the Three- [9] and-Thirty gods, while wandering as he listed in Nandana Wood,[1] attended by a troop of nymphs,[2] and supplied and provided with and surrounded by celestial sensuous enjoyments, uttered this verse: —

'They know no bliss who see not Nandana,
Abode of folk divine, splended Thrice-Ten!'

When he had so said, a certain deva rejoined with a verse: —

"Dost thou not know, O fool, how saints[3] have said:
Impermanent are all conditioned things;[4]
Their nature 't is to rise and pass away.
They come to pass, they cease ...
Happy the mastery of them and the peace!"[5]

Sutta 12

Gladness Ariseth

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain deva,
when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the whole Jeta Grove,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and coming, saluted him and stood at one side.
So standing he spake thus to the Exalted One: —

"Parent of sons in his sons is glad,
and glad is the swain in his herds of kine;
Gladness ariseth in man through sense,[6]
and gladdened is no man where sense is not."

[10] [The Exalted One: —][7]

"Parent of sons through his sons doth mourn,
and mourneth the swain through his herds of kine.
Mourning ariseth in man through sense,
and saddened is no man where sense is not."

Sutta 13

As We Love the Child

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain deva,
when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the whole Jeta Grove,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and coming, saluted him and stood at one side.
So standing, the deva spoke this verse before the Exalted One: —

"Naught love we as we love the child that's ours;[8]
No treasure rivals his who owneth kine;
Radiance to match the sunlight is there none;
The ocean among waters is supreme."

[The Exalted One: —]

"Naught love we as we love the inner self;[9]
No treasure rivals his who owneth corn,
Radiance with wisdom to compare there's none;
The rain among all waters is supreme."

Sutta 14

Of Noble Blood

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain deva,
when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the whole Jeta Grove,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and coming, saluted him and stood at one side.
So standing, the deva spoke this verse before the Exalted One: —

"Best[10] of all bipeds[11] he of noble blood,
And best of things four-footed is the steer;
Best among wives[12] the maiden nobly bred,
And he of sons who cometh first to birth."

[11][The Exalted One: —]

"Best biped he of full enlightenment,
And of four-footed things the finely trained,[13]
Best among wives she that best ministers,
And he of sons who parents' word obeys."

Sutta 15

Forest Sounds

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain deva,
when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the whole Jeta Grove,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and coming, saluted him and stood at one side.
So standing, the deva spoke this verse before the Exalted One: —

"'Tis the high hour of noon;
the birds rest silently[14]
Boometh the mighty forest;[15]
fearsome that sound to me."

[The Exalted One: —]

"'Tis the high hour of noon;
the birds rest silently.
Boometh the mighty forest;
enchanting that sound to me."[16]

---

[12]

Sutta 16

Sloth, Drowsiness

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain deva,
when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the whole Jeta Grove,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and coming, saluted him and stood at one side.
So standing, the deva spoke this verse before the Exalted One: —

"Sloth, drowsiness, the languid frame, distaste
For noble effort, surfeit after meals;[17]
By all such things to creatures here below
The Ariyan Path is ne'er made manifest."

[The Exalted One: —]

"Sloth, drowsiness, the languid frame, distaste
For noble effort, surfeit after meals:—
Expelling these by noble energy,
The Ariyan Path is cleansed and purified."

Sutta 17

Hard to Fulfil,
or
The Tortoise

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain deva,
when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the whole Jeta Grove,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and coming, saluted him and stood at one side.
So standing, the deva spoke this verse before the Exalted One: —

"Hard to fulfil, hard to endure for him
Who lacketh wisdom is the holy life.[18]
Many the difficulties, and 'tis there
The fool doth falter verily and fail.[19]
How many are the days[20] when he can live
The holy life, if he cannot restrain
His impulses? Now in this thing, now that[21]
He'd sink[19] engrossed, slave to his purposes."

[The Exalted One: —]

"E'en[22] as the tortoise in its own shell's shelter
Withdraws its limbs, so may the brother holding,
[13]Composed, intent, thoughts in his mind arisen,[23]
Leaning on naught,[24] injuring ne'er his neighbour,
From evil freed wholly,[25] speak ill of no man."

Sutta 18

Conscientiousness

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain deva,
when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the whole Jeta Grove,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and coming, saluted him and stood at one side.
So standing, the deva spoke this verse before the Exalted One: —

"Where will ye look throughout the world to find
The man by conscientiousness restrained;
He who at slightest hint forestalleth blame,
As mettled horse at shadow of the whip?"[26]

[The Exalted One: —]

"The [chosen] few, by conscientiousness
Restrained, constant in the heedfulness their life,
Have won the end of sorrow and of ill;[27]
Walk through th'uneven with an even stride."[28]

Sutta 19

The Hut

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain deva,
when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the whole Jeta Grove,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,

and coming, saluted him and stood at one side.
So standing, the deva spoke this verse before the Exalted One: —

"Hast thou no little hut? Hast thou no nest?
Hast thou no line stretched out? Art free from ties?"

[The Exalted One: —]

"Nay,[29] never hut is mine, nor any nest.
Nor line stretched out. Yea, I am free from ties."

[The Deva: —][30]

"What do I mean who speak to thee of 'hut,'
And 'nest,' and 'line stretched out,' and 'ties'?"

[14] [The Exalted One: —]

"Mother thou meanest when thou sayest 'hut,'[31]
And wife thou meanest whenthou speak'st of 'nest,'
And children, when thou sayest 'line stretched out,'[32]
And man's desires, when thou doest speak of 'ties.'"

[The Deva: —][30]

"O well is thee for whom no hut doth wait!
O well is thee who hast no nest at night![33]
Thou hast no line stretched out — O well is thee!
And happy thou who from all ties art free!"

Sutta 20

Samiddhi[34]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha in the Tapodā Park.[35]

Now the venerable Samiddhi as the dawn drew near arose and went to the Hot Springs to bathe. And after his bath, he came out of the Hot Springs and stood clad in a single garment, drying his limbs.

Then a certain deva, when the night was far spent, illuminating all the Hot-Spring lake with her effulgent beauty, came up to the venerable Samiddhi and, floating in the air, uttered these verses:—

[15] "Ne'er having had thy fill thou seekest alms,
O almsman; yea, nor taking now thy fill Thou seekest alms. O almsman, take thy fill Then seek thine alms. Let not the hour slip by!"[36]

[Samiddhi: —]

"Naught of thine 'hour' know I. Mine hour is hid,
Not manifest. Therefore I seek mine alms
Not taking first my fill, lest the hour pass me by."

Now that fairy took her stand on the earth and spoke to Samiddhi thus:

"Thou are young, bhikkhu, to have left the world, and callow, black-haired and blessed with the luck of youth; thou hast not in thine early prime had the fun that belongs to natural desires. Take thy fill, bhikkhu, of human leasures. Give not up the things of the present to pursue that which involves time."[37].

"I, friend, have not given up the things of the present to pursue that which involves time. Nay, I have given up that which involves time to pursue the things of the present. Things involving time, friend, as the Exalted One hath said, are the pleasures of the sense, full of ill, full of anxiety; that way lies abundant disaster. A thing of the present is this Norm, not involving time, inviting to come and see, leading onward, to be regarded by the wise as a personal experience."

[16] "In what way, bhikkhu, hath the Exalted One pronounced the pleasures of the sense to involve time, to be full of ill, full of anxiety, conducive to abundant disaster? In what way is this Norm a thing of the present, not involving time, inviting to come and see, leading onward, to be regarded by the wise as a personal experience?"

"I, friend, am a novice;[38] I have but lately left the world, and am newly admitted. I am not able to explain the Norm and Rule in detail. But the Exalted One, who is Arahant, fully enlightened, he is staying at Rājagaha in the Tapodā Park. Go to that Exalted One and ask him of this matter. Bear in mind that wherewith he shall answer you."

"Not easy is it, bhikkhu, for us to approach the Exalted One, so is he surrounded by other and mighty devas. If thou, bhikkhu, wilt approach the Exalted One and ask him of this matter, we too may come to hear the doctrine."

"Very well, friend," responded the venerable Samiddhi. And he went to the Exalted One, saluted him with obeisance, and sat down on one side. So seated, he spake to the Exalted One, telling him of the fairy's interview after his bathe in the Tapodā, and of his reply, and of the fairy's further questioning, and of her fear of not gaining access. "If, lord, that fairy spoke truly, she is just here, not far from us."

And when he had so said, that fairy said to the venerable Samiddhi:

"Ask, bhikkhu! Ask, bhikkhu, for I have won through!"

Then the Exalted One addressed the fairy in verses:—

"Men, 'ware alone of what is told by names,
Take up their stand on what is so expressed.
If this they have not rightly understood,
They go their ways under the yoke of death.
He who hath understood what is expresssed,
Concerning him-who-speaks no fancies builds,
[17] Nor do to such a man such things occur,
As might be laid, as faults, to his account.[39]

If thou knowest [such a man], tell me, fairy."[40]

"Lord, I do not comprehend fully the matter of that which the Exalted One has stated in outline. Well for me if the Exalted One would himself declare in full the matter he has thus stated, that I may come to know it."

[The Exalted One: —]

"Whoso doth build fancies concerning values:—
'Equal [am I], better, or worse [than thou art]'—
Hereby he may quarrels provoke. But whoso
In all three ways holdeth his mind unshaken,
'Equal [am I], or 'different' occurs not.[41]

If thou knowest [such a man], tell me, fairy."

"Neither of this, lord, which the Exalted One has stated in outline, do I fully comprehend the meaning.

Well for me [18] if the Exalted One would himself declare in full the matter he has thus stated that I may come to know it."

[The Exalted One: —]

"He hath renounced [bondage to] name and notion;[42]
His mind is not set to imagine vain things;[43]
For life in this world hath he cut all craving.
Him freed from bonds,[44] happy, and void of longing,[45]
Him gods and men here on this earth, or yonder,[46]
Or in the heavens, in every sphere of being
Seeking, they seek vainly, they will not find him.

If thou knowest such a one,fairy, tell me."

"Of this, lord, that the Exalted One has stated in outline,
I have come to know the meaning fully thus:—

Let him commit no evil whatsoevr
Throughout the world, in speech, or mind, or body.
Dropping desires, mindful and understanding,
Let him not work torment on self that is useless."[47]

---

[1] Nandānā, corresponding in meaning to a paradise: the grove in Sakka's or Tāvatiṇsa heaven, lowest of the deva-worlds (alluded to both as of the Thirty-three, and the Thrice ten; cf. Dialogues ii, 241 f.; Pss. of the Sisters, vers. 121, 181). We have no list of the 33; there were hosts of retinue-devas. According to tradition, devas were sent to the park by Sakka, when their decease was imminent, there to dissolve like snow, or like a windblown lamp-flame, and be reborn.

[2] Accharā: 'daughters of devas.' (Comy.)

[3] Arahants.

[4] Sankhārā: everything belonging to life or the universe, living activities, natural processes. All deva-worlds are included. These famous lines recur below, IX, 6, and in VI, 2, §5, are put into the mouth of Sakka (cf. Dialogues ii, 176).

[5] Vūpasamo expresses both 'mastery' and 'peace.' A synonym for Nibbāna, says B.

[6] Upadhīhi; not usually rendered as above. Meaning 'bases, or substrate of rebirth,' it refers to such dispositions in character and conduct as form those bases, in other words, the common life of sense and desire. Thus the Comy. paraphrases it here by pañcakāmaguṇā (cf. §I: "sensuous enjoyment"), but in IV, 1, §6, by the five khandhas (mind and body). The term became also applied to the kilesa's and the kāma's (cf. Childers' Dicty. s.v. upadhi). The verses recur in IV, 1, §8, where an alternative rendering is given.

[7] The Master, writes B., seeing his false (or, rather, his one-sided) view, breaks into his speech with an opposite conclusion, as one may bring down a fruit by throwing another fruit at it.

[8] Though it be ugly, we deem it beautiful, cherishing it in spite of all its indecencies. Comy.

[9] Cf. below, III, 1, §8.

[10] The text henceforth omits even the fragment of introductory prose.

[11] Dvipadaṃ.

[12] 'Among other wives' (sesa-) says B., whether in one household, or generally, is not clear.

[13] Ājānīyo is literally 'the knowing,' 'intelligent one.' 'Who knows the reason why,' says B., whether he be horse, elephant, or steer. Such was King Kūṭakaṇṇa's horse, who, when drawing the royal chariot to the Hill of Shrines, would not cross the Kalamba river (see Geiger's Mahāvaṇsa Translation, Map of Anurādhapura: Cetiyapabbata, Kalamba-nadī). The driver assured the annoyed monarch that the beast was not mutinous, but so well trained that he feared lest, by wetting his tail, he might spurt water over his master. 'Lift up his tail, Sire!' The King complied, and the horse entered the ford. (This king reigned over Ceylon A.D. 16-38.)

[14] During siesta, creatures are weak (dubbalya-kālo), here symbolized by the perching birds.

[15] 'Sanate or sanamāno: sounds as though uttering a deep roar, the cause being the breezes among the trees, the stems of bamboos rubbing together, etc. Comy. Recurs below, IX, 12. We need, of course, the useful Teutonic rauschen:

'the sough of the crests of the forest Swayed by the wind-gods.'
— Pss. of the Sisters (372)

[16] 'Because of the opportunity ... of strenuous yet blissful practice in concentrated thought. To a brother who has penetrated to some empty spot, pure in heart, endowed with right insight, bliss not of men arises.' Cf. Dhammapada 373, quoted by Comy., also:—

If there be none in front, nor none behind
Be found, is one alone and in the woods, Exceeding pleasant doth his life become.'
— Pss. of the Brethren, (537).

[17] These two lines occur Jāt vi, 57. Cf. also Vibhanga 352, cited by B., and S. v, 64; A. i.3. Metri causā, I invert the order of the first two words.

[18] Lit. recluseship (sāmaññā).

[19] Visīdati, visīdeyya. Cf. this word in Pss. of the Brethren, 1154:—

...fail
And faint, as in a swamp an aged ox.

[20] Katihay.

[21] Pade.

[22] The Pali here changes in metre to the triṣṭhubh. See S. iv, 177 f. In this Tortoise Sutta, referred to by B., the jackal and Māra, the tempter, are represented as getting no entrance, the former by the tortoise's action. The verse occurs in Jain literature: Sūyagaḍaṇgu Sutta I, 8, 13; cf. JPTS. 1891. 49. Presumably the Buddha is the speaker, but B. is not explicit.

[23] Manamhi uppannavitakko. Comy.

[24] Neither on natural desires, nor wrong opinions. Comy.

[25] The parinibbāna, or complete extinction, of passions (kilesā). Comy.

[26] = Dhammapada, 143.Cf. Childers' Dict. s.v. appabodhati; and see below * Index.

[27] 'Having attained Nibbāna.' Comy.

[28] See I, 1, §7. Presumably the Buddha's reply.

[29] Taggha. [Ed. This footnote is indicated by '' in the text. (an artifact of hot metal typography, a footnote introduced in a second printing without the need to reset the numbers of the other footnotes). Is this the '' intended in n.26 above?]

[30] 'He thinks: this recluse answers my enigmas with Yea and Nay, though I had girded on the armour of my wits to put them. Does he follow my hidden meaning?' Comy.

[31] Cf. the 'hut' stanzas in Pss. of the Brethren, e.g. LVII, CCXXVIII. No mother waits "10 months" for an Arahant's rebirth.

[32] Santānaka: a continuum.

[33] 'As birds ranging for food all day come homing to the nest at night.' Comy.

[34] The verses on the next page are verbatim those in the Samiddhi Jātaka (vol. ii, No. 167). The story is the same, the diction a little different. The devatā of the Nikāya is shown in the Jātaka to be a deva-dhītā or 'goddess,' and the Burmese MSS. so allude to her: — 'anuppattā,' 'yakkhī.' The Singhalese MSS. ignore the Jātaka, and write anuppatto and yakkha.

[35] A Vihāra built near the river Tapodā (hot waters), which ran beneath the Vebhāra of Vaibhāra Hill near Rājagaha (Pss. of the Brethren, pp. 45, n. 1; 364). It broadened into a pool where was a hot sring due to its proximity to the Brazon Purgatory beneath. Comy.

[36] The little riddle turns on the ambiguity of bhutvā, having eaten,' 'having enjoyed thyself in general,' — in other words 'sown your wild oats.' The significance of the 'hour,' or 'moment' recalls the 'Psalms' (I, p. 12 f.; II, vers. 231, 403, 653, 1005), albeit neither commentator on this story brings out that point. The hour that is hidden is that of Samiddhi's death. Cf. below, IV, 3, § 1. Hence we have three points of time: — season of youth, opportunity for the Nibbāna-aspirant, death. Cf. the riddle of the flag, Pss. of the Brethren, LXIV.

[37] Kālika, lit. 'time-ish' (cf. the Greek chrōñ-ios). Of the negative form — akālika, often used in describing the Dhamma — B. says 'the Dhamma of the Ariyan Path gives its fruit (fruition-bliss) immediately after process' (or procedure to attain). In other words, the Path-graduate has his heavens at hand, not as postmortem events. Cf. Pss of the Brethren, 314, *n.*1.

[38] B. names alternative terms for noviciate, medium rank and theraship, vis.: to 5, 10 years, and after, or to 10, 20 years, and after.

[39] The verses occur Iti-vuttaka, § 63. The last two lines are quite different: —

Touched hath his thought the goal of liberty,
The station of incomparable peace.

The Buddha rebukes the fairy for her suggestive ambiguities.

The burden of the verses is doctrinally and philosophically of high importance, and the bewilderment of the frivolous fairy, abruptly confronted with them, is ironically pathetic. 'Told by names,' lit., 'what may be expressed' (akkheyyāni, from ā-khā, to pro-claim); cf. D. i, 4; Dhammapada, 275; A. ii, 17, etc. Mankind, says B., have many notions (saññino — are 'ware of) about the many compounds of the five aggregates (i.e., of mind and matter), expressed in names, e.g. god, man, layman, recluse, person, individual, Tissa, Phussa, etc. He who understands sees in these compounds as such no realities, nor a permanent entity in the declarer of them. The only realities are the several components (the five khandhas), and these, though real, are ever changing.

[40] Yakkhī; cf. below, Chapter X.

[41] These are the three forms of false opinion and strife springing from māna. See above I, 1, § 9; S. iii, 48; Bud. Psy. Eth., p. 298 f. Expanded also to nine: Vibhanga, 389 f. Comparisons invalid in the ever-changing collocations that make up individuals.

[42] Sankhā. The arahant has put away such notions as 'lusting,' 'being angry,' 'confused.' Comy.

[43] The Comy. reads na ca mānam ajjhagā, and it is very likely, since this agrees with the context, that Feer read vi- erroneously if he consulted here only Singhalese MSS. Nevertheless B. allows the alternative sense, in mānan of an abode, i.e., in rebirth, a matrix, as if he had a v.l. = vimānaṇ before him.

[44] Cf. Sutta-Nipāta 219.

[45] Ibid. 460, 1060, etc.; a frequent half-line in S.N.

[46] Huran, i.e., other worlds. With 'heavens' added, cf. ibid. 224.

[47] The fairy has rightly discerned, says B., the Middle Path between self-indulgence and self-torture. In fact she gives the whole Eightfuld Path: — 'in speech, or body': Angas 305; 'mindful': Angas 6-8; 'understanding': Angas 1,2. 'It was in fact the occasion of a mighty teaching.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
1. Devatā-Saṃyutta
III. Satti Vagga

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

1. The Devas

3. The 'Sword' Suttas

Suttas 21-30

III.
The 'Sword' Suttas

---

[19]

Sutta 21

By Impending Sword

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain deva,
when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the whole Jeta Grove,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and coming, saluted him and stood at one side.
So standing he spake thus to the Exalted One: —

"As one downsmitten by impending sword,
As one whose hair and turban are aflame,
So let the brother, mindful and alert,
Go forth, all worldly passions left behind."

[The Exalted One: —]

"As one downsmitten by impending sword,
As one whose hair and turban are aflame,
So let the brother, mindful and alert,
Go forth, leaving soul-fallacy behind."[1]

Sutta 22

The Touch

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain deva,
when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the whole Jeta Grove,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and coming, saluted him and stood at one side.
So standing he spake thus to the Exalted One: —

"Who toucheth not, to him cometh no touch.
But if he touch, thence to him touch may come,
Hence if he touch, wreak injury upon
The innocent, cometh on him the touch."[2]

[20][The Exalted One: —]

"Whoso doth wrong the man that hath no guile:—
The pure in heart and from all error free —
On him, poor fool, his wicked act recoils,
Like fine dust that is thrown against the wind."[3]

Sutta 23

The Tangle

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain deva,
when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the whole Jeta Grove,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and coming, saluted him and stood at one side.
So standing, the deva spoke this verse before the Exalted One: —

"Tangle within, without, lo! in the toils
Entangled is the race of sentient things.[4]
Hence would I ask thee, Gotama, of this:
Who is't can from this tangle disembroil?"

[The Exalted One: —]

"The man discreet, on virtue planted firm,
In intellect and intuition trained;[5]
The brother ardent and discriminant:
'Tis he may from this tangle disembroil.

They that have lust and hate and nescience spurned,
The Arahants immune from deadly Drugs,[6]
For them the tangle all unravelled lies.
Where mind and body wholly cease to be,
And earthly sense and sense celestial: —[7]
Here is the tangle riven utterly."

---

[21]

Sutta 24

Mind-checking

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain deva,
when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the whole Jeta Grove,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and coming, saluted him and stood at one side.
So standing, the deva spoke this verse before the Exalted One: —

"Since whencesoe'er the mind is held in check,
It goeth not that way to misery,
On every side mind should be held in check,
Thus everywhence from woe is it set free."

[The Exalted One: —]

"Not on all sides should mind be held in check.
Restrain it not if self-control be won.[8]
But whence soever evil things do rise,[9]
Thence should the mind be curbed and held in check."

Sutta 25

The Arahant

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain deva,
when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the whole Jeta Grove,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and coming, saluted him and stood at one side.
So standing, the deva spoke this verse before the Exalted One: —

"He of the Brethren who is Arahant,
Who hath accomplished all there was to do,[10]
Who Drug-immune doth live the final life:
He might say thus: — '"I" say'; 'they say 't is "mine"' ..."[11]

[The Exalted One: —]

"He of the Brethren who is Arahant,
Who hath accomplished all there was to do,

Who Drug-immune doth live the final life:
[22]He might say thus: '"I" say'; 'they say 't is "mine"'
So sayng he, expert in usages
Of men, 'ware of the worth of common names,
Would speak merely conforming to such use."

[The Deva: —]

"He of the Brethren who is Arahant,
Who hath accomplished all there was to do,
Who Drug-immune doth live the final life,
If he said thus: — '"I" say'; 'they say 't is "mine"' —
Would such a brother thereby show Proneness to notions of a self or soul?"

[The Exalted One: —]

"For him who hath renounced them utterly,
Chains of illusion as to self or soul
Exist no more. Scattered are all such bonds.
He rich in wisdom hath escaped beyond
Conceits and deemings[12] of the errant mind.
He might say thus: '"I" say'; 'they say 't is "mine."'
So saying he, expert in usages
Of men, 'ware of the worth of common names,
Would speak merely conforming to such use."

Sutta 26

Light

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain deva,
when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the whole Jeta Grove,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and coming, saluted him and stood at one side.
So standing, the deva spoke this verse before the Exalted One: —

"How many things light up the world, making it clear and plain?
To ask this question, Sir, we've come. Thy word to learn we're fain."

[The Exalted One: —]

"Four things give light unto the world; a fifth ye'll not descry.
By day the sun doth shine; by night the moon makes bright the sky.
[23]And fire gives light by day and night, shining now here, now there.
But, of all things that shine, as best, light of a Buddha stands confessed,[13]
Glory without compare."

Sutta 27

The Tides

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain deva,
when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the whole Jeta Grove,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and coming, saluted him and stood at one side.
So standing, the deva spoke this verse before the Exalted One: —

"Whence ebb the flooding tides? where whirls no more
The whirlpool? Where to utter ending comes
This compound thing of body and of mind?"

[The Exalted One: —]

"Where the four elements that cleave, and stretch,
And burn, and move no further footing find.
Hence ebb the flooding tides; here whirls no more
The whirlpool; here to utter ending come
This compound thing of body and of mind."[14]

Sutta 28

Goodly Treasures

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain deva,
when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the whole Jeta Grove,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and coming, saluted him and stood at one side.
So standing, the deva spoke this verse before the Exalted One: —

"Princes with goodly treasures, ample wealth,
And broad domains, ever in sense-desires
Insatiate,[15] envey each other's goods.
[24]'Mong these who thus in strain and ferment dwell,[16]
Drifting adown the current of rebirth,
Are any found who, having left behind
Envy and greed, serene and restful dwell?"[17]

[The Exalted One: —]

"There are who have abandoned home and child,
And herds, and all that heart of man holds dear,
Yea, lust have they abandoned and ill-will
And no more truck have they with ignorance.

These are the Drug-destroyers, Arahants.
They 'mong all men serene and restful dwell."

Sutta 29

The Four-wheeled

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain deva,
when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the whole Jeta Grove,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and coming, saluted him and stood at one side.
So standing, the deva spoke this verse before the Exalted One: —

"Lo! the four-wheeled, the nine-doored fulsome thing,[18]
Guided by greed, begotten from a bog: —[19]
Great hero, say! how shall there egress be?"[20]

[The Exalted One: —]

"Let but the traces, let the thong be cut —[21]
Let but the evil wish, the greed, yea, let Thy craving with its root be utterly Drawn out and banned[22] — then shall there egress be."

---

[25]

Sutta 30

The Antelope

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain deva,
when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the whole Jeta Grove,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and coming, saluted him and stood at one side.
So standing, the deva spoke this verse before the Exalted One: —

"Limbed like the antelope,[23] lean, vigorous,
In diet sober, craving not t'indulge,
Like lion lonely faring, elephant,
Indifferent to the calls of sense: — lo! we

Into Thy presence come that we may ask,
How we from every ill may be set free?"

[The Exalted One: —]

"Five sensuous faculties are manifest
'Mong living beings, and the sixth is mind.
On these do ye no longer set desire.
Thus may ye be from every ill set free."

---

[1] In Pss. of the Brethren (vers. 39, 40, 1162, 1163) these verses are put in the mouth of Tissa (the Buddha's stepbrother), Vaḍḍhamāna and Vangīsa. In that work for 'fallacy of soul' we read 'lust of living' (bhavarāga, not sakkāyadiṭṭhi). B. ignores this, and makes the Master judge that the deva had poorly grasped the force of the metaphor. This is, that escape is only effectual when the real stumbling-block is surmounted — the soul-fallacy. This happens when the First Path is entered, the only right way of escape. 'Go forth,' i.e., 'leave the world.' The verses recur below, II, 2, § 6.

[2] The little enigma bears on the double meaning of touch; active and passive — to make to feel, and to feel — the act (kamma) and its result-in-sentience (vipāka). On the latter, cf. Pss. of the Brethren, ver, 783 — phassa-phuṭṭha; 'touched by the touch, rendered 'all feel the touch.'

[3] These lines recur VII, 1, §4, and occur S.N. 662, Dhp. 125. B. does not explicitly place them here in the mouth of the Teacher. The case of the innocent seems to be given a fortiori, to wit, from the more general statement.

[4] Desire or craving is likened to the interwoven foliage of ferns or bamboos, 'within, without' being referred to self and others, organs and objects of sense. Comy.

[5] Developing concentration and insight. Comy.

[6] The Āsavas: — sensuality, lust for renewed life, delusions, nescience. The figure means a poisonous flux or ooze.

[7] B. explains this line as (1) kāmabhava, 'life in the worlds of desire' — i.e., from purgatory to the five lowest deva-worlds; and (2) rūpabhava, 'life in the higher (not highest) heavens.'

[8] The Comy. reads mano-yatattan. Both this and the following pada fail in scansion. The SS. MSS. omit ca, and the Comy. substitutes uppannan.

[9] The Teacher is made to think: 'I will better this deva's misguided talk by distinguishing (vibhajetvā, cf. the name for his School: — Vibhajjavādin) where mind should be (1) checked, (2) developed, fostered, made to grow.' Comy.

[10] Katāvī.

[11] This, says B., was a forest fairy, who had listened to the talk of the forest-dwelling brethren and heard them say like any worldling: 'I' am eating ... sitting ... 'my' bowl, 'my' robe ..., when they hold that not 'I,' but a compound of khandhas is in activity. 'Have they then,' is the further question, no māna at all? See above, I, 1, §9. This is reckoned as the eighth to go, of the Ten Fetters, before Arahantship is won. On conventional usage and philosophic meaning, see above, I, 2, § 10; also Points of Controversy, p. 68, n.2.

[12] Yamataṇ.

[13] The light, namely, of insight, of enthusiasm (pīti), of trust (pasāda), and of his taching. Comy. The verses recur II, 1, §4. Line 2, along with other similes, occurs, Dhp. 387.

[14] With these lines cf. the more elaborate versions in D. i, 223; (Dialogues i, 283), Udāna I, No. 10. B.'s comments here are brief. The streams =

saṇsāra, the endlessly reborn life-flux of beings. The whirlpool (vaṭṭa) = the same (cf. S. iii, 63 f.; iv, 180: āvaṭṭa = the pleasures of the five senses). The four elements, in Buddhist doctrine, mean, not simply 'water, earth, fire, air,' but the elemental forces of which these are concrete manifestations: the cohesive, extending, calorific, mobile elements in matter. This appears in the Nikāyas, if unformulated till later — e.g. in M. i, No.62, the Buddha speaks of the internal 'earth' in each of us — i.e., the stretched-out surface in the phenomenon of body.

By 'hence,' 'here,' Nibbāna is meant; not the Nibbāna during life, known by the Arahant, but the absolute farewell to life, which can only be conceived or expressed as cessation of life.

[15] An-alaṇ-katā

[16] 'Who have produced divers works to bring about things that had notcome to pass, and have striven for power in that which had come to pass.' Comy.

[17] Anussukā.

[18] I.e. the body, with its four types of deportment — standing, sitting, lying, going — and its nine orifices. Cf. Pss. of the Buddhists II, vers. 1150-52, I and II passim.

[19] 'Bog, morass' (panka) and 'great hero' are associated also in op.cit. II, 1154.

[20] Yātrā. Cf. below, I, 5, §6.

[21] This pada occurs Dhp. 398; Sn. 622; both verses below, II, 3, §8.

[22] Reading abbhuyha, as in S. iii, 25, from abhi-ud-han. Cf. below, IV, 3, §3, n. 9.

[23] This was one physical characteristic of the Superman: World-ruler of Buddha. Cf. Dialogues ii, 14.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
1. Devatā-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

1. The Devas

4. The 'Satullapa-Group' Suttas

---

[16] [25]

Sutta 31

With Good Men

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And a great number of the Satullapa company of devas,[1] [26] when the night ws far spent, shedding radiance with their effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, one of the devas spoke this verse before the Exzlted One: —

"See that with good men only ye consort,[2]
With good men do ye practise intercourse.
Knowledge of how the good do shape their life[3]
Maketh the better man, and not the worse."

Then five other devas in turn spoke his verse before the Exalted One: —

"See that with good men only ye consort,
With good men do ye practise intercourse.
Knowledge of how the good do shape their life,
Wisdom bestoweth as naught else can do."[4]

"See that with good men only ye consort,
With good men do ye practise intercourse.
Knowledge of how the good do shape their life,
Doth dry our tears in midst of those that weep."

"See that with good men only ye consort,
With good men do ye practise intercourse.
Knowledge of how the good do shape their life,
Makes us of bright renown among our kin."[5]

"See that with good men only ye consort,
With good men do ye practise intercourse.
Knowledge of how the good do shape their life,
Doth make us find rebirth in happier worlds."

"See that with good men only ye consort,
With good men do ye practise intercourse.
Knowledge of how the good do shape their life,
Makes men persist in bliss perpetual."

[27] Then yet another deva said to the Exalted One: —

"By which of ese, Exalted One, was it well spoken?"

"As to matter[6] ye have all spoken well. But listen also to me: —

See that with good men only ye consort;
With good men do ye practise intercourse.
Knowledge of how the good do shape their life,
From all and every ill may set us free."

Sutta 32

Avarice

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And a great number of the Satullapa company of devas ... when night was far spent, came to the Exalted One ... and so standing, four of them spoke each a verse before him, one after another: —

(i) "From avarice and from frivolity,[7]
No charitable gift of alms doth come.
By him who would have merit's sure reward,
By him who can discern, gifts should be given."

(ii) "That which the miser dreads, and hence gives not,
To him not giving just that danger 't is: —
Hunger and thirst—for this the thing he dreads—
Just this the doom that doth befall the fool
In this and also in some other world.
Hence should he avarice suppress, and make
Off'rings of charity, mastering the taint.
Sure platform in some other future world
Rewards of virtue on good beings wait."[8]

(iii) "They are not perished 'mong the dead[9] who, like Good comrades travelling on the jungle-roads,[10]
Share scanty store. Lo! here's an ancient rule.[11]
[28] Some from their scanty means bestow their mite;
Some of their plenty have no wish to give.
The offerings given from a scanty source
Measured, with gifts of thousand pieces rank."

(iv) "Hard is the giving unto those that give,
And difficult the doing of such deeds.
The wicked are unable to conform,
For hard it is to follow[12] good men's rule.
Wherefore unlike the going heiice must be
That righteous and unrighteous folk befalls.
To doom of purgatory these must go;
The righteous fare hereafter to the heavens."[13]

Then yet another deva said to the Exalted One: —

"Which of these, Exalted One, hath well spoken?"

"As to matter ye have all spoken well. But listen also to me: —

Righteous his act who, though[14] he live by scraps
Gleaned here and there,[15] though he maintain a wife,
Yet from his scanty store finds gift to give.[16]

Of thousand donors hundred thousand [gifts][17]
Are not in value equal to his mite."[18]

Then yet another deva addressed the Exalted One in a verse: —

"Why is their offering, abundant, lavish,
Not equal to the poor man's righteous[19] gift?
[29] How is 't the thousand gifts of thousand donors
Are not in value equal to his mite?"

Then the Exalted One addressed that deva in a verse: —

"Some give with inconsistent ways of conduct,
First smiting,[20] murdering, then comfort giving.
Those offerings, [besmirched by] tears[21] and blows,
Have not the value of the righteous gift.
'Tis thus the thousand [coins] of thousand donors
Are not in value equal to his mite."

Sutta 33

How Blest!

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The same class of devas, when night is far spent, visit the Exalted One at the same place. And six of them before the Exalted One breathed out the thought that inspired them[22] one after the other: —

(i) "How blest[23] a thing, dear sir, is it to give!
From avarice and from frivolity
No charitable gift of alms doth come.
By him who would have merit's sure reward,
By him who can discern, gifts should be given."[24]

(ii) "How blest a thing, dear sir, is it to give!
Yea, blest the gift though from a scanty store.
Some from their scanty means bestow their mite,
Some of their plenty have no wish to give.
The offerings given from a scanty source,
Measured, with gifts of thousand pieces rank."[25]

[30] (iii) "How blest a thing, dear sir, is it to give!
Yea, blest the gift though from a scanty store.
Of the believer[26] too how blest the gift!
Giving and fighting are alike, 't is said;
A handful of good men may down a host.[27]
And if we give believing in result,[28]
Good hap is ours from good to others done."

(iv) "How blest a thing, dear sir, is it to give!
Yea, blest the gift though from a scanty store.
Of the believer too how blest the gift!
And blest the gift from wealth that's fairly won.
The man who gives from wealth that's fairly won,
Got by the honest effort he hath made,[29]
When dead and Death's dark river[30] he hath crossed,
To heavenly places doth he find his way."

(v) "How blest a thing, dear sir, is it to give!
Yea, blest the gift though from a scanty store.
Of the believer too how blest the gift!
And blest the gift from wealth that's fairly won
And blest the giving that's discreetly made.[31]
Wise giving by the Blessed One is praised.
[31] Gifts offered them who in this world of life[32]
Are worthy of our care bring great reward,
As do [good] seeds when sown in fertile field."

(vi) "How blest a thing, dear sir, is it to give!
Yea, blest the gift though from a scanty store.
Of the believer too how blest the gift!
And blest the giving that's discreetly made,
And self-restraint with every living thing.
Whoso 'mong fellow-creatures harmless lives,
From fear of neighbour's blame no evil works,
Him timid they commend, but blame the bold.
'T is fear of blame deters good men from wrong."

Then yet another deva said to the Exalted One: —

"Which now of these, lord, has spoken well?"

"As to matter, ye have all spoken well.

But listen also to me: —

Giving and gifts they that believe therein
In divers ways and words praise and commend.
Now there's a better thing than pious gift,
Even the doctrines grouped within the Norm.[33]
The good in days gone by, yea, in the days
Yet further back,[34] with wisdom and insight
They even to Nibbāna won their way."

Sutta 34

They Are Not

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The same class of devas visit the Exalted One at the same place when night is far spent. And one of them uttered this verse before the Exalted One: — [32] "They are not permanent, these sense-desires.

They are with us,[35] these things we fain would have.
The man who with them dallies, by them bound,
From realms of death doth never come to that[36]
Whereto there is no coming back again.

Misery[37] born of desires, desire-born pain: —
Suppress desires, then misery 's suppressed;
From misery suppressed, suppressed is pain.

The manifold of objects in the world —
This in itself is not desires of sense.
Lustful intention is man's sense-desire.
That manifold of objects doth endure;
The will thereto the wise exterminate.[38]

Put wrath away, yea, and conceit abandon.[39]
Have ye but got past all the bonds [of pris'ners],
Not cleaving fast unto this mind and body,[40]
Nowise [by lust, hatred, and dullness] hampered,[41]
Sorrow and pain no more may overwhelm ye.[42]

He[43] hath renounced [bondage to] name and notion;
His mind is not set to imagine vain things;
For life in this world hath he cut all craving.
Him freed from bonds, happy and void of longing,
[33] Him gods and men, here on this earth or yonder
Or in the heavens, in every sphere of being,
Seeking, they seek vainly, they will not find him.

If him they find not, thus emancipated
(thus said the reverend Moghardjan),
Nor gods nor men here on this earth or yonder —
Him best of men working out man's salvation —
They that revere him, shall we praise them also?

Yea, they become praiseworthy also, almsman, Mogharajan! (so the Exalted One)
They that revere him thus emancipated.
Yea, if, the Norm knowing, all doubt they conquer,
They too become bond-liberated, almsman!"[44]

Sutta 35

The Captious-minded

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

A great number of captious-minded devas[45] visited the Exalted One at the same place when the night was far spent, and hovered in the air. So hovering, one of them uttered this verse before the Exalted One -

[34] "If any man profess he's otherwise
Than what he really is, what he enjoys
Is got by theft, as by the trickery of a cheat.
Let him but talk of that which should be done.
Let him not talk of what should not be done.
Of him who talketh ever, doing not,
Wise men take stock and rate him [at his worth]."[46]

[The Exalted One:—]

"Not if he merely talk or simply hear,
Shall he avail to make advance herein.[47]
A hard and strenuous course is this, whereby
The strong in spirit liberation find
In contemplative work from Mara's toils.
Not thus in sooth it is they do[48] who strong
In spirit know the methods of the world,[49]
And knowing, have attained Nibbāna here,[50]
Safe crossing o'er where all the world sticks fast."[51]

Then those devas, standing on the earth, prostrated themselves at the Exalted One's feet, and said to him: —

"'T is our transgression, lord, we have transgressed; even according to our folly, our stupidity, our wrongdoing have we fancied we could assail[52] the Exalted One. Lord, may the Exalted One accept the confession of this our trans gression as transgression, that in future there may be self- restraint."[53]

[35] Then the Exalted One smiled.

Then the devas, exceedingly irritated, rose up into the air. And one of them spoke this verse before the Exalted One: —

"Whoso, when others do confess their fault,
Doth not accept confession at their hands,
Angry within, preferring enmity,
Doth bind together wTrath as in a knot.[54]
In whom is no fault found, no error proved?
Who never doth give way to thought confused?
Who strong and wise can heedful be alway?"

[The Exalted One:—]

"In the Tathāgata, the Buddha who
For every creature doth compassion feel,[55]
In him no fault is found, no error proved,
Never doth he give way to thought confused,
Alway is he, the strong and wise, alert.
'Whoso,' ye say, 'when men confess their fault,
Doth not accept confession at their hands,
Angry within, preferring enmity,
Doth bind together wrath as in a knot': —
Now I in wrath so held no pleasure take,
And the confession of your fault accept."

Sutta 36

Faith

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

A great number of the Satullapa Group of devas visited the Exalted One at the same place, when the night was far spent. . . . And so standing, one of them uttered these verses before the Exalted One: —

"Faith is the 'other I,' the mate of man.[56]
Thence, if he tarry not in disbelief,
His shall be followers and fair renown,
And when he quits this frame to heaven he goes.
[36] Put wrath away, yea, and conceit abandon.
Have ye but got past all the bonds [of pris'ners],
Not cleaving fast unto this mind and body,
Nowise [by lust, hatred, and dullness] hampered,
Sorrow and pain no more may overwhelm you.[57]

'T is a fool's part heedless to waste his life: —
Such are the folk who will not understand.
He who is wise doth foster earnestness
As he were watching o'er his chiefest wealth.
Give not yourselves to wastage in your lives,
Nor be familiar with delights of sense.
He who doth strenuously meditate,
His shall it be to win the bliss supreme."[58]

Sutta 37

The Concourse[59]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once dwelling among the Sakkas, at Kapilavatthu, in the Great Wood, together with a great band of the brethren, about five hundred of them, all being Arahants. And devas from the ten thousand world-systems oft-times assembled there, that they might visit the Exalted One and the band of brethren.

[37] 2. Now to four gods of the hosts of the Pure Abodes[60] this thought occurred: — "That Exalted One is now dwelling among the Sakkas, at Kapilavatthu, in the Great Wood, together with a great band of the brethren, all being Arahants. And devas, from the ten thousand world-systems, oft-times are assembling there to see the Exalted One and his band of brethren. What if we, too, were to go into his presence, and before him were to recite each of us a poem?"

3. Then those gods, as easily as a strong man might stretch out his arm, or draw it outstretched back again, vanished from the Pure Abodes, and appeared before the Exalted One, There they saluted him, and stood at one side. And so standing, one after another, they recited to him these verses: —

(i.) "Great is the gathering in the glade;
The hosts of heaven together met!
We to this holy congress here
Are come, that we too may behold[61]
The Brotherhood invincible."

(ii.) "The brethren have made straight their hearts,
Wrought up to concentration rapt.
Wisely their faculties they guard,
As driver keeping grip on rein."

(iii.) "All bars and bolts are cut for them.
The barriers down, all lusting gone,
Spotless and pure their way they go,
Seers, well-tamed young elephants."

(iv.) "Who in the Buddha refuge take,
They shall not go to woeful doom.
When they put off this human frame,[62]
They shall fill up the hosts of heaven."

---

[38]

Sutta 38

The Splinter

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha, in the Maddakucchi Deer Park.[63] Now at that time the Exalted One's foot was pierced by a stone splinter. Sorely in sooth did the Exalted One feel it, grievous the pains he suffered in the body, keen and sharp, acute, distressing and unwelcome. Them in sooth he bore mindful and discerning, nor was he cast down. And making them spread his robe folded in four, he lay down on his right side like a lion resting,[64] the left foot over the right, mindful and discerning.

Now seven hundred devas of the Satullapa Group, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with their effulgent beauty over all Maddakucchi, drew near, and coming to the Exalted One's presence, they saluted him, and standing at one side, seven of them, one after the other, gave vent to inspired utterance:[65]—

(i.) "Lo! what a wondrous creature[66] is the worshipful recluse Gotama! 'Tis by this wondrous nature that he endures, mindful and discerning, the pains that have arisen in his body, keen and sharp, acute, distressing and unwelcome, and that he is not cast down."

(ii.) "Lo! what a lion is the worshipful recluse Gotama! 'Tis by his lion's nature that he endures, mindful and discerning, the pains that have arisen in his body, keen and sharp, acute, distressing and unwelcome, and that he is not cast down."

(iii.) "Lo! what a thoroughly trained creature[67] is the worshipful recluse Gotama! 'Tis by his lion's nature that he endures, mindful and discerning, the pains that have arisen in his body, keen and sharp, acute, distressing and unwelcome, and that he is not cast down."

(iv.) "Lo! how unrivalled is the worshipful recluse Gotama! 'Tis by his lion's nature that he endures, mindful and discerning, the pains that have arisen in his body, keen and sharp, acute, distressing and unwelcome, and that he is not cast down."

[39] (v.) "What a patient burden-bearer is the worshipful recluse Gotama! 'Tis by his lion's nature that he endures, mindful and discerning, the pains that have arisen in his body, keen and sharp, acute, distressing and unwelcome, and that he is not cast down."

(vi.) "How tamed[68] is the worshipful recluse Gotama! 'Tis by his self-mastery that he endures, mindful and discerning, the pains that have arisen, in his body, keen and sharp, acute, distressing and unwelcome, and that he is not cast down."

(vii.) "Behold how his mind is well practised in contemplative concentration and emancipated! Not strained forth, nor strained aside,[69] nor having restrained [itself] by conscious deliberation, but as having the habit of self-denial[70]. He who could transgress against such a wonder, such a lion, one bo thoroughly trained, such a matchless one, such a burden-bearer, a creature so self-controlled, could only so act from blindness; if not, then from what else?

Brahmins of five-fold Veda-lore[71] may ply
Ascetic practices a century,
Yet would their heart be never rightly freed,
Such is the low ideal at which they aim,[72]
Not theirs it is to win to the beyond.

[40] Suffused by craving, bound to rite and rule.
Penance severe a century they may ply,
Yet would their heart be never rightly freed,
Such is the low ideal at which they aim,
Not theirs it is to win to the beyond.

Are[73] vain conceits wished for by us and welcomed,
Ne'er win we here taming [of mind and body],
Lone in the woods though we dwell, if we dally.
Ne'er may we pass over the Death-realm's coniines.

All vain conceits leaving, well-concentrated,
Lovely in heart, wholly emancipated,
Lone in the forest dwelling, earnest, strenuous,
Well may lie cross over the Dead-realm's confines."

Sutta 39

Pajjunna's Daughter (1)

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying at Vesālī, in the Great Wood at the Gabled Hall. Now Kokanadā, daughter of Pajjunna,[74] when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with her effulgent beauty over the whole of Great Wood, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and standing at one side, spoke before him this verse: —

"The very Buddha, Crown of all that is,[75]
Residing at Vesālī, in the Wood,
Let me now worship — Cloud King's daughter I, Even Pajjunna's child, Kokanadā.

[41] Till now had I but heard about the Norm, Revealed by the Man of Vision clear.
To-day I know, eye-witness of the Sage,
The Blessed One teaching [that Norm to men].

They who do go about, in wisdom poor,
Casting aspersions on the Ariyan Norm, Fall into Roruva's dreadful abyss,[76]
Long, long therein to suffer misery.
They who unto the Ariyan Truths draw nigh
With heart consenting and with passions hushed,
When they shall have put off their human frame,
They shall fill up the heavenly hosts on high."[77]

Sutta 40

Pajjunna's Daughter (2)

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once at Vesālī, in the Great Wood, at the Gabled Hall. And Kokanada the Less, daughter of Pajjunna ...[78] came into the presence of the Exalted One ... and spoke before him this verse: —

"Come hither with the hue of lightning's flame, Kokanadā, Pajjunna's daughter, she,
Adoring both the Buddha and the Norm,
Did speak these lines of sense beneficent:
Though I by divers methods might expound
The detailed parts of such a Norm as this,
Yet in brief summary will I declare
The contents, if so far my mind may reach: — [42] Let him commit no evil whatsoever
Throughout the world, in speech, or mind, or body.
Dropping desires, mindful and understanding,
Let him not work torment on self that's useless."[79]

[1] B. has a graphic and mediaevally humorous story to account for the curious name of these visitors, who have, so far, been met with only in this Vagga. He interprets the name as the 'Hundred-Shouters' (sat-ullapā). In their previous birth they were a ship's crew on a trading voyage. Their vessel was overwhelmed by stormy seas and sank, none escaping. During the storm the terrified crew noticed one only who, ' seated like a yogi,' was calm. He was thinking, not on his sins but on his good deeds. Of these he had enough and to spare to ensure happy rebirth, and the passengers implored his charity. He divided them into five groups of a hundred each, and shouted to them through the tempest the Five Precepts, one to each group, assuring them that to take these maxims on themselves would see them to a happy doom. As the waters rose in the ship they recited them and after death were reborn in Sakka's heaven, each with a noble golden vimāna (I, 2, § 10). Now they visit the Buddha to praise their good teacher.

[2] Occurs in Jāt. v, 483. The whole Sutta recurs below, II, 3, § 1.

[3] Lit. 'knowledge of the good doctrine or Norm.' The Comy. explains this, in this context, to mean the Five Precepts (against murder, etc.) — cf. its introductory legend — hence a code of moral conduct.

[4] 'As oil comes, not from sand, but from tila-seeds.' Comy.

[5] Here B. launches into another legend: that of Adhimutta, nephew to Sankicca, referring to his adventure as told by Dhammapāla in the Comy. on Theragāthā (Pss. of the Brethren, 291), but with different details.

[6] Pariyāyena.

[7] 'Some fear to lose their goods; some are thoughtless, some grudge the loss of amusement.' Comy.

[8] An oft-repeated verse: see I, 5, § 3; III, 1, § 4; 2, § 10, 3, § 2.

[9] 'And therefore unable to bestow their goods here and there.' Comy.

[10] Pantho.

[11] Sanantano.

[12] Durannayo.

[13] This gāthā is that of the Duddada (Hard-to-give) Jātaka (No. 180). All the verses occur in the Bilārikosiya Jātaka (No. 450). The Jātaka Comy. on these gāthās is more helpful than B.

[14] The Jātaka version supplies pi after yo, and after appakasmiṃ.

[15] 'E.g. ears of corn from swept threshing floors.' Comy.Though it may be only herbs.' Comy.

[16] 'Though it may be only herbs.' Comy.

[17] B. is uncertain whether the '100,000' refers to gifts or to 'recipients.' Cf. Luke xxi, 1-4.

[18] Kalaṃ, lit. fraction, portion.

[19] The Jātaka Comy. explains samena by dhammena, and for sataṃ in the next line reads kathaṃ ('how').

[20] Jhatvā.

[21] 'The gift of one who has caused others to weep is called a tear-faced gift.' Comy. The Jātaka translator has missed this pathetic phrase.

[22] Udānaṃ udānesi. As a measure (? a sieve) cannot contain oil, which oozes through, or a net a flood of waters, so can the heart not contain within the uprush of rapturous speech which pours forth. Such an utterance is the udāna. Comy.

[23] Sādhu.

[24] = above, § 2. (i).

[25] See § 2. (iii).

[26] Saddhāya. I.e. who believes in karma and its fruit. Comy. The fresh matter in Gāthās iii-vi occurs in the Āditta-Jātaka (iii, 472. No. 424)

[27] He who would guard his life anyhow cannot be a good soldier; he who is timid as to his goods gives not. Comy.

[28] B. cites, as illustrations, the stories in Dhp. Comy (iii, 3; 219 f.) of the One-Coat Brahmin and of Ankura. Whether this Comy, was his work, or not, is among scholars still undecided, but see H.C. Norman, Dhammapada Commentary, I, xivf; S. Sumangala: The Dhammapada and its Commentary, Ceylon Nat. Rev., 1914.

[29] Samena. The Jātaka translation misses this point. The character of the donee comes on only in the next gāthā.

[30] Both Commentaries call this a mere desanā-sīsaṃ or typical instance. The word Vetaraṇī (the infernal river) stands for the infernal regions. Cf. Jāt. v, 266.

[31] Discretion in the gift and choice of recipient, says B. — e.g. not giving to schismatics, like the 95 Pāsaṇḍas, but rather to the Sāsana. Let us hope the deva was less denominationally minded than B.

[32] Idha jīvaloke — an unusual compound.

[33] The line represents the one word dhammapadaṃ. The ambiguity of the term is well known. See Childers' Dict. s.v.; S. Sumangala The Dhammapada and its Commentary. That Comy, (on Dhp. 44, 45) defines it as the 37 'factors of enlightenment' = doctrines. Our Comy. paraphrases it here by Nibbāna.

[34] Such as Kassapa Buddha and others; and Koṇāgamana Buddha, etc., or simply all the good in the past. Comy.

[35] Lit. 'here.' Cf. Wordsworth's The world is too much with us ...

[36] The Comy. reads anāgantā.

[37] Aghaṃ

[38] This gāthā, in A. iii, 411, is ascribed to the Buddha, and is quoted in the Kathā-vatthu (see Points of Controversy, p. 216, n. 2). It is also quoted in our Comy, with reference to the Pasūra Sutta in the Sutta-Nipāta. The Comy to that work explains this reference in its narrative introducing the Sutta (p. 538 f.).

[39] Occurs in Dhp. 221, and is repeated below, § 6.

[40] Cf. the explanation in Dhp, Comy, iii, 298.

[41] Cf. ibidem. B.'s explanation coincides.

[42] 'One is in the inevitable misery-whirlpool of life, but one is not further overwhelmed.' Comy.

[43] See above, I, 2, § 10.

[44] The form of these two verses is much affected in the Sutta-Nipata (e.g., Sela Sutta and Parāyanavagga, where see another query of Mogharājan, ver. 1116 f.), but are quite exceptional in the Saṃyutta-Nikāya. The bhikkhu, probably the Thera Mogharājan (it was a careless oversight in the Pss. of the Brethren to suppose he might be the deva of the first verse; he is called 'reverend,' āyasmā), is said by B. to have formed the wish to carry on the listeners' interest to learn what befell those who admired the saint. If they that praise do so with emulation, they also may hope to attain.

[45] These, wrote B., formed no separate deva-world. They were just devatas who had heard the recluse Gotama praise his disciples for self-denying practices, while he himself wore raiment of silk, fine cloth, or linen, ate food worthy of a raja, dwelt, in a 'Fragrant Cell' like a deva-mansion, and used good medicines. Because of their captious remarks the Theras, when editing these verses, gave them their name. The soubriquet is also given to a Thera in the Dhp. Comy. (iii, 376) in connection with ver. 253.

[46] Lit. 'understand him.' These four lines are also assigned to Bākula, and the last two to Subhūta (Pss. of the Brethren, vers. 322; 226).

[47] Anukkamituṃ.

[48] Parsed as 'We do not talk in this way.' Comy.

[49] [Loka]pariyāyaṃ.

[50] Nibbutā.

[51] See I, 1, § 1.

[52] Asādetabbaṃ.

[53] The usual formula of confession as given in the Vinaya and Suttas, with, of course, a special application. See Vin. Texts ii, 261, where also the wonted response is given called 'accepting.' It was the Master's inscrutable (and ironic?) smile, in place of that which flustered the impulsive devas. B. judges that the smile was shown in order to provoke the questions which led to the fuller revelation of the Buddha's high office. (Tāsaṃ in the text should be tesaṃ.)

[54] So the Comy., gaṇṭhikaṃ. Cf. Dhp. Comy. iii, 352 f.

[55] The first two lines occur Iti-vuttaka, § 39.

[56] A line repeated below, I, 6, § 9. The 'other I' is literally 'the second one' (dutiyā), a term usually reserved for the more sinister company of natural desire, or craving: S. iv, 37; Pss. of the Brethren, vers. 541; 1091; Sn. 740. In rendering suddhā by 'faith,' we would say that faith must be taken in its sense of assurance, confidence in the worth of a certain attitude and course of action. Thus a pupil must have suddhā: M. ii, 94.

[57] See above, I, 4, § 4.

[58] These verses are included in those assigned to Angulimāla, Thera and ex-bandit, Pss. of the Brethren, ver. 883 f.; = M. ii, 105, with one variant. 'Chiefest wealth' B. holds to be 'pearls, and other jewels.'

[59] This Sutta is verbatim the opening part of the Malā Samaya or Great Concourse Suttanta of D. ii, 253 f. (Dialogues ii, 282f.). Sakka's, or Sākya's, a noble clan of the highlands or Himālayan foothills of Kosala, the Buddha's own clan. B. launches fully into the story of the feud between the Sakka's and Koliyans, told also in the introduction to the Kunāla Jātaka (v, 412 f.).

[60] The supreme heaven of the Rūpa-loka, the Brahmā world being its lowest. Compendium, 138.

[61] Dakkhitaye, a Vedic infinitive. Cf. E. Müller, Pali Grammar, p. 126.

[62] The persistently animistic language of even these 'higher' gods is noteworthy. B. is garrulously imaginative — or the tradition he hands on is so — about their thoughts, words, and deeds on this great occasion.

[63] The Comy. narrates an absurd legend to explain the name, associated with Maddā, mother of King Ajātasattu. (See Thusa Jātaka, No. 338). The park was a preserve in a very real sense: 'where deer (or game) might dwell free from peril.' The injury to the Buddha is that inflicted by his cousin, the schismatic Devadatta, narrated in Vinaya Texts, iii, 245; cf. Jātaka, No. 503; Milinda i, 248 f. Cf. Dhp. Comy. ii, 164.

[64] The lion posture is gone into by B. at some length.

[65] See above, I, 4, § 3.

[66] Nāga. Cf. Pss. of the Brethren, ver. 692 ff. B. explains in a similar exegesis: balavantaṭṭhena nāgo.

[67] See above, I, 2, § 4, n. ...

[68] All these six appellatives are terms connoting excellence borrowed from the animal kingdom, as metaphors of high mettle, breed, and training.

[69] Abhinataṃ, apanataṃ. Merely exegetically explained by B. as rāgānugataṃ, dosānugataṃ respectively: '(not) gone after lust or ill-will.' Nata is bent; the verb is applied (a) literally to the bending forth and, with second prefix ni, down, of a tortoise's limbs emerging from its shell, when danger is past, S. iv, 178; (b) figuratively to constructive work of mind (citta) in Jhāna, Dialogues i, 86 (§ 83) f.

[70] I tried, in this difficult passage, to get light from B., who has vāritavataṃ. See sasaṅkhāra* and vāritavataṃ*.

[71] I have followed the Comy. in this curious line, but am not convinced that the compilers of the Four Nikāyas knew of more than the three older Vedas (to which they often allude). B. indeed specifies the Fifth as the Itihāsa (-purāṇa), but that is another matter. Sataṃ saman he reads as = to the vassasataṃ of the next verse, and caraṃ as = to carantā. '500 Vedas' is the more obvious hyperbole.

[72] A free, but, I think, not unfaithful rendering of the one compound hīnatta-rūpā: having the quality or nature (Comy.: sabhāvā) of 'lowness.' The whole effort to secure rebirth in Brahmā-world was judged to be low or poor; cf. M. ii, 195: 'that low Brahmā-world,' etc. Cf. p. 37, n, 1. So the Teacher. Devas usually judged otherwise.

[73] See above, I, 1, § 9.

[74] This amiable fairy has not been met with elsewhere in Pali literature. B. is silent about her, and about Kokanadā-minor, of the next Sutta — whether they were sisters or not. The father's name occurs not infrequently, e.g., D. iii, 205; Jāt. i, 322; [?] iv, 253; cf. Pss. of the Brethren, 5, n. 3, etc. B. calls him 'rāja' of the raincloud devas, and the first named fairy catu-mahārājikā: of the status of the Four Kings of the Firmament (Dialogues, ii, 242).

[75] Sattassa ? = sattattassa, as in D. i, 29 sattattāya.

[76] Cf. Jāt. v, 266. This particular purgatory does not appear in the list of purgatories below, VI, 1, § 10. The seaport so named (see Buddhist India, p. 38) was not apparently connected with purgatorial legend. B. gives legendary details. Cf. below, 82, n. 3; 117.

[77] See above, I, 4, § 7.

[78] As in § 9. These verses form an interesting contrast to the preceding. The terms used are of a less popular, more academical nature, as if the junior lady were more cultured. She uses the verb characterizing the Vibhajjavādins and is primed in methodology.

[79] See I, 2, § 10.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
1. Devatā-saṇyutta
5. Āditta-Vagga

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

1. The Devas

5. The 'Burning' Suttas

Sutta 41

A-fire

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva,[1] when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"With house on fire 't is for the best to bring
The goods outside, nor leave them to be burned.
So in this world, a-blaze with age and death;[2]
Bring out by gifts; what's given is well brought.

What's given bears fruit of bliss; naught given, no bliss.
Robbers may bear away [the goods ye keep],
Kings commandeer, and fire destroy the rest.

The end arrives; the body must be left,
And therewith all belongings: — let the wise
Discerning this enjoy his goods and give.
Hath he as he is able used and shared,
Blameless he may to radiant realms attain."

Sutta 42

Giver of What?[3]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"What doth he give who giveth strength?
Or he that giveth comeliness?
What doth he give who giveth sight?
Or he that giveth happiness?
Who all doth give, what giveth he?
Asked art thou. Declare to me."

"He giveth strength who giveth food;
Who giveth gear gives comeliness[4];
He giveth sight who giveth lamp;
And he it is gives happiness
Who giveth vehicles[5]; whoso
Doth give a dwelling giveth all.
Who in the Norm doth give instruction,[6] this Giveth Ambrosia [undying bliss]."

Sutta 43

Food

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"'T is food both gods and men chiefly desire.
Who may that creature be, demon or sprite,[7]
Who, unlike them, hankers not after food?"

"The food that's given in faith, with heart made pure:—
That finds him out in this world and the next.
Hence[8] should he avarice suppress, and make

Off'rings of charity, mast'ring the taint.
Sure planted in some other future life
Rewards of virtue on all beings wait."

Sutta 44

Which Hath One Root

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"That which hath but one root; which looks both ways;
With triple stain; and with arenas five;
An ocean; having dozen turns and twists;
Quaking abyss[9]: — past all the seer hath crossed."

Sutta 45

The Perfect One

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"By name the Peerless,[10] Seer of subtlest sense,[11]
Giver of insight, loosed from the lair
Of sense-desires, behold him, known of all,
In wisdom rich, who wrought the mighty quest[2]
For all upon the Ariyan Way embarked!"

Sutta 46

Nymphs[13]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"By troops of nymphs made resonant—not so!
Haunted by troops of fiends that paradise
Doth seem. 'Delusion' were a fitter name.
How shall there egress be?"

[The Exalted One:—]

"'Straight' is the name that Road is called, and 'Free
From Fear' the Quarter whither thou art bound.
Thy Chariot[14] is the 'Silent Runner' named,[15]
With Wheels of Righteous Effort[16] fitted well.
Conscience the Leaning-board[17]; the Drapery[18]
Is Heedfulness; the Driver is the Norm,
I say, and Right Views, they that run before.[19]
And be it woman, be it man for whom
Such chariot doth wait, by that same car
Into Nibbāna's presence shall they come."

Sutta 47

Planters of Groves

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"Say of what folk by day and night
For ever doth the merit grow?[20]
In righteousness and virtuous might What folk from earth to heaven go?"

"Planters of groves and fruitful trees,[21]
And they who build causeway and dam,[22]
And wells construct and watering-sheds[23]
And [to the homeless] shelter give: —
Of such as these by day and night
For ever doth the merit grow.
In righteousness and virtue's might Such folk from earth to heaven go."

Sutta 48

Jeta's Grove[24]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"This is the kindly Jeta Grove, resort
Of the [august] fraternity of seers,
Where sojourneth the Sovereign of the Norm,
And whence ariseth rapture in my breast.

"Goodwill,[25] and wisdom, mind by method trained,[26]
The highest conduct on good morals based: —
This maketh mortals pure, not rank nor wealth.
Hence, his own good discerning, let the wise
Throughly examine how to train the mind.[26]
Thus and therein shall he find purity.
Even as Sāriputta was supreme
In insight, morals and self-mastery,[27]
So may the Brother who hath won the goal
Rank even with the highest of them all."

Sutta 49

The Miser

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"They who 'mong men as misers count, who grudge
Their giving and who churlishly accost,[28]
Who bar the way for gifts to others given:
Here, and hereafter what is their reward?
To ask this of our lord we've hither come.
To know how he will answer fain are we."[29]

[The Exalted One: —]

"They who 'mong men as misers count, who grudge
Their giving and who churlishly accost,
Who bar the way for gifts to others given:
In purgatory, or as animals,
In Yama's kingdom come they back to life.
Or if among mankind they live again,
In some poor family they find rebirth,
Where scarcely may they gain raiment, or food,
Or sensuous pleasures, or the joys of play.
Those things the fools do hope for by and by Remain e'en here ungotten: such reward
Have they e'en now, hereafter woeful doom."

"Sooth hast thou said and we have understood.
Another question ask we, Gotama.
They who have won rebirth among mankind,
Are affable and void of avarice,
Fervent believers in Buddha and Norm,
Holding the Order in deep reverence:
Here and hereafter what is their reward?
To ask this of our lord we've hither come.
To know how he will answer fain are we."

[The Exalted One: —]

"They who have won rebirth among mankind,
Are affable, and void of avarice,
Fervent believers in Buddha and Norm,
Holding the Order in deep reverence:
Brightly they shine in heaven when there reborn,
Or if among mankind they live again,
In some rich family they find rebirth,
Where without toil they get raiment and food,
And sensuous pleasures and the joys of play.
They bask in plenty like those devas who Joy in their own creations[30]: such reward
Have they e'en now, hereafter happy doom."

Sutta 50

Ghaṭīkāra[31]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the deva Ghaṭīkāra when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"In the far heavens of Aviha[32] there came,
Beborn,[33] seven Brethren winning Liberty.

Lust and ill-will for them were perished quite.
Safe had they crossed where all the world sticks fast.[34]

And who were they who crossed o'er the morass,
The realm of dying, passing hard to cross,
Who having left behind this mortal frame,
Passed into touch with things celestial?[35]

'Twas Upaka, and Phalagaṇḍa too,
And Pukkusāti making three, besides
Bhaddiya, Khaṇḍadeva too, for five,
And Bāhuraggi, lastly Pingiya:
They having left behind this mortal frame
Passed into touch with things celestial."

[The Exalted One:—]

"Fair things thou speakest of the Brethren seven
Who have abandoned Māra's traps and snares.
Whose was the doctrine that they learned, whereby
They smote in twain the fetters of rebirth?"

"Twas thine alone, Exalted One, thy Rule,
Thy teaching only 't was they learned; thereby
They smote in twain the fetters of rebirth?
'Where mind and body wholly cease to be'[36]: —
That learned they here from thee; thereby
They smote in twain the fetters of rebirth."

[The Exalted One:—]

"Deep is the word thou speakest, hard to learn,
And passing difficult to understand.
Say then: whose doctrine is it thou hast learned,
That thou canst utter such a word as this?"

[Ghaṭīkāra:—]

"In former birth maker of jars was I,
In Vehalinga as the Potter known.
My mother and my father I maintained,
Lay-follower of the holy Kassapa.

Eschewing carnal things, unworldly, chaste.
I was of those men fellow-villager,
I was their comrade in those bygone days.
Wherefore I know these things, I know
Of us seven Brethren winning Liberty,
For whom lust and ill-will are perished quite,
Who safe have crossed where all the world sticks fast."

[The Exalted One:—]

"Yea, as thou say'st then wast thou, Bhaggava![37]
In former birth maker of jars wast thou,
In Vehalinga as 'The Potter' known.
Thy mother and thy father didst thou keep,
Lay-follower of the holy Kassapa.
Eschewing carnal things, unworldly, chaste,
Of me wast thou the fellow-villager;
My comrade wast thou in those bygone days."

[The Editors of the Canon[38]:—]

Such was the meeting of these ancient friends.
Both having faculties supremely trained,
Both bearing bodies of their final life.

---

[1] The Comy. has nothing specific to say about the speakers of this and the next four Suttas. On this cf. Jāt. iii, 471.

[2] These are said to serve as types for all the eleven 'fires' of the world: lust, hate, illusion; birth, decay or old age, death; grief, lamentation, suffering, sadness, despair: a late category. Cf. Childers s.v. Aggi.

[3] Lit. 'what giver is strength-giver,' and so on. The auditory effect of the do, dado jingle is not reproducible.

[4] 'Even a handsome person looks plain if ill-clad or unclad; even an uncomely person looks like a deva, when well dressed.' Comy.

[5] This includes all means to move or be moved about: elephants, etc., and such things as umbrellas, sandals, walking-sticks, palanquins ... mending of roads, making of stairways, causeways, ... ships. Comy.

[6] B. quotes Dhp. 354.

[7] Lit. 'Now who may that yakkha be?'

[8] See above, I, 4, § 2.

[9] Taṇhā — natural, unregenerate desire, craving, thirst — is the answer to the enigma. The root is ignorance. Facing both ways are the opinions that there is a soul which (a) is immortal, (b) dies at each death. The stain is the triplet rāga, dosa, moha (lust, hate, unintelligence or illusion). The arenas, the five sense-pleasures. Ocean: insatiableness. Twelve turns and twists: organs and objects of sense. Abyss. See Pss. of the Brethren, p. 418f.

[10] Anoma-nāmaṃ. Cf. Rhys Davids, Buddhist Birth stories, p. 85. See also Sn. 153, 177; the latter verse a replica of this. According to B. it means 'absence of defect,' perfection (paripūra), endowed with every good quality.

[11] Nipunatthadassin.

[12] Usually rendered 'great seer,' or rishi. But B. explains the context by esī, not isi. See Mahesin*.

[13] The quaint legend associated with these lines is that of a bhikkhu who, striving to emulate his Teacher's strenuous life, strove to excess and died suddenly as he leant against the terrace-post. His life-work unfinished, he is reborn in the heaven of the Thirty-Three Gods, leaning against a doorpost there. Accosted as their lord by nymphs with song and music, he believed himself still a bhikkhu, till they brought a cheval-glass (lit. a 'whole-body-ish mirror') and revealed the god-like figure. Bitterly disappointed at his earthly failure, he went, escorted by celestial attendants, to report himself to the Master, de- preciating celestial delights in his verse. The grove was Nandana, Cf. above, I, 2, § 1. He renames it Mohuna. See also I, 3, § 9.

[14] Cf. S. iv, 291 f.

[15] Lit. the 'uncreaking,' unlike a chariot where axle fits badly into naves, or which squeaks when mounted. Comy. Road and Chariot are both interpreted by B. as the Eightfold Path.

[16] 'Dhamma'-cakkā is so interpreted by B.

[17] Cf. R. Morris in JPTS, 1886, 128. 'That the warriors may not fall out.' Comy. Conscience = conscientiousness: I, 2, § 8.

[18] Such as a lion's skin, etc. Comy.

[19] To prepare the way. Comy.

[20] The question of merit growing in the donor's karma (or karmic force) in proportion to the utility of his gift is discussed in Kathāvatthu. VII, 5 (see Points of Controversy, 200, 250). The orthodox view is that merit grows less by utility of the gift, than by the benevolent thought and wish of the donor before, during, and after the giving. If he 'sends such a disposition after' his gift, his merit grows.

[21] 'Flowering and fruit-bearing.' ' They also who enclose groves of such self-sown trees.'

[22] Lit. '-setu-makers' expanded into a line. Setu, from si, to bind, includes both causeway, dam, and bridge. But B. includes ships.

[23] Papan, etc.

[24] According to the legend given below, II, 2, § 10, the donor of the Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika, reborn as a deva, revisits the familiar scene — a charming by-product of Indian eschatology.

[25] Kamma, here defined as the will (cetanā) belonging to the Ariyan Path. The motive behind the deed is in Buddhism of chief importance. See preceding § 7; M. i, 371 (Upāli-sutta).

[26] B. explains dhammo here by doctrines belonging to samādhi, otherwise called adhicitta-sikkhā, see Buddhism, 1912, 199: 'the second grade.'

[27] Upasamena: 'the calming, or suppressing, of the kilesa's (lower nature, passions).' Comy. Moggallāna's verses (Pss. of the Brethren, 1182) praise him in the same terms. The exegeses of Dhammapāla there, and of B. here differ.

[28] Frightening the bhikkhu at their gate with: 'What have you ploughed or sown or reaped? We don't get anything, whence should we give to you? Be off!'

[29] Cf. I, 3, § 6.

[30] The Vasavattī gods, next to the topmost devas in the lowest heavens included in the universe of Desire. See Compendium, 138.

[31] The verses recur with introduction, II, 3, § 4. B. comments on the present Sutta only, being curiously silent as to the legend of the deva and his seven friends. Of these we can identify only two: Upaka, husband of Cāpā; concerning him Dhammapāla quotes these very lines (Pss. of the Sisters, p. 131, see Commentary on Therīgathā, ibid.); and Pukkusāti (M. iii, 247; cf. Buddhism, 1912, p. 67 Pss. of the Brethren, p. 91). Of the others Bhaddiya can be neither of the Arahant Theras so named. The other Bhaddiyas, Licchavi and Sākyan, were at this time on earth. The other four names are not elsewhere associated with the Aviha heavens. Perhaps the Pingiya is he of the Sutta Nipāta. Ghaṭīkāra and his friend Jotipāla, who was the Bodhisat in a former life, are the subject of the Ghaṭīkāra Sutta, M. ii, 45 f. The Buddha reminds the modest deva of this past friendship. We know of only three other such references to the Buddha's former births in the Four Nikāyas. See Buddhist India, 196. Kassapa was the Buddha then.

[32] Twelfth of the 16 Brahmā-worlds. 'Immobile' in Compendium. 139.

[33] Upapannāsi.

[34] Cf. I, 1, § 1.

[35] Dibbayogaṃ.

[36] See above, I, 3, § 3. This line occurs five times in this volume.

[37] Name of the potter of Rājagaha in M. iii, 327. Ghaṭīkāra means 'jar-maker.'

[38] So the Comy.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
1. Devatā-saṇyutta
5. Jarā-Vagga

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

1. The Devas

5. The 'Decay' Suttas

---

[50]

Sutta 51

Old Age

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"Tell me what brings us luck[1] e'en till we're old?
What is't that's fortunately[2] based and stayed?
[51] What is the precious jewel of mankind?
And what is hard for thieves to bear away?"

"Good morals bring us luck e'en till we're old,
A lucky base and stay hath confidence,
Wisdom's the precious jewel of mankind,
And merit's hard for thieves to bear away."[3]

Sutta 52

By Absence of Decay

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"What by the absence of decay brings luck?
What base and stay's of happy augury?
What is the precious jewel of mankind?
And what is it that thieves should bear away?"[4]

"Good morals bring us luck that ne'er decays,
Faith well-established doth good fortune bring.
Wisdom's the precious jewel of mankind,
Merit it is that thieves should bear away."[4]

Sutta 53

Friends.[5]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"What is a good friend to the wayfarer?
What is the good friend dwelling in the home?
What is a good friend where has risen need?
What is a good friend in the life to come?"

"Escort's[6] a good friend to the wayfarer,
Mother's the good friend dwelling in the home,[7]
[52] A comrade's help where there has risen need,
Is a good friend again and yet again,
And meritorious deeds wrought by one's self: —
That is a good friend in the life to come."

Sutta 54

Basis and support

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"What is the basis and support of men?[8]
What here below is comradeship supreme?
What are the spirits who sustain the life
Of all such creatures as to earth are bound?"

"Children are mankind's basis and support,[9]
The wife is here below comrade supreme;[10]
The spirits of the rain[11] sustain the life
Of all such creatures as to earth are bound."

Sutta 55

That which gives birth (1)

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"What is it that doth cause a man to be?
What is't of him that runneth to and fro?
What is it undergoes life's endless round?
What is it brings him fear and mighty dread?"

"Craving it is that causeth man to be;
His thought it is that runneth to and fro;
The 'person' undergoes life's endless round;
Suffering is his fear, his mighty dread."

Sutta 56

That which gives birth (2)

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"What is it that doth cause a man to be?
What is't of him that runneth to and fro?

What is it undergoes life's endless round?
What is there whence to him comes no release?"

[53] "Craving it is that causeth man to be;
His thought it is that runneth to and fro;
The 'person' undergoes life's endless round;
'Tis suffering, whence for him comes no release."

Sutta 57

That which gives birth (3)

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"What it is that doth cause a man to be?
What is't of him that runneth to and fro?
What is it undergoes life's endless round?
What is the prop and stay[12] [of his career]?"

"Craving it is that causeth man to be;
His thought it is that runneth to and fro;
The 'person' undergoes life's endless round;
Action's the prop and stay of his career."

Sutta 58

The Wrong Road

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"Which is the road that's said to lead astray?
What is't that perishes both night and day?[13]
What is it that doth stain celibacy?[14]
And what is bathing where no waters be?"

"Lust is the road that's said to lead astray,
Life 'tis that perishes both night and day,[15]
'Tis woman that doth stain the higher life,[16]
Steeped in that stain is all humanity.
Ascetic ways, the life of chastity[14]:—
These are as bathing where no waters be."[17]

Sutta 59

The Companion

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"What hath a man as second at his side?[18]
And what is it that issues him commands?
What is that which if it be greatly loved,
Will rid poor mortals of all misery?"

"Faith hath a man as second at his side,
Wisdom it is that issues him commands,
Nibbāna, if they love it utterly,
Will rid poor mortals of all misery."

Sutta 60

The Bard

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"What is the hidden source whence verses flow?
And what is it that issues from that source?[19]
What are the pegs whereon verses are hung?[20]
And what's the abode wherein the verses dwell?"

"Metre's the hidden source whence verses flow.
Letters it is that issue from that source.
'Tis names of things whereon verses are hung,
The bard is the abode wherein they dwell."

---

[1] 'Luck,' 'good fortune,' 'blessed' = sddhu* — so the Comy.

[2] Patiṭṭhita means base or support. B. cites Hattha[ka] the Āḷavakan and Citta the housefather as instances. A. i, 26; S. ii, 235; iv, 281 f.; 302 f.

[3] Cf. Khp. viii, 9. 'Merit means volition in meritorious acts, and that as an immaterial thing cannot be borne away.' Comy.

[4] The sense, let alone the preceding Sutta, suggest here a possible misreading in the text, and the reading: coreh'ahāriyaṃ for corehi hāriyaṃ. Comy, is silent.

[5] Mittaṃ, lit. a kind thing. Mittāni, neut. plur., occurs in D. iii, 188 (Singālovāda Sa).

[6] Sattho.

[7] 'In time of trouble though she be dirty, yet is she reckoned fragrant as sandalwood.' Comy.

[8] Vatthu, base, used here as meaning also support.

[9] 'They cherish in old age.' Comy.

[10] 'One to whom one may tell a secret that can be told to no one else.' Comy.

[11] Vuṭṭhi-bhūtā

[12] Cf. Pss. of the Brethren, 462 'having a staff to lean upon.' A figure for Karma's help to rebirth (nibbatti-avassayo).

[13] Kiṃ -su rattin-diva-kkhayo? may read as What is destruction of both night and day, or, as we take it, What is night-and-day-destruction? The night, says B., perishes by, or in the day (and vic versa).

[14] Brahmacariyaṃ.

[15] Vayo is more literally age — i.e. life in terms of time. But the word our idiom would use here is 'life.'

[16] 'Not an outer soilure that may be washed off, but one of rot (duṭṭho), that may not be cleansed.' Comy.

[17] The Comy. is silent here.

[18] See above, I, 4, § 6, and also 6, § 1, § 2.

[19] Letters make the pada (half-line), and the pada makes the gāthā, and the gāthā expresses the matter (atthaṃ). Comy.

[20] Expansion of the word sannissitā. 'Hung. e.g., on such notions as ocean, earth, etc.' Comy.,

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
1. Devatā-saṇyutta
5. Addha-Vagga

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

1. The Devas

5. The 'Over-Under' Suttas[1]

---

[54]

Sutta 61

Name

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"What is it that all things doth override?
Nought is in greater number found than this?
[55] And what is it above all other things
That bringeth everything beneath its sway?"

"Name is it that all things doth override,
Nought is in greater number found than name;
And name it is above all other things
That bringeth everything beneath its sway."

Sutta 62

The Heart (mind)[2]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"Now what is that whereby the world is led?
And what is that whereby it plagues itself?[3]

And what is that above all other things
That bringeth everything beneath its sway?"

"Its thoughts are that whereby the world is led,
And by its thoughts it ever plagues itself,
And thought it is above all other things
That bringeth everything beneath its sway."

Sutta 63

Craving

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"Now what is that whereby the world is led?
And what is that whereby it plagues itself?
And what is that above all other things
That bringeth everything beneath its sway?"

"Its cravings are that whereby the world is led,
And by its cravings it ever plagues itself,
And craving it is above all other things
That bringeth everything beneath its sway."

Sutta 64

The Chain

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"Now what is that whereby the world enchains?
What is it's going over, going through?[4]
And by abandoning of what is it
That 'Lo! Nibbāna' we [are wont to] say?"

[56] "Pleasure[5] is that whereby the world enchains
By thinking doth the world go o'er, go through.

And by abandoning of craving is't
That 'Lo! Nibbāna' we [are wont to] say."

Sutta 65

The Bond

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"Now what is that whereby the world doth bind?
What is it's going o'er and going through?
And by abandoning of what is it
That folk may sever that which holds them bound?"

"Pleasure is that whereby the world doth bind.
By thinking doth the world go o'er, go through,
And by abandoning of craving is't
That folk may sever that which holds them bound."

Sutta 66

Persecuted[6]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"Tell me what doth so persecute the world?
And whereby is it shrouded and beset?
What is the dart whereby it's pierced alway,
By itch of pestering desires assailed?"

"By Death the world is held enslaved; by age
And all decay 't is shrouded and beset;
By dart of craving pierced evermore,
By itch of pestering desires assailed."

Sutta 67

Strung up

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"What is't whereby the world is all strung up?[7]
Whereby is it escorted, guarded sure?
What doth enclose the world and shut it in?
And wherein doth it stand planted and stayed?"[8]

[57] "By cords of craving is the world strung up;
By age is it escorted, by decay;
Death doth enclose the world and shut it in.
In suffering doth it stand planted and stayed."

Sutta 68

Shut In

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"What doth enclose the world and shut it in?
And wherein doth it stand planted and stayed?
What is't whereby the world is all strung up?
Whereby is it escorted, guarded sure?"

"Death doth enclose the world and shut it in.
In suffering doth it stand planted and stayed.
By cords of craving is the world strung up;
By age is it escorted, by decay."

Sutta 69

Wishes

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"What is it holds the world a prisoner?
What subjugating gains it liberty?
And by abandoning of what is it
That every bond is severed utterly?"

"By wishes[9] is the world held prisoner,
Wishes suppressing gains it liberty,
By wish [for this or that] abandoning,
Lo! every bond is severed utterly."

Sutta 70

The World

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"What being given, comes the world to pass?[10]
What being given, holds it intercourse?
On what depending[11] doth it hold its way?
Because of what is it so sore oppressed?"

"'Six' being given,[12] comes the world to pass.
'Six' being given, holds it intercourse.
On 'Six' depending doth it hold its way.
Because of 'Six' it is so sore oppressed."

---

[1] The Comy. reads, not Addhavagga, but Anvavagga, and in § 1, line 1, anvabhavī. Cf. anvagū in line 2 of the text. (The confusion between addh and anv is easy in Singhalese script.) Name, it says, overrides (abhibhavati), falls upon (anupatati) everything. There is no being or thing without a name, whether this be attached primordially or by convention. Even if a tree or mineral be of name unknown, it will be called a no-namer (anāmako). Cf. our os innominatum; Pic Sans-nom.

[2] Citta. Generally used in the Nikāyas, especially in their poetry for mind as impulsive and emotional. A prose version of the stanza occurs in A. ii, 177 (IV, 186).

[3] Parikissati.

[4] Vicāraṇaṃ. 'The walking feet of the world, the singular expressing the plural.' Comy.

[5] Nandī. See above, I, 1, § 2.

[6] Verses in Sirimaṇḍa's gāthā (Pss. of the Brethren, 448), with one variant (pari-khitto or -vārito).

[7] Uḍḍito.

[8] See above, I. 6, § 1.

[9] Lit. wish (want, desire).

[10] Kismiṃ (uppanne), writes B., seeing here a locative absolute.

[11] Upāddya.

[12] Namely, the six organs of sense, mind, as co-ordinating sensations, ranking as sixth.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
1. Devatā-saṇyutta
5. Chetvā-Vaggo

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

1. The Devas

5. The 'Slaughter' Suttas[1]

---

[58]

Sutta 71

What Must We Slay?

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"What must we slay?
What must we slay if we would happy live?
What must we slay, if we would weep no more?

What is't above all other things, whereof
The slaughter thou approvest, Gotama?"

[The Exalted One :—]

"Wrath must ye slay, if ye would happy live,
Wrath must ye slay, if ye would weep no more.
Of anger, deva, with its poisoned source
And fevered climax, murderously sweet,[2]
That is the slaughter by the Ariyans praised;
That must ye slay in sooth, to weep no more."

Sutta 72

The Chariot

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"What signal doth a chariot announce?
What is the sign that warneth of a fire?
What is the symbol of a people's realm?
What is a woman's emblem and her sign?"[3]

[The Exalted One :—]

[59] "A banner doth the chariot announce;
Smoke is the sign that warneth of a fire;
A king's the symbol of a people's realm;
A husband is woman's emblem and sign."

Sutta 73

Riches[4]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"What here is the best wealth a man can have?
What well performed brings happiness along?
What in good sooth is of all tastes most sweet?
How say they that our life can best be lived?"

"Faith here is the best wealth a man can have,[5]
Right deeds[6] well done bring happiness along.
Truth in good sooth[7] is of all tastes most sweet.
Life lived by wisdom,[8] it is said, is best."

Sutta 74

Rain

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"Which of all things upspringing is the best?
And which is chief among the things that fall?
Which of the creatures that perambulate
Is chief, and which of those that predicate?"

[Another deva :—]

"Seed[9] of the things upspringing is the best,
And rain is chief among the things that fall.
[60] Kine of the creatures that perambulate
Are chief; a son, of those that predicate."[10]

[The Exalted One:—]

"Knowledge, of things upspringing is the best,
And ignorance is chief 'mong those that fall.

The Order 'mong perambulating things,
The Buddha 'mong the predicators's chief."[11]

Sutta 75

Frightened

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"The Path hath been set forth in divers ways: —
Why here are many folk so sore afraid?
I ask thee, Gotama so amply wise:
How may a man so stand and so abide
As not to fear life in another world?"

[The Exalted One :—]

"Let him but rightly set both speech and mind,
And by the body work no evil things.
If in a house well stored with goods he dwell,
Let him have faith, be gentle, share his goods
With others, and be affable of speech.

In these four qualities if he persist,
He need not fear life in another world."

Sutta 76

Doth not decay

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"What doth decay and what doth not decay?
Which is the road that's said to lead astray?
What peril to good doctrines bars the way?
What is't that perisheth both night and day?
[61] What is it that the celibate life doth stain?
And what is bathing where no waters be?[12]
To ask this of our lord we've hither come.
To know how he will answer fain are we?"[13]

"Material shape of mortals doth decay,
Their name, their family doth longer stay.[14]
Lust is the road that's said to lead astray.
Greed to sound doctrines bars th' imperilled way.
Life is't that perishes both night and day.

Woman doth stain life of celibacy: —
Steeped in that stain is all humanity.
Ascetic ways, the life of chastity:
These are as bathing where no waters be.

Six holes there are within the world whereon no mind can stay;
From all these six, by every means see that ye turn away: —
Sloth, slackness and inertia and want of self-control, Drowsiness, too, and laziness: — the fifth, and the sixth hole."

Sutta 77

Lordship

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"What maketh lordship 'mong the sons of men?
And what is the commodity supreme?
What is the rust and tarnish on the blade?[15]
And who are they who make a hell on earth?
To whom conveying do men bar the way?
And whom, conveying, are they fain to see?

Who is it coming back again, again,
Doth fill the wise man with complacency?"

[62] "Power of command[16] makes lordship among men.
Woman is the commodity supreme;[17]
Anger's the rust and tarnish on the blade,
Robbers are they who make a hell on earth.[18]
To them conveying do men bar the way,
The friar conveying[19] are they fain to see;
The friar coming back again, again,
Doth fill the wise man with complacency."

Sutta 78

Seeking

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"What should a man seeking his good not give?
Of what should mortals no surrender make?
What should as something gentle be discharged?
And what as rough be not discharged at all?

Himself should none seeking his own good give.[20]
None of himself should a surrender make.[21]
Speech should as something gentle be discharged,
As bad and rough discharged it should not be."

Sutta 79

Provisions

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"What packeth up provisions for the way?
What is't that draweth riches to itself?
What drags a man around and to and fro?
What's a hard thing to give up in this life?
Whereto is bound the great majority,
Like to a bird imprisoned in a snare?"

[63] "Faith packeth up provisions for the way.[22]
The power of luck draws riches to itself.
Desires[23] drag man around and to and fro.
Desires are hard to give up in this life.

Thereto is bound the great majority,
Like to a bird imprisoned in a snare."

Sutta 80

Radiance

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"What giveth radiance to all the world?
Who in this world's the watcher, fostering?[24]
Who in their work is mate to sons of men?[25]
The movements of that mate — what is their line?
What nourishes both slack and vigorous,
Like as a mother nourisheth her child?
What are the spirits who sustain the life
Of all such creatures as to earth are bound?"[26]

"Wisdom gives radiance to all the world.
Mindfulness is the watcher fostering.
Oxen in work are mates to sons of men.
The furrow[27] of their movements is the line.
The rain doth feed both slack and vigorous,

Like as a mother nourisheth her child.
The spirits of the rain sustain the life
Of all such creatures as to earth are bound."

Sutta 81

Undefiled[28]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a certain deva, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and coming, saluted him, and stood at one side. So standing, he spoke this verse before him: —

"Who in this world below is undefiled?
Whose is the way of life that's never wrecked?[29]
[64] Who is it understand earthly desires?
Who is a freed man now and evermore?
Who, in his ways established, doth receive Homage from mother, father, brother too?
Whom, though he be of lowly birth,
Do noble warriors reverently salute?"

"Recluses in this world are undefiled;
Recluses' way of life is never wrecked;
Recluses understand earthly desires;
And theirs is freedom now and evermore.

In virtue stablished the recluse receives Homage from mother, father, brother too,v Him, though he be of lowly birth,
Do noble warriors reverently salute."

---

[1] The Comy. reads Jhatvā, not Chetvā, as do the Sinh. MSS. and Feer. In his MS. of the Comy, he found Ghatvā. I have retained *Jhatvā (having destroyed), as agreeing better with vadhaṃ (slaughter) in the context of the first gāthā, whence the Vagga derives its name. Spiritual 'cutting' (chetvā) is prescribed for taṇhā and doubt, but never, I believe, for anger.

[2] The original is severely simple. The line expands the compound 'honey-sweet climax.' Pleasure arises, writes B., in capping one angry rejoinder by another, in hitting back. The gāthā is repeated thrice in this volume: II, 1, § 3; VII, 1, § 1; XI, 3, § 1.

[3] Signal, sign, emblem: paññāmy; Comy. 'paññāyati etena. The banner in battle reveals the royal chariot. And 'even though she be an emperor's daughter, once married a woman is known as so-and-so's wife.' There are, however, several cases where she is called so-and-so's mother (see below, III, 2, § 1; Psalms E. B. passim), or famed under her own name though married — e.g. Visākhā

[4] Recurs below, X, § 12, with one variant — suciṇṇ-aṃ, for -o.

[5] 'By faith' (trust, confidence; see above, I, 4, § 6) 'a man wins wealth, social success, the lower and higher heavens, and finally Amata-mahā-nibbāna.' Comy.

[6] Dhammo: 'the tenfold path of good conduct' named in S. ii, 168 (XIV, 27).

[7] B. has in mind, under saccaṃ have!, the form of adjuration by a statement of fact (sacca-kiriyaṃ karoti) and its magical results, He cites turning back rivers in spate, checking conflagrations, etc. Cf. Jāt. i, 214 passim.

[8] B. draws a distinction between the wisdom of the layman and of the religieux.

[9] Corn being the best among the 'seven kinds.' Comy.

[10] The stilted terms are chosen to match the similar and unusual Pali verbs. A son (or child) is best of talkers 'because he does not talk harmfully about his parents.'

[11] The Comy. explains this second reply by supposing a second devata, near the Presence, to rebuke her or his fellow for asking such questions and to have given the first reply. Whereupon the former rebukes this impertinent breaking in, and again puts the questions to the Exalted One, who then gives his reply.

[12] See, except for lines 1st and 3rd, above I, 6, § 8.

[13] See above, I, 5, § 9.

[14] B. is careful to illustrate by such immortal names, etc., as those of the Buddhas.

[15] Cf. Theragāthā, ver. 1095: cf. 1094. B. also refers to 'the blade of insight.'

[16] Vaso.

[17] 'Because she is of indispensable utility, or because through her Bodhisats and world-rulers take birth.' Comy.

[18] Abbuda; see below, VII, 1, §§ 9, 10.

[19] 'Namely, food-tickets. To give these confers merit on the lay donor.' Comy.

[20] That is, as a slave. Comy.

[21] That is, 'to lions, tigers, and the like.' Neither injunction applies to a Bodhisat. Comy. The Jātakas represent the Bodhisat as disregarding both.

[22] Cf. Dhp. Comy. iii, 355 (ver. 235). On 'faith' see above, I, 4, § 6.

[23] Or 'wishes.' Cf. above, I, 7, § 9.

[24] 'Like the brahmin who fosters' [the sacred fire]. Comy.

[25] Sajīvānaṃ.

[26] See above, 6, § 4.

[27] Read sīt 'assa.

[28] Araṇā.

[29] That is, the Ariyan Path that they have chosen. Comy.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
2. Devaputta Saṃyutta
1. (untitled) or Kassapa

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

1. The Sons of the Devas[1]

1. Kassapa

Sutta 1

Kassapa (1)

---

[65]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now Kassapa, son of the gods, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and stood at one side. So standing, he spake thus to the Exalted One:—

"The Exalted One hath revealed 'the bhikkhu' and hath given even to us the admonition for a bhikkhu."[2]

[The Exalted One: —]

"Well then, Kassapa, say what has occurred to thee."

[Kassapa: —]

"See that in what hath been so finely said
Ye train yourselves: — in the recluse's task,
In mysteries of the solitary seat,
And in the mastering of the heart's unrest."

[66] Thus said Kassapa, son of the devas, and the Master approved of his words.

Then Kassapa thinking:

"The Master approves of me!" saluted the Exalted One with the right-hand obeisance and vanished from that spot.

Sutta 2

Kassapa (2)

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now Kassapa, son of the gods, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and stood at one side. So standing, he spake thus to the Exalted One:—

"The brother with his mind set wholly free
Should zealously in Jhāna meditate,
Yearning to win his heart's inmost desire,[3]
And knowing of all things the flux and ebb,
Lovely in disposition,[4] leaning not;
By That rewarded and by That repaid."[5]

Sutta 3

Māgha[6]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now Māgha, son of the gods, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and stood at one side. So standing, he spake thus to the Exalted One:—

"What must we slay if we would happy live?
What must we slay if we would weep no more?
What is't above all other things whereof
The slaughter thou approvest, Gotama?"

"Wrath must ye slay, if ye would happy live,
Wrath must ye slay, if ye would weep no more.
[67] Of wrath, victor of Vatra, with its source
Of poison and its climax murderous sweet: —
That is the slaughter by the Ariyans praised,
That must ye slay if ye would weep no more."

Sutta 4

Māgadha

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now Māgadha, son of the gods, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and stood at one side. So standing, he spake thus to the Exalted One:—

"How many things light up the world and make it bright and clear?

To ask this question, Sir, we've come.
Thy word we fain would hear."

"Four things give light unto the world;
a fifth ye'll not descry.
By day the sun doth shine;
by night the moon makes bright the sky;
And fire gives light by day and night,
shining[7] now here now there,
But of all things that shine, as best:
light of the Buddha stands confessed,
Glory without compare."

Sutta 5

Dāmali

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now Dāmali, son of the gods, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and stood at one side. So standing, he spake thus to the Exalted One:—

"Great effort hath the diligent Arahant[8]
To make herein: that by the abandoning
Of sense-desires he hope not for rebirth."

[68] "There is naught left to do, 0 Dāmali,
For th' Arahant, — so said the Exalted One— Accomplished is the work he had to do.
While he no footing finds, with all his limbs
A creature swept by river-current toils;
Finding a footing high and dry he stands,
He toileth not; passed over, sooth, is he.
A parable this, Dāmali. E'en so
The Arahant who hath destroyed the Drugs,
Wise, given to Jhāna, since he hath attained
The end of death and coming back to birth,
He toileth not; passed over, sooth, is he."

Sutta 6

Kāmada

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now Kāmada, son of the gods, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and stood at one side. So standing, he spake thus to the Exalted One:—

"'Tis hard to do, Exalted One! 'Tis very hard to do, Exalted One!"[9]

"And yet the 'hard to do' is done by them,
0 Kāmada," — so said the Exalted One —

"Who in the learner's moral code[10] stand firm. For him who ventures on the homeless life, Serene content arises, bringing joy."

"'Tis hard to win, 0 Exalted One, this serene content."

"And yet that which is hard to win they win,
0 Kāmada," — so said the Exalted One —

"Who love to achieve the mastery of the heart, -
The mind of whom, during both day and night,
Doth love to work and make that peace to be."[11]

[69] "Hard is it to compose, Exalted One, that heart."

"Yet that which hard is to compose, e'en they Compose, Kāmada," — said the Exalted One —

"Who love the fret and fever of their parts
And powers[12] to bring into tranquillity.

Gutting in twain the net that Death doth lay
They walk at large as Ariyans, Kāmada."

"The way is hard to go, Exalted One, and rough the Path!"

"And yet along the Path thou callest rough
The Ariyans hold their course, 0 Kāmada,.
In that 'rough path' non-Ariyans headlong fall;
To Ariyans the way is even. They Walk in the uneven with an even stride."[13]

Sutta 7

Pañcālacaṇḍa

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now Pañcālacaṇḍa, son of the gods, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and stood at one side. So standing, he spake thus to the Exalted One: —

"Lo! even amid crowding obstacles[14]
He that is rich in wisdom findeth room,
Even the sage, expert t' eliminate,
Th'enlightened who doth Jhāna understand."[15]

"Even 'mid crowding obstacles they find,
Pañcālacaṇḍa, — said the Exalted One, — [70] 'The Norm whereby Nibbāna may be won.
They who have gotten hold[16] of mindfulness,
They are perfected in self-mastery."

Sutta 8

Tāyana

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now Tāyana, son of the devas, formerly a dissentient teacher,[17] when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and stood at one side. So standing, he spake thus to the Exalted One: —

"Advance with valiant energy, recluse,[18]
Cut off the stream, scatter desires of sense.[19]
If these be not renounced, nowise the sage
Can conjure up the [mystic] unison.[20]
If he would do that which he ought to do,
He should go forth with desperate energy.
He who hath left the world with purpose slack,
Doth only sprinkle thicker cloud of dust.[21]
Not done, for us, is better than ill done;
I11 done will burn us in the time to come.[22]
That what is done be well done — this is best.
On what's thus done burning doth follow not.
Just as a blade of grass, if badly grasped,
Will only come to cut the clumsy hand,
So the recluse's calling, if misused,
Doth drag him downward to the gates of hell.
[71] All flaccid action, all corrupted rites,
All mischief-making in religious life: —
On all such work follows no high reward."[23]

Thus said Tāyana, son of the devas, and so saying he saluted the Exalted One with the right hand obeisance and vanished there and then.

Now when the night was past the Exalted One addressed the bhikkhus and told them of Tāyana's visit, repeating all the verses he had said. And he added:

"Learn, bhikkhus, the Tayana-verses! Learn them by heart, for the verses of Tayana bear upon your good and belong to the rudiments of the holy life."

Sutta 9

Candimā

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now at that time Candima, son of the devas, was seized by Rāhu, lord of Asuras.[24] Then Candima, calling the Exalted One to mind, invoked him by this verse: —

"0 Buddha! Hero! glory be to thee!
Thou that are wholly set at liberty!
Lo ! I am fallen into dire distress![25]
Be thou my refuge and my hiding-place!"

Then the Exalted One addressed a verse to Rāhu, lord of the Asuras, on behalf of Candima, son of the devas: —

"To the Tathāgata, the Arahant
Hath Candima, for help and refuge gone.
[72] 0 Rāhu, set the moon at liberty!
The Buddhas take compassion on the world."[26]

Then Rāhu, lord of Asuras, let go Candima, son of the devas, and like a man affrighted, Rāhu, came into the presence of Vepacitti, lord of the Asuras, and stood at one side, trembling and with stiffened hair. And Vepacitti addressed him, standing there, in these lines: —

"Now why, as one o'erta'en by sudden fright,
Didst thou, 0 Rāhu, let the moon go free?

Here comest thou in agitated plight —
Why standst thou there so terrified to see?"

[Rāhu,:—]

"Now let my head in seven pieces rive,
Ne'er let me happy be while yet I live
If, had I not let Candima, go free,
The Buddha's verse had not demolished me!"

Sutta 10

Suriya[27]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now at that time Suriya son of the devas, was seized by Rāhu, lord of Asuras. Then Suriya, calling the Exalted One to mind, invoked him by this verse: —

"0 Buddha! Hero! Glory be to thee!
Thou that art wholly set at liberty!

Lo! I am fallen into sore distress.
Be thou my refuge and my hiding-place!"

Then the Exalted One addressed a verse to Rahu, lord of Asuras, on behalf of Suriya, son of the devas: —

[73] "To the Tathāgata, the Arahant
Hath Suriya for help and refuge gone.
0 Rahu, set the sun at liberty!
The Buddhas take compassion on the world.
Nay, Rahu, thou that walkest in the sky,
Him that thou chokest,[28] darkening the world,
Swallow him not, the craftsman of the light,
The shining being of the disc, the fiery heat,
My kith and kin:[29] — Rahu, set free the sun!"

Then Rāhu, lord of Asuras, let go Suriya, son of the devas, and Suriya as one swiftly crossing came into the presence of Vepacitti, lord of the Asuras and stood at one side, trembling and with stiffened hair. And Vepacitti addressed him, standing there, in these lines: —

"Now why, as one o'erta'en by sudden fright,
Didst thou, 0 Rāhu, let the sun go free?
Here comest thou in agitated plight —
Why standst thou there so terrified to see?"

[Rāhu,:—]

"Now let my head in seven pieces rive,
Ne'er let me happy be while yet I live
If, had I not let Suriya go free,
The Buddha's verse had not demolished me!"

---

[1] Devaputtā. These were born to lower gods from the hip (anke); females were called daughters of the gods (see I, 1, § 1, n. ...). If their name was not known they were called devatā; if known, they were called devaputta. Comy.

[2] B.'s legend is that Kassapa had listened to the Buddha's exposition of Abhidhamma in the 'Thrice-Ten Devas' City ' (see Points of Controversy, 1) during one Lenten season of his long ministry on earth. A feature in the address was the 'Jhāna-vibhanga' (see Vibhanga, PTS, p. 224), containing a description of the calling and duties of a bhikkhu. He wishes to acknowledge the honour done to devas, and the profit to himself.

[3] I.e. Arahantship. Comy. On 'heart' (hadaya) in Buddhism, see Bud. Psy., 1914, 34, 71.

[4] See above, I, 1, § 9.

[5] Expansion of the word tad-ānisaṇso (viz., arahattānisaṇso).

[6] Māgha is one of the names for Sakka, chief deva in the lowest, or Thrice-Thirty (or Three-and-Thirty) heaven. The Bodhisat himself was once reborn as Sakka or Māgha. Vatra was an Asura (titan or demon) conquered by Sakka. See Jāt. i, 153;199. The verses occur above, I, 8, § 1, and below, vii, 1, § 1; xi, 3, § 1.

[7] These verses occur above, I, 3, § 6, with the one variant, here, of pakāsati for pabhāsati. It may be a misprint.

[8] Brāhmaṇa (cf. I, 1, § 1) a frequent equivalent in Buddhism for Arahant, and sometimes explicitly stated to be so, given of course the right context, e.g. S. iv, 175; A. ii, 5; cf. Dialogues, i, 105, 138. Dāmali's mistake was to impute unfinished achievement to the Arahant.

[9] Kāmada's legend is that, like the ex-bhikkhu of I, 5, § 6, he failed on earth to attain, and comes to lament his disappointment.

[10] Samāhitā.

[11] So B. suggests, namely, as to the object of the constructive work (in contemplation, of course). The creative force in the term bhāvanā ('work and make ... to be') — the causative form of bhavati, to become, is pointed out in Bud. Psy. (1914), 132 f. For all mystic work of mind contemplation means both elimination (pahāna) and hypernormal development or creation.

[12] The indriya's, covering both nouns, are the organism viewed not as passively recipient, but as dynamically controlling psycho-physical life.

[13] See I, 1, §§ 7, 8.

[14] Of the two classes of obstacle (sambādha) — the five hindrances (Dialogues i, 82 f.; Bud. Psy. Eth. 310 f.) and the five kinds of sense-pleasures — the former is meant. Jhāna is represented as 'room,' 'opportunity.' (Comy.) But the deva (pron. Panchāla-chanda) stops at Jhāna (as productive of rebirth in heaven), and has to be corrected.

[15] Abuddhi.

[16] Paccaladdhaṃsu.

[17] I.e. he taught some of the 62 views enumerated in the Brahma- jāla-suttanta (Dialogues i, 1 f.), like Nanda, Vaccha, Kisa, Sankicca, Pūrana, etc. By dint of good deeds, believing in karma, he was reborn in the heavens. Discerning there that at length a really saving gospel and Order were founded, he came to incite disciples. Comy.

[18] Brāhmaṇa. Cf. above § 5. The admonition here is not fitted for an adept or Arahant.

[19] Dhp. 383.

[20] Ekattaṃ, i.e. in Jhāna. In Paṭisambhidāmagga a synonym for (a) concentration, (b) grasp of facts. JPTS, 1908, 158. The next 12 lines =, in a different order, Dhp. 311-14.

[21] A figure of moral corruption. Cf. I. 1, § 6.

[22] Namely, with remorse, always thus figured.

[23] Ascribed, in Pss, of the Brethren, 277, to Sabhiya, also a zealous teacher and preacher.

[24] Candimā means 'moon' (c = ch). B., by a 'portmanteau exegesis, calls him cand-av-imā-na-vasī: 'the man dwelling in the mansion of the moon.' The incident is the Indian myth of the lunar eclipse, and the legend is annexed by the Suttanta-teaching to show the Buddha's power and pity.

[25] Sore distress is the sambādha, 'congesting obstacle,' of § 7 above: a fitting figure for the monster's jaws!

[26] 'Both on thee, Rāhu, and on him compassionate.' Comy. On Vepacitti, see below, XI, 1, § 5.

[27] This is the corresponding myth and annexation of the solar eclipse. There is the additional personal touch, in the restraining adjuration, of the Buddha's family being descended from the sun. Cf. below, VIII, §§ 1, 7. B. gives the measurements of the size of Rāhu, the dragon (gaṇḍaka), and the panic he creates among the 'mansions' of the gods.

[28] See JPTS, 1884, p. 81

[29] Cf. Pss. of the Brethren, ver. 26, 158. B. takes the view that the Buddha is speaking of Suriya as his disciple and spiritual son.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
2. Devaputta Saṃyutta
2. Anāthapiṇḍika Vagga

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

2. The 'Anāthapiṇḍika' Suttas

---

[73]

Sutta 11

Candimasa[1]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now Candimasa, son of the gods, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and stood at one side. So standing, he spake thus to the Exalted One: —

"They that to contemplative rapture[2] win,
With single mind,[3] insight, and thought alert,
They surely shall in safety go their ways,
As deer in marshy dell[4] mosquito-free.

[74] They that to contemplative rapture win,
Quitting corruption with all earnestness,
They to the further shore shall go their ways,
As fish once captured that hath broke the net."

Sutta 12

Veṇḍu[5]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now Veṇḍu, son of the gods, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and stood at one side. So standing, he spake thus to the Exalted One: —

"0 fortunate, 0 happy are the folk
Who, having waited on the Blessed One

And entered 'neath the Rule of Gotama, Pursue their training with all earnestness!

"They that continue in deep thought to train Themselves, 0 Veṇḍu" — said the Exalted One —
"In all the doctrines I have preached to them,
They strenuous, earnest, in due time will go Maybe no more into the power of death."

Sutta 13

Dīghalaṭṭhi

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha, in the Bamboo Grove, at the Squirrels' Feeding Ground. And Dīghalaṭṭhi,[6] son of the gods when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Bamboo Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and stood at one side. So standing, he spake thus to the Exalted One: —

"The Brother with his mind set wholly free
Should zealously in Jhāna meditate,
Yearning to win his heart's inmost desire,
And knowing of all things the flux and ebb,

[75]Lovely in disposition, leaning not,
By that rewarded and by that repaid."[7]

Sutta 14

Nandana

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now Nandana son of the gods, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and stood at one side. So standing, he spake thus to the Exalted One: —

"I ask of thee, Gotama, of thy wisdom
So wondrous wide, ask of th' Exalted One's
All-piercing insight, irresistible knowledge:[8]
What kind of man is it that they call virtuous?
What kind of man, say they, possesses wisdom?
What kind of man liveth beyond all sorrow?[9]
What kind of man is it that devas worship?"

[The Exalted One: —]

"He that is wise, virtuous, cultivated
In mind, intent, given to Jhāna, mindful.
All miseries driven away and banished:[10]
Such is [the saint known as] the Drug-destroyer,
Who here doth live, ultimate carcase bearing: —
This kind of man is it that they call virtuous;
This kind of man, say they, possesses wisdom;
This kind of man liveth beyond all sorrow;
This kind of man is it that devas worship."

Sutta 15

Candana

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now Candana son of the gods, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and stood at one side. So standing, he spake thus to the Exalted One: —

[76] "0 tell how may we pass across the flood,
Unfaltering in effort night and day?

Standing on naught, with naught on which to hang,
What doth remain save in the deep to drown?"

[The Exalted One:—]

"He that in virtuous habit never fails,
Hath insight, can to mystic rapture win,
Who stirs up effort, puts forth all his strength,[11] [12]
'Tis he can cross the flood so hard to pass.

Whoso for sense-experience is not fain,
Whoso hath got past each celestial chain,[13]
In whom craving, rebirth[14] are smitten down: —
'Tis he that never in the deep will drown."

Sutta 16

Sudatta

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now Sudatta son of the gods, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and stood at one side. So standing, he spake thus to the Exalted One: —

"As one downsmitten by impending sword,
As one whose hair and turban are aflame,
So let the Brother, mindful and alert,
Go forth, all worldly passions left behind.

As one downsmitten by impending sword,
As one whose hair and turban are aflame,
So let the Brother, mindful and alert,
Go forth, leaving soul-fallacy behind."[15]

---

[77]

Sutta 17

Subrahmā

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now Subrahmā son of the gods, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and stood at one side. So standing, he spake thus to the Exalted One: —

"Ever my heart is filled with sore dismay,
Ever my mind with anguish is o'ercast,
For things I looked for but which happened not,
And for the things that happened in their stead.[16]
If there be riddance of my sore dismay,
That tell me thou to whom I make appeal."

[The Exalted One: —]

"Save by high wisdom's modes, by ways austere,[17]
Save by restraint of powers and faculties,[18]
Save by renouncing, by forsaking all,
No safety can I see for living things."

And the deva vanished there and then

Sutta 18

Kakudha

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying at Saketa,[19] in the Anjana Grove, in the Deer Preserve.

Now Kakudha son of the gods, [78] when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Anjana Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and stood at one side. So standing, he spake thus to the Exalted One: —

"Art thou pleased, recluse?"

"What, friend, have I received [that I should be pleased]?"

"Art thou sad, recluse?"

"What is worn out, friend?"

"Wherefore, recluse, thou art neither pleased nor sad?"

"That is so, friend."

[Kakudha: —]

"How now, 0 Brother! thou art not depressed,
And yet no pleasure doth arise in thee?
How now! art thou, seated so lonely there,
Not overwhelmed in spirit by regret?"[20]

[The Exalted One: —]

"Yea, I, 0 fairy,[21] am no wise depressed,
And yet no pleasure doth arise in me;
Nor yet, though I am seated lonely here,
Am I overwhelmed in spirit by regret."

[Kakudha: —]

"How comes it, Brother, thou art not depressed,
Yet that no pleasure doth arise in thee?
How is't that thou, seated so lonely there,
Art not o'erwhelmed in spirit by regret?"

[The Exalted One: —]

"Pleasure may come to one who's sad at heart;
Sadness may follow where the heart is pleased.
Whoso hath left the world—know this, 0 friend! —
Neither feels pleasure, nor is sad at heart."

[79][Kakudha: —]

"Long time it is, i' faith, since I beheld,
As now I see, a saint freed utterly!
This Brother who is neither pleased nor sad
Hath safely crossed where all the world sticks fast."[22]

Sutta 19

Uttara

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha, in the Bamboo Grove, at the Squirrels' Feeding Ground. And Uttara, son of the gods when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Bamboo Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and stood at one side. So standing, he spake thus to the Exalted One: —

"Life to its doom is led. Our years are few.
For us led to decay no shelters stand.
Whoso doth contemplate this fear of death,
Let him so act that merit brings him bliss."

[The Exalted One:—]

"Life to its doom is led. Our years are few.
For us led to decay no shelters stand.
Whoso doth contemplate this fear of death,
Let him reject the bait of all the worlds,
Let him aspire after the final Peace."[23]

Sutta 20

Anāthapiṇḍika[24]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now Anāthapiṇḍika son of the gods, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and stood at one side. So standing, he spake thus to the Exalted One: —

"This is the kindly Jeta Grove, resort
Of the august fraternity of seers.
Here sojourneth the Sovereign of the Norm,
And hence ariseth rapture in my breast.
[80]Good-will and learning, mind by method trained,
The highest conduct on good morals based: —
This maketh mortals pure, not rank nor wealth.
Hence, his own good discerning, let the wise
Throughly examine how to train the mind.
Thus and therein shall he find purity.
Even as Sāriputta was supreme
In insight, morals, and self-mastery,
So may the Brother who hath won the goal
Rank even with the highest of them all."

Thus spake Anāthapiṇḍika, son of the gods. And when he had so said, he saluted the Exalted One, keeping him on his right hand as he went, and vanished there and then. Then when the night was past, the Exalted One addressed the Brethren, and told them how a certain son of the devas had visited him in Jeta's Grove, and repeated to them his verses.

Then said the venerable Ānanda to the Exalted One:

"That son of the devas, lord, will have been Anāthapiṇḍika! Anāthapiṇḍika, lord, was greatly devoted to the venerable Sāriputta."

"'T is well, 't is well, Ānanda; so far as anything can be ascertained by inference,[25] thou hast ascertained it. The son of the devas, Ānanda, was Anāthapiṇḍika."

---

[1] The Comy. does not mention this deva by name, hence does not help us as to the quantity of the second a, short in the title, long (?metri causā) in the summary (given in the text after each vagga). The name has not been met with elsewhere.

[2] The Jhāna's.

[3] Ekodi, i.e. concentrated on its object.

[4] Mountain or river marsh. Comy.

[5] The Comy. has Veṇhu, the Pali form of Vishnu, but no comment on him. Vishnu is mentioned as attending, with his devas, the 'Great Concourse,' Dialogues, ii, 290 (D. ii, 259). Cf. p. 36, n. 3.

[6] I.e. Long-stick. His nickname while he lived on earth, because of his height. In the heavens they are all 3 gāvutas in height. Comy. [Ed.: 5-1/4 miles!]

[7] = II,1, §2.

[8] 'When a Tathagāta sends forth his omniscience, no tree or mountain is able to obstruct it.' Comy.

[9] I.e. having first got beyond it. Comy.

[10] It should be noted how the Teacher rings the changes on the threefold sikkha (training), in morals, mind-control, and insight. See above, I i § 9, n. 1; cf. again the reply to Candana (pron. Chan-).

[11] This pada recurs below, VII, 1,7; IX, § 2; cf. Pss. of the Brethren, ver. 335.

[12] Pahitatto.

[13] Lit. chain of rupa. Here B. judges that the reference is to the 16 Rupa-heavens, from the Brahma-world upwards. Sense-experience covers all the lower universe.

[14] The Comy. reads nandī-rāga. But see above, I, 1, § 2.

[15] Verses as above, I, 3, § 1.

[16] The Commentator's legend to these distressful lines is this: Subrahmā was enjoying his deva-life in the lowest heaven, under the Parichattaka tree of that Paradise, surrounded by the deva-nymphs, who, climbing the tree, pelt him with blossoms and sing to him. The force of their karma suddenly expiring, they decease, vanishing, and are reborn in purgatory. The deva, not feeling or hearing 'what he looked for,' rouses himself, and with his dibba-cakkhu (deva's vision) discerns their fate. Bewailing the tragedy, he comes to the great Teacher.

[17] Tapasā. This is not a characteristic term of the Buddha's doctrine. We might render it 'by ardour (tapati, to burn) in high wisdom's seven modes.' B., however, takes the compound as a dvandva (nouns co-ordinate): bojjhanga-bhāvanañ ca tapo-guṇañ ca — and interprets tapo by the 13 Dhutangas, or more ascetic course optional for bhikkhus (see Pss. of the Brethren, 844-56).

[18] See above, II, 1, § 6, n. 3.

[19] See Rhys Davids, Buddhist India, 40; Pss. of the Brethren, p. 43, n. 1. This deva's legend is that he was a son of the body-servant of Moggallāna the Great. Attached as a child to the Thera's following, he died in Jhāna-trance, and was reborn in Brahmā-heaven.

[20] Aratī nābhikīraii. Cf. Pss. of the Brethren, p. 267, n. 1.

[21] Yakkha. See below, Chapter X.

[22] See above, I, 1, § 1.

[23] See above, I, 1, § 3.

[24] See above, I, 5, § 8. The prose episode, with the verses, occurs also in M. iii, 262, where it is told, that the last saint on earth seen by Anāthapiṇḍika on his deathbed was Sāriputta, who came to confirm him in 'right views.' The text, in making the usual condensation at the start, omits to state the place revisited.

[25] An interesting early instance of takka (logic), used in this sense, B. gives the later term for inference: anumāna: 'deeming according to,' or 'following on.' 'He said; "a certain deva," to bring out Ānanda's power of inferential thinking (anumāna-buddhiyā).'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
2. Devaputta Saṃyutta
3. Nānātitthiya Vagga

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

3. The 'Divers Sectaries' Suttas

---

[80]

Sutta 21

Siva

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

2. Now Siva, son of the gods, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and stood at one side.

So standing, Siva, son of the devas[1], spoke these verses before the Exalted One: —

[81] "See that with good men only ye consort,
With good men do ye practise intercourse.
Knowledge of how the good do shape their life
Will make the better man and not the worse.

See that with good men only ye consort,
With good men do ye practise intercourse.
Knowledge of how the good do shape their life
Bestoweth wisdom as naught else can do.

See that with good men only ye consort,
With good men do ye practise intercourse.
Knowledge of how the good do shape their life
Doth dry our tears in midst of those that weep.

See that with good men only ye consort,
With good men do ye practise intercourse.
Knowledge of how the good do shape their life
Makes us of bright renown amongst our kin.

See that with good men only ye consort,
With good men do ye practise intercourse.
Knowledge of how the good do shape their life
Doth make us find rebirth in happier worlds.

See that with good men only ye consort,
With good men do ye practise intercourse.
Knowledge of how the good do shape their life
Makes men persist in bliss perpetual."

Then the Exalted One made rejoinder to Siva's verses: -

"See that with good men only ye consort,
With good men do ye practise intercourse.
Knowledge of how the good do shape their life
From all and every ill may set us free."

Sutta 22

Khema

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

2. Now Khema, son of the gods, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and stood at one side.

So standing, Khema, son of the devas, spoke these verses before the Exalted One: —

"Th' unwise and indiscreet,[2] with self as foe
To self, live in the practice of ill deeds,
That bear fruit bitter as black hellebore.
[82] Not that's a deed well done, that in its train
Brings burning,[3] the result whereof is reaped
By doer weeping with a tearful face.
But that's a deed well done, that in its train
No burning brings, result whereof is reaped
By doer with cheerful mind and thrilling zest.

Let him afore[4] [5] that thing elect to do,
Which he well knoweth is for his own good.
Thinking no 'carter's thoughts,' let him that's firm
In doctrine make a resolute advance.
As carter who hath left the smooth high road
And turned to byways rough, his axle broke,
Broods deep and long,[6] so he who did forsake
Right things and follow after what is wrong,
Wretched and with a death's head countenance, Broods deep and long, his axle also broke."

Sutta 23

Serī

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now Serī[7], son of the gods, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and stood at one side.

So standing, Serī, son of the devas, spoke these verses before the Exalted One: —

"'Tis food both gods and men chiefly desire.
Who may that creature be, demon or sprite,
Who, unlike them, hankers not after food?"

[83] [The Exalted One :—]

"The food that's given in faith, with heart made pure,
That finds him out, in this world and the next.
Hence should he avarice suppress, and make
Off'rings of charity, mast'ring the taint.
Sure planted in some other future life
Rewards of virtue on all beings wait."

2. "'T is wonderful, lord, 'tis marvellous how well said that is by the Exalted One:

'The food that's given in faith, with heart made pure,
That finds him out, in this world and the next.
Hence should he avarice suppress, and make
Off'rings of charity, mast'ring the taint.
Sure planted in some other future life
Rewards of virtue on all beings wait.'

3. In former times, lord, I was a raja named Serī, a giver by habit[8], a generous benefactor,[9] a commender of giving. In the four gates [of my capital] there was given, through me, charity to all who asked for it: brahmins and recluses, paupers and cripples, wayfarers and beggars.

Now when I used to come to my ladies' bower, they would say:

'His majesty has made an offering, but we have made none. Well for us if we also make offering through my lord, and win merit!'

And this, lord, occurred to me:

'I am a giver by habit, a generous benefactor, a commender of giving; now what ought I to say to them who say:

"Let us make a gift?"'

So I gave the first, lord, of the four gates to the ladies' bower, and there the gifts of the ladies were given, my own gifts coming back to me.

And the nobles, my adherents, came and said:

'His majesty has made an offering, but we have made none. Well for us if we also make offering through my lord, and win merit!'

And this, lord, occurred to me:

'I am a giver by habit, a generous benefactor, a commender of giving; now what ought I to say to them who say:

"Let us make a gift?"'

So I gave the second, lord, of the four gates to the nobles, my adherents, and there the gifts of the nobles, my adherents were given, my own gifts coming back to me.

And the army came and said:

'His majesty has made an offering, but we have made none. Well for us if we also make offering through my lord, and win merit!'

And this, lord, occurred to me:

'I am a giver by habit, a generous benefactor, a commender of giving; now what ought I to say to them who say:

"Let us make a gift?"'

So I gave the third, lord, of the four gates to the army, and there the gifts of the army were given, my own gifts coming back to me.

And then the brahmins and burgesses came and said:

'His majesty has made an offering, but we have made none. Well for us if we also make offering through my lord, and win merit!'

And this, lord, occurred to me:

'I am a giver by habit, a generous benefactor, a commender of giving; now what ought I to say to them who say:

"Let us make a gift?"'

So I gave the fourth, lord, of the four gates to the brahmins and burgesses, and there the gifts of the brahmins and burgesses were given, my own gifts coming back to me.

And then my men came and said:

'Now is there nowhere[10] anything given by his majesty!'

So I told them, [84] saying:

'Pass the word then that, of the revenue coming in from the outlying provinces, one half shall be sent into the palace, and one half shall be there and then given as gifts to those who ask: — brahmins, recluses, paupers and cripples, wayfarers, beggars.'

And so, lord, I never made an end of works of merit wrought for many years, of good works wrought for many years, whether I was reckoning them as merit, or as reward of merit, or as a status in heaven. As I said: 'T is wonderful, lord, 't is marvellous how well said were those lines by the Exalted One: —

'The food that's given in faith, with heart made pure,
That finds him out, in this world and the next.
Hence should he avarice suppress, and make
Off'rings of charity, mast'ring the taint.
Sure planted in some other future life
Rewards of virtue on all beings wait.'"

Sutta 24

Ghaṭīkāra

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now Ghatīkāra, son of the gods, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and stood at one side.

So standing, Ghatīkāra, son of the devas, spoke these verses before the Exalted One: —[ed1]

"In the far heavens of Aviha there came,
Reborn, seven Brethren winning Liberty.
Lust and ill-will for them were perished quite.
Safe had they crossed where all the world sticks fast.

And who were they who crossed o'er the morass,
The realm of dying, passing hard to cross,
Who having left behind this mortal frame,
Passed into touch with things celestial?

'Twas Upaka, and Phalagaṇḍa too,
And Pukkusāti making three, besides
Bhaddiya, Khaṇḍadeva too, for five,
And Bāhuraggi, lastly Pingiya:
They having left behind this mortal frame
Passed into touch with things celestial."

[The Exalted One:—]

"Fair things thou speakest of the Brethren seven
Who have abandoned Māra's traps and snares.
Whose was the doctrine that they learned, whereby
They smote in twain the fetters of rebirth?"

[Ghaṭīkāra:—]

"'Twas thine alone, Exalted One, thy Rule,
Thy teaching only 't was they learned; thereby
They smote in twain the fetters of rebirth?
'Where mind and body wholly cease to be': —
That learned they here from thee; thereby
They smote in twain the fetters of rebirth."

[The Exalted One:—]

"Deep is the word thou speakest, hard to learn,
And passing difficult to understand.
Say then: whose doctrine is it thou hast learned,
That thou canst utter such a word as this?"

[Ghaṭīkāra:—]

"In former birth maker of jars was I,
In Vehalinga as the Potter known.
My mother and my father I maintained,
Lay-follower of the holy Kassapa.

Eschewing carnal things, unworldly, chaste.
I was of those men fellow-villager,
I was their comrade in those bygone days.
Wherefore I know these things, I know
Of us seven Brethren winning Liberty,
For whom lust and ill-will are perished quite,
Who safe have crossed where all the world sticks fast."

[The Exalted One:—]

"Yea, as thou say'st then wast thou, Bhaggava!
In former birth maker of jars wast thou,
In Vehalinga as 'The Potter' known.
Thy mother and thy father didst thou keep,
Lay-follower of the holy Kassapa.
Eschewing carnal things, unworldly, chaste,
Of me wast thou the fellow-villager;
My comrade wast thou in those bygone days."

[The Editors of the Canon:—]

"Such was the meeting of these ancient friends.
Both having faculties supremely trained,
Both bearing bodies of their final life."

Sutta 25

Jantiu

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

There was once a great number of bhikkhus living among the Kosalese, on the slopes of Himalaya, in a forest-lodge. And they were muddled in mind, puffed up, vain, noisy, loose of speech, heedless, unintelligent, without concentration, unsteady in mind, uncontrolled in faculties.[11]

Now Jantu, son of the gods, on a fifteenth-day festival, came into the presence of those bhikkhus and addressed them in verses: —

[85] "Happy the bhikkhus as they lived of yore,
Who true disciples were of Gotama.
Unhankering they sought their frugal alms,
Unhankering, their lodging and their couch.
The impermanence of things they understood,
And hence of misery they made an end.

Now, making evil-doers of themselves,
Like headmen of the village [taking toll],[12]
Longing for what their neighbours' house contains,
They eat and eat until they sink to rest.

The Order [as a whole] I humbly greet;
To some of those here met I homage pay.[13]
Others, forlorn and leader-less are they,
As cast out bodies of the dead are they.

My message is for them who heedless live.
To earnest diligent souls I say, All hail!"

Sutta 26

Rohitassa[14]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now Rohitassa, son of the gods, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and stood at one side.

So standing, Rohitassa, son of the devas, spoke thus before the Exalted One: —

"Now where, lord, does one not get born, nor grow old, nor die, nor leave one's sphere for another, nor get reborn?

How is one able, lord, by walking,[15] to come to know the end of the world,[16] or to see it, or to get there?"

"Where, friend, one does not get born, nor grow old, nor die, nor leave one sphere for another, nor get reborn: — that [86] end of the world, I say, thou art not able by walking to come to know, nor to see, nor to arrive at."

"Wonderful is it, lord, and marvellous how well that is said by the Exalted One: —

'Where, friend, one does not get born, nor grow old, nor die, nor leave one sphere for another, nor get reborn: — that end of the world, I say, thou art

not able by walking to come to know, nor to see, nor to arrive at.'

In past times, lord, I was Rohitassa the seer, son of Bhoja, gifted so that I could fly through the air, yea, so swift was I, that I could fly just as quickly as a master of archery,[17] well trained, expert, proficient, a past master in his art,[18] armed with a strong bow, could without difficulty send a light shaft far past the area covered by a palm-tree's shadow. And so great, lord, was my stride that I could step from the eastern to the western sea.

In me, lord, arose the wish: I will get by walking to the end of the world. And though such, lord, was my speed, and such my stride, and though I waited not to eat or drink or rest, or to give way to sleep or fatigue, or other needs of nature, though a century was then the normal term of life, though my life was of normal length, yet I spent a hundred years on that journey and died on it or ever I got to the end of the world. Wonderful therefore and marvellous is this that hath been so well spoken by the Exalted One."

"But neither do I say, friend, that by not having got to the end of the world is the end of ill to be accomplished. It is in this fathom-long[19] carcase, friend, with its impressions and its ideas[20] that, I declare, lies the world, and the cause of the world, and the cessation of the world, and the course of action that leads to the cessation of the world."

---

[87] Ne'er may world's end be won by walking there,
Nor if ye win not, are ye freed from ill.
Therefore in sooth[21] he that is rich in wisdom,
Who knows the world, he it is goes to world's end,
He who 'bove all liveth the life that's holy;
With heart serene he understands the world's end,
Nor for this world nor for another prayeth.

Sutta 27

Nanda

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now Nanda, son of the gods, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and stood at one side.

So standing, Nanda, son of the devas, spoke thus before the Exalted One: __ed2

"The hours pass by. Nights drive us ever on.
Stages of life in turn abandon us:—
Whoso doth contemplate this fear of death,
Let him so act that merit brings him bliss."

[The Exalted One: —]

"The hours pass by. Nights drive us ever on.
Stages of life in turn abandon us.
Whoso doth contemplate this fear of death,

Let him reject the bait of all the worlds,
Let him aspire after the final peace."

Sutta 28

Nandivisala

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now Nandivisala, son of the gods, when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and stood at one side.

So standing, Nandivisala, son of the devas, spoke thus before the Exalted One: —[ed3]

"Lo! the four-wheeled, the nine-doored fulsome thing,
Guided by greed, begotten from a bog: —
Great hero, say! how shall there egress be?"

[The Exalted One: —]

"Let but the traces, let the thong be cut —
Let but the evil wish, the greed, yea, let

Thy craving with its root be utterly Drawn out and banned — then shall there egress be."

Sutta 29

Susima

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Ānanda came into the presence of the Exalted One and, saluting him, sat down at one side.

So seated the Exalted One spake thus to the venerable Ānanda: —

"Do you also, Ānanda, approve of our Sāriputta?"

"Nay, but who, lord, that is not childish, or corrupt, or stupid, or of perverted mind would not approve of the venerable Sāriputta?[22]

Wise, lord, is the venerable Sāriputta!

Comprehensive and manifold is his wisdom,
joyous and swift is his wisdom!

Sharp [88] and fastidious is his wisdom![23]

Small in his desires, lord, and contented is the venerable Sāriputta!

Loving seclusion and detachment is he!

Of rampant energy is the venerable Sāriputta!

A preacher [insistent],[24] accepting advice,[25] a critic, a scourge of evil is the venerable Sāriputta: —

Nay, lord, but who that is not childish, or corrupt, or stupid, or of perverted mind would not approve of the venerable Sāriputta?"

"'T is even so, Ānanda, 't is even so.[ed4]

Who that is not childish, or corrupt, or stupid, or of perverted mind would not approve of the venerable Sāriputta?

Wise is the venerable Sāriputta!

Comprehensive and manifold is his wisdom,
joyous and swift is his wisdom!

Sharp and fastidious is his wisdom!

Small in his desires, and contented is the venerable Sāriputta!

Loving seclusion and detachment is he!

Of rampant energy is the venerable Sāriputta!

A preacher [insistent], accepting advice, a critic, a scourge of evil is the venerable Sāriputta: —

Nay, but who that is not childish, or corrupt, or stupid, or of perverted mind would not approve of the venerable Sāriputta?"

Now Susima, son of the devas, attended by a great company of sons of the gods, had come into the Exalted One's presence, while the praises of the venerable Sāriputta were being recited.

And he, saluting and standing at one side, spake thus to the Exalted One: —

"'T is even so, Exalted One!

Who that is not childish, or corrupt, or stupid, or of perverted mind would not approve of the venerable Sāriputta?

Wise is the venerable Sāriputta!

Comprehensive and manifold is his wisdom,
joyous and swift is his wisdom!

Sharp and fastidious is his wisdom!

Small in his desires, and contented is the venerable Sāriputta!

Loving seclusion and detachment is he!

Of rampant energy is the venerable Sāriputta!

A preacher [insistent], accepting advice, a critic, a scourge of evil is the venerable Sāriputta: —

Nay, but who that is not childish, or corrupt, or stupid, or of perverted mind would not approve of the venerable Sāriputta?

To whichsoever company of devas I go, I hear just these words on every hand:

'Wise is the venerable Sāriputta!

Comprehensive and manifold is his wisdom,
joyous and swift is his wisdom!

Sharp and fastidious is his wisdom!

Small in his desires, and contented is the venerable Sāriputta!

Loving seclusion and detachment is he!

Of rampant energy is the venerable Sāriputta!

A preacher [insistent], accepting advice, a critic, a scourge of evil is the venerable Sāriputta: —

Nay, but who that is not childish, or corrupt, or stupid, or of perverted mind would not approve of the venerable Sāriputta?'"

[89] Then the celestial retinue of Susima, son of the devas, while the praises of the venerable Sāriputta were being uttered, through the pleasure, the gladness, the joy and rapture that they felt, waxed wondrous in divers colour-tones.

Even as a beautiful, illustrious beryl-stone of eight facets, well polished, when laid on an orange-coloured cloth[26] shines and glows and blazes, even so did the celestial retinue of Susima, son of the devas, while the praises of the venerable Sāriputta were being uttered, through the pleasure, the gladness, the joy and rapture that they felt, waxed wondrous in divers colour-tones.

And even as an ornament of fine gold excellently wrought in high relief[27] by a skilled goldsmith, when laid on .an orange-coloured cloth, shines and glows and blazes, even so did the celestial retinue of Susima, son of the devas, while the praises of the venerable Sāriputta were being uttered, through the pleasure, the gladness, the joy and rapture that they felt, waxed wondrous in divers colour-tones.

And even as, when night fades into dawn, the morning-star shines and glows and blazes, even so did the celestial retinue of Susima, son of the devas, while the praises of the venerable Sāriputta were being uttered, through the pleasure, the gladness, the joy and rapture that they felt, waxed wondrous in divers colour-tones.

And even as, in autumn, when the clouds are fled afar in the sky,[28] the sun breaking forth in high heaven, smiting all darkness in the firmament, shines and glows and blazes, even so did the celestial retinue of Susima, son of the devas, while the praises of the venerable Sāriputta were being uttered, through the pleasure, the gladness, the joy and rapture that they felt, waxed wondrous in divers colour-tones.

Then Susima, son of the devas, spoke this verse before the Exalted One concerning Sāriputta:—

"Wise is he! so we reckon, one and all: —
Our Sāriputta gentle, meek and mild,
Of few desires, self-mastered, and a seer
Who hath the Master's praises rightly earned."

Then the Exalted One spoke this verse in response to Susima, son of the gods, concerning Sāriputta: —ṃ

"Wise is he! so we reckon one and all: —
Our Sāriputta, gentle, meek and mild,
Of few desires, self-mastered, and a seer
Waiting the hour for wage that he hath earned."[29]

---

[90]

Sutta 30

Divers Sectaries

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Rājagaha, in the Bamboo Grove, at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

And a great many sons of the gods who had been disciples of different alien teachers[30]:
— Asama and Sahali and Ninka and Ākoṭaka and Veṭambari and Māṇava-Gāmiya, — when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with their effulgent beauty over the entire Bamboo Grove, came into the Exalted One's presence and saluting him, stood at one side.

So standing, Asama, son of the gods, spoke this verse before the Exalted One concerning Pūraṇa-Kassapa: —

"Here if a man do mutilate or slay, Despoil or ruin others, Kassapa
Sees in such acts no blame, nor otherwise
Doth he find merit for the agent's self.[31]
He hath declared the basis for our faith.
A master he, worthy to be revered."

Then Sahali, son of the gods, spoke this verse before the Exalted One concerning Makkhali-Gosāla: —

"By fasting and by austere practices
To perfect self-control hath he attained;
He hath abandoned speech and wordy strife
With any folk, abhorrent of offence
And equable, speaker of truth,
No evil such as that doth he commit."[32]

[91] Then Ninka, son of the gods, spoke this verse before the Exalted One concerning the Nigaṇṭha, Nāṭa's son: —

"Austerely scrupulous and subtly wise,
An almsman, by the Four-fold Watch restrained,[33]
Revealer of things seen and heard by him,[34]
Now sooth in him what fault is there to find?"

Then Ākotaka, son of the gods, spoke this verse before the Exalted One concerning different alien teachers: —

"The Pakudha Kātiyāna,[35] Nigaṇṭha, Yea, and with these Makkhali, Pūrana also:
Distinguished friars, each of a school the leader,
From saintly men these are in sooth not distant."

Then Veṭambari, son of the gods, made rejoinder to Akotaka, son of the gods, in a verse: —

"For all his howl[36] vile is the jackal reckoned.
The wretched beast ne'er is the lion's equal.
Th' ascetic nude, liar, and leader of pupils
Suspecting[37] all, bears to the good no semblance."

Then Mara, the Evil One, stealing up to Vetambari, spoke [for him][38] this verse before the Exalted One: —

[92] "To rules austere and careful scruples given,
With this and that self-torture[39] exercised,
With things material engrossed, their hearts
Set on attaining where the devas dwell: —
Mortals themselves, they for another world
Do of a surety give the right advice to men."

But the Exalted One, discerning that this was Mara the Evil One, made rejoinder to him by a verse: —

"Whatever shapes living in earth or heaven,[40]
They that on high radiate shining beauty,[41]
Of all these thou, Namuci,[42] sing'st the praises,
As bait to fish, cast with a purpose deadly."

Then Māṇava-Gāmiya,[43] son of the gods, spoke this verse before the Exalted One concerning the Exalted One: —

"Of Rajgir's hills the chief is Vipula;
Mount White[44] is chief of peaks in Himalay;
The sun is chief of things that traverse space,
The ocean of all waters is the chief,
As is among the starry groups the moon.
Of all the world and all the gods therein
A Buddha is by all esteemed supreme."

---

[1] B. finds nothing of interest in this name, any more than he found in that of Veṇhu (I, 2, § 2). Even he apparently lived too early to witness the rise and florescence of those devas into powerful deities. The word siva in the Canon means simply 'luck' and 'lucky'. The verses ascribed to him are, in I, 4, § 1, distributed among six devas.

[2] These 9 lines = Dhp. 66-68, the Comy, on which defines bālā (here 'unwise') as they that know neither their own good nor that of others.

[3] I.e. remorse. Indians liken it to burning, as we, to biting (-morse).

[4] B. resumes his Commentary here, as if aware that the preceding verses had been discussed in another Comy. (? of his own. See above, p. 30, n. 3). These lines are quoted in Milinda, i, 102 f. I differ from Rhys Davids's translation of them only in omitting the simile within a simile, viz. of the gamester. Since akkha can mean 'axle' no less than 'die,' the 'gamester' seems redundant.

[5] Paṭikacca.

[6] Avajhāyati.

[7] See I, 5, § 3. B. tells of Serī that he was king of two kingdoms, Sindhu and Sodhika, his city being Roruva (in Jāt. iii, 470, the capital of Sovīra), and that he had built gift-halls at each of its four gates, and there had made daily doles of 100,000 [coins], and a similar sum at the central judgment-hall. I have not met with him elsewhere.

[8] Dāyako.

[9] B. repeats the classes of charitable givers given, s.v. Dānaṇ, in Childers. This is dānapati, the 'noble giver' who gives not less than, nor just equal to what he uses himself, but fares worse than his beneficiary.

[10] Koci = katthaci. Comy.

[11] Uddhatā, capala, mukharā, vikiṇṇavācā. Cf. JPTS, 1913-14 (Puggala-Paññatti Comy.), 217, and Phussa's verses: Theragāthā, 958, 959, 971.

[12] Gāmaṇikā.

[13] B. emphasizes the occasion seized by the deva, when he could address many.

[14] There is no accounting for the shortened form Rohita given in the summary of the Vagga and placed as title by Feer, save metrical reasons. The sutta occurs also, verbatim, as this, in A. ii, 47 f. (iv, 45).

[15] Gamanena.

[16] The 'world' is qualified by B. as the satta-saṅkhāraloko: the conditioned (phenomenal) world of sentient creatures. [Ed: see on translating saṅkhāra.]

[17] A 'teacher of the bow.' Comy.

[18] Katupāsano.

[19] Vyāma: 'as far as a man may reach with both arms extended.'Comy.

[20] Lit. this be-saṇṇā-ed be-mano-ed carcase (*kaḷebara,). The Buddha draws him away from his pre-occupation about the dimensions of the world (this Chakkavāla) and his 'seven-league-boot's' stride, and leaves him to infer that the only way to get past or out of all processes of life was to get release from the ill that goes with life. It was a great opportunity for exegesis, but B. makes no use of it.

[21] Read have for bhave. The Pali metre changes here.

[22] B. judges that this Sutta is an opportunity for him, and expatiates on the magnanimous enthusiasm of Ānanda for his beloved comrade, on the epithets he uses in his eulogy, and on the glowing effulgence in the devas' expression of their emotions.

[23] So far the eulogy agrees with that ascribed to the Buddha in M. iii, 25 f. (Anupada-Sutta; cf. A. i, 45 [I, xxi, 53]; S. v, 376 f.). B. analyzes each term, here and in the other Commentaries. For the content of 'wisdom' he refers to M. iii, 62 f. (Bahudhātuka-Sutta): 'proficient knowledge of elements, of sense-processes, of cause and effect, and of possibles and impossibles' in the cosmic order. The second pair of adjectives are associated in S. v, 376 f. See also hāsa- paññо,* 'joyous' — i.e. 'over the line of virtuous clean-minded conduct and intellectual concentration he is pursuing.' 'Swift': 'who quickly cognizes, understands.' On the double meaning of javana,* see Compendium, 245 f. 'Sharp' implies swift elimination, intolerance of vicious consciousness, volcanic attainment 'at one sitting.' Here the Vedanāpariggaha-Sutta (sic: M. i, No. 74) is instanced. Cf, Pss. of the Brethren, pp. 342, 345. 'Fastidious' involves the exegetical double use of nibbedhika: he is pierced by emotion and disgust at the World, and he pierces and shatters greed, hate, ignorance.

[24] Vattā is speaker, but the Comy. adds the implication of odhunana, stirring, and of undelaying exhortation. Cf. Pss. of the Brethren, v. 994.

[25] A pretty instance in giving from extra-canonical tradition is quoted of Sāriputta who, when a little novice had told him that his cloak was in unseemly disarray, stepped aside to readjust it and then, saluting the child, said: 'Teacher, it is folded now.'

[26] Paṇḍu. The devas were believed to glow with hyper-vivid colours: indigo, yellow, red, white — on such occasions.

[27] Sampahaṭṭhaṃ.

[28] B. explains deva here by ākāsa: space.

[29] There is a word-play in this line and the last of the preceding stanza ābhato (praise-borne) and bhatiko (bearer, carrier, wage-earner). The concluding line is amplified in Sāriputta's own verses (Pss. of the Brethren, 1002, 1003), quoted by B.: —

Not fain am I to die, nor yet to live,
... I await the hour.
Like any hireling who hath done his task.

[30] These were believers in karma; thus, by meritorious acts they attained celestial rebirth, and by common consent came down to praise their respective teachers on earth.

[31] See the statement of this teacher's theory, Dialogues, i, 69. On the corrupt readings of the third pada (3rd line), B. only remarks: 'in outline he taught that there is no result (in the agent's sentient consciousness hereafter) of good or bad deeds.' Cf. below, III, 1, § 1.

[32] On the fatalism of this notable teacher whom the Buddha ranked as the most dangerous among his rivals (e.g. A. i, 33; 286) see Dialogues i, 71 f. Buddhism, 1912, 83 f.

[33] I.e. four restrictions in the use of water, a specially Jainist austerity, to avoid injuring the satta's, or living souls there might be in it. For these the Buddha substituted a Fourfold Watch of the four precepts against taking life, stealing, inchastity and lying. D. iii, 48 f.

[34] Cf. M. ii, 31.

[35] Usually spelt Kaccāyana. Cf. below, p. 94; Dialogues i, 74; (with the t in the Thera's name, Pss. of the Brethren, pp. 40, 215. The name scans badly, as it stands.

[36] B. reads sahāravena. The lengthened a of saha may be from ā-ravati, to howl at. G and h in Singhalese are easily confused. The simile is perhaps an echo of the verse in D. iii, 25; and is comparable to the fable of the ass in the lion's skin.

[37] On sankassara, cf. Dhp. Comy. iii, 485, on ver. 312. 'Mischief-making' in Pss. of the Brethren, ver. 277, is less accurate.

[38] 'Took his shape, making the deva contradict himself.' Comy.

[39] Such as pulling out hairs (cf. Pss. of the Sisters, p. 65), going naked, eating like dogs from the ground, lying on thorns. Comy.

[40] Cf. Sn. ver. 468f.; 801; 224. Discussed in JPTS, 1884, 103.

[41] 'E.g. the moon and sun, the lord of the Order (Saṇgharāja), the rainbow.' Comy.

[42] B. reads sabb'eva te te, and Namuci (Māra) in the vocative: te tayā (they by thee).

[43] A former body-servant of the Buddha. Comy. Not included in the list of these given by Dhammapāla (Pss. of the Brethren, p. 350). The name means simply 'village youth.'

[44] Seta. Was this the snowy Kinchenjunga so familiar to us, as it was to the founders of Buddhism?

[ed1] Mrs. Rhys Davids abbreviates, referencing SN 1.1.50

[ed2] Mrs. Rhys Davids abbreviates, referencing SN 1.1.4

[ed3] Mrs. Rhys Davids abbreviates, referencing SN 1.1.29

[ed4] Mrs. Rhys Davids abbreviates, here and in the following paragraphs.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
3. Kosala Saṃyutta
1. Bandhana Vagga

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

3. Kosala

1. [Untitled] or Bonds

---

[93]

Sutta 1

Young Creatures[1]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

2. Now the King, the Kosalan Pasenadi, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and after exchanging greetings with him and compliments of friendship and courtesy,[2] sat down at one side.

So seated he said to the Exalted One: —

"Does master Gotama also make no claim to be perfectly and supremely enlightened?"

"If there be anyone, sire, to whom such enlightenment might rightly be attributed, it is I.

I verily, sire, am perfectly and supremely enlightened."

"But, master Gotama, there are recluses and brahmins who also (like yourself) have each their order of disciples, their attendant followers, who are teachers of disciples, well-known and reputed theorizers,[3] highly esteemed by the people — I [94] mean Pūraṇa-Kassapa, Makkhali of the Cowstall, the Nigaṇṭha Nāta's son, Sañjaya Belaṭṭhi's son, Kaccāyana of the Pakudhas,[4] Ajita of the Hairblanket.

Now they, when I have asked this same question of them,
have not laid claim to perfect and supreme enlightenment.

How can this be?

For (as compared with them) master Gotama is young in years, and is a novice in the life of religion."[5]

"There are four young creatures, sire, who are not to be disregarded or despised, because they are youthful.

What are the four?

A noble prince,
a snake,
a fire,
an almsman (bhikhhu).

Yea, sire, these four young creatures are not to be disregarded or despised because they are youthful."

Thus spake the Exalted One.

And the Blessed One so saying, the Master spake again on this wise: —

"A princely youth, by birth with fortune blest, Offspring of well-born families, let none
Disdain for being youthful nor despise.
The time may come when he, as lord of men,
Comes to his heritage, and in his wrath
May with a despot's weapons seek revenge
With heavy hand. Hence from such attitude
Let everyone who guards his life refrain.

Or if a man do walk within the woods
And see a snake glide by, let him not say Disdainful: 'Tis a young one' and despise.
In divers shapes and with an ardent force[6]
[95] Fareth the snake. Should he attacking strike,
He bites the heedless, be it man or maid,
No matter when. Hence from such attitude
Let everyone who guards his life refrain.

A fire ablaze with appetite immense
And swarthy trail let none despise as young
Since it was lit, nor hold of no account.
If it but win to fuel, growing great,
It may attack the heedless, man or maid,
And burn no matter when. From this therefore
Let everyone who guards his life refrain.

The forest burnt by fire, the swarthy-trailed,
After the lapse of many nights and days,
In shoots and seedlings[7] springs once more to life.
But he whom almsman, strong in righteousness,
Burneth with ardent flame,[8] may look in vain
For child, or offspring 'mong his stock. No wealth

His heirs may find; childless and without heirs,
Like to a palm-tree stump such men become.

Hence with these four—the serpent and the fire,
The prince of high estate, the saintly friar —
Let the wise man, his own good-will in sight, Conduct himself as seemly is and right."

When these things had been said, King Pasenadi, the Kosalan, spoke thus to the Exalted One: —

"Most excellent, lord, most excellent!

Just as if a man were [96] to set up that which has been thrown down, or were to reveal that which is hidden away, or were to point out the right road to him who has gone astray, or were to bring a lamp into the darkness so that those who have eyes could see external forms — just even so, lord, has the truth been made known to me, in many a figure by the Exalted One.

I, even I, lord, betake myself to the Exalted One as my refuge, to the Norm and to the Order.

May the Exalted One accept me as a follower, as one who from this day forth as long as life endures has taken his refuge therein.

Sutta 2

A Man

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

2. Now the King, the Kosalan Pasenadi, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and after exchanging greetings with him and compliments of friendship and courtesy, sat down at one side.

So seated he asked the Exalted One: —[9]

"How many kinds of inward experiences, your reverence, arising in a man arise for his bane, his suffering, his discomfort?"

"Three such experiences, sire;
and which are the three?

Greed, hate, dullness.

These three inward experiences arising in a man 'arise for his bane, his suffering, his discomfort."

As plants o' the rush-tribe,[10] their own fruit become,
Do suffer, so a man of evil heart
Through greed and hate and dullness suffers scathe,
For these none other than himself become.

Sutta 3

The King

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

2. Now the King, the Kosalan Pasenadi, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and after exchanging greetings with him and compliments of friendship and courtesy, sat down at one side. So seated he asked the Exalted One: —

"Is there, your reverence, any born thing that can live without[11] decay and death?"

[97] "There is no life, sire, without decay and death. Even they who are eminent nobles, eminent brahmins, eminent burgesses, men of authority, owning great treasure, great wealth, immense hoards of gold and silver, immense aids to enjoyment, immense supplies of goods and corn, even they, being born, cannot live without decay and death.

Even those almsmen, sire, who are Arahants, for whom the intoxicants have perished, who have lived The Life, have done that which was to be done, for whom the burden is laid low, who have won their own highest good,[12] for whom the chain of becoming is utterly destroyed, who by right insight are free[13] — even in them this composite frame is of a nature to dissolve and be laid aside."

The king's own cars,[14] gay in their gold and silver, Wear out with age; so doth our body also Fare to decay. Norm of the good decays not:
The good, in sooth, one to another tell this.[15]

Sutta 4

The Dear One

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the King, the Kosalan Pasenadi, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and after exchanging greetings with him and compliments of friendship and courtesy, sat down at one side. So seated he said this to the Exalted One: —

"These were the thoughts, lord, that arose in my heart, while I was privately meditating: —

'For whom, now, is the self a dear friend,
and for whom is the self a hateful enemy?'[16]

[98] And I thought, lord, thus: —

'They whose conduct in deed, word, and thought is evil,
for them the self is a hateful enemy.

Even though they were to say:

"Dear to us is the self,"

nevertheless the self is for them a hateful enemy.

Why is this?

Because that which an enemy would do to an enemy,
even that are they themselves doing to the self.

Therefore for them is the self a hateful enemy.

■

And they whose conduct in deed, word, and thought is virtuous,
for them is the self a dear friend.

Even though they were to say:

"Hateful to us is the self,"

nevertheless for them the self is a dear friend.

Why is this?

Because that which a friend would do to a friend,
even that are they themselves doing to the self.

Therefore for them is the self a dear friend.'"

"Even so, sire, even so.[17]

They, sire, whose conduct in deed, word, and thought is evil,
for them the self is a hateful enemy.

Even though they were to say:

"Dear to us is the self,"

nevertheless the self is for them a hateful enemy.

Why is this?

Because that which an enemy would do to an enemy, even that are they themselves doing to the self.

Therefore for them is the self a hateful enemy.

■

And they whose conduct in deed, word, and thought is virtuous,
for them is the self a dear friend.

Even though they were to say:

"Hateful to us is the self,"

nevertheless for them the self is a dear friend.

Why is this?

Because that which a friend would do to a friend, even that are they themselves doing to the self.

Therefore for them is the self a dear friend.

He who would know the self as dear and kind,
Let him not be with evil conduct yoked.
Ill-won in sooth is evil-doer's weal.
Laid low by 'him-who-cometh-at-the-end,'[18]
And life among mankind abandoning,
To such what thing's his own? What takes he hence?
What dogs his steps, like shadow in pursuit?
Man's merits and the sins he here hath wrought: —
That is the thing he owns, that takes he hence,
That dogs his steps, like shadow in pursuit.[19]
Hence let him make good store for life elsewhere.
Sure platform in some other future world,
Rewards of virtue on good beings wait.[20]

Sutta 5

Self-Guarded

---

[99]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

2. Now the King, the Kosalan Pasenadi, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and after exchanging greetings with him and compliments of friendship and courtesy, sat down at one side.

So seated he spake thus to the Exalted One: —

"These, lord, were the thoughts that arose in my heart while I was privately meditating: —

'Who are they by whom the self is guarded?

Who are they by whom the self is not guarded?'

And I thought: —

'They whose conduct in deed and word and thought is bad,
by them the self is not guarded.

Yea, though a squadron of elephants, or of cavalry, or of chariots, or of infantry may keep guard for them,
yet is the self by them not guarded.

And why is this?

Because this guard is external;
because it is not an inner guard;
therefore is the self by them not guarded.

■

And they whose conduct in deed and word and thought is good,
by them the self is guarded.

Yea, though no squadron of elephants, or of cavalry, or of chariots, or of infantry keep guard for them,
yet is the self guarded by them.

And why is this?

Because their's is an inner guard,
not an external guard;
therefore is the self guarded by them.'"

§

"Even so, sire, even so, sire.

They, sire, whose conduct in deed and word and thought is bad,
by them the self is not guarded.

Yea, though a squadron of elephants, or of cavalry, or of chariots, or of infantry may keep guard for them,
yet is the self by them not guarded.

And why is this?

Because this guard is external;
because it is not an inner guard;
therefore is the self by them not guarded.

And they whose conduct in deed and word and thought is good,
by them the self is guarded.

Yea, though no squadron of elephants, or of cavalry, or of chariots, or of infantry keep guard for them,
yet is the self guarded by them.

And why is this?

Because theirs is an inner guard,
not an external guard;
therefore is the self guarded by them."

Blessed is self-control in deed and word
And thought, yea, in all ways 't is blest.
'Guarded ' we call the conscientious man[21]
Who in all ways doth practise self-control.

Sutta 6

Few

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

2. Now the King, the Kosalan Pasenadi, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and after exchanging greetings with him and compliments of friendship and courtesy, sat down at one side.

So seated he spake thus to the Exalted One: —

"These, lord, were the thoughts that arose in my heart, while I was privately meditating:

'Few are those persons in this world who,
when they have gained great wealth and treasure,
are not carried away and become intoxicated thereby,
and indulge in greed of sense-desires,
and misconduct them- [100] selves among their fellow men.

But very many are they who,
when they have gained great wealth and treasure,
are carried away and become intoxicated thereby,
and indulge in greed of sense-desires,
and misconduct themselves among their fellow men.'"[ed1]

■

"Even so, sire, even so, sire.

Few, sire, are those persons in this world who,
when they have gained great wealth and treasure,
are not carried away and become intoxicated thereby,
and indulge in greed of sense-desires,
and misconduct themselves among their fellow men.

But very many are they who,
when they have gained great wealth and treasure,
are carried away and become intoxicated thereby,
and indulge in greed of sense-desires,
and misconduct themselves among their fellow men."

Infatuated in their worldly wealth,
Greedy and languishing in sense-desire,
Discerning not that they have gone too far,
No more than deer discern the trap prepared: —

Evil the aftermath to them must be,
And bitter[22] verily the ripened fruit.

Sutta 7

At the Seat of Judgment

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

2. Now the King, the Kosalan Pasenadi, came into the presence of the Exalted One, and after exchanging greetings with him and compliments of friendship and courtesy, sat down at one side.

So seated he spake thus to the Exalted One: —

"I have been sitting, lord, in the judgment-hall,[23] and I saw how eminent nobles and brahmins and burgesses, men of authority, owning great treasure, great wealth, immense aids to enjoyment, immense supplies of goods and corn, deliberately told lies through and because of and in connection with their worldly desires.

And I said, lord, to myself: —

'Enough of the judgment-hall for me!

My valiant friend may win fame as a judge!'[24]

■

"Those nobles and brahmins and burgesses, sire, of whom you speak as deliberately telling lies through and because [101] of and in connection with their worldly desires — for them this will for many a long day become a source of bane and ill."

Infatuated in their worldly wealth,
Greedy and languishing in sense-desires,
Discerning not that they have gone too far.
Like fish who've swum into a basket-snare:[25]
Evil the aftermath to them will be,
And bitter verily the ripened fruit.

Sutta 8

Mallikā

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

2. Now the King the Kosalan Pasenadi, happened to be upon the upper terrace of his palace with Mallikā, the queen.

And he asked her:

"Is there now anyone dearer, Mallikā, to you than the soul?"[26]

"There is no one, sire, dearer to me than my soul.

And to you, sire, is there anyone dearer than your soul."

"Nor to me either, Mallikā, is there any one dearer than my soul."

[102] Then the king went down from the terrace and sought the Exalted One and told him of this talk.

And the Exalted One understanding the matter uttered in that hour this verse: —

The whole wide world we traverse with our thought,
And nothing find to man more dear than soul.
Since aye so dear the soul to others is,
Let the soul-lover harm no other man.

Sutta 9

Sacrifice

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now at that time a great sacrifice was arranged to be held for the king, the Kosalan Pasenadi.

Five hundred bulls, five hundred bullocks and as many heifers, goats, and rams, were led to the pillar to be sacrificed.

And they that were slaves and menials and craftsmen, hectored about by blows and by fear, made the preparations with tearful faces weeping.

Now a number of almsmen having risen early and dressed and taken bowl and robe, entered Sāvatthi for alms.

And after their return they sought the presence of the Exalted One and said this:[ed2]

"Here Bhante a great sacrifice is being arranged to be held for the king, the Kosalan Pasenadi.

Five hundred bulls, five hundred bullocks and as many heifers, goats, and rams, are being led to the pillar to be sacrificed.

And they that are slaves and menials and craftsmen, hectored about by blows and by fear, make the preparations with tearful faces weeping."

Then the Exalted One, understanding the matter, uttered in that hour these verses: —

The sacrifices called 'the Horse' the Man,
The Peg-thrown Site, the Drink of Victory,
The Bolts Withdrawn,[27] and all the mighty fuss: — [103] These are not rites that bring a rich result.
Where divers goats and sheep and kine are slain,
Never to such a rite as that repair
The noble seers who walk the perfect way.

But rites where is no bustle nor no fuss,
Are offerings meet, bequests perpetual,[28]
Where never goats and sheep and kine are slain.
To such a sacrifice as this repair
The noble seers who walk the perfect way.
These are the rites entailing great results.
These to the celebrant are blest, not cursed.
Th' oblation runneth o'er; the gods are pleased.

Sutta 10

Bonds

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now at that time the king, the Kosalan Pasenadi, had had many of the people seized and bound with ropes, with chains, and in other ways taken prisoners.

Now a number of almsmen having risen early and dressed and taken bowl and robe, entered Sāvatthi for alms.

And after their return they sought the presence of the Exalted One and said this:[ed3]

"Here, Bhante, the king, the Kosalan Pasenadi, has had many of the people seized and bound with ropes, with chains, and in other ways taken prisoners."

And he, understanding the matter, uttered in that hour these verses: —

Not such a mighty bond—the wise have told —
Is forged of iron, wrought of wood or hemp,
As binds all those who live infatuate
With love of pelf[29]:—of precious stones and rings —[30]
Whose thoughts are bent on children and on wives.[31]
[104] Even this mighty bond — the wise have said —
Down-dragging, subtle, and yet hard to loose,
They who renounce the world sever in twain,
Their hearts averted from all sensuous joys.[32]

---

[1] 'Such as mutual inquiries after health, etc. By all such a pleasant even current is set flowing, as of blended hot and cold streams of water.' Comy.

[2] The word pi means inclusion with the other six teachers. The meaning is: 'thus you too do not (na) claim?' Comy.

[3] Titthakarā. One of the secondary meanings of tittha (landing place, ford) is 'unsound view,' or the teacher of it. See JPTS, 1913-14, p. 117, n. 5. B. paraphrases by laddhikarā: opinion-, or hypothesis-makers. On these six teachers see Dialogues i, 66 f.; and above, II, 3, § 10. The soubriquets of the second and sixth were, says B., from birthplace and habitual garment respectively. The third was leader of the (later so-called) Jains. B. gives the traditional account of the King's interview with them alluded to. It seems to show that the idea of a Buddha's advent was 'in the air' at that time.

[4] Comy.: Pakudhassa gottassa. Feer elects to call him Kakudha; but in his index he gives Kakuddha, or Pakuddha.

[5] This point is historically interesting, as illustrating the long loyal friendship of Pasenadi. In M. ii, 124, we see him venerating the Buddha as one eighty years of age, like himself. On this king, whose personal name was probably Agnidatta, see Bud. India, 8-11. His sister, Princess Sumanā, was present, and there resolved to leave the world (as if the Sisters' Order was already started). See Pss. of the Sisters, p. 19 — a result scarcely to have been expected from the discourse.

[6] The Comy. takes urago as a generic term for several species of reptiles. It is not easy to render justly the notion of tejasi, tejasā: lit. with heat, or flame. Cf. the varied renderings of the term symbolically used in the Upanishads: (e.g. in Chāndogya III, 1, 3), Max Müller: 'glory of countenance'; Deussen: 'Kraft'; Böthlingk: 'Glanz.' Cf. ib. vii, 11, 1, 2; B.rhad. vi, 4, 6.

[7] Pārohā.

[8] Comy.: sīlatejena. As in our 'heaping coals of fire on the head' of the wrong-doer, 'such a bhikkhu is one who is incapable of retaliation, when injured, by anger or violence': — so the Comy., to exclude the interpretation that a rishi's curse is here meant.

[9] As all the Suttas in this Chapter are associated with conversations at the Jeta Grove (Vihara), it is needless to repeat the preliminaries. The text merely states the name of the town. [Ed. All these needlessly repeated preliminaries have been restored in this edition.]

[10] I.e. the bamboo and the rush, both of the order 'Juncus.' The generic Pali word is taca-sāra, husk-pith, i.e. a plant having its pith attached to the walls of its hollow stem.

[11] This descriptive formula occurs in Dialogues i, 175, 177, but with the term mahāsālā omitted.

[12] Sadatthā.

[13] This sentence is one of the formulas of Arahantship that run all through the four Nikayas. B. has a comment on each of the beads in this 'rosary.' The 'burden' of the five aggregates (mind and body), of the kilesas or ten leading passions, of purposive worldly activities, of the pleasures of sense: — all these may be viewed as burdens by the Arahant. Comy.

[14] Dhp. 151. The sight of Pasenadi's waiting chariots richly adorned suggested the simile. Comy.

[15] B. gives three interpretations of this line. I follow that of the Dhp. Comy, (iii, 123): — sabbhihi saddhiy ... evaṃ kathenti.

[16] I assign no metaphysical import to this dramatization of consciousness into a dual subject. Cf. my Buddhist Psychology (1914) p. 28 f. Cf. below 1, § 8: 'self' and 'soul' are the same word: attā. It should be noticed that in the verses the emphasis is shifted from the 'self,' animistically understood, to a man's acts — his present self — and results of acts which make up his future self.

[17] The Buddha repeats the King's words in the text. 'They thus become a logion of the All-Knower.' Comy. [Ed. the abbreviated content is restored in this edition.]

[18] Antaka: 'ender,' a name of death or Māra. Cf. Pss. of the Sisters, 59, 62 ('Destroyer'), and below, IV, 1, § 1, etc.

[19] See Dhp. 2.

[20] The last five lines recur below, II, 2, § 10; the last three, III, 3, § 2; the last two, above, I, 4, § 2; 5, § 3.

[21] Lajjī.

[22] In the text the position of 'bitter' and 'evil' are reversed.

[23] Atthakaraṇe. The Comy. reads aṭṭa°: daīs or platform. The Siamese ed. of Dīgha Nikāya, in the Mahāpadāna S., also reads aṭṭa°

[24] Bhadramukha, referred to in the Comy. as senāpati. This is probably a reference to Bandhula the general taking over the duties of a judge and repealing miscarriages of justice. See Jātaka iv, 150, The Rev. S. Sumangala tells me that bhudra-mukha (handsome-faced) is a polite colloquialism like our 'my learned, or honourable, or distinguished friend.' Or the remark may be meant more generally: —
'I am sick of it. Let any fine fellow show what he can do as judge! If they go such lengths to my face who am their feudal lord, what will they not do among themselves! What have I to do with such bribe-eating liars!' Comy.

[25] Reading, of course, khipaṃ for khippaṃ. Cf. Aṇguttara, i, 287 (III, 'Yodhājīva-vagga,' 5).

[26] The Comy. gives in brief the story of Queen Mallikā's humble antecedents, piety and swift promotion as told in the Kummasāpinda Jātaka (No. 415). But the Sutta itself is repeated only in the Udāna (V. 1). The Comy. pictures the King as seeking a confession of love for himself from the woman he had so benefited, and a confirmation of mutual trust; the Queen, on the other hand, as very wise and pious, going to the roots of the matter (sa-rasen'eva kathetabbo). No exegesis, however, is given on the import of the attā (soul or self) that is so supremely dear. For mothers, for all devoted lovers and friends, Mallikā would know that, as meaning one's own life or living self, what she said was untrue. If the Ātman, or immanent God be meant, it was true only of the pious non-Buddhist Indian. In rendering it 'soul,' I have had in mind rather that meaning of ideal self, 'honour,' 'character,' which seems latent both in the Christian text 'What shall a man give in exchange for his soul?' and in the inscription to the famous war-cartoon of Punch (1914): King Albert to Emperor William II. — 'Not my soul!' — than anything of definite animistic or Ātmanistic doctrine.

[27] The Comy. here tells the story of the Pasenadi's dream as given in the Lohakumbhi Jātaka, where the mythical King Brahmadatta is made to dream a similar dream. See also Dhammapada Comy. on verse 60. In the Saṃyutta Comy. the fevered sleep of the dreamer is explained by his cherishing an illicit passion and plotting harm to the woman's husband. When the dream is explained by the Buddha, the King is described as hastily breaking off the preparations for the sacrifice. The ritual terms of the text are discussed at some length. Contrary to our moden theories, they are declared to have been in primitive times, peaceful rites, but to have been changed, in the days of Okkāka the Sākyan, into bloody sacrifices. On the 'Drink of Victory' see Questions of King Milinda, ii, 16, n. 3. The 'Peg-thrown Site' (sammāpāsaṃ) is explained as the binding or building of an altar where a sammā (wooden pin or peg) falls when thrown. The 'Bolts withdrawn' are said to have referred to a festivity of mutual trust and unlocked doors, but since those days to mean merely sacrificial paraphernalia.

[28] Anukūlaṃ sadā: 'perpetual meals, etc., established by persons in the past, given regularly.' Comy.

[29] Sāratta-rattā.

[30] Cf. Theragāthā, ver. 187.

[31] Cf. Sutta-Nipāta, ver, 38, and the translation in Jātaka, No. 201. Dr. Rouse is more fettered by his double rhymes. Here, sans rhyme, I have been able to be more literally accurate.

[32] Tradition assigns this royal raid to the sudden disappearance of the King's turban-diadem. So our Comy. and the Mahāsāra Jātaka Introduction (No. 381). The verses, however, belong to the Bandhanāgāra Jātaka (No. 201), with which Dhammapada Comy. on ver. 345, 346 agrees.

[ed1] Mrs. Rhys Davids abbreviates. Here it is expanded in her words according to the Pali.

[ed2] Mrs. Rhys Davids abbreviates. Here it is expanded in her words according to the Pali.

[ed3] Mrs. Rhys Davids abbreviates. Here it is expanded in her words according to the Pali.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
3. Kosala Saṃyutta
2. Aputtaka-Vagga

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

3. Kosala

2. [Untitled] or Childless

---

[104]

Sutta 11

He of the Matted Hair

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying at Sāvatthī,
in the Eastern Park,
at the Terraced House of Migāra's mother.[1]

Now on that occasion the Exalted One
at eventide had arisen from his meditations
and was seated in the loggia outside the eastern door.[2]

And the king, the Kosalan Pasenadi, came to visit the Exalted One,
and having saluted him,
took a seat at one side.

Now just then there passed by,
not far from the Exalted One,
seven ascetics of those who wore the hair matted,
seven of the Niganthas,
seven naked ascetics,
seven of the Single Vestment class,[3]
and seven Wanderers,
all with hairy bodies and long nails,
carrying friars' kit.[4]

Then the king, rising [105] from his seat,
and draping his robe over one shoulder,
knelt down on his right knee,
and holding forth clasped hands,
thrice called out his name to those ascetics:

"I am the king, your reverences,
the Kosalan Pasenadi."[5]

And when they were gone by,
he came back to the Exalted One,
and saluting him,
sat down as before.

So seated, he asked the Exalted One: —

"Are those persons, lord,
either among this world's Arahants,
or among those who are in the Path of Arahantship?"

"Hard is it, sire, for you who are a layman,
holding worldly possessions,

dwelling amidst the encumbrances of children,
accustomed to Benares sandalwood,
arrayed in garlands and perfumed unguents,
using gold and silver,
to know whether those are Arahants,
or are in the Path of Arahantship.

It is by life in common with a person, sire,
that we learn his moral character;
and then only after a long interval
if we pay good heed and are not heedless,
if we have insight and are not unintelligent.

It is by converse with another, sire,
that we learn whether he is pure-minded;
and then only after a long interval
if we pay good heed and are not heedless,
if we have insight and are not unintelligent.

It is in time of trouble, sire,
that we learn to know a man's fortitude
and then only after a long interval,
if we pay good heed and are not heedless,
if we have insight and are not unintelligent.

It is by intercourse, sire,
that we learn to know a man's wisdom,
and then only after a long interval,
if we pay good heed and are not heedless,
if we have insight and are not unintelligent."

■

"It is wonderful, lord,
it is marvellous
how excellently the Exalted One has spoken

as to a layman's difficulties
in learning to know anyone well and truly.[ed1]

'It is by life in common with a person,
that we learn his moral character;
and then only after a long interval
if we pay good heed and are not heedless,
if we have insight and are not unintelligent.

It is by converse with another,
that we learn whether he is pure-minded;
and then only after a long interval
if we pay good heed and are not heedless,
if we have insight and are not unintelligent.

It is in time of trouble,
that we learn to know a man's fortitude
and then only after a long interval,
if we pay good heed and are not heedless,
if we have insight and are not unintelligent.

It is by intercourse,
that we learn to know a man's wisdom,
and then only after a long interval,
if we pay good heed and are not heedless,
if we have insight and are not unintelligent.'

There are men of mine, lord, who are spies,
informants,
and when they have investigated a district
they come to me.

First they give in [106] their reports,
and thereafter I form conclusions.

They meanwhile,
when they have cleansed themselves of dust and dirt,

are well bathed and anointed,
trimmed as to hair and beard,
and arrayed in white garments,
will be waited upon
and provided and surrounded with every kind of enjoyment."

Thereupon the Exalted One,
understanding the matter,
uttered these verses: —

Not by his outward guise is man well known.
In fleeting glance let none place confidence.
In garb of decent well-conducted folk
The unrestrained live in the world at large.
As a clay earring made to counterfeit,
Or bronze half penny coated o'er with gold,
Some fare at large hidden beneath disguise,
Without, comely and fair; within, impure.[6]

Sutta 12

The Five Rajas[7]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There on one occasion, five rājas,
the Pasenadi being the chief among them,
were indulging in various forms of amusement,
provided for and surrounding them;
and they fell to discussing among themselves:

"Which of the pleasures of sense is the highest?"[8]

Then some said:

"Things seen"
and some "things heard,"
some said "odours"
some "tastes,"
and some "things felt."

[107] And when[9] those rajas were unable to convince each other,
the Pasenadi said:

"Let us go, dear sirs,
and visit the Exalted One,
and refer the matter of our inquiry to him.

And let us accept his decision, whatever that may be."

And the rajas assented, saying:

"So be it, dear sir."

So they repaired to the Exalted One and,
saluting him,
took seats at one side.

Then the Pasenadi told him of their discussion,
and asked him:[ed2]

"Which of the pleasures of sense is the highest?"

"The highest sensuous pleasure, sire,
is in my judgment
the limit-point in anyone's enjoyment.

Objects of sight are enjoyable for some,
for others they are not so.

And when anyone is so gratified and so satisfied
to all intents and purposes
by any given objects of sight,
that he does not wish for any other,
any better thing to see
than just those objects,
then those objects are for him supreme,
those objects are for him superlative.

The same, in my judgment, holds true,
for the other four kinds of sense-objects."[10ed3]

Now on that occasion a lay-adherent named Candanangalika[11] was seated among the company.

And he, rising from his seat
and draping his robe over one shoulder,
stretched forth his clasped hands
toward the Exalted One saying:

"An idea is revealed to me, Exalted One!

An idea is revealed to me, Blessed One!"

"Let it be revealed, Candanangalika!"
said the Exalted One.

Then Candanangalika, before the Exalted One, uttered praise in suitable verse: —

"Like the red lotus, sweet-scented, full-blown,
At dawn of day, unspent its perfume's treasure,
Behold him! th' Angīrasa shedding radiance
As shines the sun filling, all heaven with glory."

[108] Thereupon the five rajas wrapped their robes around Candanangalika.

But Candanangalika wrapped those five robes around the Exalted One.

Sutta 13

Heavy Meal

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,

in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There on one occasion, the king, the Kosalan Pasenadi,
dined off a large quantity of curried rice.

Thereupon, replete and puffing,
he came to see the Exalted One,
saluted him,
and took his seat at one side.

Then the Exalted One,
discerning the king's state of repletion and sterterous breathing,
uttered in that hour this verse: —

"To sons of men who ever mindful five,
Measure observing in the food they take,
All minished becomes the power of sense.
Softly old age steals on, their days prolonged."

Now just then prince Sudassana was standing behind the king.

And the king bade him, saying:

"Come you, dear Sudassana,
learn this verse from the Exalted One,
and recite it to me when you bring me my dinner,
and I will arrange that a hundred pence[12] be instituted
as a daily dole for you in perpetuity."

"So be it, your majesty," responded Sudassana,
and he forthwith carried out the king's bidding.

Thereupon the king made it a rule
to eat no more than one nāḷika.

And on a later occasion
it came to pass

that the king,
his body in good condition,
stroked his healthy limbs
and fervently exclaimed:

"Ah! surely for my salvation[13]
both in this life and hereafter
hath the Exalted One shown compassion unto me!"[14]

---

[109]

Sutta 14

About War (1)[ed4]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the king of Magadha, Ajatasattu, son of the Accomplished Princess,[15]
mustering an army of cavalry and infantry[16]
advanced into Kasi
against the king, the Kosalan Pasenadi.[17]

And the Pasenadi,
hearing of the expedition,

mustered a similar army
and went to meet him.

So they two fought one with another,
and Ajatasattu defeated the Pasenadi,
who retreated to his own capital, Sāvatthi.

And almsmen returning from their alms-round in Sāvatthi, came and told the Exalted one of the battle
and the retreat.

"Almsmen, the king of Magadha, Ajatasattu, son of the Accomplished Princess,
is a friend to,
an intimate of,
mixed up with,
whatever is evil.[18]

The king, the Kosalan Pasenadi,
is a friend to,
an intimate of,
mixed up with,
whatever is good.

But for the present
the Pasenadi will pass this night[19] in misery,
a defeated man."

Conquest engenders hate; the conquered lives
In misery. But whoso is at peace [110] And passionless, happily doth he live;
Conquest hath he abandoned and defeat.

Sutta 15

About War (2)[20ed4]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the king of Magadha, Ajatasattu, son of the Accomplished Princess,
mustering an army of cavalry and infantry
advanced into Kasi
against tie king, the Kosalan Pasenadi.

And the Pasenadi,
hearing of the expedition,
mustered a similar army
and went to meet him.

But in that battle
the Kosalan Pasenadi defeated Ajatasattu, son of the Accomplished Princess, and captured him alive.[21]

Then the Pasenadi thought:

"Although this king injures me
who was not injuring him,
yet is he my nephew.

What if I were now to confiscate his entire army
— elephants, horses, chariots and infantry —
and leave him only his life?"

And he did so.

And almsmen returning from their alms-tour in Sāvatthi, brought word of this to the Exalted One.

Thereupon the Exalted One,
understanding the matter in that hour,
uttered these verses: —

A man may spoil[22] another, just so far
As it may serve his ends, but when he's spoiled
By others he, despoiled, spoils yet again.
So long as evil's fruit is not matured,
The fool doth fancy 'now's the hour, the chance!'
But when the deed bears fruit, he fareth ill.
The slayer gets a slayer in his turn;
The conqueror gets one who conquers him;
Th' abuser wins abuse, th' annoyer, fret.
Thus by the evolution of the deed,[23]
A man who spoils is spoiled in his turn.

Sutta 16

The Daughter

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

When the Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park
and the king, the Kosalan Pasenadi,
had come to visit him,
one of the [111] king's men arrived and,
approaching the king,
announced to his private ear
that Queen Mallikā had given birth to a daughter.

And the king was not pleased.

Thereupon the Exalted One,
discerning the matter,
uttered on that occasion these verses: —

A woman child, 0 lord of men, may prove
Even a better[24] offspring than a male.

For she may grow up wise and virtuous,
Her husband's mother reverencing, true wife.
The boy that she may bear may do great deeds,
And rule great realms, yea, such a son
Of noble wife becomes his country's guide.

Sutta 17

Diligence (1)

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

2. Now the King, the Kosalan Pasenadi,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and after exchanging greetings with him
and compliments of friendship and courtesy,
sat down at one side.

So seated he said to the Exalted One: —

"Is there now, lord, any one quality by which we may acquire and keep both kinds of welfare, welfare in this life

and in life to come?"[25]

"Yes, sire, there is such a quality."

"But what quality, lord, is that?"

"Diligence,[26] sire,
is the one quality
by which you can acquire and keep welfare both in this life
and in life to come.

■

As the elephant,
of such creatures as can walk,
combines all pedal characters in its foot,
and as the elephant's foot[27] in [112] point of size
is the chief among all kinds of feet,
even so, sire, this one quality
acquires and keeps welfare
both in this life and in life to come."

Whoso to length of days aspires, to health,
To beauty, or to heaven, or to the joys
Of the highborn, if he in virtuous deeds
Show diligence, he wins the wise men's praise.
He that is wise and diligent doth win
Twofold advantage: wins that which is good
In this life and wins good in life to come.

The strong in mind doth win the name of Wise,
Because he grasps wherein his vantage lies.[28]

Sutta 18

Diligence (2)

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

2. Now the King, the Kosalan Pasenadi,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and after exchanging greetings with him
and compliments of friendship and courtesy,
sat down at one side.

So seated he said to the Exalted One: —

"These, lord, were the thoughts that arose in my heart
while I was privately meditating: —

'Well is the Norm proclaimed by the Exalted One,
and it is to him that is a friend to,
an intimate of,
an associate with,
that which is righteous,[29]
that he has proclaimed it,
not to him that is a friend,
an intimate,
an associate
of that which is wicked.'"

"That is so, sire, that is so.

Well hath the Norm been proclaimed by me,
and it is to him that is a friend,
an intimate,
an associate
of that which is righteous,
that I have proclaimed [113] it,
not to him that is a friend,
an intimate,
an associate
of that which is wicked.

As to that, sire,
I was once staying with the Sākyans
in one of their townships.[30]

And Ānanda, the bhikkhu, came to me, saluted,
and took his seat at one side,
and said to me:

'About the half, lord, of this life in religion
consists in righteous friendship,

righteous intimacy,
righteous association.'[31]

To Ānanda, saying this, sire, I replied:

'Not so, Ānanda,!
verily not so, Ānanda!

Verily the whole of this life in religion
consists in righteous friendship,
righteous intimacy,
righteous association.

From a bhikkhu, Ānanda,
who is a friend to righteousness,
we expect that he will develop[32] and expand
the Ariyan eightfold path
of one who is a friend,
an intimate,
an associate
of that which is righteous.

And how, Ānanda, does a bhikkhu who is a friend,
an intimate,
an associate
of that which is righteous,
expand the Ariyan eightfold path?

He is taught, Ānanda,
to develop right views based on detachment,[33]
based on passionlessness,
based on cessation,
involving maturity of surrender[34];
to develop in the same way,
right plans,
right speech,

action and livelihood,
right effort,
right mindfulness,
and right concentration.

It is thus, Ānanda, that a bhikkhu who is a friend,
an intimate,
[114] an associate
of that which is righteous,
develops and expands
the Ariyan eightfold path.

And it is in just this way, Ānanda,
that thou must understand
how the whole of this life in religion
is concerned with friendship,
intimacy,
association
with whatsoever is lovely and righteous.

Verily, Ānanda, it is because[35] I am a friend of what is lovely and righteous
that beings liable to rebirth
are delivered from rebirth,
that beings liable to grow old
are delivered from old age,
that beings liable to sickness
are delivered from sickness,
that beings liable to death
are delivered from death,
that beings liable to grief and mourning,
sorrow and suffering,
and despair,
are released from grief and mourning,
sorrow and suffering,
and despair.

It is in just this way, Ānanda,
that thou must understand
how the whole of this life in religion
is concerned with friendship,
intimacy,
association
with whatsoever is lovely and righteous.'[36]

Wherefore it behoves you too, sire,
to train yourself thus:

'I will become a friend,
an intimate,
an associate of that which is righteous.'

To become this,
you must take into your life
diligence in good things.

If you, sire, lead a diligent life,
your court ladies will say:

'The diligent king lives in habitual diligence.

Come, then, let us live likewise!'

And your court nobles,
and your subjects in town and country
will say the same.

And you, sire,
living thus in habitual diligence,
yourself will be guarded and preserved,
the house of your women
will be guarded and preserved,
and your treasury and your storehouses also."

As one who doth aspire to win good things,
A noble store in never-failing flow,
Wise men do praise his diligence in deeds
Of merit. He that's wise and diligent Twofold advantage wins: — that which is good
in this life, and the good in life to come.
[115] The strong in mind doth win the name of Wise
Because he grasps wherein his vantage lies.

Sutta 19

Childless (1)

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

2. Now the King, the Kosalan Pasenadi, once visited the Exalted One, at noonday[37]

and after exchanging greetings with him
and compliments of friendship and courtesy,
sat down at one side.

And the Exalted One said to him:

"How now, sire, whence come you at this hour of the day?"

"See here, lord:
at Sāvatthī there has just died a burgess
who was a wealthy man.

He died intestate,
and I come from seeing that his moneyed property
was conveyed to my palace
— eight millions in gold, lord,
to say nothing of the silver.

And yet that burgess's food
consisted of sour husk-gruel
left over from the day before.[38]

And his clothing
— hempen garments in three lengths.[39]

And his carriage — he drove about in a rotten little chariot rigged up with a leaf-awning!"

"Even so, sire, even so.

A mean man[40] who has acquired a great fortune
cheers and pleases (therewith) neither himself nor his parents,
nor his wife and children,
nor his slaves,
craftsmen and servants,
nor his friends and colleagues;
nor does he institute for recluses and brahmins any offering stimulating

spiritual growth,
productive of future bliss,
fruitful in happiness,
conducive to celestial attainment.

Those riches of his,
not being rightly utilized,
are either confiscated by kings or by robbers,[41]
or are burnt by fire,
or carried away by flood,
or are appropriated by heirs for whom he hath no affection.

That being so, sire,
riches that are not rightly utilized run to waste,
not to enjoyment.

It is like a lake, sire, of clear, cold, delicious, crystalline[42] [116] water, with good shores and most lovely, but lying in a savage region.

None could come to draw or drink from it, bathe in it, or make any use of it whatever.

Even so are the riches of a mean man who has acquired a great fortune
cheers and pleases (therewith) neither himself nor his parents,
nor his wife and children,
nor his slaves,
craftsmen and servants,
nor his friends and colleagues;
nor does he institute for recluses and brahmins any offering stimulating
spiritual growth,
productive of future bliss,
fruitful in happiness,
conducive to celestial attainment.

Those riches of his,
not being rightly utilized,

are either confiscated by kings or by robbers,
or are burnt by fire,
or carried away by flood,
or are appropriated by heirs
for whom he hath no affection.

That being so, sire,
riches that are not rightly utilized
run to waste,
not to enjoyment.

■

But if a generous man have acquired a great fortune,
he cheers and pleases (therewith) not only himself but also his parents,
his wife and children,
his slaves,
craftsmen and servants,
his friends and colleagues.

He institutes offerings for recluses and brahmins stimulating spiritual growth,
productive of future bliss,
fruitful in happiness,
conducive to celestial attainment.[43]

It is like a lake, sire, of clear, cold, delicious, crystalline water, with good shores and most lovely,
which lies near to village or township,
where folk can draw and drink from it,
bathe in it,
and use it for any other purpose.

Such riches go to enjoyment and not to waste."

Like waters fresh lying in savage region[44]
Where none can drink, running to waste, and barren,
Such is the wealth gained by a man of base mind.
On self he spends nothing, nor aught he giveth.

The wise, the strong-minded, who hath won riches
He useth them, thereby fulfils his duties.
His troop of kin fostering, noble-hearted,[45]
Blameless, at death faring to heav'nly mansion.[46]

Sutta 20

Childless (2)

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

2. Now the King, the Kosalan Pasenadi, once visited the Exalted One, at noonday and after exchanging greetings with him and compliments of friendship and courtesy, sat down at one side.

And the Exalted One said to him:

"How now, sire, whence come you
at this hour of the day?"

"See here, lord:
at Sāvatthī there has just died a burgess
who was a wealthy man.

He died intestate,
and I come from seeing that his moneyed property was conveyed to my palace
— eight millions in gold, lord,
to say nothing of the silver.

And yet that burgess's food
consisted of sour husk-gruel
left over from the day before.

And his clothing
— hempen garments in three lengths.

And his carriage
— he drove about in a rotten little chariot
rigged up with a leaf-awning!"

[117] "Even so, sire, even so.

This wealthy burgess
in a former birth bestowed alms
on a Silent Buddha named Tagarasikkhi.[47]

Saying:

'Give ye alms to the recluse!'
he rose up and went away.

But afterwards he repented of his gift, saying:

'It were better
that the slaves and workmen had eaten it.'

Moreover he slew the only son of his brother
because of his fortune.

Now, sire, by the effect of his action
in bestowing alms on the Silent Buddha, Tagarasikkhi, he was reborn seven times to a happy destiny in heavenly worlds,
and by the residual result
he has seven times caused this Sāvatthi
to make him eminently rich.

By the effect of his action
in repenting afterwards of that gift, thinking:
'It were better
that the slaves and workmen had eaten it,'
he inclined his heart
to denying himself excellent food,
clothes,
carriages,
and enjoyment of his sense-desires.

By the effect of his action
in slaying his brother's only son
because of his fortune,
he has [already] been punished many years,
many hundred,
many thousand,
many hundred thousand years in purgatory.

And by the residual result
he has caused this seventh intestate property
to enter the royal treasury.[48]

Of this wealthy burgess, sire,
the ancient merit is used up,
and fresh merit is not accumulated.

To-day, sire, the burgess is suffering
in the Great Roruva purgatory."[49]

"Even so, lord, he is there reborn?"

"Even so, sire, he is there reborn."

Grain-store and hoarded wealth, silver and gold,
Or whatsoever property there be,
[118] Or all whose living doth on him depend:
His slaves, his craftsmen and hired menials —
All this he hath to leave, naught can he take;
All this is matter for abandonment.
But what he doth, by act or word or thought:
That is the thing he owns; that takes he hence;
That dogs his steps like shadow in pursuit.
Hence let him make good store for life elsewhere.
Sure platform in some other future world,
Rewards of virtue on good beings wait.[50]

---

[1] I.e. Visākhā, the great lay-patroness of the young Order. B. gives her story briefly. The Sutta, but with a different stanza, occurs Udāna, vi, 2. The Buddha's prose remarks are developed in a sermon: A. ii, 89 f.

[2] The Comy. directs that we read pāsādadvāra-koṭṭhakassa bahi, and that one of the gates in the wall that surrounded the Vihāra is not meant. Shaded at this east door from the westering sun, the Master was surveying the eastern landscape; and from where he sat the ascetics 'passing along the road near by towards the town' could be seen.

[3] It is said that the Nigaṇṭhas, or Jains, wore only loin-cloths, the Eka-sāṭakas (One-robers) wearing a longer waist-cloth reaching to the knee or lower.

[4] I.e. firesticks, a waterpot, needles, and, of course, the alms-bowl. See Dialogues i. 125.

[5] Why did the king, seated near the greatest man in all the world, do so? To conciliate them, ... in case he should ever leave the worldly life ... also to learn the Exalted One's sentiments.' Comy. One of the Anthology Theras, Brahmadatta, is said to have been 'a son of the king of Kosala.' See Pss. of the Brethren, p. 223.

[6] The story in Udāna VI, 2, is made to give point to a quite different stanza. In both versions the readings of 'thieves' give either carā or corā, but in Majjhima i, 129, 186, Trenckner gives only corā. That the (well-organized) trade of the corā should be employed as part of the King's 'secret service' is quite intelligible. Ocarakā is discussed in Vinaya iii, 52 (Sutta-vibhanga, Pārājika II.).

[7] Rāja is not necessarily a king in our sense of the word, e.g. the Sākya nobles were all of them alluded to as rājas. (Cf. Buddhist India, p. 12). Pasenadi may have been, as mahārāja, overlord, or feudal chief to the nobles in this Sutta.

[8] The phrase: 'pleasures of sense' is in Pali kāmānaṃ. Kāmas are not exactly objects of sense, but (1) the feeling connected with them in (2) one desiring them. See this ambiguity discussed in Compendium, 81, n. 2. Cf. above, I, 4, § 4.

[9] Yato.

[10] This is a good instance of the Vibhajjavāda method associated with Buddhism, of breaking up superficial generalizations by analysing the particularity, or personal equation, in one or both terms. B. has some interesting comments.

[11] I have not met with him elsewhere in the canon. Pron. Chandanangal'ika: little plough of the moon.

[12] Kahapana. On this coin see Bud. India, 100 f. It is the monetary unit in Pali literature. Fractional coins are also mentioned.

[13] Attha, a word of many meanings: matter, meaning, advantage, good, higher, or lower, etc.

[14] A fuller version than is here given in text, or in the Comy., occurs in Dhammapada Comy. iii, 264 f., on verse 204 (cf. M. i, 508), and the verse on gross feeding in Theragāthā, 17, 101, is introduced. Sudassana is called the king's bhagineyya (nephew), and the reduction in diet is given as 3/4, viz. from a doṇa to a nāḷika, the prescribed bhikkhu rations. (Cf. Rhys Davids, Ancient Coins, etc.). Other factors contributing to the King's complacency are said to have been the treaty with Ajātasattu, and the recovery of his turban-jewel (III, 1, § 10).

[15] Vedehiputta. Vedehi means, more obviously, 'of Videha.' Bud- dhaghosa resolves it also into veda-iha, vedena ihati, or intellectual effort. Here, he says, 'there can be no question of Videha; the second meaning is right.' Ajātasattu's mother was a sister of the King of Kosala (see Thusa and Tacchasūkara Jātakas, Comy. iii, 121, iv, 342), not a Videhan. Elsewhere the alternative meaning is allowed, namely in Comy. on Dīgha i, 47, on Majjhima 1, 125 (Kakacūpama S.) and on Saṃyutta ii, 215 (Kassapa-Saṃyutta 10). Buddhaghosa's etymology is here, as often, not very plausible. But, assuming the Kosalan connection is historical, can we more plausibly derive Vedehi?

[16] Lit. an army of 4 parts: — enumerated in § 5.

[17] Why? asks B., and explains, much in the terms employed by Rh. Davids' Bud. India, p. 3.

[18] He was, inter alia, a parricide, and a supporter of Devadatta, the great schismatic.

[19] Reading ajj'eva for ajja tañ ca. The Commentary passes it over.

[20] The fourth campaign between these two. Comy.

[21] Jīvagāhaṃ.

[22] This may be read vilumpate'va or vilumpat(i) eva. Either way the meaning is clear: — it may seem expedient prima facie to exact a great war indemnity from the fallen foe, but the latter will not rest till he can exact it in return. Hence it only breeds more war.

[23] Kamma-vivaṭṭena.

[24] Reading seyyā, with the Comy., which, again, paraphrases posā by posehi. It reads subhaviyā for subhariyā.

[25] We should say 'temporal and eternal welfare.' The Buddhist never gave future life the monopofy of eternity.

[26] Appamāda is a negative term, meaning not-delay, not-dalliance, non-infatuation, from the root, or roots, mad, mand, 'to be exhilarated.' (See Whitney, Sanskrit Roots, 118.) From this source we get both the terms for such a state and those for its results and by-products: — intoxication, obsession, insanity, want of concentration and earnestness, etc. Cf. below, VI, 2, § 5. B. qualifies the term by the (unusual) word kārāpaka-: diligence in making [others] do their work.

[27] A favourite simile, applied also to insight. Saṇy. V, 231, and to the Four Truths among doctrines, Majjhima, i, 184.

[28] The verses recur in Aṇguttara, iii, 49. The last gāthā illustrates, in Sumañgala Vilāsinī (i, 32) one meaning of abhisamaya (grasp) as paṭilābha (acquiring).

[29] See above, § 4. I have chosen 'righteous' as the more usual antithesis in English religious terms to 'wicked' — the less ambiguous pāpa. But the Pali here — kalyāṇa — implies beauty, physical and moral, and hence approximates to our 'lovely,' as, used in our Jacobeah Bible for [ὕσα] προσφιλη᾽ (Phil, iv, 8). The more classical καλοκἀγαφος — beautiful, good—is its equivalent. 'The Dhamma,' wrote B., 'was well proclaimed to all, but fulfils its object only in the hearers specified, like medicine in those who take it.' Cf. § 4, p. 109 with Dial i, 67 f.; 94 f.

[30] Nigaime. It is not quite clear what distinguished the nigama from the gāma, rural unit, and the nagara, walled town. It sometimes from the context, appears to have been a suburb.

[31] According to the Commentary, Ānanda, is supposed to have put this proposition as a question to test his own knowledge. His view put forward is that the recluse's régime yielded a result, a life, which had two parts: good friends and the shaping of individual character (paccatta-purisakāra). But just as no line can be drawn, in a child's character, etc., between that which it derives from either parent, so with life lived according to the Eightfold Path. The total result, as with all vital evolution, is no sum, but a product. B.'s note deserves investigation; it gives the salient 'marks' of each of the eight factors.

[32] Bhāveti.

[33] Viveko.

[34] Surrender, writes B., is twofold: the ejection of all lower passions (kilesas) and the forward leap, or élan, to Nibbāna. See * vossagga- pariṇāmi.

[35] Āgammā.

[36] This interpolated Sutta on Ānanda's proposition is given detached in S. v, 2. It is scarcely in place here.

[37] Divādivassa. See Jāt. ii, 1; Vin. Texts iii, 241.

[38] Kanājakaṃ. Cf. Vin. Texts iii, 9; Jāt. i, 228.

[39] Sewn together in two seams. Comy.

[40] Asappuriso.

[41] There is irony in the same verb being used for the act of king and robber by one conversing with a king, a king who had just been conveying away millions. Cf. I, 5, § 1.

[42] Setaka: 'the appearance of the water when broken by waves.' Comy.

[43] These three terms occur with a similar context, in D. i, 51; iii, 66 B.'s comments in Sum. Vil. i, 157 f. and in this work are verbally different. E.g. in that work the second phrase is paraphrased: saggaṃ arahatīti, here: saggassa hitā tatr'appatti jananato.

[44] This line can only scan (in triṣṭhubh metre) if we read, for vasitaṃ va sitaṃ.

[45] Nisabha. Cf. above, I, 4, § 8.

[46] See above, I, 5, § 1. This and the following Sutta together form the Mayhaka Jātaka (iii, 299 No. 390), where a more graphic and detailed account is given. Some of the details are supplied in our Comy.

[47] This treatment of the 'Paceheka-Buddha' is also the occasion for an Udāna episode (v, 3; cf. Dhp. Comy. ii, 36). By 'silent' I mean 'with no mission to proclaim.' Pacc(h)eka is lit. individualist, as contrasted with the altruistic work of a Saviour Buddha.

[48] The Jātaka account mentions no seven rebirths with this Sāvatthi episode, but simply states that the treasures took seven days to be removed. Thus Pasenadi had just seen the completion of the work when he called.

[49] Cf. p. 41, n. 1. [Ed.: Our n.76]

[50] The last five lines = III, 1, § 4. See also below, III, 3, § 2.

[ed1] Mrs. Rhys Davids abbreviates. Here it is expanded in her words according to the Pali.

[ed2] Mrs. Rhys Davids abbreviates without so noting. King Pasanadi explains the situation in precise details from the time of the gathering of the kings to amuse themselves. To expand this properly I would have had to guess at Mrs. Rhys Davids likely translation and feel that this would be going further than is reasonably permitted.

[ed3] Here also Mrs. Rhys Davids abbreviates without noting and in a way it is not reasonable for me to expand. The initial formula is repeated for each of the senses. What is not reasonable for me to do is to use 'objects of hearing' for the Pali 'saddā' 'sounds' as Mrs. Rhys Davids has used 'objects of sight' for 'rupa' or 'forms', etc..

[ed4] Mrs. Rhys Davids combines this sutta with the next as does the PTS Pali Text. The BJT Pali and Bhk. Thanissaro have these as two suttas and that format is followed here.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
3. Kosala Saṃyutta
3. [Untitled]-Vagga

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

3. Kosala

3. [Untitled]

---

[118]

Sutta 21

Persons

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

2. Now the King, the Kosalan Pasenadi,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and after exchanging greetings with him

and compliments of friendship and courtesy,
sat down at one side.

So seated the Exalted One said this: —

"There are these four [classes of] persons, sire,
to be found in the world —
which four?[1]

(i) They that are joined[2] to darkness
and fare to darkness,
(ii) They that are joined to darkness
and fare to light,
(iii) They that are joined to light
and fare to darkness,
(iv) They that are joined to light
and fare to light.

'And who, sire, are they
that are joined to darkness
and fare to darkness?

This is the case of a man
who is reborn in a family of low degree,
be it of Chandalas,
or of basket-weavcrs,
or of trappers,
or of leather-workers,
or of flower-scavengers,[3]
poor,
ill-fed,
in wretched circumstances,
where victuals are hardly won,
swarthy and ill-featured,
a hunchback,
diseased,

or he is purblind,
or has misshapen hands,
or is halt,
or a cripple;
[119] one who receives neither food,
nor drink,
nor raiment,
nor conveyances,
nor wreaths,
perfumes and unguents,
nor bed,
dwelling,
and light.

He is an evil-doer
in deed, word, and thought,
the result whereof is that,
when he dies,
he is reborn after death
in misery,
to a woeful doom,
to disaster.

Just as if a man, sire,
were to go from blindness to blindness,
from darkness to darkness,
from one red[4] stain
to another red stain:
so do I illustrate this kind of person.

Such, sire, are the persons
that are joined to darkness
and fare to darkness.

■

'And who, sire, are they
that are joined to darkness
and fare to light?

This is the case of a man
who is reborn in a family of low degree,
be it of Chandalas,
or of basket-weavcrs,
or of trappers,
or of leather-workers,
or of flower-scavengers,
poor,
ill-fed,
in wretched circumstances,
where victuals are hardly won,
swarthy and ill-featured,
a hunchback,
diseased,
or he is purblind,
or has misshapen hands,
or is halt,
or a cripple;
one who receives neither food,
nor drink,
nor raiment,
nor conveyances,
nor wreaths,
perfumes and unguents,
nor bed,
dwelling,
and light.

He is an well-doer
in deed, word, and thought,
the result whereof is that,
when he dies,

he is reborn after death
to a happy destiny in the bright worlds.

Just as if a man, sire,
were to mount a palanquin from the ground,
or from a palanquin were to mount a horse,
or from horseback were to mount an elephant's crupper,
or from the elephant were to mount a terrace:
so do I illustrate this kind of person.

Such, sire, are the persons
that are joined to darkness
and fare to light.

■

'And who, sire, are they that are joined to light and fare to darkness?

This is the case where a man is reborn
into a family of high degree,
be it of an eminent noble,
or brahmin,
or burgess,
having authority,
having great treasures,
great wealth,
ample hoards of gold and silver,
ample aids to enjoyment,
ample stores of money and corn[5];
where also he is beautiful and fair to see,
charming and endowed with an exquisite complexion[6];
where again he is the recipient of food,
drink,
raiment,
means of transport,
wreaths,

perfumes
and unguents,
and residence.

This man is an evil-doer,
working evil by deed and word and thought;
the result whereof is that,
when he dies,
he is reborn after death in misery,
to a woeful doom,
to disaster.

Just as if a man, sire,
were to descend from a terrace on to an elephant's crupper,
or from an elephant were to descend to a horse's back,
or thence to a [120] palanquin,
or thence to the ground,
or thence were to descend into the dark[7];
so do I illustrate this kind of person.

Such, sire, is the case of a person who is joined to light
and fares to darkness.

■

'And who, sire, are the persons who are joined to light
and fare to the light?

This is the case where a man is reborn
into a family of high degree,
be it of an eminent noble,
or brahmin,
or burgess,
having authority,

having great treasures,
great wealth,
ample hoards of gold and silver,
ample aids to enjoyment,
ample stores of money and corn;
where also he is beautiful and fair to see,
charming and endowed with an exquisite complexion;
where again he is the recipient of food,
drink,
raiment,
means of transport,
wreaths,
perfumes
and unguents,
and residence.

This man is a well-doer,
working good in deed and word and thought,
the result whereof is that,
when he dies,
he is reborn,
after death,
to a happy destiny in the bright worlds.

Just, sire, as if a man
were to pass from one palanquin to another,
from one seat on horseback to another,
from one seat on elephant's crupper to another,
from one terrace to another;
so do I illustrate this kind of person.

Such, sire, is the case of a person who is joined to light
and fares to the light.

These, sire, are the four kinds of persons in the world."

(1)

"A poor man, king, devoid of faith and mean,
Grudging of heart and planning evil aims,
Holding wrong views and without courtesy,
Who doth revile and scoff at the recluse,
The brahmin, or at any seeking alms,
Empty of hand[8] and seeking to annoy,
Who hindereth gifts to them that ask for food:
A man like this, 0 king, when cometh death,
Fares to an awful doom, 0 lord of folk,
In darkness born and for the darkness bound.

(2)

A poor man, king, of generous heart and faith.
Who giveth, planning high and noble aims,
[121] A man of intellect intent and clear,[9]
Who riseth to give greeting to recluse,
Or brahmin, or to any seeking alms,
Who trains himself in all the ways of peace,
Not hindering gifts to them that ask for food:
A man like this, 0 king, when cometh death,
Fares to the home of gods, 0 lord of folk,
In darkness born, but bound for bourne of light.

(3)

A rich man, king, devoid of faith and mean,
Grudging of heart and planning evil aims,
Holding wrong views and without courtesy,
Who doth revile and scoff at the recluse,
The brahmin, or at any seeking alms,
Empty of hand[10] and seeking to annoy,
Who hindereth gifts to them that ask for food:
A man like this, 0 king, when cometh death,

Fares to an awful doom, 0 lord of folk,
Born in the light, but for the darkness bound.

(4)

A rich man, king, of generous heart and faith,
Who giveth, planning high and noble aims,
A man of intellect intent and clear,
Who riseth to give greeting to recluse,
Or brahmin, or to any seeking alms,
Who trains himself in all the ways of peace,
Not hindering gifts to them that ask for food:
A man like this, 0 king, when cometh death,
Fares to the home of gods, 0 lord of folk,
Born in the light, and bound for bourne of light."

---

[122]

Sutta 22

Grandmother

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

2. Now the King, the Kosalan Pasenadi,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and after exchanging greetings with him
and compliments of friendship and courtesy,
sat down at one side.

So seated the Exalted One said this: —

"Well, sire, whence come you
at this hour of the day?"

"My grandmother, lord, is dead.

She was aged and full of years;
long her span of life,
long her life's faring.

She has passed away in her 120th year.

Now, my grandmother; lord,
was dear to me and beloved.

If I had been offered the gift of a priceless elephant [or that her life might be preserved],
I should have chosen that my grandmother had not died;
nay, I would have given the elephant away to save her life.

I would have done no less
had I been offered,
or did I possess a priceless horse,
or the choice of a village,
or a province."

"All beings, sire, are mortal;
they finish with death;
they have death in prospect."

"That is notably and impressively said, lord:

'All beings, sire, are mortal;
they finish with death;
they have death in prospect.'

"Even so, sire, even so:

All beings, sire, are mortal;
they finish with death;
they have death in prospect.

Even as all the vessels wrought by the potter,
whether they are unbaked or baked
— all are breakable.

They finish broken,
they have breakage in prospect."

All creatures have to die. Life is but death.
And they shall fare according to their deeds,
Finding the fruit of merit and misdeeds: —
Infernal realms because of evil works;
Blissful rebirth for meritorious acts
Hence let him make good store for life elsewhere.
Sure platform in some other future world,
Rewards of virtue on good beings wait.[11]

Sutta 23

The World

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

2. Now the King, the Kosalan Pasenadi,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and after exchanging greetings with him
and compliments of friendship and courtesy,
sat down at one side.

So seated he said this to the Exalted One: —

"How many kinds of things, lord,
that [123] happen in the world,
make for trouble,
for suffering,
for distress?"

"Three things, sire, that happen the world,
make for trouble,
for suffering,
for distress?

What are the three?

Greed, hate, and delusion: —
these three make for trouble,
for suffering,
for distress."

As plants o' the rush-tribe,[12] their own fruit become,
Do suffer, so a man of evil heart
Through greed and hate and error suffers scathe,
For these none other than himself become.

Sutta 24

Bowmanship

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

2. Now the King, the Kosalan Pasenadi,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and after exchanging greetings with him
and compliments of friendship and courtesy,
sat down at one side.

So seated he said this to the Exalted One: —[13]

"To whom, lord, should gifts be given?"

"There, sire, where the heart is pleased to give."

"But to whom given, lord,
does a gift bear much fruit?"

"This, sire, is a very different question
from that which you first asked me.

A gift bears much fruitful result
if given to a virtuous person,
not to a vicious person.

As to that, sire,
I also will ask you a question.

Answer it as you think fit.

What think you, sire?

Suppose that you were at war,
and that the contending armies
were being mustered.

And there were to arrive a noble youth,
untrained,
unskilled,
unpractised,

undrilled,
timid,
trembling,
affrighted,
one who would run away
— would you keep that man?

Would such a man be any good to you?"

"No, lord, I should not keep that man, nor would such a man be any good to me."

"And would you say the same, sire,
if such a man were a brahmin,
or a merchant's son,
or the son of a labourer?"

[124] "Yes, lord."

"But what would be your opinion, sire,
if the youth in question,
to whichever social class he belonged,
were trained,
skilled,
expert,
practised,
drilled,
bold,
of steady nerve,
un-dismayed,
incapable of running away?

Would you keep that man?

Would such a man be any good to you?"

"I should keep that man, lord,
he would be useful to me."

"Even so, sire, is the case of a man,
no matter what his social class,
who has left the world
and exchanged the domestic
for the homeless life.

He has abolished five qualities,
and is possessed of five qualities.

Given to him,
a gift bears much fruit.

Which five qualities has he abolished?

Desire for sensuous pleasures,
ill-will,
sloth and torpor,
distraction and worry,
doubt.[14]

Which five qualities does he possess?

The qualities of the adept —
his morals,
his proficiency in concentration,
insight,
emancipation,
and the knowledge and vision
belonging to the insight of the adept.

It is in such a man,
with those qualities abolished
and these acquired,
that a gift bears much fruit."

Thus spake the Exalted One, and the Master added: —

As prince engaged in war would keep that youth
In whom he saw good bowmanship displayed
And mobile energy,[15] and would not choose
Because of rank one craven and unfit,[16]
So would the wise do reverence to him
Who, though of lowly birth, led noble life
Of self-control and magnanimity.[17] [125] Let givers pleasant hermitages make,
Therein let them for scholars find a home;
And make in arid jungle water-tanks,[18]
And where 'tis rough to go, clear passages.
Let them with candid trusting heart bestow
Victuals and water and dried meats and gear
And lodging on the men of upright mind.
For as the storm-cloud thunders muttering,
And wreathed with lightnings from its hundred crests.[19]
Pours its full bosom on the drenchèd earth,
Filling the uplands and the slanting vales,
E'en so the cultured faithful, gathering stores,[20]
Refreshes them that seek with food and drink.
Yea, wise, he scatters gladly what he hath
And bidding: Give ye! Give ye! doth he cry.
As thus he thunders, raining like the god,
His generous gifts upon the giver's self
As rich and copious showers of merit fall.

Sutta 25

The Parable of the Mountain

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

2. Now the King, the Kosalan Pasenadi,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and after exchanging greetings with him
and compliments of friendship and courtesy,
sat down at one side.

So seated the Exalted One said this: —

"Well, sire, whence come you?"

"I have been zealously busied, lord,
with all such matters as occupy kings —
kings who are of noble birth and anointed,
who are drunk with the intoxication of authority,
yield indulgence to[21] their greed for sensuous pleasures,
who have won security in their kingdoms
and live as conquerors of a wide area of land."

"As to that what think you, sire?

Suppose a man were to come to you from the east,
a man loyal and trustworthy,
[126] and were to say:

'May it please you to know, sire,
that I have come from the eastern districts,
and that I there saw a great mountain
high as the sky
moving along,
crushing every living thing[22]
as it came.

Whatever you can do, sire, do it.'

Suppose a man were to come to you from the west,
a man loyal and trustworthy,
and were to say:

'May it please you to know, sire,
that I have come from the western districts,
and that I there saw a great mountain
high as the sky
moving along,
crushing every living thing
as it came.

Whatever you can do, sire, do it.'

Suppose a man were to come to you from the north,
a man loyal and trustworthy,
and were to say:

'May it please you to know, sire,
that I have come from the northern districts,
and that I there saw a great mountain
high as the sky
moving along,

crushing every living thing
as it came.

Whatever you can do, sire, do it.'

Suppose a man were to come to you from the south,
a man loyal and trustworthy,
and were to say:

'May it please you to know, sire,
that I have come from the southern districts,
and that I there saw a great mountain
high as the sky
moving along,
crushing every living thing
as it came.

Whatever you can do, sire, do it.'

And you, sire, seized with mighty dread,
the destruction of human life so terrible,
rebirth as man so hard to obtain,
what is there that you could do?"

"In such a mighty peril, lord,
the destruction of human life so terrible,
rebirth as man so hard to obtain,
what else could I do
save to live righteously and justly
and work good and meritorious deeds?"

"I tell you, sire,
I make known to you, sire: —
old age and death come rolling in upon you, sire!

Since old age and death are rolling in upon you, sire,
what is there that you can do?"

"Since old age and death, lord,
are rolling in upon me,
what else can I do
save to live righteously and justly,
and to work good and meritorious deeds?

Yea, lord, such matters as battles
with elephant or horse cavalry,
with chariots, with infantry —
the business of kings of noble birth and anointed,
who are drunk with the intoxication of authority,
yield indulgence to their greed for sensuous pleasures,
who have won security in their kingdoms
and live as conquerors of a wide area of land -
these cannot come to pass,
there is no scope for these
with old age and death rolling in upon me.

There are mighty counsellors, lord,
in my court,
weavers of spells,
able by their spells
to arrest advancing foes.[23]

And there is, lord,
at my court an immense gold supply,
heaped in vaults
and upper floors,
enough to enable us to frustrate
an attack by financial strategy.

These battles of spells and of finance
cannot come to pass,
there is no scope for them
with old age and death rolling in upon me.

With old age and death [127] rolling in upon me,
what is there that I can do
save to live righteously and justly
and to work good and meritorious deeds?"

"Even so, sire, even so.

What else is there that you can do,
save to live righteously and justly
and to work good and meritorious deeds?"

Thus spake the Exalted One, and the Master said: —

As when huge mountain crags, piercing the sky,
Advance in avalanches on all sides,
Crushing the plains east, west, and north and south,
So age and death come rolling over all.
Noble and brahmin, commoner and serf,
None can evade, or play the truant here.
Th' impending doom o'erwhelmeth one and all.
Here is no place for strife with elephants,
Or chariots of war, or infantry,
Nay, nor for war of woven spell or curse,
Nor may finance avail to win the day.
Wherefore let him that hath intelligence
And strength of mind, to his own good attend,
In Buddha, Norm, and Order place his trust.
Who doeth right in deed and word and thought Here winneth praise, and bliss in life to come.[24]

---

[1] This category is given, but without the fourfold figure, in D. iii, 233; A. ii, 85 (iv, 200) and P.P. iv, 19; cf. its Comy. JPTS, 1914. This comments on the first class of persons in verbatim the same terms as our Comy., but adds useful details on the third class.

[2] So Comy.: tamena yutto.

[3] Cf. Dialogues i, 100. Both Commentaries render rathakāra- (kula) by chariot-makers, cammakāra- by hide makers, and paraphrase pukkusa- by pupphachaḍḍhakū-.

[4] Or 'bloody.'

[5] Cf. above, III, 1, § 3.

[6] 'As opposed to a swarthy skin, i.e. the colour of a burnt stake.' Comy.

[7] Andhakaraṃ oroheyya. Does this mean 'underground'?

[8] Natthiko; lit. a 'there's-not-fellow.' We find no parallel to the term, the parallel passages quoted above giving no verses after the prose. (Our Comy. is silent.) We infer it to mean one who refuses alms Natthi is equivalent to our 'No.'

[9] Avyagga-manaso.

[10] See note 2, p. 120.

[11] As in III, 1, § 4. According to the Comy., she had been as a mother to him. On her legacy to the Order, see Vinaya Texts, iii, 209.
The expressions hatthi-ratana, etc., may hint at the seven treasures of a Cakkavatti King. Cf. Dialogues ii, 13; 204 f. For maraṇantaṃ read maraṇaṃ taṃ. Cf. Netti-pakaraṇa, p. 94, quoting and paraphrasing the line. [Ed.: Mrs. Rhys Davids abbreviates what is expanded in full here.]

[12] See III, 1, § 2.

[13] The Comy. pictures this interview as a public one. Among the large audience are rival teachers, self-consciously 'scratching the ground with their feet.' They had suffered in popularity through Gotama's rising fame, and had represented him as exhorting the people to give to him and his followers only. The king summons the meeting to let him vindicate himself.

[14] Usually termed the Five Hindrances (Nīvaraṇāni). The next five show that only gifts to Arahants (adepts, asekhā) can become very fruitful.

[15] Balaviriyaṃ.

[16] He would not keep, or endure one who is a non-champion (na asūraṃ bhareyya).

[17] B. calls khanti a synonym for Arahantship, and soracca, adhivāsana-khanti; i.e. enduring graciously and patiently the things that befall. But cf. his comments on D. iii, 213 (xiv), and A. i.94.

[18] Reading of course papañ ca vivane. Vivana is called by the Comy. 'waterless woodland.' Cf. I, 5, § 7.

[19] Satakkaku.

[20] Abhisankhacca.

[21] Or are overmastered by (abhibhūtānaṃ, Comy.).

[22] Making them like pounded rape-seed. Comy.

[23] In the Taccha-sūkara Jātaka Comy. the king is recommended to procure war-mantras from bhikkhus. What he does get is a 'tip,' full of common sense.

[24] The Comy. relates, as the legend of this sutta, that bandits had laid an ambush for the king in the Andha Wood as he went, sometimes with but a small escort, to pay his respects to the Teacher. He was warned in time, and had the wood surrounded, capturing and impaling or crucifying the bandits on either side of the way leading through the wood. The Teacher judged that if the king, who came on red-handed to him, were taxed with the horrid deed, he would become sullen and not countermand anything. Hence the method adopted in this impressive dialogue.

It does not fit well, however, and the king would scarcely be referring to the gens d'arme work he had been doing in the wood by such expressions as 'battle* (hatihi-yuddhāni, etc.) and the rest. Nor does the Comy. tell of any repentant action at the end.

Saṃyutta Nikaya
I. Sagatha Vagga
IV. Māra Saṃyutta

The Book of the Kindred Sayings
Kindred Sayings with Verses

IV. The Māra Suttas[1]

Suttas 1-25

I

---

[103] [128]

Sutta 1[2]

Tapo Kammañ ca Suttaṃ

Penance and Work

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying at Uruvelā, on the banks of the Nerañjara river, beneath the Goatherds' Banyan, and he had just won full enlightenment.

Now he was meditating in solitude, and there arose in his mind this train of thought:

"Ah! free am I indeed from that toil so hard to achieve!

Ah! well freed am I indeed from that toil so hard to achieve, linked to naught that could bring me good!

Steadfast, mindful, well have I arrived at enlightenment."

Now Māra the evil one, conscious in his mind of the Exalted One's thought, drew nigh and addressed him in this verse: —

"Those penitential tasks abandoning,
Whereby the sons of men are purified,
The impure fancieth that he is pure,
When he hath strayed from path of purity."

Then the Exalted One, discerning that this was Māra the evil one, made rejoinder with verses: —

[129] "I understood full well how auy rites Austere,[3] aimed at the overthrow of death, Belong to matter's useless for our good.
Yea, nothing good they bring along with them,
Like oar and rudder in a ship on land[4]
But morals, concentration and insight[5]:—
The Path to Enlightenment — these were my task;
That Path creating and developing,
Have I attained the purity supreme.[6]
Thou thing of ends,[7] confess thyself laid low!"

Then Māra the evil one thought:

"The Exalted One knows me!

The Blessed One knows me!"

and sad and sorrowful he vanished there and then.

[2] Other references to the Buddha's choice of the shade of this tree with its great ramifications occur in Vinaya Texts i,79 (see n. 1); 84; Dialogues ii, 120; Majjhima i, 166; Udāna i, 4; and below, iv, 3, § 4; VI, 1, § 1. Cf. Rhys Davids's Buddhist Birth stories, 106. The Majjhima includes a full account of the preceding five years of extreme ascetic practices undergone by the Buddha.

[3] Reading with the Comy. amaraṇ for aparaṇ: — 'Self-tormenting exercises done to win immortality, the immortality-penance."

[4] B. reads the locative dhammani and gives as equivalent a meaning not met with elsewhere: — 'in a forest on dry land' (arañne thale). So placed, he says, a vessel might be laden and manned, and the oar pulled and lifted, yet would the effort of the crew not avail to move the boat forward a finger's length. Piyārittaṇ, 'oar-rudder,' may mean collective machinery, or he stern-oar which can be used both to propel and to steer.

[5] These are the divisions adopted by B. for his Visuddhi-Magga.

[6] I.e. Arahantship. Comy. In A. v, 218 f. the Eightfold Path is called the Ariyan Purging and Catharsis.

[7] See III, 1, §4. Lit. 'end-er'; whose seductions lead to ever more dying [and rebirth].

[8] Cf. the same idiom in Ud. I, 7; S. iv, 289 f. Lit. the phrase is, 'god makes to touch one by one,' raining being usually alluded to as the [rain] god raining or dropping. Ekam-ekaṇ, in Boethlingk and Roth's Dicty,. is 'continuously,'

[9] On this term cf. Rhys Davids, JRAS, 1895, p. 893 f. and L. Feer's response, ib. 1896, 199. Steatite is near enough to the vague kāḷako dark-ish' of the Comy., to fit, that stone being greyish green, or brown.

[10] Saṇsāraṇ=saṇsaranto. B. gives alternative explanations of the interval: either from Māra's own sphere to Uruvelā, or during the six years of the Buddha's lonely struggles for light.

[11] Paccagū.

[12] On this park surviving today, see Vin. Texts, i, 90, n. 3.

[13] This address occurs in Vin. Texts. i, 116.

[14] Yoniso.

[15] The 'fourfold right (i.e. supreme or perfect: sammā) effort' is the systematic prevention and suppression of evil thoughts, the conjuring up and development of goood thoughts. Bud. Psy. Eth., p. 358.

[16] The fruition which is Arahantship. Comy.

[17] Kāmaguṇa-sankhātā. Comy.

[18] See Vin. Texts, i,112 f.

[19] A tour of systematic progress, walking at most one yojana a day. Comy.

[20] On the interesting applications of this word: anukampati, lit. 'vibrating after or toward,' and usually rendered 'compsssion,' see Encyc. Religion and Ethics, art: 'LOVE' (Buddhist).

[21] Lit. 'let not two by one.' B. explains this elliptical phrase as ekamaggena dve janā mā agamattha, evaṃ hi gatesu ekasmiṃ dhammaṃ desente, ekena tuṇhibhūtena thātabbaṃ hoti: 'Let not two persons adopt the same procedure, thus, in their goings, one teaching while the other keeps silence is to be instituted' — reminding us of the first mission of SS. Paul and Barnabas.

[22] Cf. Dialogues, ii, 32.

[23] B. does not hold (cf. Vin. Texts, loc. cit.) that this place should read Senāni-nigama. He gives alternative explanations: either it was paṭhamakappikānaṃ senāya niviṭṭhokāse patiṭṭhitagāmo, or it was a township belonging to Senā, father of Sujātā (see Bud. Birth Stories, p.91). There, however, as in the text of the Jātaka Comy. the only reading given for the father's name is Senāni.

[24] See above, § 2. n. 1.

[25] The mat for spreading meal (crushed grain) used by distillers.' Comy. Cf. M. i, 228. The meal (piṭṭhaṃ) would be malt or, for arrack, rice. Shallow baskets or trays similar in shape to the cobra's hood were still in use in the 19th century in Ceylon.

[26] 'Like the banqueting dishes used by the kings of Kosala.' Comy. The phrase suggests rather a special Kosalan handicraft.

[27] The Comy. paraphrases seyyo by seyyatthāya.

[28] Roving creatures such as lions, tigers, etc.' Comy.

[29] Intelligent sources of dread, as the foregoing, or unintelligent (inanimate) objects, such as tree-stumps, or white ant-heaps suggesting, in the dusk, goblins, or festooned, serpent-like creepers.' Comy.

[30] Upadhi, here paraphrased by B. as the five khandhas (factors of the living person). Cf. p. 9, n. 6, and below, § 8.

[31] The body of a Buddha needs no cleansing; dirt slips off it as water off a bird's feathers. But he did not neglect human duties, lest it should be said he was not a man.' Comy.

[32] Cf. I, 4, § 8.

[33] Kasmā nu suppasi? Comy.

[34] The Comy. reads dubbhago: 'met with ill hap, as though dead or senseless.' We follow Windisch in reading dubbhato, which is so congruous with the context.

[35] = Dhp. 180; cf. Pss. of the Brethren, 213, n. 3. Netave.*

[36] Buddho (i.e. enlightened, but lit. awakened).

[37] 'Who art as unable to find footing here as a little fly on hot gruel.' Comy.

[38] First occurs in I, 2, § 2.

[39] Cf. ibid, n. 6.

[40] Cf. S. ii, 94

[41] Hīḷe, -yya. Cf. JPTS, 1906-7, p. 167; in popular idiom: 'not fash himself.'

[42] Lit. 'as a milk-drunk one.' Comy.: 'Just as a baby lying on its back, after drinking milk, in soft blankets, falls asleep as if seaseless, so let the good man not think whether life be short or long.'

[43] Cf. I, 3, § 1.

[44] Lit. 'There is no not coming on of death.'

[45] Comy.: 'Standing on the crest of the hill, he hurled. The rocks fell incessantly, crashing against each other.' The Burm. authority in the JPTS ed. (Bib. Nat. MS.) omits the doubled mahante — probably a genuine old double, referring either to size or to repetition.

[46] Lit. 'for work of blinding.' Comy.: 'from desire to destroy the congregation's eye of insight, i.e. among those who had attained any of the Paths of Fruitions.' Cf. Ssk. vicak.su, perplexed.'

[47] On this figure see Pss. (Sisters), pp. 136, 140.

[48] Cf. Jātaka, iii, 342 (mistranslated); Milinda, 21, 105.

[49] These ten are enumerated, M. i, 69 f.; Points of Controversy, 140, §§ 3-12, and elsewhere, e.g., A. v, 33 f.

[50] Cf. I. 1, § 1.

[51] See 1. 4, § 8.

[52] Kaveyya-matto. On this curious term see Pss. (Brethren), p. 406, n. 4. Comy.:' or thinking on that on which thou hast to discourse, and mazed (dazed, drunken, crazy: matto can be any of these) because of what thou hast to do? Thus we have the alternative of a mind inert and empty, and a mind congested with matter and exercise.

[53] Cf. A. iii. 59, 62.

[54] A village not mentioned elsewhere.

[55] Lit. "do not sink (Comy.: hang, laggi) down between supports and oppositions, i.e. between the passion and the antipathy of opponents,' adds B.

[56] Mānasaṃ is not pleasure, as Windisch has it (die Lust), but mind, as the sixth, or co-ordinaiing 'sense,' sensus communis. Mānaso, in the verse, is adjectival — Comy.: 'conjoined with mind ' — qualifying pāso, 'snare' — Comy.: namely, of lust (rāga). The first three lines are a free rendering of 'the snare that wanders about in the air, this mind that wanders about: therewith will I bind thee.'

[57] Presumably inadvertently omitted in PTS. ed.

[58] It is exceptional to find tastes put before odours in the strict procedure of Buddhist psychology. The Burm. MS. corrects it here, but not in IV. 2, § 7.

[59] In this recurrent group of verbs (e.g. Dialogues, ii, 36, 105, etc.) the Comy. parallels the second by gaṇhāpeti, the third by samādānamhi ussāhaṃ janeti, the fourth by paṭividdha-guṇena vodāpeti, jotāpeti. Thus B. does not connect the last, etymologically or otherwise, with sampraharsayati, to gladden, as Childers does (Dicty. s.v.), but with purifying and illuminating.

[60] Upādāya, lit. having grasped: ādiyitvā ... dassento. Comy.

[61] Another Sutta-formula. Cf. D. ii, 204; A. ii, 116.

[62] So Vin. Texts, iii, 84 (Cv., v, 9, 3)

[63] 'The fourth aggregate' (sankhārā). Comy. Thus it adds, the two lines give all the five factors of the 'person.'

[64] Khemībhūtaṇ attabhāvaṇ. Comy.

[65] Cf. M. i, 140. Anvesaṇ = pariyesamānā. Comy.

[66] Namely, by way of sensations.

[67] A phrase repeated below, IV, 3, § 2.

[68] Cf. above, IV, 2, § 5, n. 3.

[69] Dhammā, the mental percepts and images constructed out of different sensations, cover this line's meaning.

[70] This village and episode, the latter more briefly told than in our Comy., occur in Dhp. Comy., iii, 257. This festival, to judge by both accounts, was a kind of St. Valentine's Day. Clansmen's daughters, arrayed in their best, held a parade, the youths having also foregathered, and presents, or at least flowers, were presented. Festival-cakes were also handed about, and Māra foreseeing much offering of these to the Buddha, and much profit accruing to the '500 maidens' at the sports, should he discourse, thwarted this. The Buddha, adds B., could have foreseen the fruitlessness of his quest, had it not been unbecoming for a Buddha to have considered beforehand the chances of his obtaining food on a given round.

[71] Anvāviṭṭha.

[72] A ruse to inspire insult and injury on the top of neglect. The Buddha, knowing that he lied, and that he would suffer the penalty of a split head (cf. Dialogues, i, 116, n. 3), out of mercy did not consent. Comy.

[73] The fruit was purgatory immediately after death. Points of Controversy, 340, 343. 'Evil force,' lit. 'demerit.' Māra was not immortal, though some one was always Māra. One is tempted to see B. smiling over this, so obvious is it that the villagers would have sorely needed the mercy, had the ruse succeeded. Yet as instigated, they might have come off lightly. Cf. op. cit. 274 f. The second stanza occurs Dhp. 200; Jātaka, vi, 54.

[74] Compendium, 138, n. 4.

[75] Windisch here seems needlessly diffident. The dishevelment is described in amusing detail by B.

[76] The sudden conversion of the peasant, so graphically portrayed as such, into an exponent of religious psychology gives a piquant interest. The point lies in the antithesis between the irruption of the cares of this life — the result of worldly desires, possessions, ownership — and the calm and supramundane atmosphere of the discourse on Nibbāna the extinction of all such cares and desires. Māra's exordium had failed before it was uttered. The Buddha had no eyes for things owned, else Māra had retained some hold on him.

[77] Mano....

[78] 'The way for me in relation to rebirth ordestiny and so forth.' Comy. Cf. Pss. of the Brrethren, ver. 92, n.1

[79] The Exalted One was thinking compassionately of those suffering from the cruelty of rulers. Māra's plan was to make him absorbed in the fascination of exercising power. Comy. Cf. S. Luke iv, 5-8.

[80] See I. 2, § 2, n. 6.

[81] Lit. 'this is the world's bond' (sango). Lagganan etaṇ. Comy.

[82] Jaṭaṇḍuva.

[83] Sa-khuraṇ: 'the hoofs left on.' Comy. Cf. Windisch in loco; Vin. Texts, ii, 247.

[84] Translated 'snoring' in Jātaka, i, 160; stertorous breathing.

[85] Cf. the brahmin injunction, Laws of Manu, SBE. 198: 'When a man sees himself wrinkled and white, ... then let him resort to the forest ... the dialogue verbatim occurs above, I, 2, § 10. In the text supply kāmā before vuttā.

[86] Comy.: 'knocking his chin on his chest.'

[87] Comy.: 'up and down and from side to side.'

[88] See preceding Sutta.

[89] The disturbing of Samiddhi is also narrated in the Theragātha Comy. (Pss. of the Brethren, p. 51) on verse 46. But by a commentarial confusion, the locality in that work is called the Tapodā Park, the scene of another disturbing of this young friar. See above, I, 2, § 10.

[90] The text should read kalyāṇadhammā. Sabrahmacaāriyo May be an oversight for sabrahmacārino — so the Comy.: sabmhmacārīnañ ca laddhattā. But for anomalous forms of this word see Ed. Müller, Pali Grammar, p. 81.

[91] Cf. above, IV, 2, § 7.

[92] The Theragāthā version reads vuḍḍhā, 'grown,' not buddhā, as here. B. paraphrases the latter by ñātā, i.e. the French connus, come-to-be-known, or learnt.

[93] Isi-gili-passa, one of the group of hills above Rājagaha, whence the other crests could be seen: Vulture's Peak, Vebhāra, Paṇḍava, Vepulla (M. iii, 68 f.). A resort of the Order (Vin. Tezts, iii, 7; below, VIII, 9, § 10; Dialogues, ii, 123).

[94] Comy.: paṭilabhi.

[95] The text has samādhikañ, the Comy. sāmāyikaṇ, and defines it thus: [emancipation in which] one is emancipated from opposing things in one intense moment (appitappitakkhaṇe), and is intent on (adhimuccati) the mental object, is a mundane accomplishment (lokiyasamāpatti), called sāmāyika cetovimutti. No other passage has been found as yet, where sāmādhika occurs as unmistakably referring to samādhi, but in the Dhp. Comy. account of the legend (i, 431), the form is samādhikā, and this term, in the Jātaka Comy., ii, 383, is analysed as sama-adhikāni. Cf. D. ii, 151; Jāt. iv, 31; Watters: 'On Yuan Chwâng,' ii, 33. In the Kathā-vatthu Comy., 35 (Points of Controversy, 64, n. 3), the Mandein Pitaka Press ed. reads, for sāmādhikāya, sāmayikāya. The context there connects the word with the a-samaya-vimutta of A. v, 336, and P.P., p. 11.

[96] Comy.: 'Why did he fall away six times? Because of an internal ailment affecting wind, bile, and phlegm. Hereby he was unable to attain the requisite conditions for samādhi, and fell away after the momentary ecstasy.' (In one Burmese MS. he attains seven times.)

[97] The idiom for this form of suicide. Cf. Pss. of the Brethren, p. 214. B. states that Godhika cut his 'throat-tube,' but so checked the final agony as to attain Arahantship, and so, becoming samasīsī (cf. PP. Comy., JPTS., 1913-14, 186), ended life.

[98] He discerned that Godhika, careless as to body and life, would swiftly become Amhant. Comy.

[99] Paraphrased by ānubhāva-dhara.

[100] Suta=vissuta. Comy.

[101] See I, 3, § 9; and Pss. of the Sisters, ver. 15, 18. Abbuyha= uppāṭetvā. Comy.

[102] This Black-rock suicide legend has undergone bifurcation. In S. iii, 123 f., Vakkali is the suicide, his act being directly due to incurable disease.

[103] Windisch's rendering of khandha not by shoulder but by 'aggregate,' is strained. The Commentaries do good service in revealing the simplicity of those older narratives, e.g. 'though lying on his back to kill himself, he died with at least his head in the orthodox: posture [for repose].'

[104] Comy.: 'There arose as it were smoky, murky clouds.'

[105] Comy.: 'for the paṭisandhi-citta, or consciousness [as it emerges afresh] at re-conception or new birth. The reason (kāraṇa) or conditions for its becoming reinstated in a new embryo were, in Godhika's case, absent.' It is a subtle touch, in this delightful legend, that, to be able to discern a transmission, from body to germ, of that which was not a substance, material or immaterial, but a resultant of forces, Māra, fertile in shape-transformation, should sublimate himself into vapour. Is it possibly associated with ātman (pneuma) myths?

[106] Kulaputla, an unusual way of referring to a bhikkhu.

[107] See above, IV, 1, § 1.

[108] Comy.: 'six before the Enlightenment, and one after.'

[109] Most of the sources of the Feer edition here, and all of them below (p. 157), where this passage recurs, have cittaṇ: thought, mind. The Comy.., with Feer, reads vittaṇ: property, money, and explains: vittaṇ nu jinno (sic)? (jino iti katthaci) sataṇ vā sahassaṇ vā jito si nu? Are you beaten [to the tune of] a hundred or a thousand [coins]? At the repetition there is no further comment. C and v in Singhalese letters are almost the same. I have compromised; 'downcast' implicates cittaṇ but 'wealth' gives the cause of the mood imputed.

[110] Sakkhi.

[111] Palikhāya.

[112] Anāsavo, rid of the delusions and vicious tendencies likened to poisonous liquids or drugs. The term is ever in use in Pss. of the Brethren, cf. ver. 47, etc.

[113] = IV, 2, § 9.

[114] Cf. Jātaka iii, 387, on the meaning of anubuddhaṇ*.

[115] Windisch is of opinion that, by pehi, 'die!' is meant, and he draws a parallel between these lines and the Māra episode in the Suttanta of the Great Decease. Dialogues, ii, 112.

[116] Amaccu-dheyyaṇ, the negative form of the term rendered the 'Deathrealm,' I, 1, § 9, etc.

[117] Sabbantaṇ nirupadhiṇ. B. is silent.

[118] This parable is told in M. i, 234, by one of the Licchavis at the defeat, in debate with the Buddha, of the Jain Saccaka.

[119] A rare instance in Buddhist literature of the male sex being placed first.

[120] B. has *visūkāyikānīti Māra-visūkāni. We take this in the sense B. gives it in Atthasālinī and the Commentator in the Sutta-Nipāta Comy.

[121] Visevitāni. Contradictory statements are instanced by B.

[122] Vipphanditāni. Referring to Māra's transformations. Comy.

[123] Sn. vers. 447,448.

[124] This description is a formula, or nearly so. Windisch distorts its simplicity by making pattakkhandho refer to the philosophical notion of the five khandhas mental and bodily. Khandha means here the upper part of the trunk or torso. Cf. Vin. Texts, iii, 13, with, above, IV, 3, § 3, also A. iii, 57, and Milinda i, 9.

[125] The simplicity of this early narrative is in the Jātaka Comy.. (Bud. Birth Stories, p. 106) elaborated into Māra's marking a tally of sixteen lines, one for each of his abortive attacks on the Buddha.

[126] With this version cf. that in the Jātaka Comy. loco cit. It is referred to in A. v, 46, as 'the Maidens' Questions,' and in Sn., ver. 835. In ibid., ver. 436 (Fausböll, 435), two of Māra's 'armies' are called by the name of the first two daughters: Taṇhā, Arati. The third daughter's name: Ragā or Rati (Dhp. Comy., i, 202 n.), is tantamount more or less to that of Māra's other army: Kāmā. Windisch holds this Sutta is a later addition (op. cit. 202 f.)

[127] The simile implies the decoying of a wild elephant by tame cow-elephants. Comy.

[ed-1] Pāde te samaṇa paricāremā ti.// // Omitted in PTS ed. See note 129 below.

[128] Upadhi: i.e. of those feelings and desires, the resurgence of wnich indicates the presence of forces making for rebirth.

[129] Lit. we would cherish (or minister at) thy feet. A wife is called a 'foot-minister' in Abhidhānappadīpika-sūcī.

[130] Lit. great women (mah'itthiyo). It is not usual to express advanced age by this term, and the Comy. is silent. But even if the context did not point to this meaning, there is the Jātaka Comy.. (Bud. Birth Stories, 108), in which these last temptresses are described as broken-toothed and grey-haired!

[131] See IV. 3, § 4.

[132] Quoted A. v, 46.

[133] Anubodhaṇ for anubuddhaṇ. Cf. p. 154, n. 2.

[134] B. gives as alternative interpretations (a) the perils by way of the five senses and those of the 'mind-door'; (b) the five 'nearer' and five 'further fetters.' See Rhys Davids: American Lectures on Buddhism, p. 141 f.

[135] Asankhārāno: not devising worldly activities of the three kinds specified. I have so far not traced in Theravāda Buddhism any Vedānta theory of sankhārā as predispositions (vāsana), as adopted and applied by some Indologists.

[136] Gaṇa.

[137] = Jāt. iv, 383.

[138] Cf. S. iv, 207.

[139] Lit. 'hit (āsajja*) a stake with your breast.

[140] This verse, says B., was added by the Recensionists.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
5. Bhikkhunī Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

5. Suttas of the Sisters[1]

---

[160]

Sutta 1

The Āḷavite[2]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

2. Now the Alavite sister dressed herself early and,
taking bowl and robe,
entered Sāvatthī for alms.

And when she had gone about Sāvatthī for it,
and was returning after her meal,

she entered Dark Wood seeking solitude.[3]

Then Māra the evil one,
desirous to arouse fear, wavering, and dread in her,
desirous of making her desist from[4] being alone,
went up to her,
and addressed her in verse: —

"Ne'er shalt thou find escape while in the world!
What profiteth thee then thy loneliness?
[161] Take thou thy fill of sense-desires and love.
Be not a woman who repents too late."

Then the Ālavite thought:

"Who now is this, human or non-human,
that speaketh verse?

Sure 't is Māra the evil one speaketh verse,
desirous of arousing in me fear, wavering, and dread,
desirous of making me desist from being alone."

And the Sister, knowing it was Māra, replied with verses: —

"There is escape[5] while in the world, and well
By insight[6] have I found and made it mine.
Thou kin to all the careless,[7] evil one!
Not thine is it to know the Way, the Goal.[8]
Like spears and javelins are desires of sense,
That pierce and rend the mortal frames of us.
This that thou callest sense-desire and love:
For me a thing detested hath become."

Then Māra thought:

"The Alavite Sister knows me!"
and sad and sorrowful he vanished there and then.

Sutta 2

Somā

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

2. Now sister Somā dressed herself early and, taking bowl and robe, entered Sāvatthī for alms.

And when she had gone about Sāvatthī for it,
when she was returning from her alms-round,
after her meal,
entered Dark Wood for noonday-rest,[9]
and plunging into its depths sat down under a certain tree.

Then Māra the evil one, desirous of arousing fear, wavering, and dread in her,
desirous of making her desist from concentrated thought,
went up to her and addressed her in verse: —

"That vantage-ground[10] the sages may attain
Is hard to win. With her two-finger wit[11]
That may no woman ever hope to achieve."

[162] Then Soma thought:

"Who now is this, human or non-human, that speaketh verse?

Sure 't is Māra, the evil one speaketh verse,
desirous of arousing in me fear, wavering, and dread,
desirous of making me desist from being alone."

And the Sister, knowing it was Māra, replied in verses: —

"What should the woman's nature signify
When consciousness is tense and firmly set,
When knowledge rolleth ever on,[12] when she
By insight rightly comprehends the Norm?

To one for whom the question doth arise:
Am I a woman [in these matters], or Am I a man, or what not am I then?[13]
To such an one is Māra fit to talk."

Then Māra the evil one thought:

"Sister Somā knows me!" and sad and sorrowful he vanished there and then.

Sutta 3

Gotamī

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

2. Now sister Lean Gotamī[1415] dressed herself early and, taking bowl and robe, entered Sāvatthī for alms.

And when she had gone about Sāvatthī for it,
when she was returning from her alms-round, after her meal,
entered Dark Wood for noonday-rest,
and plunging into its depths
sat down under a certain tree.

Then Māra the evil one, desirous of arousing fear, wavering, and dread in her,
desirous of making her desist from concentrated thought,
went up to her and addressed her in verse: —

"How now? Dost sit alone with tearful face,
As mother stricken by the loss of child?
Thou who hast plunged into the woods alone,
Is it a man that thou hast come to seek?"

[163] Then Sister Gotamī thought:

"Who now is this, human or non-human, that speaketh verse?

Sure't is Māra the evil one speaketh verse,
desirous of arousing in me fear, wavering, and dread,

desirous of making me desist from being alone."

And the Sister, knowing it was Māra, replied in verses: —

"Past are the days when I was she whose child
Was lost! Men to that past belong — for me![16]
I do not grieve, I am not shedding tears.
And as for thee, good sir, I fear thee not.
Lost on all sides is love of worldly joys.
The gloom of ignorance is rent in twain.
Defeating all the myrmidons of death,
Here do I bide [to rest,] sane and immune."

Then Māra the evil one thought:

"Sister Gotamī knows me!"
and sad and sorrowful he vanished there and then.

Sutta 4

Vijayā[17]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

2. Now sister Vijayādressed herself early and, taking bowl and robe, entered Sāvatthī for alms.

And when she had gone about Sāvatthī for it,
when she was returning from her alms-round, after her meal,
entered Dark Wood for noonday-rest,
and plunging into its depths sat down under a certain tree.

Then Māra the evil one,
desirous of arousing fear, wavering, and dread in her,
desirous of making her desist from concentrated thought,
went up to her and addressed her in verse: —

"A maiden thou and beautiful — and I So young a lad! Now where to fivefold art
Of sounds melodious[18] we may list, 0 come,
Lady, and let us take our fill of joy!"

[164] Then Sister Vijaya thought:

"Who now is this, human or non-human, that speaketh verse?

Sure't is Māra the evil one speaketh verse,
desirous of arousing in me fear, wavering, and dread,
desirous of making me desist from being alone.

And the Sister, knowing it was Māra, replied in verses: —

"Sights, sounds and tastes and smells[19] and things to touch, Wherein the mind delights, I leave them all
To thee, Māra; nought of that ilk I seek.
This body vile, this brittle, crumbling thing,
Doth touch me only with distress and shame.
Craving for joys of sense is rooted out.
How beings are reborn in other worlds
Material, how others dwell, again,
Where matter is not, and th' ecstatic states,

Good [of their kind to bring men to those worlds][20]
From all of these the darkness is dispelled."

Then Māra the evil one thought:

"Sister Vijayā knows me!"
and sad and sorrowful he vanished there and then.

Sutta 5

Uppalavaṇṇā[21]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

2. Now sister Uppalavaṇṇā dressed herself early and, taking bowl and robe, entered Sāvatthī for alms.

And when she had gone about Sāvatthī for it,
when she was returning from her alms-round, after her meal,
entered Dark Wood for noonday-rest,
and plunging into its depths stood at the foot of a sal-tree[22] in full blossom.

Then Māra the evil one,
desirous of arousing fear, wavering, and dread in her,
desirous of making her desist from concentrated thought,
went up to her and addressed her in verse: —

"Thou that art come where over thee, crowned with blossom [Waveth] the sal-tree, Sister, and standest there lonely, Beauty like thine none is there able to rival.[23] Fearest thou not, foolish girl, the wiles of seducers?"

[165] Then Sister Uppalavanna thought:

"Who now is this, human or non-human, that speaketh verse?

Sure't is Māra the evil one speaketh verse,
desirous of arousing in me fear, wavering, and dread,
desirous of making me desist from being alone."

And the Sister, knowing it was Māra, replied in verses: —

"Were there an hundred thousand seducers as thou art,
Ne'er would I tremble affrighted nor turn a hair of me!
Māra, I fear not thee, lone tho' I stand here.
Lo! I can vanish, or enter into thy body.
Yea, I stand 'twixt eyebrows; thou canst not see me.

For consciousness is wholly self-controlled,
The Paths to Potency are throughly learnt.
Yea, I am free from all the bonds there be.
In sooth, good sir, I have no fear of thee."

Then Māra the evil one thought:

"Sister Uppalavaṇṇā knows me!"
and sad and sorrowful he vanished there and then.

Sutta 6

Cālā[24]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

2. Now sister Cālā dressed herself early and, taking bowl and robe, entered Sāvatthī for alms.

And when she had gone about Sāvatthī for it,
when she was returning from her alms-round, after her meal,
entered Dark Wood for noonday-rest,
and plunging into its depths sat down under a certain tree.

Then Māra the evil one,
desirous of arousing fear, wavering, and dread in her,
desirous of making her desist from concentrated thought,
went up to her and said:

"Wherein, Sister, dost thou find no pleasure?"[25]

"In [re]birth, friend,[26] I find no pleasure."

"Why findest thou no pleasure in [re] [166] birth?"

"Once born we enjoy the pleasures of the senses."

"Who hath put this into thy mind, Sister:[27]: —
'find no pleasure in rebirth?'"

[Cālā: —]

"Once born we die. Once born we see life's ills —
The bonds, the torments and the life cut off.
The Buddha hath revealed the Norm to us —
How we may get beyond the power of birth,
How we may put an end to every ill.
He brought and stablished me upon the Truth[28]
They that are born in worlds material,
And they that dwell in immaterial heav'ns[29]: —
If they know not how they may end it all —
Are goers, all of them, again to birth."

Then Māra the evil one thought:

"Sister Cālā knows me!"
and sad and sorrowful he vanished there and then.

Sutta 7

Upacālā

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

2. Now sister Upacālā dressed herself early and, taking bowl and robe, entered Sāvatthī for alms.

And when she had gone about Sāvatthī for it,
when she was returning from her alms-round, after her meal,
entered Dark Wood for noonday-rest,
and plunging into its depths sat down under a certain tree.

Then Māra the evil one,
desirous of arousing fear, wavering, and dread in her,
desirous of making her desist from concentrated thought,
went up to her and said:

"Where, Sister, dost thou wish to rise again?"[30]

"Nowhere, friend, do I wish to rise again."

[Māra: —]

"Nay, are there not the Three and Thirty Gods,
And gods who govern in the realms of shades,[31]
They of the Blissful Heavens, they who rejoice
In fresh creations, they who hold control
[167] Over what others have created[32]? Think,
And here or there set thon thy heart's desire.
The bliss of each in turn may then be thine."

[Upacālā:—]

"[Ay, think upon] the Three and Thirty Gods,
And gods who govern in the realms of shades,
They of the Blissful Heav'ns, they who rejoice
In fresh creations, they who hold control
Over what others have created:—[Think!]

All they come evermore 'neath Māra's sway,
For all are bound by bonds of sense-desire.

On fire is all the world, and racked in flames.[33]
Ablaze is all the world, the heav'ns do quake.
But that which quaketh not, influctuate,
Untrodden by the average worldling's[34] feet,
Where Māra cometh not, nor hath way-gate —
There doth my heart abide in blest retreat."

Then Māra the evil one thought:

"Sister Upacālā knows me!"
and sad and sorrowful he vanished there and then.

Sutta 8

Sīsupacālā

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

2. Now sister Sīsupacālā dressed herself early and, taking bowl and robe, entered Sāvatthī for alms.

And when she had gone about Sāvatthī for it,
when she was returning from her alms-round, after her meal,
entered Dark Wood for noonday-rest,
and plunging into its depths sat down under a certain tree.

Then Māra the evil one,
desirous of arousing fear, wavering, and dread in her,
desirous of making her desist from concentrated thought,
went up to her and said:

"Of whose shibboleth,[35] Sister, dost thou approve?"

"Of no one's shibboleth, friend, do I approve."

[Māra:—]

"What? In whose name, then, didst thou shave
Thy head and like a nun art seen, if thou [168] No heretic and no shibboleth[36] dost approve?
What, futile and infatuate, is thy quest?"

[Sīsupacālā: —]

"'Tis they that are without, who cast the nets
Of vain beliefs on which they pin their faith: —
Theirs are the doctrines I do not approve.
'Tis they that lack conversance with the Norm.

Lo! in the princely Sākya clan is born
A Buddha peerless 'mong the sons of men,
Who all hath overcome,[37] before whose face
Māra doth flee away, who everywhere
Unconquered stands, he that is wholly freed
And fetterless, the Seer who seeth all,
For whom all karma is destroyed, who in
The perishing of every germ that birth
Once more engenders, is at liberty!

This is the Exalted One, my Master he,
And his the system whereof I approve."

Then Māra the evil one thought:

"Sister Sīsupacālā knows me!"
and sad and sorrowful he vanished there and then.

Sutta 9

Selā

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

2. Now sister Selā dressed herself early and, taking bowl and robe, entered Sāvatthī for alms.

And when she had gone about Sāvatthī for it,
when she was returning from her alms-round, after her meal,
entered Dark Wood for noonday-rest,
and plunging into its depths sat down under a certain tree.

Then Māra the evil one,
desirous of arousing fear, wavering, and dread in her,

desirous of making her desist from concentrated thought,
went up to her and addressed her in verse: —

"Who was't that made the human puppet['s form]?[38]
Where is the maker of the human doll?[38] [169] Whence, tell me, hath the puppet come to be?
Where will the puppet cease and pass away?"

[Selā: —]

"Neither self-made the puppet is, nor yet
By other wrought is this ill-plighted thing.[39]
By reason of a cause[40] it came to be,
By rupture of a cause it dies away.
Like to a certain seed sown in the field,
Which, when it lighteth on the taste of earth
And moisture likewise, by these twain doth grow,
So the five aggregates, the elements,
And the six spheres of sense — even all these —
By reason of a cause they came to be;
By rupture of a cause they die away."

Then Māra the evil one thought:

"Sister Selā knows me!"
and sad and sorrowful he vanished there and then.

Sutta 10

Vajirā

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

2. Now sister Vajirā dressed herself early and, taking bowl and robe, entered Sāvatthī for alms.

And when she had gone about Sāvatthī for it,
when she was returning from her alms-round, after her meal,
entered Dark Wood for noonday-rest,
and plunging into its depths sat down under a certain tree.

Then Māra the evil one,
desirous of arousing fear, wavering, and dread in her,
desirous of making her desist from concentrated thought,
went up to her and addressed her in verse: —

"By whom was wrought this 'being'? Where is he Who makes him? Whence doth a being rise?
Where doth the being cease and pass away?"[41]

[170] Then Sister Vajirā thought:

"Who now is this, human or non-human, that speaketh verse?

Sure't is Māra the evil one speaketh verse,
desirous of arousing in me fear, wavering, and dread,
desirous of making me desist from being alone.

And the Sister, knowing it was Māra, replied in verses: —

"'Being'! Why dost thou harp upon[42] that word?
'Mong false opinions, Māra, hast thou strayed.
Mere bundle of conditioned factors, this!
No 'being' can be here discerned to be.
For just as, when the parts are rightly set,
The word 'chariot' ariseth [in our minds],
So doth our usage covenant to say:
'A being' when the aggregates are there.

Nay, it is simply ill[42] that rises, ill
That doth persist, and ill that wanes away.
Nought beside ill it is that comes to pass,
Nought else but ill it is doth cease to be."[43]

Then Māra the evil one thought:

"Sister Vajirā knows me!"
and sad and sorrowful he vanished there and then.

[2] Her name was Selā, and as such she is numbered among the Theris, or senior sisters of the Anthology (Pss p. 43, n. 4 [Ed. n.30]). The Saṃyutta contains the more adequate rejoinder to the tempter.

[3] B. states that Dark Wood (Andha-Vana) was a gāvuta, or 1/4 yojana south of Sāvatthī (? about 1-1/2 miles), and was so called from having been the haunt of 500 bandits who gouged out the eyes of their victims (akkhibhedapattā). They had so treated Yasodhara the preacher, when he had collected moneys for repairing the Chetiya of Buddha Kassapa. Dark Wood should thus perhaps be better rendered Blind Wood, Andhavana meaning either. The grove, adds B., was then guarded by royal custodians, and was often visited by a brother or sister in quest of solitude. Viveka may mean spiritual detachment, but the Comy. here specifies it as physical (kāyavivek'atthikinī).

[4] Lit. 'fall from.'

[5] Nissaranan ti nibbānaṃ. Comy.

[6] Paññā, equated by paccavekkhana-ñāṇaṃ.

[7] Cf. IV, 3, § 4.

[8] Way and goal = padaṃ.

[9] Divā-vihārāya: lit. 'for the day-sojourn.'

[10] Thānaṃ, meaning both 'place' and 'opportunity.' B. explains it as Arahantship.

[11] On this delightfully impudent figure cf. Sisters, p. 45. B. gives another application of it: insignificant understanding, or because taking her cotton wool in two fingers she cuts the thread. For aptness we commend Dharmapāla's figure of testing the boiling rice. [Ed.: The 'two-finger wit' 'testing the boiling rice' figure exists to this day in Italy. She takes grains of boiled rice between her fingers and squeezes to test their tenderness. This is the extent of her wisdom.]

[12] 'The knowledge (ñaṇa) in the attainment of the fruitions proceeding,' lit. rolling on. For vutta-° in the text, read vatta°.

[13] Questions, says B., arising under the influence of natural desire, conceit, false opinion. Comy.

[14] 'Lean through paucity of flesh and blood.' Comy. The legend of Kisa-Gotamī, of whom we know only the family name: 'she of the Gotama's,' is the most widely known of almost all those that have survived concerning the earliest followers of the Buddha, thanks mainly to E. Arnold's Light of Asia. B. here repeats the story of the mustard-seed, and gives a prior account of the Gotamī, narrated more fully, not in the Therigāthā Comy., but in that on Dhp. ii, 270-5.

[15] Verbatim as in § 2.

[16] We give here a different rendering from Windisch's, which influenced that in Pss. of the Sisters. The Comy. sees in accanta simply antam atītaṃ, an end or term that is past, viz. of the days when marriage and maternity filled her life. Bhāvan apuṇsakaṃ etaṃ: — 'This is a sexless state; that which was for me the end of child-dying, that was also for me the end of men' [as males]. Men were 'that-endish,' ending there (tad-antikā, not antikaṃ, 'near at hand'). Cf. anta-ko, IV, 1, § 1, and antiyā, the Singh, v.l. here.

[17] Of this Sister the Comy. tells nothing. Her name is equivalent to Victrix, and her verses coincide with the opening verses of Queen Khemā's longer poem (Sisters, p. 83). Between these two women, indeed, tradition has recorded a tie of companionship, if we may assume that Vijayā Then (op. cit p. 91) is the bhikkhuni of the Saṃyutta.

[18] The Comy. gives the usual list of instruments (see op. cit., p. 183, n. 4).

[19] See above, IV, 2, § 5.

[20] I have modified the rendering given op. cit. p. 184. B. pronounces santā samāpatti, 'the good attainment,' to mean only the eightfold 'worldly attainment' of Jhāna practised for rebirth, and not as an accessory in the quest for Arahantship. The former was 'good' so far as it went. 'Darkness,' as always, is a figure for ignorance. Cf. with the last lines in § 6. We have followed S.Z. Aung's views in discarding 'form' in this connection, because of its ambiguity. The belief was that, in the Rūpa heavens there was such sublimated matter as served for vision and hearing, not to speak of locomotion, but in the formless, Arūpa heavens life was of purely mental stuff.

[21] Nor concerning this redoubtable lady has B. aught new to say.

[22] On this tree and its appearance see Pss. of the Brethren, p. 330.

[23] B. does not admit an alternative rendering for dutiya, such as Windisch finds in the Therīgāthā Comy. We do not find there such an alternative, unless, for ekikā va, we read ekikā vā. And we judge that, in ver. 230 of the Sisters' Pss., 'none to companion thee' ... should have been rendered 'no one can rival thee.' ... This does more justice to the literary quality of the verse. It was redundant to add anything as to her want of a chaperone after the word ekā.

We follow Windisch in finding that Māra's fourth line in the text, absent in Therigāthā, is an intrusive errant from Uppalavaṇṇā's reply, where alone it fits, forming the second line. So we omit it. Nevertheless the Comy. accepts the intrusion, with the exegesis: 'Just as thou, come hither, meetest with neither acquaintance nor love, so they too (the sisters alluded to as less fair) would be even as thou art.' This seems a little pointless. It should be 'thou here alone, for all thy beauty, gettest no more credit than a plainer woman.'

[24] On C(h)ālā and her sisters and the discrepant ascriptions in the Canon, see Pss. of the Sisters, 186 f.

[25] Or 'whereof dost thou not approve.' Cf. above, II, 3, § 9.

[26] Avuso, used by the Order to all save spiritual superiors, or kings.

[27] '"Some fool" is Māra's suggestion, hence her emphasis on the teaching of the All-wise.' Comy.

[28] 'Made me enter into, or settled me in the True (sacce nivesayi, a very unusual, but vivid phrase). I.e. the Third Truth or Fact of Nibbāna: — the end of sorrow. Comy.

[29] Cf. above, § 4. She sees in rebirth so great and fearful a vista as compared with the tempter's limited opening.

[30] Uppajjaii, arise, used for 'be reborn.'

[31] The Yāma or Plutonic gods. On 'King Yama' see 'Devadūta-vagga,' A. i, 138 f.; also M. iii. 178 f.

[32] On these curious features in Buddhist cosmogony we can find as yet no discussion to add to Childers' art: Nimmānarati, a definition given also in Therīgāthā Comy., 169.

[33] Padhūpito. Cf. above, I, 5, § 1.

[34] Puthujjana, lit. many-folk, the 'masses' or 'million,' hoi polloi.

[35] Pāsaṇḍa is exegetically derived from 'the snares (pāsā) of opinions thrown over the hearts of men.' Comy.

[36] The Saṃyutta has the singular, the Therīgāthā, the plural.

[37] I.e. 'all [the mystery of the] factors of life and all [the mystery of] rebirth.' Comy.

[38] Bimbaṃ 'applied to the individual organism' (attabhāva). Comy. Windisch renders by Leib, which does not include mind. The whole 5-aggregate person is meant. The same figure occurs in Raṭṭhapāla's and Ānanda's verses: Pss. of the Brethren, ver. 769; 1020, where body and mind are explicitly included.

[39] Agha is as vague as our 'evil,' hence we have taken into account B.'s dukkha-patiṭṭhānattā attabhāvo.

[40] Or condition (hetu); always, in Buddhist philosophy, understood as impersonal.

[41] We have slightly altered here to get closer following of the original. 'Satta,' 'being,' is used for living intelligent creatures in general, including devas. 'All souls' would be perhaps a better rendering, the emphasis in the word being upon a permanent entity held to reside in a perishable frame, the worst of heresies for Buddhism. 'In the ultimate or highest sense,' comments B., 'a "being" is not found (or known).' So Kathāvatthu (Points of Controversy, p. 8, n. 3). Māra was apparently pointing to himself or to Vajirā in 'harping on (paccesi, cf. Dialogues, I, 252, n. 3; lit. 'going back to'). In Theragāthā, ver. 60, Comy., the verb is paralleled by gavesanto, seeking.

[42] The suffering attending the life of the five aggregates. Comy. It is as if Vajirā went on to say: 'If you must have a unity, a unified notion that is perpetually present when the five aggregates are present, take Suffering rather than Satta. There is constancy of being for you, so only you see in that too the threefold pulse of life: — genesis, equilibrium, dying away.

[43] It is a curious accident that verses so famous and quoted in the Canon (Kathā-vatthu) and other works, e.g. Mil. i, 45, and by B. himself, e.g. Visuddhi-magga, ch. xviii, as these should (1) not be incorporated in the Therīgāthā, (2) receive so brief a notice in the Comy., (3) be accompanied by no legend about their author.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
6. Brahmā Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

6. The Brahmā Suttas

---

[171]

I

Sutta 1

Brahmā Āyā Cana Suttaṃ

The Entreaty

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Uruvelā[1],
on the banks of the river Nerañjarā,

beneath the Goatherd's Banyan,
and he had just attained full enlightenment.

Now as he was privately meditating,[2]
the thought arose in him:

"I have penetrated[3] this Norm,[4]
deep, hard to perceive, hard to understand,[5]
peaceful[6] and sublime,
no mere dialectic,
subtle, intelligible only to the wise.

But this is a race devoting itself to the things to which it clings,[7]
devoted thereto,
delighting therein.

And for a race devoting itself to the things to which it clings,
devoted thereto,
delighting therein,
this were a matter hard to perceive, to wit,
that this [172] is conditioned by that —
that all that happens is by way of cause.

This, too, were a matter hard to discern, to wit,
the tranquillization of all the activities of [worldly] life,
the renunciation of all substrates of rebirth,
the destruction of natural cravings,
passionlessness,
cessation,
Nibbāna.

And now I only might teach the Norm,
and others might not acknowledge me:
this would be wearisome to me,
this would be hurtful to me."[8]

And then verily to the Exalted One were revealed these verses on the spur of the moment, unheard of before: —

"This that thro' many toils I've won,
Enough! Why should I make it known?
By folk with lust and hate consumed
Not this a Norm that can be grasped.
Against the stream [of common thought],[9]
Deep, subtle, fine, and hard to see,
Unseen 't will be by passion's slaves,
Cloaked in the murk [of ignorance]."[10]

In such wise,
pondering over the matter,
did the heart of the Exalted One incline to be averse from exertion
and not towards preaching the Norm.

Thereupon to Brahmā-Sahampati,[11] becoming aware in thought of the thoughts of the Exalted One,
was this revealed: —

"Woe, woe! now will the world perish!

Woe! now will the world utterly perish,
in that the heart of the Tathāgata,
Arahant,
Buddha Supreme
inclines to be averse from exertion
and not towards preaching the Norm!"

[173] Then did Brahmā-Sahampati, even like a strong man stretching his bent arm out,
or drawing together his arm outstretched,
vanish from the Brahmā world
and appear before the Exalted One.

And Brahmā Sahampati,
draping his outer robe over one shoulder,
and stooping his right knee to the ground,
raised his joined hands towards the Exalted One and said:

"Lord! let the Exalted One preach the Norm!

Let the Blessed One preach the Norm!

There are souls whose eyes are hardly dimmed by dust[12];
they are perishing from not hearing the Norm.

They will come to be knowers of the Norm."

Thus spake Brahmā Sahampati.

And thereafter he said this also:

"There hath appeared in Magadha before thee
A Norm impure by minds unclean contrived.[13]
Unlock this door[14] t' Ambrosia! Let them hearken
To Norm by Pure and Holy One revived.

As on a crag on crest of mountain standing
A man might watch the people far below,
E'en so do thou, 0 Wisdom fair, ascending,
0 Seer of all, the terraced heights of truth,
Look down, from grief released, upon the nations
Sunken in grief, oppressed with birth and age.[15]
Arise, thou Hero! Conqueror in the battle!
Thou freed from debt! Lord of the Caravan!
Walk the world o'er, [sublime and blessed Teacher!] Teach us the Norm! There are, who'll understand."

Then the Exalted One,
understanding the entreaty of Brahmā,

because of his pitifulness toward all souls,[16]
looked down with a Buddha's Eye over the world.

The Exalted One saw,
[174] with a Buddha's Eye, so looking,
souls whose eyes were scarcely dimmed by dust,
and souls whose eyes were sorely dimmed by dust,
souls sharp of sense
and souls blunted of sense,
souls of good
and souls of evil disposition,
souls docile
and souls indocile,
some among them living with a perception of the danger of other worlds and of wrongdoing.

As in a pool of blue or red or white lotus,
some lotus plants born in the water,
emerge not, but grow up and thrive sunken beneath the surface;
and other lotus plants,
born in the water and growing up in the water,
rise to the surface;
and other lotus plants,
born in the water and growing up in the water,
stand thrusting themselves above the water and unwetted by it,
even so did the Exalted One,
look down over the world with a Buddha's Eye,
and see souls whose eyes were scarcely dimmed by dust,
souls whose eyes were sorely dimmed by dust,
souls sharp of sense
and blunted of sense,
souls of good
and souls of evil disposition,
souls docile
and souls indocile,

some among them living with a perception of the danger of other worlds and of wrongdoing.

Seeing Brahmā Sahampati he made response in verse: —

"Open for them the doors stand to Ambrosia!
Let those that hear renounce the faith they hold.[17]
Foreseeing hurt I have not preached, Brahmā,
The Norm sublime and excellent for men."

Then Brahmā Sahampati thought:

"Now am I one by whom an opening has been given for the preaching of the Norm by the Exalted One!"

And he bowed down before the Exalted One,
and passing round him by the right,
vanished there and then.

---

[1] See above, IV, 1, § 1. This Sutta occurs verbatim as the story of Brahmā's entreaty in Vin. Texts, i, 84 f. It is also given nearly verbatim, in Dialogues, ii, 29 f., as an episode in the life of each of the seven Buddhas there recognized as tho series of great world-saviours, but with two variants: — (1) the god proffers his request three times; (2) the four lines beginning 'In days of old' ... are omitted.

[2] When? asks B. In the eighth week after his Enlightenment (buddha-bhūtassa aṭṭhame sattāhe), and he mentions the intervening incidents recorded also in the Jātaka Comy. (Bud. Birth Stories, P. 109 ff.).

[3] Aḍhigato ti paṭividdho. Comy.

[4] 'The Dhamma of the Four True Things.' Comy. On this and the next paragraphs, the reader may consult notes in Dialogues, ii, 36 f. This translation differs only in a few details.

[5] Dur-anubodho. Cf. above, p. 154, n. 2.

[6] Santo.'

[7] To the fivefold pleasures of sense.' Comy.

[8] I.e. physically, if we may take kāya, when opposed to citta, in a Commentary, as rūpa, 'body.' (See Compendium, 96, n. 3). 'In mind (citte) a Buddha can feel neither weariness nor hurt.' Comy.

[9] E.g. in its doctrines of impermanence, ill, non-soul-entity, non- beauty (in what superficially seems so), it goes against the stream of beliefs. Comy.

[10] Avijjā rāsinā ajjhotthatā. Comy.

[11] B. gives a tradition that this deva had been one Sahaka, a Thera in Buddha Kassapa's dispensation, and by sustained First Jhana was reborn as a Brahmā god. The history of the name is unknown. B. represents him as attended here by deva-hosts.

[12] 'The eye of insight, little affected by lust, hate, delusion.' Comy.

[13] According to B., these are the six teachers named above, III, 1, § 1, whose doctrines were already published.

[14] Comy.: The Ariyan Path to Nibbāna.

[15] Thus far these six lines occur in the Iti-vuttaka, § 38.

[16] Sattā or beings, creatures. Not metaphysically taken.

[17] Comy.: 'Let them all give up (vissajjantu) their own faith (saddhaṃ).

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
6. Brahmā Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

6. The Brahmā Suttas

---

[174]

I

Sutta 2

Gārava Suttaṃ

Holding in Reverence

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Uruvelā,
on the banks of the river Nerañjarā,

beneath the Goatherd's Banyan,
and he had just attained full enlightenment.

[175] And to the Exalted One, as he meditated in privacy, the thought arose in his mind:[1]

"It is ill to live
paying no one the honour and obedience
due to a superior.

What recluse or brahmin is there under whom I could live
paying him honour and respect?"[2]

Then the Exalted One thought:

"For the perfecting of the moral code[3]
[if] imperfectly carried out,
I should live under another recluse or a brahmin,
paying him honour and respect.

But I see not anywhere in the worlds of gods
—Māras, Brahmās —
not among recluses and brahmins,
not among the whole race,
human or divine,
any other recluse,
or any brahmin
more accomplished in moral conduct than myself,
and under whom I might live,
paying him honour and respect.

[5] The text has ca, 'and.' B. guards the reader from seeing therein more than one living Buddha.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
6. Brahmā Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

6. The Brahmā Suttas

---

[176]

I

Sutta 3

Brahmadeva Suttaṃ

Brahmādeva

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

[177] Now on that occasion Brahmādeva,
son of a certain brahminee,
left the world,
going from home into the homeless
in the Order of the Exalted One.

And the venerable Brahmādeva,
remaining alone and separate,
earnest, ardent, and strenuous,
attained ere long to that supreme goal of the higher life,
for the sake of which the clansmen rightly go forth from home into the homeless;
yea, that supreme goal did he by himself,
even in this present life,
come to understand and realize.

He came to understand that birth was destroyed,
that the holy life was being lived,
that his task was done,
that for life as we conceive it[1] there was no hereafter.

And the venerable Brahmādeva thus became one of the Arahants.[2]

§

Now the venerable Brahmādeva rose early one morning,
and dressing himself,
took robe and bowl and entered Sāvatthi for alms.

And going about Sāvatthi,
house by house,
he came to his own mother's dwelling.

At that time his mother,
the brahminee,
was habitually making an oblation[3] to Brahmā.

Then it occurred to Brahmā Sahampati:

"This mother of the venerable Brahmādeva,
the brahminee,
makes her perpetual oblation to Brahmā.

What if I were now to approach and agitate her?"

So as a strong man might stretch forth his bent arm,
or bend his arm stretched forth,
Brahmā Sahampati vanished from the Brahmā world and appeared at the dwelling of the mother of the venerable Brahmādeva.

And standing in the air he addressed her in verses: —

"Far hence, 0 brahminee, is Brahmā's world,
To whom thou servest offerings alway.
And Brahmā feedeth not on food like that.
[178] What babblest thou[4] unwitting of the way,
0 brahminee, unto the Brahmā world?[5]
Lo here! this Brahmādeva, son of thine,
A man who ne'er will see another world,[6]
A man who past the gods hath won his way;
An almsman who doth nothing call his own,
Nor other soul beside himself maintains: —
This man into thy house hath come for alms.
Worthy of offerings, versed in the Lore,[7]
With faculties developed and controlled,
Meet for oblations from both gods and men,
True brahmin — 'barring all things evil out' —[8]
By evil undefiled, grown calm and cool,
He moveth on his quest for sustenance.

There is no after, no before for him,[9]
He is at peace, no fume of vice is his;[10]
He is untroubled, rid of hankering;
All force renouncing toward both weak and strong.[11]
Let him enjoy the choice meats thou hast served.

By all the hosts of evil unassailed,[12]
His heart at utter peace, he goes about [179] Like tamed elephant, with vices purged.
Almsman most virtuous, and with heart well freed:
Let him enjoy the choice meats thou hast served.

On him so worthy of the gift do thou,
In confidence unwavering, bestow thy gift.
Work merit and thy future happiness,
Now that thou seest here, 0 brahminee,
A sage by whom the flood is overpassed.[13]

On[14] him so worthy of the gift did she,
In confidence unwavering bestow her gift.
Merit she wrought, her future happiness,
When [at her door] the brahminee beheld
A sage by whom the flood was overpassed."

---

[1] Lit. 'for thusness' (*itthattāya), a word we need in serious diction.

[2] We find no reference elsewhere to this Arahant. Taking name and episode together, some Indologists might pronounce him to be a fiction to suit the occasion. The account of his achievement is here given in one of the canonical formulas of arahantship. See S. vi, p. vii (B.).

[3] Consisting, says B., of food. He gives a picture of how she decorated the house to set off her offering.

[4] Jappasi.

[5] Brahmā-gods are maintained by Jhāna-rapture (sappītikajjhānena), and the way to attain their world is by the Four Jhānas of merit (kusalajjhānani). Comy. Cf. above, IV, 2, § 8.

[6] A free rendering of nirupadhiko: 'without birth-substrate.'

[7] Lit. Veda-goer, borrowed from brahmin terminology. Veda means also 'feeling,' hence Comy.: 'gone to the end of sorrow by the Four Paths' — just an exegetical definition.

[8] The usual exegetical definition of brāhmāno: bāhetvā, 'having put outside.' See D. iii, 93, § 22.

[9] 'No past, no future: deprived of desire and lust for mental and bodily aggregates such as they have been and will be.' Comy. Or cf. above, I, 1, § 10.

[10] Sn. ver. 1048 (trs. 1047).

[11] 'Even if he use a staff (daṇḍa, lit. staff, is used symbolically for force; cf. III, 1, § 1, 'despot's weapons'), he has no will to injure with it.' Comy. Cf. Pss. of the Brethren, p. 323, n. 1.

[12] Sn. ver. 794 (trs. 793). Commentators of both works agree.

[13] Cf. I, 1, § 1.

[14] The concluding verses are assigned by B. to the 'Council-compilers' of this Book of the Suttas.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
6. Brahmā Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

6. The Brahmā Suttas

I

---

[179]

Sutta 4

Baka Brahma Suttaṃ

Baka the Brahmā God

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now at that time there arose in the mind of Baka the Brahmā god,[1] evil, erroneous notions, to wit:

"This [Brahmā-life] is permanent and stable;
this is eternal,
this is absolute,
this is influctuate in its nature;
in this [life] there is no birth,
nor decay,
nor death;
no falling from,
nor rising up to;
and beyond this there is no further salvation."[2]

Then the Exalted One, discerning by thought the thoughts of Baka the Brahmā,
like as a strong man might stretch forth his bent arm,
or bend his arm stretched forth,
vanished from Jeta's Grove,
and appeared in the Brahmā world.

Then Baka the Brahmā saw the Exalted One coming afar off,
and he called to him:

"Come, my lord! welcome, my lord!

[180] Long is it, my lord, since thou madest occasion to come this way.

[See], my lord, this [Brahmā-life] is permanent and stable;
this is eternal,
this is absolute,
this is influctuate in its nature;
in this [life] there is no birth,
nor decay,
nor death;
no falling from,

nor rising up to;
and beyond this there is no further salvation."

To him, so saying, the Exalted One spake thus:

"Alas, the good Brahmā Baka is very ignorant!

Alas, the good Brahmā Baka is very ignorant!

Inasmuch as he will be saying that something which is impermanent is permanent;
that something which is unstable is stable;
that something which is temporal is eternal;
that something which is relative is absolute;
that something from which one is bound to fall,
admits not of decease.

Where there is birth,
decay,
death,
decease and rebirth,
of such a life will he be speaking as he does: —
that no such things happen.

And whereas there is another salvation beyond this,
he will be saying that there is no other such!"

[Baka:—]

"We seventy-two,[3] Gotama, from our good works
Rule o'er the world, birth and old age transcending.
This is our last Veda-won life as Brahmās;
Many the folk off'ring us prayers and praises."[4]

[The Exalted One:—]

"Brief is this life; verily length pertaineth
Not to this life, deemed by thee, Baka, so lengthy,
'Gainst the life waiting for thee,[5] 0 Brahmā,
As I discern, lasting through countless ages."

[Baka:—]

"If thou be th' Exalted One, birth and old age
Transcending, then thine is the infinite vision.
[181] What help brought me rites and good works aforetime[6]
Do thou declare this so that I may learn it."

[The Exalted One:—]

"When many men, thirsty and heat-tormented,
Thou in the past gavest to drink [and saved them]:
Lo! this was thy 'rites and good works aforetime/
As one from sleep newly awaked I remember.[7]

At Antelope Bank,[8] when the village was raided,
Thou didst release folk bound and led off captive;
Lo! this was thy 'rites and good works aforetime/
As one from sleep newly awaked I remember.

When mystic force wielding thou didst deliver
In Ganga's stream, vessel and crew assailed,
By cruel snake fain to devour men victims:
Lo! this was thy 'rites and good works aforetime'
As one from sleep newly awaked I remember.

And I, by name Kappa, was once thy pupil,
Intelligent, wise did his teacher deem him:[9]
[182] Lo ! this was thy 'rites and good works aforetime.'
As one from sleep newly awaked I remember."

[Baka:—]

"0 this my life surely thou understandest!
Yea, thou dost know others, since thou art wakened.[10]
Yea, hence prevails round us thy mighty glory,
Radiance it sheds over the world of Brahmās."

---

[1] On this god see M. i, 328. The episode and verses form the 'Baka-Brahmā Jātaka,' Jāt. iii, 359 (trs. 219) [#405].

[2] Cf. S. iii, 85.

[3] Does this represent the number of the chief (Mahā) Brahmās?

[4] Abhijappanti: 'lifting joined hands toward us, glorifying us, aspiring to be as we are.' Comy.

[5] Tava avasiṭṭhay ettakaṃ āyun ti ahaṃ jānāmi. Comy. On the countless ages' see computations in Jāt. Comy. loc. cit

[6] I think this is more accurately rendered than the Jātaka translation, and agrees better with the emphatic refrain in the Buddha's reply: — This was ... 'If' and 'thine is' are inserted from the Comy. Metrical exigencies, perhaps, have rendered the Pali stanza a little obscure. 'You, being as you say, so far-seeing as to my life, tell me which of my past good deeds brought me here.' According to B., vatasīlavattaṃ is just sīlaṃ. Vata can scarcely mean the expletive vata! just here, as Feer seems to have thought. I prefer to let it stand as 'rites' that were really fruitful, to wit, brave deeds. The S. and Jāt. Commentaries elaborate the legends alluded to. In the first three cases, Baka in a former birth as the hermit Kesava exerts magic power, bringing a stream past the parched, strayed caravan, making dacoits see a vision of royal police approaching, and scaring away the snake as a Garuda-bird. The fourth instance is explained in the Kesava Jātaka (iii, 141 f.; trs. 93 f.) [No. 346].

[7] As if it were a dream.' Jāt. Comy.

[8] Eṇi-kūlasmiṃ (Jāt. sic): — our Comy.: — Gangā-tire'va. Jāt. Comy. — Eṇiyā nāma nadiyā kūle.

[9] Again I suggest a better rendering than that of the Jātaka translation. The point of the allusion is, not that Kappa thought Kesava — a weak creature — wise, but that Kesava set such store on Kappa's intelligence and character, and so reported to the King. The Jāt. text reads amaññaṃ, 'I deemed.' The Br. has amaññа, which is both 1st and 2nd person. If the verse is quoting Kesava's report, the 1st person is right.

[10] Buddho.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
6. Brahmā Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

6. The Brahmā Suttas

---

[182]

I

Sutta 5

Pamāda Suttaṃ (Brahma-loka Suttaṃ)

Another False Opinion

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now at that time
the evil and erroneous notion
had occurred to a certain Brahmā:

"No recluse or brahmin can come here."

Then the Exalted One,
learning by thought the thoughts of that Brahmā,
like as a strong man might stretch forth his bent arm,
or draw in his arm stretched out,
vanished from Jeta's Grove,
and appeared in the Brahmā world.

And the Exalted One seated himself cross-legged in the air above that Brahmā,
flames radiating from his body.[1]

Now it occurred to the venerable Moggallāna the Great:

"Where is the Exalted One now abiding?"

And with the heavenly eye,
purified, passing the sight of men,
he saw the Exalted One,
seated above that Brahmā,
flames radiating from his body.

Then, seeing him there,
the venerable Moggallāna,
like as a strong man might stretch forth his bent arm,
or draw in his arm stretched out,
vanished from Jeta's Grove,
and appeared in the Brahmā world,
and seated him- [183] self cross-legged in the air
eastward of and lower than the Exalted One,
flames radiating from his body.

And it occurred to the venerable Kassapa the Great:[ed1]

"Where is the Exalted One now abiding?"

And with the heavenly eye,
purified, passing the sight of men,
he saw the Exalted One,
seated above that Brahmā,
flames radiating from his body.

Then, seeing him there,
the venerable Kassapa the Great,
like as a strong man might stretch forth his bent arm,
or draw in his arm stretched out,
vanished from Jeta's Grove,
and appeared in the Brahmā world,
and seated himself cross-legged in the air
southward of and lower than the Exalted One,
flames radiating from his body.

And it occurred to the venerable Kappina the Great:

"Where is the Exalted One now abiding?"

And with the heavenly eye,
purified, passing the sight of men,
he saw the Exalted One,
seated above that Brahmā,
flames radiating from his body.

Then, seeing him there,
the venerable Kappina the Great,
like as a strong man might stretch forth his bent arm,
or draw in his arm stretched out,
vanished from Jeta's Grove,
and appeared in the Brahmā world,
and seated himself cross-legged in the air

westward of and lower than the Exalted One,
flames radiating from his body.

And it occurred to the venerable Anuruddha,[2]:

"Where is the Exalted One now abiding?"

And with the heavenly eye,
purified, passing the sight of men,
he saw the Exalted One,
seated above that Brahmā,
flames radiating from his body.

Then, seeing him there,
the venerable Anuruddha,
like as a strong man might stretch forth his bent arm,
or draw in his arm stretched out,
vanished from Jeta's Grove,
and appeared in the Brahmā world,
and seated himself cross-legged in the air
northward of and lower than the Exalted One,
flames radiating from his body.

Then the venerable Moggallāna addressed that Brahmā in a verse:[3] —

"Dost hold even to-day, my friend, the views
Which heretofore are views that thou hast held?

Dost thou behold, in this thy Brahmā-world,
The dazzling sheen whereby't is all excelled?"

[The Brahmā:—]

"My lord, no longer do I hold the views
Which heretofore are views that I have held.
I do behold, in this my Brahmā world,
The dazzling sheen whereby't is all excelled.

How were it possible for me to-day
'I am eternal! I am permanent!' to say?"

Then the Exalted One,
having agitated that Brahmā,
like a strong man might stretch out his bent arm,
or draw in his arm stretched out,
vanished from the Brahmin world and appeared in Jeta's Grove.

Then the Brahmā admonished one of his retinue, saying:

"Come, dear sir, do thou approach the venerable Moggallāna the Great, and say unto him:

'Are there, my lord Moggal- [184] lāna,
yet other disciples of that Exalted One
as gifted and as mighty as the lords Moggallāna, Kassapa, Kappina, and Anuruddha?'"

"Even so, dear sir." did that attendant Brahmā make response.

And he fulfilled the behest.

18. To him thus asking, the venerable Moggallāna the Great addressed this verse: —

"Disciples of the Buddha many they
Who threefold lore have won and magic sway;
Are skilled the thoughts of other minds to read,
Are Arahants, in whom the Drugs are dead."[4]

19. Then that Brahmā, delighted and grateful that these words were spoken,
repaired to the great Brahmā and said:

"My lord, thus did the venerable Moggallāna the Great reply:[ed1]

'Disciples of the Buddha many they
Who threefold lore have won and magic sway;
Are skilled the thoughts of other minds to read,
Are Arahants, in whom the Drugs are dead.'"

And the great Brahmā was delighted at that which the attendant Brahmā told him.

---

[1] Tejodhātuṃ samāpajjitvā: 'having attained to the sphere, or elemental condition, of heat.' By this technical phrase it is implied that, making the self-hypnotizing preamble (parikamma) of fixing sense and mind on fire, Jhāna was induced and, with it, 'the power at will to emit fire from the whole body' Comy. Cf. Pss. of the Sisters, p. 112.

[2] These four great Brethren were by their leader declared foremost, respectively, in magic power, asceticism, preaching to the Order and the 'celestial eye.' A. i, 23.

[3] This context was overlooked in Pss. of the Brethren, p. 392 f.; hence the verses are slightly inaccurate, the 'views' in question being held up to the moment when the splendid visitors proved them false.

[4] Enumerating the six 'super-knowledges' (abhiññā). But it is curious that the sixth and last should be mentioned twice, and the 'celestial ear' (supernormal hearing) be left out. For B. confirms the fact (commenting on A. i, 163-5), that 'threefold lore' —a brahminic idiom annexed by Buddhism — meant super-memory, celestial eye, and destruction of Āsavas ('drugs'). Nevertheless he does not note the omission here. The detailed order followed in the Saṃyutta-Nikdya (see ii, 121; 212) is 'magic power (iddhi), the 'ear,' telepathy, super-memory, the 'eye,' drug-immunity — the same as that followed in Dialogues, i, 88 f.; cf. D. iii, 281.

[ed1] Mrs. Rhys Davids abbreviates.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
6. Brahmā Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

6. The Brahmā Suttas

---

[184]

I

Sutta 6

Pamāda Suttaṃ (Brahma-loka Suttaṃ)

Infatuation

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park,
meditating during the noonday heat.

Now two[1] independent Brahmās, Subrahmā and Suddhavāsa, had come to see the Exalted One,
and they waited one at each post of the door.[2]

And Subrahmā said to Suddhavāsa:

"Dear sir, not yet is it a fitting time to wait upon the Exalted One.

He is meditating during the noonday heat.

[185] There is such and such a Brahmā-world, blissful and prosperous, where dwells an infatuated Brahmā.[3]

Come, dear sir,
let us go to that world
that we may agitate that Brahmā."

Suddhavāsa consented and,
like a strong man might stretch out his bent arm
or draw in his arm stretched out,
they two vanished from before the Exalted One and appeared in that world.

Now that Brahmā saw those Brahmās coming from afar and called to them:

"How now, dear sirs! whence come ye?"

"We, dear sir, come from the near presence of that Exalted One, Arahant Buddha Supreme.

But thou, dear sir, shouldst go to wait upon that Exalted One, Arahant Buddha Supreme."

Then the Brahmā, not brooking such words, reproduced himself a thousand times[4]
and said to Subrahmā:

"Dost thou not see, dear sir,
what the might of my magic power is like?"

"I see, dear sir, what thy might and thy magic power are like."

"I then, dear sir,
being so great in magic power,
so great in might,
to what other,
recluse or brahmin,
should such as I go
to present myself?"

Then Subrahmā the independent Brahmā reproduced himself two thousandfold
and said to the Brahmā:

"Dost thou not see, dear sir,
what my magic power and majesty are like?"

"I see, dear sir, what thy magic power and majesty are like."

"Now this Exalted One, dear sir, is greater in magic power and majesty
than both thee and me.

Thou shouldst go, dear sir,
to present thyself to that Exalted One, Arahant Buddha Supreme."

Then that Brahmā addressed a verse to Subrahmā:—

"[In sculptured frieze reck'ning] the tiers by hundreds
Of 'fairwing' birds[5] three, and four of flamingoes, [186] And five of tigresses all fierily glowing,[6]

This heavenly fane shineth afar, 0 Brahmā,
Over the north firmament shedding a glory."

[Subrahmā:—

"Albeit thy heavenly fane far shineth,
Over the North firmament shedding a glory,
He beauteous in wisdom,[7] discerning canker[8]
In visible objects material, ever
To fluctuate doomed, therein takes no pleasure."

So Subrahmā and Suddhavasa, independent Brahmās,
having agitated that Brahmā,
vanished there and then.

And that Brahmā
on a later occasion
came to present himself before the Exalted One, Arahant Buddha Supreme.

---

[1] Pacceka-brahmā. I have no traditional explanation to give of this species.

[2] Comy. 'like sentries.'

[3] Comy.: 'self-satisfied with his own power and glory.'

[4] On this form of iddhi, cf. Pss. of the Brethren, ver. 563, Jāt. i, 114 (trs. 14).

[5] Supaṇṇā, identified by Childers with the mythical Garuḷā, or Garuḍa, the mythical roc-like bird of India.

[6] The Comy. reads vyagghiniyā pañcasatāti pañca vyagghiniyāpanti satāni ... vyagghasadisā ekacce miga vyagghiniyā nama. Why not tigers? Or should we read vyagghīn'issā ('tigress-deer')? For issā cf. Jāt. v, 427. The fives refer either to the number of statues (vūpa's), or to the rows of them. And Subr.'s reply is a play on the word rūpa, which means also material, and visible things in general.

[7]Comy.: 'the Master.' Cf. above, VI, 1, § 1: '0 Wisdom Fair.'

[8]Raṇaṃ

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
6. Brahmā Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

6. The Brahmā Suttas

---

[186]

I

Sutta 7

Kokālika Suttaṃ

The Kokālikan

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,

in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park,
meditating during the noonday heat.

Now two independent Brahmās,
Subrahmā and Suddhavāsa,
had come to see the Exalted One,
and they waited one at each post of the door.

And in the presence of the Exalted One,
Subrahmā spoke this verse concerning the Kokālikan brother:[1]

"Who can determine, who here understand,
When meas'ring him of whom measure there's none?
Clogged and confused the average man, methinks,
Who to th' illimitable limit lays."

---

[1] On the Kokālikan's libel see below, § 10.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
6. Brahmā Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

6. The Brahmā Suttas

---

[187]

I

Sutta 8

Katamoraka-Tissa Suttaṃ

Tissaka

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,

in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park,
meditating during the noonday heat.

Now two independent Brahmās,
Subrahmā and Suddhavāsa,
had come to see the Exalted One,
and they waited one at each post of the door.

And in the presence of the Exalted One,
Subrahmā spoke this verse
concerning Katamoraka-Tissaka: —

"Who can determine, who can understand,
When meas'ring him of whom measure there's none?
Clogged and without wisdom[1] is he, methinks,
Who to th' illimitable limit lays."

---

[1] Akissavaṃ

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
6. Brahmā Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

6. The Brahmā Suttas

---

[187]

I

Sutta 9

Tudo Brahmā

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

On this occasion the Kokālikan bhikkhu[1] was afflicted, suffering and very ill. Then Tudu, the independent Brahmā,[2] when the night was far spent, shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty over the entire Jeta Grove, drew near to the Kokālikan bhikkhu.

And, standing in the air, he spoke thus to the Kokālikan:

'Put thy heart's trust, Kokālika, in Sāriputta and Moggallāna! Lovely are Sāriputta and Moggallāna!'

Who art thou, friend?'

'I am Tudu, independent Brahmā.'

'Wast thou not, friend, declared by the Exalted One to be a Never-Returner?

Why then, what dost thou in that thou hast returned to this world?

Behold what a mistake thou hast herein committed!'[3]

[188] [Tudu:—]

"In sooth to every man that's born
A hatchet grows within his mouth,
Wherewith the fool, whene'er he speaks
And speaks amiss, doth cut himself.
He who the blameworthy doth praise,
Or who the praiseworthy doth blame,
Builds by his mouth his evil doom,
And by that doom he finds no weal.
Trifling the evil luck[4] of one
Who by the dice doth lose his wealth.
But greater far his evil luck,
Taking his all and eke himself,
Who 'gainst the Blessed Saints on earth
Doth set his heart at enmity.
For vaster epochs doth he go —
A hundred thousand years and eke[5]
Thirty and six, and yet five more —

To life in purgatory, who,
In thought and word on wrong intent,
Utters abuse of Ariyans."[6]

---

[1] See § 10.

[2] See above, § 6, n. 1. B. states that this deva had been the tutor of the ailing man, and that having won, as man, to the Third Fruition (that of never returning to earth), he was after death reborn in Brahmā world (to pass utterly away in some 'higher' heaven).

[3] Comy.: The Kokālikan thought: 'he comes to chide me, not discerning the boil on his own forehead.' Tudu perceives the wretch is too ill for admonishing, and pronounces over him the sweeping assertions in the versss.

[4] Kali, rendered here also as 'evil doom.'

[5] On these epochs: nirabbuda and abbuda —see § 10. I have no olue to the curiously untidy precision of the periods stated. For pañca read pañca ca.

[6] The verses, repeated in § 10, occur (1) in A. v, 171, where §§ 9 and 10 form one sutta; (2) in Sn. ver. 657-60; (3) in A. ii, 3, the first gāthā excepted.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
6. Brahmā Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

6. The Brahmā Suttas

---

[188]

I

Sutta 10

Dutiya Kokālika Suttaṃ

The Kokālikan

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

On this occasion the Kokālikan bhikkhu[1]
coming into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him and took his seat at one side.

And so seated said thus [189] to the Exalted One:

"Wicked, lord, in their desires
are Sāriputta and Moggallāna!

They are ruled by wicked desires!"

Then said the Exalted One to the Kokālikan bhikkhu:

"Say not so,[2] Kokālikan,
say not so!

Put thy heart's trust[3]
in Sāriputta and Moggallāna!.

Lovely[4] are Sāriputta and Moggallāna!"

But the Kokālikan bhikkhu spoke a second time thus to the Exalted One:

"Even though, lord, the Exalted One be trustworthy and his word reliable,[5]
yet wicked, I say, in their desires
are Sāriputta and Moggallāna!,
and ruled by wicked desires!"

The Exalted One spoke a second time thus to the Kokālikan bhikkhu:

"Say not so, Kokālikan,
say not so!

Put thy heart's trust
in Sāriputta and Moggallāna!

Lovely are Sāriputta and Moggallāna!"

But the Kokālikan bhikkhu spoke the same words yet once again,
and the Exalted One answered him in the same words.

Then the Kokālikan bhikkhu,
rising from his seat,
saluted the Exalted One by the right
and departed.[6]

And soon after,
the Kokālikan's entire frame
was covered with pustules
like mustard seed.

From the size of mustard seed
they increased to that of small beans,
to that of chick-peas,
to that of kolaṭṭhi's,
to that of jujube-fruit, [190] to that of myrobalan,
to that of unripe vilva fruit,
to that of billa fruit.

Whereupon they broke
and discharged pus and blood.

Then the Kokalikan bhikkhu died of that disease,
and being dead
he was reborn in the White Lotus Purgatory
for that he had hardened his heart
against Sāriputta and Moggallāna!

Thereupon Brahmā Sahampati,
when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the entire Jeta Grove,

drew near to the Exalted One,
and saluting, stood at one side and said:

"The Kokālikan bhikkhu, lord, is dead,
and being dead
he is reborn in the White Lotus Purgatory,
for that he did harden his heart
against Sāriputta and Moggallāna."

And having so said,
Brahmā saluted,
and passing round to left,
vanished there and then.

Then the Exalted One,
when the night had passed,
addressed the brethren,
telling them of the visit of Brahmā Sahampati
and of what he had announced.

And when he had thus spoken,
a certain brother asked the Exalted One:

"How long, lord, is the measure of life
in the White Lotus Purgatory?"

"Long indeed, bhikkhu, is the measure of life
in the White Lotus Purgatory.

Not easy is it to reckon
how many years,
or centuries,
or tens or thousands of centuries."

"Can we reckon it by means of a figure, lord?"

"We can, bhikkhu," said the Exalted One.

"Suppose there were a load of twenty kharis[7]
as we reckon them here in Kosala,
of sesamum seed.

And suppose at the end of every century
a man were to take out one seed at a time.

Sooner, bhikkhu, would that same load
be used up and finished
than [a term in] the Abbuda Purgatory.[8]

Now one term in the Nirabbuda Purgatory
is equal to twenty in Abbuda Purgatory;

one term [191] in Ababa Purgatory
is equal to twenty in Nirabbuda Purgatory;

one term in Aṭaṭa Purgatory
is equal to twenty in Ababa Purgatory;

one term in Ahaha Purgatory
is equal to twenty in Aṭaṭa Purgatory;

one term in Water-lily Purgatory
is equal to twenty in Ahaha Purgatory;[ed1]

one term in the Sogandhika Purgatory
is equal to twenty in the Water-lily Purgatory;

one term in the Blue Lotus Purgatory
is equal to twenty in the Sogandhika Purgatory;

one term in the White Lotus Purgatory
is equal to twenty in the Blue Lotus Purgatory.

And one term in Red Lotus Purgatory
is equal to twenty in White Lotus Purgatory.

But it is in White Lotus Purgatory, bhikkhu,
that the Kokālikan bhikkhu has been reborn,
for that he hardened his heart against Sāriputta and Moggallāna."

Thus spake the Exalted One.

And thereupon the Blessed Master spake thus: —

"In sooth to every man that's born
A hatchet grows within his mouth,
Wherewith the fool, whene'er he speaks
And speaks amiss, doth cut himself.
He who the blameworthy doth praise.[ed1]
Or who the praiseworthy doth blame,
Builds by his mouth his evil doom,
And by that doom he finds no weal.
Trifling the evil luck of one
Who by the dice doth lose his wealth.
But greater far his evil luck,
Taking his all and eke himself,
Who 'gainst the Blessed Saints on earth
Doth set his heart at enmity.
For vaster epochs doth he go —
A hundred thousand years and eke
Thirty and six, and yet five more —
To life in purgatory, who,
In thought and word on wrong intent,
Utters abuse of Ariyans."

---

[1] This popular story is also told in Sn.: — Kokāliya sutta, Mahāvagga, 10, in A. v, 170, and in Jāt. iv, No. 481, as the Takkariya Jātaka. B. states that the Kokālikan bhikkhu was a native of a kingdom and city called Kokālī, and the son of a setthi (leading citizen) also so-called! Also that he was not the pupil of Devadatta (see Vin. Texts, iii, 251), but was known as Culla-Kokālika, to distinguish him from Maha-Kokāllka, the former, who was of the brahmin class. He then gives a concise account of the Kokālikan's grievance, more fully told in the Jātaka Comy.

[2] I.e. mā āhā, evaṃ. Comy.: mā evaṃ abhani. Fausböll (SBE. X, p. 118) evidently read: mā hi evaṃ.

[3] 'Charity,' in the Jātaka translation is scarcely correct. The verb pa-sad is constantly used to express 'faith, trust, confidence in.'

[4] Pesalā, not 'amiable' (Fausböll, op. cit.), but 'sweetly virtuous' (piya-sīlā). Comy.

[5] So our text and Comy. The Jātaka Comy. has: 'Thou, Lord, believest in thy chief disciples.'

[6] 'Why? Through the mighty power of Karma. When once Karma gets "room," no one can thrust it off. It gave him no longer there to remain.' Comy.

[7] According to the Comy., the Kosalan measure, from a pattha upwards, were four times the bulk of those used in Magadha. 'Twenty khāri's = 1 kharika, or cartload of tila-seeds of the small Magadhese variety.' Cf. Rhys Davids: Ancient Coins, etc., § 32.

[8] These names do not represent separate hells (paṭiyekko nirayo natthi), but only periods of time in Avīchi (the general term for the informal regions; cf. Bud. Psy. Eth., p. 334) apportioned to each entrant by the automatic working of Karma. Comy.

[ed1] Mrs. Rhys Davids abbreviates.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
6. Brahmā Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

6. The Brahmā Suttas

---

[191]

II: The Quintuplet

Sutta 11

Sanaṇ-Kumāra Suttaṃ

The Eternal Youth

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha,
on the banks of the Snake River.[1]

Now Brahmā Sanankumāra,[2] when the night was far spent, shedding radiance by his effulgent beauty
over the entire [192] Snake River shore,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and saluting him,
stood at one side
and spake this verse before him: —

"As is the noble ranked the best among
The folk who pin their faith on breed and clan,
So he who walks in lore and conduct versed
Stands first in worlds of gods or world of man."[3]

So spake he, and the Master approved.

Then Brahmā Sanankumāra noting:
'The Master approves of my words!'
saluted by the right,
and there and then vanished.

---

[1] Sappinī, lit. she-snake. On this little (Comy.) river see Vin. Texts, i, 254, n, 2.

[2] Lit. the 'ever-boy' or youth. On this god see Dialogues, i, 121, n. 1. B. relates that in the day of the youth Five-Crest (Pañcasikha-kumāra-kāle), he from practice of Jhāna was reborn in Brahmā-world, and retained the appearance of a boy. And from retaining this perpetually he was called 'Eternal-Boy.'

[3] Cf. Dialogues, i, 122; D. iii, 93; M. i, 358; 'Lore' = vijjā, a word referring usually, both for brahmin and Buddhist, to some articulate body of doctrine: Vedas, spells, runes, or, for the latter of the two, to practical doctrines, such as are set out, B. reminds us, in the Bhayabherava Sutta (M. i, 22 f.), or the Ambaṭṭha-Sutta (Dialogues, i, 122; vijjā wisdom'), or the eight vijjās (see Childers' Dict. s.v.) or the seven saddhammas (M. i, 354) and the four Jhānas.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
6. Brahmā Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

6. The Brahmā Suttas

---

[192]

II: The Quintuplet

Sutta 12

Devadatta Suttaṃ

Devadatta

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha, on Vulture's Peak Hill, not long after Devadatta had left the Order.[1]

Now Brahmā Sahampati, when the night was far spent,
shedding radiance with his effulgent beauty
over the whole of Vulture's Peak Hill
till night was far spent,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and saluting and standing at one side,
spake this verse before the Exalted One concerning Devadatta:

"As is the plantain, bamboo, and the rush
Each by the fruit it bears undone,
So is the sinner by men's homage slain,
As by her embryo is the mule."[2]

---

[1] I.e. for the hill Gaya-sīsa, taking 500 seceding bhikkhus with him. Vin. Texts, iii, 256.

[2] These figures are more amply stated in prose in S. ii, 241; A. ii, 73, followed by the verse. The fourth figure is not so obvious as the others. Assatarī is stated by B. to be the offspring of an ass and a mare.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
6. Brahmā Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

6. The Brahmā Suttas

---

[193]

II: The Quintuplet

Sutta 13

Andhakavinda Suttaṃ

Andhakavinda

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying among the Magadhese,
at Andhakavinda[1]

And on that occasion he was seated under the open sky
in the darkness of night,
while the god was raining drop by drop.[2]

Then Brahmā Sahampati,
who by his effulgent beauty
had been irradiating all Andhakavinda
till night was far spent,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and saluting and standing at one side,
spoke these verses before him: —

"Seek ye the lonely haunts remote from men.
Practise the life of liberty from Bonds.
If there ye come not by your heart's desire,
Dwell with the Brethren mindful and controlled.[3]
Seeking your alms 'mong clansmen, house to house,
Prudent and heedful, guarded as to sense.
Seek ye the lonely haunts remote from men,
From fear released, in fearlessness set free.[4]
Where dreadful serpents [glide] and lightnings roam
On high and god doth thunder in the night,
The blinding blackness of the night, there sits
The brother rid of all flesh-creeping fear.
Yea, by my troth this have I seen, no hearsay this:[5]
In one communion bound of holy life[6]
A thousand [saints who had] abandoned death;[7]
Disciples too of these, five hundred, yea,
And more, ten hundred, yea, and ten times that,
Who all had reached the stream, the holy Way,
[194] Nor could again as animals be born.[8]
And for the rest, the sons of men endowed
With merit due[9]: — my mind sufficeth not To count, fearful lest men should say I lie.

---

[1] Cf. Vin. Texts, i, 254, n. 2.

[2] See IV, i, § 2, n. 1.

[3] Pss. of the Brethren, ver. 142, ascribed to Cunda the Great. (Cf. xxxix f.). To scan, read satīmā.

[4] From fear and peril of saṇsāra, the round of rebirth, ... freed in Nibbāna (A-bhaya, the peril-less, or fearless). Comy.

[5] i.e. 'not by dialectic, nor basket-achievement' (handing on as tradition). Comy.

[6] Eka-dhamma-desanā. Comy.

[7] Comy.: = mārana-pariccāgīnaṃ.

[8] 'Symbolical for rebirth in misery.' Comy.

[9] I.e. all who, without themselves entering the Path, at least acquire merit through intercourse with those that have entered.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
6. Brahmā Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

6. The Brahmā Suttas

---

[194]

II: The Quintuplet

Sutta 14

Aruṇavatī Suttaṃ

Aruṇavatī

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park
and on that occasion the Exalted One addressed the brethren:

"Bhikkhus!"

"Lord!" they made reply.

And the Exalted One said:

"In days gone by, bhikkhus,
I was a king named Aruṇavat.

Now this king had a royal residence named Aruṇavatī.

And near it was staying Sikhin,[1] the Exalted One,
Arahant Buddha Supreme.

Now Sikhin had a pair of disciples,
chief, elect,
named Abhibhu[2] and Sambhava.

And Sikhin addressed Abhibhu, saying:

'Brahmin, let us go to one of the Brahmā-worlds
till the time comes for a meal.'

'Even so, lord,' replied Abhibhu,
and like as a strong man would stretch forth his bent arm,
or bend his arm stretched forth,
so did they twain vanish from Aruṇavatī,
the king's residence,
and appear in that Brahmā-world.

Then said Sikhin, the Exalted One, Arahant Buddha Supreme
to Abhibhu bhikkhu:

'Let there occur to thee, brahmin,
a religious discourse

for this Brahmā and his company
and his attendants.'

'Even so, lord,' replied Abhibhu bhikkhu.

And he therewith instructed,
enlightened,
incited,
and inspired the Brahmā,
his company,
and his attendants
with a religious discourse.

But forsooth the Brahmā,
his [195] company,
and his attendants were thereupon offended,
annoyed,
irritated,
saying:

'0 but this is a wondrous thing!

0 but this is a strange thing!

How shall a disciple preach a religion
in the presence of his Master?'

Then Sikhin told Abhibhu
what they were feeling and thinking,
and added:

'Wherefore now, do thou, brahmin, agitate them exceedingly.'

'Even so, lord,' replied Abhibhu,
and continued to preach

now with a visible,
now with an invisible body,
now with a body,
the lower half only of which was visible,
now with a body,
the upper half only of which was visible.

Then the hearts of the Brahmā,
his company,
and his attendants,
were filled with wonder and marvel:

'0 but this is a wondrous thing!

0 but this is a marvellous thing: —
the great magic power and might of the recluse!'

And Abhibhu bhikkhu said to Sikhin the Exalted One:

'I profess, lord, that using just such speech
as if I were speaking in the midst of [a gathering of] our Order, I am able as I stand in the Brahmā-world
to make its thousand realms hear my voice.'

'This is the hour for it, brahmin,
this is the hour
in which standing in the Brahmā-world
thou mayest make its thousand realms hear thy voice.'

'Even so, lord,' replied Abhibhu bhikkhu.

And standing in the Brahmā-world he uttered these verses: —

'Bestir yourselves, rise up, renounce and come,
And yield your hearts unto the Buddha's rule.
Shake off the armies of the king of death
As doth the elephant a reed-thatched shed.[3]

Whoso within this Norm and Discipline,
Shall ever strenuous and earnest live,
Rebirth's eternal round put far away,
All pain and suffering he shall end for aye.'

Thereupon, bhikkhus, Sikhin the Exalted One, Arahant Buddha Supreme,
and Abhibhu bhikkhu,
having agitated the [196] Brahmā,
his company
and his attendants,
like as a strong man would stretch forth his bent arm,
or bend his arm stretched forth,
vanished from that Brahmà-world
and appeared at Araṇavatī.

Then Sikhin the Exalted One addressed the brethren:

'Did ye hear, bhikkhus,
the verses uttered by Abhibhu bhikkhu
whiles he was standing in Brahmā-world?'

'We did hear, lord, the verses he so spoke.'

'And what, bhikkhus, were the verses that ye heard him utter?'

'"Bestir yourselves, rise up, renounce and come,
And yield your hearts unto the Buddha's rule.
Shake off the armies of the king of death
As doth the elephant a reed-thatched shed.
Whoso within this Norm and Discipline,
Shall ever strenuous and earnest live,
Rebirth's eternal round put far away,
All pain and suffering he shall end for aye."

These, lord, were the verses that we heard Abhibhu bhikkhu utter,
whiles he was standing in Brahmā-world.'

'Well done, bhikkhus, well done!

Well did ye hear the verses uttered by Abhibhu bhikkhu
whiles he was standing in Brahmā-world.'"

Thus spake the Exalted One.

And the gladdened bhikkhus were delighted by the sayings of the Exalted One.

---

[1] Cf. Pss. of the Sisters, p. 31, and the form Aruna for Aruṇavat.

[2] Cf. Dialogues, ii, p. 7. Sikhin was the second of those seven Buddhas of whom the oldest books take cognizance. Abhibhu's verses are ascribed, in the Theragāthā, to Abhibhūta (see Pss. of the Brethren, 170 f.). On Ānanda's query, how far his great powers bore relation to those of a Buddha, see A. i, 227 f. Our Comy. represents him as choosing for his theme human action and energy, because it would commend itself, as such, to all his hearers, gods and men.

[3] Cf. Pss. of the Brethren, ver. 1147.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
6. Brahmā Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

6. The Brahmā Suttas

---

[196]

II: The Quintuplet

Sutta 15

Parinibbāṇa Suttaṃ

The Utter Passing Away

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying at Kusinārā,
in the Upavattana sālatree grove,
among the Mallas,

between the Twin Sāla trees,
and it was the occasion of his passing utterly away.

Then[1] the Exalted One addressed the brethren:

"Lo now, [197] bhikkhus, I exhort you: — earnestly accomplish!

Transient are all the things of life!"

This was the last word of the Tathāgata.[2]

Then the Exalted One attained First Jhāna,[ed1]
and thence the Second, Third,
Fourth Jhānas;
thence in succession to the four spheres: —
infinity of space,
infinity of consciousness,
nothingness,
neither consciousness nor unconsciousness;
thence in reverse order back to First Jhāna;
thence once more in forward order to Fourth Jhāna.

And emerging from Fourth Jhana he at once passed utterly away.

Now when the Exalted One was utterly passed away, Brahmā Sahampati spake this verse: —

"All creatures in the world shall lay aside
The aggregate [as which they lived] as now Even the Master, even such as he,
Person without a rival in the world,
Tathāgata, who won and wielded powers,[3]
Buddha Supreme, hath wholly passed away."

Now when the Exalted One had utterly passed away, Sakka, ruler of the gods, spake this verse: —

"Alas! impermanent is everything in life!
Growth is its very nature, and decay.
They spring to being and again they cease.
Happy the mastery of them and the peace."

Now when the Exalted One had passed away, the venerable Ānanda spake this verse: —

"0 then was terror, then was mighty dread,
Then stiffened hair and quivered creeping nerve,
When he, endowed with every crowning grace,
The All-Enlightened Buddha passed away!"

[198] Now when the Exalted One had utterly passed away, the venerable Anuruddha spake these verses: —

"No heaving breath left as he lay,
The mind in Jhana's steadfast stay.
With thought from every craving free,
Fixed on the Peace incessantly,
So passed the Man-who-saw away.[4]
With mind unshaken as they came,
He suffered pangs of death in peace;
Stole o'er his heart the last release:
Nibbāna of the unfed flame."

---

[1] This account is verbatim that given in the Mahā-Parinibbāna- Suttanta (Dialogues, ii, 173 f.), down to 'passed utterly away,' with this one discrepancy, that the Sayyutta does not represent the dying Master as reaching, in his successive 'sphere' consciousnesses, to that of trance, [Ed.

Saññāvedayitanirodhā] before proceeding to the reversed succession. Our narrative omits the allusion, after the passing, to an earthquake, and resumes its parallelism with the Suttanta at the four solemn pronouncements by the two gods and the two Theras. In these there are, again, two discrepancies: — Ānanda here speaks before Anuruddha; in the latter's verse, the fifth line here is substituted for

So made the Sage an end of life.

[2] B. assigns this sentence to the Recensionists.

[3] Cf. iv, 2, § 2.

[4] The phrase here, parinibbuto, is much more canonical and orthodox usage than the kālam akāri (or akāsi) of the parallel account. The latter phrase is not, as a rule, used for an Arahant.

[ed1] The Pali reads for each step: Arising from the x he entered into the y. Since Mrs. Rhys Davids has not provided a complete pattern, the text has been left abbreviated.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
7. Brāhmana Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

7. The Brāhmana Suttas

---

[199]

I: Arahants

Sutta 1

Dhanañjānī Suttaṃ

The Dhanañjāni Brahminee

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Rājagaha,
in the Bamboo Grove,
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground [Vihara].

Now at that time a Dhanañjāni brahminee,[1]
the wife of a certain brahmin of the Bhāradvāja family, was a fervent believer in the Buddha, the Norm, and the Order.

And she, while serving the Bhāradvāja with his dinner,[2]
came before [200] him and gave vent
to the triple inspired utterance:

"Glory to that Exalted One Arahant Buddha Supreme!

Glory to the Norm!

Glory to the Order!"[3]

And when she had so said
the Bhāradvāja brahmin exclaimed:

"There now! at any and every opportunity must the wretch be speaking the praises of that shaveling friar!

Now, wretch,
will I give that teacher of thine
a piece of my mind!"

"0 brahmin, I know of no one throughout the world of gods, Māras or Brahmās,
recluses or brahmins,
no one human or divine,
who could so admonish that Exalted One,
Arahant,
Buddha Supreme.

Nevertheless, go thou, brahmin, and then thou wilt know."

Then the Bhāradvāja,
vexed and displeased,
went to find the Exalted One;
and coming into his presence,
exchanged with him greetings and compliments,
friendly and courteous,
and sat down at one side.

So seated, he addressed the Exalted One in a verse[4]: —

"What must we slay if we would happy live?
What must we slay if we could weep no more?
What is 't above all other things, whereof
The slaughter thou approvest, Gotama?"

[The Exalted One:—]

"Wrath must ye slay, if ye would happy live,
Wrath must ye slay, if ye would weep no more.
Of anger, brahmin, with its poisoned source
And fevered climax, murderously sweet,
That is the slaughter by the Ariyans praised;
That must ye slay in sooth, to weep no more."

[201] When the Exalted One had thus spoken,
the Bhāradvāja brahmin said to him:

"Most excellent, lord, most excellent!

Just as if a man were to set up
that which had been thrown down,
or were to reveal
that which was hidden away,
or were to point out the right road
to him who had gone astray,
or were to bring a lamp into the darkness
so that those who had eyes

could see external objects
— even so, lord, has the lord Gotama
shown me his doctrine in various ways.

I, even I, lord,
betake myself to the Exalted One as my refuge,
to the Norm
and to the Order.[5]

I would leave the world under [the Rule of] Gotama;
I would take orders."

So the Bhāradvāja brahmin
left the world under the Exalted One,
and was ordained.

And not long after his ordination
the venerable Bhāradvāja,
remaining alone and separate,
earnest,
ardent and strenuous,
attained [ere long]
to that supreme goal of the higher life,
for the sake of which the clansmen
rightly go forth from home into the homeless;
yea, that supreme goal did he by himself,
even in this present life,
come to understand and realize.

He came to understand that rebirth was destroyed,
that the holy life was being lived,
that his task was done,
that for life as we conceive it
there was no hereafter.[6]

And that Bhāradvāja became one of the Arahants.

---

[1] Many (MSS.), says B., read Dhānañjāni. According to our Comy., the Dhanañjāni brahmins were one of the most aristocratic families (ukkaṭṭhagottā), claiming to have sprung not from the mouth, but from the splitting open of the head, of Brahmā. One of them, a farmer, also of Rājagaha, holds with Sāriputta the dialogue entitled 'Dhanañjāni-sutta,' M. ii, 184 f. The heroine of our Sutta is presumably she who, in the Apadāna (Therīg. Comy., 130, 273; Pss. of the Sisters, p. 177) is said to have been, with her friends, Khemā and Sumedhā, a pious benefactress in Koṇāgamana-Buddha's days.

[2] B. gives a Jātaka-like legend of how she frequently broke out in this way, her husband closing his ears. On the eve of his giving a great banquet to many fellow-brahmins, he begged her to do what she liked so only she did not offend his guests by her udāna. She could make no such undertaking. He threatened to slice her like a plantain with his dagger. She declared herself ready to suffer, so she retained freedom of speech, and proceeded to pour forth 500 verses on her theme, so that he surrendered unconditionally. While serving the guests the dominant impulse arises. Bowl and golden spoon are laid down, and in the midst she turns saluting towards the Bamboo Grove and utters the Doxology. The scandalized guests hurry away, spitting out the food defiled by the presence of a heretic, and the husband scolds her amid the ruins of his feast.

[3] These two lines are indicated only by . . . pe . . . [Ed.: Which would indicate that this should be a repetition of the first line, not an expansion into '... Dhamma ...' and '... Saṇgha ...'. BJT repeats the first line.]

[4] Verses occurring above, I, 8, § 1; II, 1, § 3, and below, XI, 3, § 1. His idea, writes B., was to catch the Master on the horns of a dilemma. If he confessed approval of some kind of destruction, why was he 'in' religion? If of none, then he would leave lust, hate, and ignorance undestroyed — why again was he, with such views, in religion?

[5] Cf. thus far III, 1, § 1.

[6] Cf. VI, 1, § 3.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
7. Brāhmana Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

7. The Brāhmana Suttas

---

[201]

I: Arahants

Sutta 2

Akkosa Suttaṃ

Reviling

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Rājagaha,
in the Bamboo Grove, at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now 'Reviler'[1] of the Bhāradvāja brahmins heard that the Bhāradvāja[2] had
'left the world to enter the Order of [202] Gotama the Recluse.'

Vexed and displeased,
he sought the presence of the Exalted One,
and there reviled and abused the Exalted One in rude and harsh speeches.[3]

When he had thus spoken,
the Exalted One said:

"As to that what thinkest thou, brahmin?

Dost thou receive visits from friends and colleagues,
from thy kin by blood
or by marriage,
from [other] guests?"

"Yes, Master Gotama, sometimes I do."

"As to that what thinkest thou, brahmin?

Dost thou make ready for them
food both dry and juicy,
and opportunity for rest?"

"Yes, Master Gotama, sometimes I do."

"But if they do not accept [thy hospitality], brahmin, whose do those things become?"

"If they do not accept, Master Gotama,
those things are for us."

"Even so here, brahmin.

That wherewith thou revilest us who revile not,
wherewith thou scoldest us
who scold not,
abusest us
who abuse not,
that we accept not
at thy hands.

'T is for thee only, brahmin,
't is only for thee!

He, brahmin, who revileth again
at his reviler,
who scoldeth back,
who abuseth, in return,
him who hath abused: —
this, brahmin, is as if thou and thy visitors dined together
and made good.[4]

We neither dine together with thee
nor make good.

'T is for thee only, brahmin,
't is only for thee!"

"The king and his court believe that Gotama the recluse is an Arahant.

And yet Master Gotama can indulge in wrath!"[5]

[203] [The Exalted One:—]

"Whence[6] should wrath rise for him who, void of wrath, Holds on the even tenour of his way,
Self-tamed, serene, by highest insight free?

Worse of the two is he who, when reviled,
Reviles again. Who doth not, when reviled,
Revile again, a two-fold victory wins.
Both of the other and himself he seeks
The good; for he the other's angry mood
Doth understand and groweth calm and still.

He who of both is a physician, since
Himself he healeth and the other too,—
Folk deem him fool, they knowing not the Norm."

When he had so said,
Reviler of the Bhāradvājas spake thus:

"Most excellent, lord, most excellent!

Just as if a man were to set up
that which had been thrown down,
or were to reveal
that which was hidden away,
or were to point out the right road
to him who had gone astray,
or were to bring a lamp into the darkness
so that those who had eyes could see external objects
— even so, lord, has the lord Gotama
shown me his doctrine in various ways.

I even I, lord, betake myself to the Exalted One as my refuge,
to the Norm
and to the Order.

I would leave the world under [the Rule of] Gotama;
I would take orders."

So the Bhāradvāja brahmin left the world under the Exalted One, and was ordained.

And not long after his ordination
the venerable Bhāradvāja,
remaining alone and separate,
earnest,
ardent and strenuous,
attained to that supreme goal of the higher life,
for the sake of which the clansmen rightly go forth from home into the homeless;
yea, that supreme goal did he by himself,
even in this present life,
come to understand and realize.

He came to understand that rebirth was destroyed,
that the holy life was being lived,
that his task was done,
that for life as we conceive it there was no hereafter.

And the venerable Bhāradvāja became one of the Arahants.

---

[1] According to B. this soubriquet was bestowed on him by those who organized the Councils (sangītikārehi) to distinguish him (there are several Bhāradvājas in the records of early Buddhism) as the author of a lampoon of 500 verses aimed against the Buddha.

[2] Apparently the head of the clan (and presumably the convert of the preceding Sutta). 'My eldest brother being induced to follow the Samana Gotama is a loss to us, breaking up our party (pakkho).' Comy.

[3] 'Saying, thou thief! thou fool! ... thou camel! ... thou ass! the ten bases of abuse.' Comy.

[4] So the Comy. explains these terms: ekato bhuñjati; katassa paṭikāraṃ kāroti.

[5] Bimbisara was a patron of the Sakyan (Buddhist) Order. But Reviler, says B., misunderstanding the repetition "Tis for thee only ...' imagines that the Buddha, like an insulted seer of the traditional kind, was pronouncing a curse on him (and not merely showing that curses, such as the brahmin's, 'come home to roost').

[6] These verses occur in Theragātha (Pss. of the Brethren, 441-4), where they are ascribed to Brahmādatta, a son of Pasenadi.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
7. Brāhmana Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

7. The Brāhmana Suttas

---

[203]

I: Arahants

Sutta 3

Asurindaka Suttaṃ

Asurinda[1]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Rājagaha,
in the Bamboo Grove,
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now Asurinda Bhāradvaja
heard that the Bhāradvaja had
'left the world to enter the Order of Gotama the Recluse.'

Vexed and displeased,
he sought the presence of the Exalted One,
and there reviled and abused the Exalted One
with rude and harsh words.

When he had thus spoken,
the Exalted One remained silent.

Then said the Asurinda:

"Thou art conquered, recluse,
thou art conquered!"

[The Exalted One: —]

"The fool forsooth doth deem the victory his
In that he plays the bully with rude speech.
To him who knoweth how he may forbear,[2]
This in itself doth make him conqueror.

Worse of the two is he who, when reviled,
Reviles again. Who doth not, when reviled,
Revile again, a two-fold victory wins.
Both of the other and himself he seeks
The good; for he the other's angry mood
Doth understand and groweth calm and still.

He who of both is a physician, since
Himself he healeth and the other too,—
Folk deem him fool, they knowing not the Norm."

When he had so said,
Asurinda of the Bhāradvājas spake thus:

"Most excellent, lord,
most excellent!

Just as if a man were to set up
that which had been thrown down,
or were to reveal
that which was hidden away,
or were to point out the right road
to him who had gone astray,
or were to bring a lamp into the darkness
so that those who had eyes
could see external objects
— even so, lord, has the lord Gotama
shown me his doctrine in various ways.

I even I, lord,
betake myself to the Exalted One
as my refuge,
to the Norm
and to the Order.

I would leave the world
under [the Rule of] Gotama;
I would take orders."

So the Bhāradvāja brahmin left the world
under the Exalted One,
and was ordained.

And not long after his ordination
the venerable Bhāradvāja, remaining alone and separate,
earnest,
ardent and strenuous,
attained to that supreme goal
of the higher life,
for the sake of which

the clansmen rightly go forth from home
into the homeless;
yea, that supreme goal did he
by himself,
even in this present life,
come to understand and realize.

He came to understand
that rebirth was destroyed,
that the holy life was being lived,
that his task was done,
that for life as we conceive it
there was no hereafter.

And the venerable Bhāradvāja
became one of the Arahants.

---

[1] 'Lord of Asura(demon)s.' This was the youngest of the brothers Bhāradvaja. Comy. In the Sutta he is called by the adjectival form: Asurindaka, 'demon-chiefer.' The name is so 'pagan' for a brahmin, and the Buddha's reply so suggestive of Sakka's (XI, 1, § 4), that a bifurcated or transferred legend here seems fairly plausible. Cf. Dialogues, ii, 73, also 297.

[2] Lit. 'that which is forbearance.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
7. Brāhmana Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

7. The Brāhmana Suttas

---

[204]

I: Arahants

Sutta 4

Bilaṇgika Suttaṃ

The Congey-man[1]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Rājagaha,
in the Bamboo Grove,
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now the Bhāradvaja brahmin [known as] the Congey-man
heard that the Bhāradvaja had
"left the world to enter the Order of Gotama the Recluse."

Vexed and displeased,
he sought the presence of the Exalted One,
and when there
sat at one side in silence.[2]

Then the Exalted One, discerning by his mind
the thoughts of that man's mind,
addressed him in verse: —

"Whoso doth wrong the man that's innocent: —
Him that is pure and from all errors free —
His wicked act returns upon that fool
Like fine dust that is thrown against the wind."[3]

When he had thus spoken, the Congey-man said:

"Most excellent, lord, most excellent!

Just as if a man were to set up
that which had been thrown down,
or were to reveal
that which was hidden away,
or were to point out the right road
to him who had gone astray,
or were to bring a lamp into the darkness
so that those who had eyes could see external objects
— even so, lord, has the lord Gotama
shown me his doctrine in various ways.

I even I, lord, betake myself
to the Exalted One as my refuge,

to the Norm
and to the Order.

I would leave the world under [the Rule of] Gotama;
I would take orders."

So the Bhāradvāja brahmin left the world under the Exalted One,
and was ordained.

And not long after his ordination
the venerable Bhāradvāja,
remaining alone and separate,
earnest,
ardent and strenuous,
attained [ere long] to that supreme goal of the higher life,
for the sake of which the clansmen
rightly go forth from home into the homeless;
yea, that supreme goal did he by himself,
even in this present life,
come to understand and realize.

He came to understand
that rebirth was destroyed,
that the holy life was being lived,
that his task was done,
that for life as we conceive it
there was no hereafter.

And the venerable Bhāradvāja became one of the Arahants.

---

[1] This was another brother. He had won large profits, says B., by running a shop for different kinds of excellently prepared 'congey ' (kañjikā). The soubriquet of Bilang-ika (bilanga being another name for such preparations on a basis of rice-broth) was given him by the Recensionists at the Third Council (Patna).

[2] Comy.: He was so angry at the seduction of his three brothers that he could not speak.

[3] The verses are given to a Deva above, I, 3, § 2.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
7. Brāhmana Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

7. The Brāhmana Suttas

---

[205]

I: Arahants

Sutta 5

Ahiṃsaka Suttaṃ

Innocens[1]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

When The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, Innocens (Ahiṇsaka) of the Bhāradvāja brahmins
came to [visit] the Exalted One and,

exchanging with him the compliments of amity and courtesy,
took his 'seat at one side.

So seated, he said to the Exalted One:

"I am Innocens, Master Gotama,
I am Innocens."[2]

[The Exalted One:—]

"As is the name so should its bearer be.
Wouldst thou be Innocens [as thou art named]?
Whoso in deed, word, thought ne'er noxious is,
Who on another worketh never harm: —
He verily is [well named] Innocens."

When he had thus spoken, Innocens said:

"Most excellent, lord, most excellent!

Just as if a man were to set up
that which had been thrown down,
or were to reveal
that which was hidden away,
or were to point out the right road
to him who had gone astray,
or were to bring a lamp into the darkness
so that those who had eyes could see external objects
— even so, lord, has the lord Gotama shown me his doctrine in various ways.

I even I, lord, betake myself
to the Exalted One as my refuge,
to the Norm
and to the Order.

I would leave the world
under [the Rule of] Gotama;
I would take orders."

So the Bhāradvāja brahmin left the world under the Exalted One, and was ordained.

And not long after his ordination the venerable Bhāradvāja, remaining alone and separate,
earnest,
ardent and strenuous,
attained [ere long] to that supreme goal of the higher life,
for the sake of which the clansmen rightly go forth from home into the homeless;
yea, that supreme goal did he by himself,
even in this present life,
come to understand and realize.

He came to understand that rebirth was destroyed,
that the holy life was being lived,
that his task was done,
that for life as we conceive it there was no hereafter.

And the venerable Bhāradvāja became one of the Arahants.

---

[1] Comy.: The Recensionists called him so either because of his remark (called technically 'question': pañha), or because he was actually so named. It was as necessary to translate the name here as it was in the form ascribed to the converted bandit Angulimāla, Pss. of the Brethren, ver. 879:

Innocens! such the name I bear,
While Noxious in the past was I.
To-day most truly am I named,
For now I hurt not any man.

And since 'innocent,' meaning literally harmless, has the most dominant meaning now, of pure, guiltless or guileless, it was deemed here, too, better to retain the Latin form, where the dominant meaning is 'innocuous.' Cf. Cicero's: innocens is dicitur, non qui leviter nocet, sed qui nihil nocet. (Tusc. 5, 14, 41). So little, unfortunately, has 'harmlessness' been held up as an ideal, in spite of its Christianity, by the aggressive and intolerant culture of Europe, that it is impossible to take that word as an equivalent of the term, so lofty in Buddhist ethics, of ahiṇsā.

[2] This was apparently no protest, or professing, but the ancient Indian formula of respectful loyalty and devotion. Cf. above where King Pasenadi uses it, III, 2, § 1, and in M. ii, 120.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
7. Brāhmana Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

7. The Brāhmana Suttas

---

[206]

I: Arahants

Sutta 6

Jaṭā Suttaṃ

Tangles[1]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

When The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
the Bhāradvāja [known as] Tangles,
went to visit the Exalted One and,

exchanging with him the compliments of amity and courtesy,
took his seat at one side.

So seated, he addressed the Exalted One in a verse: —

"Tangle within, without, lo! in the toils
Entangled is the race of sentient things.
Hence would I ask thee, Gotama, of this:
Who is't can from this tangle disembroil?"

[The Exalted One: —]

"The man discreet, on virtue planted firm,
In intellect and intuition trained;
The brother ardent and discriminant:
'Tis he may from this tangle disembroil.

They that have lust and hate and nescience spurned,
The Arahants immune from deadly Drugs,
For them the tangle all unravelled lies.
Where mind and body wholly cease to be,
And earthly sense and sense celestial: —
Here is the tangle riven utterly."

When he had thus spoken, Tangles, said:

"Most excellent, lord, most excellent!

Just as if a man were to set up
that which had been thrown down,
or were to reveal
that which was hidden away,
or were to point out the right road
to him who had gone astray,
or were to bring a lamp into the darkness
so that those who had eyes could see external objects

— even so, lord, has the lord Gotama shown me his doctrine in various ways.

I even I, lord, betake myself
to the Exalted One as my refuge,
to the Norm
and to the Order.

I would leave the world under [the Rule of] Gotama;
I would take orders."

So the Bhāradvāja brahmin left the world under the Exalted One, and was ordained.

And not long after his ordination
the venerable Bhāradvāja, remaining alone and separate,
earnest,
ardent and strenuous,
attained [ere long] to that supreme goal of the higher life,
for the sake of which the clansmen
rightly go forth from home into the homeless;
yea, that supreme goal did he by himself,
even in this present life,
come to understand and realize.

He came to understand that
rebirth was destroyed,
that the holy life was being lived,
that his task was done,
that for life as we conceive it
there was no hereafter.

And the venerable Bhāradvāja became one of the Arahants.

---

[1] Comy.: 'He was so called by the Recensionists because of his question. With the rest we have dealt in the Devatā-Saṃyutta.' See I, 3, § 3. [SN 1.1.23]

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
7. Brāhmana Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

7. The Brāhmana Suttas

---

[206]

I: Arahants

Sutta 7

Suddhika Suttaṃ

Puritan[1]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

When The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
the Bhāradvāja [known as] 'Puritan'
came to visit the Exalted One,

and exchanging with him
the greetings and compliments of amity and courtesy,
took his seat at one side.

So seated, he addressed the Exalted One in a verse: —

"Though he be virtuous and penance work
There is in all the world no brahmin found,
Thus rendered pure.

'T is by the Veda-lore and by the course
His class lays down[2] that he is purified, Unique 'mong men."[3]

[207] [The Exalted One: —]

"Nay, though he jabber multitudes of runes,
Thus is no brahmin made regenerate,[4]
Garbage-defiled within, propped by deceits.

But be he noble, brahmin, commoner,
Or labouring man, or of a pariah class,
Who stirs up effort, puts forth all his strength,[5]
Advances with an ever vigorous stride,
He may attain the Purity Supreme.
Brahmin, know this!"

When he had thus spoken, Puritan said:

"Most excellent, lord, most excellent!

Just as if a man were to set up
that which had been thrown down,
or were to reveal
that which was hidden away,
or were to point out the right road
to him who had gone astray,

or were to bring a lamp into the darkness
so that those who had eyes could see external objects
— even so, lord, has the lord Gotama
shown me his doctrine in various ways.

I even I, lord, betake myself
to the Exalted One as my refuge,
to the Norm
and to the Order.

I would leave the world
under [the Rule of] Gotama;
I would take orders."

So the Bhāradvāja brahmin left the world under the Exalted One,
and was ordained.

And not long after his ordination
the venerable Bhāradvāja,
remaining alone and separate,
earnest,
ardent and strenuous,
attained [ere long] to that supreme goal of the higher life,
for the sake of which the clansmen rightly go forth from home into the homeless;
yea, that supreme goal did he by himself,
even in this present life,
come to understand and realize.

He came to understand that
rebirth was destroyed,
that the holy life was being lived,
that his task was done,
that for life as we conceive it
there was no hereafter.

And the venerable Bhāradvāja became one of the Arahants.

---

[1] B. assigns a similar source to this soubriquet. [SN 1.7.6 n.1]

[2] B. explains caraṇa as gotta-caraṇa.

[3] Freely rendered. Lit. 'No other second race' (of men), but the readings vary. The Comy. explains: 'the Three-Veda brahmin is made pure, but this other-named race is not made pure.'

[4] Na jaccā hoti

[5] See II, 2, § 5 and IX, § 2; = Pss. of the Brethren, vers. 156, 353.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
7. Brāhmana Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

7. The Brāhmana Suttas

I: Arahants

Sutta 8

Aggika Suttaṃ

The Fire-man[1]

---

[207]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Rājagaha,
in the Bamboo Grove,
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now on that occasion
a preparation of rice with ghee had been concocted
for the Bhāradvaja brahmin [known as] the Fire-man,
for he thought:

"I will offer the fire-sacrifice,
I will tend the fire-oblation."[2]

Then the Exalted One
having dressed early,
and taken bowl and robe,
went and entered Rājagaha for alms.

And, going for alms from place to place,[3]
he drew near to the dwelling of the Fire-man Bhāradvaja, and approaching
stood at one side.

Now the brahmin beheld him coming for alms,
and seeing him,
addressed the Exalted One in a verse: —

"Proficient in the Vedas Three, a man
Pure born and learned,[4] and acquainted well
With all the lore and ritual [of our class]: —
His let it be to enjoy this goodly rice!"

[208] [The Exalted One: —]

"Nay,[5] though he jabber multitudes of runes,
Thus is no brahmin made regenerate,
Garbage-defiled within, cloaked by deceits.

Whose vision many former lives hath pierced,
Who sees the heavens above, the depths below,[6]
His is 't to win the doing down of birth: —

Master of supernormal lore,[7] a Seer.
In these Three Vedas if a brahmin be
One whom we call 'learned in the Triple Lore,'
Of him shouldst thou declare: — 'acquainted well
With all the lore and ritual [of ourselves]—
'His let it be to enjoy this goodly rice.'"

[The brahmin:—]

"May it please the worshipful Master Gotama to eat!
His worship is a brahmin."[8]

[The Exalted One: —]

"Not[9] mine to enjoy [presents] for chanting verses.
Not normal this, brahmin, for minds discerning.
Buddhas reject wages for chanting verses.
True to the Norm, this is their mode of conduct.[10]
[209] On other grounds minister thou, 0 brahmin,
With food and drink to a great Seer made perfect,[11]
To one from whom purged are the mental Poisons,
In whom is calm, peace from all fret and worry.
Yea, here's the field, if for reward[12] thou lookest."

When he had thus spoken, Fireman, the Bharadvaja, said:

"Most excellent, lord, most excellent!

Just as if a man were to set up
that which had been thrown down,
or were to reveal
that which was hidden away,
or were to point out the right road
to him who had gone astray,
or were to bring a lamp into the darkness
so that those who had eyes could see external objects

— even so, lord, has the lord Gotama
shown me his doctrine in various ways.

I even I, lord, betake myself
to the Exalted One as my refuge,
to the Norm
and to the Order.

I would leave the world under [the Rule of] Gotama;
I would take orders."

So the Bhāradvāja brahmin
left the world under the Exalted One,
and was ordained.

And not long after his ordination
the venerable Bhāradvāja,
remaining alone and separate,
earnest,
ardent and strenuous,
attained [ere long] to that supreme goal of the higher life,
for the sake of which the clansmen rightly go forth from home into the homeless;
yea, that supreme goal did he by himself,
even in this present life,
come to understand and realize.

He came to understand
that rebirth was destroyed,
that the holy life was being lived,
that his task was done,
that for life as we conceive it there was no hereafter.

And the venerable Bhāradvāja became one of the Arahants.

---

[1] So called, because of his fostering a fire oblation, by the Recensionists. Comy.

[2] Cf. Pss. of the Sisters, ver. 143; Brethren, vers. 219, 341; p 222; and below, § 9.

[3] Sapadānaṃ: cf. Pss. of the Brethren, p. 262, n. 5.

[4] 'In many kinds of books (gandhe).' Comy. Cf. D. iii, 94.

[5] See § 7.

[6] = Sn. 647; Dhp. 423.

[7] Abhiññāvosito. The Buddha is elsewhere recorded as recasting the meaning of the brahmin term te-vijjo: 'one-who-has-the-Three Vedas. Cf. above, VI, 1, § 5, n. 4.

[8] The brahmin apparently misunderstands the object of the foregoing verses, and offers him, as one of his class, a fee in kind in return for the chanted mantra.

[9] These verses occur again in § 9, and in 2, § 1, and also in Sn. vers. 81, 82 (trans. 80, 81); 480, 481. The first is quoted in Milinda (trans.) ii, 31. 'You would not,' runs the exegesis, 'while I stood so long waiting give me one spoonful, and now you would pay me as if I were a verse-reciting brahmin, when all the Buddha-virtue is manifest to you.'

[10] Lit. the Dhamma being there or existing, this is the way of living. B. paraphrases: dhammaṃ apekkhitvā, dhamme patiṭṭhāya jīvilaṃ kappentānaṃ esā vutti: 'of those who maintain life with an eye to the Norm, established on the Norm, this is the conduct.'

[11] Kevalinaṃ; corresponds to 'absolute,' and is less used by Buddhism than by Jainism and Sānkhyā.

[12] Lit. merit.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
7. Brāhmana Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

7. The Brāhmana Suttas

---

[209]

I: Arahants

Sutta 9

Sundarika Suttaṃ

The Sundarikdyan

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying in Kosala
on the banks of the river Sundarika.

Now on that occasion the Bhāradvāja brahmin [known as] the Sundarikāyan,[1]
was engaged in sacrificing to fire,
in performing Fire-rites.[2]

Then when he had sacrificed
and performed the rites,
he rose from his seat
and looked around to the four quarters,
thinking:

"Who now ought to partake
of the remainder of this offering?"[3]

Then the Sundarikāyan beheld the Exalted One seated at the[210] root of a certain tree with his head covered,[4]
and seeing him there,
he took the remainder of his oblation in his left hand
and his water-pitcher[5] in his right,
and drew near to the Exalted One.

Then the Exalted One,
at the sound of the brahmin's footsteps,
uncovered his head.

Then the Sundarikayan thought:

"This gentleman is shaved,
this gentleman is a shaveling!"

and felt inclined to turn back again.

But he thought:

"Nay, but some brahmins also are shaven.

I might go and ask him now
as to his birth."[6]

So he drew near to the Exalted One and said:

"What art thou by birth, sir?"

[The Exalted One: —]

"Ask[7] not of birth, ask of the course of conduct.
From any sticks verily fire doth take birth.[8]
The steadfast[9] seer, though his descent be lowly,
To intellect's aristocrats[10] is lifted,
By noble shame all that is evil curbing,
[211] Tamed by the truth, graduate in that taming,
Of saving lore master,[11] the good life living.
Th' oblation's brought! Do thou invoke[12] him duly.
Timely the rite; worthy is he thus worshipped."

[The Sundarikayan :—]

"0 well indeed offered is my oblation,
Now that I've seen master like thee of wisdom!
Yea, in that I heretofore saw none like thee,
Other the folk eating my altar's leavings.

May it please the worshipful Master Gotama to eat!

His worship is a brahmin!"

[The Exalted One :—]

"Not mine to enjoy [presents] for chanting verses.
Not normal this, brahmin, for minds discerning.
Buddhas reject wages for chanting verses.
True to the Norm, this is their mode of conduct.

On other grounds minister thou, 0 brahmin,
With food and drink to a great Seer made perfect,
To one from whom purged are the mental Poisons,
In whom is calm, peace from all fret and worry.
Yea, here's the field, if for reward thou lookest."

[The Sundarikayan: —]

"Then to whom, Master Gotama,
do I give this residual oblation?"

"I see no one, brahmin,
in the whole world of devas, Brahmās, or Māras,
nor in this whole race of devas and men,
recluses or brahmins who,
if he ate this food,
could thoroughly digest it,
save only a Tathāgata
or one of his chosen disciples.[13]

Where- [212] fore, brahmin, do thou either pour it out where no grass is,[14]
or launch [thy dish] in water
wherein are no creatures."[15]

So the Sundarikāyan launched[16] this offering in water wherein were no creatures.

Then that residual oblation, thus placed in water,
seethed and hissed[17]
and sent forth steam and smoke.

Just as a red-hot ploughshare,
if placed in water,
will seethe and hiss

and send forth steam and smoke,
so was it with that oblation.

Then the Sundarikāyan, alarmed and with stiffening hair,
came up to the Exalted One
and stood at one side.

And to him, so standing,
the Exalted One addressed verses:

"Nay, brahmin, deem not that by mere wood-laying Comes purity. Verily that is external.
To him who thus purification seeketh,
By things without none is made pure, the wise say.[18]

I lay no wood, brahmin, for fires on altars.
Only within[19] burneth the fire I kindle.
Ever my fire burns; ever tense and ardent,[20]
I, Arahant, work out the life that's holy.

As yoke of grain[21] surely is pride, 0 brahmin.
Thine altar's smoke, anger; thy false words ashes.
[213] The tongue's the priest's spoon, and the heart the altar,
The fire thereon: this is man's self well tamed.

The Norm's a lake, with virtue's strand for bathing,
Clear, undefiled,[22] praised by the good to good men,
Wherein in sooth masters of lore come bathing,
So, clean of limb, to the Beyond cross over.

The Norm is truth; discipline, life in orders,[23]
Best vantage-ground, brahmin, the Path that's Midway.[24]
Due honour pay thou to the upright-minded.[25]
Whoso doth this, him do I call 'Flux-rider.'"[26]

When he had thus spoken,
the Sundarikāyan of the Bharadvaja brahmins said:

"Most excellent, lord, most excellent!

Just as if a man were to set up
that which had been thrown down,
or were to reveal
that which was hidden away,
or were to point out the right road
to him who had gone astray,
or were to bring a lamp into the darkness
so that those who had eyes could see external objects
— even so, lord, has the lord Gotama
shown me his doctrine in various ways.

I even I, lord, betake myself
to the Exalted One as my refuge,
to the Norm
and to the Order.

I would leave the world
under [the Rule of] Gotama;
I would take orders.'

So the Bhāradvāja brahmin left the world
under the Exalted One,
and was ordained.

And not long after his ordination
the venerable Bhāradvāja,
remaining alone and separate,
earnest,
ardent and strenuous,
attained [ere long] to that supreme goal of the higher life,
for the sake of which the clansmen rightly go forth
from home into the homeless;

yea, that supreme goal did he by himself,
even in this present life,
come to understand and realize.

He came to understand that
rebirth was destroyed,
that the holy life was being lived,
that his task was done,
that for life as we conceive it
there was no hereafter.

And the venerable Bhāradvāja
became one of the Arahants.

---

[1] So called because of his sacrificing by that river. Comy. The Recensionists are this time not mentioned. The river is named in the corresponding Sutta of the Sn. (Ill, 4), and in the Vatthūpamā-Sutta, M. i, 39, where a quite different account is given of the conversion of a Bharadvaja brahmin called Sundarika. He proposes to bathe, for religious purification, in the Bāhukā river; to whom the Buddha, in eloquent verses contrasting such external rites with real purity, names several rivers.

[2] So obsolete apparently was Agni-worship become in Buddhaghosa's day, or even in that of his authorities, that he sees only the 'Great Brahmā' as the object of these rites, and those of § 8.

[3] 'I have laid my rice-concoction on the fire, partaken of by Great Brahmā: if I give what is over to some brahmin, born of Brahmā's mouth, my father and I would be pleased, and the way to Brahmā-world made clear.' Comy.

[4] The Commentaries on both this work and the Sn. assure us that we are to understand the Master sat with his body and head all wrapped up; and this less as a protection against the cold than as a stratagem to rouse the

brahmin's curiosity, and to prevent his being repelled from afar by the sight of the shorn hair and beard.

[5] Karmaṇḍalu the pitcher of a brahmin religieux, made with a lengthened spout to pour water into the mouth without contact between lips and spout.

[6] On this diversity in practice cf. Satapatha-Brāhmaṇa II, 6, 3, 14-17, quoted in Hopkins's Religions of India, 190; also the title of one Upanishad: Muṇḍaka, 'The Shaveling.'

[7] The Saṃyutta account now omits part of the dialogue given in the Sn. vers. 455-61 (trans. 454-60); and coincides with vers. 462, 463, when it diverges, coinciding again at ver. 480 for two stanzas only.

[8] The two Commentaries are here again at one: many woods serve for kindling, even as any class of society may yield a saint; the essential matter is to evoke the combustion-virtues of the fire.

[9] Dhitimā, here paraphrased by viriyavā, 'energetic.'

[10] Ajānīyo, applied to a well-trained horse, elephant or ox, easily suggested by the favourite notion of danta, tamed, but hard to render in English. Cf. I, 2, § 4, n. 5.

[11] Vedantagu: 'One who has gone to the end of the Vedas:' a brahmanic term that is not found prior to Buddhism. The two Commentaries call the Four Paths 'Vedas.'

[12] Or entreat him, cf. Dialogues, ii, 289. The sacrificer was wont to say: 'We invoke the Supreme Brahmā, or Indra, or Soma, or Varuna, or Isāna, or Yama.' Comy. N.B. Agni is not included. Cf. Dialogues, i, 310.

[13] To understand this curious reply, the reader should be acquainted with the facts relating to Indian sacrificial ritual: with the mystical, magic glamour belonging to the dish of oblation and to the 'remnant' (ucchiṣṭa) therein. See e.g. Atharva Veda XI, 3, 7; Satapatha-Brah., II, esp. Adh. 3; Macdonell, Vedic Mythology, 155. B.'s interpretation is that the gods infused subtle essences from flowers, fruits and edible concoctions into the oblation creating ojā, or nectar, digestible by their ethereal organs, but not to be assimilated by men's grosser organs. On the other hand, the beef broth (go-yūsa) and sesamum-seed infused by men made the oblation unpalatable to gods. Such a mixture the Arahant 'of dry vision ' (not practising Jhāna) could not assimilate, but the Arahant of Eight Attainments (Jhāna) might have power to do so, as could a Buddha by the karma-born heat, or vim, of his nature.

[14]'Lest the grass rot.' Comy.

[15] 'Lest the creatures die.' Comy.

[16] Opilāpesi*. 'He immersed it with its golden dish.' Comy.

[17] The Pali words are onomatopoeic. Comy.: 'it made a noise like that': cicciṭāyati, ciṭiciṭāyati (c's pronounced ch).

[18] Kusalā, 'experts.'

[19] Comy.: 'Subjectively in my own vital continuum I burn the sacred fire of insight.'

[20] 'I have my mind ever rightly fixed.' Comy.

[21] Kharibhāro: 'as a yoke though borne aloft on the shoulders presses on the earth at every step the bearer takes, so do you with your pride of birth and class cause envy in others and weigh them down to woes after death.' Comy.

[22] 'You,' comments B., 'your rites over, go to cleanse your smoke- cinder-, and sweat-soiled body in your little river, where when four or five bathe together the sands are churned up; but in my Eightfold Path-Norm-lake or sea, rahado, many hundred thousand creatures may bathe in clear calm waters, and go to the shores of Nibbāna.'

[23] 'Truth,' he goes on, 'is truth of speech'; then, as he is wont, he divides the Eightfold Path between 'truth' and 'discipline.'

[24] According to B. the Middle Path is here not the ethical position set forth in the first sermon, between self-indulgence and asceticism, but that between 'Eternalism' and 'Annihilationism' (Dialogues, i, 27, 46).

[25] B. lays down that in the compound sat-ujjubhūtesu, the t is euphonic, and the meaning is sa tvaṃ ('thou' emphatic) to the upright, etc.

[26] Dhammasārī, cf. diṭṭhisārī, Sn. 911. We have not met the term elsewhere. B. takes Dhamma to mean, not the Norm, but dhammā: things or ideas. And he gives an optional explanation: either protected from the flux or course of things, or making evil things to go by good things (sāretvā). Hence a 'thing-flux-er' is one who is not swept along helplessly. There is no attempt to connect the word with the dhammānusāri of PP. I, § 35. Cf. dhammasārādhigamo, S. v, 402, Dhammasotaṃ, on the other hand, in S. ii, 43, is explained as the Path.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
7. Brāhmana Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

7. The Brāhmana Suttas

---

[214]

I: Arahants

Sutta 10

Bahu-Dhītu Suttaṃ

Of Many Daughters[1]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying among the Kosalans
in a certain forest.

Now on that occasion
a certain brahmin of the Bhāradvājas
had lost fourteen oxen.

And he came seeking those oxen into the forest.

And there he saw the Exalted One seated in the cross-legged position, his body set upright[2] and mindfulness evoked before his face.[3]

Seeing the Exalted One,
he drew near,
and before him uttered these verses[4]: —

"For this good friar there sure are not six days to-day
Since fourteen oxen have been lost to sight,
Therefore the friar a happy man is he!

For this good friar there sure are not grain crops gone bad,
One leaf, two leaves a stalk of sesamum!
Therefore the friar a happy man is he!

For this good friar there sure are not in empty barn
Rats dancing rampantly[5] around,
Therefore the friar a happy man is he!

[215] For this good friar there sure is not, seven months [unwatched],
A siesta-couch covered by vermin swarm,[6]
Therefore the friar a happy man is he!

For this good friar there sure are not seven daughters all
Widows with one child, maybe two [to cadge],[7]
Therefore the friar a happy man is he!

For this good friar there's sure no tawny speckled one
To wake the weary slumb'rer with her foot,[8]

Therefore the friar a happy man is he!

For this good friar there surely never come at dawn
Duns chiding him with debts: Come pay! come pay!
Therefore the friar a happy man is he!"

[The Exalted One: —][9]

"For me, brahmin, there sure are not six days to-day
Since fourteen oxen have been lost to sight,
Therefore a happy man, brahmin, am I!

For me, brahmin, there sure are not grain crops gone bad,
One leaf, two leaves a stalk of sesamum!
Therefore a happy man, brahmin, am I!

For me, brahmin, there sure are not in empty barn
Eats dancing rampantly around,
Therefore a happy man, brahmin, am I!

For me, brahmin, there sure is not, seven months [unwatched],
A siesta-couch covered by vermin swarm,
Therefore a happy man, brahmin, am I!

For me, brahmin, there sure are not seven daughters all
Widows with one child, maybe two [to cadge],
Therefore a happy man, brahmin, am I!

For me, brahmin, there's sure no tawny speckled one
To wake the weary slumb'rer with her foot,
Therefore a happy man, brahmin, am I!

For me, brahmin, there surely never come at dawn
Duns chiding me with debts: Come pay! come pay!
Therefore a happy man, brahmin, am I!"

[216] When he had thus spoken, the Bhâradvàja said:

"Most excellent, lord, most excellent!

Just as if a man were to set up
that which had been thrown down,
or were to reveal
that which was hidden away,
or were to point out the right road
to him who had gone astray,
or were to bring a lamp into the darkness
so that those who had eyes could see external objects
— even so, lord, has the lord Gotama shown me his doctrine in various ways.

I even I, lord, betake myself
to the Exalted One as my refuge,
to the Norm
and to the Order.

I would leave the world
under [the Rule of] Gotama;
I would take orders.'

So the Bhāradvāja brahmin left the world
under the Exalted One, and was ordained.

And not long after his ordination the venerable Bhāradvāja, remaining alone and separate,
earnest,
ardent and strenuous,
attained [ere long] to that supreme goal of the higher life,
for the sake of which the clansmen rightly go forth from home into the homeless;
yea, that supreme goal did he by himself,
even in this present life,
come to understand and realize.

He came to understand that
rebirth was destroyed,
that the holy life was being lived,
that his task was done,
that for life as we conceive it
there was no hereafter.

And the venerable Bhāradvāja became one of the Arahants.

---

[1] This quaint title, about which B. is silent, can be derived only from the fifth stanza, as if that dealt with the most impressive grievance of this farmer, so down in luck. Dhītā in its crude forms in compounds becomes dhītī, and dhītu (Ed. Müller, Pali Grammar, 84).

[2] 'With the trunk erect so that the eighteen "back-thorns" (vertebrae) were end to end.' Comy.

[3] 'Fixing the "confronting" mindfulness (or memory) of Jhāna-exercise, or causing it to be near the face, as it is said in the [Jhāna-] Vibhanga (Vibh. 252): "either at the tip of the nose, or in the image of the face (or mouth)." 'Cf. Manual of a Mystic, 1. (PTS. 1916).

[4] The verses are in sloka metre, save that the first of each four padas has two redundant feet:

Na hi nūn-imassa samaṇassa.

They give an interesting picture of a cultivator of ancient N. India in straits, and are fairly racy of the soil.

[5] Ussoḷhikāya, not met with elsewhere. B. says: 'they spring up squeaking and vigorous, their ears, tails, etc., erect ... playing in the unfilled granaries their outdoor games.'

[6] 'There is no one to attend to the couch he has made of straw and leaves to rest on after his labours, so that vermin infest it and assail him.'

[7] They send their children cadging to the grandfather, whose hand is crowded out of his own food-dish by these hungry pensioners. Comy.

[8] Reading *tilak'āhatā B. embroiders to the following effect: the brahmin, kept awake by rats and vermin, lies sleepless till dawn. Scarce have his eyelids closed when comes kick and summons: 'What doest thou, brahmin?' and the day's coming burdens are enumerated. Presumably the wife is meant.

[9] The Buddha's acquiescence in the harassed brahmin's imputation of a happiness free from cares makes this Sutta form an effective pendant to the Dhaniya Sutta (Sn. 1,2). There, the farmer gloating over his prosperity, the Buddha is no less complacent over his own freedom from all wealth.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
7. Brāhmana Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

7. The Brāhmana Suttas

---

[216]

II: The Lay Adherents

Sutta 11

Kasī Suttaṃ

The Ploughing[1]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying on South Hill,
at Ekanāla, a brahmin village.[2]

Now on that occasion it was the time for sowing,[3]
and Farmer Bhāradvāja, the brahmin,
had harnessed five hundred ploughs.[4]

Then the Exalted One dressed himself in the early morning and,
taking bowl and robe,
drew near to the ploughing operations.

Now at that time Farmer Bhāradvāja's distribution of food [217] was going on.[5]

And the Exalted One drew near to the scene
and stood at one side.

Now Farmer Bhāradvāja, saw the Exalted One standing there for alms,
and thereat he said:

"Now I, recluse, plough and sow,
and when I have ploughed and sown
I eat.

Do thou also, recluse, plough and sow,
and when thou hast ploughed and sown,
eat."

"But I too, brahmin, plough and sow,
and when I have ploughed and sown,
I eat."

"But we see neither Master Gotama's team,
nor his plough,
nor his ploughshare,
nor his goad,
nor his oxen.

And yet Master Gotama says,
'I too, brahmin, plough and sow,

and when I have ploughed and sown, I eat!'"

Then Farmer Bhāradvāja, addressed the Exalted One in a verse: —

"A ploughman by thine own confession thou?
No ploughing can I see!
The 'ploughman' queried, tell me how to know
The ploughing done by thee."

[The Exalted One:—]

"Faith[6] is the seed, and rain the discipline.
Insight for me is plough fitted with yoke,
My pole is conscience[7] and sense-mind the tie,
And mindfulness my ploughshare and my goad.
Guarded in action, guarded too in speech,
And temperate as to my stomach's food,
I weed with truth,[8] and my release from work[9]
Is that fair thing of innermost desire.[10]
[218] Energy is my burden-bearing team,
Drawing my plough toward the haven sure.
Onward it goes nor ever turneth back;
And where it goeth we shall weep no more.[11]
Such is the ploughing that is ploughed by me.
The fruit it bears is food ambrosial.
Whoso this ploughing hath accomplished, he
From suffering and from sorrow is set free."

[The brahmin:—]

"May it please Master Gotama to eat!

A ploughman is Master Gotama, yea,
it is for fruit ambrosial
that Gotama ploughs his ploughing!"

[The Exalted One:—]

"Not mine to enjoy [presents] for chanting verses.[12]
Not normal this, brahmin, for minds discerning,
Buddhas reject [wages] for chanting verses.
True to the Norm, such is their practice ever.
On other grounds minister thou, 0 brahmin,
With food and drink to a great Seer made perfect,
To one from whom purged are all mental poisons,
In whom is calm, peace from all fret and worry.
Yea, here's the field, if for reward thou lookest."

[219] When he had thus spoken, Farmer Bharadvaja said:

"Most excellent, Master Gotama, most excellent!

As if one raised up
that which had been overthrown,
or revealed
that which had been hidden,
or declared the way
to one who was bewildered,
or carried an oil-lamp into the dark,
so that they that had eyes could see,
even so is the Norm in many ways
made manifest by Master Gotama.

Lo! I go for refuge to Gotama the Exalted One,
to the Norm,
and to the Order.

May Master Gotama suffer me as a lay-adherent,
who from this day forth
as long as life endures
has taken in him refuge!"

---

[1] The Commentary on this charming Sutta sets out and proceeds with such elaborate and graphic amplitude of detail that we may infer the episode possessed great popularity in Buddhaghosa's day and earlier. Nevertheless the corresponding exegesis on the Sutta-nipata version, though often verbatim the same, is not exuberant in the same degree. To judge by both, the ploughing in question was a festival; house and fields, the farmer and his wife, his men and cattle were decorated for the occasion. It was the preliminary to the second or 'mud' sowing (paṇsu-vappa), i.e. presumably the transplanting of the rice-seedlings to the furrows that were to be irrigated.

[2] A village near the hill (with its Vihāra) guarding the South of Rājagaha. Dakkhiṇa-giri is often mentioned in the Canon as a residence for the Order. 'Brahmin villages' occur not seldom in the Jātaka. B. leaves it uncertain whether they were so called from the preponderance of brahmins, or of brahmin-property.

[3] Kasī, literally ploughing, but symbolic of agriculture generally. B. says, he lived by kasī, but there is nothing to show that he undertook the communal ploughing.

[4] B. assigns 8 oxen to the leading team, 4 to each of the others, and a cart full of bīja (seeds or seedlings) to follow each plough; also many relief-oxen in readiness.

[5] Superintended by the brahminee, the pāyāsa, or rice-pudding, was brought out in golden bowls on large carts, and administered to the 600 ploughmen seated around.

[6] I.e. trust, confidence, 'its salient feature being complacency, satisfaction-in (sampasāda), and its essential property, elan, forward impulse (pakkhandana). Comy.

[7] Hiri, conscientiousness, lit. shame (at doing wrong).

[8] I.e. 'insight into things-as-they-have-become.' Comy.

[9] Niddānaṃ.

[10] This clause amplifies the concise and pregnant Pali:

soraccam me pamocanaṃ.

The latter suggests 'the taking off the yoke for a night, for a year.' (Cf. Rigveda, v, 53, 7: vimocanaṃ, resting-place for horses.) 'I,' runs the exegesis, 'took up my yoke ages ago, even in the day of Dīpankara Buddha, nor did I lay it aside till, under the Bodhi-tree, I won the "fruition" of Arahantship. This fruition as something intensely loveable (su-ratattā) is the former term so-raccaṃ, not meaning here absence of licentiousness in act or speech, gentleness; since this has already been taken into account.' It should be noted that the Buddha is not standing up for his work as a missionary versus the farmer's work. He is out to 'save the soul' of the brahmin and says: 'My work has been to accomplish in myself the "one thing needful"; it is done; now I rest (i.e. eat). Have you, yet started?

[11] Cf. Pss. of the Brethren, ver. 138.

[12] Here again the brahmin's approval gives no assurance that the Dhamma preached has sunk into his heart. The subsequent confession of faith shows that it has. See above, VII, 1, §§ 8, 9.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
7. Brāhmana Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

7. The Brāhmana Suttas

---

[219]

II: The Lay Adherents

Sutta 12

Udaya Suttaṃ

Udaya

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

While at Sāvatthi, the Exalted One,
dressing himself early,

and taking bowl and robe,
came one day to the dwelling of Udaya[1] the brahmin.

Then Udaya the brahmin filled the Exalted One's bowl with rice.

Now the Exalted One repeated his visit
the second day,
and yet again the third,
and each time Udaya the brahmin
filled his bowl with rice.

After he had done so the third time,
Udaya the brahmin said:

"A pertinacious man[2] is the friar Gotama, that he comes again and again!"

[The Exalted One: —]

"Again, again is seed in furrow sown,
Again, again the cloud-king sends down rain,
Again, again the ploughmen plough the fields,
Again, again comes corn[3] into the realm,
Again, again do beggars[4] go their round,
Again, again do generous donors give,
[220] Again, again when many gifts are given,
Again, again the donors find their heaven.[5]
Again, again the dairy-folk draw milk,
Again, again the calf its mother seeks,[6]
Again, again we tire and toil anew,
Again, again the slow wits seek rebirth,[7]
Again, again comes birth and dying comes,
Again, again men bear us to the grave.

When once the man of broad insight that Path
Which brings no new becoming doth attain,
Then is he no more born again, again."

When he had thus spoken, Udaya the brahmin said:

"Most excellent, Master Gotama,
most excellent!

As if one raised up
that which had been overthrown,
or revealed
that which had been hidden,
or declared the way
to one who was bewildered,
or carried an oil-lamp into the dark,
so that they that had eyes could see,
even so is the Norm in many ways
made manifest by Master Gotama.

Lo! I go for refuge
to Gotama the Exalted One,
to the Norm,
and to the Order.

May Master Gotama suffer me as a lay-adherent,
who from this day forth
as long as life endures
has taken in him refuge!"

---

[1] Not met with elsewhere. The brahmin's name recurs, Sn. V. 1105 f.

[2] Pakaṭṭhako is exegetically explained as rasagiddho, 'greedy for tastes'; the word is very rare in Pali. See the Sskr. ka.sṭa. 'A desperate fellow for dinner is the friar!' Comy.

[3] Reading *dhaññ*a. See op. cit. below.

[4] 'Here he skilfully brings in himself.' Comy. Humorously, too, he hints at the self-sacrificing donor called dānapati. Cf. above, II, 3 §3

[5] So far the verses form part of Sakuḷudāyin's poem, Pss. of the Brethren, vers. 531, 532. Is there any coincidence between this name and Udaya? Cf. above, VII, 1, § 3. B. speaks of the whole list as 16 things that have to be recurrently done in life. To get 16, we must take 2 each in lines 11, 13.

[6] Possibly meaning incurs rebirth. B. is silent.

[7] Theragathā, 17, 101.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
7. Brāhmana Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

7. The Brāhmana Suttas

---

[220]

II: The Lay Adherents

Sutta 13

Devahita Suttaṃ

Devahita

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

On one occasion, at Sāvatthi, the Exalted One fell ill with intestinal wind.

And the venerable Upavāna was attending on the Exalted One.

Then the Exalted One appealed to him, saying:

"Prithee, Upavāna,[1]
dost know how I can get hot water?"

"Surely, lord," responded the venerable Upavāna,
and making ready he took bowl and robe,
and sought the dwelling of the brahmin Devahita.

When he got there he stood silently aside.

[221] Now Devahita saw him standing thus in silence,
and addressed him in the verse: —

"His Worship standing there and speaking not,
With shaven head and face, wrapped in his cloak,
What doth he wish for, what may be his quest,
What would he beg, that he is thither come?"[2]

[Upavāna: —]

"An Arahant, the Blessed of all men,
A holy sage, he suffereth sore with wind.
It there be any water heated here,
0 give it to me, brahmin, for the sage.
Revered by them to whom we reverence owe,[3]
Cherished by them who claim our pious care,
Honoured by them to whom honour is due,
For him I do beseech it may be brought."

Then Devahita the brahmin made a serving man take hot water on a carrying-pole[4]
and a jar of molasses,[5]
and offered them to the venerable Upavāna.

Then the venerable Upavana came to the Exalted One and administered them to him,
fomenting with the hot water
and mixing the molasses with hot water.[6]

Then the illness of the Exalted One abated.

And Devahita the brahmin came to visit the Exalted One,
and exchanging with him the greetings of courtesy and amity,
took his seat at one side.

So seated, he addressed the Exalted One in the verse:

"Where should he give[7] who hath a gift to make?
Where given, will his offering bear much fruit?
[222] Yea, how to him who doth oblation bring —
How shall his tribute work effectively?"[8]

[The Exalted One:—]

"Whose[9] vision many former lives hath pierced.
Who sees the heavens above, the depths below,
Whose is't to win the doing down of birth: —
Master of supernormal lore, a seer: —
There should he give who hath a gift to make,
There given, will his offering bear much fruit,
Yea, thus to him who doth oblation bring — Thus shall his tribute work effectively."

When he had thus spoken,
Devahita the brahmin said to the Exalted One:

"Most excellent, Master Gotama, most excellent!

As if one raised up
that which had been overthrown,
or revealed

that which had been hidden,
or declared the way
to one who was bewildered,
or carried an oil-lamp into the dark,
so that they that had eyes could see,
even so is the Norm in many ways
made manifest by Master Gotama.

Lo! I go for refuge to Gotama the Exalted One,
to the Norm,
and to the Order.

May Master Gotama suffer me as a lay-adherent,
who from this day forth
as long as life endures
has taken in him refuge!"

---

and (B) the other 247; nor into the 41 Agga-sāvakā of the Aṇguttara,[sn1] and the rest; but into Great (mahā) and Ordinary (pakati) sāvakā, making together the company of Agga-sāvakā. Of these the former (Great) were 80 in number, and he proceeds to enumerate 64 only of the 80, made up of 48 of the poset Theras, and 16 others most of whom do not occur in the Canon. 'Why are these called Great Disciples? Because of the greatness of their Resolve (abhinihāra),' resulting in, it would seem, a more perfect evolution of knowledge in their last birth.

[sn1] Aṇguttara Nikāya, i. 23-5. With the exception of two, Bāhiya Dārucīriya (cf. Dhammapada Commentary, ii. 209 f.) and Sāgata, all of these distinguished followers are represented in the Theragāthā.

[1] The Comy. gives the same account of the temporary attendants before Ānanda as Dhammapāla gives. See Pss. of the Brethren, p. 350, differing only in the inclusion of one Bodhi. They were chosen out of the 80 'Great Theras' or inner entourage of the Master. Cf. op. cit. xxxvi, 350; Dialogues, ii, 151.

[2] Presumably it was not the conventional hour for the alms-call, hence the perplexity. The verses of the petition agree with 185, 186 of the Theragātha.

[3] E.g. 'the 80 Great Theras.' Comy.

[4] Kajā or pingo, the pole at right angles to the shoulders.

[5] Cf. Vin. Texts, ii, 42.

[6] 'As a sweating mixture.' Comy.

[7] Dajjā.

[8] Ijjhcti.

[9] Cf. VII, 1, § 8.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
7. Brāhmana Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

7. The Brāhmana Suttas

---

[222]

II: The Lay Adherents

Sutta 14

Mahāsāḷa Suttaṃ aka Lūkhapāpuraṇa Suttaṃ

The Millionaire[1]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

On one occasion, at Sāvatthi,
a certain brahmin millionaire,
looking worn and in a coarse cloak,

came to visit the Exalted One and,
exchanging with him the greetings and compliments of courtesy,
took his seat at one side.

To him so seated the Exalted One said:

"Wherefore, brahmin, art thou looking worn[2]
and art clad in a coarse cloak?"

[223] "Four sons have I, Master Gotama,
in this place and they,
in concert with their wives,[3]
have shown me the door."

"Therefore, brahmin, thou shouldst learn these verses and,
when the folk are assembled in the Chapter Hall,[4]
and thy sons seated there also,
recite them: —

'They at whose birth my heart was glad,
For whose becoming much I longed,
They now in concert with their wives
Are as a dog that drives off swine.
Impious and shameless sooth are these
Who call me 'dear one,' call me 'dad'[5]
Demons are they in guise of sons.
Him that is come to years they leave
Forsaken, as a worn-out horse
Unfed is led away from crib.
The sire, the senior of these boys
Doth beg his bread at others' doors.

Better in sooth "the stick"[6] for me
Than having disobedient sons.
It serves to keep off savage ox,
It serves to keep off savage hound —

Whereas I wandered in the dark
I find a footing in the deep,[7]
[224] And by the stick's effective power
I, though I stumbled, stand once more.'"

Then that brahmin, when he had learned the verses taught him by the Exalted One, recited them to all the folk assembled in the Chapter Hall,
his sons being seated there also.

"They at whose birth my heart was glad,
For whose becoming much I longed,
They now in concert with their wives
Are as a dog that drives off swine.
Impious and shameless sooth are these
Who call me 'dear one,' call me 'dad'
Demons are they in guise of sons.
Him that is come to years they leave
Forsaken, as a worn-out horse
Unfed is led away from crib.
The sire, the senior of these boys
Doth beg his bread at others' doors.

Better in sooth 'the stick' for me
Than having disobedient sons.
It serves to keep off savage ox,
It serves to keep off savage hound —
Whereas I wandered in the dark
I find a footing in the deep,
And by the stick's effective power
I, though I stumbled, stand once more."

There - after his sons led that brahmin to his house,
and when they had bathed him,
they each clothed him
with a suit of raiment.

Then that brahmin, taking one of the suits,
went to visit the Exalted One and,
exchanging with him the greetings and compliments of courtesy,
took his seat at one side,
and so seated, said:

"We brahmins, Master Gotama, select a teacher's fee for our teacher.

May Master Gotama be pleased to accept my fee."

The Exalted One. moved by compassion, accepted.

Then that brahmin said:

"Most excellent, Master Gotama, most excellent!

As if one raised up
that which had been overthrown,
or revealed
that which had been hidden,
or declared the way
to one who was bewildered,
or carried an oil-lamp into the dark,
so that they that had eyes could see,
even so is the Norm in many ways
made manifest by Master Gotama.

Lo! I go for refuge to Gotama the Exalted One,
to the Norm,
and to the Order.

May Master Gotama suffer me as a lay-adherent,
who from this day forth
as long as life endures
has taken in him refuge!"

---

[1] A mahdsāla is a magnate either brahmin or noble, but emphatically a wealthy person. This man's fortune amounted to 800,000 (? coins) stored in his house. The legend told is that he presented each son on his marriage with an eighth. They fearing lest he, being a widower, would remarry, petted and coddled him, but told him that to carry this on, they would need each the remaining four-eights. He gave all, retaining only his clothing, and lived with his eldest son. Soon the daughter-in-law had him barred out; the others followed suit. He entered the brahmin order of Pandarangas and suffered great privations, till he throws himself on the reputed kindness and graciousness of the Samana Gotama.

[2] Lūkha.

[3] Sampuccha.

[4] The meeting of the brahmin synod, parallel to the santhāgāra or Khattiya (nobles') mote hall. Cf. Dialogues, i, 113, n. 2. B. amplifies the meagre account. Neglect of parents was punishable by death.

The sons fall at the father's feet, who withdraws his charge and bids them support him.

[5] Tāta, tāta: the gèneral familiar masculine appellative. We have nothing quite similar.

[6] Daṇḍa is here, I think, used in its double sense of recluse's staff, and legal punishment. The fact that he had arraigned his sons before the citizens in the hope of gaining redress gives point, lacking otherwise to these lines. 'He goes on to show his bettered condition,' is B.'s meagre comment.

[7] The metaphors are so elliptically expressed that they seem mixed.

'I was in the dark; the daṇḍa guides me; I was in deep water; it steadies me, etc.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
7. Brāhmana Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

7. The Brāhmana Suttas

---

[224]

II: The Lay Adherents

Sutta 15

Mānatthaddha Suttaṃ

Pridestiff

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

On one occasion, at Sāvatthi,
there was a brahmin living there called Pridestiff.[1]

He showed respect neither to his mother,
nor to his father, nor to his teacher,[2]
nor to his eldest brother.

Now on that occasion the Exalted One,
surrounded by a large congregation,
was teaching the Norm.

And it occurred to the brahmin, Pridestiff:

"This Samana Gotama,
surrounded by a large congregation,
is teaching the Norm.

What if I were to go near?

If he will talk to me,
I will talk to him;
if not, I will not speak to him."

And he drew near and stood at one side.

And the Exalted One did not speak to him.

[225] And Pridestiff thinking:

"This Samana Gotama does not know anything,"[3] was fain to turn back again.

Then the Exalted One discerning intuitively
the thoughts of the brahmin,
addressed him in the verse: —

"Not well is it to foster pride![4]
If there be any here,

Brahmin, for sake of whom thou'rt come,
Give him thy fostering care."

Then Pridestiff thought:

"The Samana Gotama knows my thoughts!"
and there and then he fell on his face at the Exalted One's feet
and kissed those feet
and stroked them,
telling his name:

"Pridestiff am I, Master Gotama,
Pridestiff am I, Master Gotama!"[5]

Then the congregation was astonished, saying:

"0 wonderful, sir!

0 astonishing, sir, is it!

For this Pridestiff shows respect to neither mother,
nor father,
nor teacher,
nor eldest brother,
and yet he utterly prostrates himself in this manner
before the Samana Gotama."

Then the Exalted One said to Pridestiff:

"Enough, brahmin,
stand up and sit down in thine own place,
whence belief in me arose in thy heart."

So Pridestiff sat down in his own place
and addressed the Exalted One in the verse: —

"To whom should one show due humility,[6]
Whom treat with reverence?
Whom should ojne offer honour and respect!
To worship whom is well?"

[2226] [The Exalted One: —]

"To mother and to father shouldst thou show
Humility, to eldest brother too,
And fourthly to thy teacher: these shouldst thou
With reverence treat, these honour and respect,
These worshipfully to entreat is well.
The Arahants, the Saintly Cool,[7] whose work
Is perfected, and they sane and immune,[8]
These peerless ones, docile,[9] thy pride subdued,
In veneration hold."

When he had thus spoken, Pridestiff, the brahmin, said:

"Most excellent, Master Gotama, most excellent!

As if one raised up
that which had been overthrown,
or revealed
that which had been hidden,
or declared the way
to one who was bewildered,
or carried an oil-lamp into the dark,
so that they that had eyes could see,
even so is the Norm in many ways
made manifest by Master Gotama.

Lo! I go for refuge to Gotama the Exalted One,
to the Norm,
and to the Order.

May Master Gotama suffer me as a lay-adherent,
who from this day forth
as long as life endures
has taken in him refuge!"

---

[1] Cf. above, VII, 1, § 5. Evidently either a nickname: Māna-thaddka, or a mere nom d'occasion. Cf. a similar character in Jenta (Pss. of the Brethren, CCXVIII), the son of Pasenadi's chaplain, and with whom this Pridestiff should have been identified. Dhammapāla describes him as mānthaddo, and gives a similar narrative.

[2] Unsaluted an ācariya (teacher) refused instruction, and, if the discourtesy proceeded from an ex-pupil, recognition. Comy.

[3] 'In that he takes no notice of a high-bred person like me.' Comy.

[4] The Burmese MS. of Dhammapāla's Comy. used in op cit. reads:

'Na mānabrūhanaṃ sādhu. Atthāṃ karīyatha, brāhmaṇa,' which is simpler than the reading in Feer's edition, and avoids the doubled brāhmaṇa. But it is otherwise awkward, and is less courteous in tone.

[5] Cf. VII, 1, § 5, n, 2.

[6] The Pali idiom is '(not) make pride.' Cf. Jāt. iv, 388.

[7] Cf. Pss. of the Brethren, references in Index under 'cool.' Buddhism (1912), p. 175; and below, VIII, § 4.

[8] Cf. Pss. of the Brethren, references in Index under 'sane.'

[9] Lit. not-stiff, supple-minded. The Br. MS. is here perhaps the corrupter reading: nihacca mānaṃ atthadvāre, so we follow Feer, and let the pada refer to the brahmin.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
7. Brāhmana Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

7. The Brāhmana Suttas

---

[226]

II: The Lay Adherents

Sutta 16

Paccanīka Suttaṃ

The Gainsayer

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

On one occasion, at Sāvatthi,
a brahmin named The Gainsayer[1]
was living at Sāvatthi.

And he thought:

"What if I were to go to visit the Samana Gotama,
and to whatever he says,
I were to maintain the opposite?"

Now on that occasion the Exalted One
was walking to and fro in the open air.

And Gainsayer drew nigh
and followed the Exalted One
as he walked to and fro,
and said:

"Recite some doctrine, friar!"

[The Exalted One:—]

"Nay, not with thee, Gainsayer, with thine heart
Corrupt and full of animosity,
Sound thinking or sound speaking [shall I find].

[227] Whoso can strife and discord of the mind[2] Suppress, and give up enmity, 't is he
In truth can apprehend what's soundly spoke."

When he had thus spoken, Gainsayer the brahmin said:

"Most excellent, Master Gotama, most excellent!

As if one raised up
that which had been overthrown,
or revealed
that which had been hidden,
or declared the way
to one who was bewildered,
or carried an oil-lamp into the dark,

so that they that had eyes could see,
even so is the Norm in many ways
made manifest by Master Gotama.

Lo! I go for refuge to Gotama the Exalted One,
to the Norm,
and to the Order.

May Master Gotama suffer me as a lay-adherent,
who from this day forth
as long as life endures
has taken in him refuge!"

---

[1] Lit. Happy-in-gainsaying, or opposing. If some one said: 'it's all white,' he would say: 'it's all black,' etc. Comy.

[2] Appasada, the opposite of that pleasure arising from satisfaction which is harmony.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
7. Brāhmana Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

7. The Brāhmana Suttas

---

[227]

II: The Lay Adherents

Sutta 17

Nava-Kammika Suttaṃ

New-Works

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying among the Kosalese
in a certain forest.

Now on that occasion the Bhāradvāja brahmin 'New-Works'[1]
was having [timber]-work done in that forest.

And he saw the Exalted One seated beneath a sala-tree cross-legged,
his body in an upright posture
and mindfulness set up before his face.[2]

Seeing him, the thought occurred:

"I am enjoying the work
that I am having done in this forest.

That Samana Gotama,
what is he enjoying in the doing?"

So New-Works drew nigh to the Exalted One
and addressed him in the verse: —

"What enterprise of thine is being wrought, 0 almsman, in the wood where sal-trees grow,[3] That lonely in the forest though thou be,
Enjoyment still is thine, 0 Gotama?"

[The Exalted One: —]

"No work in wood is left for me to do.
Root-cut for me is wood and jungle all,[4]
[228] Thus I, all free from briars in the wood,[5]
And with my heart unpierced,[6] alone may find My joy, for whom regrets have ceased to be."

When these words had been said,
New-Works, the Bhāradvāja brahmin, said:

"Most excellent, Master Gotama, most excellent!

As if one raised up
that which had been overthrown,
or revealed
that which had been hidden,
or declared the way
to one who was bewildered,
or carried an oil-lamp into the dark,
so that they that had eyes could see,
even so is the Norm in many ways
made manifest by Master Gotama.

Lo! I go for refuge to Gotama the Exalted One,
to the Norm,
and to the Order.

May Master Gotama suffer me as a lay-adherent,
who from this day forth
as long as life endures
has taken in him refuge!"

---

[1] Nava-kammika. On this expression B. confirms the interpretation given in the Vin. Texts, ii, 359, n. 2; cf. iii, 189. This brahmin had forest-trees cut and the timber framework 'for gables, roof-terraces, etc., fitted, then carried to the town and sold,' presumably for the vaḍḍhaki, or worker in wood, to carry on withal.

[2] Cf. VII, 1, § 10.

[3] Cf. V, § 5, n. 2.

[4] B. does not help us over the word visūkaṃ (sic lege) or visukkhaṃ. Here it can hardly mean 'puppet-show' as in D. i, 6 (cf. Dialogues, i, 7, n. 2). The Sanskrit equivalent (viṣvaṇk) means etymologically spreading in all directions; hence visūkaṃ may be either (a) jungle or thicket, in apposition to vanaṃ, or (b) an adverb to 'cut': cut on all sides.'

[5] Vane nibbanatho (for nir-vanatho) is again metaphorical, wood standing for lusts or passions (kilesa-vana, Comy.) Cf. Pss. of the Sisters, LXII.

[6] Another favourite religious metaphor (op. cit. ver. 52 and Brethren: index s.v. 'Dart.'). Is there not here another pun: A-sallo = a-sālo? (As if we were to say: 'and with my back un-birched.')

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
7. Brāhmana Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

7. The Brāhmana Suttas

---

[228]

II: The Lay Adherents

Sutta 18

Kaṭṭhahāra Suttaṃ

Wood-gathering

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying among the Kosalese
in a certain forest.

Now on that occasion
the numerous pupils of one of the Bharadvaja brahmins,
lads gathering sticks,
came into that forest.

And so coming, they saw the Exalted One seated there cross-legged,
the body fixed erect,
and mindfulness set up before his face.[1]

And so seeing
they sought out the Bharadvaja brahmin and said:

"An it please you, sir,
know that in the forest yonder
a recluse is seated cross-legged,
the body fixed erect,
and mindfulness set up before his face."

Then the brahmin together with the lads repaired to the forest and beheld the Exalted One seated as they had told him.

And seeing him,
the brahmin drew near
and addressed the Exalted One in the verse[2] —

"Thou who hast plunged in forest lone and void,
In jungle depths, fearsome and perilous,
With frame[3] impassive, steadfast, beautiful, [229] 0 almsman, wondrous fair thine ecstasy.[4]
Not where they sing, nor even where is speech
Thou bidest, but alone within the wood,
A seer to whom the forest is a home.
That thou thus dwellest lone and rapture-filled

Reveals itself as wondrous strange to me
For, sir, meseems if thou art fain to taste
Communion with the Lord of all the world,[5]
In threefold[6] heavenly sphere most high reborn,
Why then dost not, abandoning the woods,
Untrod by man, work among us severe Austerities that lift to Brahmā-world?"

[The Exalted One: —]

"All longing[7] or obsession of the heart,
In divers things deeply for aye engrossed,
The promptings of desires[8] sprung from the root
Of nesciënce: — together with their root,
All these have I brought to an utter end.
I [sit] unswayed, unhankering and aloof;
With vision clarified all things I see.
The goal supreme of blest enlightenment
Is won, 0 brahmin, and I contemplate
In secret places with a heart serene."

When this was spoken, the Bharadvaja brahmin said:

"Most excellent, Master Gotama, most excellent!

As if one raised up
that which had been overthrown,
or revealed
that which had been hidden,
or declared the way
to one who was bewildered,
or carried an oil-lamp into the dark,
so that they that had eyes could see,
even so is the Norm in many ways made manifest by Master Gotama.

Lo! I go for refuge to Gotama the Exalted One,
to the Norm,
and to the Order.

May Master Gotama suffer me as a lay-adherent,
who from this day forth
as long as life endures
has taken in him refuge!"

---

[1] Cf. VII, 1, § 10.

[2] These gāthās are in Jagatī metre, not used in this work till now, and the diction, spoilt alas! in translation, is very beautiful.

[3] B. here supplies this word (kāya-visesanāni).

[4] The Comy. reads, with the Burmese, sundararūpaṃ, but *su-cāru scans better, and gives the intensive su: ati-sundaraṃ jhānaṃ jhāyasi.

[5] Lokādhipati, i.e. Great Brahmā. Comy.

[6] The Brahmā-heaven is catalogued as threefold with respect to inmates: retinue, ministers, great Brahmās. Cf. Vibhanga, 424.

[7] Kankhā, and below a-kankho, usually meaning 'doubt' (cf. Dīgha Nik. iii, 217), the prefix converting it into 'desire,' ā-kankhā, being dropped probably for metrical reasons. But in Sanskrit kānkhā is only 'longing.'

[8] Pajappitā. Jappa, lit. muttering, with its prefixes, is a synonym of lobha or taṇhā. See Bud. Psy. Eth., 279 f., n. 6. B. echoes here the comment he makes there. Cf. above p. 180, n. 2; 207, l. 1.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
7. Brāhmana Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

7. The Brāhmana Suttas

---

[230]

II: The Lay Adherents

Sutta 19

Mātu-Posaka Suttaṃ

The Mother-Maintainer

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

On one occasion at Sāvatthi
a brahmin who supported his mother[1]
came to see the Exalted One, and,

exchanging with him the greetings and compliments of courtesy,
took his seat at one side.

So seated, he said to the Exalted One:

"Of a truth, Master Gotama,
I seek my alms after the normal manner,[2]
and so seeking them I maintain my parents.

Am I not, sir, in so doing,
doing what ought to be done?"

"Yea, verily thou, brahmin,
in so doing
doest what ought to be done.

Whoso, brahmin, seeks alms after the normal manner,
and so seeking maintains his parents,
engenders much merit.

In normal fashion whoso doth maintain
His mother or his father, in this life
Him for that cherishing the wise commend,
And after death he wins the joys of heaven."[3]

When this had been spoken
the mother-maintaining brahmin said:

'Most excellent, Master Gotama,
most excellent!

As if one raised up
that which had been overthrown,
or revealed
that which had been hidden,
or declared the way
to one who was bewildered,

or carried an oil-lamp into the dark,
so that they that had eyes could see,
even so is the Norm in many ways
made manifest by Master Gotama.

Lo! I go for refuge to Gotama the Exalted One,
to the Norm,
and to the Order.

May Master Gotama suffer me as a lay-adherent,
who from this day forth
as long as life endures
has taken in him refuge!"

---

[1] It was permissible, by the laws compiled in 'Manu,' for a brahmin to live by food given unasked or got by begging (IV, 4, 5), especially in times of scarcity (X, 120). Hence neither this brahmin, nor the mendicant (§ 10), was necessarily a recluse.

[2] Dhammena, as prescribed.

[3] This ṣloka occurs in Ang. ii, 69.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
7. Brāhmana Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

7. The Brāhmana Suttas

---

[230]

II: The Lay Adherents

Sutta 20

Bhikkhaka Suttaṃ

The Mendicant

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

On one occasion at Sāvatthi
a mendicant[1] brahmin came to visit the Exalted One and,
exchanging with him the greetings and compliments of courtesy,

sat down at one side,
and said to the Exalted One:

"Both I, Master Gotama,
am a mendicant
and his reverence is a mendicant.

What difference is there here between us?"

[The Exalted One: —]

"No[2] man is rightly 'mendicant' so far
As he merely from others seeketh alms.
[231] And is he pledged unto a tainted norm,[3]
Neither to that extent 'almsman' is he.

Whoso, with us, hath in the higher life
Cast out both wickedness and [all the work
Of piling] merit,[4] and by judgment sound[5]
Fares through the world, 'almsman' indeed is he."

When this was spoken
the mendicant brahmin said to the Exalted One:

"Most excellent, Master Gotama, most excellent!

As if one raised up
that which had been overthrown,
or revealed
that which had been hidden,
or declared the way
to one who was bewildered,
or carried an oil-lamp into the dark,
so that they that had eyes could see,
even so is the Norm in many ways made manifest by Master Gotama.

Lo! I go for refuge to Gotama the Exalted One,
to the Norm,
and to the Order.

May Master Gotama suffer me as a lay-adherent,
who from this day forth
as long as life endures
has taken in him refuge!"

---

[1] Bhikkhako. See preceding Sutta.

[2] Occurs Dhp. vers. 266, 267.

[3] Taking vissaṃ dhammaṃ to mean 'the whole law,' Max Müller failed to grasp the point or the Pali. An 'almsman' is essentially one who holds 'right views' and shapes his life according to the sound judgments of the same. On vissaṃ, cf Dhs. § 625; Asl. 319: 'putrid,' 'rancid.' Both Commentaries on the verse refer to such smells; ours also to 'bad norm'; that on Dhp. to merely bodily acts (as the only rule of life).

[4] Max Müller's 'good and bad,' pace Nietzsche, is misleading for a European. (Fausböll's too. See Sn. ver. 520.) Making merit and reaping its reward was mere layman's creed (cf. the preceding Sutta), not that of a genuine bhikkhu, who by entering on the Path had renounced heavenly goals.

[5] Sankhā, paraphrased in both Commentaries by ñāṇa, and explained in Dhp. Comy. as the exercise of discernment and philosophical judgment in regard to all things (Dhp. Comy. iii, 393).

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
7. Brāhmana Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

7. The Brāhmana Suttas

---

[231]

II: The Lay Adherents

Sutta 21

Saṇgārava Suttaṃ

Sangārava

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

On one occasion when the Exalted One was at Sāvatthi
the brahmin Sangārava[1] was living there,
and he was a Purity-by-Water man

believing[2] in purification by water;
evening and morning he made a religious practice
of going down into the water.[3]

[232] Now the venerable Ānanda[4] rising early and dressing himself, took bowl and robe
and went into Sāvatthì for alms.

Making his tour he dined,
and on his return went to the Exalted One,
saluted him,
and took his seat at one side.

So seated, he told the Exalted One of the views of Sangārava the brahmin,
and said:

"It would be well, lord,
if the Exalted One would visit the dwelling of Sangārava the brahmin,
out of compassion for him."

The Exalted One silently consented.

And the next morning early
the Exalted One dressed himself,
and taking bowl and robe,
set out for the dwelling of Sangārava the brahmin
and, when there,
seated himself on a seat that stood ready.

Then Sangārava came up to the Exalted One,
and exchanging with him the greetings
and compliments of courtesy,
sat down at one side.

So seated, to him the Exalted One said:

"Is it indeed true, brahmin,
that thou art a water-purifier,
and believest in purification by water;
and dost thou make it a religious practice
to go down into the water both evening and morning?"

"That is so, Master Gotama."

"Now what advantage, brahmin,
art thou looking for,
in that thou believest and actest on this wise?"

"In this way, Master Gotama:

The evil deeds that I do during thè day,
these by my bathing
I cause to be borne away the same evening;
the evil deeds that I do at night,
these by my bathing
I cause to be borne away the next morning.

That is the advantage I look for,
in that I believe and act on this wise."

[The Exalted One: —]

"The Norm's a lake, virtue its strand for bathing,
Clear, undefiled, praised by the good to good men,
[233] Wherein in sooth masters of lore come bathing,
So, clean of limb, to the Beyond cross over."[5]

When this was spoken,
Sangarava said to the Exalted One:

"Most excellent, Master Gotama, most excellent!

As if one raised up
that which had been overthrown,
or revealed
that which had been hidden,
or declared the way
to one who was bewildered,
or carried an oil-lamp into the dark,
so that they that had eyes could see,
even so is the Norm in many ways made manifest by Master Gotama.

Lo! I go for refuge to Gotama the Exalted One,
to the Norm,
and to the Order.

May Master Gotama suffer me as a lay-adherent,
who from this day forth
as long as life endures
has taken in him refuge!"

---

[1] Not the same, probably, as the brahmin youth of that name of Caṇḍalakappa in Kosala, Majjhima-Nik. ii, 209 f.. with which cf above, VII, 1, § 1.

[2] Pacceti.

[3] Cf Pss. of the Sisters, LXV: dialogue between Puṇṇā, or Puṇṇikā, and a brahmin of similar views. The practice especially when practised three times daily, counted as a form of tapas, or self-mortification. See Dialogues, i, 232; Ang. i, 296; ii, 206.

[4] According to B., Ānanda and Sangārava had, as laymen, been friends, and the former was anxious to prevent 'this wretch who, for all our friendship, has contracted wrong views, from becoming a "hell-filler" moreover, he has a large circle and hundreds may follow, if he is converted.'

[5] Occurs VII, 1, § 9.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
7. Brāhmana Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

7. The Brāhmana Suttas

---

[233]

II: The Lay Adherents

Sutta 22

Khomadussa Suttaṃ

Khomadussa

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying among the Sākyans
at a Sākyan township named Khomadussa.[1]

Now at an early hour
the Exalted One dressed himself and,
taking bowl and robe,
entered the township of Khomadussa for alms.

And just then the brahmin householders of the place were assembled in their place of council
to transact some matters,
and the god was raining drop by drop.

Then the Exalted One came up to the hall,
and they saw him coming from afar.

And seeing him, they said:

"Who now are these shaveling friar-men?

And what can they know about council rules?"[2]

Then the Exalted One addressed the brahmin house-fathers of Khomadussa in the verse: —

"No 'council' that where are no pious gentlemen,[3]
Nor gentle they whose speech observes no rule.
They who have put far from them lust and enmity
And dullness, they become good gentlemen.

When this was spoken,
the Khomadussa brahmin housefathers said to the Exalted One:

"Most excellent, Master Gotama, most excellent!

As if one raised up
that which had been overthrown,
or revealed
that which had been hidden,
or declared the way

to one who was bewildered,
or carried an oil-lamp into the dark,
so that they that had eyes could see,
even so is the Norm in many ways made manifest by Master Gotama.

Lo! We go for refuge to Gotama the Exalted One,
to the Norm,
and to the Order.

May Master Gotama suffer us as a lay-adherents,
who from this day forth
as long as life endures
has taken in him refuge!"

---

[1] Meaning 'linen cloth'; 'because of the preponderance (usmnnattā) of such,' says B.; but whether as made there, or worn, or both, does not appear. I can find no other reference to the place.

[2] Lit. 'hall-rule' (sabhā-dhamma). According to B., there was a side-entrance to avoid disturbing those who were comfortably seated, but the Buddha, aware that he would be creating or suffering discomfort, walked 'straight' in (ujukam eva āgacchati), angering the audience. He had previously 'willed the rain to fall.' The reason is not given, unless it served as an excuse for taking shelter.

[3] Santo: 'wise, good men.' Comy.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
8. Vaṇgīsa-Thera-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

8. The Vaṇgisa Suttas

Sutta 1

Nikkhanta Suttaṃ

Gone From Home

---

[234]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

The venerable Vaṇgīsa[1] was once staying near Ālāvi[2]
at the chief temple[3] of that place,
together with his tutor,
the venerable Nigrodha-Kappa.[4].

Now on that occasion
the venerable Vaṇgīsa was a novice,
not long ordained,
who was left behind
as custodian at the Vihāra.[5]

Then a number of women,
gaily adorned,

came into the pleasance to see the Vihāra.

And seeing those women,
disaffection[6] in consequence
arose in the venerable Vaṇgīsa,
and lust harassed his heart.

And then he thought:

"Alas! the loss to me!

Alas! no gain to me!

Alas! how hard for me to gain!

Alas! no easy thing for me to gain!
in whom disaffection has arisen,
and lust harasses the heart.

How were it possible here and now
that another[7] should cause me to get [235] rid of this disaffection
and produce loyal love?

What if I were now by myself
to get rid of my disaffection
and cause loyal love to arise?"

And the venerable Vaṇgīsa by himself
got rid of his disaffection
and caused loyal love to arise within him.

In that hour he uttered these verses: —

Alas![8] That now when I am gone from home
Into the homeless life, these wanton thoughts
Sprung from the Dark should flit about my mind!

Were high-born warriors, mighty archers, trained
In champion bow-craft, such as never flee,
A thousand, shooting arrows round about —
But women! ... well, far more than these may come,
Yet shall they never wreck my peace of mind.
Firmly established in the Norm[9] I stand.
For even in his presence have I heard
The Buddha of the sun's high lineage tell
About the Path that to Nibbāna goes,
And there the love of all my heart is given.[10]
Now that I always in such mood abide,
Dost think, vile one, thou canst draw nigh to me;
Then shall I act in such wise, Death, that thou Wilt ne'er discover which the way I take.[11]

---

[1] On the curious legend concerning his profession and conversion, see Pss. of the Brethren, p. 395 f. B. gives it at the last of these Suttas.

[2] Is frequently mentioned in Pali literature. See JPTS., 1888, p. 11; cf. Dhp. Comy. iii, 170; 261 f.

[3] Or shrine: cetiya. Comy. Probably erected by a pre-Buddhistic cult. See below, X, § 12.

[4] See Pss. of the Brethren, p. 408 f.; Sn. ver. 342 f.

[5] It being his first year and he unskilled in the bowl-and-robe usages, the Theras left him to guard sunshades, sandals, and staves, while they went for alms. Comy.

[6] An-abhirati; 'loyal love' = abhirati, a strong form of rati. Cf. Māra's daughter so-called. IV, 3, § 5: 'Discontent.'

[7] I.e. in the absence of his 'spiritual pastors and masters,' as the Comy. remarks.

[8] I give the rendering (with three alterations) as in the Pss. of the Brethren, 1209-13, and refer the reader to the notes there. B.'s comments agree with those of the Dhammapāla (pointing to (a) a common source of materials, (b) dependence — see § 2, n. 2), and he, too, fails to make clear the syntax of sahassaṇ apalāyinaṇ, unless it be a genitive absolute. 'Thousand,' however, belongs to the bowmen and not to their arrows, and has been corrected accordingly. 'The best archer,' say the Commentators, 'can only shoot one arrow at a time; women by appealing to the senses shoot five any moment!'

[9] Not dhammesu, but dhamme su, or so. B. has Sāsanadhamme, 'rule, or Norm of the Teaching,' or 'Church,' as we should say.

[10] This is the 'loyal' love once more confessed and triumphant. Cf. the rato, abhirato of Pss of the Brethren, ver. 742, and Sisters, vers. 359, 450.

[11] Cf. Māra's baffled ignorance in IV, 3, § 3; cf. also above, IV, 2. § 9.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
8. Vaṇgīsa-Thera-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

8. The Vaṇgisa Suttas

Sutta 2

Arati Suttaṃ

Disaffection

---

[236]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

On another occasion,
when the venerable Vaṇgīsa was staying near Āḷavī,
at the chief temple there,
together with his tutor,
the venerable Nigrodha-Kappa,
the latter would enter his cell
on returning from his alms-round and not leave it again till evening or the next day.[1]

Now on one such occasion
disaffection arose in the venerable Vaṇgīsa,
and lust harassed his heart.

And blaming and composing himself by himself he thought:

"Alas! the loss to me!
Alas! no gain to me!
Alas! how hard for me to gain!
Alas! no easy thing for me to gain!
in whom disaffection has arisen,
and lust harasses the heart.

How were it possible here and now that another should cause me to get rid of this disaffection
and produce loyal love?

What if I were now by myself
to get rid of my disaffection
and cause loyal love to arise?"

And the venerable Vaṇgīsa by himself
got rid of his disaffection
and caused loyal love to arise within him.

In that hour he uttered these verses: —

"I[2] who had given up dislikes and dotings
In all that stirs the lay imagination,
May not make anywhere a haunt for lusting.
He who from jungly vice[3] hath gained the open,
From lusting free,[4] 't is he is truly bhikkhu.
All things material here on earth dwelling,
Or in the upper air that's based on land,
Transient is all and all away is wearing: —
They thus discerning live who understand.[5]
To all that makes for life[6] the folk cleave ever, [237] To things they touch, perceive[7] and see, and hear.
Herein his will suppressing, unaffected,
Adhering nowhere, him the wise call Seer.

Of basis sixty-fold those wrongful notions[8]
Fixed in the nature of the multitude,
A bhikkhu he, who ne'er gives his adhesion
To groups of these[9]; whose speech is never lewd.[10]
Richly endowed, long since of self the master,
Candid yet wise, and free from craving's power,
The seer hath won the state of peace, and therefore[11]
Perfect and cool awaits his final hour."

---

[1] He was vihāra-garuko (attached importance to keeping to the cell). Comy.

[2] See Pss. of the Brethren, 1214-18. The metre in the text

image of metre

has not occurred above, nor can I find a Pali name for it. The readings differ here and there from those in the parallel passage; the discrepancies are indicated below.

[3] See above, VII, 2, § 7. The whole line amplifies the word nibbanatho.

[4] The Comy. reads arato = taṇhā-rahito. The PTS. has a-nato, without inclination (nati), lit., as with us, 'unbent,' a far better reading, and according well with the metaphor used: 'Unbending walks, 't is he ...'

[5] Muttatā; Theragāthā mut[t]antā; explained as 'having understood.'

[6] 'The devices of the khandhas and kilesas.' Comy.

[7] See Pss. of the Brethren, 398, n. 9. Here Dhammapāla quotes our Comy. by name, as taking pāṭighe to mean 'smelt and tasted,' and mute to mean 'touched' — a forcing the words to give the regulation list of the 5 senses. I have followed the more usual rendering, with Dhammapāla (altering the order for rhyme).

[8] Another discrepancy. The PTS. ed. gives a line that does not scan, albeit tasita (trṣita) is good, if rare and (?) late Pali (Dāṭhavaṇsa, III, 44). The Comy. reads atha saṭṭhi-nissitā sa-vitakkā, the sa- being merely met caus, and refers to six, not sixty, objects of sense.

[9] Kilesa-vaggato. Comy.

[10] See Pss. 398, n. 3. [Ed.: ?]

[11] The curiously inserted paṭicca is referred by B. to the 'state of peace': nibbānaṃ paṭicca.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
8. Vaṇgīsa-Thera-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

8. The Vaṇgisa Suttas

Sutta 3

Pesalā-Atimaññanā Suttaṃ

Disdaining the Kindly

---

[237]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

The venerable Vaṇgīsa was once staying near Ālāvi
at the chief temple of that place,
together with his tutor,
the venerable Nigrodha-kappa.

On this occasion the venerable Vaṇgīsa[ed1] was despising amiable brethren because of his skill in improvisation.[1]

And he thought:

"Alas! the loss to me!

Alas! no gain to me!

Alas! how hard for me to gain!

In that I have been despising amiable brethren
because of my skill in improvisation."

Then blaming himself for such conduct,
he of himself repented
and in that hour uttered the verses[2]: —

[238] "Renounce conceit, thou Gotama's disciple![3]
Wholly[4] from path of pride remove thy foot,
Since with that path some time infatuated
Long ere to-day thou truly didst repent.[5]
By self-deceit deceived this generation.
Destroyed by vanity, is doomed to woe.
For many an age in purgatory
Will folk eaten by pride lament their doom.

He weepeth not at any time, that brother,
Path-victor, who the highest hath achieved.
Both fame and happy conscience he enjoyeth.
With truth they call him Seer of the Norm.[6]
Hence in this life, strenuous, unimpeded,
Dispelled all hindrances, and purified,
Renouncing pride and vanity entirely,
Calm and with knowledge, doth he make an end."

[ed1] Mrs. Rhys Davids has: "On another occasion, at the same place, the venerable ..." See: SN 1 8 1.

[1] Paṭibhāna. In popular usage, as here, that swift facility in adapting knowledge and expressing it, which is so marked by Vaṇgisa's chief talent, and for which he stood foremost (A. i, 24). Cf. this usage in the laymen's remarks: Dialogues, ii, 370; M. i, 378. Paṭbhāna is a department in the philosophy of paṭisambhidā (cf. Points of Controversy, pp. 377 f.), and the Commentators as schoolmen naturally refer to it explicitly, or by exegesis. But they are here unnecessarily academic. B. pictures him scorning 'these old fellows" want of skill in text, commentary, or methods of 'exposition.'

[2] Pss. of the Brethren, vers. 1219-22, and notes. The metre differs from that of § 2 only in 2st and 3rd padas.

[3] B. and Dh. agree.

[4] Asesaṇ (sabbaṇ) belongs to the preceeding pada. See Theragāthā

[5] Therag.: Oldenberg selects dhamma-daso: Norm-seer, as the Singhalese MSS. read. Rato is well in keeping with the foregoing Suttas. On tathattaṇ (an adverbial accusative?) cf. Sn. ver. 520; pavuccate tathatā.

[6] Dh. paraphrases vijjāy' by viddhāya: of pride end-maker. B. has only vijjāya: by knowledge.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
8. Vaṇgīsa-Thera-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

8. The Vaṇgisa Suttas

Sutta 4

Ānanda Suttaṃ

Ānanda

---

[238]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

The venerable Ānanda was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at the Jeta Vana,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And [one day], rising early,
he took bowl and robe
and went into Sāvatthī for alms,
with the venerable Vaṇgīsa
as his attendant recluse.

Now on that occasion
disaffection arose in the latter,
and lust harassed his heart.

Then to Ānanda he addressed the verse[1]: —

[239] My sense with passion burns, my heart's aflame.
Thou of the Gotamas,[2] compassion take!
'T were well to tell how I may quench[3] [the fire].

[Ānanda —]

Because perception is upset, perverse,
Therefore they heart's a-flame. Thou shouldst avoid [Looking at] lovely objects passion-linked.
Look at thine acts as other than thyself,[4]
Tending to ill, and as devoid of soul;
Extinguish this strong lust in fear lest thou
Burn in the time to come again, again.
And train thy mind, intent and well composed,
To contemplate what is not fair to view.
Let there be heedfulness concerning sense,
And be thou filled with a sane distaste.
Study the absence of the Threefold Sign;[5]
Cast out the baneful bias of conceit,
Hath the mind mastered vain imaginings,
Then mayst thou go thy ways calm and serene.[6]

---

[1] Pss. of the Brethren, vers. 1223-26. The incident may have taken place before Ānanda became attached to the post he held so long.

[2] Ānanda was a Gotama, first cousin to the Buddha.

[3] Nibbāpanaṃ: 'a putting out'; so below (extinguish).

[4] Parato. Cf. Pss. of the Brethren, p. 383, n. 3. B.'s exegesis says: aniccato, 'as transient'; in his usual thirst for reference to categories. This pair of lines and the next pair are not in Theragāthā. The first occurs in A. ii, 18, with ñatvā for passa.

[5] Lit. study (or develop) the sign-less — a technical phrase of doctrine. B.: 'develop that insight due to the destruction of the signs or appearsnces [of all things] suggesting permanence, happiness, and soul, which is called "the sign-less."'

[6] These eight lines occur in Pss. of the Sisters, 19, 20.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
8. Vaṇgīsa-Thera-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

8. The Vaṇgisa Suttas

Sutta 5

Subhāsitā Suttam

Well Spoken

---

[239]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

On one occasion, when he was staying near Sāvatthī,
at the Jeta Vana,
the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Bhikkhus!"

"Yea, lord," they said responsive.

And he spake:

"Possessed of four qualities, Bhikkhus,
is the speech that is well
and not ill spoken,

faultless
and not blamable by the wise.

[240] Of what four qualities?

Here, Bhikkhus, if a brother speak well
and not badly,
speak righteously
and not unrighteously,
speak affectionately
and not unkindly,
speak truth
and not falsehood,
his speech having these four qualities,
is well spoken,
faultless,
and not blamable by the wise."

Thus spake the Exalted One,
and the Blessed One saying this,
the Master spake thus further: —

"The good say: first let speech be nicely said,
And second, speak by good norm, not by bad,
Next, ye should kindly, not unkindly speak,
And fourthly, say ye what is true, not false."

Then the venerable Vaṇgīsa,
rising from his seat,
and draping his outer robe over one shoulder,
stretched forth his hands
saluting, to the Exalted One, and said:

"It is revealed to me, Exalted One,
it is revealed to me, Blessed One!"

The Exalted One said:

"Be it revealed to thee, Vaṇgīsa!"

Then the venerable Vaṇgīsa extolled the Exalted One in his presence in suitable verses: —

"Whoso can speak a word whereby he works
No torment to himself, nor causeth harm
To fellow-men, that word is spoken well.
Whoso can speak a kindly word, a word
That's grateful to the ear, and lays not hold
Of other's faults, that word is kindly spoke.
Truth is ambrosial speech[1]; of saints of old
This was the ancient Norm[2]; on Truth and good
And Norm, 't is said, the saints do firmly stand.

The Word which the Awakened speaketh, sure Safe guide to make Nibbāna ours, to put An end to Ill: — that is the Word Supreme."

---

[1] 'Resembling ambrosia by its sweetness.' Comy. The word is here used inits more primitive mythical meaning.

[2] See above, I, 4, § 2; 8, § 3.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
8. Vaṇgīsa-Thera-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

8. The Vaṇgisa Suttas

Sutta 6

Sāriputta Suttam

Sāriputta

---

[241]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

The venerable Sāriputta was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at the Jeta Vana,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now at that time the venerable Sāriputta was instructing, enlightening,
inciting,
and inspiring the brethren by a sermon,
delivered in courteous speech,
without impediment,
clearly enunciated,
communicating the matter in hand.

And those brethren with their whole mind applied,
attentive and intent,
listened with rapt hearing to the Norm.

Then the venerable Vaṇgīsa thought:

"The venerable Sāriputta and the brethren are thus engaged.

What if I were to extol the venerable Sāriputta in his presence with suitable verses?"

So he rose from his seat,
and draping his outer robe over one shoulder,
he bent his clasped hands saluting toward the venerable Sāriputta, and said:

"It is revealed to me, brother Sāriputta!
it is revealed to me!"

"Be it revealed to thee, brother Vanglsa."

Then the venerable Vanglsa extolled him to his face
in suitable verses: —

"With insight [into mysteries] deep,
And richly dowered with learned lore,
Expert in methods true and false,
The son of Sari,[1] greatly wise,
Teacheth the brethren in the Norm.
He teacheth both in brief outline,
And eke expounds in full detail.
And like the myna-bird's[2] sweet song
His exposition poureth forth.
And while he teaches, they who hear
His honeyed speech in tones they love
Of voice enchanting, musical,
With ravished ears, transported hearts Delighted, list his every word."

---

[1] His mother was Rupasari, his family name, Upatissa.

[2] Sālikā, or rice-bird. Clough's Sinhalese Dictionary calls it a thrush: tardus salicus.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
8. Vaṇgīsa-Thera-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

8. The Vaṇgisa Suttas

Sutta 7

Pavāraṇā Suttam

Invitation

---

[242]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
in the East Park,
at the Terraced House of Migāra's Mother.[1]

And with him was a great company of bhikkhus,
even five hundred,
all of them Arahants.

Now on that occasion the Exalted One,
[presiding] on the fortnightly festival day at the Pavāraṇā ceremony,[2]
was seated in the open.

And surveying the silent company of brethren,
he addressed them:

"Well then, bhikkhus, I invite you:
have ye not aught wherein you blame me,
in deed or word?"

When he had thus said, the venerable Sāriputta,
rising from his seat,
and draping his outer robe over one shoulder,
bent his clasped hands saluting toward the Exalted One
and said:

"Nay, lord, we blame the Exalted One in naught
either in deed or in word.

For the Exalted One doth cause a Way to arise
where none had arisen,
doth produce a Way
that had not been brought about,
doth declare a Way
that had not been declared;
he knoweth a Way,
understandeth a Way,
is expert in a Way,
and now, lord,
thy disciples following after thee,
have made that Way their own.[3]

I too, lord, invite the Exalted One:
is there not aught wherefore he blames me,
in deed or in word?"

"Nay, Sāriputta,
naught is there for which I blame thee,

in deed or in word.

Wise art thou, Sāriputta,
comprehensive and manifold is thy wisdom,
joyous and swift is thy wisdom,
sharp and fastidious is thy wisdom.

Even as the eldest son of a king whose is the Wheel of Conquest rightly turns the Wheel
as his father hath turned it,
so, Sāriputta,
dost thou rightly turn the Wheel Supreme of the Norm,
even as I have turned it."[4]

[243] "If indeed, lord, the Exalted One have naught wherefore he blameth me,
in deed or word,
is there naught in these five hundred brethren wherefore the Exalted One blames them,
in deed or word?"[5]

"There is naught, Sāriputta,
for which I blame these five hundred, brethren,
in deed or word.

Of these brethren,
sixty have threefold lore,[6]
sixty have sixfold supernormal knowledge,[7]
sixty are emancipated in both ways,
and the others are emancipated by insight [alone]."[8]

Then the venerable Vaṇgīsa,
arising from his seat,
and draping his outer robe over one shoulder,
bent his clasped hands saluting toward the Exalted One, and said:

"It is revealed to me, Exalted One!
it is revealed to me, Blessed One!"

And the Exalted One said:

"Be it revealed to thee, Vaṇgīsa."

Then the venerable Vaṇgīsa extolled the Exalted One in his presence with suitable verses: —

"To-day on feast-day, for full purity,
Five hundied brethren are together come.
Such as have cut their fetters, cut their bondsr
Seers who are free from rebirth and from ill.
And as a king who ruleth all the world,
Surrounded by his councillors of state,
Toureth around his empire everywhere,
Driving throughout this earth that ends in sea,
So him, who is our victor in the war,[9]
The peerless Master of our caravan,[10]
We followers attend and wait upon,
[244] Who hold the triple lore, slayers of death.
All we are sons of the Exalted One;
No sterile chaff[11] may amongst us be found.
I worship him who strikes down craving's dart.
I greet the offspring of the sun's great line."

---

[1] See III, 2, § 1.

[2] Cf Vin. Texts, i, 325 ff. A meeting held at the end of the rainy season, during which, members having dwelt cheek by jowl for three months, grievances might have made themselves felt. Mutual confession was invited (pavāreti) on this valedictory occasion.

[3] This is a formula of the Canon. Cf. S. iii, 66; M. iii, 8.

[4] Cf Pss. of the Brethren, vers. 826, 827; = Sn. vers. 556, 557.

[5] 'But not in thought' (mano), remarks B., 'the faults of mind are not apparent as are those of word and deed' (or rather, are only apparent as words or acts).

[6] See above, p, 184.

[7] See above, VII, 1, § 8, and VI, 1, § 5, n. 4.

[8] Cf. Dialogues, ii, 68, 70; Puggala-Paññatti, p. 14; JPTS, 1913-14. 190.

[9] Against lust, hate, and ignorance. Comy.

[10] 'Borne is he in the chariot of the Eightfold Path.' Comy.

[11] See Pss. of the Brethren, p. 403, n. 1. Palāpo is, according to B., within empty and vicious. It also means prattle, chatter, but cannot well mean both, so I have withdrawn the double rendering.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
8. Vaṇgīsa-Thera-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

8. The Vaṇgisa Suttas

Sutta 8

Parosahassa Suttam

A Thousand and More

---

[244]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at the Jeta Vana,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park,
with a great company of twelve hundred and fifty brethren.[1]

Now on that occasion the Exalted One was instructing,
enlightening,
inciting,
and inspiring the brethren by a sermon bearing on Nibbāna.

And those brethren, with their whole mind applied,
attentive and intent,
listened with rapt hearing to the Norm.

Then the venerable Vaṇgīsa,
arising from his seat,
and draping his outer robe over one shoulder,
bent his clasped hands saluting toward the Exalted One, and said:

"It is revealed to me, Exalted One!
it is revealed to me, Blessed One!"

And the Exalted One said:

"Be it revealed to thee, Vaṇgīsa." Then the venerable Vaṇgīsa extolled the Exalted One in his presence with suitable verses: —

"A thousand brethren, yea, and more than these Attend around the Blessed One who here
Doth teach the Norm, the passionless, the pure,
Even Nibbāna, where can come no fear.[2]
They hearken to the Norm immaculate, Taught by the Enlightened One Supreme.
0 wondrous fair the All-enlightened shines
'Mid all the Band of brethren as their chief.
Mysterious spirit[3] thou, Exalted One,
The seventh in the lineage of the Seers,
Like a great storm-cloud [in the summer sky]
On thy disciples pouring plenteous rain.
[245] And one of these from siesta-musing come,
Full fain his [gracious] Master to behold,
Thy true disciple, mighty Hero [see!],
Low at thy feet Vaṇgīsa worships thee."

"Say now, Vaṇgīsa,[4]
were these verses thought out by thee beforehand,
or have they been revealed to thee just on the spot."

"Nay, lord, these verses were not thought out by me beforehand;
they were revealed to me just on the spot."

"Wherefore, Vaṇgīsa,
let yet more verses,
not thought out beforehand,
be revealed to thee just on the spot."

"So be it, lord," replied Vaṇgīsa,
and in additional verses
not thought out beforehand
he extolled the Exalted One: —

"O'er Māra's devious ways faring triumphant.
Thou breakest up the fallows of our hearts.
Behold him from all bondage our deliverer,
Himself full fraught[5] the harvest he imparts.
Yea, thou hast shown a Way by many methods
For crossing o'er the torrent safe to land;
And that Ambrosial thus manifested,
Norm-seers[6] inexpugnable we stand.
Light-bringer, he hath pierced beyond, beholding
Past all those stations [where we end our flight],[7]
The topmost height knowing and realizing,
He showeth us that vantage-point of sight.
[246] Lo! now in truth so well revealed, for trifling
What place is there for those who learn his Lore?
Hence zealously within that Master's system
Train ye alway, and while ye train, adore."

---

[1] The legendary number of the seventh Buddha's (Gotama's) Arahants. See Dialogues, ii, 7.

[2] This striking compound a-kuto-bhayaṃ, 'the [having] no-whence-fear,' is applied either to Nibbāna, as here, cf. Pss. of the Sisters, vers. 135, 333, or to the Buddha, v. 512; Brethren, vers. 289, 510, 831, 912. Cf. above, I, 5, § 6.

[3] Nāga. Cf. above, 38, n. 4.

[4] Vaṇgīsa, thought the Master, does his work without hesitating, neither by developing a given statement, nor in reply to questioning, nor by pondering over it. He goes about tying gāthās together and making padas of aromatic powder. I must show the others how well he does it.' Comy. Vaṇgīsa, quickened in afflatus by the 'encore,' surpasses himself.

[5] See Pss. of the Brethren, p. 404, n. 2. 'Full fraught' (asitaṃ) fits better, I still think, than a-sitaṃ (for a-nissitaṃ); see Jātaka ii, p. 247 (Comy.).

[6] See above, 238, n. 4.

[7] Viññāṇa, or diṭṭhi. Comy. Cf. Dialogues, ii, 66 f.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
8. Vaṇgīsa-Thera-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

8. The Vaṇgisa Suttas

Sutta 9

Koṇḍañña Suttam

Koṇḍañña

---

[246]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

The Exalted One was once staying near Rājagaha,
in the Bamboo Grove,
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

And the venerable Aññāsi-Koṇḍañña,[1]
after a very long interval,
came to see the Exalted One,
and coming,
fell with face to earth
at the feet of the Exalted One,
and kissed and stroked them with his hands,
uttering his name:

"I am Koṇḍañña, Exalted One!
I am Koṇḍañña, Blessed One!"

Then the venerable Vaṇgīsa,
arising from his seat,
and draping his outer robe over one shoulder,
bent his clasped hands saluting toward the Exalted One, and said:

"It is revealed to me, Exalted One!
it is revealed to me, Blessed One!"

And the Exalted One said:

"Be it revealed to thee, Vaṇgīsa."

Then the venerable Vaṇgīsa extolled the Aññāsi-Koṇḍañña, before the Exalted One in appropriate verses: —

"Who next to our great Waked One was awoke,[2]
Brother Koṇḍañña, strong in energy,
The winner of a life of blissful ease,
Ever detached from every worldly tie.
All that the Master's follower can win,
If he the training in the Rule fulfil,
All this Koṇḍañña, step by step hath won.
By study strenuous [of mind and will].
Sublime in power and versed in triple lore,
Expert the thoughts of others to descry,
Koṇḍañña, of the Buddha rightful heir,
Low at the Master's feet behold him lie."

---

[1] On his legend see Pss. of the Brethren, p. 284; Vin. Texts, i, 98. Further, B. tells us, he had dwelt for 12 years in the Six-Tusker Wood by the Mandākinī lotus-pool a haunt of Paccheka-Buddhas, he being much disinclined for touring about.

[2] So the Comy.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
8. Vaṇgīsa-Thera-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

8. The Vaṇgisa Suttas

Sutta 10

Moggallāna Suttam

Moggallāna

---

[246]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

The Exalted One was once staying near Rājagaha,
on the slopes of Seer's Hill
at the Black Rock.[1]

And with him was a large company of brethren,
even 500,
all of them Arahants.

[247] Now the venerable Moggallāna the Great[2] intuitively discerned the mind of these
as being emancipated,
void of the conditions of rebirth.

Then the venerable Vaṇgīsa,
arising from his seat,
and draping his outer robe over one shoulder,
bent his clasped hands saluting toward the Exalted One, and said:

"It is revealed to me, Exalted One!
it is revealed to me, Blessed One!"

And the Exalted One said:

"Be it revealed to thee, Vaṇgīsa."

Then the venerable Vaṇgīsa extolled the venerable Moggallāna the Great before the Exalted One in appropriate verses: —

"High on the hilly slopes disciples wait,
Holders of triple lore, slayers of death,
Upon the presence of the seated Saint,
Who hath transcended all the power of ill.
And Moggallāna, great in mystic power,
Doth scrutinize in thought the hearts of all,
And thus examining he finds them freed,
And having naught wherefrom to be reborn.[3]
So do they wait upon that Holy One —
Who hath transcended all the power of ill,
And perfected on every hand his work,
Himself with every virtue crownèd — GOTAMA."

---

[1] See above, IV, 3, § 3.

[2] On Moggallāna's powers see VI, 1, §§ 5, 9, 10.

[3] Expansion of nirupadhiṃ.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
8. Vaṇgīsa-Thera-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

8. The Vaṇgisa Suttas

Sutta 11

Gaggarā Suttam

At Gaggarā

---

[247]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

The Exalted One was once staying at Champā,
on the shore of the Lotus-pool,
at Gaggarâ.[1]

And with him was a great company of brethren,
even five hundred,
and seven hundred lay-adherents,
and seven hundred lay women adherents,
and some thousands of devas.

Among them all of a truth

the Exalted One shone exceedingly
in beauty and in glory.

Then the venerable Vaṇgīsa,
arising from his seat,
and draping his outer robe over one shoulder,
bent his clasped hands saluting toward the Exalted One, and said:

"It is revealed to me, Exalted One!
it is revealed to me, Blessed One!"

And the Exalted One said:

"Be it revealed to thee, Vaṇgīsa."

Then the venerable Vaṇgīsa extolled the Exalted One in his presence with appropriate verses: —

"As when the clouds have drifted from the sky,
The moon shines as a sun immaculate,
So thou, Angirasa,[2] great seer, yet more Dost gloriously the world illuminate."

---

[1] See Dialogues, i, 144; Pss. of the Brethren, p. 32, n. 2. Champā was the capital of the Angas, now Bagalpur.

[2] See Pss. of the Brethren, p. 251, n. 1. [Ed.: n.6]

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
8. Vaṇgīsa-Thera-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

8. The Vaṇgisa Suttas

Sutta 12

Vaṇgīsa Suttam

Vaṇgīsa

---

[248]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at the Jeta Vana, Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now on that occasion the venerable Vaṇgīsa had but a little while ago won Arahantship,[1]
and experiencing the bliss of emancipation,
in that hour he spake these verses: —

"Drunk[2] with divining art,[3] of old we roamed
From town and village on to town again.
Then we beheld the All-Enlightened *[him
Who hath transcended all that we can know]*.

He in the Norm instructed me [the Seer
Who hath transcended all the power of ill.
And when we heard that Norm our heart was glad],
And faith and trust therein rose up in us.
Hearing that Norm concerning body, mind,
Sensations, objects of the same, and all
The data of our knowledge — learning these
I left the world to lead the homeless life.

0 surely for the weal of many folk ...
The Brethren and the Sisters, who have found
And seen salvation's system and its way,[4]
The holy seer did win enlightenment ...
0 welcome wast thou then to me who now,
Have lived and studied at my Buddha's feet! ...
[249] The greater Triple Veda have I won,
The training in the Buddha's Rule is done.
I know as what I lived in times gone by,
Clear is the vision of the heavenly eye;
And magic power, the threefold lore is mine,
And thoughts of others can my thought divine."

---

[1] B. here gives his legend, agreeing with that given by Dhammapāla, though not told in quite identical words.

[2] = Theragāthā (Pss. of the Brethren), vers. 1253-62, but omitting several padas and even whole lines. The portions omitted in the S. are in italics, and below are indicated by ...

[3] On kaveyya matto see above, IV, 2, § 3, and note in op. and loc. cit. just above.

[4] Niyāmagataddasā, explained as having got to, and seeing the Niyāma — the 'way,' that is, of salvation, or 'assurance' concerning it. See Points of Controversy, p. 177, n. 1.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
9. Vana-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

9. The Forest Suttas

Sutta 1

Viveka Suttaṃ

Detachment[1]

---

[250]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

A certain brother was once staying among the Kosalese,
in a certain forest tract.

Now on that occasion,
while taking siesta,
he indulged in wrong and evil thoughts
connected with worldly matters.[2]

Then a deva who haunted that forest,
moved with compassion for that brother,
desiring his welfare,
and wishing to agitate him,
drew nigh to him and addressed him in the verses: —

"Into the wood fain for detachment come,
Lo! how thy vagrant mind wanders without.
As man for men, suppress all purposes[3];
Thereby shalt thou be happy, rid of lusts.
Thrust out[4] thy disaffection! heedful thou!
Become[5] one of the good! that we approve.[6]
For hard is it to outstrip the reek of hell.[7] [251] Be not swept down with reek of sense-desires.
Just as a bird sand-flecked, shaking itself
Throws off the dust adhering [to its plumes],
So the good brother, heedful, strenuous,
Shaking himself, throws off the adhering dust."

Then that brother agitated by the deva, was greatly moved.

---

[1] The schoolmen distinguish three forms of viveka: (1) of the body, or physical solitude, (2) of the mind, (3) of Nibbāna, or severance from all aims connected with worldly, or any other form of life.

[2] Geha-: lit. domestic life, and life in the world generally (geha = house).

[3] Chanda, desire-to-do. Unparticularized, the term often implies irreligious, worldly desire or intention, and dhamma- is sometimes prefixed in the opposite connection.

[4] Pajahāsi.

[5] Bhavāsi.

[6] A very obscure line. The Comy. reads saddāyamāmase, and has: 'him who is mindful, wise, we too are pleased. Or the meaning is "the norm of the good, that we approve."' The text has sarāyamdmase — 'we bear in mind.'

[7] On pāṭāla see I, 5, § 4; IV, 3, § 5. 'Reek' and 'dust' are in the Pali rajo, on which see p. 5, n. 2. I have not anywhere else met either the compound pāṭāla-rajo, or dur-uttamaṃ, here rendered 'hard to outstrip'.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
9. Vana-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

9. The Forest Suttas

Sutta 2

Upaṭṭhāna Suttaṃ

Ministry[1]

---

[251]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

A certain brother was once staying among the Kosalese
in a certain forest tract.

And during that time,
while he took siesta,
he would fall asleep.

Then a deva who haunted that forest tract,
moved with compassion for that brother,
desiring his welfare,
and wishing to agitate him,
drew near and addressed him in the verses: —

"Arise, good almsman, wherefore seek repose?
What benefit dost thou in slumber find?
Good for the sick is sleep, and for one pierced
With wounds, for one that suffereth from shock.[2]
The faith and trust that made thee leave the world
And give up home to live the homeless life —
That faith shouldst thou develop and expand.
But come not thou under the sway of sleep."

[The Brother: —][3]

"Transient and fleeting are desires of sense
For which slow wits infatuated long.
[252] Whoso is freed and leaneth not on bonds,
The world well lost[4] — why should you plague the man?

Whose insight is well cleansed and purified
By the suppression of desire and lust,
By the transcending of all ignorance,
The world well lost — why should you plague the man?

Where saving lore hath broken nescience,
And poisons of the mind are wholly purged,
A man who knows not sorrow or despair,
The world well lost — why should you plague the man?

He that hath summoned effort, put forth strength,
And ever maketh vigorous advance,[5]
Aspiring to Nibbāna's [blessed peace],
The world well lost — why should you plague the man?"

---

[1] Upaṭṭhānaṃ. The usual reference to the title does not occur in the Sutta. 'Ministry' probably refers to the fairy's well-meaning officiousness. The legend is that the bhikkhu who slept was an arahant, but that he had very far to go to procure himself any food and returned tired out.

[2] Ruppato. On this term cf. B.'s analysis given in my Buddhist Psychology, 1914, p. 43: 'disturbed, struck, hurt, broken,' namely by physical causes.

[3] B. confesses himself uncertain as to whether these lines belong to the brother, or the deva. 'It is not apparent in the commentary' (ayan pan'ettha anuttāna-pādavaṇṇanā). But if to the deva, the refrain implies 'why should he not plague himself, for he will [have to] do so?' namely, if he yield to somnolent habits.

[4] Free rendering of pabbajita — the religieux, recluse, who has 'gone forth' from 'the world.'

[5] See above, VII, 1, § 7.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
9. Vana-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

9. The Forest Suttas

Sutta 3

Kassapa-Gotta (or Cheta) Suttaṃ

Kassapa of the Kassapas (or The Trapper)

---

[252]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

The venerable Kassapa of the Kassapas[1]
was once staying among the Kosalese
in a certain forest tract.

Now at that time,
while taking siesta,
the venerable Kassapa admonished a certain trapper.[2]

Then a deva who haunted that forest tract,
moved with compassion for the Brother,
desiring his welfare
and wishing to agitate him,

drew near and addressed the venerable Kassapa of the Kassapas in the verses: —

"Come stalking in the fastness of the hills,
A silly trapper dull of intellect: —
[253] 'T is loss of time to admonish him. Methinks
A brother doing so is slow of wit.
He hears but does not understand; he looks
But seeth not. Thou mayst recite the Norm,
Yet will the fool not waken to his good.
Nay, if thou wert to bring of torches ten,[31]
0 Kassapa, yet would he never see
The things he should; 't is eyesight he doth lack."

Then the venerable Kassapa of the Kassapas, disturbed by that deva,
was greatly moved.

---

[1] Kassapa-gotta: possibly not the bhikkhu so named who lived at Vāsabhagāma, in Kasi: Vin. Texts, ii, 256; A. i, 236.

[2] Cheto. The trapper was pursuing a 'red deer,' when Kassapa intervened, protesting against earning a living by such cruel means. So B., describing in detail the very natural preoccupation of the hunter with his quarry and the domestic larder. Cf. Aṇguttara, iii, 182. § 7.

[3] The legend runs that to test his attention the bhikkhu held up a luminous finger (cf. Dabba of the Mallas: Vin. Texts, iii, 4-18: Pss. of the Brethren, 10), hence the context.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
9. Vana-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

9. The Forest Suttas

Sutta 4

Sambahulā (or Cārika) Suttaṃ

Many of Them
or
On Tour

---

[253]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

Many brethren were once staying among the Kosalese
in a certain forest-tract.

And at the close of the rains,
when the three months [of Lent] were over,
those brethren set out on tour.

Then the deva,
indigenous to that forest,
missed them,

and lamenting,
uttered in that hour the verse: —

"I see these many solitary seats,
By learned men of varied discourse used.[1]
To-day regret and discontent are mine —
Where are those Gotama-disciples gone?"

When this had been said,
a certain deva addressed this verse to him: —

"They've gone to Magadha, to Kosala,
And some into the Vajjian land have gone.
As deer that roam untrapped at liberty,
Owning no home the almsmen pass their time."[2]

---

[1] These were not solitary students, but a school collectively and systematically engaged, according to B., in teaching and learning by heart the doctrines, and asking and answering questions, marking the hours by a bell (gaṇḍi).

[2] The verses occur in Mahāvastu, 3, 420, 18, which reads magakā for magā. Magā occurs above, II, 2, § 1; cf. M. i, 173 f.; 306.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
9. Vana-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

9. The Forest Suttas

Sutta 5

Ānanda Suttaṃ

Ānanda

---

[254]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

The venerable Ānanda was once staying among the Kosalese
in a certain forest tract.

Now at that time the venerable Ānanda was excessively busy imparting matters to the laity.[1]

And a deva,
indigenous to that forest,
moved with compassion,
desiring his welfare,
and wishing to agitate him,
drew near and addressed him in the verse:

"Thou who hast plunged in leafy lair of trees,
Suffering Nibbāna in thy heart to sink,
Study, thou Gotamid, and dally not!
What will this babble-babble do for thee?"[2]

Then the venerable Ānanda, agaitated by that deva,
was greatly moved.

---

[1] According to the legend, this was just after the Master's parinibāna, shortly before Ānanda became Arahant. People knowing of his close attendance on his Master were ever asking him for details about the 'Great Decease,' mourning, and being admonished by him. He took the Buddha's bowl and robe about with him. Rebuke in the same verse is ascribed also to a Vajjian thera, Vajjiputta: Pss. of the Brethren, cxix.

[2] B. makes biḷibiḷikā refer directly to the 'talkee-talkee' noise of the laymen's conversation. Cf. Dhammapāla's explanation op. cit. loc. cit.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
9. Vana-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

9. The Forest Suttas

Sutta 6

Anuruddha Suttaṃ

Anuruddha

---

[254]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

The venerable Anuruddha was once staying among the Kosalese
in a certain forest-tract.

And a certain goddess of the heaven of the Thirty-and-three, named Jālinī,[1]
consort in a former birth to Anuruddha,
came to visit him,
and addressed him in the verses: -

"There set thy heart's desire where erst for thee
Was life, with the celestial Thirty-three,
Whose is the attainment of all sense-desires,
Where thou wast beauteous with thy retinue
Of heavenly maids surrounding thee their lord?"

[255] [Anuruddha: —][2]

"Ill-fated are such maids celestial,
In their own sphere of life established.[3]
Ill-plighted, too, the beings are whose lot Brings them possession of these heavenly maids."

[Jālinī[4]: —]

"They know no bliss who see not Nandana, Abode of men and gods, renowned Thrice-Ten!"

[Anuruddha: —]

"Dost thou not know, 0 fool, how saints have said:
'Impermanent are all conditioned things.
Their nature 't is to rise and pass away;
When they have risen, then again they cease;
Happy the mastery of them and the peace/
Now is there no new dwelling-place for me
In realms celestial, 0 Jālinī
The endless line of birth is snapt in twain.
Now can I never more become again."

---

[1] Cf Pss. of the Brethren, 329. She is, in our Comy., said to have been his 'chief consort.' Anuruddha was first cousin to the Buddha.

[2] The sense seems to require this distribution, but the Comy. is not explicit, and there is no iti to the preceding lines. However this is twice omitted in this Chapter (§§ 12, 14).

[3] Sakkāyasmiṃ patiṭṭhitā. Kāya (body) may be used for nikāya, group, society. One gathers that these celestial nymphs were destined to be reborn in the infernal regions. So B. both here and in I,5, § 6. They were 'fixed' herein for eight moral defects of character, he writes.

[4] She now gives the verse occurring in I, 2, § 1, Anuruddha responding with the corresponding retort, and adding the last four lines, which are given in his Gāthā, Pss. of the Brethren, ver. 908. I give a rendering different only in form.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
9. Vana-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

9. The Forest Suttas

Sutta 7

Nāgadatta Suttaṃ

Nāgadatta

---

[255]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

The venerable Nāgadatta[1] was once staying among the Kosalese
in a certain forest-tract.

Now at that time the venerable Nāgadatta
went too early to the village and returned in the afternoon.

Then a deva who haunted [256] that forest,
moved by compassion,
desiring his welfare,
and wishing to agitate him,
drew near and addressed him in the verses: —

"[Into the town] betimes, 0 Nāgadatta,
Thou hiest thee, erst after noon[2] returning,
Too long a time with laymen thou consortest,
[Spending thyself] in pleasure and in sorrow.[3]
And much I fear lest this same Nāgadatta,
So reckless, in society entangled,
May fall into the clutches of the Death-king,
The Ender [of so many hopes and chances]."

Then the venerable Nāgadatta, agitated by that deva, was greatly moved.

---

[1] We have not met with him elsewhere.

[2] Divā. Comy.; majjhantike.

[3] B. gives no comment on this unfamiliar compound, samānasu-khadukkho.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
9. Vana-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

9. The Forest Suttas

Sutta 8

Kulagharaṇī (or Ogāḷha) Suttaṃ

The Housewife, or Engrossed

---

[256]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

A certain brother was once staying among the Kosalese
in a certain forest-tract.

Now at that time
this brother was living exceedingly taken up[1]
by a certain family.

And a deva who haunted that forest,
moved by compassion,
desiring his welfare,
and wishing to agitate him,
assumed the shape of the housewife[2] of that family,

and went to the brother,
addressing him in the verse: —

"Along the rivers, resting by the gates,[3]
In mote-halls and along the chariot-roads
The folk foregather and discussions rise: —
Of me it is, and thee — now why is this?"[4]

[257] [The Brother:—]

"Ay, there is busy to-and-fro of words,[5]
And a recluse must bear it patiently.
Not thereby should he feel annoyed, for not Thereby can come defilement or disgrace.[6]
Whoso at sounds is flustered and dismayed,
Like any antelope within the woods,
Men call him giddy-pated, feather-brained.[7]
The practice he may plan he'll ne'er complete."

---

[1] Adhi(ajjh)-ogālhapatto. B. does not paraphrase, but narrates in detail how the family, charmed by the brother, devoted themselves to him and made him their pensioner.

[2] Kula-gharaṇī. B. does not comment on this uncommon term.

[3] Saṇṭhāne, described as 'a resting-place (vissamānaṭṭhane) near the city-gate, when market-wares had been brought down.'

[4] Kim antaran ti: 'what's inside?' See Childers, who would have found B.'s comment: Kiṃ kāraṇā? confirm the definition (= hetu) of the Abhidhānappadīpikasūcī.

[5] Paccūhā.

[6] 'That arises only through evil deeds done by himself.' Comy

[7] Two renderings for lahu-citto.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
9. Vana-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

9. The Forest Suttas

Sutta 9

Vajjiputta or Vesāli Suttaṃ

The Vajjian (or Vesāliyan)

---

[257]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

A certain brother of the Vajjian clan[1] was once staying near Vesālī,
in a certain forest-tract.

Now an all-night festival
took place at Vesali,
and the brother,
hearing the throb and thrum of the music[2]
and the noise of voices,
lamented,
uttering in that hour the verse: —

"Each by himself we in the forest dwell,
Like a stripped log left lying[3] in the woods.

On such a night as this [of revelry]
Who more ill-plighted in their lot than we?"

Then the deva who haunted that forest,
moved with compassion for that brother,
desiring his welfare,
and wishing to agitate him,
drew near and addressed him in the verse: —

[258] "Thou by thyself dost in the forest dwell,
Like a stripped log left lying in the woods.
And many a one may envy thee thy lot,
E'en as the hell-bound them that go to heaven."

Then that brother, disturbed in mind by the deva, was greatly moved.

---

[1] By birth a raja (or oligarch of the Vajjian republic), who 'had resigned the umbrella' (noble rank). Comy. The story not quite verbatim is given in Theragāthā Comy. The Therag. verse is slightly different (see Pss. of the Brethren, LXII), the deva there repeating the 'we' of the first line, and using 'me' for 'thee' below.

[2] 'The thrumming of musical instruments such as tom-toms, etc., and the noise of lutes, etc., and talking.' Comy.

[3] 'Deprived of garments, and adornments like timber laid aside. ... Comy.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
9. Vana-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

9. The Forest Suttas

Sutta 10

Sajjhāya (or Dhamma) Suttaṃ

Diligence (or Doctrines)

---

[258]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

A certain brother was once staying among the Kosalese
in a certain forest-tract.

Now at that time this brother,
whose life had been one of exceeding and abundant diligence,
lived subsequently at ease,
given to silence,
and resigned.[1]

Then the deva who haunted that forest-tract,
moved with compassion for the brother,
desiring his welfare,

and wishing to agitate him,
drew near and addressed him in the verse: —

"0 almsman! why dost thou not con and study[2]
The doctrines all, while with the brethren biding.
Who learns the Norm winneth heart's satisfaction,
And in this life winneth men's commendation."

[The Brother: —]

"Ay, once was mine will to acquire those doctrines,
Until I met with that Pure thing and Holy.
Now since I met with that Pure thing and Holy,
And understood worth of what sense can teach us,
[One thing remained: —] laying all that on one side —
So would the good speak of it [not as slackness]."

---

[1] These three terms (appossukko, tuṇhībhūto, sankasāya) occur in conjunction three times in the Saṃyutta Nikāya, and, I think, nowhere else. S. ii, 177, they are also applied to the misunderstood conduct of a young arahant; S. iv, 178, they are applied to the snug security of a tortoise tucked up in its armour. On the third term see JPTS. 1909, p. 22.

[2] Virāgenāti ariyamaggena (the Ariyan Way to Salvation). Lit. with the passionless.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
9. Vana-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

9. The Forest Suttas

Sutta 11

Ayoniso (or Vitakkita) Suttaṃ

Want of Method (or Fancies)

---

[259]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

A certain brother was once staying among the Kosalese
in a certain forest-tract.

And at that time
that brother was occupied
during his siesta
with evil and wrongful thoughts,
to wit, with sensual, malevolent, and cruel thoughts.

Then the deva who haunted that forest-tract,
moved with compassion for that brother,
desiring his welfare,

and wishing to agitate him,
drew near and addressed him in the verse: —

"Thou hast no thorough method in thy thought,[1]
Good sir, and hence art thou inebriate[2]
With thine ideas. Renounce these muddled ways.
Marshall thy thoughts in ordered governance
Anent the Master, Norm, and Brotherhood;
From virtue's code let there be no recoil.
So shalt thou reach [the goal of] joy, of zest
And bliss and full assurance.[3] Thence in joy
Abounding thou shalt make an end of i11.

Then that brother, agitated by the deva,
was greatly moved.

---

[1] It is never easy to find fit rendering for the important idiom [a]yoniso manasikāra. See p. 131, and cf. my Buddhist Psychology (1914), 123,160, and cf. the attempt in Pss. of the Brethren, ver. 269, etc.

Thereat arose in me the deeper thought: —
Attention to the fact and to the cause.

Yoni is matrix, source; yoniso is 'from' or 'qua' yoni (the ablative). The other word (in the Suttas) is just 'work of mind.' B. often paraphrases ayoniso* by an-upāya, with [out] method, plan, system. 'Muddled ways' = a-yoniṃ.

[2] Majjasi. The indicative, as here, very rarely occurs.

[3] Lit. the negative form: 'rid of doubt' (a-saṇsayo).

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
9. Vana-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

9. The Forest Suttas

Sutta 12

Majjhathika (or Saṇika) Suttaṃ

Noontide, or Resounding

---

[259]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

A certain brother was once staying among the Kosalese
in a certain forest tract.

And the deva who haunted that forest tract, drew near
and before him uttered the verse:[1] —

[260] "'T is the high hour of noon; the birds rest silently.
Boometh the mighty forest; fearsome that sound to me."

[The Brother: —]

"'T is the high hour of noon; the birds rest silently.
Boometh the mighty forest; enchanting that sound to me."

[1] Occurs I, 2, § 5. Saṇika, in the title, here replaces Saṇamāna.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
9. Vana-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

9. The Forest Suttas

Sutta 13

Pākatindriya (or Sambahulābhikkhū) Suttaṃ

Uncontrolled (or, Very many brethren)

---

[260]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

A great number of brethren were once staying among the Kosalese
in a certain forest-tract.

And they were muddled in mind,
puffed up,
vain,
noisy,
loose of speech,
heedless,
unintelligent,
without concentration,
unsteady in mind,
uncontrolled in faculties.

Then the deva who haunted that forest,
moved with compassion for those brethren,
desiring their welfare,
and wishing to agitate them,
drew near and addressed them in the verse: —

"Happy the bhikkhus as they lived of yore,
Who true disciples were of Gotama.
Unhankering they sought their frugal alms,
Unhankering, their lodging and their couch.
The impermanence of things they understood,
And hence of misery they made an end.

Now, making evil-doers of themselves,
Like headmen of the village [taking toll],
Longing for what their neighbours' house contains,
They eat and eat until they sink to rest.

The Order [as a whole] I humbly greet;
To some of those here met I homage pay.
Others, forlorn and leader-less are they,
As cast out bodies of the dead are they.

My message is for them who heedless live.
To earnest diligent souls I say, All hail!"

Then those brethren, agitated by the deva, were greatly moved.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
9. Vana-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

9. The Forest Suttas

Sutta 14

Gandhatthena (or Puṇḍarīka) Suttaṃ

The Red Lotus-blossom, or White Lotus

---

[260]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

A certain brother was once staying among the Kosalese
in a certain forest-tract.

Now while there that brother,
after he had returned from his alms-round and had broken his fast, plunged into the lotus-pool
and sniffed up[1] the perfume of a red lotus.

Then the deva who haunted that forest-tract,
moved with compassion for that brother,
desiring his welfare,
and wishing to agitate him,
drew near and addressed him in the verse: —

"That blossom, child of water,[2] thing not given,[3]
Thou standest sniffing up the scent of it.
This is one class of things that may be stolen.
And thee a smell-thief must I call, dear sir."

[261] [The Brother: —]

"Nay, nought I bear away, I nothing break.
Standing apart I smell the water's child.
Now for what reason am I smell-thief called?
One who doth dig up water-lilies, one
Who feeds on lotuses, in motley tasks[4]
Engaged: — why hast thou no such name for him?"

[The Deva: —]

"A[5] man of ruthless, wicked character,
Foul-flecked as is a handmaid's dirty cloth: —
With such the words I say have no concern.
But this't is meet that I should say [to thee]: —
To him whose character is void of vice,
Who ever maketh quest for what is pure: —
What to the wicked but a hair-tip seems,
To him doth great as any cloud[6] appear."

[The Brother: —]

"In truth, 0 fairy, thou dost know me well,
And kind compassion for me moved thy heart -
I prithee, fairy, speak to me again Whenever thou dost see me do the like."

[The Deva: —]

"Neither[7] am I dependent upon thee,
Nor yet hath guilty deed by thee been done.

But thou, 0 almsman, thou thyself shouldst know
How thou to blissful destiny mayst go."

Then that brother, agitated by the deva, was greatly moved.

---

[1] Upasinghati: the compound form I have only found at Jāt. ii, 339.

[2] Vārija, 'water-born.'

[3] Almost equivalent in Pali to 'thing stolen.' It was, of course, a device of the fairy's to gain his (or her) end by shooting beyond the mark with this exaggerated figure. 'So occupied, he will get into sensuous ways, and cravings will arise,' the monitor thinks. Comy.

[4] Ākiṇṇa, lit. 'scattered,' ' heaped,' is by B.'s exegesis made to connote (a) impure, (b) hard, 'ruthless' or ludda, as in line 7.

[5] The distribution of these lines between the two parties is not easy. The Comy. makes no effort to distinguish, and only explains that it is they in whom is the capacity for salvation in this life who are meet to be admonished, not they who are 'past praying for.'

[6] 'Like the crest of a valāhaka' (cloud). Comy.

[7] The sceptical fairy judges that he will lean on his mindful monitor and live a slacker, and so 'I will not consent.' Comy.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
10. Yakkha-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

10. The Yakkha Suttas

Sutta 1

Indaka Suttaṃ

The Yakkha of Indra's Peak

---

[262]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

The Exalted One was once staying near Rājagaha,
on the hill Indra's Peak,
at the haunt of an Indra's Peak yakkha.[1]

Now that yakkha drew near to the Exalted One
and addressed him in the verse: —

"'Material form is not the living soul'[2]: —
So say th' Enlightened Ones. Then how[3] doth soul Possess this body? Whence to soul doth come
Our bunch of bones and bowels?[4] How doth soul
Within the mother-cave suspended bide?"

[2263] [The Exalted One:[5] —]

"At first the kalala takes birth, and thence
The abbuda. Therefrom the pesī grows, Developing as ghana in its turn.
Now in the ghana doth appear the hair,
The down, the nails. And whatsoever food
And drink the mother of him takes, thereby
The man in mother's womb doth live and grow."

---

[1] 'Peak and yakkha each derived its name from the other,' is B.'s only and quaint comment. An 'Indako yakkho' finds mention in Petavatthu, II, 9, 65 f. The myth of the yakkha, and its evolution still, I believe, await investigation. The English equivalent does not exist. 'Geni' (djinn) is perhaps nearest (cf. Pss. of the Sisters, p. 30). In the early records, yakkha as an appellative is, like nāga, anything but depreciative. Not only is Sakka so called (M. i, 252), but the Buddha himself is so referred to, in poetic diction (M. i, 386). We have seen Kakudha, son of the gods, so addressed (II, 2, § 8); and in D. ii, 170 (Dialogues, ii, 200), the city of the gods, Ālakamandā, is described as 'crowded with Yakkhas' ('gods'). They have a deva's supernormal powers, and are capable of putting very pertinent problems in metaphysic and ethics. But they were decadent divinities, degraded in the later era, when the stories to the Jātaka verses were set down, to the status of red-eyed cannibal ogres. Cf. the older and newer view together in Pss. of the Brethren, p. 245.

[2] Jivaṃ, the vital principle constituting the entity or person proper, B.: satta, puggala.

[3] Nvayaṃ — nu ayaṃ.

[4] Yaka(-na), liver, used symbolically for all the soft parts. B. specifies 900 fleshy units.

[5] The point in the reply is that the embryo evolves into the shape we know by laws of physical growth, and not by the instantaneous materialization wrought by a soul's fiat. Cf. the argument as applied in the Kathāvatthu (xiv, 2; Points of Controversy, p. 284), and the interesting pendant supplied by Lucretius in his maintaining cosmic law: —

Nam fierent juvenes subito ex infantibu'parvis, etc. De Rerum, I, 159#.

The yakkha, says B., is clearly an Animist (Puggalavādin). The Comy. gives interesting details in contemporaneous embryology quoting gāthās from an untraced source on the subject.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
10. Yakkha-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

10. The Yakkha Suttas

Sutta 2

Sakkanāma Suttaṃ

Sakka

---

[263]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

The Exalted One was once staying near Rājagaha,
on the Vulture's Peak Hill.[1]

Then a fairy named Sakka[2] drew near to the Exalted One
and addressed him in the verse: —

"It is not well, not fit that thou, who art
A friar, who hast all ties of every sort
Renounced, and dost emancipated live,
Shouldst [spend thy life] exhorting other men."[3]

[264] [The Exalted One:—]

"Whate'er the apparent cause,[4] Sakka, whereby Men come to dwell together[5] none doth fit
The Wise Man's[6] case. Compassion moves his mind.
And if, with mind thus satisfied, he spend
His life instructing other men, yet he Thereby is nowise bound as by a yoke.
Compassion moveth him and sympathy."

---

[1] See Psalms of the Sisters, pp. 28, 66.

[2] There is no tradition, revealed in the Comy., that Sakka, ruler of the Thirty-three Gods, is meant; this is only 'eko yakkho Mārapakkhiko' (one yakkha of Māra's faction); cf. the same accusation brought by Māra (IV, 2, § 4). But that this deity was originally meant is not impossible.

[3] Anusāsati, to give continuous, or consecutive, systematic instruction, not merely 'to teach' (deseti). He is free, yet he makes to himself ties. Few finer logia than the answer here given are to be found ascribed to any teacher.

[4] Vaṇṇa.

[5] Sayvāso ('living together'); Comy.: 'living as one, friendliness, amity.'

[6] Sappañño ti suppañño sambuddho.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
10. Yakkha-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

10. The Yakkha Suttas

Sutta 3

Suciloma Suttaṃ

Suciloma

---

[264]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

The Exalted One was once waiting near Gayā,
on the Stone Couch,
at the haunt of the yakkha Suciloma.[1]

Now at that time
Khara the yakkha and Suciloma the yakkha
were passing by,
not far from the Exalted One.

And Khara said to Suciloma:

"That's a friar."

"No [replied the other], that's not a friar,
that's a mere shaveling,[2]
at least until I know that he's the one and not the other."

Then Suciloma came up to the Exalted One and bent his body up against him.

And the Exalted One bent his body away.

Then Suciloma said:

"Dost fear me, friar?"

"Nay, friend, I fear thee not,
albeit contact with thee is an evil thing."[3]

[265] "Friar, I will ask thee a question.

If thou answerest me not,
I will either derange thy mind,[4]
or split thy heart,
or I will take thee by the feet
and throw thee over the Granges."

"I see no one, friend,
in the whole world,
be he Māra or Brahmā,
nor among gods or men
with all the recluses and the brahmins,
who is able to do to me
any one of these things;
nevertheless, friend,
ask according to thy desire."

[The Yakkha: —]

"Say,[5] whence are caused passions of greed and hatred?
Repulsion, love, terror: — whence have they being?
And whence spring thoughts into our minds down sinking,
Like [tethered] crow pulled by boy-captors earthward?"[6]

[The Exalted One:—]

"'T is hence are caused passions of greed and hatred.
Repulsion, love, terror: — hence[7] have they being.
And hence spring thoughts into the mind down sinking,
Like tethered crow pulled by boy-captors earthward.

Born of our likes and longings,[7] of the self
The outcome,[8] like the banyan's trunk-born runners,
They cleave in divers ways to things of sense,
Like creeper intertwined in the forest.
[266] And they who know self and wherefrom it riseth,
They crush it down — listen to me, 0 yakkha —
They cross this flood, difficult, by them ne'er cross'd,
So they may ne'er come back again to rebirth!"

---

[1] An expressive statue of the yakkha Suciloma is among the bas-reliefs of the Bharhut Stupa (Cunningham, p. 136). It and those of other yakkhas compare favourably with presentations of devas. The Stone Couch is, in the Sutta Nipāta Comy. (i, 301), described as a long slab of rock resting on four upright rocks. Gaya comprised both a town and a landing-stage, and the Couch was at the latter, but not far from the town-gate. Here the Master sat, awaiting his two converts-to-be.

[2] Samaṇa, samaṇaka, the affix 'of appurtenance' here has, as is often the case, a diminutive and contemptuous value.

[3] Fausböll's 'sinful' is misleading. B. says: 'shameful or unpleasant, to be avoided like dirt, fire, or a black snake, not to be acquiesced in by that golden-hued body,' so he 'bent away slightly as when one bends back the golden envelope of a piece of jewelry. Now the yakkha had hairs (loma) over the body like tapestry needles (sūci); these he erected, assuming a horrid shape with wide-opened mouth.' Khara is described as having scales like a crocodile's back. Both cases were results of thefts from 'the Order' in a former birth.' Comy.

[4] Either by making an appalling sight of himself before the Buddha, or by uttering fearful sounds, etc. Comy.

[5] The verses are in triṣṭhubh metre, interrupted by two ślokas.

[6] The simile is explained by B. as I give it: Boys pass a string round a crow's leg and their finger, and pull it down in its flight; so our evil thoughts springing from ourselves are pulled back again into consciousness.

[7] Taṇhā-snehato jātā. Comy.

[8] Ito attabhāvato jātā. Comy.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
10. Yakkha-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

10. The Yakkha Suttas

Sutta 4

Manibhadda Suttaṃ

Manibhadda

---

[266]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

The Exalted One was once staying among the Magadhese,
at the Maṇimāla Temple,
in the haunt of the yakkha Maṇibhadda.[1]

Then that yakkha drew near to the Exalted One,
and before him uttered the verse:—

"To one of mind alert luck ever comes;
He prospers with increasing happiness.
For him to-morrow is a better day.
And wholly from all hate is he released."[2]

[The Exalted One:—]

"To one of mind alert luck ever comes;
He prospers with increasing happiness.
For him to-morrow is a better day.
Not wholly from all hate is he released.
For him whose mind ever by night and day
In harmlessness, in kindness[3] takes delight,
Bearing his share in love for all that lives,
In him no hate is found toward anyone."[4]

---

[1] These names have not been met with elsewhere.

[2] Feer found the first stanza in his Burmese MS. only, and prints it in brackets. They are possibly interpolated to let the Exalted One make the usual response, for Buddhaghosa takes no notice of the corrected view, but comments only on the 'Not wholly,' etc.x

[3] I have inserted this term as representing the positive meaning of the negative term (a-hiṇsā).

[4] The last two lines occur in the Cakkavāka Jātaka (iv, 71). B. gives mettaṃ so and mettaṃso as alternative interpretations. The Jāt. Comy. gives only the one I have adopted (mettā-aṇso, koṭṭhāso).

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
10. Yakkha-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

10. The Yakkha Suttas

Sutta 5

Sānu Suttaṃ

Sānu

---

[266]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at the Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

[267] Now on that occasion Sānu,[1]
the child of a certain lay adherent,
was possessed by a yakkha.

And the mother, making lamentation in that hour,
uttered the verses: —

"To me[2] one of the holy men was he —
So, have I heard, the holy men do say[3] —
Yet lo! the sight that meets mine eyes to-day:

With Sānu demons make their [cruel] sport.
On fourteenth day and on the fifteenth day,
And on the eighth of either half the month
I've kept the feast, firm in the precepts eight,
The extra-fasts,[4] learnt from the holy men.
Yet lo! the sight that meets my eyes to-day: —
With Sānu demons make their cruel sport."

[The Demon (in possession of Sānu)[5]: —]

"On fourteenth day and on the fifteenth day,
And on the eighth of either half the month
[268] Who keep the feast, firm in the precepts eight,
The extra-fasts; who lead the higher life,
With such the demons make no cruel sport.
Our wise and clever Sānu thou shouldst tell: —
This is the word that Yakkhas [venerate]: —
Do nought of evil open or concealed;
If evil thou now doest or wilt do,
Thou'lt not escape from pain and misery,
Though thou spring up[6] and run in headlong flight."[7]

[Sānu (coming to himself):—]

"Mother, they weep for the dead, or the living they may not see.
But for him, 0 mother, who lives, who is here, why mournest thou me?"

[The Mother :—]

"They mourn for son who lieth dead, or him
Who is alive, but whom they no more see,
And him they mourn, who though he did renounce
The world, my son, doth hither come again,
For though he live again, yet is he dead.[8]
Drawn forth from burning embers,[9] 0 my dear,
Dost thou on embers wish to fall again?

Cast up from hellish regions, 0 my dear,
Dost thou desire to fall into the abyss?
Run thou thy course; my blessing take with thee.
[269] To whom give we occasion for offence?
The goods from burning house brought safely forth,
Dost thou desire that they should burn again?"

---

[1] The story in this little drama-sutta is given briefly in the Comy. on Sānu's gāthā (Pss. of the Brethren, XLIV.), and more fully in the Dhp. Comy. on ver. 326 (iv, 18 f.) and in our Comy. Sānu, whose pious mother had placed him in the Order as a child, leads a model career till he suffers a normal relapse and recrudescence of worldly longing. In distress and dishevelment he visits his mother and confesses his distracted condition. She prepares food to comfort him, but his previous mother, who had been a Yakkha, was now a daughter of the gods and honoured exceedingly by them because of her late son's piety. Anxious not to lose credit and to 'save his soul,' she intervenes and 'possesses' him, so that he falls in an epileptic fit. The mother takes him on her knees, with embraces and lamentation. The ex-mother 'in' the son warns her of her son's parlous state; the son revives and wonders; the mother admonishes.

[2] Is this so ahu? The four lines are in Burmese MSS. only, and B. takes no notice.

[3] The arahant was just a holy man to the average layman. (Cf. Pss. of the Sisters, 130.) The line seems to resemble a ballad refrain, not always very pertinent.

[4] These 2-1/2 lines occur in Pss. of the Sisters, p. 31. She now refers to her own piety as meeting, no less than her son's, with unfair reward.

[5] On this power ascribed to Yakkhas, Pisāchas, etc., cf. Washburn Hopkins's Religions of India, p. 415: — 'Associated with Skanda (the Saivite battle-god) are the spirits, or 'mothers,' who afflict people. ... As in other lands, people are 'possessed' by evil spirits called graha's: seizers (our Pali has gahito, seized). ... The mothers are witches and live in cross-roads, cemeteries, and mountains. They may be of Dravidian origin ...' He refers to several passages in the Anugītā (Mahābhārata).

[6] Uppaccā.

[7] See Udāna, VI, 4; Pss. of the Sisters, vers. 247, 248.

[8] Dhammapāla quotes S. ii, 271: — 'This is death that one should reject the training and turn away to lower things.'

[9] Cf. Points of Controversy, p. 127, on the Gokulika theory of life.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
10. Yakkha-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

10. The Yakkha Suttas

Sutta 6

Piyaṇkara Suttaṃ

Piyankara

---

[269]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

The venerable Anuruddha was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at the Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now on that occasion the venerable Anuruddha,
rising as the night lifted,
recited sentences of the doctrine.[1]

And the yakkha,
known as Piyaṇkara's mother,
hushed her little boy,[2] saying: —

"Hush! make no noise, Piyaṇkara,
The friar is speaking holy words.
If we can hear and learn those holy words
And practise them, it may be good for us.
If we can keep our hands off[3] living things,
If we can knowingly utter no lies,
And train ourselves to do the things we ought,
We may from goblin-sphere obtain release."

---

[1] Dhammapadāni. Very naturally B. specifies these as verses of the Dhammapada, namely, Nos. 21-32: — the Appamāda-vagga. He had formed a committee of 21 to consider interpretations of the text (tanti); probably after the Buddha's passing away. Cf. above, VI, 2, § 5.

[2] 'Starting from the western portion of the Grove, she ... with her boy on her hip came unexpectedly on the settlement, and heard the sweet voice in the vihāra. Cut to the heart, and smitten to the marrow, she stood like a post, while the child whimpered for food.

[3] Sayyamāmase.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
10. Yakkha-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

10. The Yakkha Suttas

Sutta 7

Punabbasu Suttaṃ

Punabbasu

---

[269]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at the Jeta Vana,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And on that occasion he was instructing,
enlightening,
inciting,
and inspiring the brethren by a sermon bearing on Nibbāna.

And the brethren,
with their whole mind applied,
attentive and intent,
were listening with rapt hearing to the Norm.[1]

[270] Then a yakkha, known as Punabbasu's mother,[2] hushed her little children thus: —

"0 silence, little Uttarā! Be still,
Punabbasu, that I may hear the Norm
Taught by the Master, by the Wisest Man.[3]
'Nibbāna,' the Exalted One did say,
'Is the Deliverance from every tie';[4]
And for that truth my love is passing great.
Dear unto us is our own child, and dear
Our husband; dearer still than these to me
Is't of this Doctrine to explore the Path.
For neither child nor husband, though they be
So dear to us, can save us from all ill,
As can the hearing of the blessed Norm
From pain and sorrow set a creature free.
And in the sequent sorrows of this life,
Linked as they are with age, decay, and death.
That Norm in which He found enlightenment
How there might be release from age and death: —
[271] That is the doctrine I am fain to hear, Wherefore, Punabbasu, my son, be still."

[Punabbasu: —]

"Mother, I will not speak a word, and see,
Still too is Uttarā. So hearken thou,
For sweet it is to listen to the Norm.
Because we haven't known the blessed Norm,
Mother, we go on suffering here and now.
To gods and men all in a muddled maze
This is the giver of the light: — that He,
The Buddha to his final body born,
The Man who Sees doth teach the Norm to men."[5]

[The Mother: —]

"0 blessed words! and wise the son I bore
And cradled at my breast, for now this son Loves the pure Norm taught by the Wisest Man.
0 mayst thou happy be, Punabbasu!
For now am I uprisen from the round
Of life renewed. The Ariyan Truths we see.
Thou too, my Uttarā! listen to me."

---

[1] 'The hour,' according to the Comy., 'was toward sunset time; the Master after his dinner had preached to a general assembly, had then gone to the bath-rooms, and thereafter had rested on the 'Buddha-seat in the cell of the Fragrant Gable, surveying the eastern view.' Then certain ascetic brethren, in ragged attire, almsmen, who had been touring singly, in pairs, or other numbers, came out from their quarters and, saluting, disposed themselves round the Teacher like the red swathing (round a jewel). He, discerning their wish, discoursed to them.

[2] Nothing of special interest is recorded about this earnest-minded mother. 'With daughter on hip and the boy's hand in hers, she comes round by the back fence or wall (pakāra) of the Grove to the entrance opposite the aisle (vīthi) leading to the Buddha's seat, and seeing the hushed rapt audience fancies some market transaction is being proposed, whence she may get scraps.' Comy.

[3] Buddha-seṭṭhassa, lit. of the best of Buddhas (enlightened persons).

[4] Iti-vuttaka, § 102 [cf. § 122; A. ii, 24).

Not by the slothful undiscerning man,
The fool, may the Nibbāna be attained
That is Deliverance from every tie.

The last of verses concluding a short discourse on Nibbāna.

[5] Read cakkhumā ti.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
10. Yakkha-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

10. The Yakkha Suttas

Sutta 8

Sudatta Suttaṃ

Sudatta

---

[271]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

The Exalted One was once staying near Rājagaha,
in Cool Wood.

Now on that occasion
the citizen Anāthapiṇḍika had arrived at Rājagaha to transact some business.[1]

And he heard it said that a Buddha had arisen in the world,
and he [272] became desirous of going to see the Exalted One.

Then he thought:

"There is no suitable hour
for going to see the Exalted One to-day;
to-morrow then
at the proper time
I will go to see him."

And thus, dwelling in thought upon the Buddha,
he fell asleep.

Thrice during the night he awoke,
fancying it was daylight,[2]
and he went forth to the gate into the Cemetery,[3]
and creatures not-human opened the gate.

Then it seemed to Anāthapiṇḍika,
as he came out of the city,
that the light vanished,
and all was dark.

Fear and trembling
and creeping of the flesh arose,
and he became desirous of turning back.

Then Sīvaka the yakkha,
himself invisible,
caused a sound to be heard: —[4]

"A hundred elephants and horses too,
Ay, and a hundred chariots drawn by mules,
A hundred thousand maidens, in their ears
Bejewelled rings: — all are not worth
The sixteenth fraction of a single stride.
Advance, 0 citizen, go forward thou!
Advance for thee is better than retreat."

Then to Anāthapiṇḍika the darkness vanished,
and it became light,
and the fear and trembling
and creeping of the flesh
that had come over him
were abated.

Now all this happened a second time,
and yet a third time.

And then Anāthapiṇḍika came to Cool Wood
where was the Exalted One.

[273] Now just then the Exalted One had arisen
as the day dawned,
and was walking up and down in the open air.

And the Exalted One saw citizen Anāthapiṇḍika coming while yet afar.

And seeing him,
he came down from the terrace
and seated himself on a seat made ready.

So seated, the Exalted One said to Anāthapiṇḍika:

"Come, Sudatta!"[5]

Then Anāthapiṇḍika thought:

"The Exalted One addresses me by my own name!"

and he fell at the feet of the Exalted One,
and said:

"Lord, has the Blessed One rested happily?"[6]

[The Exalted One: —]

"Surely at all times happily doth rest
The Arahant in whom all fire's extinct.[7]
Who cleaveth not to sensuous desires,
Cool all his being, rid of all the germs
That bring new life,[8] all cumbrances cut out,
Subdued the pain and pining of the heart,
Calm and serene he resteth happily
For in his mind he hath attained to peace."

---

[1] Merchant's business. The story is given in Vin. Texts, iii, 179. The high importance attached by tradition to this first meeting of the great lay-supporter of early Buddhism with its Founder may be the reason for the repetition of efforts made by the excited merchant. There is an eerie atmosphere about the simple story that is Bunyanic. The Comy. amplifies the weird details and difficulties in the momentous quest of a millionaire breaking out of his groove.

[2] Waking, says B., after the first, and after the second watch, his rapture at the prospect of seeing a Buddha became a sensation of light. Going on to the open roof, he saw the moon, and returned to bed. The third time it was indeed daylight, and he went down to the 'seven-storied door' into the street. In the sequel of what was probably the traditional narrative, B. gives the population of Rājagaha, —of city, fuori le mure and the suburbs — as amounting to about 3-1/2 millions.

[3] B. supports this Singhalese reading by susānamagge, where the dead lay exposed and jackals howled.

[4] Like blows struck on a golden bell, says B., who does not make good the omission of referring the verse to the speaker.

[5] Sudatta was so exclusively known by the title 'given him by the people,' says B., of 'Feeder of the Forlorn,' that he judged none (even in Rājagaha; his home was at Sāvatthī) knew his personal name, and he had thought to test the Buddha's intuition by asking if he knew it. On the force in the welcome: EHI (come!), resembling Christ's 'Follow me,' see Pss of the Sisters, p. 67; Brethren, Index s.v. Ordination.

[6] A delightful touch is given by the naturalness of the nervous, wrought-up seeker faltering out this commonplace courtesy after all his prepared questions, broken night, and sensational walk. No less delightful is the way in which the gracious Teacher, by the same simple instrument, lifts him up at once to the lofty thoughts he wished to hear.

[7] Brahmāṇo parinibbuto. See above, I, 1, § 1.

[8] Nirupadhi. See above, I, 1, § 2.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
10. Yakkha-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

10. The Yakkha Suttas

Sutta 9

Sukkā Suttaṃ (1)

Sukkā (1)[1]

---

[273]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

The Exalted One was once staying near Rājagaha,
in the Bamboo Grove,
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now on that occasion Sukkā, the Bhikkhunī,
was teaching [274] the Norm,
surrounded by a great congregation.

And a yakkha,[2]
enthusiastic about her,
went into Rājagaha,
going from chariot-road to chariot-road,

from crossways to cross-ways,[3]
and in that hour uttered these verses:

"What have ye, men of Rājagaha, done,[4]
That here ye lie[5] as though bemused with wine,
Nor wait upon Sukka while she doth teach
The doctrine of the Bourne Ambrosial—
That source from whence there is no turning back,[6]
That elixir that no infusion needs.[7]
The wise methinks were fain to quaff [that cup],
As wayfarer [the droppings of] the cloud."

---

[1] Cf Pss. of the Sisters, XXXIV; American Lectures, p. 75.

[2] So called also in the Apadāna account, but referred to in the Therīgāthā Comy. as a devatā of the tree, the tree being at the end of the Therī's 'walking-ground,' or open cloisters. As the Pali is yakkho, evidently a male fairy is meant.

[3] Singhāṭaka.

[4] Kim me katā. The me seems to be the dative of personal reference, now obsolete in English; B., however, sees in it 'me for ime (these).

[5] Acchare.

[6] Because of satiety, when we turn away from that of which we have been drinking. Comy.

[7] Creates its own essential spirit or juice, needing no external ingredients. Comy.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
10. Yakkha-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

10. The Yakkha Suttas

Sutta 10

Sukkā Suttaṃ (2)

Sukkā (2)

---

[274]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

The Exalted One was once staying near Rājagaha,
in the Bamboo Grove,
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now on that occasion a certain lay-follower
gave food to Sukkā the Bhikkhunī.

And a yakkha, enthusiastic about Sukkā,
went into Rājagaha,
going from chariot-road to chariot-road,
from crossways to crossways,
and in that hour uttered this verse: —

"0 surely plenteous merit hath he wrought,
That layman wise who Sukkā's wants supplied — Sukkā, who from all bonds is wholly free!"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
10. Yakkha-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

10. The Yakkha Suttas

Sutta 11

Virā or Cīrā Suttaṃ

Virā (or Cīrā)[1]

---

[275]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

The Exalted One was once staying near Rājagaha,
in the Bamboo Grove,
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now on that occasion a certain lay-follower
gave food to Virā the Bhikkhunī.

And a yakkha, enthusiastic about Sukkā,
went into Rājagaha,
going from chariot-road to chariot-road,
from crossways to crossways,
and in that hour uttered this verse: —

"0 surely plenteous merit hath he wrought,
That layman wise who Virā's wants supplied — Virā, who from all bonds is wholly free!"

---

[1] Virā as the feminine form of Vīra (cf. Pss. of the Brethren, VIII) would seem to be the more likely of the two. v and c in Singhalese are almost identical letters. Neither of them is found elsewhere. B. is silent.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
10. Yakkha-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

10. The Yakkha Suttas

Sutta 12

Āḷavī Suttaṃ

At Āḷavī

---

[275]

THUS HAVE I HEARD: —

The Exalted One was once staying at Āḷavi [and had entered] the haunt of a yakkha of Āḷavi.

Then that yakkha said to the Exalted One:

'Get out, friar!'[1]

'Very good, friend,'
said the Exalted One, and came out.

'Come in, friar!'

'Very good, friend,'
said the Exalted One, and came in.

Thus did the yakkha order the Exalted One a second,
and yet a third time,
and the Exalted One complied each time.

And yet a fourth time the Āḷavan yakkha said to the Exalted One:

'Come out!'

'Nay, friend, I will not come out.

Do what thou hast to do.'

'I will ask thee, friar, a question.

If thou wilt not answer,
I will either derange thy mind,
or split thy heart,
or take thee by the feet
and throw thee over the Ganges.'

'1 see no one, friend, in the whole world,
be he Māra or Brahmā,
be he god or man,
be he brahmin or recluse,
who is able to do any one of these things to me.

Nevertheless ask thou according to thy desire.'

[The Yakkha[2]: —]

What here is the best wealth a man can have?
What well performed brings happiness along?
What in good sooth is of all tastes most sweet?
How do they say our life can best be lived?

[The Exalted One: —]

Faith here is the best wealth a man can have.
Right deeds well done bring happiness along.
Truth in good sooth is of all tastes most sweet.
Life lived by wisdom, they do say, is best.

[The Yakkha: —]

0 say, how may we pass over the flood?
How may we pass over the watery waste?
How may we get past ill and suffering?
How may we win to utter purity?

[The Exalted One: —]

By faith, surely, ye pass over the flood;
By zeal ye pass over the watery waste;
By energy ye get past ill and woe;
By wisdom utter purity ye win.

[The Yakkha: —]

Say, how may wisdom be acquired?
Say, how may wealth be found?
How may we win fame and renown?
And how may friends[3] be bound?
In this world and where life shall be,
How may we lose all misery?

[The Exalted One: —]

Whoso believeth in the Norm
Of Arahants, where lies the way
To win Nibbāna, fain to learn
He should get wisdom, must display
An earnest zeal, discerning wit.[4]

Who doth what seemly is and fit,
And on his back the burden bears
With vigour, he may riches find;
Speaking the truth he wins renown;
And friends by giving he will bind.
In this world and where life shall be
Thus will he lose all misery.

Whoso the layman's life doth seek
In pious faith and hath these four: —
Veracity and self-control,
Steadfastness, generosity —
When passed away, he'll weep,no more.
Yea, verily, I'd have thee ask
Recluses, brahmins one and all,
If any other like these four: —
Veracity and self-control,
A generous will and fortitude —[5]
Are so effective found, that he,
In this world and where life shall be,
When passed away will weep no more.

[The Yakkha: —]

Now wherefore should I question these,
Recluses, brahmins, one and all
Who fully understand to-day,
The causes of the after-life.[6] 0 surely for my growth and good
The Buddha came to Āḷavī.
To-day I fully understand
Where what is given rich fruit may bear.
Lo! I will now a-travelling go,
Village to village, town to town,
To magnify th' Enlightened One,
The seemly Order of the Norm.[7]

---

[1] The story of this little episode is given with great amplitude and in many identical words by both our Comy. and that on the Sutta Nipāta, where the Sutta also occurs (I, 10). Three salient features at least link it to the large group of stories grouped so ably by Dr. Watanabe under the name of Kalmāsapāda stories (JPTS., 1909-10, p. 240 f.): — (1) The man-eating yakkha, (2) the captured King saving himself by a promise, and the sanctity of that promise. (3) The conversion of the man-eater. When the Sutta begins, the yakkha is represented as returning home and finding the Teacher seated in his dwelling and exhorting a respectful group of his women folk 'as if he were master of the house.' The Buddha has sought permission to enter, with the intention of converting the yakkha. With a heart full of amity, he judges the best way is to soften the yakkha by compliance. The yakkha, expecting a night's wrestling with the supernormal powers of a Rishi, is dazed, and tries that compliance, thinking eventually to tire him.

[2] That the questions and answers had been handed down by the yakkha's parents (who had them from Kassapa Buddha), written on and gold leaf (pappe) in red ink, are a quaint feature in the legend.

[3] Mittāni, the neuter plural. Perhaps 'kind acts' are meant. See I, 6, § 3.

[4] Vicakkhaṇo.

[5] Khanti replaces dhiti. The preceding term, cāga, is in Pali unchanged.

[6] Attho aamparāyiko. 'Growth and good' just below is also attho. B. gives six meanings of attha,* and explains 'causes,' and 'growth and good' thus: — 'causes': karaṇass' etaṃ adhivacanaṃ: 'growth and good': hitāya vuddhiyā ca.

[7] Dhammassa sudhammatā, lit. the fine normality of the Norm: 'So well proclaimed by the Buddha' is all that the Commentaries see in this striking phrase, often occurring in the Pss. of the Brethren.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
I. Sagātha Vagga
11. Sakka-Saṃyutta

I. Kindred Sayings with Verses

11. The Sakka Suttas

---

[279]

I.

Sutta 1

Suvīra Suttaṃ

Suvīra

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One discoursed to the brethren, saying:

"Bhikkhus!"

"Lord!" they responded.

The Exalted One said:

"In days gone by the Asuras marched out against[1] the gods.

Then Sakka, ruler of the gods,
called to Suvīra, son of the gods:[2]

'These Asuras, my dear Suvīra,
are come out against us.

Go thou out to meet them.'

'So be it, lord,' [280] responded Suvīra, son of the gods,
but he played the slacker.

Yea, twice and even thrice did Sakka summon him;
and twice and even thrice with no better result.

Then Sakka, ruler of the gods, addressed Suvīra,
son of the gods, in the verses: —

'Where happiness is found at journey's end
By him who ne'er bestirs himself nor tries: —
Go thou, Suvīra, get thee to that goal,
And make me also thither find the way.'

[Suvīra: —]

'For sluggard who bestirreth not himself
Nought that he undertaketh can he do.
For one whose every wish hath reaped success
What is the goal supreme,[3] O Sakka, say?'[4]

[Sakka: —]

'Where sluggard who bestirreth ne'er himself
Doth win his way to final happiness: —
Go thou, Suvīra, get thee to that goal,
And make me also thither find the way.'

[Suvīra: —]

'But may one without action, chief of gods,
Such happiness discover and possess
As sorrow and despair may never dim?
What is the goal supreme, O Sakka, say?'

[Sakka: —]

'If it may be that where no deed is done[5]
No man comes anywhere again to birth,
Nibbāna is the way to compass that.
Go thou, Suvīra, get thee to that goal
And make me also thither find the way.'

[281] Verily, bhikkhus, Sakka, ruler of gods,
subsisting on the fruit of his own well-doing,
ruling over and governing the Thirty-three Gods,
will be one who commends exertion and energy.

Now in this Rule, bhikkhus,
ye do enhance his words when ye,
who have gone forth under a Norm and Discipline so well proclaimed,
do exert yourselves,
and strive
and endeavour
to attain to the unattained,
to arrive where ye had not arrived,
to realize that which ye had not realized."

Sutta 2

Susīma Suttaṃ

Susīma[6]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One discoursed to the brethren, saying:

"Bhikkhus!"

"Lord!" they responded.

The Exalted One said:

"In days gone by the Asuras marched out against the gods.

Then Sakka, ruler of the gods,
called to Susīma, son of the gods:

'These Asuras, my dear Susīma,
are come out against us.

Go thou out to meet them.'

'So be it, lord,' responded Susīma, son of the gods,
but he played the slacker.

Yea, twice and even thrice did Sakka summon him;
and twice and even thrice with no better result.

Then Sakka, ruler of the gods, addressed Susīma,
son of the gods, in the verses: —

'Where happiness is found at journey's end
By him who ne'er bestirs himself nor tries: —
Go thou, Susīma, get thee to that goal,
And make me also thither find the way.'

[Susīma: —]

'For sluggard who bestirreth not himself
Nought that he undertaketh can he do.
For one whose every wish hath reaped success
What is the goal supreme, O Sakka, say?'

[Sakka: —]

'Where sluggard who bestirreth ne'er himself
Doth win his way to final happiness: —
Go thou, Susīma, get thee to that goal,
And make me also thither find the way.'

[Susīma: —]

'But may one without action, chief of gods,
Such happiness discover and possess
As sorrow and despair may never dim?
What is the goal supreme, O Sakka, say?'

[Sakka: —]

'If it may be that where no deed is done
No man comes anywhere again to birth,
Nibbāna is the wy to compass that.
Go thou, Susīma, get thee to that goal
And make me also thither find the way.'

Verily, bhikkhus, Sakka, ruler of gods,
subsisting on the fruit of his own well-doing,
ruling over and governing the Thirty-three Gods,
will be one who commends exertion and energy.

Now in this Rule, bhikkhus,
ye do enhance his words when ye,
who have gone forth under a Norm and Discipline so well proclaimed,
do exert yourselves,
and strive
and endeavour
to attain to the unattained,
to arrive where ye had not arrived,
to realize that which ye had not realized."

Sutta 3

Dhajagga Suttaṃ

The Top of the Banner[7]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One discoursed to the brethren, saying:

"Bhikkhus!"

"Lord!" they responded.

The Exalted One said:

"Long ago, bhikkhus, a battle was raging between the gods and the Asuras.

Then Sakka, ruler of the gods,
addressed the Thirty-three Gods, saying:

'If in you, dear sirs,
when ye are gone into the battle,
fear and panic
and creeping of the flesh should arise,
look up at the crest of my banner.

If ye do so,
any fear and panic
and creeping of the flesh[8] that will have arisen
will be overcome.

If ye look not up to the crest of my banner,
look up at that of Pajāpati, king of the gods.

If ye do so,
any fear and panic

and creeping of the flesh that will have arisen
will be overcome.

If ye look not up to the crest of Pajāpati,
look up at that of Varuṇa,[9] king of the gods.

If ye do so,
any fear and panic
and creeping of the flesh that will have arisen
will be overcome.

If ye look not up to the crest of Varuṇa,
look up at that of Isāna, [282] king of the gods.

If ye do so,
any fear and panic
and creeping of the flesh that will have arisen
will be overcome.'

Now, bhikkhus, in them that look up to the crest of one or other of these four banners,
any fear and panic
and creeping of the flesh that has arisen
may be overcome,
or again it may not.

And why is this?

Because Sakka, ruler of the gods,
is not purged of passions, hate, or ignorance,
is timid,
given to panic,
to fright,
to running away.[10]

But I say thus unto you, bhikkhus:

If in you
when ye have gone into forests,
to the roots of trees,
to empty places,
fear and panic and creeping of the flesh should arise,
do ye in that hour only call me to mind and think:

'This, that is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
supremely enlightened,
proficient in knowledge and in conduct,
the Blessed One,
who understands the world,
peerless tamer and driver of the hearts of men,
the Master,
the Buddha for gods and men,
Exalted One.'

For if ye so call me to mind, bhikkhus,
any fear,
panic,
creeping of the flesh that will have arisen
will be overcome.

And if ye cannot call me to mind,
call to mind the Norm, and think:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One is the Norm,
relating to the present,
immediate in its results,
inviting all,
giving gidance,
appealing to each,
to be understood by them that can understand.'

For if ye so call the Norm to mind
your fear,
panic,
creeping of the flesh that will have arisen
will be overcome.

And if ye cannot call the Norm to mind,
then call to mind the Order, and think:

'Well practised is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples,
practised in integrity,
in intellectual methods,
in right lines of action — to wit
the four pairs,
the eight groups of persons[11]: —
this is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples worthy of offerings,
oblations,
gifts,
salutations,
the world's peerless field for merit.'

For if ye so call the Order to mind,
your fear,
panic,
creeping of the flesh will be overcome.

[283] And why is this?

Because the Tathāgata, bhikkhus,
Arahant
Supremely Enlightened,
is purged of passion,
hate,
ignorance,
is without timidity

or panic
or fright,
and fleeth not."

Thus said the Exalted One,
and the Blessed One so saying,
the Master spake yet further: —

Whene'er in forest or in leafy shade
Or lonely empty places ye abide,
Call to your mind, bhikkhus, th'Enlightened One;
No fear, no sense of peril will ye know.

Or if ye cannot on the Buddha think —
The chief, the senior of the world, the Bull of men —[12]
Then call the Norm to mind, the well-taught guide.

Or if ye cannot think upon the Norm —
The well-taught doctrine wherein guidance lies —
Then turn your thoughts to the Fraternity,
Unrivalled field where men may sow good deeds.

If ye in Buddha, Order, Norm thus refuge take,
Fear, panic, creeping of the flesh will never rise.

Sutta 4

Vepacitti Suttaṃ

Vepacitti,[13] or Forbearance

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One discoursed to the brethren, saying:

"Bhikkhus!"

"Lord!" they responded.

The Exalted One said:

"Long time ago, bhikkhus,
gods and Asuras were mingled in battle.

And Vepacitti, ruler of the Asuras, addressed the Asuras, saying: —

'If, dear sirs, in the battle now raging
between gods and Asuras,
the Asuras are victorious,
the gods, defeated,
when ye have bound Sakka,
ruler of the gods,
hand and foot and neck,[14]

bring him before me
into the City of the Asuras.'

[284] Sakka also, bhikkhus,
ruler of the gods,
addressed the Thirty-three Gods, saying: —

'If, dear sirs, in the battle now raging
between gods and Asuras,
the gods are victorious,
the Asuras defeated,
when ye have bound Vepacitti, ruler of the Asuras,
hand and foot and neck,
bring him before me
into the hall Sudhammā.'

Now in that battle, bhikkhus,
the gods were victorious,
the Asuras were defeated.

And the Thirty-three Gods bound Vepacitti
hand and foot and neck,
and brought him before Sakka
into the hall Sudhammā.

And Vepacitti, thus bound,
railed at and reviled Sakka
as he entered
and when he left the hall,
with coarse and scurrilous words.[15]

Then, bhikkhus, Mātali, the charioteer,
addressed Sakka, ruler of the gods,
with the verse: —

'Now is it, Sakka, that thou art afraid,
Or because thou art weak that thou forbear'st,

When thou dost hear these speeches scurrilous
By Vepacitti cast into thy teeth?'

[Sakka: —]

'Nay, not from fear nor weakness do I bear
With Vepacitti. How should any man
Who lacks not understanding, such as I,
Engage himself to bandy with[16] a fool?'

[Mātali: —]

'But fools may only wax ever more wroth
If there be none to put a stop to them.
Wherefore by heavy chastisement and sharp
Let the strong-minded man restrain the fool.'

[Sakka: —]

'But in my judgment this alone avails
To stop [the railing of] a foolish man: —
[285] When he who has a mind alert, and sees Another filled with rage, grows calm and still.'

[Mātali: —]

'In this, that thou dost patiently forbear,
A grievous error, Vāsava,[17] I see.
For when the fool doth fancy: "'t is from fear
He bears with me," the dolt will prss you hard,
Like cow [that charges] more when you do flee.'[18]

[Sakka: —]

'O let him fancy as he will — or won't: —
That I do bear with him because I fear.

'Mong highest matters of our spirit's growth[19]
Nought ranks above[20] forbearing patiently.
Yea, surely he that hath the upper hand
And beareth patiently with him that's down; —
Ever to tolerate the weaker side: —
This the supreme forbearance hath been called.
Whoso doth think the strength of fools is strength,
Will say of the strong man: A weakling he!
For the strong man whom righteousness doth guard,
To bandy words comes not into his thought.
Worse[21] of the two is he who, when reviled,
Reviles again. Who doth not, when reviled,
Revile again, a twofold victory wins.
[286] Both of the other and himself he seeks
The good; for he the other's angry mood
Doth understand and groweth calm and still.
He who of both is a physician, since
Himself he healeth and the other too,
Folk deem him fool, they knowing not the Norm.'

Verily this Sakka, bhikkhus,
ruler of the gods,
subsisting on the fruit of his own good works,
and ruling over and governing the Thirty-three Gods,
will be of those who commend forbearance and gentleness.

Now in this Rule, bhikkhus,
ye do enhance his virtue
when ye who have gone forth under a Norm and Discipline
so well proclaimed
become forbearing and gentle."

Sutta 5

Subhāsitajaya Suttaṃ

Victory by Speeches

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One discoursed to the brethren, saying:

"Bhikkhus!"

"Lord!" they responded.

The Exalted One said:

"Long time ago, bhikkhus,
a battle was raging
between the gods and the Asuras.

And Vepacitti, ruler of the Asuras,
said to Sakka, ruler of the gods:

'Let the victory, ruler of the gods,
be according to excellence in speech!'

'So be the victory,
ruler of the Asuras!'

Then bhikkhus, the gods and the Asuras, arrayed their audiences, saying:

'These willjudge what is well-spoken
and what is ill-spoken.'

Then Vepacitti said to Sakka:

'Recite thou a verse, ruler of the gods!'

And Sakka replied:

'Thou, Vepacitti, art here the older god;
speak thou a verse.'

Then Vepacitti, bhikkhus, spoke this verse: —

'They that are foolish ever wax more wroth
If there be none to put a stop to them.
Wherefore by heavy chastisement and sharp
Let the strong-minded man restrain the fool.'[22]

Now the Asuras, bhikkhus, applauded the verse spoken by Vepacitti;
the gods remained silent.

[287] Thereupon Sakka spoke this verse: —

'But in my judgment this alone avails
To stop [the railing of] a foolish man: —
When he who has a mind alert, and sees
Another filled with rage, grows calm and still.'

Now the gods, bhikkhus,
applauded the verse spoken by Sakka;
the Asuras remained silent.

Then Sakka said to Vepacitti:

'Recite thou a verse, Vepacitti!'

[Vepacitti: —]

'In this that thou dost patiently forbear,
A grievous error, Vāsava, I see.
For when the fool doth fancy: "'T is from fear
He bears with me," the dolt will press you hard Like cow [that charges] more the more you flee.'

Now the Asuras applauded;
the gods remained silent.

Then Vepacitti said to Sakka:

'Recite a verse, ruler of the gods.'

And Sakka spake these verses: —

'O let him fancy as he will — or won't: —
That one doth bear with him because of fear
'Mong highest matters of our spirit's growth
Nought ranks above forbearing patiently.
Yea, surely he that hath the upper hand
And beareth patiently with him that's down; —
Ever to tolerate the weaker side: —
This the supreme forbearance hath been called.
Whoso doth think the strength of fools is strength,
Will say of the strong man: A weakling he!
For the strong man whom righteousness doth guard,
To bandy words comes not into his thought.

Worse of the two is he who, when reviled,
Reviles again. Who doth not, when reviled,
Revile again, a twofold victory wins.
Both of the other and himself he seeks
The good; for he the other's angry mood
Doth understand and groweth calm and still.
He who of both is a physician, since
Himself he healeth and the other too,
Folk deem him fool, they knowing not the Norm.'

Then the gods applauded the verses spoken by Sakka,
the Asuras remained silent.

Thereuon the audiences of gods and Asuras spoke thus: —

'The verses spoken by Vepacitti, ruler of Asuras, belong to the sphere of force and violence,
of quarrelling, strife, and contention.

The verses spoken by Sakka, ruler of gods,
belong to the sphere of persuasion and mildness,
of concord, amity, and harmony.[23]

To Sakka, ruler of the gods,
the victory by excellence of speech!'

And thus, bhikkhus, did Sakka win the victory
by excellence of speech."

---

[288]

Sutta 6

Kulāvaka Suttaṃ

Nests

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One discoursed to the brethren, saying:

"Bhikkhus!"

"Lord!" they responded.

The Exalted One said:

"Long time ago, bhikkhus,
a battle was raging betweenthe gods and the Asuras.

And in that fight[24] the Asuras conquered,
the gods were defeated.

And the defeated gods retreated towards the north,
the Asuras pursuing them.

Now Sakka, ruler of the gods,
addressed Mātali, his charioteer, in the verse: —

'See that the chariot pole, O Mātali,
Keeps clear of nests 'mong the silk-cotton trees,[25]
Let us choose rather to give up our lives
To Asuras than nestless make these birds.'

'So be it, lord!' said Mātali, and in obedience to Sakka
he turned back the chariot
with its team of a thousand thoroughly trined horses.

Then, bhikkhus, the Asuras thought:

'The chariot of Sakka
is now turned back,
the devas will engage the Asuras
in a second battle.'

And terrified,
they retreated into the City of the Asuras.

Thus, bhikkhus, was Sakka victor by rightesousness."

Sutta 7

Nadubbhiya Suttaṃ

Not Treacherously

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One discoursed to the brethren, saying:

"Bhikkhus!"

"Lord!" they responded.

The Exalted One said:

"Long time ago, bhikkhus,
to Sakka, ruler of the gods,
meditating in private,
this idea arose in his mind:

'Whoever may be my enemy,
even him I may not betray.'

Then Vepacitti, ruler of the Asuras, discerning in mind the mind of Sakka,
came up to him.

And Sakka saw him coming [289] from afar,
and seeing him, called:

'Stop, Vepacitti,
thou art my prisoner!'

'That which was just now in thy mind,
dear sir, renounce it not!'

'Thou mayest swear, Vepacitti,
that I will use no treachery.'[26]

[Vepacitti: —]

'The evil fruit that from false speaking comes,
The evil fruit from blasphemy of saints,[27]
The evil fruit from perfidy to friends,[28]
The evil fruit borne by ingratitude:[29]
That evil fruit, O consort of Sujā,
He reaps who showeth treachery to thee.'"

Sutta 8

Verocana Asur'Inda Suttaṃ

Verocana, Lord of Asuras, or Aims

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now on that occasion
the Exalted One had gone at noon
to take siesta,
and was meditating.

Then Sakka, ruler of gods,
and Verocana,[30] lord of Asuras,

came to visit the Exalted One,
and waited,
leaning one against each doorpost.[31]

'A man should only strive until
His purpose[32] is accomplishèd.
[290] A purpose shines when perfected: — Verocana doth utter this.'

[Sakka: —]

'A man should only strive until
His purpose is accomplished.
A purpose shines when perfected.
Nothing forbearance doth excel.'

[Verocna: —]

'All beings have some task in view
Now here now there as they are fit,
Food that is excellently blent
Will every creature satisfy.[33]
Our tasks when finished look their best: — Verocana doth speak this word.'

[Sakka: —]

'All beings have some aim in view,
Now here now there as they are fit.
Food that is excellently blent
Will every creature satisfy.
Nothing forbearance doth excel.'"

Sutta 9

Araññāyatanaisi Suttaṃ

Forest Seers, or Perfume

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Long time ago, bhikkhus,
many seers,
virtuous and lovely in character,
dwelt together in leaf-huts
in a wild forest.[34]

[291] And Sakka, ruler of the gods,
and Vepacitti, lord of Asuras,
came to visit them.

Then Vepacitti,
having put on this buskined shoes,[35]
his sword hanging at his side,
with his canopy of state borne over his head,
entered the hermitage by the principal gate;
whereby, having insulted[36] thos seers,
virtuous and lovely in character,
he transgressed.

But Sakka,
having put off his buskined shoes,
given his sword to others,
and caused his canopy of state to be folded,
entered the hermitage by a gate,[37]
and took his stand to leeward of those seers,
virtuous and lovely in character,
rendering them homage with clasped hands.

Then, bhikkhus, those seers,
virtuous and lovely in character,
addressed this verse to Sakka, ruler of the gods: —

'The scent of seers long vowed to holy things,
Fall'n from their bodies by the breeze is born,
And wafted hence to thee, O thousand-eyed![38]
The scent of seers is foul, O king of gods!'

[Sakka: —]

'The scent of seers long vowed to holy things,
Fall'n from their bodies may the breezes waft,
Like wreath of varied blossoms on the head.
This is the scent we look for, reverend sirs,
Nought is there here to bring the gods disgust.'"[39]

---

[292]

Sutta 10

Isayosamuddaka Suttaṃ

Seers of the Seaside, or Sambara

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Long time ago, bhikkhus,
many seers,
virtuous and lovely in character,
were living together in leaf-huts
on the seashore.[40]

Now at that time, bhikkhus,
a battle was raging
between the gods and the Asuras.

And in those seers the thought arose: —

'The gods are righteous,
the Asuras are unrighteous.

There may be danger
even for us[41]
from the Asura.

What if we were now to go to Sambara,[42]
lord of Asuras,
and ask for apledge of safety?'[43]

Then those Rishis,
as quickly as a strong man
might stretch out his bent arm,
or bend in his arm stretched out,
vanished from their leaf-huts on the seashore
and appeared before Sambara.

Then, bhikkhus, those Rishis,
virtuous and lovely of character,
addressed Sambara, lord of Asuras,
in a verse: —

'We Rishis, come to Sambaraa,
Entreat of him a safety-pledge.
Do as thou listest. Give that we
In peril or in safety dwell.'

[Sambara: —]

'Safety is not for such as ye!
Who Sakka serve choose ill their time.
To you entreating safety-pledge,
Terror is all that I do give.'

[293] [Rishis: —]

'And dost thou only peril give
To us who ask for safety-pledge?
Lo! then accepting this from thee,
May never-dying fear be thine!
According to the seed that's sown
So is the fruit ye reap therefrom.
Doer of good [will gather] good,
Doer of evil evil [reap].
Sown is the seed and planted well.
Thou shalt enjoy the fruit thereof.'

Then, bhikkhus, those Rishis,
virtuous and lovely of character,
having laid a curse on Sambara, ruler of the Asuras,
as a strong man might stretch out his bent arm,
or bend in his arm stretched out,
vanished from the presence of Sambara
and reapeared in their leaf-huts on the seashore.

But Sambara,
on whom those Rishis had laid a curse,
that very night woke up thrice
seized with terror."[44]

II

Sutta 11

Devā (Satta-Vata-Pada) Suttaṃ

The Gods, or The Rules

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

"In the days, behikkhus, when Sakka, ruler of the gods,
was a man,[45]
he undertook and carried out
seven rules of conduct,
whereby he attained his celestial sovereignty.

What were the seven?

[294] 1. 'As long as I live,
may I maintain my parents.

2. As long as I live,
may I revere the head of the family.

3. As long as I live,
may I use gentle language.

4. As long as I live,
may I utter no slander.

5. As long as I live,
with a mind rid of stain and selfishness,
may I conduct myself in the home
with generosity,
with clean hands,[46]
delighting in renunciation,
amenable to petitions,[47]
delighting in sharing gifts.

6. As long as i live,
may I speak the truth.

7. As long as I live,
may I not give way to anger:
if anger should rise,
may I swiftly repress it.'

By undertaking and carrying out these rules
when he was a human being,
Sakka attained his celestial position."

Whoso his mother and his father keeps,
The senior in his family reveres,
Converseth gently and with soft-toned speech,
And all that makes for slander puts aside,
Who sets himself all meanness to suppress,
A man of truth, his temper 'neath control: —
On such an one the Three and Thirty Gods
Do verily confer the name: Good Man.[48]

Sutta 12

Dutiya Devā (Satta-Vata-Pada) Suttaṃ

The Gods (2)

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

"When Sakka, ruler of the gods,
was formerly a human being, bhikkhus,
he was a son of brahmins named Magha,
and hence one of his names is
'of the Maghas.'[49]

As such, he [295] bestowed gifts from town to town,
hence one of his names is Purindada:
'townlord-giver.'

As such he gave munificiently,
hence one of his names is Sakka —
'thorough' (sakkaccaṇ).

As such he gave dwelling-places,
hence one of his names is Vāsava:
'house-owner.'

Sakka can in a moment
think of a thousand matters,
hence one of his names is
'Thousand-eyed' (sahass'akkha).

Sakka became consort
to the Asura maiden named Sujā,
hence one of his names is
'Consort of Sujā' (Sujampati).

Sakka rules over and governs
the Thirty-three Gods,
hence one of his name is
'Ruler[50] of the Gods'.

In the days, behikkhus,
when Sakka, ruler of the gods,
was a man, he undertook and carried out
seven rules of conduct,
whereby he attained his celestial sovereignty.

What were the seven?

1. 'As long as I live,
may I maintain my parents.

2. As long as I live,
may I revere the head of the family.

3. As long as I live,
may I use gentle language.

4. As long as I live,
may I utter no slander.

5. As long as I live,
with a mind rid of stain and selfishness,
may I conduct myself in the home
with generosity,
with clean hands,
delighting in renunciation,
amenable to petitions,
delighting in sharing gifts.

6. As long as i live,
may I speak the truth.

7. As long as I live,
may I not give way to anger:
if anger should rise,
may I swiftly repress it.'

By undertaking and carrying out these rules
when he was a human being,
Sakka attained his celestial position.

Whoso his mother and his father keeps,
The senior in his family reveres,
Converseth gently and with soft-toned speech,
And all that makes for slander puts aside,
Who sets himself all meanness to suppress,
A man of truth, his temper 'neath control: —
On such an one the Three and Thirty Gods
Do verily confer the name: Good Man.

Sutta 13

Mahāli (Satta-Vata-Pada) Suttaṃ

The Gods (3)

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Vesālī,
in the Great Wood
at the Gabled Hall.

And Mahāli the Licchavite[51]
went to see the Exalted One and,
saluting him,
sat down at one side.

So seated, he said:

"Hath the Exalted One seen Sakka,
ruler of the gods?"

"I have seen him, Mahāli."

"Was that perhaps someone, your reverence,
who looked like Sakka,
for Sakka is surely hard to see?"

"I know Sakka, Mahāli,
and those Norms that Sakka set himself,
by the undertaking and carrying out of which he attained to his celestial position —
I know them also.[52]

When Sakka, ruler of the gods,
was formerly a human being, bhikkhus,
he was a son of brahmins named Magha,
and hence one of his names is:
'of the Maghas.'

As such, he bestowed gifts from town to town,
hence one of his names is Purindada:
'townlord-giver.'

As such he gave munificiently,
hence one of his names is Sakka:
'thorough' (sakkaccaṇ).

As such he gave dwelling-places,
hence one of his names is Vāsava:
'house-owner.'

Sakka can in a moment
think of a thousand matters,
hence one of his names is
'Thousand-eyed' (sahass'akkha).

Sakka became consort
to the Asura maiden named Sujā,
hence one of his names is
'Consort of Sujā' (Sujampati).

Sakka rules over and governs
the Thirty-three Gods,
hence one of his name is
'Ruler of the Gods'.

In the days, behikkhus,
when Sakka, ruler of the gods,
was a man, he undertook and carried out
seven rules of conduct,
whereby he attained his celestial sovereignty.

What were the seven?

1. 'As long as I live,
may I maintain my parents.

2. As long as I live,
may I revere the head of the family.

3. As long as I live,
may I use gentle language.

4. As long as I live,
may I utter no slander.

5. As long as I live,
with a mind rid of stain and selfishness,
may I conduct myself in the home
with generosity,
with clean hands,
delighting in renunciation,
amenable to petitions,
delighting in sharing gifts.

6. As long as i live,
may I speak the truth.

7. As long as I live,
may I not give way to anger:
if anger should rise,
may I swiftly repress it.'

By undertaking and carrying out these rules
when he was a human being,
Sakka attained his celestial position."

Whoso his mother and his father keeps,
The senior in his family reveres,

Converseth gently and with soft-toned speech,
And all that makes for slander puts aside,
Who sets himself all meanness to suppress,
A man of truth, his temper 'neath control: —
On such an one the Three and Thirty Gods
Do verily confer the name: Good Man.
Do verily confer the name: Good Man.

Sutta 14

Daḷidda Suttaṃ

The Poor Man

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Rājagaha,
in the Bamboo Grove,
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

And there he addressed the brethren as follows: —

[296] "Long time ago, bhikkhus,
a certain man dwelt in this Rājagaha,
and he was poor,

destitute,[53]
and of no account.

He embraced the faith of the Norm and Discipline
set forth by the Tathāgatas,
and the morals
and the learning
and the charity
and the wisdom thereof.

And because he did so,
he was reborn, after death
and the dissolution of the body,
in the world of bliss and light,
into the communion of the Three and Thirty Gods,
where he outshone the other gods
in beauty and in glory.

Thereupon, bhikkhus, the Thirty-three Gods were verily vexed and fretted
and were consumed with indignation
at this strange and unheard-of event,
that a poor pauper of no account,
reborn from the world of men,
should so outshine them.

But Sakka spoke to them saying:

'Be not vexed, dear sirs,
at this son of the gods,
for he, while yet a human being,
embraced the faith
of the Norm and Discipline set forth by Tathāgatas, likewise the moral code,
the learning,

charity,
and wisdom.

Hence it is that he doth outshine you all.'

And in appeasing the Thirty-three, Sakka,
ruler of the gods,
on that occasion spoke these verses: —

'Whose faith in the Tathāgata
Is firm and well-established,
Whose moral code is pure and good,
To Ariyans dear and by them praised,
Who for the Brotherhood is filled With loyalty, whose vision's straight: —
"Not poor that man," they rightly say,
Nor sterile is the life he lives.
Wherefore the wise should cultivate,
Teaching of Buddhas born in mind,
Faith, virtue, loyal piety,
And clear discernment of the Truths.'"[54]

---

[297]

Sutta 15

Rāmaṇeyyaka Suttaṃ

Enjoyable

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

[Ed.: There] Sakka, ruler of the gods,
once came to visit the Exalted One,
and saluting him,
stood at one side.

So standing, he said:

"What, lord, is by its situation enjoyable?"

"The varied beauties[55] of the park, the grove,
Or lakes of lotuses and lovely line
For man's enjoyment are of little worth.
In village or the wild, in vale, on hill,
Where'er the 'men of worth' — the Arahants —
Their dwelling make, that is thespot
By situation most enjoyable."[56]

Sutta 16

Yajamāna Suttaṃ

For Them That Sacrifice

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Rājagaha,
on Vulture's Peak Hill.

And Sakka, ruler of the gods,
came to visit him,
and, saluting him,
stood at one side.

So standing, he addressed the Exalted One in the verse:

"For mankind offering sacrifice,
For creatures fain to earn reward,
Who work good deeds for life renewed;
Where do the gifts they offer here
Entail herafter ample fruit?"

[The Exalted One: —]

"The four who travel on the Paths,
The four who in Fruition stand,[57]
This Brotherhood whose way lies straight,
In virtue and in insight trained: — [298] For mankind offering sacrifice,
For creatures fain to earn reward,
Who work good deeds for life renewed;
Whate'er they to that Order give Entails hereafter ample fruit."[58]

Sutta 17

Vandanā Suttaṃ

Worship

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

On one occasion,
when at the Jeta Vana,
The Exalted One had retired at noon
to take siesta, meditating.

Then Sakka, ruler of the gods,
and Brahmā Sahampati[59]
came to see the Exalted One,
and stood leaning each against a doorpost.[60]

And Sakka, ruler of the gods,
uttered this verse
in the presence of the Exalted One: —

"Arise, O Hero, Victor in the fight,
Whose burden lieth low,[61] who hast no debts,[62]
  Walk o'er the world!
Wholly emancipated is thy heart,
Like moon at large on night of fifteenth day."

[Brahmā Sahampati: —]

"Nay, ruler of the gods,
not so is the Tathāgata to be worshipped,
but on this wise: —

Arise, O Hero, Victor in the fight,
Who hast no debts, Lord of the Cravan,
[299] Walk o'er the world,
And teach the Norm,
Exalted One! there are who'll understand."

Sutta 18

Sakka-Namassana Suttaṃ

Sakka's Worshipping (1)

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

"Long time ago, bhikkhus,
Sakka, ruler of the gods,
summoned his charioteer Mātali, saying:

'Harness, good Mātali,
the thousand thoroughbreds[63]
to our chariot,
and let us go to the Gardens
that we may see their beauty.'

'So be it, lord,' responded Mātali,
and obeyed.

When the chariot was ready,
he sent word to Sakka, saying:

'Harnessed, dear sir,
are the thousand horoughbreds
to the chariot
and await thy pleasure.'

Then Sakka, ruler of the gods,
descending from the Vejayanta palace,
with clasped hands
did obeisance toward the different quarters.

And Mātali the charioteer
addressed to him the verses: —

'They of the Tiple Lore do honour thee,
And all the nobly born that dwell on earth,
The Four Great Kings[64] and the renowned Thrice Ten.[65]
But who may he, this yakkha,[66] be to whom Thou, Sakka, dost such signal honour pay?'

[Sakka: —]

'They of the Triple Lore do honour me,
And all the nobly born that dwell on earth,
[300] The Four Great Kings and the renowned Thrice Ten.
But I my homage render unto them

Who, in all virtuous habit graduates,
Long-time experts in mastery of mind,
Leaving the world, by highest motives led,[67]
Find in the higher life support and goal.

And householders besides, who merit work,
Laymen of virtue and of piety,
Who with integrity maintain their wife,[68]
To them I pay my homage, Mātali.'

[Mātali: —]

'Yea, I have heard, the best in all the world
Are these whom thou, Sakka, thus honourest.
I too do render homage unto them
Whom thou thus honourest, O Vāsava!'"

Thus spake he of the Maghas, thus the king
Of gods, Sujampati, and having paid
To all the divers quarters reverence, Mounted his chariot and led the way."[69]

Sutta 19

Dutiya Sakka-Namassana Suttaṃ

Sakka's Worshipping (2)

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

"Long time ago, bhikkhus,
Sakka, ruler of the gods,
summoned his charioteer Mātali, saying:

'Harness, good Mātali, the thousand thoroughbreds
to our chariot,
and let us go to the Gardens
that we may see their beauty.'

'So be it, lord,' responded Mātali,
and obeyed.

When the chariot was ready,
he sent word to Sakka, saying:

'Harnessed, dear sir,
are the thousand thoroughbreds
to the chariot
and await thy pleasure.'

Then Sakka, ruler of the gods,
descending from [301] the Vejayanta palace,
with clasped hands
did obeisance to the Exalted One.

And Mātali the charioteer
addressed to him the verse:

'Thee, Vāsava, both gods and men revere.
But who may he, this yakkha, be to whom
Thou, Sakka, dost such signal honour pay?'

[Sakka: —]

'The perfectly Enlightened, in this world
With all its gods, illustrious Master, him
I honour and revere, O Mātali.

They who have given up passion, enmity,
And ignorance, the Ar'hants poison-purged
Ihonour and revere, O Mātali.

And they who by suppressing lust and hate
And out of ignorance emerging follow on,
As learners[70] finding joy in pulling down,[71]
And training with allzeal and strenuousness: —
I honour and revere them, Mātali.'

[Mātali: —]

'Yea, I have heard, the best in all the world
Are these whom thou, Sakka, thus honourest.
I too do render homage unto them
Whom thou thus honourest, O Vāsava!'

Thus spake he of the Maghas, thus the king
Of gods, Sujampati, and having paid
To the Exalted One due reverence, Mounted his chariot and led the way."

---

[302]

Sutta 20

Tatiya Sakka-Namassana Suttaṃ

Sakka's Worshipping (3)

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

"Long time ago, bhikkhus,
Sakka, ruler of the gods,
summoned his charioteer Mātali, saying:

'Harness, good Mātali,
the thousand thoroughbreds
to our chariot,
and let us go to the Gardens
that we may see their beauty.'

'So be it, lord,' responded Mātali,
and obeyed.

When the chariot was ready,
he sent word to Sakka, saying:

'Harnessed, dear sir,
are the thousand thoroughbreds

to the chariot
and await thy pleasure.'

Then Sakka, ruler of the gods,
descending from the Vejayanta palace,
with clasped hands
did obeisance to the Order of Brethren.

And Mātali the charioteer
addressed him in the verse: —

'Surely 't is they should thee revere,
These men who live in bodies foul.
In carrion sunk,[72] who hunger, thirst.
What in these homeless houseless folk Canst see to envy, Vāsava?
Delcare to us how Rishis live;
Thus wil't be ours to hear thy voice.'[73]

[Sakka: —]

'This in these homeless, houseless folk
I see to envy, Mātali: —
When from the village they depart,
They go their way free from all care.
In granary they nothing hoard,
Nor storehouse-jar nor crate [is theirs].
Others make ready what they seek.
Hence they maintain their goodly ways,
With eloquent words in steadfastness,
Or silent in serenity.[74]

[303] The gods contend with Asuras,
And men fight alway, Mātali.
Non-combatant mid combatants,
At peace where others go self-armed.

Not laying hold'mong them that grip: —
These do I reverence, Mātali.'

[Mātali: —]

'Yea, I have heard, the best in all the world
Are these whom thou, Sakka, thus honourest.
I too do render homage unto them
Whom thou thus honourest, O Vāsava!'

Thus spake he of the Maghas, thus the king
Of gods, Sujampati, and having paid
To the Exalted One due reverence,
Mounted his chariot and led the way."

III
The Sakka-Quintuplet[75]

Sutta 21

Jhatvā Suttaṃ

What Must We Slay?[76]

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

At Jeta Vana, Sakka, ruler of the gods,
once came to visit the Exalted One,
and saluting him,
stood at one side
and addressed him in the verse: —

"What must we slay if we would happy live?
What must we slay, if we would weep no more?
What is't above all other things, whereof
The slaughter thou approvest, GOTAMA?"

[304] [To whom the Exalted One: —]

"Wrath must ye slay if ye would happy live.
Wrath must ye slay if ye would weep no more.
Of anger, Vāsava, with poisoned source,
And fevered climax, murderously sweet,
That is the slaughter by the Ariyans praised;
That must ye slay in sooth, to weep no more."

Sutta 22

Dubbaṇṇiya Suttaṃ

Little Ugly

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

"Long time ago, bhikkhus, a certain yakkha,
ill-favoured,
a pot-bellied dwarf[77]
came to be seated on the throne of Sakka,
ruler of the gods.

Thereat the Thirty-three Gods were annoyed,
vexed
and consumed with indignation
at this strange and unheard-of procedure.

Now in proportion as they became annoyed,
vexed,
indignant,
that yakkha grew ever handsomer
and more presentable
and more attractive.

Then they went and told Sakka what had happened.

Ad they asked:

'Will this, then, dear sir,
be a yakkha who feeds on anger?'

Then Sakka came up to that anger-nourished yakkha,
and draping his robe over one shoulder,
and kneeling on his right knee,
bent forth his clasped hands towards him,
calling his own name thrice:

'I, dear sir, am Sakka, ruler of the gods![78]

I, dear sir, am Sakka, ruler of the gods!

I, dear sir, am Sakka, ruler of the gods!'

Now in proportion, as Sakka did this,
that yakkha became more and more ill-favoured and dwarfed
and pot-bellied,
till he vanished there and then.

Thereupon Sakka, taking his seat on his throne,
appeasing the Thirty-three Gods in that hour,
addressed them in these verses: —

'Nay, not so easily put out am I,
Nor in the whirl of passin lightly drawn.[79]
Long time ye know[80] it is since I was wroth;
In me wrath findeth no abiding place.
[305] To harsh and angry words I give no breath,
Nor to my creed may I inconstant prove.[81]
But I restrain and hold myself in check,
Heedful of my own spiritual growth.'"

Sutta 23

Māyā Suttaṃ

Magic Art

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

"Long time ago, bhikkhus, Vepacitti, lord of the Asuras, was ill[82]
and suffering,
and much afflicted.

And Sakka, ruler of the gods, went to Vepacitti
to inquire after his health.

Vepacitti saw him coming afar off, and said:

'Heal me, O ruler of the gods!'

'Then do thou, Vepacitti,
tell me Sambara's magic art.'[83]

'Wait, dear sir,
till I have held consultation.'

Then Vepacitti consulted the Asuras, saying:

'May I, dear sirs,
tell Sakka, ruler of the gods,
Sambara's magic art?'

'Nay, dear sir, do not tell him!'

Then, bhikkhus, Vepacitti, lord of Asuras,
addressed this verse to Sakka, ruler of the gods: —

'Thou of the Maghas, Sakka, king of gods,
Sujampati, the conjuror's magic art
Leads to the dread abyss where Sambara
The Asura hath been a century.'"[84]

---

[306]

Sutta 24

Accaya Suttaṃ

Gentleness at Offence

THUS HAVE I HEARD:

On one occasion, at the Jeta Vana,
two of the brethren had a dispute,
in which one of them gave offence.

Aware of this,
he confessed his offence
to the other as such,
but the latter would not accept his apology.

Now many of the brethren went
and reported this to the Exalted One, who said:

"Bhikkhus, there are two fools:
he who does not see his offence as such
and he who does not accept the other's right ruling.

A wise pair were two of whom this one
saw the offence as such,
and that one
accepted the other's right ruling.

Long time ago, bhikkhus, Sakka, ruler of the gods,
when calming the Thirty-three Gods in the Sudhammā Hall,
spoke in that hour this verse: —

'Let anger come beneath your sway.
Be there in friendship no decay.
Blame not where censure is not due.
And be no slander spread by you.
By wrath bad folk are overthrown
As if an avalanche came down.'"

---

[307]

Sutta 25

Akkodha Suttaṃ or Akkodha-Avihiṃsā Suttaṃ

Mildness (and Kindness)

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There he addressed the brethren: —

"Long time ago, bhikkhus,
Sakka, ruler of the gods,
when calming the Thirty-three Gods
in the Sudhammā Hall,
spoke in that hour this verse: —

'Let anger not o'ermaster you,
And rage ye not 'gainst them that rage.
For love and kindness [felt and shown][85]
Ever 'mong Ariyans find a home.
Bad folk by wrath are overthrown
As when an avalanche comes down.'"

---

[1] B. seems to be ignorant of the bygone lustre of the word Asura — as = Ahura [mazda], and a name of title of Varuṇa He gives his traditional version of the immediate antecedents of Sakka, as a virtuous, public-spirited citizen of a Magadha village, and of his rebirth in the lowest deva-world (on Mt. Sineru, or Meru) as its King. Other versions are given in the Kulāvaka Jātaka (No. 31) and in the Mahāli-pañha story of the Comy. on Dhp. ver. 30 (i, 263 f.). Merely touching on the good works of Sakka as the brahmin Magha, and on his seven Rules of Conduct (see 2, §1 below), he names 33, not 30 co-operating fellow-citizens who were also reborn, as they died, in the same heaven, as if wishing it to be inferred that these became the '33 gods' immediately beneath Sakka (see below, §3). We may presume that, for Buddhists, the thrones and powers of the 33 were relative permanencies, like the Sakkatta (Sakka-hood) of Sakka, occupied successively by long-lived devas. B.'s version of the Asura wars is, that certain devas tried to get the vigorous and virtuous new rulers into their power by doping them with gaṇḍapāna. Sakka warned his comrades to abstain; the plotters alone got dead drunk and were thrown down Sineru. They formed a kingdom below, and lived a-sura, without strong drink, trying from time to time to regain the lost Paradise.

[2] We do not meet ellsewhere with Suvīra.

[3] Varuṇ disaṇ.

[4] 'Say' is supplied by the Comy.

[5] A-kammena. B. is singularly wanting over these interesting verses, combining as they do (1) the doctrine of the non-accumulation of Karma (cf. p. 301, n. 2), good or bad, with (2) the primary importance of strenusous persevering activity of a right sort: training in the Paths for no earthly or celestial reward.

[6] He is called Sakka's son; presumably the Susīma, son of the devas, of II, 3, §9.

[7] This Sutta was translated by the late E.R. Gooneratne in the Ceylon National Review, 1906. No graphic device is described by B. as forming the agga, or crest of the banner of these vast devas — Sakka's was 250 yojanas in length, himself and his chariot of proportional size — but from it the wind elicited music. Hence it served both as a bagpipes and as a visible rallying point.

[8] This triplet of terms occurs in the Māra and Bhikkhunī Suttas, but not in the other Nikāyas.

[9] This interesting trio are represented as invoked in the Tevijja Sutta, Dialogues, i, 310. On the first three, see Macdonell's Vedic Mythology. Isāna is an older name for Rudra, called euphemistically Siva (Böthlingk and Roth). So distorted had their myths become for B., that he assigns them places immediately below Sakka, and hence presumably among the 33!

[10] See this sequence of terms, III, 3, §4.

[11] Those disciples reckoned to have attained one or other of the Four Paths or Four Fruits.

[12] Narāsabha, for nara-usabha. Cf. Dhp. ver. 422, and Comy. iv, 231): 'by his undauntedness.'

[13] Pronounced chitti.

[14] 'Both hands and both feet, the neck making the fifth,' and B. adds the curious comment: 'these five fetters appear to the eye like a web of rushes, or a spider's web, and obstruct movement. By thought only was he bound by them, by thought (cittena) only was he loosed.

[15] B.'s list of scurrilous epithets is not without interest: 'Thou art a thief, a fool, a bungler (mūḷho), a camel, a bullock, a donkey, a hell-man, a beast; there's neither heaven nor hell to be expected by such as thou.'

[16] Paṭisayyuje.

[17] See below, p. 295.

[18] The metaphors are a little mixed. Ajjhārūhati (= ajjhottharati), 'press you hard,' is to climb on to and over you,' 'spread over,' and is used for e.g. parasitic plants. Jāt. iii, 399. In the second figure: the herd watching two bulls fighting, will join in pursuit quickly enough when one of the two yields and runs away. Comy.

[19] Here is another instance of the use of the pregnant term attha in two shades of meaning. The Pali pada is sadattha-paramā atthā. (Cf. above, X, §12.) I take sad-attha- (sakattha-, Comy.) in the sense of vuddhi, '[spiritual] growth,' and atthā in the sense of kāraṇā, 'matters,' 'grounds,''causes.'

[20] Bhiyyo.

[21] These verses occurred in VII, 1, §§2,3.

[22] There is a pleasant humour in putting into Vepacitti's mouth the verses in which Mātali arraigned him (see §4), but this is lost on B.

[23] I take the positive forms; none of the negatives givenin the Pali: non-force, etc. — would appeal to us who prefer positive forms of expression.

[24] Here the Comy. gives, in its own words, another portion of the Kulāvaka Jātaka (see above, p. 279, n.1).

[25] The Simbali Vana, Silk-cotton-tree Wood (Bombax Heptaphyllum, according to the Wilsonian botanical lore incororated by Childers in his Dictionary) stood on the slope of Mt. Sineru, and was the abode of Garuḍa or roc-birds (cf. VI, 1, §6). These were gret creatures, hence their nests torn by the enormous chariot-pole of the deva's chariot is not a fancy so out of proportion as it might at first seem.

[26] Sapassu. Comy.: 'I being without perfidy, make thou an oath [on it].'

[27] 'Like that of the Kokālikan' (see VI, 1, §10). Comy.

[28] 'As in the Great Ape Jātaka.' Comy. The Mahā-Kapi Jātaka, No. 407, iii, p.225 f., is meant.

[29] B. instances Devadatta's case.

[30] Presumably a name of Vepacitti, meaning the Shining One or sun. B. passes him over. In the text-summary he is Virocano.

[31] Cf. above, VI, 1, §§7,8.

[32] Once more the elusive attha*. B. here paraphrases it by kicca; function, task, duty, something to be done, a meaning he did not include in the six given above (X, §12). Atthajātā ti kiccajātā. 'From dogs and jackals upward, there is no being who is a-kiccajāto. (Is this 'born without a task,' or 'for whom no function has arisen'?). His definition comes nearest to that meaning which he calls 'vicakkhaṇa,' and means 'discerned need': atthi me attho... 'I need. ...'

[33] The figure is a little obscure; the achieved task is likened to a skilfully compounded, well-cooked rice-pudding, not fit to be eaten till ready.

[34] B. places this in the Himālayas in a charming spot fitted with day and night 'cloisters' etc. These two persons, father- and son-in-law (janā jāmātika-sasurā), he goes on, were sometimes at war, sometimes in concord (ekato caranti); just then they were the latter.'

[35] B. explains aṭaliyo as gaṇangaṇūpāhanā. Cf. Vin. Texts ii, 14, n. 1: — 'with many linings' (?soles). My guess is that they were buskins, state-footwear, or war ditto. The word occurs in the Assalāyana-Sutta (M. ii, 155), where B. has the same comment.

[36] Apabyāmato karitvā. See Points of Controversy, p. 270, n. 2.

[37] We should have expected 'side-door.' See above, p. 233. n.3.

[38] Sahassanetta, a variant of Sahassakkha. See list of his names below, 295.

[39] The perfume of virtue is described in Dhp. ver. 54. The smell of mankind, washed or unwashed, is said to 'offend the gods a hundred leagues away.' Dialogues, ii, 355. Cf. below, p. 302.

[40] A mythical spot by 'the great sea of the Cakkavāla, on sands glistening like sheets (paṭṭa) of gold. Comy.

[41] B., reading no, explains: siyā pi amhākaṇ.

[42] I.e. Vepacitti. See below, XI, 3, §3.

[43] I.e. a 'non-fear-gift.' Bhaya has the double sense of 'fear' and 'thing feared' or 'peril.' The gift apparently consisted simply in the king's promise to give orders for their being unmolested, when the fighting came their way. Sakka, B. says, had already conferred (mantetvā) with the Rishis, and the Asuras, wrathful lest this meant an enlisting of Rishis' magic powers, had on one occasion smashed up their hermitage.

[44] And this, writes B. graphically amplifying the slender narrative of Sambara's nightmares, is how, his mind getting deranged (vipati-citto), he came to be called Vepacitti (crazy-nerve). Cf. below, 3, §3. That Rishis, armed with their weapon of effective cursing, should seek protection seems incongruous, but it is a common trait in the European fairy-story for the witch, etc., to crave a boon.

[45] See Kulāvaka Jātaka and XI, 1, §1 above. Cf. Milinda's similar 8 rules, also called vatapadāni (p. 90; trs. i, 138).

[46] B. takes this literally, 'hands always washen in order to give gifts.'

[47] 'Worthy of being solicited (by others), or devoted to the practice of soliciting.' Comy. Sakka, or Magha, being rich, this can only mean 'devoted to raising subscriptions.'

[48] Quoted in Dhammapada Comy.. i, 265.

[49] See Kulāvaka Jātaka, and Dhammapada Comy., i, 263 f., where the Buddha is made to address Mahāli (see next Sutta). For a more scholarly comment on these titles see Rhys Davids in Dialogues, ii, 297, introduction to Sakku-Pañha-Sutta. The titles omitted above are Kosiya and Sahassanetta (see above, p. 291).

[50] Devānam-inda, On Inda and Indra, see op. et loc. cit.

[51] Cf. Jātaka, iv, 148 f., and Dhp. Comy., references in Index (vol. v.).

[52] 'Giving these as a sample 'of his great knowledge.' Comy. B. refers to a fuller account of this little episode given in his Comy. on the Dīgha Nikāya (Sumangala-Vilāsinī). The dialogue occurs almost verbatim in the Sutta in Dhammapada Comy., i, 263 f. (on vr.30).

[53] B. explains this term (kapaṇa) as 'one who has attained to pity.' Cf. the triplet in Suppabuddha's story, Udāna, V, 3.

[54] All these lines are in Ang. ii, 57. B.'s Comy. on them there (Mano-rathapūraṇī) explains 'loyaliety' (pasāda) as faith in the Buddha, Norm, Order, and dhammadassanaṇ as translated here (he Four Truths)

[55] Cetyā 'in the sense of variegated, of many colours.' Comy.

[56] In the Dhp. Comy. (ii, 195) on ver. 98, these four lines are ascribed to the Buddha, but in the Theragāthā (Pss. of the Brethren, vers. 991, 992), to Sāriputta. But in both works they are spoken concerning his younger brother Revata, and his love for wild or desolate places.

[57] See above, p. 282, n. 2.

[58] Cf. above, pp. 103, 123 f.

[59] Cf. above, VI, 1, §1 f. and compare the verses in that Sutta. It was 'up' to B. to discuss the correction of Sakka's version by the 'higher criticism' of the Brahmā, but he passes it by. The latter insists on the missionary emphasis in the classic and orthodox version. He had interceded with the new Buddha to bring abut his great mission.

[60] Cf. above other august door-keepers, VI, 1, §§ 7, 8; XI, 1, §8.

[61] An epithet applied to the Arahant. Cf. a list of such, Points of Controversy, p. 113.

[62] Anothr such epithet, but confined to the Thera-therī-gāthā (Brethren, vers. 789, 882; Pss. of the Sisters, vrs. 2, 110). 'Debtless bliss' is applied also to a layman in Ang., ii, 69.

[63] Lit. the 'thousand-yoked thoroughbred-chariot.' On 'thousand' associated with Sakka, cf. two of his names above (2, §2). Possibly a term of solar-myth origin. 'Bred' is here to be understood in the sense of being thorughly trained, of 'good breeding,' rather than 'good pedigree.' Possibly it needed a horse of good strain to achieve that rational development claimed by B. (and the Pali term) for a highly trained horse. See above, pp.11, n. 1; and 38 (iii).

[64] Lower deities of the four quarters. See Dialogues, ii, 242.

[65] See above, p. 9, *n.*1.

[66] See above, p. 262. n. 1.

[67] Sammā, who have 'rightly, ' or 'perfectly' left, i.e. from saddhā, 'confidence' in their object and course, not from lower motives.

[68] Representing 'the family.' Comy.

[69] At the head of his deva-retinue.' Comy.

[70] Those in the three lower Paths are being described (see Compendium, p. 217, § 10; Bud. Psych. Ethics, p. 95 f.). The Arahant was a-sekha: 'non-learner,' or adept.

[71] See above, p. 280, n. 1. Bud. Psych. Ethics, p. 82, n. 2.

[72] These terms, writes B., may refer to the material matrix, or to their own bodies. The gods were animistic, as was shown in the First Chapter, and would speak naturally of the man, soul, self, as 'immersed in' the body.

[73] Sakka's voice was very sweet, like the sound of a golden bell proceeding from the exquisite screen of his teeth. Comy.

[74] These verses resemble Rohinī's apologia for recluses (Sisters, LXVII). Three of the lines: 'In granary, etc.' are included in her verses. But Pischel's edition (PTS) of the Therigāthā gives pariniṭṭhitaṇ 'completed,' where the Saṃyutta has paraniṭṭhitaṇ, 'made ready by another.' Their alms, explains B., are 'cooked' in 'other' folk's houses, made ready by 'others' — an earthy, but safer substitute for the loftier (and grammaticallly forced) guess of my earlier translation.
Again, the Therīgāthā has osenti for openti = pa'ikkhipanti: 'deposit' ('hoard').

[75] The second appended group of Five in these collections of Suttas. See Māra Suttas, p. 147.

[76] The Sutta appears for the fourth time (I, 8, §1; II, 1, §3; VII; 1, §1).

[77] Okoṭimako, explained as both lakunṭako and mahodaro, in fact, quite a Punch-silhouette. This Sutta is translated in Warren's Buddhism in Translations, 426. The Master is in a humorous vein.

[78] See III, 2, §1.

[79] Kodhāvattena, so Comy., not -vaṭṭena.

[80] Vo, dative of reference, obsolete with us. I give the nearest substitute.

[81] B. is silent over this not very obvious clause. But I think Feer is right and Warren wrong: 'And ne'er proclaim my virtue's fame' (dhammāni). This neuter plural is not unknown, but the proclaiming is precisely what the dear good god was doing! I read dhammā as equivalent to the instrumental dhammena. And nikittaye, 'I may not be false, or inconsistent to,' is good Sanskrit, though not yet found in Pali. Sakka's Dhamma (norm or creed) was especially Forbearance.

[82] See above, 1, §10. 'Through the Rishis' curse.' Comy.

[83] Sambari(yā) māyā. Juggling, or ? white magic is all that māyā ever means in early buddhist literature of in Theravāda literature. Asura-vidyā is used in the .Srauta Sūtras as a synonym for māyā. See Vedic Index, Macdonell and Keith, s.v.

[84] Here is apparently a curious anomaly in B.'s comments. (1) He has told us that Vepacitti's real name was Sambara, Inda, or ruler of the Asuras (1, §10). (2) He calls the magician or conjurer whose art is known to Vepacitti, or is Vepacitti's, and who practised it, with direful results, Sambaro Asurindo. (3) He explains the last line as 'Sambara ruler of Asuras, a juggler, who, having practised māyā (māyāvī māyaṇ payojetvā) is "roasting" since a century ago in purgatory:' — and all without making any distinction between any two Sambaras. The only inference is that there was a post of Sambaratta (Sambarahood) as there was of Sakkatta (Sakka-hood), and that the 'late' ruler of the Asuras had an art which was either an heirloom taught to, or an innate talent possessed by each succeeding Sambara. But what an opportunity for our good B. to have missed!
The Asuras naturally fear to put more power into Sakka's hands: — 'he will torment us, destroy us!' Vepacitti advises him and his, as honest men (tumhe dhammikā va), to keep clear of it (alaṇ vo na māyāya). The legend adds that Sakka's other offer of healing was to take Vepacitti to beg pardon of the Rishis. But to the champion of 'frightfulness' this was too much.

[85] 'Non-anger is love (or amity) at its inception (pubbabhāgo), non-cruelty is compassion in its inception and after.' Comy.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna-Saṃyutta
1. Buddha Vagga

Part II: The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

XII. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

I. The 'Buddha' Suttas

Sutta 1

Desanā

The Teaching

---

[1]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.[1]

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!"[2] responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"I will teach you, brethren, the causal law.[3]

Listen to it,
give your minds thoroughly
and I will speak."

"Even so, lord," responded those brethren.

The Exalted One spake this:

"What, brethren, is the causal law?

[2] Conditioned by ignorance activities come to pass;
conditioned by activities consciousness,
conditioned by consciousness name-and-shape,
conditioned by name-and-shape sense,
conditioned by sense contact,
conditioned by contact feeling,
conditioned by feeling craving,
conditioned by craving grasping,
conditioned by grasping becoming,
conditioned by becoming birth,
conditioned by birth old age-and death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow,
despair come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

This, brethren, is called [causal] happening.

■

But from the utter fading away and ceasing of ignorance [comes] ceasing of activities;
from ceasing of activities ceasing of consciousness;
from ceasing of consciousness ceasing of name-and-shape;
from ceasing of name-and-shape ceasing of sense;
from ceasing of sense ceasing of contact;
from ceasing of contact ceasing of feeling;
from ceasing of feeling ceasing of craving;
from ceasing of craving ceasing of grasping;
from ceasing of grasping ceasing of becoming;
from ceasing of becoming ceasing of birth;
from ceasing of birth,
old age-and-death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill."

It is the Exalted One who spake this.

Pleased in mind
those brethren took delight
in the saying of the Exalted One.

---

[1] Or the Anāthapiṇḍika Park. The story of the gift of the land, bought from Prince Jeta by the philanthropic millionaire Sudatta (known as Anāthapiṇḍika, Feeder of the Forlorn) to the Buddha and his Order is well known. See Vinaya Texts (SBE.), iii, 187 f.

[2] Bhadante.

[3] Paṭicca-samuppāda. Discussion on this term and on those in the formula has been relegated to an introductory note, to reduce footnote matter.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna-Saṃyutta
1. Buddha Vagga

Part II.

The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

XII. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

I. The 'Buddha' Suttas

Sutta 2

Vibhaṇga Suttaṃ

Analysis

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna-Saṃyutta
1. Buddha Vagga

Part II.

The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

XII. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

I. The 'Buddha' Suttas

Sutta 3

Paṭipadā Suttaṃ

The Way (or Course)

---

[4] [5]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthi at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"I will teach you, brethren, both the wrong way and the right way.

Listen to it,
give your minds thoroughly
and I will speak."

"Even so, lord," responded those brethren.

The Exalted One spake this:

"Which, brethren, is the wrong way?

Conditioned by ignorance activities come to pass;
conditioned by activities consciousness,
conditioned by consciousness name-and-shape,
conditioned by name-and-shape sense,
conditioned by sense contact,
conditioned by contact feeling,
conditioned by feeling craving,
conditioned by craving grasping,
conditioned by grasping becoming,
conditioned by becoming birth,
conditioned by birth old age-and death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow,
despair come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

This, is called the wrong way.

And which is the right way?

From the utter fading away and ceasing of ignorance [comes] ceasing of activities;
from ceasing of activities ceasing of consciousness;
from ceasing of consciousness ceasing of name-and-shape;
from ceasing of name-and-shape ceasing of sense;
from ceasing of sense ceasing of contact;
from ceasing of contact ceasing of feeling;
from ceasing of feeling ceasing of craving;
from ceasing of craving ceasing of grasping;
from ceasing of grasping ceasing of becoming;
from ceasing of becoming ceasing of birth;
from ceasing of birth,
old age-and-death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

This is called the right way.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna-Saṃyutta
1. Buddha Vagga

Part II.

The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

XII. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

I. The 'Buddha' Suttas

[4. Vipassi] [5. Sikhi] [6. Vessabhu] [7. Kakusandha]
[8. Konāgamaṇa] [9. Kassapa] [10. Gotama the Great Seer of the Sākyas]

---

[5]

Sutta 4

Vipassī

Vipassi

I

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"To Vipassi,[1] brethren, Exalted One, Arahant, Buddha Supreme,
before his enlightenment,
while he was yet unenlightened and Bodhisat,
there came this thought: —

'Alas! this world has fallen upon trouble.

There is getting born
and growing old,
and dying
and falling
and being reborn.

And yet from this suffering
an escape is not known,
even from decay-and-death.

O when shall escape from this suffering,
even from decay-and-death,

be revealed?'

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta, brethren,
came this thought: —

'What now being present,
does decay-and-death come to be?

What conditions decay-and-death?'

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta,
thinking according to law,[2]
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be birth,
then there is decay-and-death.

Decay-and-death is conditioned by birth.'

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta, brethren,
came this thought: —

'What now being present,
does birth come to be?

What conditions birth?'

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be becoming,
then there is birth.

Birth is conditioned by becoming.'

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta, brethren,
came this thought: —

'What now being present,
does becoming come to be?

What conditions becoming?'

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be grasping,
then there is becoming.

Becoming is conditioned by grasping.'

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta, brethren,
came this thought: —

'What now being present,
does grasping come to be?

What conditions grasping?'

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be craving,
then there is grasping.

Grasping is conditioned by craving.'

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta, brethren,
came this thought: —

'What now being present,
does craving come to be?

What conditions craving?'

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be feeling,
then there is craving.

Craving is conditioned by feeling.'

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta, brethren,
came this thought: —

'What now being present,
does feeling come to be?

What conditions feeling?'

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be contact,
then there is feeling.

Feeling is conditioned by contact.'

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta, brethren,
came this thought: —

'What now being present,
does contact come to be?

What conditions contact?'

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta, thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be sense,
then there is contact.

Contact is conditioned by sense.'

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta, brethren,
came this thought: —

'What now being present,
does sense come to be?

What conditions sense?'

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be name-and-shape,
then there is sense.

Sense is conditioned by name-and-shape.'

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta, brethren,
came this thought: —

'What now being present,
does name-and-shape come to be?

What conditions name-and-shape?'

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be consciousness,
then there is name-and-shape.

Name-and-shape is conditioned by consciousness.'

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta, brethren,
came this thought: —

'What now being present,
does consciousness come to be?

What conditions consciousness?'

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be activities,
then there is consciousness.

Consciousness is conditioned by activities.'

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta, brethren,
came this thought: —

'What now being present,
do activities come to be?

What conditions activities?'

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be ignorance,
then there are activities.

Activities are conditioned by ignorance.

Such verily is this:

Conditioned by ignorance activities come to pass;
conditioned by activities consciousness,

conditioned by consciousness name-and-shape,
conditioned by name-and-shape sense,
conditioned by sense contact,
conditioned by contact feeling,
conditioned by feeling craving,
conditioned by craving grasping,
conditioned by grasping becoming,
conditioned by becoming birth,
conditioned by birth old age-and death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair come to pass.

Even so is the coming to be of this entire mass of ill.

Coming to be!

Coming to be!'

At the thought
there arose in Vipassi bodhisatta, brethren,
in things not taught before[3]
vision,[4]
there arose in Vipassi bodhisatta
knowledge,[5]
insight arose,
wisdom[6] arose,
light[7] arose."[6]

II

Then, brethren, to Vipassi bodhisatta, came the thought: —

'What now being absent,
does decay-and-death not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
is there ceasing of decay-and-death?

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be no birth,
then decay-and-death ceases.

From ceasing of birth ceasing of decay-and-death.'

And thus also came to Vipassi bodhisatta, the thought: —

'What now being absent,
does birth not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
is there ceasing of birth?

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be no becoming,
then birth ceases.

From ceasing of becoming ceasing of birth.'

And thus also came to Vipassi bodhisatta, the thought: —

'What now being absent,
does becoming not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
is there ceasing of becoming?

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be no grasping,
then becoming ceases.

From ceasing of grasping ceasing of becoming.'

And thus also came to Vipassi bodhisatta, the thought: —

'What now being absent,
does grasping not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
is there ceasing of grasping?

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be no craving,
then grasping ceases.

From ceasing of craving ceasing of grasping.'

And thus also came to Vipassi bodhisatta, the thought: —

'What now being absent,
does craving not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
is there ceasing of craving?

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be no feeling,
then craving ceases.

From ceasing of feeling ceasing of craving.'

And thus also came to Vipassi bodhisatta, the thought: —

'What now being absent,
does feeling not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
is there ceasing of feeling?

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be no contact,
then feeling ceases.

From ceasing of contact ceasing of feeling.'

And thus also came to Vipassi bodhisatta, the thought: —

'What now being absent,
does contact not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
is there ceasing of contact?

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be no sense,
then contact ceases.

From ceasing of sense ceasing of contact.'

And thus also came to Vipassi bodhisatta, the thought: —

'What now being absent,
does sense not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
is there ceasing of sense?

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be no name-and-shape,
then sense ceases.

From ceasing of name-and-shape ceasing of sense.'

And thus also came to Vipassi bodhisatta, the thought: —

'What now being absent,
does name-and-shape not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
is there ceasing of name-and-shape?

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be no consciousness,
then name-and-shape ceases.

From ceasing of consciousness ceasing of name-and-shape.'

And thus also came to Vipassi bodhisatta, the thought: —

'What now being absent,
does consciousness not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
is there ceasing of consciousness?

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be no activities,
then consciousness ceases.

From ceasing of activities ceasing of consciousness.'

And thus also came to Vipassi bodhisatta, the thought: —

'What now being absent,
do activities not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
is there ceasing of activities?

Then to Vipassi bodhisatta,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be no ignorance,
then activities cease.

From ceasing of ignorance ceasing of activities.'

Such verily is this:

'Ceasing of activities because of ceasing of ignorance,;
from ceasing of activities ceasing of consciousness;
from ceasing of consciousness ceasing of name-and-shape;
from ceasing of name-and-shape ceasing of sense;
from ceasing of sense ceasing of contact;
from ceasing of contact ceasing of feeling;
from ceasing of feeling ceasing of craving;
from ceasing of craving ceasing of grasping;
from ceasing of grasping ceasing of becoming;

from ceasing of becoming ceasing of birth;
from ceasing of birth,
old age-and-death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair cease.

Even so is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

Ceasing!

Ceasing!'

At the thought
there arose in Vipassi bodhisatta, brethren,
in things not taught before
vision,
there arose in Vipassi bodhisatta
knowledge,
insight arose,
wisdom arose,
light arose."

Sutta 5

Sikhī

Sikhi

I

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

To Sikī, brethren, Exalted One, Arahant, Buddha Supreme, before his enlightenment, while he was yet unenlightened and Bodhisat, there came this thought: —

Alas! this world has fallen upon trouble. There is getting born and growing old, and dying and falling and being reborn. And yet from this suffering an escape is not known, even from decay-and-death. O when shall escape from this suffering, even from decay-and-death, be revealed?

Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does decay-and-death come to be? What conditions decay-and-death? Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be birth, then there is decay-and-death. Decay-and-death is conditioned by birth.

Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does birth come to be? What conditions birth? Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be becoming, then there is birth. Birth is conditioned by becoming.

Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does becoming come to be? What conditions becoming? Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be grasping, then there is becoming. Becoming is conditioned by grasping.

Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does grasping come to be? What conditions grasping? Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be craving, then there is grasping. Grasping is conditioned by craving.

Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does craving come to be? What conditions craving? Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be feeling, then there is craving. Craving is conditioned by feeling.

Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does feeling come to be? What conditions feeling? Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be contact, then there is feeling. Feeling is conditioned by contact.

Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does contact come to be? What conditions contact? Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be sense, then there is contact. Contact is conditioned by sense.

Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does sense come to be? What conditions sense? Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be name-and-shape, then there is sense. Sense is conditioned by name-and-shape.

Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does name-and-shape come to be? What conditions name-and-shape? Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be consciousness, then there is name-and-shape. Name-and-shape is conditioned by consciousness.

Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does consciousness come to be? What conditions consciousness? Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be activities, then there is consciousness. Consciousness is conditioned by activities.

Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, do activities come to be? What conditions activities? Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be ignorance, then there are activities. Activities are conditioned by ignorance.

Such verily is this 'Conditioned by ignorance activities come to pass;
conditioned by activities consciousness,
conditioned by consciousness name-and-shape,
conditioned by name-and-shape sense,
conditioned by sense contact,
conditioned by contact feeling,
conditioned by feeling craving,
conditioned by craving grasping,
conditioned by grasping becoming,
conditioned by becoming birth,
conditioned by birth old age-and death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair come to pass.

Even so is the coming to be of this entire mass of ill.

Coming to be! Coming to be! At the thought there arose in Sikhī bodhisatta, brethren, in things not taught before vision, there arose in Sikhī bodhisatta knowledge, insight arose, wisdom arose, light arose.

II

Then, brethren, to Sikhī bodhisatta, came the thought: — 'What now being absent, does decay-and-death not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of decay-and-death? Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no birth, then decay-and-death ceases. From ceasing of birth ceasing of decay-and-death.

And thus also came to Sikhī bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does birth not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of birth? Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no becoming, then birth ceases. From ceasing of becoming ceasing of birth.

And thus also came to Sikhī bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does becoming not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of becoming? Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no grasping, then becoming ceases. From ceasing of grasping ceasing of becoming.

And thus also came to Sikhī bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does grasping not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of grasping? Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no craving, then grasping ceases. From ceasing of craving ceasing of grasping.

And thus also came to Sikhī bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does craving not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of craving? Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no feeling, then craving ceases. From ceasing of feeling ceasing of craving.

And thus also came to Sikhī bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does feeling not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of feeling? Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no contact, then feeling ceases. From ceasing of contact ceasing of feeling.

And thus also came to Sikhī bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does contact not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of contact? Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no sense, then contact ceases. From ceasing of sense ceasing of contact.

And thus also came to Sikhī bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does sense not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of sense? Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no name-and-shape, then sense ceases. From ceasing of name-and-shape ceasing of sense.

And thus also came to Sikhī bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does name-and-shape not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of name-and-shape? Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no consciousness, then name-and-shape ceases. From ceasing of consciousness ceasing of name-and-shape.

And thus also came to Sikhī bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does consciousness not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of consciousness? Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no activities, then consciousness ceases. From ceasing of activities ceasing of consciousness.

And thus also came to Sikhī bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, do activities not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of activities? Then to Sikhī bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no ignorance, then activities cease. From ceasing of ignorance ceasing of activities.

Such verily is this 'ceasing of activities because of ceasing of ignorance,;
from ceasing of activities ceasing of consciousness;
from ceasing of consciousness ceasing of name-and-shape;
from ceasing of name-and-shape ceasing of sense;
from ceasing of sense ceasing of contact;
from ceasing of contact ceasing of feeling;
from ceasing of feeling ceasing of craving;

from ceasing of craving ceasing of grasping;
from ceasing of grasping ceasing of becoming;
from ceasing of becoming ceasing of birth;
from ceasing of birth,
old age-and-death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair cease.

Even so is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

Ceasing! Ceasing! At the thought there arose in Sikhī bodhisatta, brethren, in things not taught before vision, there arose in Sikhī bodhisatta knowledge, insight arose, wisdom arose, light arose.

Sutta 6

Vessabhu

Vessabhu

I

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

To Vessabhu, brethren, Exalted One, Arahant, Buddha Supreme, before his enlightenment, while he was yet unenlightened and Bodhisat, there came this thought: —

Alas! this world has fallen upon trouble. There is getting born and growing old, and dying and falling and being reborn. And yet from this suffering an escape is not known, even from decay-and-death. O when shall escape from this suffering, even from decay-and-death, be revealed?

Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does decay-and-death come to be? What conditions decay-and-death? Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be birth, then there is decay-and-death. Decay-and-death is conditioned by birth.

Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does birth come to be? What conditions birth? Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be becoming, then there is birth. Birth is conditioned by becoming.

Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does becoming come to be? What conditions becoming? Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be grasping, then there is becoming. Becoming is conditioned by grasping.

Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does grasping come to be? What conditions grasping? Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be craving, then there is grasping. Grasping is conditioned by craving.

Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does craving come to be? What conditions craving? Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be feeling, then there is craving. Craving is conditioned by feeling.

Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does feeling come to be? What conditions feeling? Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be contact, then there is feeling. Feeling is conditioned by contact.

Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does contact come to be? What conditions contact? Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be sense, then there is contact. Contact is conditioned by sense.

Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does sense come to be? What conditions sense? Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be name-and-shape, then there is sense. Sense is conditioned by name-and-shape.

Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does name-and-shape come to be? What conditions name-and-shape? Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be consciousness, then there is name-and-shape. Name-and-shape is conditioned by consciousness.

Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does consciousness come to be? What conditions consciousness? Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be activities, then there is consciousness. Consciousness is conditioned by activities.

Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, do activities come to be? What conditions activities? Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be ignorance, then there are activities. Activities are conditioned by ignorance.

Such verily is this 'Conditioned by ignorance activities come to pass;
conditioned by activities consciousness,
conditioned by consciousness name-and-shape,
conditioned by name-and-shape sense,
conditioned by sense contact,
conditioned by contact feeling,
conditioned by feeling craving,
conditioned by craving grasping,
conditioned by grasping becoming,
conditioned by becoming birth,
conditioned by birth old age-and death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair come to pass.

Even so is the coming to be of this entire mass of ill.

Coming to be! Coming to be! At the thought there arose in Vessabhu bodhisatta, brethren, in things not taught before vision, there arose in Vessabhu bodhisatta knowledge, insight arose, wisdom arose, light arose.

II

Then, brethren, to Vessabhu bodhisatta, came the thought: — 'What now being absent, does decay-and-death not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of decay-and-death? Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no birth, then decay-and-death ceases. From ceasing of birth ceasing of decay-and-death.

And thus also came to Vessabhu bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does birth not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of birth? Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no becoming, then birth ceases. From ceasing of becoming ceasing of birth.

And thus also came to Vessabhu bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does becoming not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of becoming? Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no grasping, then becoming ceases. From ceasing of grasping ceasing of becoming.

And thus also came to Vessabhu bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does grasping not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of grasping? Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no craving, then grasping ceases. From ceasing of craving ceasing of grasping.

And thus also came to Vessabhu bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does craving not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of craving? Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no feeling, then craving ceases. From ceasing of feeling ceasing of craving.

And thus also came to Vessabhu bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does feeling not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of feeling? Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no contact, then feeling ceases. From ceasing of contact ceasing of feeling.

And thus also came to Vessabhu bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does contact not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of contact? Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no sense, then contact ceases. From ceasing of sense ceasing of contact.

And thus also came to Vessabhu bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does sense not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of sense? Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no name-and-shape, then sense ceases. From ceasing of name-and-shape ceasing of sense.

And thus also came to Vessabhu bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does name-and-shape not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of name-and-shape? Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no consciousness, then name-and-shape ceases. From ceasing of consciousness ceasing of name-and-shape.

And thus also came to Vessabhu bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does consciousness not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of consciousness? Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no activities, then consciousness ceases. From ceasing of activities ceasing of consciousness.

And thus also came to Vessabhu bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, do activities not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of activities? Then to Vessabhu bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no ignorance, then activities cease. From ceasing of ignorance ceasing of activities.

Such verily is this 'ceasing of activities because of ceasing of ignorance,;
from ceasing of activities ceasing of consciousness;
from ceasing of consciousness ceasing of name-and-shape;
from ceasing of name-and-shape ceasing of sense;
from ceasing of sense ceasing of contact;
from ceasing of contact ceasing of feeling;
from ceasing of feeling ceasing of craving;
from ceasing of craving ceasing of grasping;
from ceasing of grasping ceasing of becoming;
from ceasing of becoming ceasing of birth;
from ceasing of birth,
old age-and-death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair cease.

Even so is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

Ceasing! Ceasing! At the thought there arose in Vessabhu bodhisatta, brethren, in things not taught before vision, there arose in Vessabhu bodhisatta knowledge, insight arose, wisdom arose, light arose.

Sutta 7

Kakusandha

Kakusandha

I

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

To Kakusandha, brethren, Exalted One, Arahant, Buddha Supreme, before his enlightenment, while he was yet unenlightened and Bodhisat, there came this thought: —

Alas! this world has fallen upon trouble. There is getting born and growing old, and dying and falling and being reborn. And yet from this suffering an escape is not known, even from decay-and-death. O when shall escape from this suffering, even from decay-and-death, be revealed?

Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does decay-and-death come to be? What conditions decay-and-death? Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be birth, then there is decay-and-death. Decay-and-death is conditioned by birth.

Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does birth come to be? What conditions birth? Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be becoming, then there is birth. Birth is conditioned by becoming.

Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does becoming come to be? What conditions becoming? Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be grasping, then there is becoming. Becoming is conditioned by grasping.

Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does grasping come to be? What conditions grasping? Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be craving, then there is grasping. Grasping is conditioned by craving.

Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does craving come to be? What conditions craving? Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be feeling, then there is craving. Craving is conditioned by feeling.

Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does feeling come to be? What conditions feeling? Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be contact, then there is feeling. Feeling is conditioned by contact.

Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does contact come to be? What conditions contact? Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be sense, then there is contact. Contact is conditioned by sense.

Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does sense come to be? What conditions sense? Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be name-and-shape, then there is sense. Sense is conditioned by name-and-shape.

Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does name-and-shape come to be? What conditions name-and-shape? Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be consciousness, then there is name-and-shape. Name-and-shape is conditioned by consciousness.

Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does consciousness come to be? What conditions consciousness? Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be activities, then there is consciousness. Consciousness is conditioned by activities.

Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, do activities come to be? What conditions activities? Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be ignorance, then there are activities. Activities are conditioned by ignorance.

Such verily is this 'Conditioned by ignorance activities come to pass;
conditioned by activities consciousness,
conditioned by consciousness name-and-shape,
conditioned by name-and-shape sense,

conditioned by sense contact,
conditioned by contact feeling,
conditioned by feeling craving,
conditioned by craving grasping,
conditioned by grasping becoming,
conditioned by becoming birth,
conditioned by birth old age-and death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair come to pass.

Even so is the coming to be of this entire mass of ill.

Coming to be! Coming to be! At the thought there arose in Kakusandha bodhisatta, brethren, in things not taught before vision, there arose in Kakusandha bodhisatta knowledge, insight arose, wisdom arose, light arose.

II

Then, brethren, to Kakusandha bodhisatta, came the thought: — 'What now being absent, does decay-and-death not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of decay-and-death? Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no birth, then decay-and-death ceases. From ceasing of birth ceasing of decay-and-death.

And thus also came to Kakusandha bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does birth not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of birth? Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no becoming, then birth ceases. From ceasing of becoming ceasing of birth.

And thus also came to Kakusandha bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does becoming not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of becoming? Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no grasping, then becoming ceases. From ceasing of grasping ceasing of becoming.

And thus also came to Kakusandha bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does grasping not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of grasping? Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no craving, then grasping ceases. From ceasing of craving ceasing of grasping.

And thus also came to Kakusandha bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does craving not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of craving? Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no feeling, then craving ceases. From ceasing of feeling ceasing of craving.

And thus also came to Kakusandha bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does feeling not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of feeling? Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no contact, then feeling ceases. From ceasing of contact ceasing of feeling.

And thus also came to Kakusandha bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does contact not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of contact? Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no sense, then contact ceases. From ceasing of sense ceasing of contact.

And thus also came to Kakusandha bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does sense not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of sense? Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no name-and-shape, then sense ceases. From ceasing of name-and-shape ceasing of sense.

And thus also came to Kakusandha bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does name-and-shape not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of name-and-shape? Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no consciousness, then name-and-shape ceases. From ceasing of consciousness ceasing of name-and-shape.

And thus also came to Kakusandha bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does consciousness not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of consciousness? Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no activities, then consciousness ceases. From ceasing of activities ceasing of consciousness.

And thus also came to Kakusandha bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, do activities not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of activities? Then to Kakusandha bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no ignorance, then activities cease. From ceasing of ignorance ceasing of activities.

Such verily is this 'ceasing of activities because of ceasing of ignorance,;
from ceasing of activities ceasing of consciousness;
from ceasing of consciousness ceasing of name-and-shape;
from ceasing of name-and-shape ceasing of sense;
from ceasing of sense ceasing of contact;
from ceasing of contact ceasing of feeling;
from ceasing of feeling ceasing of craving;
from ceasing of craving ceasing of grasping;
from ceasing of grasping ceasing of becoming;
from ceasing of becoming ceasing of birth;
from ceasing of birth,
old age-and-death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair cease.

Even so is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

Ceasing! Ceasing! At the thought there arose in Kakusandha bodhisatta, brethren, in things not taught before vision, there arose in Kakusandha bodhisatta knowledge, insight arose, wisdom arose, light arose.

Sutta 8

Konāgamaṇa

Konāgamaṇa

I

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

To Konāgamaṇa, brethren, Exalted One, Arahant, Buddha Supreme, before his enlightenment, while he was yet unenlightened and Bodhisat, there came this thought: —

Alas! this world has fallen upon trouble. There is getting born and growing old, and dying and falling and being reborn. And yet from this suffering an escape is not known, even from decay-and-death. O when shall escape from this suffering, even from decay-and-death, be revealed?

Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does decay-and-death come to be? What conditions decay-and-death? Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be birth, then there is decay-and-death. Decay-and-death is conditioned by birth.

Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does birth come to be? What conditions birth? Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be becoming, then there is birth. Birth is conditioned by becoming.

Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does becoming come to be? What conditions becoming? Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be grasping, then there is becoming. Becoming is conditioned by grasping.

Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does grasping come to be? What conditions grasping? Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be craving, then there is grasping. Grasping is conditioned by craving.

Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does craving come to be? What conditions craving? Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be feeling, then there is craving. Craving is conditioned by feeling.

Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does feeling come to be? What conditions feeling? Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be contact, then there is feeling. Feeling is conditioned by contact.

Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does contact come to be? What conditions contact? Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be sense, then there is contact. Contact is conditioned by sense.

Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does sense come to be? What conditions sense? Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be name-and-shape, then there is sense. Sense is conditioned by name-and-shape.

Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does name-and-shape come to be? What conditions name-and-shape? Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be consciousness, then there is name-and-shape. Name-and-shape is conditioned by consciousness.

Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does consciousness come to be? What conditions consciousness? Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be activities, then there is consciousness. Consciousness is conditioned by activities.

Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, do activities come to be? What conditions activities? Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be ignorance, then there are activities. Activities are conditioned by ignorance.

Such verily is this 'Conditioned by ignorance activities come to pass;
conditioned by activities consciousness,
conditioned by consciousness name-and-shape,
conditioned by name-and-shape sense,
conditioned by sense contact,
conditioned by contact feeling,
conditioned by feeling craving,
conditioned by craving grasping,
conditioned by grasping becoming,
conditioned by becoming birth,
conditioned by birth old age-and death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair come to pass.

Even so is the coming to be of this entire mass of ill.

Coming to be! Coming to be! At the thought there arose in Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, brethren, in things not taught before vision, there arose in Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta knowledge, insight arose, wisdom arose, light arose.

II

Then, brethren, to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, came the thought: — 'What now being absent, does decay-and-death not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of decay-and-death? Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no birth, then decay-and-death ceases. From ceasing of birth ceasing of decay-and-death.

And thus also came to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does birth not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of birth? Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no becoming, then birth ceases. From ceasing of becoming ceasing of birth.

And thus also came to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does becoming not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of becoming? Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no grasping, then becoming ceases. From ceasing of grasping ceasing of becoming.

And thus also came to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does grasping not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of grasping? Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no craving, then grasping ceases. From ceasing of craving ceasing of grasping.

And thus also came to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does craving not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of craving? Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no feeling, then craving ceases. From ceasing of feeling ceasing of craving.

And thus also came to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does feeling not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of feeling? Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no contact, then feeling ceases. From ceasing of contact ceasing of feeling.

And thus also came to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does contact not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of contact? Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no sense, then contact ceases. From ceasing of sense ceasing of contact.

And thus also came to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does sense not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of sense? Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no name-and-shape, then sense ceases. From ceasing of name-and-shape ceasing of sense.

And thus also came to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does name-and-shape not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of name-and-shape? Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no consciousness, then name-and-shape ceases. From ceasing of consciousness ceasing of name-and-shape.

And thus also came to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does consciousness not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of consciousness? Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no activities, then consciousness ceases. From ceasing of activities ceasing of consciousness.

And thus also came to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, do activities not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of activities? Then to Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no ignorance, then activities cease. From ceasing of ignorance ceasing of activities.

Such verily is this 'ceasing of activities because of ceasing of ignorance,;
from ceasing of activities ceasing of consciousness;
from ceasing of consciousness ceasing of name-and-shape;
from ceasing of name-and-shape ceasing of sense;
from ceasing of sense ceasing of contact;
from ceasing of contact ceasing of feeling;
from ceasing of feeling ceasing of craving;
from ceasing of craving ceasing of grasping;
from ceasing of grasping ceasing of becoming;
from ceasing of becoming ceasing of birth;
from ceasing of birth,
old age-and-death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair cease.

Even so is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

Ceasing! Ceasing! At the thought there arose in Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta, brethren, in things not taught before vision, there arose in Konāgamaṇa bodhisatta knowledge, insight arose, wisdom arose, light arose.

Sutta 9

Kassapa

I

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

To Kassapa, brethren, Exalted One, Arahant, Buddha Supreme, before his enlightenment, while he was yet unenlightened and Bodhisat, there came this thought: —

Alas! this world has fallen upon trouble. There is getting born and growing old, and dying and falling and being reborn. And yet from this suffering an escape is not known, even from decay-and-death. O when shall escape from this suffering, even from decay-and-death, be revealed?

Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does decay-and-death come to be? What conditions decay-and-death? Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be birth, then there is decay-and-death. Decay-and-death is conditioned by birth.

Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does birth come to be? What conditions birth? Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be becoming, then there is birth. Birth is conditioned by becoming.

Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does becoming come to be? What conditions becoming? Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be grasping, then there is becoming. Becoming is conditioned by grasping.

Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does grasping come to be? What conditions grasping? Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be craving, then there is grasping. Grasping is conditioned by craving.

Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does craving come to be? What conditions craving? Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be feeling, then there is craving. Craving is conditioned by feeling.

Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does feeling come to be? What conditions feeling? Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be contact, then there is feeling. Feeling is conditioned by contact.

Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does contact come to be? What conditions contact? Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be sense, then there is contact. Contact is conditioned by sense.

Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does sense come to be? What conditions sense? Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be name-and-shape, then there is sense. Sense is conditioned by name-and-shape.

Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does name-and-shape come to be? What conditions name-and-shape? Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be consciousness, then there is name-and-shape. Name-and-shape is conditioned by consciousness.

Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, does consciousness come to be? What conditions consciousness? Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be activities, then there is consciousness. Consciousness is conditioned by activities.

Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, brethren, came this thought: — What now being present, do activities come to be? What conditions activities? Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be ignorance, then there are activities. Activities are conditioned by ignorance.

Such verily is this 'Conditioned by ignorance activities come to pass;
conditioned by activities consciousness,
conditioned by consciousness name-and-shape,
conditioned by name-and-shape sense,
conditioned by sense contact,
conditioned by contact feeling,
conditioned by feeling craving,
conditioned by craving grasping,
conditioned by grasping becoming,
conditioned by becoming birth,
conditioned by birth old age-and death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair come to pass.

Even so is the coming to be of this entire mass of ill.

Coming to be! Coming to be! At the thought there arose in Kassapa bodhisatta, brethren, in things not taught before vision, there arose in Kassapa bodhisatta knowledge, insight arose, wisdom arose, light arose.

II

Then, brethren, to Kassapa bodhisatta, came the thought: — 'What now being absent, does decay-and-death not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of decay-and-death? Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no birth, then decay-and-death ceases. From ceasing of birth ceasing of decay-and-death.

And thus also came to Kassapa bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does birth not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of birth? Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no becoming, then birth ceases. From ceasing of becoming ceasing of birth.

And thus also came to Kassapa bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does becoming not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of becoming? Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no grasping, then becoming ceases. From ceasing of grasping ceasing of becoming.

And thus also came to Kassapa bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does grasping not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of grasping? Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no craving, then grasping ceases. From ceasing of craving ceasing of grasping.

And thus also came to Kassapa bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does craving not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of craving? Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no feeling, then craving ceases. From ceasing of feeling ceasing of craving.

And thus also came to Kassapa bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does feeling not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of feeling? Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no contact, then feeling ceases. From ceasing of contact ceasing of feeling.

And thus also came to Kassapa bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does contact not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of contact? Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no sense, then contact ceases. From ceasing of sense ceasing of contact.

And thus also came to Kassapa bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does sense not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of sense? Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no name-and-shape, then sense ceases. From ceasing of name-and-shape ceasing of sense.

And thus also came to Kassapa bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does name-and-shape not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of name-and-shape? Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no consciousness, then name-and-shape ceases. From ceasing of consciousness ceasing of name-and-shape.

And thus also came to Kassapa bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, does consciousness not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of consciousness? Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no activities, then consciousness ceases. From ceasing of activities ceasing of consciousness.

And thus also came to Kassapa bodhisatta, the thought: — 'What now being absent, do activities not come to be? From the ceasing of what is there ceasing of activities? Then to Kassapa bodhisatta, thinking according to law, came to pass comprehension of insight: — let there be no ignorance, then activities cease. From ceasing of ignorance ceasing of activities.

Such verily is this 'ceasing of activities because of ceasing of ignorance,;
from ceasing of activities ceasing of consciousness;
from ceasing of consciousness ceasing of name-and-shape;
from ceasing of name-and-shape ceasing of sense;
from ceasing of sense ceasing of contact;
from ceasing of contact ceasing of feeling;
from ceasing of feeling ceasing of craving;
from ceasing of craving ceasing of grasping;
from ceasing of grasping ceasing of becoming;
from ceasing of becoming ceasing of birth;
from ceasing of birth,
old age-and-death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair cease.

Even so is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

Ceasing! Ceasing! At the thought there arose in Kassapa bodhisatta, brethren, in things not taught before vision, there arose in Kassapa bodhisatta knowledge, insight arose, wisdom arose, light arose.

---

[6]

Sutta 10

Mahā Sakyamuni Gotamo

Gotama the Great Seer of the Sākyas

I

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

To me, brethren, while I was yet unenlightened and Bodhisat, there came this thought: —

'Alas! this world has fallen upon trouble.

There is getting born
and growing old,
and dying
and falling
and being reborn.

And yet from this suffering
an escape is not known,
even from decay-and-death.

O when shall escape from this suffering,
even from decay-and-death,
be revealed?'

Then to me, brethren, came this thought: —

'What now being present,
does decay-and-death come to be?

What conditions decay-and-death?'

Then to me,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be birth,
then there is decay-and-death.

Decay-and-death is conditioned by birth.'

Then to me, brethren, came this thought: —

'What now being present,
does birth come to be?

What conditions birth?'

Then to me,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be becoming,
then there is birth.

Birth is conditioned by becoming.'

Then to me, brethren, came this thought: —

'What now being present,
does becoming come to be?

What conditions becoming?'

Then to me,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be grasping,
then there is becoming.

Becoming is conditioned by grasping.'

Then to me, brethren, came this thought: —

'What now being present,
does grasping come to be?

What conditions grasping?'

Then to me,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be craving,
then there is grasping.

Grasping is conditioned by craving.'

Then to me, brethren, came this thought: —

'What now being present,
does craving come to be?

What conditions craving?'

Then to me,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be feeling,
then there is craving.

Craving is conditioned by feeling.'

Then to me, brethren, came this thought: —

'What now being present,
does feeling come to be?

What conditions feeling?'

Then to me,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be contact,
then there is feeling.

Feeling is conditioned by contact.'

Then to me, brethren, came this thought: —

'What now being present,
does contact come to be?

What conditions contact?'

Then to me, thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be sense,
then there is contact.

Contact is conditioned by sense.'

Then to me, brethren, came this thought: —

'What now being present,
does sense come to be?

What conditions sense?'

Then to me,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be name-and-shape,
then there is sense.

Sense is conditioned by name-and-shape.'

Then to me, brethren, came this thought: —

'What now being present,
does name-and-shape come to be?

What conditions name-and-shape?'

Then to me,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be consciousness,
then there is name-and-shape.

Name-and-shape is conditioned by consciousness.'

Then to me, brethren, came this thought: —

'What now being present,
does consciousness come to be?

What conditions consciousness?'

Then to me,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be activities,
then there is consciousness.

Consciousness is conditioned by activities.'

Then to me, brethren, came this thought: —

'What now being present,
do activities come to be?

What conditions activities?'

Then to me,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be ignorance,
then there are activities.

Activities are conditioned by ignorance.

[7] this:

Conditioned by ignorance activities come to pass;
conditioned by activities consciousness,
conditioned by consciousness name-and-shape,
conditioned by name-and-shape sense,
conditioned by sense contact,
conditioned by contact feeling,
conditioned by feeling craving,
conditioned by craving grasping,
conditioned by grasping becoming,
conditioned by becoming birth,
conditioned by birth old age-and death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow,
despair come to pass.

Even so is the coming to be of this entire mass of ill.

Coming to be!

Coming to be!

At the thought
there arose in me, brethren,

in things not taught before
vision,
there arose in me
knowledge,
insight arose,
wisdom arose,
light arose."

II

"Then, brethren, to me, came the thought: —

'What now being absent,
does decay-and-death not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
is there ceasing of decay-and-death?

Then to me,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be no birth,
then decay-and-death ceases.

From ceasing of birth ceasing of decay-and-death.'

And thus also came to me, the thought: —

'What now being absent,
does birth not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
is there ceasing of birth?

Then to me,
thinking according to law,

came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be no becoming,
then birth ceases.

From ceasing of becoming ceasing of birth.'

And thus also came to me, the thought: —

'What now being absent,
does becoming not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
is there ceasing of becoming?

Then to me,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be no grasping,
then becoming ceases.

From ceasing of grasping ceasing of becoming.'

And thus also came to me, the thought: —

'What now being absent,
does grasping not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
is there ceasing of grasping?

Then to me,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be no craving,
then grasping ceases.

From ceasing of craving ceasing of grasping.'

And thus also came to me, the thought: —

'What now being absent,
does craving not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
is there ceasing of craving?

Then to me,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be no feeling,
then craving ceases.

From ceasing of feeling ceasing of craving.'

And thus also came to me, the thought: —

'What now being absent,
does feeling not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
is there ceasing of feeling?

Then to me,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be no contact,
then feeling ceases.

From ceasing of contact ceasing of feeling.'

And thus also came to me, the thought: —

'What now being absent,
does contact not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
is there ceasing of contact?

Then to me,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be no sense,
then contact ceases.

From ceasing of sense ceasing of contact.'

And thus also came to me, the thought: —

'What now being absent,
does sense not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
is there ceasing of sense?

Then to me,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be no name-and-shape,
then sense ceases.

From ceasing of name-and-shape ceasing of sense.'

And thus also came to me, the thought: —

'What now being absent,
does name-and-shape not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
is there ceasing of name-and-shape?

Then to me,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be no consciousness,
then name-and-shape ceases.

From ceasing of consciousness ceasing of name-and-shape.'

And thus also came to me, the thought: —

'What now being absent,
does consciousness not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
is there ceasing of consciousness?

Then to me,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be no activities,
then consciousness ceases.

From ceasing of activities ceasing of consciousness.'

And thus also came to me, the thought: —

'What now being absent,
do activities not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
is there ceasing of activities?

Then to me,
thinking according to law,
came to pass comprehension of insight: —

'Let there be no ignorance,
then activities cease.

From ceasing of ignorance ceasing of activities.

Such verily is this:

'Ceasing of activities because of ceasing of ignorance,;
from ceasing of activities ceasing of consciousness;
from ceasing of consciousness ceasing of name-and-shape;
from ceasing of name-and-shape ceasing of sense;
from ceasing of sense ceasing of contact;
from ceasing of contact ceasing of feeling;
from ceasing of feeling ceasing of craving;
from ceasing of craving ceasing of grasping;
from ceasing of grasping ceasing of becoming;
from ceasing of becoming ceasing of birth;
from ceasing of birth,
old age-and-death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair cease.

Even so is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

Ceasing!

Ceasing!

At the thought
there arose in me, brethren,
in things not taught before
vision,
there arose in me knowledge,
insight arose,

wisdom arose,
light arose.

---

[1] Told also in Dialogues, ii, 23 f. There the experience of Vipassi alone is given in full, a similar experience being affirmed as having happened to the succeding Buddhas, including the narrator Gotama. Here commencing in the same way Gotama gives also his own similar experience, though the compilation is, in the middle, condensed, as I have condensed above. [Ed.: Although the Pali abbreviates, it does so with 'pe' indicating that the missing sections were present in the original — in other words were not originally teachings in brief or summaries. Consequently they have been spelled out in full for this edition. Additionally Mrs. Rhys Davids abbreviates intermediate sections on her own — these also have been spelled out using her construction in previous identical passages.]

[THE FOLLOWING FOOTNOTES ARE MOVED FORWARD FROM WHERE THEY WERE ORIGINALLY PLACED IN SUTTA 10]

[2] Yoniso, instrumental of yoni, lit. matrix. Invariably rendered in the Comy. by upāyena, pāṭha-, i.e., 'by method,' system, order. Cf. above i, 131, 320. In Psalms of the Brethren I was fain to render this term by a full periphrasis: —

Thereat arose in me the deeper thought:
Attention to the fact and to the cause (verses 269 ff.), yoniso suggesting grasp that was radical, not superficial. Manasikāro, thought, came to have the specialized meaning of 'attention' in later books only.

[3] Pubbe ananussvtesu dhammesu. In the Dialogues 'not learnt before.' Suta is that which is (a) heard, and so, in a bookless age, (b) learnt. Anussuta is 'learnt in order,' 'heard of,' or as we should say, 'taught,' or 'read of.' — In view of the doctrine of previous Buddhas, the phrase is only true as to a limited past. For Gotama's age it was a new gospel.

[4] Lit. eye: 'knowledge with the sense of vision.' Comy.

[5] 'As meaning what is known.' Comy.

[6] 'As meaning penetration.' Comy.

[7] 'As meaning radiance (luminance, obhāso).' Comy.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
2. Āhāra Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

2. Sustenance-Suttas

Sutta 11

Āhāra Suttaṃ

Sustenances

---

[8]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park:

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"There are these four sustenances,[1] brethren,
for the maintenance of beings
that have come to birth
or for the forwarding of them
that seek to become.

Which are the four?

Material food,
coarse or fine,[2]
secondly, contact,[3]
thirdly, volition,[4]
fourthly, consciousness.[5]

These four are the sustenances
for the maintenance of beings
that have come to birth,
or for the forwarding of those
that seek to become.

§

And of these four, brethren,
what is the base,
whence is the uprising?

How are they produced?

What causes them?

Craving is their base,
from craving is their uprising,
craving produces them,
causes them to be.

■

What is the base,
whence is the uprising of craving?

What produces it?

What causes it to be?

Feeling is its base,
feeling is its uprising,
feeling produces it,
feeling causes it to be.

■

What is the base,
whence is the uprising of feeling?

What produces it?

What causes it to be?

Contact is its base,
contact is its uprising,
contact produces it,
contact causes it to be.

■

What is the base,
whence is the uprising of contact?

What produces it?

What causes it to be?

Sense is its base,
sense is its uprising,
sense produces it,
sense causes it to be.

■

What is the base,
whence is the uprising of sense?

What produces it?

What causes it to be?

Name-and-shape is its base,
name-and-shape is its uprising,
name-and-shape produces it,
name-and-shape causes it to be.

■

What is the base,
whence is the uprising of name-and-shape?

What produces it?

What causes it to be?

Consciousness is its base,
consciousness is its uprising,

consciousness produces it,
consciousness causes it to be.

■

What is the base,
whence is the uprising of consciousness?

What produces it?

What causes it to be?

Activities is its base,
activities is its uprising,
activities produces it,
activities causes it to be.

■

What is the base,
whence is the uprising of activities?

What produces it?

What causes it to be?

Ignorance is its base,
ignorance is its uprising,
ignorance produces it,
ignorance causes it to be.

■

Such verily, brethren, is this:

Conditioned by ignorance, activities;
conditioned by activities, consciousness;
conditioned by consciousness, name-and-shape;

conditioned by name-and-shape, sense;
conditioned by sense, contact;
conditioned by contact, feeling;
conditioned by feeling, craving;
conditioned by craving, grasping;
conditioned by grasping, becoming;
conditioned by becoming, birth;
conditioned by birth,
old-age-and-death,
grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair
come to pass.

Such is the uprising [9]
of this entire mass of ill.

■

But from the utter fading away and ceasing of ignorance,
ceasing of activities;
from ceasing of activities ceasing of consciousness;
from ceasing of consciousness ceasing of name-and-shape;
from ceasing of name-and-shape ceasing of sense;
from ceasing of sense ceasing of contact;
from ceasing of contact ceasing of feeling;
from ceasing of feeling ceasing of craving;
from ceasing of craving ceasing of grasping;
from ceasing of grasping ceasing of becoming;
from ceasing of becoming ceasing of birth;
from ceasing of birth,
old age-and-death,
grief,
lamenting,

suffering,
sorrow,
despair
cease.

Such is the ceasing
of this entire mass of ill.

---

[1] 'Sustenances' (āhāra) is lit. conveyers, conveyings (ā to, har to bring, fetch). The Comy. defines: āhāra are conditions (paccayā), for conditions bring their own fruit (effect). A. v, 136 gives ten āhāra's.

[2] The Comy. repeats the embroidery given in Expositor, p. 431 f.

[3] The Comy. advises us that there is no ulterior significance in the order of the four. On contact, lit. touch, see Introduction and Expositor, p. 143.

[4] Mano-sañcetanā = 'cetanā ... ', 'which sustains the three forms of becoming.' Comy. Cf. below, pp. 31, 45 f., 70 f.

[5] Viññāṇa or cittaṃ. Comy. The cuti-citta, or sentience acting at the close of one span of life, as cause, is followed by the paṭisandhi-viññāṇa or reconception-consciousness as effect at the first conscious moment in the new life.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
2. Āhāra Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

2. Sustenance-Suttas

Sutta 12

Moḷiya-Phagguna Suttaṃ

Phagguna

---

[12] [9]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park:

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"There are these four sustenances, brethren,
for the maintenance of beings
that have come to birth
or for the forwarding of them
that seek to become.

Which are the four?

Material food,
coarse or fine,
secondly, contact,
thirdly, volition,
fourthly, consciousness.

These four are the sustenances
for the maintenance of beings
that have come to birth,
or for the forwarding of those
that seek to become."

Then the venerable Moḷiya-Phagguna[1] said to the Exalted One:

"Who now is it, lord,
who feeds on the consciousness-sustenance?"[2]

"Not a fit question," said the Exalted One.

"I am not saying [someone] feeds on.

If I were saying so,
to that the question would be a fit one.

But I am not saying so.

And I not saying so,
if you were to ask me

'Of what[3] now, lord,
is consciousness the sustenance?'

this were a fit question.

And the fit answer to it is:

'The consciousness-sustenance
is the cause of renewed becoming,
of rebirth in the future.'

When that [10] is come to pass,
is present,
the sixfold sense-sphere becomes.

Conditioned by the sixfold sense-sphere
contact becomes."

■

"Who now, lord, exercises contact?"

"Not a fit question," said the Exalted One.

"I am not saying [someone] exercises contact.

If I were saying so,
the question would be a fit one.

But I am not saying so.

And I not saying so,
if you were to ask thus:

'Conditioned now by what, lord,
is contact?'

this were a fit question.

And the fit answer there would be:

'Conditioned by the sixfold sense-sphere
is contact.

Conditioned by contact is feeling.'"

■

"Who now, lord, is it who feels?"

"Not a fit question, said the Exalted One.

I am not saying [someone] feels.

If I were saying so,
the question would be a fit one.

But I am not saying so.

And I not saying so,
if you were to ask thus:

'Conditioned now by what, lord,
is feeling?'

this were a fit question.

And the fit answer there would be:

'Conditioned by contact is feeling.

Conditioned by feeling
is craving.'"

■

"Who now, lord, is it who craves?"[4]

"Not a fit question," said the Exalted One.

"I am not saying [someone] craves.

If I were saying so,
the question would be a fit one.

But I am not saying so.

And I not saying so,
if you were to ask thus:

'Conditioned now by what, lord,
is craving?'

this were a fit question.

And the fit answer there would be:

'Conditioned by feeling
is craving.

Conditioned by craving
is grasping.'"

■

"Who now, lord, is it who grasps?"

"Not a fit question, said the Exalted One.

I am not saying [someone] grasps.

If I were saying so, the question would be a fit one.

But I am not saying so.

And I not saying so, if you were to ask thus:

'Conditioned now by what, lord,
is there grasping?'

this were a fit question.

And the fit answer there would be:

'Conditioned by craving
is grasping.

Conditioned by grasping
is becoming.

conditioned by becoming, birth;
conditioned by birth,
old-age-and-death,
grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair
come to pass.

Such is the uprising
of this entire mass of ill.

But from the utter fading away and cessation of the sixfold [11] sphere of sense-contact, Phagguna, comes cessation of contact,
from ceasing of contact ceasing of feeling;
from ceasing of feeling ceasing of craving;
from ceasing of craving ceasing of grasping;
from ceasing of grasping ceasing of becoming;
from ceasing of becoming ceasing of birth;
from ceasing of birth,
old age-and-death,
grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair
cease.

Such is the ceasing
of this entire mass of ill.'"

---

[1] Moliya = adj. of molī, or cūḷa, the hair, grown long, dressed on top of the head and adorned with a jewelled caboche or what not. (The turban is niveṭhana.) Cf. Jāt. i, 65 (Bud. Birth-stories, p. 86). In this case 'he wore when in the world a large coiffure and was called after it.' Comy. On the man see below, p. 38, Majjhima i, 122. On this Sutta see Bud. Psy., 61 f. For another, Phagguna see below, xxxv, § 83.

[2] B. as if to leave no ambiguity here paraphrases 'ko ... viññāṇāhāraṃ āhāreti by ko nāma so yo etaṃ viññāṇāhāraṃ khādati vā bhunjati vā ti. See Introduction. Why, asks the Comy., does he leave out the other three? Because they are more obvious conditions of effects. He could see anyone eating food, could easily understand contact-sustenance, say, of a bird feeding its young, and thoughtful volition as when a turtle lays her eggs in sand above high water mark. But the (new and yet old) mind, that will continue to function in a new body in the process of rebirth, was not so easy to bring under the notion of a 'sustenance,' which conditions the appearance of a new compound or name-and-shape.

[3] Kissa is genitive and dative of ko, who, as well as of kiṃ, what or which, but the context requires the neuter. The paraphrase katamassa paccayo, cause of whom, of what or which, is equally unprecise.

[4] Tasati.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
2. Āhāra Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

2. Sustenance-Suttas

Sutta 13

Samaṇa-Brāhmaṇa Suttaṃ

Recluses and Brahmins (1)

---

[14] [11]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park:

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Any recluses and brahmins, brethren,
who do not know decay-and-death,
do not know the uprising of decay-and-death,
do not know the ceasing of decay-and-death,
do not know the way leading to the ceasing of decay-and-death;

who do not know birth,
do not know the uprising of birth,
do not know the ceasing of birth,
do not know the way leading to the ceasing of birth;

who do not know becoming,
do not know the uprising of becoming,
do not know the ceasing of becoming,
do not know the way leading to the ceasing of becoming;

who do not know grasping,
do not know the uprising of grasping,
do not know the ceasing of grasping,
do not know the way leading to the ceasing of grasping;

who do not know craving,
do not know the uprising of craving,
do not know the ceasing of craving,
do not know the way leading to the ceasing of craving;

who do not know feeling,
do not know the uprising of feeling,
do not know the ceasing of feeling,
do not know the way leading to the ceasing of feeling;

who do not know contact,
do not know the uprising of contact,
do not know the ceasing of contact,
do not know the way leading to the ceasing of contact;

who do not know sense,
do not know the uprising of sense,
do not know the ceasing of sense,
do not know the way leading to the ceasing of sense;

who do not know name-and-shape,
do not know the uprising of name-and-shape,
do not know the ceasing of name-and-shape,
do not know the way leading to the ceasing of name-and-shape;

who do not know consciousness,
do not know the uprising of consciousness,
do not know the ceasing of consciousness,
do not know the way leading to the ceasing of consciousness;

who do not know activities,
do not know the uprising of activities,
do not know the ceasing of activities,
do not know the way leading to the ceasing of activities;

those recluses or those brahmins are approved
neither among recluses as recluses,
nor among brahmins as brahmins,
nor have those venerable ones
even in this present life
understood of themselves,
nor realized
what is the good
of being either recluse or brahmin,
nor lived in the attainment thereof."

§

"And any recluses or brahmins, brethren,
who know decay-and-death,
do know the uprising of decay-and-death,
do know the ceasing of decay-and-death,
do know the way leading to the ceasing of decay-and-death;

who do know birth,
do know the uprising of birth,
do know the ceasing of birth,
do know the way leading to the ceasing of birth;

who do know becoming,
do know the uprising of becoming,
do know the ceasing of becoming,
do know the way leading to the ceasing of becoming;

who do know grasping,
do know the uprising of grasping,
do know the ceasing of grasping,
do know the way leading to the ceasing of grasping;

who do know craving,
do know the uprising of craving,
do know the ceasing of craving,
do know the way leading to the ceasing of craving;

who do know feeling,
do know the uprising of feeling,
do know the ceasing of feeling,
do know the way leading to the ceasing of feeling;

who do know contact,
do know the uprising of contact,

do know the ceasing of contact,
do know the way leading to the ceasing of contact;

who do know sense,
do know the uprising of sense,
do know the ceasing of sense,
do know the way leading to the ceasing of sense;

who do know name-and-shape,
do know the uprising of name-and-shape,
do know the ceasing of name-and-shape,
do know the way leading to the ceasing of name-and-shape;

who do know consciousness,
do know the uprising of consciousness,
do know the ceasing of consciousness,
do know the way leading to the ceasing of consciousness;

who do know activities,
do know the uprising of activities,
do know the ceasing of activities,
do know the way leading to the ceasing of activities;

those recluses or those brahmins are approved
both among recluses as recluses,
and among brahmins as brahmins,
and those venerable ones
even in this present life
have understood of themselves,
and realized
what is the good
of being either recluse or brahmin,
and lived in the attainment thereof."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
2. Āhāra Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

2. Sustenance-Suttas

Sutta 14

Dutiya Samaṇa-Brāhmaṇa Suttaṃ

Recluses and Brahmins (2)

---

[15] [11]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park:

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Any recluses and brahmins, brethren,
who do not know these things,
do not know the uprising of these things,
the ceasing of these things,
the way leading to the ceasing of these things —

Which things is it they do not know?

Which things is it they do not know the uprising of?

Which things is it they do not know the ceasing of?

Which things is it they do not know the the way leading to the ceasing of?

They do not know decay-and-death,
do not know the uprising of decay-and-death,
do not know the ceasing of decay-and-death,
do not know the way leading to the ceasing of decay-and-death;

[12] they do not know birth,
do not know the uprising of birth,
do not know the ceasing of birth,
do not know the way leading to the ceasing of birth;

they do not know becoming,
do not know the uprising of becoming,
do not know the ceasing of becoming,
do not know the way leading to the ceasing of becoming;

they do not know grasping,
do not know the uprising of grasping,

do not know the ceasing of grasping,
do not know the way leading to the ceasing of grasping;

they do not know craving,
do not know the uprising of craving,
do not know the ceasing of craving,
do not know the way leading to the ceasing of craving;

they do not know feeling,
do not know the uprising of feeling,
do not know the ceasing of feeling,
do not know the way leading to the ceasing of feeling;

they do not know contact,
do not know the uprising of contact,
do not know the ceasing of contact,
do not know the way leading to the ceasing of contact;

they do not know sense,
do not know the uprising of sense,
do not know the ceasing of sense,
do not know the way leading to the ceasing of sense;

they do not know name-and-shape,
do not know the uprising of name-and-shape,
do not know the ceasing of name-and-shape,
do not know the way leading to the ceasing of name-and-shape;

they do not know consciousness,
do not know the uprising of consciousness,
do not know the ceasing of consciousness,
do not know the way leading to the ceasing of consciousness;

they do not know activities,
do not know the uprising of activities,
do not know the ceasing of activities,
do not know the way leading to the ceasing of activities;

These are the things they do not know,
these are the things they do not know the uprising of,
these are the things they do not know the ceasing of, these are the things they do not know the way leading to the ceasing of, —

those recluses or those brahmins are approved
neither among recluses as recluses,
nor among brahmins as brahmins,
nor have those venerable ones
even in this present life
understood of themselves,
nor realized
what is the good
of being either recluse or brahmin,
nor lived in the attainment thereof."

§

"Any recluses and brahmins, brethren,
who do know these things,
do know the uprising of these things,
the ceasing of these things,
the way leading to the ceasing of these things —

Which things is it they do know?

Which things is it they do know the uprising of?

Which things is it they do know the ceasing of?

Which things is it they do know the the way leading to the ceasing of?

They know decay-and-death,
do know the uprising of decay-and-death,
do know the ceasing of decay-and-death,
do know the way leading to the ceasing of decay-and-death;

they do know birth,
do know the uprising of birth,
do know the ceasing of birth,
do know the way leading to the ceasing of birth;

they do know becoming,
do know the uprising of becoming,
do know the ceasing of becoming,
do know the way leading to the ceasing of becoming;

they do know grasping,
do know the uprising of grasping,
do know the ceasing of grasping,
do know the way leading to the ceasing of grasping;

they do know craving,
do know the uprising of craving,
do know the ceasing of craving,
do know the way leading to the ceasing of craving;

they do know feeling,
do know the uprising of feeling,
do know the ceasing of feeling,
do know the way leading to the ceasing of feeling;

they do know contact,
do know the uprising of contact,
do know the ceasing of contact,
do know the way leading to the ceasing of contact;

they do know sense,
do know the uprising of sense,

do know the ceasing of sense,
do know the way leading to the ceasing of sense;

they do know name-and-shape,
do know the uprising of name-and-shape,
do know the ceasing of name-and-shape,
do know the way leading to the ceasing of name-and-shape;

they do know consciousness,
do know the uprising of consciousness,
do know the ceasing of consciousness,
do know the way leading to the ceasing of consciousness;

they do know activities,
do know the uprising of activities,
do know the ceasing of activities,
do know the way leading to the ceasing of activities;

These are the things they do know,
these are the things they do know the uprising of,
these are the things they do know the ceasing of, these are the things they do know the way leading to the ceasing of, —

those recluses or those brahmins are approved
both among recluses as recluses,
and among brahmins as brahmins,
and those venerable ones
even in this present life
have understood of themselves,
and realized
what is the good
of being either recluse or brahmin,
and lived in the attainment thereof."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
2. Āhāra Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

2. Sustenance-Suttas

Sutta 15

Kaccāna-Gotta Suttaṃ

Kaccānyana

---

[16] [12]

Thus have I heard:

While the Exalted One was at Sāvatthi
the venerable Kaccāyana of that clan[1]
came to visit him,
and saluting him
sat down at one side.

So seated he asked the Exalted One,
saying: —

"Lord, we hear the phrase
'right view, right view."[2]

Now how far is there a 'right view'?"

"This world, Kaccayana, usually bases [its view) on two things:
on existence and on non-existence.[3]

Now he, who with right insight sees the uprising of the [13] world as it really is,
does not hold with the non-existence of the world.

But he, who with right insight sees the passing away of the world as it really is,
does not hold with the existence of the world.

Grasping after systems,
imprisoned by dogmas
is this world, Kaccayana,
for the most part.

And the man who does not go after that system-grasping,
that mental standpoint,
that dogmatic bias,
who does not grasp at it,
does not take up his stand upon it, [does not think]: —

'It is my soul![4]

— who thinks: —

'That which arises is just Ill,
that which passes away is Ill'[5]

— this man is not in doubt,
is not perplexed.

Knowledge herein is his
that is not merely another's.

Thus far, Kaccayana, he has right view.

Everything exists: — this is one extreme.

Nothing exists: — this is the other extreme.

Not approaching either extreme the Tathāgata teaches you a doctrine by the middle [way]: —

Conditioned by ignorance
activities come to pass,
conditioned by activities
consciousness;
thus conditioned [arises] name-and-shape;
and sense arises,
contact,
feeling,
craving,
grasping,
becoming,
birth,
decay-and-death,
grief, suffering,
unhappiness,
despair.

Even such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

But from the utter fading away
and ceasing of ignorance [arises] ceasing of activities,
and thus comes ceasing of this entire mass of ill."

---

[1] No comment on this person is made. On Kaccāna's in the Order see Pss of the Brethren, pp. 142, 238. The episode is retold by Ānanda in the third volume of these Sayings when he is teaching Channa (iii, Sutta No.90). Cf. H. Warren's translation in Buddhism in Translations, p. 165.

[2] 'In the doubled term the question includes whatever the wise — devas and men — declare to be right vision.' Comy. 'We hear the phrase' is, literally. ... 'is said.'

[3] According to B. Eternalists held that 'in the conditioned world' once existing means always existing; Annihilationists held that nothing existing persisted always. It is on the surface curious that the arguuments with the school tending to maintain the former 'extreme' — the Sabbatthivādins or Sarvāstivādins, given in the Kathāvatthu (Points of Controversy, pp. 85*f*.; cf. 375*f*.) do not cite this Sutta. See Buddhism. p. 82 f. and Introduction. Existence (atthitā) is apparently understood in the Parmenidean sense: incapable of absolute dissoluution. The Comy. explains the midway vision thus: — no one who discerns the dissolution of phenomena in the conditioned universe is an Eternalist. No one who discerns the evolution of phenomena in it is an Annihilationist.

[4] Feer's text reads attā na me ti (wrongly divided in the text). The Comy. reads attā me ti. Either can be read consistently with the context. We can either read (rendering freely) 'who does not follow those convictions, [who thinks] "it is not my soul,"' or 'whose convicctions do not lead him to think, "it is my soul."'

[5] So Vajirā above, part i, p. 70. [sic. SN 1.5.10]

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
2. Āhāra Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

2. Sustenance-Suttas

Sutta 16

Dhamma-Kathiko Suttaṃ

Norm-Teacher

---

[18] [14]

Thus have I heard:

While the Exalted One was at Sāvatthī,
a certain brother came into his presence,
and when he had saluted him
he sat down at one side and said: -

"Lord, we hear the word 'Norm-teacher, Norm-teacher'.

To what extent, bhante, could one be called 'Norm-teacher?'"[ed1]

"If one of you, brother, teaches a doctrine
of revulsion from decay-and-death,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called[1]
'Norm-teaching Brother'.

If a brother have practised himself
in this revulsion of decay-and-death,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one versed in that which is in conformity with the Norm.'[2]

If a brother from revulsion of decay-and-death,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
be set free from any form of grasping,
this is enough for him to be called
'one who hath won Nibbāna in this life.'

§

If a brother teaches a doctrine[ed2]
of revulsion from birth,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'Norm-teaching Brother'.

If a brother teaches a doctrine
of revulsion from becoming,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'Norm-teaching Brother'.

If a brother teaches a doctrine
of revulsion from grasping,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'Norm-teaching Brother'.

If a brother teaches a doctrine
of revulsion from craving,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'Norm-teaching Brother'.

If a brother teaches a doctrine
of revulsion from feeling,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'Norm-teaching Brother'.

If a brother teaches a doctrine
of revulsion from contact,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'Norm-teaching Brother'.

If a brother teaches a doctrine
of revulsion from sense,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'Norm-teaching Brother'.

If a brother teaches a doctrine
of revulsion from name-and-shape,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'Norm-teaching Brother'.

If a brother teaches a doctrine
of revulsion from consciousness,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'Norm-teaching Brother'.

If a brother teaches a doctrine
of revulsion from activities,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'Norm-teaching Brother'.

If a brother teaches a doctrine
of revulsion from ignorance,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'Norm-teaching Brother'.

■

If a brother have practised himself

in this revulsion from birth,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one versed in that which is in conformity with the Norm.'

If a brother have practised himself

in this revulsion from becoming,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one versed in that which is in conformity with the Norm.'

If a brother have practised himself

in this revulsion from grasping,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one versed in that which is in conformity with the Norm.'

If a brother have practised himself

in this revulsion from craving,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one versed in that which is in conformity with the Norm.'

If a brother have practised himself

in this revulsion from feeling,
of its fading away,

of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one versed in that which is in conformity with the Norm.'

If a brother have practised himself

in this revulsion from contact,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one versed in that which is in conformity with the Norm.'

If a brother have practised himself

in this revulsion from sense,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one versed in that which is in conformity with the Norm.'

If a brother have practised himself

in this revulsion from name-and-shape,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one versed in that which is in conformity with the Norm.'

If a brother have practised himself

in this revulsion from consciousness,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one versed in that which is in conformity with the Norm.'

If a brother have practised himself

in this revulsion from activities,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one versed in that which is in conformity with the Norm.'

If a brother have practised himself

in this revulsion from ignorance,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one versed in that which is in conformity with the Norm.'

■

If a brother from revulsion from birth,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one who hath won Nibbāna in this life.'

If a brother from revulsion from becoming,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one who hath won Nibbāna in this life.'

If a brother from revulsion from grasping,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one who hath won Nibbāna in this life.'

If a brother from revulsion from craving,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one who hath won Nibbāna in this life.'

If a brother from revulsion from feeling,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one who hath won Nibbāna in this life.'

If a brother from revulsion from contact,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one who hath won Nibbāna in this life.'

If a brother from revulsion from sense,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one who hath won Nibbāna in this life.'

If a brother from revulsion from name-and-shape,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one who hath won Nibbāna in this life.'

If a brother from revulsion from consciousness,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one who hath won Nibbāna in this life.'

If a brother from revulsion from activities,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one who hath won Nibbāna in this life.'

If a brother from revulsion from ignorance,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one who hath won Nibbāna in this life.'"

---

[1] Alaṃ vacanaya.

[2] Cf. below, p. 28.

[ed1] Omitted in the PTS Pali and in Mrs. Rhys Davids' translation.

[ed2] Mrs. Rhys Davids abridges the rest by: "In the same way you can so call a brother after this threefold manner if he teach, if he practise, if he be in consequence set free from any form of grasping with respect to birth, becoming, grasping, craving, feeling, contact, sense, name-and-shape, consciousness, activities, ignorance."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
2. Āhāra Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

2. Sustenance-Suttas

Sutta 17

Acela-Kassapa Suttaṃ

The Unclothed (Ascetic)

---

[18] [14]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Rājagaha,
in the Bamboo Grove at the Squirrels' Feeding-Ground.

Now the Exalted One in the early morning dressed himself,
and taking bowl and robe
entered Rājagaha, for alms.

And Kassapa the Unclothed[1] saw the Exalted One coming from afar,
and seeing him
he came up to the Exalted One and greeted him,
and when compliments of friendship and courtesy had been exchanged
he stood at one side.

So standing Kassapa the Unclothed said:

"We would fain ask Master [15] Gotama concerning one point,[2]
if he would give us opportunity
of hearing him reply to our question."

"It is untimely just now for questions, Kassapa.

We have entered the village."[3]

But a second time Kassapa Kassapa the Unclothed said:

"We would fain ask Master Gotama concerning one point,
if he would give us opportunity
of hearing him reply to our question."

And a second time The Exalted One responded:

"It is untimely just now for questions, Kassapa.

We have entered the village."

And a third time Kassapa Kassapa the Unclothed said:

"We would fain ask Master Gotama concerning one point,
if he would give us opportunity
of hearing him reply to our question."

And a third time The Exalted One responded:

"It is untimely just now for questions, Kassapa.

We have entered the village."

When the Exalted One had thus spoken,
Kassapa the Unclothed said:

"It is not many things
we are fain to ask of Master Gotama."

"Ask, Kassapa, what you will."

"Now then, Master Gotama,
is suffering wrought by one's self?"[4]

"Not so verily, Kassapa,"
said the Exalted One.

"What then, Master Gotama,
is one's suffering wrought by another?

"Not so verily, Kassapa,"
said the Exalted One.

"What then, Master Gotama,
is suffering wrought both by one's self
and by another?"

"Not so verily, Kassapa,"
said the Exalted One.

"What then, Master Gotama,
has [the] suffering [which is] wrought neither by myself
nor by another,
befallen me by chance?"[5]

"Not so verily, Kassapa,"
said the Exalted One.

"What then, Master Gotama,
is suffering non-existent?"

"Nay, Kassapa, suffering is not non-existent;
suffering is."

"Then Master Gotama
neither knows nor sees suffering?"

"Nay, Kassapa, I am not one who knows not suffering
nor sees it.

I am one that knows suffering, Kassapa,
I am one that sees suffering."

"How now, Master Gotama?

When asked:
'is suffering wrought by one's self?'
you have answered:
'Not so verily, Kassapa.'

When asked:
'What then, Master Gotama,
is one's suffering wrought by another?'
you have answered:
'Not so verily, Kassapa.'

When asked:
'What then, Master Gotama,
is suffering wrought both by one's self
and by another?'
you have answered:
'Not so verily, Kassapa.'

When asked:
'What then, Master Gotama,

has [the] suffering [which is] wrought neither by myself
nor by another,
befallen me by chance?'
you have answered:
'Not so verily, Kassapa.'

When asked:
'What then, Master Gotama,
is suffering non-existent?'
you have answered:
[16] 'Not so verily, Kassapa.'

When asked:
'Then Master Gotama
neither knows nor sees suffering?'
you have answered:
'Nay, Kassapa, I am not one who knows not suffering
nor sees it.
I am one that knows suffering, Kassapa,
I am one that sees suffering.'

Declare then to me, Master, Exalted One,[6]
[the nature of] suffering.

Teach me, Master, Exalted One,
the nature of suffering.'

"'One and the same person
both acts and experiences [the results]'

-this, Kassapa, which you called at first

'suffering self-wrought,'

amounts to the Eternalist theory.

'One acts,
another experiences [the result]'

this, Kassapa, which
to one smitten by the feeling
occurs as

'suffering caused by another,'

amounts to the Annihilationist theory.

To you, Kassapa, the Tathāgata,
not approaching either extreme,
teaches the Norm by a middle [way]:

Conditioned by ignorance activities come to pass,
conditioned by activities consciousness;
conditioned by consciousness, name-and-shape;
conditioned by name-and-shape, sense;
conditioned by sense, contact;
conditioned by contact, feeling;
conditioned by feeling, craving;
conditioned by craving, grasping;
conditioned by grasping, becoming;
conditioned by becoming,
birth,
decay-and-death,
grief,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair come to pass.

But from the utter fading away and ceasing of ignorance [comes] ceasing of activities;
from ceasing of activities ceasing of consciousness;
from ceasing of consciousness ceasing of name-and-shape;
from ceasing of name-and-shape ceasing of sense;

from ceasing of sense ceasing of contact;
from ceasing of contact ceasing of feeling;
from ceasing of feeling ceasing of craving;
from ceasing of craving ceasing of grasping;
from ceasing of grasping ceasing of becoming;
from ceasing of becoming ceasing of birth;
from ceasing of birth,
old age-and-death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill."

When this had been said Kassapa the Unclothed said to the Exalted One:

"Most excellent, lord!

Most excellent!

Just as if a man were to set up
that which had been thrown down,
or were to reveal
that which was hidden away,
or were to point out the right road
to him who had gone astray,
or were to bring a lamp into the darkness,
so that those who had eyes could see shapes, -
even so, lord, has the lord Gotama shown me
his doctrine in various ways.

I, even I, lord, betake myself to the Exalted One as my refuge,
to the Norm
and to the Order.

I would leave the world
under the Rule of the Exalted One.

I would be ordained."

"He, Kassapa, who, being formerly a votary of another doctrine,[7]
desires to leave the world
to obtain orders in this Doctrine and Rule,
remains on probation for four months.

At the end of four months
spent in seclusion,
the brethren,
moved in heart and willing,
receive him from the world
and [17] ordain him to be a brother.

Nevertheless, I acknowledge a difference in persons."

"If, lord, he who, formerly a votary of another doctrine,
desires to leave the world,
to obtain orders in this Doctrine and Rule,
goes on probation for four months,
and if at the end of four months
spent in seclusion,
the brethren,
moved in heart and willing,
receive him from the world
and ordain him to be a brother,
I will live on probation for four years.

At the end of four years
so living
may the brethren,
moved in heart and will,
receive me
and ordain me as a brother."

So Kassapa the Unclothed was received
under the Exalted One
and obtained ordination.

And not long after his ordination
the venerable Kassapa,
remaining alone and separate,
earnest,
ardent
and strenuous,
attained ere long
to that supreme goal of the divine life,
for the sake of which the clansmen
rightly go forth from home into the homeless:
yea, that supreme goal did he,
by himself,
even in this present life,
come to understand and realize,
namely, that birth was destroyed,
that the divine life was lived,
that the task was done,
that for life in these conditions
there was no hereafter.[8]

And that venerable Kassapa became one of the Arahants.

---

[1] We are not given by B. any tradition as to which of the many Kassapas this is; possibly he of Dialogues, i, 223; M. ii, 120. Another Acela'-Kassapa becomes Arahant below, iv, XLI, § 9.

[2] Desaṃ.

[3] So the Comy., the phrase otherwise meaning 'within the house, or 'threshould,' not as here, outside it.

[4] Sayaṃ. There is no attā (unchanging identical soul) who is the maker (of both act and) of the action's unhappy result. Comy.

[5] Adhicca-samuppannaṃ.

[6] Note the altered mode of address, as if the wonderful influence exercised by the Teacher's presence had made itself felt.

[7] Cf. Dialogues, ii, 168. 'Years' (vassāni) is there rendered 'months.'

[8] On this term see above i, 177, n. 1. Comy.: aparaṃ khandhasantānaṃ natthi — 'hereafter body-and-mind-conditions there is not.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
2. Āhāra Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

2. Sustenance-Suttas

Sutta 18

Timbaruka Suttaṃ

Timbaruka

---

[22] [17]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the wanderer Timbaruka came up to the Exalted One and greeted him: and when compliments of friendship and courtesy had been exchanged, he sat down at one side.

So seated he spoke thus to the Exalted One:

"Now then, Master Gotama,
is pleasure and pain wrought by one's self?"

"Not so verily, Timbaruka,"
said the Exalted One.

"What then, Master Gotama,
is one's pleasure and pain wrought by another?"

[18] "Not so verily, Timbaruka,"
said the Exalted One.

"What then, Master Gotama,
is pleasure and pain wrought both by one's self
and by another?"

"Not so verily, Timbaruka,"
said the Exalted One.

"What then, Master Gotama,
has [the] pleasure and pain [which is] wrought neither by myself
nor by another,
befallen me by chance?"

"Not so verily, Timbaruka,"
said the Exalted One.

"What then, Master Gotama,
is pleasure and pain non-existent?"

"Nay, Timbaruka, pleasure and pain is not non-existent;
pleasure and pain is."

"Then Master Gotama
neither knows nor sees pleasure and pain?"

"Nay, Timbaruka, I am not one who knows not pleasure and pain
nor sees it.

I am one that knows pleasure and pain, Timbaruka,
I am one that sees pleasure and pain."

"How now, Master Gotama?

When asked:
'is pleasure and pain wrought by one's self?'
you have answered:
'Not so verily, Timbaruka.'

When asked:
'What then, Master Gotama,
is one's pleasure and pain wrought by another?'
you have answered:
'Not so verily, Timbaruka.'

When asked:
'What then, Master Gotama,
is pleasure and pain wrought both by one's self
and by another?'
you have answered:
'Not so verily, Timbaruka.'

When asked:
'What then, Master Gotama,
has [the] pleasure and pain [which is] wrought neither by myself
nor by another,
befallen me by chance?'
you have answered:
'Not so verily, Timbaruka.'

When asked:
'What then, Master Gotama,
is pleasure and pain non-existent?'

you have answered:
'Not so verily, Timbaruka.'

When asked:
'Then Master Gotama
neither knows nor sees pleasure and pain?'
you have answered:
'Nay, Timbaruka, I am not one who knows not pleasure and pain
nor sees it.
I am one that knows pleasure and pain, Timbaruka,
I am one that sees pleasure and pain.'

Declare then to me, Master, Exalted One,
[the nature of] pleasure and pain.

Teach me, Master, Exalted One,
the nature of pleasure and pain."

"'The experience and he who experiences[1] [hereafter]
are one and the same:'

-this, Timbaruka, which you called at first

'pleasure and pain self-wrought,'

I declare this is not so.

"The experience and he who experiences [hereafter],
are different one from the other:'

this, Timbaruka, which
to one [19] smitten by the feeling
occurs as

'pleasure and pain caused by another,'

I declare this is not so.

To you, Timbaruka, the Tathāgata,
not approaching either extreme,
teaches the Norm by a middle [way]:

Conditioned by ignorance activities come to pass,
conditioned by activities consciousness;
conditioned by consciousness, name-and-shape;
conditioned by name-and-shape, sense;
conditioned by sense, contact;
conditioned by contact, feeling;
conditioned by feeling, craving;
conditioned by craving, grasping;
conditioned by grasping, becoming;
conditioned by becoming,
birth,
decay-and-death,
grief,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair come to pass.

But from the utter fading away and ceasing of ignorance [comes] ceasing of activities;
from ceasing of activities ceasing of consciousness;
from ceasing of consciousness ceasing of name-and-shape;
from ceasing of name-and-shape ceasing of sense;
from ceasing of sense ceasing of contact;
from ceasing of contact ceasing of feeling;
from ceasing of feeling ceasing of craving;
from ceasing of craving ceasing of grasping;
from ceasing of grasping ceasing of becoming;
from ceasing of becoming ceasing of birth;
from ceasing of birth,
old age-and-death,
grief,
lamenting,

suffering,
sorrow,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill."

When this had been said Timbaruka said to the Exalted One:

"Most excellent, lord!

Most excellent!

Just as if a man were to set up
that which had been thrown down,
or were to reveal
that which was hidden away,
or were to point out the right road
to him who had gone astray,
or were to bring a lamp into the darkness,
so that those who had eyes could see shapes, -
even so, lord, has the lord Gotama shown me
his doctrine in various ways.

I, even I, lord, betake myself to the Exalted One as my refuge,
to the Norm
and to the Order.

May Master Gotama accept me as a follower,
as one who from this day forth,
as long as life lasts,
has taken his refuge therein!"

---

[1] Sa vedanā so vediyati ti. The verb is causal passive of vidati, vedeti (to be known or felt), used actively (v. Andersen, Pali Glossary). The mistaken views which by Timbaruka, as by Kassapa, were expressed in terms partly of action, partly of feeling, are here by Gotama expressed in terms of feeling only. The root vid, ved being in its ultimate sense cognitive, I have used 'experience' as making the Master's riddle more intelligible in our tongue. The Commentary again makes it clear that the second clause refers to resulting experience, the first clause to a former experience ('doer's feeling' - kāraka-vedanā) as incurring that result. The Middle [Way] shows that the subject of the resulting experience is himself a result of the subject of the causal experience, as much and as little identical as is, say, the tree from the seedling Cf. § 17.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
2. Āhāra Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

2. Sustenance-Suttas

Sutta 19

Bāla-Paṇḍita Suttaṃ

The Wise Man [Compared] with the Fool

---

[23] [19]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"For the fool, brethren,
cloaked by ignorance
and tied to craving,
this body is wrought on this wise:

There is just this body
and names-and-shapes without:
thus this pair.

Because of the pair [there is] contact,
just six spheres of sense.

Touched by these,
or by one of them,
the fool experiences pleasure and pain.

■

For the wise man, brethren,
cloaked by ignorance
and tied to craving
this body is wrought on this wise:

There is just this body
and names-and-shapes without:
thus this pair.

Because of the pair [there is] contact,
just six spheres of sense.

Touched by these,
or by one of them,
the wise man experiences pleasure and pain.

§

What, brethren, is there here that is different,
distinctive,
diverse
between the wise man and the fool?"

"For us, lord, things have the Exalted One as their root,
their guide,
their resort.[1]

Well indeed were it
if the meaning [20] of this that he has spoken
were to manifest itself in the Exalted One.

Hearing it from him
the brethren will remember it."

"Well then, brethren,
listen,
give your mind thoroughly
and I will speak."

"Even so, lord,"
responded those brethren.

The Exalted One spake thus:

"The ignorance, brethren,
wherewith the fool,
whose body is so wrought,
is cloaked,
the craving whereto he is tied,
that ignorance the fool has not thrown off,
that craving is not withered away.

How is that?

The fool has not lived the divine life
for the right withering away of ill,
therefore the fool
at the breaking up of the body
is on his way to [another][2] body.

He being on his way thither
is not set free from birth, nor from old age
and death,
nor from grievings,
from lamentings,
from ills,
from sorrows,
from despairs -

I say, he is not set free from Ill.

■

The ignorance, brethren,
wherewith the wise man,
whose body is so wrought,
is cloaked,
the craving whereto he is tied,

that ignorance the wise man has thrown off,
and that craving is withered away.

How is that?

The wise man has lived the divine life
for the right withering away of ill,
therefore the wise man
at the breaking up of the body
is not on his way to [another sense-] body.

He not being on his way thither
is set free from rebirth,
from old age
and death,
from grievings,
from lamentings,
from ills,
from sorrows,
from despairs -

I say, he is set free from Ill.

This, brethren, is how the wise man is different,
distinctive,
diverse from the fool,
namely in that he lives the divine life."

---

[1] Or referee. The Comy. draws a picture analogous to that of the animals receiving names from Adam in the book of Genesis, the animals' here being contact and the factors of mind. Cf. Buddhist Psychology, p. 69.

[2] So Comy.: 'is one who goes towards another rebirth-body.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
2. Āhāra Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

2. Sustenance-Suttas

Sutta 20

Paccaya (Paccay'uppanna) Suttaṃ

Untitled

---

[25] [20]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"I will teach you, brethren,
both causal happening
and things as having causally happened.

Hear ye this,
give your mind thoroughly,
I will speak."

[21] "Even so, lord",
those brethren made response to the Exalted One.

He said:

"What, brethren, is causal happening?

Conditioned by rebirth is decay and death:

Whether, brethren, there be an arising of Tathāgatas,
or whether there be no such arising,
this nature of things just stands,
this causal status,
this causal orderliness,
the relatedness of this to that.[1]

Concerning that
the Tathāgata is fully enlightened,
that he fully understands.

Fully enlightened,
fully understanding
he declares it,

teaches it,
reveals it,
sets it forth,
manifests,
explains,
makes it plain,
saying:

'Behold!

Conditioned by rebirth is decay and death.'

■

Conditioned by becoming is rebirth:

Whether, brethren, there be an arising of Tathāgatas,
or whether there be no such arising,
this nature of things just stands,
this causal status,
this causal orderliness,
the relatedness of this to that.

Concerning that
the Tathāgata is fully enlightened,
that he fully understands.

Fully enlightened,
fully understanding
he declares it,
teaches it,
reveals it,
sets it forth,
manifests,
explains,
makes it plain,
saying:

'Behold!

Conditioned by becoming is rebirth.

■

Conditioned by grasping is becoming:

Whether, brethren, there be an arising of Tathāgatas,
or whether there be no such arising,
this nature of things just stands,
this causal status,
this causal orderliness,
the relatedness of this to that.

Concerning that
the Tathāgata is fully enlightened,
that he fully understands.

Fully enlightened,
fully understanding
he declares it,
teaches it,
reveals it,
sets it forth,
manifests,
explains,
makes it plain,
saying:

'Behold!

Conditioned by grasping is becoming.

■

Conditioned by craving is grasping:

Whether, brethren, there be an arising of Tathāgatas,
or whether there be no such arising,
this nature of things just stands,
this causal status,
this causal orderliness,
the relatedness of this to that.

Concerning that
the Tathāgata is fully enlightened,
that he fully understands.

Fully enlightened,
fully understanding
he declares it,
teaches it,
reveals it,
sets it forth,
manifests,
explains,
makes it plain,
saying:

'Behold!

Conditioned by craving is grasping.

■

Conditioned by feeling is craving:

Whether, brethren, there be an arising of Tathāgatas,
or whether there be no such arising,
this nature of things just stands,
this causal status,
this causal orderliness,
the relatedness of this to that.

Concerning that
the Tathāgata is fully enlightened,
that he fully understands.

Fully enlightened,
fully understanding
he declares it,
teaches it,
reveals it,
sets it forth,
manifests,
explains,
makes it plain,
saying:

'Behold!

Conditioned by feeling is craving.

■

Conditioned by contact is feeling:

Whether, brethren, there be an arising of Tathāgatas,
or whether there be no such arising,
this nature of things just stands,
this causal status,
this causal orderliness,
the relatedness of this to that.

Concerning that
the Tathāgata is fully enlightened,
that he fully understands.

Fully enlightened,
fully understanding
he declares it,

teaches it,
reveals it,
sets it forth,
manifests,
explains,
makes it plain,
saying:

'Behold!

Conditioned by contact is feeling.

■

Conditioned by sense is contact:

Whether, brethren, there be an arising of Tathāgatas,
or whether there be no such arising,
this nature of things just stands,
this causal status,
this causal orderliness,
the relatedness of this to that.

Concerning that
the Tathāgata is fully enlightened,
that he fully understands.

Fully enlightened,
fully understanding
he declares it,
teaches it,
reveals it,
sets it forth,
manifests,
explains,
makes it plain,
saying:

'Behold!

Conditioned by sense is contact.

■

Conditioned by name and shape is sense:

Whether, brethren, there be an arising of Tathāgatas,
or whether there be no such arising,
this nature of things just stands,
this causal status,
this causal orderliness,
the relatedness of this to that.

Concerning that
the Tathāgata is fully enlightened,
that he fully understands.

Fully enlightened,
fully understanding
he declares it,
teaches it,
reveals it,
sets it forth,
manifests,
explains,
makes it plain,
saying:

'Behold!

Conditioned by name and shape is sense.

■

Conditioned by consciousness is name and shape:

Whether, brethren, there be an arising of Tathāgatas,
or whether there be no such arising,
this nature of things just stands,
this causal status,
this causal orderliness,
the relatedness of this to that.

Concerning that
the Tathāgata is fully enlightened,
that he fully understands.

Fully enlightened,
fully understanding
he declares it,
teaches it,
reveals it,
sets it forth,
manifests,
explains,
makes it plain,
saying:

'Behold!

Conditioned by consciousness is name and shape.

■

Conditioned by activities is consciousness:

Whether, brethren, there be an arising of Tathāgatas,
or whether there be no such arising,
this nature of things just stands,
this causal status,
this causal orderliness,
the relatedness of this to that.

Concerning that
the Tathāgata is fully enlightened,
that he fully understands.

Fully enlightened,
fully understanding
he declares it,
teaches it,
reveals it,
sets it forth,
manifests,
explains,
makes it plain,
saying:

'Behold!

Conditioned by activities is consciousness.

■

Conditioned by ignorance are activities:

Whether, brethren, there be an arising of Tathāgatas,
or whether there be no such arising,
this nature of things just stands,
this causal status,
this causal orderliness,
the relatedness of this to that.

Concerning that
the Tathāgata is fully enlightened,
that he fully understands.

Fully enlightened,
fully understanding
he declares it,

teaches it,
reveals it,
sets it forth,
manifests,
explains,
makes it plain,
saying:

'Behold!

Conditioned by ignorance are activities.

■

[22] Thus, brethren, that which here is such wise,
not elsewise,
not otherwise,[2]
the relatedness of this to that: -
this, brethren, is called causal happening.

And what, brethren, are things
as having causally happened?

Decay-and-death is impermanent,
conditioned,
arisen causally,
is by nature withering away,
passing away,
fading away,
coming to an end.

So too is birth, becoming, grasping, craving, feeling, contact, sense, name-and-shape, consciousness, activities, ignorance.

These also are impermanent, conditioned, arisen causally, are by nature withering away, passing away, fading away, coming to an end.

These, brethren, are called things as having causally happened.

Now inasmuch, brethren, as the Ariyan disciple has by right insight well seen even as they really are both this causal happening and things as having causally happened, never doth it arise, verily, that such as he will run back to the past, thinking:

'Did I live in times gone by?

Or did I not?

What was I in times gone by?

How was I then?

Or from being what did I become what?'

Or that he will run towards the times to come, thinking:

'Shall I be reborn in a future time, or shall I not?

What shall I become in the future?

How shall I become in the future?

Or, being what, shall I in the future become what?

Or that he will now become perplexed within himself as to the present day, thinking:

'Am I indeed?

Or am I not indeed?

What indeed am I?

How indeed am I?

This person that is I, whence came he, whither will he go?'

Why doth this never arise?

In that the Ariyan disciple, brethren, has by right insight well seen even as they really are both this causal happening and things as having causally happened.

---

[1] On these four phrases the Comy. has: - 'ṭhitā va sā dhātu, this - causality (causal state) just stands; there is nowhere any birth, old age, death without cause (paccayo); by the next two phrases he teaches just cause; namely, by cause arisen phenomena (dhammā) persist, (or stand), therefore cause is called 'causal status.' Cause orders (or fixes) phenomena, therefore it is called orderliness of phenomena. The causes of birth, etc., are specific ("this") causes, and specific causes are just this-relatedness.'

[2] Cf. Dialogues iii, 251 f.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
3. Dasa-Balā Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

3. The 'Ten Powers' Suttas

Sutta 21

Paṭhama Dasa-Balā Suttaṃ

The Ten Powers (1)

---

[27] [23]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"The Tathāgata, brethren,
endowed with the ten powers,
and the four confidences,[1]
claims the Place of the Bull;[2]
he roars the Lion's Roar amid the congregations;
he turns the Divine Wheel,[3]
saying:

'Such is material shape,
such is its arising,
such is its passing away;

such is feeling,
such is its arising,
such is its passing away;

such is perception,
such is its arising,
such is its passing away;

such are activities,
such is its arising,
such is its passing away;

such is consciousness,
such is its arising,
such is its passing away.'

Thus:

'This' being,
'that' becomes;
from the arising of this,
that arises;
this not being,
that becomes not;
from the ceasing of this,
that ceases.

That is to say,
conditioned by ignorance activities come to pass;
conditioned by activities consciousness,
conditioned by consciousness name-and-shape,
conditioned by name-and-shape sense,
conditioned by sense contact,
conditioned by contact feeling,
conditioned by feeling craving,
conditioned by craving grasping,
conditioned by grasping becoming,
conditioned by becoming birth,
conditioned by birth old age-and death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

But from the utter fading away and ceasing of ignorance [comes] ceasing of activities;
from ceasing of activities ceasing of consciousness;
from ceasing of consciousness ceasing of name-and-shape;
from ceasing of name-and-shape ceasing of sense;
from ceasing of sense ceasing of contact;
from ceasing of contact ceasing of feeling;
from ceasing of feeling ceasing of craving;
from ceasing of craving ceasing of grasping;
from ceasing of grasping ceasing of becoming;
from ceasing of becoming ceasing of birth;

from ceasing of birth,
old age-and-death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

---

[1] The ten powers (bala) and the four grounds of confidence (vesārajja) are stated in detail, M. i, 69 f., the 'Sutta of the Lion's Roar.' Cf. above i, 138.

[2] 'The best, the supreme place; the rank of former Buddhas.' Comy.

[3] Usually dhamma-cakka here and in M. i, 69, brahma-cakka.

Of Related Interest:

See The Ten Powers and the Four Confidences of the Tathāgata, MN 12: The Greater Discourse on the Lion's Roar
AN 10.21

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
3. Dasa-Balā Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

3. The 'Ten Powers' Suttas

Sutta 22

Dutiya Dasa-Balā Suttaṃ

The Ten Powers (2)

---

[28] [23]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"The Tathāgata, brethren,
endowed with the ten powers,
and the four confidences,
claims the Place of the Bull;
he roars the Lion's Roar amid the congregations;
he turns the Divine Wheel,
saying:

'Such is material shape,
such is its arising,
such is its passing away;

such is feeling,
such is its arising,
such is its passing away;

such is perception,
such is its arising,
such is its passing away;

such are activities,
such is its arising,
such is its passing away;

such is consciousness,
such is its arising,
such is its passing away.'

Thus:

'This' being,
'that' becomes;
from the arising of this,

that arises;
this not being,
that becomes not;
from the ceasing of this,
that ceases.

That is to say,
Conditioned by ignorance activities come to pass;
conditioned by activities consciousness,
conditioned by consciousness name-and-shape,
conditioned by name-and-shape sense,
conditioned by sense contact,
conditioned by contact feeling,
conditioned by feeling craving,
conditioned by craving [24] grasping,
conditioned by grasping becoming,
conditioned by becoming birth,
conditioned by birth old age-and death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

But from the utter fading away and ceasing of ignorance [comes] ceasing of activities;
from ceasing of activities ceasing of consciousness;
from ceasing of consciousness ceasing of name-and-shape;
from ceasing of name-and-shape ceasing of sense;
from ceasing of sense ceasing of contact;
from ceasing of contact ceasing of feeling;
from ceasing of feeling ceasing of craving;
from ceasing of craving ceasing of grasping;
from ceasing of grasping ceasing of becoming;
from ceasing of becoming ceasing of birth;
from ceasing of birth,
old age-and-death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill."

§

"Thus, brethren, the Norm being well declared by me,
made manifest,
disclosed,
brought to light,
stripped of its swathings,[1]
it is enough for the clansman
who has left the world through faith to stir up energy
and vow:

'Verily let skin and sinews and bones wilt in my body,
let flesh and blood dry up,
yet shall there be upkeep of energy
till I have won
that which by man's strength,
by man's energy,
by man's progress
may be won!'[2]

Sadly, brethren,
lives the man of sloth,
involved in bad,
wicked things.

Great is the salvation
which he fails to win.

But he of stirred up energy
lives happily,

aloof from bad,
wicked things.

Great is the salvation
that he makes perfect.

Not by that which is low, brethren,
may the highest be won;
by that which is highest
may the highest be won.

Worthy of praise, brethren,
is this divine life.

The Teacher has come to you face to face.

Wherefore stir up energy that ye may win
what is not won,
that ye may attain
what is not attained,
that ye may realize
what is unrealized.

Thus will this
our leaving the world
not be barren,
but a fruitful
and a growing thing.

Verily the necessaries that we enjoy:
the equipment of robes,
alms,
lodging
and medicine,
though they be humble,

shall be to us
of great profit
and advantage.'

For thus, brethren,
must ye train yourselves:

If a man discern his own good,[3]
this is enough to call up earnestness;
if [25] he discern another's good,
this is enough to call up earnestness;
if he discern both his own and another's good,
this is enough to call up earnestness.

---

[1] Chinna-püotiko, having a cut-off tailored garment. See * Pilotiko. Cf. Jāt. i, 220.

[2] Cf. xxi, § 3. This adjuration recurs in other books (M. i, 481; A. i, 50) as a learner's maxim, and in the later Jātaka Comy. (i, 71) is said to have been vowed by Gotama himself in his mental wrestling beneath the Bo-tree. Cf. 'The Will in Buddhism,' JRAS, 1898, p. 50.

[3] 'Good' and 'salvation' (above) are attha and sadattha respectively. Att'attha, viz., arahantship. Comy.

Of Related Interest:

The Ten Powers and the Four Confidences of the Tathāgata, MN 12: The Greater Discourse on the Lion's Roar

AN 10.21

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
3. Dasa-Balā Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

3. The 'Ten Powers' Suttas

Sutta 23

Upanisa Suttaṃ

Causal Association

[3] Joy (pāmojja) the Comy. rates as a less powerful state than rapture (pīti), leading on to it. This series has never yet won the notice it deserves as a sort of Causal Law formula in terms of happiness.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
3. Dasa-Balā Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

3. The 'Ten Powers' Suttas

Sutta 24

Añña-Titthiya Suttaṃ

Sectarian Teachers

---

[32] [27]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Rājagaha at the Bamboo Grove.

Now the venerable Sāriputta clothed himself one morning,
and taking his bowl and cloak
entered Rājagaha on his almsround.

Now he thought:

"It is too early as yet
to go [28] about Rājagaha for alms:
I might go the gardens of the heretical Wanderers."

Now the venerable Sāriputta came to those gardens,
and after exchanging greetings with those heretical Wanderers
and compliments of friendship and courtesy
sat down at one side.

Then those Wanderers spoke thus
to the venerable Sāriputta so seated:

"There are, friend Sāriputta,
certain recluses and brahmins,
believers in karma,
who declare that ill is self-wrought;
certain others of them
declare ill is wrought by some one other [than one's self];
certain others declare that ill is wrought by both,
and certain others
that ill is wrought by neither,
but happens by chance.

But the recluse Gotama -
what does he declare,
what does he announce?

And how, if we were answering,
should we be repeating the views of the recluse Gotama,
and should not be misrepresenting him
by what is not correct,
but should be answering
by a doctrine in conformity with his doctrine,
and [one whereby] no one who is of his doctrine,

a follower of his views,
would render himself open to blame?"

"Friend, the Exalted One has said
that ill[1] comes to pass through a cause.

Because of what?

Because of contact.

He who so spoke would be repeating the views of the Exalted One,
and would not be misrepresenting him
by what is not correct,
but would be answering by a doctrine
in conformity with his doctrine,
and one whereby no one who is of his doctrine,
a follower of his views,
would render himself open to blame.

In the case of those recluses and brahmins, friend,
who believing in karma
declare that ill has been wrought by one's own self,
this ill was caused by contact.

In the case of those of them
who declare that ill has been wrought by a different self,
this ill too was caused by contact.

In the case of those of them
who declare that ill has been wrought by both one's own self
and by a different self,
this ill too was caused by contact.

In the case also of those
who declare that ill has been wrought by neither,
but has happened by chance,
this ill too was caused by contact.

[29] In no one of these four views
of those who believe in karma
is it possible to show
that those recluses and brahmins
will experience feeling without contact."

§

Now the venerable Ānanda was listening
to Sāriputta's talk with the heretical Wanderers.

And the venerable Ānanda,
after going his almsround in Rājagaha
and eating his meal on his return,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him,
sat down at one side,
and so seated told the Exalted One what that talk had been,
saying:

"Now the venerable Sāriputta clothed himself in the morning,
and taking his bowl and cloak
entered Rājagaha on his almsround.

Now he thought:

'It is too early as yet
to go about Rājagaha for alms:
I might go the gardens of the heretical Wanderers.'

Now the venerable Sāriputta came to those gardens,
and after exchanging greetings with those heretical Wanderers

and compliments of friendship and courtesy
sat down at one side.

Then those Wanderers spoke thus
to the venerable Sāriputta so seated:

'There are, friend Sāriputta,
certain recluses and brahmins,
believers in karma,
who declare that ill is self-wrought;
certain others of them
declare ill is wrought by some one other [than one's self];
certain others declare that ill is wrought by both,
and certain others
that ill is wrought by neither,
but happens by chance.

But the recluse Gotama -
what does he declare,
what does he announce?

And how, if we were answering,
should we be repeating the views of the recluse Gotama,
and should not be misrepresenting him
by what is not correct,
but should be answering
by a doctrine in conformity with his doctrine,
and [one whereby] no one who is of his doctrine,
a follower of his views,
would render himself open to blame?'

'Friend, the Exalted One has said
that ill comes to pass through a cause.

Because of what?

Because of contact.

He who so spoke would be repeating the views of the Exalted One,
and would not be misrepresenting him
by what is not correct,
but would be answering by a doctrine
in conformity with his doctrine,
and one whereby no one who is of his doctrine,
a follower of his views,
would render himself open to blame.

In the case of those recluses and brahmins, friend,
who believing in karma
declare that ill has been wrought by one's own self,
this ill was caused by contact.

In the case of those of them
who declare that ill has been wrought by a different self,
this ill too was caused by contact.

In the case of those of them
who declare that ill has been wrought by both one's own self
and by a different self,
this ill too was caused by contact.

In the case also of those
who declare that ill has been wrought by neither,
but has happened by chance,
this ill too was caused by contact.

In no one of these four views
of those who believe in karma
is it possible to show
that those recluses and brahmins
will experience feeling without contact.'"

§

"Well done, well done, Ānanda!

Sāriputta so answering
would be answering rightly.

I have said that ill happens through a cause.

Because of what?

Because of contact.

So saying
one would be a repeater of my sayings;
he would not be misrepresenting me
by what is not correct,
and no one who is of my doctrine,
a follower of my views,
would thereby render himself open to blame.

In the case of those recluses and brahmins, Ānanda,
who believing in karma
declare that ill has been wrought by one's own self,
this ill was caused by contact.

In the case of those of them
who declare that ill has been wrought by a different self,
this ill too was caused by contact.

In the case of those of them
who declare that ill has been wrought by both one's own self
and by a different self,
this ill too was caused by contact.

In the case also of those
who declare that ill has been wrought by neither,

but has happened by chance,
this ill too was caused by contact.

In no one of these four cases
is it possible to show
that those recluses and brahmins
who believe in karma
will experience ill without contact.

I too, Ānanda,
was once staying here near Rājagaha
in the Bamboo Grove
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

I, too, finding it too early to make my almsround,
bethought me to go to the gardens
of the heretical Wanderers.

Now I came to those gardens,
and after exchanging greetings with those heretical Wanderers
and compliments of friendship and courtesy
sat down at one side.

Then those Wanderers spoke thus
to me so seated:

'There are, friend Gotama,
certain recluses and brahmins,
believers in karma,
who declare that ill is self-wrought;
certain others of them
declare ill is wrought by some one other [than one's self];
certain others declare that ill is wrought by both,
and certain others
that ill is wrought by neither,
but happens by chance.

But the recluse Gotama -
what does he declare,
what does he announce?

And how, if we were answering,
should we be repeating the views of the recluse Gotama,
and should not be misrepresenting him
by what is not correct,
but should be answering
by a doctrine in conformity with his doctrine,
and [one whereby] no one who is of his doctrine,
a follower of his views,
would render himself open to blame?'

And I answered them:

'Friend, I have said
that ill comes to pass through a cause.

Because of what?

Because of contact.

He who so spoke would be repeating my views,
and would not be misrepresenting me
by what is not correct,
but would be answering by a doctrine
in conformity with my doctrine,
and one whereby no one who is of my doctrine,
a follower of my views,
would render himself open to blame.

In the case of those recluses and brahmins, friend,
who, believing in karma,
declare that ill has been wrought by one's own self,
this ill was caused by contact.

In the case of those of them
who declare that ill has been wrought by a different self,
this ill too was caused by contact.

In the case of those of them
who declare that ill has been wrought by both one's own self
and by a different self,
this ill too was caused by contact.

In the case also of those
who declare that ill has been wrought by neither,
but has happened by chance,
this ill too was caused by contact.

In no one of these four views
of those who believe in karma
is it possible to show
that those recluses and brahmins
will experience feeling without contact.'"

§

"Wonderful, lord, marvellous
how the whole matter will have been said in one clause.

If this matter were spoken in detail,
it were deep
and it would seem deep."[2]

"Well then, Ānanda,
let just that reveal itself to you now."

[30] "If, lord, they were to ask me:

'Decay-and-death, friend Ānanda,
what is its basis,
what is its coming to pass,
how is it brought to pass,
what is its cause?'

I, so asked, should answer:

'Decay-and-death, friends,
is based on birth,
through birth it comes to pass,
is brought to pass,
birth is its cause.'

So would I answer.

■

Further, if they were to ask me:

'Birth, friend Ānanda, what is its basis,
what is its coming to pass,
how is it brought to pass,
what is its cause?'

I, so asked, should answer:

'Birth, friends,
is based on becoming,
through becoming it comes to pass,
is brought to pass,
becoming is its cause.'

So would I answer.

■

Further, if they were to ask me:

'Becoming, friend Ānanda, what is its basis,
what is its coming to pass,
how is it brought to pass,
what is its cause?'

I, so asked, should answer:

'Becoming, friends,
is based on grasping,
through grasping it comes to pass,
is brought to pass,
grasping is its cause.'

So would I answer.

■

Further, if they were to ask me:

'Grasping, friend Ānanda, what is its basis,
what is its coming to pass,
how is it brought to pass,
what is its cause?'

I, so asked, should answer:

'Grasping, friends,
is based on craving,
through craving it comes to pass,
is brought to pass,
craving is its cause.'

So would I answer.

■

Further, if they were to ask me:

'Craving, friend Ānanda, what is its basis,
what is its coming to pass,
how is it brought to pass,
what is its cause?'

I, so asked, should answer:

'Craving, friends,
is based on feeling,
through feeling it comes to pass,
is brought to pass,
feeling is its cause.'

So would I answer.

■

Further, if they were to ask me:

'Feeling, friend Ānanda, what is its basis,
what is its coming to pass,
how is it brought to pass,
what is its cause?'

I, so asked, should answer:

'Feeling, friends,
is based on contact,
through contact it comes to pass,
is brought to pass,
contact is its cause.'

So would I answer.

■

Further[ed1], if they were to ask me:

'Contact, friend Ānanda, what is its basis,
what is its coming to pass,
how is it brought to pass,
what is its cause?'

I, so asked, should answer:

'Contact, friends,
is based on the six spheres of sense,
through the six spheres of sense it comes to pass,
is brought to pass,
the six spheres of sense is its cause.

And, friends, by the utter fading out and cessation of the six spheres of sense
there is cessation of contact,
by the utter fading out and cessation of contact,
cessation of feeling,
by the utter fading out and cessation of feeling,
cessation of craving,
by the utter fading out and cessation of craving,
cessation of grasping,
by the utter fading out and cessation of grasping,
cessation of becoming,
by the utter fading out and cessation of becoming,
cessation of birth,
by the utter fading out and cessation of birth,
cessation of decay-and-death,
yea, grief,
lamenting,
ill,
sorrow
and despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.'

So asked, lord, so should I make answer."

---

[1] I.e., as a mode of feeling. See p. 15, f., §§ 17, 18.

[2] Cf. below, § 60; Dialogues, ii, 50.

[ed1] Mrs. Rhys Davids omits this clause.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
3. Dasa-Balā Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

3. The 'Ten Powers' Suttas

Sutta 25

Bhūmija Suttaṃ

Bhūmija

---

[37] [30]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī.

Now the venerable Bhūmija,
arising at eventide from solitary meditation,
came into the presence of the venerable Sāriputta,
and exchanging greetings with him

and compliments of friendship and courtesy
sat down at one side,
and so seated spoke thus to him:

"There are, friend Sāriputta,
certain recluses and brahmins,
believers in karma,
who declare that ill is self-wrought;
certain others[1] of them
declare ill is wrought by some one other [than one's self];
certain others declare that ill is wrought by both,
and certain others
that ill is wrought by neither,
but happens by chance.

[31] Herein, friend Sāriputta, the Exalted One, what has he to tell us?

And how, if we were answering,
should we be repeating his views correctly
and would not be misrepresenting him
by what is not correct,
but would be answering by a doctrine
in conformity with his doctrine,
and one whereby no one who is of his doctrine,
a follower of his views,
would render himself open to blame?"

"Friend, the Exalted One has said
that ill comes to pass through a cause.

Because of what?

Because of contact.

He who so spoke would be repeating the views of the Exalted One,
and would not be misrepresenting him
by what is not correct,

but would be answering by a doctrine
in conformity with his doctrine,
and one whereby no one who is of his doctrine,
a follower of his views,
would render himself open to blame.

In the case of those recluses and brahmins, friend,
who believing in karma
declare that ill has been wrought by one's own self,
this ill was caused by contact.

In the case of those of them
who declare that ill has been wrought by a different self,
this ill too was caused by contact.

In the case of those of them
who declare that ill has been wrought by both one's own self
and by a different self,
this ill too was caused by contact.

In the case also of those
who declare that ill has been wrought by neither,
but has happened by chance,
this ill too was caused by contact.

In no one of these four views
of those who believe in karma
is it possible to show
that those recluses and brahmins
will experience feeling without contact."

§

Now the venerable Ānanda was listening
to Sāriputta's talk with the venerable Bhūmija.

And the venerable Ānanda,
came into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him,
sat down at one side,
and so seated told the Exalted One what that talk had been,
saying:

"Now the venerable Bhūmija,
arising at eventide from solitary meditation,
came into the presence of the venerable Sāriputta,
and exchanging greetings with him
and compliments of friendship and courtesy
sat down at one side,
and so seated spoke thus to him:

'There are, friend Sāriputta,
certain recluses and brahmins,
believers in karma,
who declare that ill is self-wrought;
certain others of them
declare ill is wrought by some one other [than one's self];
certain others declare that ill is wrought by both,
and certain others
that ill is wrought by neither,
but happens by chance.

Herein, friend Sāriputta, the Exalted One, what has he to tell us?

And how, if we were answering,
should we be repeating his views correctly
and would not be misrepresenting him
by what is not correct,
but would be answering by a doctrine

in conformity with his doctrine,
and one whereby no one who is of his doctrine,
a follower of his views,
would render himself open to blame?'

'Friend, the Exalted One has said
that ill comes to pass through a cause.

Because of what?

Because of contact.

He who so spoke would be repeating the views of the Exalted One,
and would not be misrepresenting him
by what is not correct,
but would be answering by a doctrine
in conformity with his doctrine,
and one whereby no one who is of his doctrine,
a follower of his views,
would render himself open to blame.

In the case of those recluses and brahmins, friend,
who believing in karma
declare that ill has been wrought by one's own self,
this ill was caused by contact.

In the case of those of them
who declare that ill has been wrought by a different self,
this ill too was caused by contact.

In the case of those of them
who declare that ill has been wrought by both one's own self
and by a different self,
this ill too was caused by contact.

In the case also of those
who declare that ill has been wrought by neither,

but has happened by chance,
this ill too was caused by contact.

In no one of these four views
of those who believe in karma
is it possible to show
that those recluses and brahmins
will experience feeling without contact.'"

§

"Well done, well done, Ānanda!

Sāriputta so answering
would be answering rightly.

I have said that ill happens through a cause.

Because of what?

Because of contact.

So saying
one would be a repeater of my sayings;
he would not be misrepresenting me
by what is not correct,
and no one who is of my doctrine,
a follower of my views,
would thereby render himself open to blame.

In the case of those recluses and brahmins, Ānanda,
who believing in karma

declare that ill has been wrought by one's own self,
this ill was caused by contact.

In the case of those of them
who declare that ill has been wrought by a different self,
this ill too was caused by contact.

In the case of those of them
who declare that ill has been wrought by both one's own self
and by a different self,
this ill too was caused by contact.

In the case also of those
who declare that ill has been wrought by neither,
but has happened by chance,
this ill too was caused by contact.

In no one of these four cases
is it possible to show
that those recluses and brahmins
who believe in karma
will experience ill without contact.

§

13.[ed1] Where there have been deeds, Ānanda,
personal weal and woe arise
in consequence of the will there was in the deeds.

Where there has been speech,
personal weal and woe arise
in consequence of the will there was in the speech.

Where there has been thought,
personal weal and woe arise
in consequence of the will there was in the thought.

■

Either we of ourselves, Ānanda,
plan those planned deeds conditioned by ignorance,
whence so caused
arises personal weal and woe,
or others plan those planned deeds
that we do conditioned by ignorance,
whence so conditioned
arises personal weal and woe.

Either they are done deliberately,
or we do them unwittingly.[2]

Thence both ways arises personal weal and woe.

Either we of ourselves, Ānanda,
plan planned speech conditioned by ignorance,
whence so caused
arises personal weal and woe,
or others plan that planned speech
that we do conditioned by ignorance,
whence so conditioned
arises personal weal and woe.

Either that planned speech is done deliberately,
or that planned speech is done unwittingly.

Thence both ways arises personal weal and woe.

Either we of ourselves, Ānanda,
plan planned thought conditioned by ignorance,
whence so caused

arises personal weal and woe,
or others plan that planned thought
that we do conditioned by ignorance,
whence so conditioned
arises personal weal and woe.

Either that planned thought is done deliberately,
or that planned thought is done unwittingly.

Thence both ways arises personal weal and woe.

In these six cases[3] ignorance is followed after.

[32] But from the utter fading away and cessation of ignorance,
Ānanda,
those deeds are not
whence so conditioned
arises personal weal and woe;

that speech is not
whence so conditioned
arises personal weal and woe;

that thought is not
whence so conditioned
arises personal weal and woe.

As field they are not;
as base they are not;
as wherewithal they are not;
as occasion[4] they are not,
that so conditioned there might arise personal weal and woe.

---

[1] In this Sutta the wording at first follows the preceding Sutta verbatim. 'Another,' here, is apparently not the 'other' of §§ 17, 18. Cf. p. 31.

[2] Not knowing the consequences, like children imitating their parents' actions in religious services, etc. Their actions are instigated (sasankhārena). So Comy. Cf. Bud. Pay. Eth. 34, n. 1, and Expositor, 207.

[3] 3x2, viz. deed, word, thought; deliberate, unwitting.

[4] The Comy. elucidates these three terms thus: as field for growth, ... as base for building, ... as wherewithal for a cause, as occasion for a reason.

[ed1] The Pali text in some versions ends this section with 'avijjāpaccayā va' and in some versions has this phrase as beginning the next section. Woodward, in AN 4.171 has opted to use it both at the end of this section and the beginning of the next. Mrs. Rhys Davids has put it at the beginning of the next section per the PTS text. Put at the beginning of the second section, it should also be at the beginning of the next two sections which is how I have reconstructed it here. Bhk. Thanissaro abridges, but appears to indicate that he would follow this plan. Bhk. Bodhi has it only at the end of the first section. It makes bad sense in this position. The idea described there is that it is intent (Bhk. Bodhi's 'volition') that is the basis for the arising of pleasant or painful consequences of deeds. Intent can be ignorant or not, ignorance is not an alternative to intent. The BJT Pali is a complete mess.

References:

See also: AN 4.171

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
3. Dasa-Balā Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

3. The 'Ten Powers' Suttas

Sutta 26

Upavāna Suttaṃ

Upavāna

---

[41] [32]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī.

Now the venerable Upavāna[1] came into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him,
sat down at one side,
and so seated said to him:

Lord, there are certain recluses and brahmins,
believers in karma,
who declare that ill is self-wrought;
certain others of them
declare ill is wrought by some one other [than one's self];
certain others declare that ill is wrought by both,
and certain others
that ill is wrought by neither,
but happens by chance.

Herein, Lord, what has the Exalted One to announce to us
and how, if we were answering,
should we be repeating his views correctly
and would not be misrepresenting him
by what is not correct,
but would be answering by a doctrine
in conformity with his doctrine,
and one whereby no one who is of his doctrine,
a follower of his views,
would render himself open to blame?"

"I have said Upavāna
that ill comes to pass through a cause.

Because of what?

Because of contact.

He who so spoke would be repeating my views,
and would not be misrepresenting me
by what is not correct,
but would be answering by a doctrine
in conformity with my doctrine,
and one whereby no one who is of my doctrine,
a follower of my views,
would render himself open to blame.

In the case of those recluses and brahmins, Upavāna,
who believing in karma
declare that ill has been wrought by one's own self,
this ill was caused by contact.

In the case of those of them
who declare that ill has been wrought by a different self,
this ill too was caused by contact.

In the case of those of them
who declare that ill has been wrought by both one's own self
and by a different self,
this ill too was caused by contact.

In the case also of those
who declare that ill has been wrought by neither,
but has happened by chance,
this ill too was caused by contact.

In no one of these four views
of those who believe in karma
is it possible to show
that those recluses and brahmins
will experience feeling without contact."

---

[1] On this thera who for a time was Gotama's body-servant, before Ānanda, see above, i, 220 f.; Pss. of the Brethren, pp. 140, 350.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
3. Dasa-Balā Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

3. The 'Ten Powers' Suttas

Sutta 27

Paccaya Suttaṃ

The Causal Relation

---

[42] [32]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Activities, brethren, come to pass conditioned by ignorance,
consciousness conditioned by activities,
name-and-shape by consciousness,
sense by name-and-shape,
contact by sense,
feeling by contact,
craving by feeling,
grasping by craving,
becoming by grasping,
birth by becoming,
old age-and-death [33] by birth,
hence grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair
come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

§

And what, brethren, is old age-and-death?

That which, of this and that being,
in this and that group,
is decay,
decrepitude,
breaking up,

hoariness,
wrinkling of the skin,
shrinkage of a life-span,
overripeness of faculties:
this is called old age.

That which of this and that being,
from this or that group,
is falling or decease,
separation,
disappearance,
mortality or dying,
accomplishment of time,
separation of component factors,
laying down of the carcase:
this is called death.

Thus it is
this old age and this death
that is called old age-and-death.

From the uprising of birth
uprising of old age-and-death.

From the ceasing of birth
ceasing of old age-and-death.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of old age-and-death,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,

right mindfulness,
right concentration.

■

And what, brethren, is birth?[1]

That which, of this and that being
in this and that group,
is birth,
continuous birth,
descent,
reproduction,
appearance of component factors,
acquiring of sense-spheres.

This is called birth.

From the uprising of becoming
uprising of birth.

From the ceasing of becoming
ceasing of birth.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of birth,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

■

And what, brethren, is becoming?

Three are these becomings:
becoming in Kāma-[worlds],
becoming in Rūpa-[worlds],
becoming in Arūpa-[worlds].

This is called becoming.

From the uprising of grasping
uprising of becoming.

From the ceasing of grasping
ceasing of becoming.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of becoming,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

■

And what, brethren, is grasping?

There are these four graspings:
grasping of desires,
grasping of opinion,
grasping of rule and ritual,
grasping of soul-theory.

This is called grasping.

From the uprising of craving
uprising of grasping.

From the ceasing of craving
ceasing of grasping.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of grasping,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

■

And what, brethren, is craving?

There are these six groups of craving:
craving for things seen,
for things heard,
for odours,
for tastes,
for things tangible,
for ideas.

This is called craving.

From the uprising of feeling
uprising of craving.

From the ceasing of feeling
ceasing of craving.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of craving,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

■

And what, brethren, is feeling?

There are these six groups of feeling:
feeling that is born of eye-contact,
feeling that is born of ear-contact,
feeling that is born of nose-contact,
feeling that is born of tongue-contact,
feeling that is born of body-contact,
feeling that is born of mind-contact.

This is called feeling.

From the uprising of contact
uprising of feeling.

From the ceasing of contact
ceasing of feeling.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of feeling,

to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

■

And what, brethren, is contact?

There are these six groups of contact:
eye-contact,
ear-contact,
nose-contact,
tongue-contact,
body-contact,
mind-contact.

This is called contact.

From the uprising of sixfold sense
uprising of contact.

From the ceasing of sixfold sense
ceasing of contact.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of contact,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,

right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

■

And what, brethren, is sixfold sense?

The sense of eye,
ear,
nose,
tongue,
body,
mind.

This is called sixfold sense.

From the uprising of name-and-shape
uprising of sixfold sense.

From the ceasing of name-and-shape
ceasing of sixfold sense.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of sixfold sense,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

■

And what, brethren, is name-and-shape?

Feeling,
perception,
will,
contact,
work of mind.

This is called name.

The four great elements
and the shape derived from them.

This is called shape.

This is the name,
this is the shape
called name-and-shape.

From the uprising of consciousness
uprising of name-and-shape.

From the ceasing of consciousness
ceasing of name-and-shape.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

■

And what is consciousness?

These are the six groups of consciousness:
— eye-consciousness,
ear-consciousness,
smell-consciousness,
taste-consciousness,
touch-consciousness,
and mind-consciousness.

This is called consciousness.

From the uprising of activities
uprising of consciousness.

From the ceasing of activities
ceasing of consciousness.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of consciousness,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

■

And what are activities?

These are the three activities:
— those of deed,
speech
and mind.

These are activities.

From the uprising of ignorance
uprising of activities.

From the ceasing of ignorance
ceasing of activities.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of activities,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

■

And what is ignorance?

Nescience concerning ill,
its rise,
its cessation
and concerning the way going to the cessation of ill.

This is called ignorance.

§

Now inasmuch, brethren, as the Ariyan disciple knows the causal relation thus,
knows the uprising of the causal relation thus,
knows the cessation of the causal relation thus,
knows the way going to the cessation of the causal relation thus,
he is what we call the Ariyan disciple who has won the view,
who has won vision,
who has arrived at this good doctrine,
who sees this good doctrine,
who possesses the knowledge of the trained man,
who possesses the wisdom of the trained man,
who has won to the stream of the Norm,
who has the Ariyan insight of revulsion,
who stands knocking at the door of the Deathless."[2]

---

[1] [Mrs. Rhys Davids abridges from here and notes:] I.e., as in § 2, the distinguishing feature here being the full application in detail of the 'Four Ariyan (or noble) Truths.' The descriptions in § 2 constitute the application of the First Truth only: - what is x?

[2] Amata, i.e. Nibbāna. So the Comy., which calls these titles Path-terms (i.e., of the fourfold Path: Stream winner to Arahant), and 'the Ariyan' one who has 'got past' the worldlings or 'many folk.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
3. Dasa-Balā Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

3. The 'Ten Powers' Suttas

Sutta 28

Bhikkhu Suttaṃ

The Brother

---

[43] [34]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"In this religion,[1] brethren,
the brother knows what is decay-and-death,
knows the uprising of decay-and-death,
knows the ceasing of decay-and-death,
knows the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death.

He knows what is birth,
knows the uprising of birth,
knows the ceasing of birth,
knows the way going to the ceasing of birth.

He knows what is becoming,
knows the uprising of becoming,
knows the ceasing of becoming,
knows the way going to the ceasing of becoming.

He knows what is grasping,
knows the uprising of grasping,
knows the ceasing of grasping,
knows the way going to the ceasing of grasping.

He knows what is craving,
knows the uprising of craving,
knows the ceasing of craving,
knows the way going to the ceasing of craving.

He knows what is feeling,
knows the uprising of feeling,
knows the ceasing of feeling,
knows the way going to the ceasing of feeling.

He knows what is contact,
knows the uprising of contact,

knows the ceasing of contact,
knows the way going to the ceasing of contact.

He knows what is sense,
knows the uprising of sense,
knows the ceasing of sense,
knows the way going to the ceasing of sense.

He knows what is name-and-shape,
knows the uprising of name-and-shape,
knows the ceasing of name-and-shape,
knows the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape.

He knows what is consciousness,
knows the uprising of consciousness,
knows the ceasing of consciousness,
knows the way going to the ceasing of consciousness.

He knows what are activities,
knows the uprising of activities,
knows the ceasing of activities,
knows the way going to the ceasing of activities.

And what, brethren, is old age-and-death?

That which, of this and that being,
in this and that group,
is decay,
decrepitude,
breaking up,
hoariness,
wrinkling of the skin,

shrinkage of a life-span,
overripeness of faculties:
this is called old age.

That which of this and that being,
from this or that group,
is falling or decease,
separation,
disappearance,
mortality or dying,
accomplishment of time,
separation of component factors,
laying down of the carcase:
this is called death.

Thus it is
this old age and this death
that is called old age-and-death.

From the uprising of birth
uprising of old age-and-death.

From the ceasing of birth
ceasing of old age-and-death.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of old age-and-death,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

■

And what, brethren, is birth?

That which, of this and that being
in this and that group,
is birth,
continuous birth,
descent,
reproduction,
appearance of component factors,
acquiring of sense-spheres.

This is called birth.

From the uprising of becoming
uprising of birth.

From the ceasing of becoming
ceasing of birth.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of birth,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

■

And what, brethren, is becoming?

Three are these becomings:
becoming in Kāma-[worlds],
becoming in Rūpa-[worlds],
becoming in Arūpa-[worlds].

This is called becoming.

From the uprising of grasping
uprising of becoming.

From the ceasing of grasping
ceasing of becoming.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of becoming,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

■

And what, brethren, is grasping?

There are these four graspings:
grasping of desires,
grasping of opinion,
grasping of rule and ritual,
grasping of soul-theory.

This is called grasping.

From the uprising of craving
uprising of grasping.

From the ceasing of craving
ceasing of grasping.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of grasping,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

■

And what, brethren, is craving?

There are these six groups of craving:
craving for things seen,
for things heard,
for odours,
for tastes,
for things tangible,
for ideas.

This is called craving.

From the uprising of feeling
uprising of craving.

From the ceasing of feeling
ceasing of craving.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of craving,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

■

And what, brethren, is feeling?

There are these six groups of feeling:
feeling that is born of eye-contact,
feeling that is born of ear-contact,
feeling that is born of nose-contact,
feeling that is born of tongue-contact,
feeling that is born of body-contact,
feeling that is born of mind-contact.

This is called feeling.

From the uprising of contact
uprising of feeling.

From the ceasing of contact
ceasing of feeling.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of feeling,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,

right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

■

And what, brethren, is contact?

There are these six groups of contact:
eye-contact,
ear-contact,
nose-contact,
tongue-contact,
body-contact,
mind-contact.

This is called contact.

From the uprising of sixfold sense
uprising of contact.

From the ceasing of sixfold sense
ceasing of contact.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of contact,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,

right mindfulness,
right concentration.

■

And what, brethren, is sixfold sense?

The sense of eye,
ear,
nose,
tongue,
body,
mind.

This is called sixfold sense.

From the uprising of name-and-shape
uprising of sixfold sense.

From the ceasing of name-and-shape
ceasing of sixfold sense.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of sixfold sense,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

■

And what, brethren, is name-and-shape?

Feeling,
perception,
will,
contact,
work of mind.

This is called name.

The four great elements
and the shape derived from them.

This is called shape.

This is the name,
this is the shape
called name-and-shape.

From the uprising of consciousness
uprising of name-and-shape.

From the ceasing of consciousness
ceasing of name-and-shape.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

■

And what is consciousness?

These are the six groups of consciousness:
— eye-consciousness,
ear-consciousness,
smell-consciousness,
taste-consciousness,
touch-consciousness,
and mind-consciousness.

This is called consciousness.

From the uprising of activities
uprising of consciousness.

From the ceasing of activities
ceasing of consciousness.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of consciousness,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

■

And what are activities?

These are the three activities:
— those of deed,

speech
and mind.

These are activities.

From the uprising of ignorance
uprising of activities.

From the ceasing of ignorance
ceasing of activities.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of activities,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

■

And what is ignorance?

Nescience concerning ill,
its rise,
its cessation
and concerning the way going to the cessation of ill.

This is called ignorance.

§

Now inasmuch, brethren, as the Ariyan disciple knows what is decay-and-death, knows its uprising,
knows its ceasing,
knows the way going to its ceasing;

knows what is birth,
knows the uprising of birth,
knows the ceasing of birth,
knows the way going to the ceasing of birth;

knows what is becoming,
knows the uprising of becoming,
knows the ceasing of becoming,
knows the way going to the ceasing of becoming;

knows what is grasping,
knows the uprising of grasping,
knows the ceasing of grasping,
knows the way going to the ceasing of grasping.

knows what is craving,
knows the uprising of craving,
knows the ceasing of craving,
knows the way going to the ceasing of craving;

knows what is feeling,
knows the uprising of feeling,
knows the ceasing of feeling,
knows the way going to the ceasing of feeling;

knows what is contact,
knows the uprising of contact,
knows the ceasing of contact,
knows the way going to the ceasing of contact;

knows what is sense,
knows the uprising of sense,
knows the ceasing of sense,
knows the way going to the ceasing of sense;

knows what is name-and-shape,
knows the uprising of name-and-shape,
knows the ceasing of name-and-shape,
knows the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape;

knows what is consciousness,
knows the uprising of consciousness,
knows the ceasing of consciousness,
knows the way going to the ceasing of consciousness;

knows what are activities,
knows the uprising of activities,
knows the ceasing of activities,
knows the way going to the ceasing of activities;

he is what we call the Ariyan disciple who has won the view,
who has won vision,
who has arrived at this good doctrine,
who sees this good doctrine,
who possesses the knowledge of the trained man,
who possesses the wisdom of the trained man,
who has won to the stream of the Norm,
who has the Ariyan insight of revulsion,
who stands knocking at the door of the Deathless."

---

[1] Idha, lit. 'here'; often paraphrased as above (imasmiṃ sāsane) in Commentaries.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
3. Dasa-Balā Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

3. The 'Ten Powers' Suttas

Sutta 29

Paṭhama Samaṇa-Brāhmaṇa Suttaṃ

Recluses and Brahmins (1)

---

[45] [34]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Those recluses and brahmins, brethren,
whoever they be,
who do not understand what is decay-and-death,
who do not understand the uprising of decay-and-death,
who do not understand the ceasing of decay-and-death,
who do not understand the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death;

who do not understand what is birth,
who do not understand the uprising of birth,
who do not understand the ceasing of birth,
who do not understand the way going to the ceasing of birth;

who do not understand what is becoming,
who do not understand the uprising of becoming,
who do not understand the ceasing of becoming,
who do not understand the way going to the ceasing of becoming;

who do not understand what is grasping,
who do not understand the uprising of grasping,
who do not understand the ceasing of grasping,
who do not understand the way going to the ceasing of grasping;

who do not understand what is craving,
who do not understand the uprising of craving,
who do not understand the ceasing of craving,
who do not understand the way going to the ceasing of craving;

who do not understand what is feeling,
who do not understand the uprising of feeling,
who do not understand the ceasing of feeling,
who do not understand the way going to the ceasing of feeling;

who do not understand what is contact,
who do not understand the uprising of contact,
who do not understand the ceasing of contact,
who do not understand the way going to the ceasing of contact;

who do not understand what is sense,
who do not understand the uprising of sense,
who do not understand the ceasing of sense,
who do not understand the way going to the ceasing of sense;

who do not understand what is name-and-shape,
who do not understand the uprising of name-and-shape,
who do not understand the ceasing of name-and-shape,
who do not understand the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape;

who do not understand what is consciousness,
who do not understand the uprising of consciousness,
who do not understand the ceasing of consciousness,
who do not understand the way going to the ceasing of consciousness;

who do not understand what are activities,
who do not understand the uprising of activities,
who do not understand the ceasing of activities,
who do not understand the way going to the ceasing of activities;

they are not approved
as recluses among recluses,
nor as brahmins among brahmins;
nor have those venerable ones thoroughly known, [35] attained to
and realized for themselves
even in this present stage of life
the meaning and goal[1]
of what it is to be a recluse or a brahmin.

§

And those recluses and brahmins, brethren,
whoever they be,
who do understand what is decay-and-death,
who do understand the uprising of decay-and-death,
who do understand the ceasing of decay-and-death,
who do understand the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death;

who do understand what is birth,
who do understand the uprising of birth,
who do understand the ceasing of birth,
who do understand the way going to the ceasing of birth;

who do understand what is becoming,
who do understand the uprising of becoming,
who do understand the ceasing of becoming,
who do understand the way going to the ceasing of becoming;

who do understand what is grasping,
who do understand the uprising of grasping,
who do understand the ceasing of grasping,
who do understand the way going to the ceasing of grasping;

who do understand what is craving,
who do understand the uprising of craving,
who do understand the ceasing of craving,
who do understand the way going to the ceasing of craving;

who do understand what is feeling,
who do understand the uprising of feeling,
who do understand the ceasing of feeling,
who do understand the way going to the ceasing of feeling;

who do understand what is contact,
who do understand the uprising of contact,
who do understand the ceasing of contact,
who do understand the way going to the ceasing of contact;

who do understand what is sense,
who do understand the uprising of sense,
who do understand the ceasing of sense,
who do understand the way going to the ceasing of sense;

who do understand what is name-and-shape,
who do understand the uprising of name-and-shape,
who do understand the ceasing of name-and-shape,
who do understand the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape;

who do understand what is consciousness,
who do understand the uprising of consciousness,
who do understand the ceasing of consciousness,
who do understand the way going to the ceasing of consciousness;

who do understand what are activities,
who do understand the uprising of activities,
who do understand the ceasing of activities,
who do understand the way going to the ceasing of activities;

they are approved
as recluses among recluses,
nor as brahmins among brahmins;
and those venerable ones have thoroughly known,
attained to
and realized for themselves
even in this present stage of life
the meaning and goal
of what it is to be a recluse or a brahmin."

---

[1] Attha means matter, meaning, object and thing sought, and profit, good or salvation. No word is harder to translate adequately.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
3. Dasa-Balā Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

3. The 'Ten Powers' Suttas

Sutta 30

Dutiya Samaṇa-Brāhmaṇa Suttaṃ

Recluses and Brahmins (2)

---

[46] [35]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Those recluses and brahmins, brethren,
whoever they be,
who do not understand what is decay-and-death,
who do not understand the uprising of decay-and-death,
who do not understand the ceasing of decay-and-death,
who do not understand the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death;

that they will endure passing[1] beyond decay-and-death,
this verily cannot be.

who do not understand what is birth,
who do not understand the uprising of birth,
who do not understand the ceasing of birth,
who do not understand the way going to the ceasing of birth;

that they will endure passing beyond birth,
this verily cannot be.

who do not understand what is becoming,
who do not understand the uprising of becoming,
who do not understand the ceasing of becoming,
who do not understand the way going to the ceasing of becoming;

that they will endure passing beyond becoming,
this verily cannot be.

who do not understand what is grasping,
who do not understand the uprising of grasping,
who do not understand the ceasing of grasping,
who do not understand the way going to the ceasing of grasping;

that they will endure passing beyond grasping,
this verily cannot be.

who do not understand what is craving,
who do not understand the uprising of craving,
who do not understand the ceasing of craving,
who do not understand the way going to the ceasing of craving;

that they will endure passing beyond craving,
this verily cannot be.

who do not understand what is feeling,
who do not understand the uprising of feeling,
who do not understand the ceasing of feeling,
who do not understand the way going to the ceasing of feeling;

that they will endure passing beyond feeling,
this verily cannot be.

who do not understand what is contact,
who do not understand the uprising of contact,
who do not understand the ceasing of contact,
who do not understand the way going to the ceasing of contact;

that they will endure passing beyond contact,
this verily cannot be.

who do not understand what is sense,
who do not understand the uprising of sense,
who do not understand the ceasing of sense,
who do not understand the way going to the ceasing of sense;

that they will endure passing beyond sense,
this verily cannot be.

who do not understand what is name-and-shape,
who do not understand the uprising of name-and-shape,
who do not understand the ceasing of name-and-shape,
who do not understand the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape;

that they will endure passing beyond name-and-shape,
this verily cannot be.

who do not understand what is consciousness,
who do not understand the uprising of consciousness,
who do not understand the ceasing of consciousness,
who do not understand the way going to the ceasing of consciousness;

that they will endure passing beyond consciousness,
this verily cannot be.

who do not understand what are activities,
who do not understand the uprising of activities,
who do not understand the ceasing of activities,
who do not understand the way going to the ceasing of activities;

that they will endure passing beyond activities,
this verily cannot be.

§

'But those recluses and brahmins, brethren,
whoever they be,
who do understand what is decay-and-death,
who do understand the uprising of decay-and-death,
who do understand the ceasing of decay-and-death,
who do understand the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death;[2]

that they will endure passing beyond decay-and-death, this verily can be.

who do understand what is birth,
who do understand the uprising of birth,

who do understand the ceasing of birth,
who do understand the way going to the ceasing of birth;

that they will endure passing beyond birth, this verily can be.

who do understand what is becoming,
who do understand the uprising of becoming,
who do understand the ceasing of becoming,
who do understand the way going to the ceasing of becoming;

that they will endure passing beyond becoming, this verily can be.

who do understand what is grasping,
who do understand the uprising of grasping,
who do understand the ceasing of grasping,
who do understand the way going to the ceasing of grasping;

that they will endure passing beyond grasping, this verily can be.

who do understand what is craving,
who do understand the uprising of craving,
who do understand the ceasing of craving,
who do understand the way going to the ceasing of craving;

that they will endure passing beyond craving, this verily can be.

who do understand what is feeling,
who do understand the uprising of feeling,
who do understand the ceasing of feeling,
who do understand the way going to the ceasing of feeling;

that they will endure passing beyond feeling, this verily can be.

who do understand what is contact,
who do understand the uprising of contact,
who do understand the ceasing of contact,
who do understand the way going to the ceasing of contact;

that they will endure passing beyond contact, this verily can be.

who do understand what is sense,
who do understand the uprising of sense,
who do understand the ceasing of sense,
who do understand the way going to the ceasing of sense;

that they will endure passing beyond sense, this verily can be.

who do understand what is name-and-shape,
who do understand the uprising of name-and-shape,
who do understand the ceasing of name-and-shape,
who do understand the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape;

that they will endure passing beyond name-and-shape, this verily can be.

who do understand what is consciousness,
who do understand the uprising of consciousness,
who do understand the ceasing of consciousness,
who do understand the way going to the ceasing of consciousness;

that they will endure passing beyond consciousness, this verily can be.

who do understand what are activities,
who do understand the uprising of activities,
who do understand the ceasing of activities,
who do understand the way going to the ceasing of activities;

that they will endure passing beyond activities, this verily can be."

---

[1] Or persist (ṭhassanti, from tiṭṭhati).

[2] Namely, of the 'Four Truths,' as in the two preceding Suttas.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
4. Kaḷara-Khattiya Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

4. Kaḷāra the Nobleman[1]

Sutta 31

Bhūta Suttaṃ

Become

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī.

And there the Exalted One addressed the venerable Sāriputta:

[36] "It is said, Sāriputta,
in the Parāyana[2]
in the Question of Ajita:

'They who have mastered well the truth of things[3]
And they the many learning in thy Rule,
Of these the wisdom in the way they fare
I ask, dear sir. Speak thou of this to me.'[4ed1]

Of that which is here concisely uttered, Sāriputta,
how should the meaning be regarded in detail?"

When he has thus said, Sāriputta was silent.

■

And a second time the Exalted One addressed the venerable Sāriputta:

"It is said, Sāriputta,
in the Parāyana
in the Question of Ajita:

'They who have mastered well the truth of things
And they the many learning in thy Rule,
Of these the wisdom in the way they fare
I ask, dear sir. Speak thou of this to me.'

Of that which is here concisely uttered, Sāriputta,
how should the meaning be regarded in detail?"

And a second time, when he has thus said, Sāriputta was silent.

■

And a third time the Exalted One addressed the venerable Sāriputta:

"It is said, Sāriputta,
in the Parāyana
in the Question of Ajita:

'They who have mastered well the truth of things
And they the many learning in thy Rule,
Of these the wisdom in the way they fare
I ask, dear sir. Speak thou of this to me.'

Of that which is here concisely uttered, Sāriputta,
how should the meaning be regarded in detail?"

And a third time, when he has thus said, Sāriputta was silent.[4]

§

"See you, Sāriputta, that 'this has come to be'?

See you, Sāriputta, that 'this has come to be'?"

"'This has come to be' lord -
thus by right insight he sees,
as it really is;
and seeing
'This has come to be',
as it really is;
he practises revulsion from it,
that it may fade away and cease.

'Continual becoming from a certain sustenance' lord -
thus by right insight he sees,
as it really is;
and seeing

'continual becoming from a certain sustenance',
as it really is;
he practises revulsion from it,
that it may fade away and cease.

'From the ceasing of a certain sustenance
that [37] which has come to be
is liable to cease' lord -
thus by right insight he sees,
as it really is;
and seeing
'from the ceasing of a certain sustenance
that which has come to be
is liable to cease',
as it really is;
he practises revulsion from it,
that it may fade away and cease.

Of such, lord, is the man who is being trained.

■

And how, lord, is a man one who has 'mastered well the truth of things'?

'This has come to be,' lord -
thus by right insight he sees as it really is,
and seeing
'This has come to be,'
in this way,
because of revulsion at that which has come to be,
because of its fading away and ceasing
he becomes free,
grasping at nothing.[5]

'Continual becoming from a certain sustenance,' lord -
thus by right insight he sees as it really is,

and seeing
'Continual becoming from a certain sustenance,'
in this way,
because of revulsion at that which has come to be,
because of its fading away and ceasing
he becomes free,
grasping at nothing.

'From the ceasing of a certain sustenance
that which has come to be
is liable to cease,' lord -
thus by right insight he sees as it really is,
and seeing
'From the ceasing of a certain sustenance
that which has come to be
is liable to cease,'
in this way,
because of revulsion at that which has come to be,
because of its fading away and ceasing
he becomes free,
grasping at nothing.

Of such, lord, is the man who has 'mastered well the truth of things.'

Now thus, lord, of that which is said concisely in the Parāyana
in the Question of Ajita, to wit, -

'They who have mastered well the truth of things
And they the many learning in thy Rule,
Of these the wisdom in the way they fare
I ask, dear sir. Speak thou of this to me,'

I do judge to be the meaning in detail."

§

"Well done, well done, Sāriputta!

'This has come to be' Sāriputta -
thus by right insight he sees,
as it really is;
and seeing
'This has come to be',
as it really is;
he practises revulsion from it,
that it may fade away and cease.

'Continual becoming from a certain sustenance' Sāriputta -
thus by right insight he sees,
as it really is;
and seeing
'continual becoming from a certain sustenance',
as it really is;
he practises revulsion from it,
that it may fade away and cease.

'From the ceasing of a certain sustenance
that which has come to be
is liable to cease' Sāriputta -
thus by right insight he sees,
as it really is;
and seeing
'from the ceasing of a certain sustenance
that which has come to be
is liable to cease',
as it really is;
he practises revulsion from it,
that it may fade away and cease.

Of such, Sāriputta, is the man who is being trained.

■

And how, Sāriputta, is a man one who has 'mastered well the truth of things'?

'This has come to be,' Sāriputta -
thus by right insight he sees as it really is,
and seeing
'This has come to be,'
in this way,
because of revulsion at that which has come to be,
because of its fading away and ceasing
he becomes free,
grasping at nothing.

'Continual becoming from a certain sustenance,' Sāriputta -
thus by right insight he sees as it really is,
and seeing
'Continual becoming from a certain sustenance,'
in this way,
because of revulsion at that which has come to be,
because of its fading away and ceasing
he becomes free,
grasping at nothing.

'From the ceasing of a certain sustenance
that which has come to be
is liable to cease,' Sāriputta -
thus by right insight he sees as it really is,
and seeing
'From the ceasing of a certain sustenance
that which has come to be
is liable to cease,'
in this way,
because of revulsion at that which has come to be,
because of its fading away and ceasing

he becomes free,
grasping at nothing.

Of such, Sāriputta, is the man who has 'mastered well the truth of things.'

Thus, Sāriputta, of that which was said concisely in the Parāyana
in the Question of Ajita, to wit, -

'They who have mastered well the truth of things
And they the many learning in thy Rule,
Of these the wisdom in the way they fare
I ask, dear sir. Speak thou of this to me,'

This is the meaning in detail."

---

[1] Sutta No. (2) gives the name to this chapter.

[2] This is the last section in the Sutta Nipāta. The citation shows the historical priority of at least this portion of it to this portion of the Kindred Sayings. It is noteworthy that Buddhaghosa does not refer to the Sutta-Nipāta, nor even name the Parāyana. This may suggest that his readers would know it well enough. But in none of the 19 quotations from this work in the Visuddhi-Magga does he name either the work, or any section save certain Suttas in it. Parāyana may be roughly rendered 'The Quest.'

[3] Sankhāta-dhammā.

[4] The Comy. attributes this hesitation of the chief disciple not to the nature of the problem, but to the intention of the Master: - by which way is he wishing to teach through me? By khandhas, by elements, by external perception, by causal law? The Master gives the required hint: bhūtaṃ, become (i.e., says B., 'born, produced, a name for the mental and bodily organism'). And Sāriputta follows up with the terms 'becoming' (sambhavaṃ, the prefix sam means for the Comy. continuity or increased intensity), āhāra (sustenance, i.e. cause), and the principle of causation. See M. i, 260. Cf. my Buddhism, 225.

[5] Anupādā.

[ed1]Norman's translation:

'Those who have considred the doctrine, and the many under training here; [being] zealous, tell me when asked, sir, their way of life?

'A bhikkhu would not be greedy for sensual pleasures. He would be undisturbed in mind. Skilled in all mental states, he would wander about, mindful[ly].'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
4. Kaḷara-Khattiya Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

4. Kaḷāra the Nobleman

Sutta 32

Kaḷāra Suttaṃ

Kaḷāra

---

[50] [38]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī.

Now the brother Kaḷāra of the nobles[1]
went into the presence of the venerable Sāriputta,
and exchanging with him greetings

and the compliments of friendship and courtesy,
sat down at one side.

So seated he said this:

"Moliya-Phagguna,[2] friend Sāriputta,
has renounced the training
and turned to lower things."

"Then that venerable brother will not have found comfort
in this Norm and Discipline."

"I gather that the venerable Sāriputta has found comfort
in this Norm and Discipline."

"I have no doubt about it, friend."

"But as to the future, friend?"

"I am not worried about it, friend."

Then the venerable Kaḷāra the noble rose from his seat,
went into the presence of the Exalted One,
and saluting him
sat down at one side.

So seated he said:

"I know, lord, that the venerable Sāriputta
has declared [he has won saving] knowledge,
that birth is [for him] destroyed,
that the divine life has been lived,
that what was to do is done,
that there is nothing further of these conditions."[3]

Then the Exalted One addressed a certain brother:

"Come thou, brother, tell my word to Sāriputta:

'The Master, friend Sāriputta, is speaking to you.'"

"Even so, lord,"
responded that brother,
and he went and told the venerable Sāriputta:

"The Master, friend Sāriputta, is speaking to you."

"Even so, friend,"
responded Sāriputta,
and he came into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him
and sat down at one side.

[39] To him so seated the Exalted One said:

"Is it true, Sāriputta, that you have declared [you have won saving] knowledge:

'Birth is destroyed,
the divine life lived,
done that which was to do,
and that there is for you
nothing further of these conditions'?"

"Not in these words, lord,
not in this form
did I speak of the matter."

"In whatever way, Sāriputta,
a clansman declares [the winning of saving] knowledge,
the declaration must be considered as such."

"But did I not say, lord,
that I did not speak of the matter
in those words,
in that form?"

§

"If they were to ask you, Sāriputta:

'How do you know, friend Sāriputta,
how do you see
that you have won saving knowledge:

"Birth is destroyed,
the divine life lived,
that done what was to do,
and that there is for you
nothing further of these conditions?"'

what would you answer?"

"If they were to ask me, lord:

'How do you know, friend Sāriputta,
how do you see
that you have won saving knowledge:

"Birth is destroyed,
the divine life lived,
that done what was to do,
and that there is for you
nothing further of these conditions?"'

Thus should I make answer:

'It is because, friend,
in [the word] "destroyed"
I have discerned
that the basis of birth is destroyed - through this I know
that saving knowledge is won:

"Birth is destroyed,
the divine life lived,
that done what was to do,
and that there is for you
nothing further of these conditions?"'

If they were to ask me thus, lord,
I should thus make answer."

■

"But if, Sāriputta, they should ask you:

'But birth, friend Sāriputta,
on what is it based,
whence is its uprising,
by what is it produced,
what is its cause?'

how would you make answer?"

"If they were to ask me thus, lord:

'But birth, friend Sāriputta,
on what is it based,
whence is its uprising,
by what is it produced,
what is its cause?'

I should thus make answer:

'Becoming, friend, is the base of birth,[ed1]
becoming is whence it uprises,
by becoming it is produced,
becoming is its cause.'

If they were to ask me thus, lord,
I should thus make answer."

■

"But if, Sāriputta, they should ask you:

'But becoming, friend Sāriputta,
on what is it based,
whence is its uprising,
by what is it produced,
what is its cause?'

how would you make answer?"

"If they were to ask me thus, lord:

'But becoming, friend Sāriputta,
on what is it based,
whence is its uprising,
by what is it produced,
what is its cause?'

I should thus make answer:

'Grasping, friend, is the base of becoming,
grasping is whence it uprises,
by grasping it is produced,
grasping is its cause.'

If they were to ask me thus, lord,
I should thus make answer."

■

"But if, Sāriputta, they should ask you:

'But grasping, friend Sāriputta,
on what is it based,
whence is its uprising,
by what is it produced,
what is its cause?'

how would you make answer?"

"If they were to ask me thus, lord:

'But grasping, friend Sāriputta,
on what is it based,
whence is its uprising,
by what is it produced,
what is its cause?'

I should thus make answer:

'Craving, friend, is the base of grasping,
craving is whence it uprises,
by craving it is produced,
craving is its cause.'

[40] If they were to ask me thus, lord,
I should thus make answer."

■

"But if, Sāriputta, they should ask you:

'But craving, friend Sāriputta,
on what is it based,
whence is its uprising,
by what is it produced,
what is its cause?'

how would you make answer?"

"If they were to ask me thus, lord:

'But craving, friend Sāriputta,
on what is it based,
whence is its uprising,
by what is it produced,
what is its cause?'

I should thus make answer:

'Feeling, friend, is the base of craving,
feeling is whence it uprises,
by feeling it is produced,
feeling is its cause.'

If they were to ask me thus, lord,
I should thus make answer."

■

"But if, Sāriputta, they should ask you:

'But craving, friend Sāriputta,
on what is it based,
whence is its uprising,
by what is it produced,
what is its cause?'

how would you make answer?"

"If they were to ask me thus, lord:

'But craving, friend Sāriputta,
on what is it based,
whence is its uprising,
by what is it produced,
what is its cause?'

I should thus make answer:

'Feeling, friend, is the base of craving,
feeling is whence it uprises,
by feeling it is produced,
feeling is its cause.'

If they were to ask me thus, lord,
I should thus make answer."

■

"But if, Sāriputta, they should ask you:

'How is it, friend Sāriputta,
that when you know,
when you see,
blissful[4] feeling is not present with you?'

how would you make answer?"

"If they were to ask me thus, lord:

'How is it, friend Sāriputta,
that when you know,
when you see,
blissful feeling is not present with you?'

I should thus make answer:

'There are these three [modes of] feeling, friend.

Which three?

Pleasant,
painful,
neutral feeling.

Now these three modes are impermanent.

And when it is discerned
that that which is impermanent is painful, blissful feeling is not present.

Thus asked, thus, lord, should I make answer."

"Well done, Sāriputta,
well done!

Moreover the way to answer just this in brief is:

'Whatever is felt is concerned with pain.'

■

But if, Sāriputta, they should ask you:

'But by what deliverance is it, friend Sāriputta,
that you have confessed that saving knowledge:

"Birth is destroyed,[ed2]
the divine life lived,
that what was to do is done,
and that there is for you
nothing further of these conditions?"'

how would you make answer?"

"If they were to ask me thus, lord:

'But by what deliverance is it, friend Sāriputta,
that you have confessed that saving knowledge:

"Birth is destroyed,
the divine life lived,
that what was to do is done,
and that there is for you
nothing further of these conditions?"'

I should thus make answer:

'By self-deliverance,[5] friend,
by the destruction of all grasping
I live with such a clear mind that the intoxicants flow no more and I admit no [immutable] Soul.[6]

Thus asked thus should I make answer."

■

"Well done, well done, Sāriputta!

This verily is the way
to answer just this matter in brief:

'That which the recluse calls intoxicants - concerning these I have no doubts;
they are cleaned out;
I am not worried about them.'"

Saying this the Exalted One rose from his seat
and entered his cell.

[41]

Thereupon, not long after the Exalted One had gone away,
the venerable Sāriputta addressed the brethren:

"When, friends, the Exalted One asked me the first question
of which I had had no previous experience,
I was slow-witted.

But as soon as he graciously accepted my [answer to the] first question,
then I thought thus:

If the Exalted One were to ask me
concerning this matter
varying the words and the form
for a day,
I would make answer to him
for a day,
the while varying the words and the form.

If the Exalted One were to ask me
concerning this matter
varying the words and the form
for a night,
I would make answer to him
for a night,
the while varying the words and the form.

If the Exalted One were to ask me
concerning this matter
varying the words and the form
for a day and a night,
I would make answer to him
for a day and a night,
the while varying the words and the form.

If the Exalted One were to ask me
concerning this matter
varying the words and the form
for two days and nights,
I would make answer to him
for two days and nights,
the while varying the words and the form.

If the Exalted One were to ask me
concerning this matter
varying the words and the form
for three days and nights,
I would make answer to him
for three days and nights,
the while varying the words and the form.

If the Exalted One were to ask me
concerning this matter
varying the words and the form
for four days and nights,
I would make answer to him
for four days and nights,
the while varying the words and the form.

If the Exalted One were to ask me
concerning this matter
varying the words and the form
for five days and nights,
I would make answer to him
for five days and nights,
the while varying the words and the form.

If the Exalted One were to ask me
concerning this matter
varying the words and the form
for six days and nights,

I would make answer to him
for six days and nights,
the while varying the words and the form.

If the Exalted One were to ask me
concerning this matter
varying the words and the form
for seven days and nights,
I would make answer to him
for seven days and nights,
the while varying the words and the form."

§

Then Kaḷāra the noble rose from his seat,
and going into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him,
sat down at one side,
and said:

"Venerable Sāriputta, lord has uttered a 'lion's roar' concerning the Exalted One's questioning and the answering, saying:

'When, friends, the Exalted One asked me the first question
of which I had had no previous experience,
I was slow-witted.

But as soon as he graciously accepted my [answer to the] first question,
then I thought thus:

If the Exalted One were to ask me
concerning this matter
varying the words and the form

for a day,
I would make answer to him
for a day,
the while varying the words and the form.

If the Exalted One were to ask me
concerning this matter
varying the words and the form
for a night,
I would make answer to him
for a night,
the while varying the words and the form.

If the Exalted One were to ask me
concerning this matter
varying the words and the form
for a day and a night,
I would make answer to him
for a day and a night,
the while varying the words and the form.

If the Exalted One were to ask me
concerning this matter
varying the words and the form
for two days and nights,
I would make answer to him
for two days and nights,
the while varying the words and the form.

If the Exalted One were to ask me
concerning this matter
varying the words and the form
for three days and nights,
I would make answer to him
for three days and nights,
the while varying the words and the form.

If the Exalted One were to ask me
concerning this matter
varying the words and the form
for four days and nights,
I would make answer to him
for four days and nights,
the while varying the words and the form.

If the Exalted One were to ask me
concerning this matter
varying the words and the form
for five days and nights,
I would make answer to him
for five days and nights,
the while varying the words and the form.

If the Exalted One were to ask me
concerning this matter
varying the words and the form
for six days and nights,
I would make answer to him
for six days and nights,
the while varying the words and the form.

If the Exalted One were to ask me
concerning this matter
varying the words and the form
for seven days and nights,
I would make answer to him
for seven days and nights,
the while varying the words and the form.'"

§

"Well has Sāriputta, brother, penetrated the causal nature of things!

And because he has so well penetrated it,
I might ask him concerning that matter
varying words and form
for a day,
and he would be able to make answer
for a day,
the while varying the words and the form.

I might ask him concerning that matter
varying words and form
for a night,
and he would be able to make answer
for a night,
the while varying the words and the form.

I might ask him concerning that matter
varying words and form
for a day and a night,
and he would be able to make answer
for a day and a night,
the while varying the words and the form.

I might ask him concerning that matter
varying words and form
for two days and nights,
and he would be able to make answer
for two days and nights,
the while varying the words and the form.

I might ask him concerning that matter
varying words and form
for three days and nights,
and he would be able to make answer

for three days and nights,
the while varying the words and the form.

I might ask him concerning that matter
varying words and form
for four days and nights,
and he would be able to make answer
for four days and nights,
the while varying the words and the form.

I might ask him concerning that matter
varying words and form
for five days and nights,
and he would be able to make answer
for five days and nights,
the while varying the words and the form.

I might ask him concerning that matter
varying words and form
for six days and nights,
and he would be able to make answer
for six days and nights,
the while varying the words and the form.

I might ask him concerning that matter
varying words and form
for seven days and nights,
and he would be able to make answer
for seven days and nights,
the while varying the words and the form."

---

[1] Probably a gens name. He is not met with elsewhere.

[2] See above, p. 9.

[3] One of the formulae of Arahantsbip as won. The word aññā is only used in this connection. See S. vi, Indexes, Preface; Buddhism, 1912, p. 216. 'Of these conditions' lit. 'of the suchness.'

[4] Sunandī.

[5] Ajjhattaṃ vimokkhā. By emancipation from within. Comy.

[6] Cf. the word-play in Vinaya Texts ii, 13: Thus, brethren, do men of worth make known their [winning saving] knowledge: they state the fact (attha) and do not bring in the Self (attā).

[ed1] Mrs. Rhys Davids has abridged much of this and has altered the order and missed items. It has been reconstructed accoding to the Pali, using her terms.

[ed2] Here Mrs. Rhys Davids has inserted different wording from that used above and which is unrelated to the Pali.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
4. Kaḷara-Khattiya Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

4. Kaḷāra the Nobleman

Sutta 33

Paṭhama Ñāṇassa Vatthuṇi Suttaṃ

The Bases of Knowledge (1)

---

[56] [41]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"I will teach you, brethren,
the four and forty bases of knowledge.

Listen to this,
give your minds thoroughly,
and I will speak.

"Even so, lord",
responded the brethren.

The Exalted One spake this:

"What, brethren, are the four and forty bases of knowledge?

Knowledge[ed1] of decay-and-death,
knowledge of the uprising of decay-and-death,
knowledge of the ceasing of decay-and-death
knowledge of the the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death.

Knowledge of birth,
knowledge of the uprising of birth,
knowledge of the ceasing of birth
knowledge of the the way going to the ceasing of birth.

Knowledge of becoming,
knowledge of the uprising of becoming,
knowledge of the ceasing of becoming knowledge of the the way going to the ceasing of becoming.

Knowledge of grasping,
knowledge of the uprising of grasping,

knowledge of the ceasing of grasping knowledge of the the way going to the ceasing of grasping.

Knowledge of craving,
knowledge of the uprising of craving,
knowledge of the ceasing of craving
knowledge of the the way going to the ceasing of craving.

Knowledge of feeling,
knowledge of the uprising of feeling,
knowledge of the ceasing of feeling knowledge of the the way going to the ceasing of feeling.

Knowledge of contact,
knowledge of the uprising of contact,
knowledge of the ceasing of contact knowledge of the the way going to the ceasing of contact.

Knowledge of sense,
knowledge of the uprising of sense,
knowledge of the ceasing of sense
knowledge of the the way going to the ceasing of sense.

Knowledge of name-and-shape,
knowledge of the uprising of name-and-shape,
knowledge of the ceasing of name-and-shape knowledge of the the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape.

Knowledge of consciousness,
knowledge of the uprising of consciousness,
knowledge of the ceasing of consciousness knowledge of the the way going to the ceasing of consciousness.

Knowledge of activities,
knowledge of the uprising of activities,
knowledge of the ceasing of activities
knowledge of the the way going to the ceasing of activities.

These, brethren, are what we call
the four and forty bases of knowledge.

§

[42]

And what, brethren, is old age-and-death?[1]

That which, of this and that being,
in this and that group,
is decay,
decrepitude,
breaking up,
hoariness,
wrinkling of the skin,
shrinkage of a life-span,
overripeness of faculties:
this is called old age.

That which of this and that being,
from this or that group,
is falling or decease,
separation,
disappearance,
mortality or dying,
accomplishment of time,
separation of component factors,
laying down of the carcase:
this is called death.

Thus it is
this old age and this death
that is called old age-and-death.

From the uprising of birth
uprising of old age-and-death.

From the ceasing of birth
ceasing of old age-and-death.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of old age-and-death,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

Now inasmuch, brethren, as the Ariyan disciple knows decay-and-death thus,
knows the uprising of decay-and-death thus,
knows the ceasing of decay-and-death thus,
knows the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death thus,
herein has he knowledge in the doctrine.

He by this doctrine which is seen,
discerned,
not a matter of time,[2]
won,
plunged into,
shapes his way of thought
both as to the past
and the future,
thus:

Any recluses and brahmins
who in bygone times
have thoroughly known decay-and-death,
have thoroughly known the uprising of decay-and-death,
have thoroughly known the ceasing of decay-and-death,
have thoroughly known the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death,
they all of them have thoroughly known it even thus,
even as I do now.

And any recluses and brahmins
who in the days to come
will thoroughly know decay-and-death,
will thoroughly know the uprising of decay-and-death,
will thoroughly know the ceasing of decay-and-death,
will thoroughly know the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death,
they all of them will thoroughly known it even thus,
even as I do now.

This is his retrospective knowledge.[3]

Inasmuch, brethren, as the Ariyan disciple
has well cleansed,
well purified
these two knowledges -
knowledge in doctrine
and retrospective knowledge -
he is called an Ariyan disciple who has won the view,
who has won vision,
who has arrived at this this gospel,
who sees this this gospel,
who possesses the knowledge of the trained man,
who possesses the wisdom of the trained man,
who has won to the stream of the Norm,
who has the Ariyan insight of revulsion,
who stands knocking at the door of the Deathless.[4]

■

And what, brethren, is birth?

That which, of this and that being
in this and that group,
is birth,
continuous birth,
descent,
reproduction,
appearance of component factors,
acquiring of sense-spheres.

This is called birth.

From the uprising of becoming
uprising of birth.

From the ceasing of becoming
ceasing of birth.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of birth,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

Now inasmuch, brethren, as the Ariyan disciple knows birth thus,
knows the uprising of birth thus,
knows the ceasing of birth thus,

knows the way going to the ceasing of birth thus,
herein has he knowledge in the doctrine.

He by this doctrine which is seen,
discerned,
not a matter of time,
won,
plunged into,
shapes his way of thought
both as to the past
and the future,
thus:

Any recluses and brahmins
who in bygone times
have thoroughly known birth,
have thoroughly known the uprising of birth,
have thoroughly known the ceasing of birth,
have thoroughly known the way going to the ceasing of birth,
they all of them have thoroughly known it even thus,
even as I do now.

And any recluses and brahmins
who in the days to come
will thoroughly know birth,
will thoroughly know the uprising of birth,
will thoroughly know the ceasing of birth,
will thoroughly know the way going to the ceasing of birth,
they all of them will thoroughly known it even thus,
even as I do now.

This is his retrospective knowledge.

Inasmuch, brethren, as the Ariyan disciple
has well cleansed,
well purified

these two knowledges -
knowledge in doctrine
and retrospective knowledge -
he is called an Ariyan disciple who has won the view,
who has won vision,
who has arrived at this this gospel,
who sees this this gospel,
who possesses the knowledge of the trained man,
who possesses the wisdom of the trained man,
who has won to the stream of the Norm,
who has the Ariyan insight of revulsion,
who stands knocking at the door of the Deathless.

■

And what, brethren, is becoming?

Three are these becomings:
becoming in Kāma-[worlds],
becoming in Rūpa-[worlds],
becoming in Arūpa-[worlds].

This is called becoming.

From the uprising of grasping
uprising of becoming.

From the ceasing of grasping
ceasing of becoming.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of becoming,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,

right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

Now inasmuch, brethren, as the Ariyan disciple knows becoming thus,
knows the uprising of becoming thus,
knows the ceasing of becoming thus,
knows the way going to the ceasing of becoming thus,
herein has he knowledge in the doctrine.

He by this doctrine which is seen,
discerned,
not a matter of time,
won,
plunged into,
shapes his way of thought
both as to the past
and the future,
thus:

Any recluses and brahmins
who in bygone times
have thoroughly known becoming,
have thoroughly known the uprising of becoming,
have thoroughly known the ceasing of becoming,
have thoroughly known the way going to the ceasing of becoming,
they all of them have thoroughly known it even thus,
even as I do now.

And any recluses and brahmins
who in the days to come
will thoroughly know becoming,
will thoroughly know the uprising of becoming,
will thoroughly know the ceasing of becoming,
will thoroughly know the way going to the ceasing of becoming,

they all of them will thoroughly known it even thus,
even as I do now.

This is his retrospective knowledge.

Inasmuch, brethren, as the Ariyan disciple
has well cleansed,
well purified
these two knowledges -
knowledge in doctrine
and retrospective knowledge -
he is called an Ariyan disciple who has won the view,
who has won vision,
who has arrived at this this gospel,
who sees this this gospel,
who possesses the knowledge of the trained man,
who possesses the wisdom of the trained man,
who has won to the stream of the Norm,
who has the Ariyan insight of revulsion,
who stands knocking at the door of the Deathless.

■

And what, brethren, is grasping?

There are these four graspings:
grasping of desires,
grasping of opinion,
grasping of rule and ritual,
grasping of soul-theory.

This is called grasping.

From the uprising of craving
uprising of grasping.

From the ceasing of craving
ceasing of grasping.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of grasping,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

Now inasmuch, brethren, as the Ariyan disciple knows grasping thus,
knows the uprising of grasping thus,
knows the ceasing of grasping thus,
knows the way going to the ceasing of grasping thus,
herein has he knowledge in the doctrine.

He by this doctrine which is seen,
discerned,
not a matter of time,
won,
plunged into,
shapes his way of thought
both as to the past
and the future,
thus:

Any recluses and brahmins
who in bygone times
have thoroughly known grasping,
have thoroughly known the uprising of grasping,
have thoroughly known the ceasing of grasping,

have thoroughly known the way going to the ceasing of grasping,
they all of them have thoroughly known it even thus,
even as I do now.

And any recluses and brahmins
who in the days to come
will thoroughly know grasping,
will thoroughly know the uprising of grasping,
will thoroughly know the ceasing of grasping,
will thoroughly know the way going to the ceasing of grasping,
they all of them will thoroughly known it even thus,
even as I do now.

This is his retrospective knowledge.

Inasmuch, brethren, as the Ariyan disciple
has well cleansed,
well purified
these two knowledges -
knowledge in doctrine
and retrospective knowledge -
he is called an Ariyan disciple who has won the view,
who has won vision,
who has arrived at this this gospel,
who sees this this gospel,
who possesses the knowledge of the trained man,
who possesses the wisdom of the trained man,
who has won to the stream of the Norm,
who has the Ariyan insight of revulsion,
who stands knocking at the door of the Deathless.

■

And what, brethren, is craving?

There are these six groups of craving:
craving for things seen,

for things heard,
for odours,
for tastes,
for things tangible,
for ideas.

This is called craving.

From the uprising of feeling
uprising of craving.

From the ceasing of feeling
ceasing of craving.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of craving,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

Now inasmuch, brethren, as the Ariyan disciple knows craving thus,
knows the uprising of craving thus,
knows the ceasing of craving thus,
knows the way going to the ceasing of craving thus,
herein has he knowledge in the doctrine.

He by this doctrine which is seen,
discerned,
not a matter of time,
won,
plunged into,

shapes his way of thought
both as to the past
and the future,
thus:

Any recluses and brahmins
who in bygone times
have thoroughly known craving,
have thoroughly known the uprising of craving,
have thoroughly known the ceasing of craving,
have thoroughly known the way going to the ceasing of craving,
they all of them have thoroughly known it even thus,
even as I do now.

And any recluses and brahmins
who in the days to come
will thoroughly know craving,
will thoroughly know the uprising of craving,
will thoroughly know the ceasing of craving,
will thoroughly know the way going to the ceasing of craving,
they all of them will thoroughly known it even thus,
even as I do now.

This is his retrospective knowledge.

Inasmuch, brethren, as the Ariyan disciple
has well cleansed,
well purified
these two knowledges -
knowledge in doctrine
and retrospective knowledge -
he is called an Ariyan disciple who has won the view,
who has won vision,
who has arrived at this this gospel,
who sees this this gospel,
who possesses the knowledge of the trained man,

who possesses the wisdom of the trained man,
who has won to the stream of the Norm,
who has the Ariyan insight of revulsion,
who stands knocking at the door of the Deathless.

■

And what, brethren, is feeling?

There are these six groups of feeling:
feeling that is born of eye-contact,
feeling that is born of ear-contact,
feeling that is born of nose-contact,
feeling that is born of tongue-contact,
feeling that is born of body-contact,
feeling that is born of mind-contact.

This is called feeling.

From the uprising of contact
uprising of feeling.

From the ceasing of contact
ceasing of feeling.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of feeling,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

Now inasmuch, brethren, as the Ariyan disciple knows feeling thus,
knows the uprising of feeling thus,
knows the ceasing of feeling thus,
knows the way going to the ceasing of feeling thus,
herein has he knowledge in the doctrine.

He by this doctrine which is seen,
discerned,
not a matter of time,
won,
plunged into,
shapes his way of thought
both as to the past
and the future,
thus:

Any recluses and brahmins
who in bygone times
have thoroughly known feeling,
have thoroughly known the uprising of feeling,
have thoroughly known the ceasing of feeling,
have thoroughly known the way going to the ceasing of feeling,
they all of them have thoroughly known it even thus,
even as I do now.

And any recluses and brahmins
who in the days to come
will thoroughly know feeling,
will thoroughly know the uprising of feeling,
will thoroughly know the ceasing of feeling,
will thoroughly know the way going to the ceasing of feeling,
they all of them will thoroughly known it even thus,
even as I do now.

This is his retrospective knowledge.

Inasmuch, brethren, as the Ariyan disciple
has well cleansed,
well purified
these two knowledges -
knowledge in doctrine
and retrospective knowledge -
he is called an Ariyan disciple who has won the view,
who has won vision,
who has arrived at this this gospel,
who sees this this gospel,
who possesses the knowledge of the trained man,
who possesses the wisdom of the trained man,
who has won to the stream of the Norm,
who has the Ariyan insight of revulsion,
who stands knocking at the door of the Deathless.

■

And what, brethren, is contact?

There are these six groups of contact:
eye-contact,
ear-contact,
nose-contact,
tongue-contact,
body-contact,
mind-contact.

This is called contact.

From the uprising of sixfold sense
uprising of contact.

From the ceasing of sixfold sense
ceasing of contact.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of contact,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

Now inasmuch, brethren, as the Ariyan disciple knows contact thus,
knows the uprising of contact thus,
knows the ceasing of contact thus,
knows the way going to the ceasing of contact thus,
herein has he knowledge in the doctrine.

He by this doctrine which is seen,
discerned,
not a matter of time,
won,
plunged into,
shapes his way of thought
both as to the past
and the future,
thus:

Any recluses and brahmins
who in bygone times
have thoroughly known contact,
have thoroughly known the uprising of contact,
have thoroughly known the ceasing of contact,
have thoroughly known the way going to the ceasing of contact,
they all of them have thoroughly known it even thus,
even as I do now.

And any recluses and brahmins
who in the days to come
will thoroughly know contact,
will thoroughly know the uprising of contact,
will thoroughly know the ceasing of contact,
will thoroughly know the way going to the ceasing of contact,
they all of them will thoroughly known it even thus,
even as I do now.

This is his retrospective knowledge.

Inasmuch, brethren, as the Ariyan disciple
has well cleansed,
well purified
these two knowledges -
knowledge in doctrine
and retrospective knowledge -
he is called an Ariyan disciple who has won the view,
who has won vision,
who has arrived at this this gospel,
who sees this this gospel,
who possesses the knowledge of the trained man,
who possesses the wisdom of the trained man,
who has won to the stream of the Norm,
who has the Ariyan insight of revulsion,
who stands knocking at the door of the Deathless.

■

And what, brethren, is sixfold sense?

The sense of eye,
ear,
nose,
tongue,

body,
mind.

This is called sixfold sense.

From the uprising of name-and-shape
uprising of sixfold sense.

From the ceasing of name-and-shape
ceasing of sixfold sense.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of sixfold sense,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

Now inasmuch, brethren, as the Ariyan disciple knows sixfold sense thus,
knows the uprising of sixfold sense thus,
knows the ceasing of sixfold sense thus,
knows the way going to the ceasing of sixfold sense thus,
herein has he knowledge in the doctrine.

He by this doctrine which is seen,
discerned,
not a matter of time,
won,
plunged into,
shapes his way of thought
both as to the past

and the future,
thus:

Any recluses and brahmins
who in bygone times
have thoroughly known sixfold sense,
have thoroughly known the uprising of sixfold sense,
have thoroughly known the ceasing of sixfold sense,
have thoroughly known the way going to the ceasing of sixfold sense,
they all of them have thoroughly known it even thus,
even as I do now.

And any recluses and brahmins
who in the days to come
will thoroughly know sixfold sense,
will thoroughly know the uprising of sixfold sense,
will thoroughly know the ceasing of sixfold sense,
will thoroughly know the way going to the ceasing of sixfold sense,
they all of them will thoroughly known it even thus,
even as I do now.

This is his retrospective knowledge.

Inasmuch, brethren, as the Ariyan disciple
has well cleansed,
well purified
these two knowledges -
knowledge in doctrine
and retrospective knowledge -
he is called an Ariyan disciple who has won the view,
who has won vision,
who has arrived at this this gospel,
who sees this this gospel,
who possesses the knowledge of the trained man,
who possesses the wisdom of the trained man,
who has won to the stream of the Norm,

who has the Ariyan insight of revulsion,
who stands knocking at the door of the Deathless.

■

And what, brethren, is name-and-shape?

Feeling,
perception,
will,
contact,
work of mind.

This is called name.

The four great elements
and the shape derived from them.

This is called shape.

This is the name,
this is the shape
called name-and-shape.

From the uprising of consciousness
uprising of name-and-shape.

From the ceasing of consciousness
ceasing of name-and-shape.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,

right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

Now inasmuch, brethren, as the Ariyan disciple knows name-and-shape thus,
knows the uprising of name-and-shape thus,
knows the ceasing of name-and-shape thus,
knows the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape thus,
herein has he knowledge in the doctrine.

He by this doctrine which is seen,
discerned,
not a matter of time,
won,
plunged into,
shapes his way of thought
both as to the past
and the future,
thus:

Any recluses and brahmins
who in bygone times
have thoroughly known name-and-shape,
have thoroughly known the uprising of name-and-shape,
have thoroughly known the ceasing of name-and-shape,
have thoroughly known the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape,
they all of them have thoroughly known it even thus,
even as I do now.

And any recluses and brahmins
who in the days to come
will thoroughly know name-and-shape,
will thoroughly know the uprising of name-and-shape,
will thoroughly know the ceasing of name-and-shape,

will thoroughly know the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape,
they all of them will thoroughly known it even thus,
even as I do now.

This is his retrospective knowledge.

Inasmuch, brethren, as the Ariyan disciple
has well cleansed,
well purified
these two knowledges -
knowledge in doctrine
and retrospective knowledge -
he is called an Ariyan disciple who has won the view,
who has won vision,
who has arrived at this this gospel,
who sees this this gospel,
who possesses the knowledge of the trained man,
who possesses the wisdom of the trained man,
who has won to the stream of the Norm,
who has the Ariyan insight of revulsion,
who stands knocking at the door of the Deathless.

■

And what is consciousness?

These are the six groups of consciousness:
— eye-consciousness,
ear-consciousness,
smell-consciousness,
taste-consciousness,
touch-consciousness,
and mind-consciousness.

This is called consciousness.

From the uprising of activities
uprising of consciousness.

From the ceasing of activities
ceasing of consciousness.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of consciousness,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

Now inasmuch, brethren, as the Ariyan disciple knows consciousness thus,
knows the uprising of consciousness thus,
knows the ceasing of consciousness thus,
knows the way going to the ceasing of consciousness thus,
herein has he knowledge in the doctrine.

He by this doctrine which is seen,
discerned,
not a matter of time,
won,
plunged into,
shapes his way of thought
both as to the past
and the future,
thus:

Any recluses and brahmins
who in bygone times

have thoroughly known consciousness,
have thoroughly known the uprising of consciousness,
have thoroughly known the ceasing of consciousness,
have thoroughly known the way going to the ceasing of consciousness,
they all of them have thoroughly known it even thus,
even as I do now.

And any recluses and brahmins
who in the days to come
will thoroughly know consciousness,
will thoroughly know the uprising of consciousness,
will thoroughly know the ceasing of consciousness,
will thoroughly know the way going to the ceasing of consciousness,
they all of them will thoroughly known it even thus,
even as I do now.

This is his retrospective knowledge.

Inasmuch, brethren, as the Ariyan disciple
has well cleansed,
well purified
these two knowledges -
knowledge in doctrine
and retrospective knowledge -
he is called an Ariyan disciple who has won the view,
who has won vision,
who has arrived at this this gospel,
who sees this this gospel,
who possesses the knowledge of the trained man,
who possesses the wisdom of the trained man,
who has won to the stream of the Norm,
who has the Ariyan insight of revulsion,
who stands knocking at the door of the Deathless.

■

And what are activities?

These are the three activities:
— those of deed,
speech
and mind.

These are activities.

From the uprising of ignorance
uprising of activities.

From the ceasing of ignorance
ceasing of activities.

Just this Ariyan eightfold path
is the way going to the ceasing of activities,
to wit,
right view,
right aim,
right energy,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

Now inasmuch, brethren, as the Ariyan disciple knows activities thus,
knows the uprising of activities thus,
knows the ceasing of activities thus,
knows the way going to the ceasing of activities thus,
herein has he knowledge in the doctrine.

He by this doctrine which is seen,
discerned,
not a matter of time,
won,

plunged into,
shapes his way of thought
both as to the past
and the future,
thus:

Any recluses and brahmins
who in bygone times
have thoroughly known activities,
have thoroughly known the uprising of activities,
have thoroughly known the ceasing of activities,
have thoroughly known the way going to the ceasing of activities,
they all of them have thoroughly known it even thus,
even as I do now.

And any recluses and brahmins
who in the days to come
will thoroughly know activities,
will thoroughly know the uprising of activities,
will thoroughly know the ceasing of activities,
will thoroughly know the way going to the ceasing of activities,
they all of them will thoroughly known it even thus,
even as I do now.

This is his retrospective knowledge.

Inasmuch, brethren, as the Ariyan disciple
has well cleansed,
well purified
these two knowledges -
knowledge in doctrine
and retrospective knowledge -
he is called an Ariyan disciple who has won the view,
who has won vision,
who has arrived at this this gospel,
who sees this this gospel,

who possesses the knowledge of the trained man,
who possesses the wisdom of the trained man,
who has won to the stream of the Norm,
who has the Ariyan insight of revulsion,
who stands knocking at the door of the Deathless.

---

[1] Cf. §§ 2, 28..

[2] 'Instant in fruition,' Vis.M. 216.

[3] Anvaye ñāṇaḍṃ, lit. knowledge in the succession, series. According to the Comy. the reflective thought on the course of training ending in mastery (pacca-vekkhana-ñāṇaṃ: lit. re-down-looking knowledge). Cf. much of the Commentary to the Anthologies, where such retrospect stimulates to metric utterance.

[4] Cf. above, §§ 27, 28.

[ed1] Mrs. Rhys Davids qualifies 'in the nature of', but this is not in the Pali; later she abandons this.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
4. Kaḷara-Khattiya Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

4. Kaḷāra the Nobleman

Sutta 34

Dutiya Ñāṇassa Vatthuṇi Suttaṃ

The Bases of Knowledge (2)

---

[59] [42]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"I will teach you, brethren,
the bases of knowledge in sevenfold groups.

Listen to this,
give your minds thoroughly,
and I will speak."

"Even so, lord",
responded the brethren.

The Exalted One spake this: [43]

"What are the bases of knowledge in sevenfold groups?

Knowledge that decay-and-death
is conditioned by birth.

Knowledge that where birth is not
there is no decay-and-death.

Knowledge that in times gone by also
decay-and-death were conditioned by birth.

Knowledge that in times gone by where birth was not there was no decay-and-death.

Knowledge that in time to come also decay-and-death will be conditioned by birth.

Knowledge that in time to come
where birth is not there will be no decay-and-death.

Whatever is knowledge of the law of cause,
that is also knowledge of that which is by nature
perishable,
transient,
fading away,
tending to cease.

■

Knowledge that birth
is conditioned by becoming.

Knowledge that where becoming is not
there is no birth.

Knowledge that in times gone by also birth was conditioned by becoming.

Knowledge that in times gone by where becoming was not there was no birth.

Knowledge that in time to come also birth will be conditioned by becoming.

Knowledge that in time to come
where becoming is not there will be no birth.

Whatever is knowledge of the law of cause,
that is also knowledge of that which is by nature
perishable,
transient,
fading away,
tending to cease.

■

Knowledge that becoming
is conditioned by grasping.

Knowledge that where grasping is not there is no becoming.

Knowledge that in times gone by also
becoming was conditioned by grasping.

Knowledge that in times gone by where grasping was not there was no becoming.

Knowledge that in time to come also
becoming will be conditioned by grasping.

Knowledge that in time to come
where grasping is not there will be no becoming.

Whatever is knowledge of the law of cause,
that is also knowledge of that which is by nature
perishable,
transient,
fading away,
tending to cease.

■

Knowledge that grasping
is conditioned by craving.

Knowledge that where craving is not there is no grasping.

Knowledge that in times gone by also grasping was conditioned by craving.

Knowledge that in times gone by where craving was not there was no grasping.

Knowledge that in time to come also
grasping will be conditioned by craving.

Knowledge that in time to come
where craving is not
there will be no grasping.

Whatever is knowledge of the law of cause,
that is also knowledge of that which is by nature
perishable,
transient,
fading away,
tending to cease.

■

Knowledge that craving
is conditioned by feeling.

Knowledge that where feeling is not there is no craving.

Knowledge that in times gone by also craving was conditioned by feeling.

Knowledge that in times gone by where feeling was not there was no craving.

Knowledge that in time to come also craving will be conditioned by feeling.

Knowledge that in time to come
where feeling is not there will be no craving.

Whatever is knowledge of the law of cause,
that is also knowledge of that which is by nature
perishable,
transient,
fading away,
tending to cease.

■

Knowledge that feeling
is conditioned by contact.

Knowledge that where contact is not there is no feeling.

Knowledge that in times gone by also
feeling was conditioned by contact.

Knowledge that in times gone by where contact was not there was no feeling.

Knowledge that in time to come also feeling will be conditioned by contact.

Knowledge that in time to come
where contact is not there will be no feeling.

Whatever is knowledge of the law of cause,
that is also knowledge of that which is by nature
perishable,
transient,

fading away,
tending to cease.

■

Knowledge that contact
is conditioned by sixfold sense.

Knowledge that where sixfold sense is not there is no contact.

Knowledge that in times gone by also contact was conditioned by sixfold sense.

Knowledge that in times gone by where sixfold sense was not there was no contact.

Knowledge that in time to come also contact will be conditioned by sixfold sense.

Knowledge that in time to come
where sixfold sense is not there will be no contact.

Whatever is knowledge of the law of cause,
that is also knowledge of that which is by nature
perishable,
transient,
fading away,
tending to cease.

■

Knowledge that sixfold sense
is conditioned by name-and-shape.

Knowledge that where name-and-shape is not
there is no sixfold sense.

Knowledge that in times gone by also
sixfold sense was conditioned by name-and-shape.

Knowledge that in times gone by where name-and-shape was not there was no sixfold sense.

Knowledge that in time to come also
sixfold sense will be conditioned by name-and-shape.

Knowledge that in time to come
where name-and-shape is not there will be no sixfold sense.

Whatever is knowledge of the law of cause,
that is also knowledge of that which is by nature
perishable,
transient,
fading away,
tending to cease.

■

Knowledge that name-and-shape
is conditioned by consciousness.

Knowledge that where consciousness is not there is no name-and-shape.

Knowledge that in times gone by also
name-and-shape was conditioned by consciousness.

Knowledge that in times gone by where consciousness was not

there was no name-and-shape.

Knowledge that in time to come also
name-and-shape will be conditioned by consciousness.

Knowledge that in time to come
where consciousness is not there will be no name-and-shape.

Whatever is knowledge of the law of cause,
that is also knowledge of that which is by nature
perishable,
transient,
fading away,
tending to cease.

■

Knowledge that consciousness
is conditioned by activities.

Knowledge that where activities is not there is no consciousness.

Knowledge that in times gone by also
consciousness was conditioned by activities.

Knowledge that in times gone by where activities was not there was no consciousness.

Knowledge that in time to come also
consciousness will be conditioned by activities.

Knowledge that in time to come
where activities is not there will be no consciousness.

Whatever is knowledge of the law of cause,
that is also knowledge of that which is by nature
perishable,
transient,
fading away,
tending to cease.

■

Knowledge that activities
are conditioned by ignorance.

Knowledge that where ignorance is not
there are no activities.

Knowledge that in times gone by also
activities were conditioned by ignorance.

Knowledge that in times gone by where ignorance was not there were no activities.

Knowledge that in time to come also
activities will be conditioned by ignorance.

Knowledge that in time to come
where ignorance is not there will be no activities.

Whatever is knowledge of the law of cause,
that is also knowledge of that which is by nature
perishable,
transient,
fading away,
tending to cease."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
4. Kaḷara-Khattiya Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

4. Kaḷāra the Nobleman

Sutta 35

Paṭhama Avijjā-Paccayā Desanā Suttaṃ

Conditioned by Ignorance (1)

---

[60] [43]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Conditioned by ignorance activities come to pass;
conditioned by activities consciousness,
conditioned by consciousness name-and-shape,
conditioned by name-and-shape six-fold-sense,
conditioned by six-fold-sense contact,
conditioned by contact feeling,
conditioned by feeling craving,
conditioned by craving grasping,
conditioned by grasping becoming,
conditioned by becoming birth,
conditioned by birth old age-and death,
grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill."

[This having been said, a certain bhikkhu asked:][ed1]

"Now what, lord, is decay-and-dying?

And whose is this decay-and-dying?"[1]

"Not a fit question," said the Exalted One.

"You might ask, brother:

'Now what is decay-and-dying?

And whose is this decay-and-dying?'

or you might say,

'decay-and-death is one thing,
but [the person] who grows old and dies is another thing' -
if you did so,
both [pairs of questions] would be the same in meaning,
different only in form.

Where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul[2] and body are one and the same,'

there there is no divine living.

Or where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are different things,'

there there is no divine living.

The Tathāgata reaches neither [44] of these two extremes;
he teaches a Middle [Way], and says:

'Conditioned by birth is decay-and-dying.'"

■

Then that brother questioned the Exalted One:

"Now what, lord, is birth?

And whose is this birth?"

"Not a fit question," said the Exalted One.

"You might ask, brother:

'Now what is birth?

And whose is this birth?'

or you might say,
'birth is one thing,
but [the person] who is born is another thing' -
if you did so,
both [pairs of questions] would be the same in meaning,
different only in form.

Where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are one and the same,'

there there is no divine living.

Or where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are different things,'

there there is no divine living.

The Tathāgata reaches neither of these two extremes;
he teaches a Middle [Way], and says:

'Conditioned by becoming is birth.'"

■

Then that brother questioned the Exalted One:

"Now what, lord, is becoming?

And whose is this becoming?"

"Not a fit question," said the Exalted One.

"You might ask, brother:

'Now what is becoming?

And whose is this becoming?'

or you might say,
'becoming is one thing,
but [the person] who becomes is another thing' -
if you did so,
both [pairs of questions] would be the same in meaning,
different only in form.

Where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are one and the same,'

there there is no divine living.

Or where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are different things,'

there there is no divine living.

The Tathāgata reaches neither of these two extremes;
he teaches a Middle [Way], and says:

'Conditioned by grasping is becoming.'"

■

Then that brother questioned the Exalted One:

"Now what, lord, is grasping?

And whose is this grasping?"

"Not a fit question", said the Exalted One.

"You might ask, brother:

'Now what is grasping?

And whose is this grasping?'

or you might say,
'grasping is one thing,
but [the person] who grasps is another thing' -
if you did so,
both [pairs of questions] would be the same in meaning,
different only in form.

Where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are one and the same,'

there there is no divine living.

Or where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are different things,'

there there is no divine living.

The Tathāgata reaches neither of these two extremes;
he teaches a Middle [Way], and says:

'Conditioned by craving is grasping.'"

■

Then that brother questioned the Exalted One:

"Now what, lord, is craving?

And whose is this craving?"

"Not a fit question", said the Exalted One.

"You might ask, brother:

'Now what is craving?

And whose is this craving?'

or you might say,
'craving is one thing,
but [the person] who craves is another thing' -
if you did so,
both [pairs of questions] would be the same in meaning,
different only in form.

Where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are one and the same,'

there there is no divine living.

Or where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are different things,'

there there is no divine living.

The Tathāgata reaches neither of these two extremes;
he teaches a Middle [Way], and says:

'Conditioned by feeling is craving.'"

■

Then that brother questioned the Exalted One:

"Now what, lord, is feeling?

And whose is this feeling?"

"Not a fit question", said the Exalted One.

"You might ask, brother:

'Now what is feeling?

And whose is this feeling?'

or you might say,
'feeling is one thing,
but [the person] who feels is another thing' -
if you did so,
both [pairs of questions] would be the same in meaning,
different only in form.

Where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are one and the same,'

there there is no divine living.

Or where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are different things,'

there there is no divine living.

The Tathāgata reaches neither of these two extremes;
he teaches a Middle [Way], and says:

'Conditioned by contact is feeling.'"

■

Then that brother questioned the Exalted One:

"Now what, lord, is contact?

And whose is this contact?"

"Not a fit question", said the Exalted One.

"You might ask, brother:

'Now what is contact?

And whose is this contact?'

or you might say,
'contact is one thing,
but [the person] who contacts is another thing' -
if you did so,
both [pairs of questions] would be the same in meaning,
different only in form.

Where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are one and the same,'

there there is no divine living.

Or where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are different things,'

there there is no divine living.

The Tathāgata reaches neither of these two extremes;
he teaches a Middle [Way], and says:

'Conditioned by six-fold-sense is contact.'"

■

Then that brother questioned the Exalted One:

"Now what, lord, is six-fold-sense?

And whose is this six-fold-sense?"

"Not a fit question", said the Exalted One.

"You might ask, brother:

'Now what is six-fold-sense?

And whose is this six-fold-sense?'

or you might say,
'six-fold-sense is one thing,
but [the person] with six-fold-sense[ed2] is another thing' -
if you did so,
both [pairs of questions] would be the same in meaning,
different only in form.

Where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are one and the same,'

there there is no divine living.

Or where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are different things,'

there there is no divine living.

The Tathāgata reaches neither of these two extremes;
he teaches a Middle [Way], and says:

'Conditioned by name-and-shape is six-fold-sense.'"

■

Then that brother questioned the Exalted One:

"Now what, lord, is name-and-shape?

And whose is this name-and-shape?"

"Not a fit question", said the Exalted One.

"You might ask, brother:

'Now what is name-and-shape?

And whose is this name-and-shape?'

or you might say,
'name-and-shape is one thing,
but [the person] with name-and-shape is another thing' -
if you did so,
both [pairs of questions] would be the same in meaning,
different only in form.

Where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are one and the same,'

there there is no divine living.

Or where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are different things,'

there there is no divine living.

The Tathāgata reaches neither of these two extremes;
he teaches a Middle [Way], and says:

'Conditioned by consciousness is name-and-shape.'"

■

Then that brother questioned the Exalted One:

"Now what, lord, is consciousness?

And whose is this consciousness?"

"Not a fit question", said the Exalted One.

"You might ask, brother:

'Now what is consciousness?

And whose is this consciousness?'

or you might say,
'consciousness is one thing,
but [the person] with consciousness is another thing' -
if you did so,
both [pairs of questions] would be the same in meaning,
different only in form.

Where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are one and the same,'

there there is no divine living.

Or where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are different things,'

there there is no divine living.

The Tathāgata reaches neither of these two extremes;
he teaches a Middle [Way], and says:

'Conditioned by activities is consciousness.'"

■

Then that brother questioned the Exalted One:

"Now what, lord, are activities?

And whose are these activities?"

"Not a fit question", said the Exalted One.

"You might ask, brother:

'Now what are activities?

And whose are these activities?'

or you might say,
'activities are one thing,
but [the person] with activities is another thing' -
if you did so,
both [pairs of questions] would be the same in meaning,
different only in form.

Where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are one and the same,'

there there is no divine living.

Or where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are different things,'

there there is no divine living.

The Tathāgata reaches neither of these two extremes;
he teaches a Middle [Way], and says:

'Conditioned by ignorance are activities.'

§

But, brother, from the utter fading out and ceasing of ignorance
these disorders,
these disagreements,
these distortions,[3]
all whatever they be, -

the asking first what is decay-and-dying
and then whose is this decay-and-dying,
or saying decay-and-dying and he who decays-and-dies
are different one from the other,
or to say soul is body,
or soul and body are different things -

all such props become cast out,
they have been cut off at the root,
made like the stump of a palmtree,
made things that have ceased to be,
so that they cannot grow up again in the future.

■

From the utter fading out and ceasing of ignorance
these disorders,
these disagreements,
these distortions,
all whatever they be, -

the asking first what is birth
and then whose is this birth,
or saying birth and he who is born
are different one from the other,
or to say soul is body,
or soul and body are different things -

all such props become cast out,
they have been cut off at the root,
made like the stump of a palmtree,
made things that have ceased to be,
so that they cannot grow up again in the future.

■

From the utter fading out and ceasing of ignorance
these disorders,
these disagreements,
these distortions,
all whatever they be, -

the asking first what is becoming
and then whose is this becoming,
or saying becoming and he who becomes
are different one from the other,
or to say soul is body,
or soul and body are different things -

all such props become cast out,
they have been cut off at the root,
made like the stump of a palmtree,

made things that have ceased to be,
so that they cannot grow up again in the future.

■

From the utter fading out and ceasing of ignorance
these disorders,
these disagreements,
these distortions,
all whatever they be, -

the asking first what is grasping
and then whose is this grasping,
or saying grasping and he who grasps
are different one from the other,
or to say soul is body,
or soul and body are different things -

all such props become cast out,
they have been cut off at the root,
made like the stump of a palmtree,
made things that have ceased to be,
so that they cannot grow up again in the future.

■

From the utter fading out and ceasing of ignorance
these disorders,
these disagreements,
these distortions,
all whatever they be, -

the asking first what is craving
and then whose is this craving,
or saying craving and he who craves
are different one from the other,

or to say soul is body,
or soul and body are different things -

all such props become cast out,
they have been cut off at the root,
made like the stump of a palmtree,
made things that have ceased to be,
so that they cannot grow up again in the future.

■

From the utter fading out and ceasing of ignorance
these disorders,
these disagreements,
these distortions,
all whatever they be, -

the asking first what is feeling
and then whose is this feeling,
or saying feeling and he who feels
are different one from the other,
or to say soul is body,
or soul and body are different things -

all such props become cast out,
they have been cut off at the root,
made like the stump of a palmtree,
made things that have ceased to be,
so that they cannot grow up again in the future.

■

From the utter fading out and ceasing of ignorance
these disorders,
these disagreements,
these distortions,
all whatever they be, -

the asking first what is contact
and then whose is this contact,
or saying contact and he who contacts
are different one from the other,
or to say soul is body,
or soul and body are different things -

all such props become cast out,
they have been cut off at the root,
made like the stump of a palmtree,
made things that have ceased to be,
so that they cannot grow up again in the future.

■

From the utter fading out and ceasing of ignorance
these disorders,
these disagreements,
these distortions,
all whatever they be, -

the asking first what is sixfold sense
and then whose is this sixfold sense,
or saying sixfold sense and he who has sixfold sense
are different one from the other,
or to say soul is body,
or soul and body are different things -

all such props become cast out,
they have been cut off at the root,
made like the stump of a palmtree,
made things that have ceased to be,
so that they cannot grow up again in the future.

■

From the utter fading out and ceasing of ignorance
these disorders,
these disagreements,
these distortions,
all whatever they be, -

the asking first what is name-and-shape
and then whose is this name-and-shape,
or saying name-and-shape and he who has name-and-shape
are different one from the other,
or to say soul is body,
or soul and body are different things -

all such props become cast out,
they have been cut off at the root,
made like the stump of a palmtree,
made things that have ceased to be,
so that they cannot grow up again in the future.

■

From the utter fading out and ceasing of ignorance
these disorders,
these disagreements,
these distortions,
all whatever they be, -

the asking first what is consciousness
and then whose is this consciousness,
or saying consciousness and he who has consciousness
are different one from the other,
or to say soul is body,
or soul and body are different things -

all such props become cast out,
they have been cut off at the root,
made like the stump of a palmtree,

made things that have ceased to be,
so that they cannot grow up again in the future.

■

From the utter fading out and ceasing of ignorance
these disorders,
these disagreements,
these distortions,
all whatever they be, -

the asking first what are activities
and then whose are these activities,
or saying activities and he who has activity
are different one from the other,
or to say soul is body,
or soul and body are different things -

all such props become cast out,
they have been cut off at the root,
made like the stump of a palmtree,
made things that have ceased to be,
so that they cannot grow up again in the future."

---

[1] Neither does the Comy. specify the questioner.

[2] 'Soul' = jīva.

[3] Cf. above i, 155. The comment on the three terms here is a little different, and is given in Index ii, at visukāyitāni*.

[ed1] Omitted by Mrs. Rhys Davids.

[ed2] Mrs. Rhys Davids abridgment does not explain how this would be constructed by her.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
4. Kaḷara-Khattiya Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

4. Kaḷāra the Nobleman

Sutta 36

Dutiya Avijjādipaccayā Desanā Suttaṃ

Conditioned by Ignorance (2)

---

[63] [44]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Conditioned by ignorance activities come to pass;
conditioned by activities consciousness,
conditioned by consciousness name-and-shape,
conditioned by name-and-shape six-fold-sense,
conditioned by six-fold-sense contact,
conditioned by contact feeling,
conditioned by feeling craving,
conditioned by craving grasping,
conditioned by grasping becoming,
conditioned by becoming birth,
conditioned by birth old age-and death,
grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

'Now what is decay-and-dying?

And whose is this decay-and-dying?'

you might ask, brethren,
or you might say,
'decay-and-death is one thing,
but [the person] who grows old and dies is another thing' -
if you did so,
both would be the same in meaning,
different only in form.

Where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are one and the same,'

there there is no divine living.

Or where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are different things,'

there there is no divine living.

The Tathāgata reaches neither these two extremes;
he teaches a Middle [Way], and says:

'Conditioned by birth is decay-and-dying.'

■

'Now what is birth?

And whose is this birth?'

you might ask, brethren,
or you might say,
'birth is one thing,
but [the person] who is born is another thing' -
if you did so,
both would be the same in meaning,
different only in form.

Where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are one and the same,'

there there is no divine living.

Or where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are different things,'

there there is no divine living.

The Tathāgata reaches neither of these two extremes;
he teaches a Middle [Way], and says:

'Conditioned by becoming is birth.'

■

'Now what is becoming?

And whose is this becoming?'

you might ask, brethren,
or you might say,
'becoming is one thing,
but [the person] who becomes is another thing' -
if you did so,
both would be the same in meaning,
different only in form.

Where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are one and the same,'

there there is no divine living.

Or where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are different things,'

there there is no divine living.

The Tathāgata reaches neither of these two extremes;
he teaches a Middle [Way], and says:

'Conditioned by grasping is becoming.'

■

'Now what is grasping?

And whose is this grasping?'

you might ask, brethren,
or you might say,
'grasping is one thing,
but [the person] who grasps is another thing' -
if you did so,
both would be the same in meaning,
different only in form.

Where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are one and the same,'

there there is no divine living.

Or where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are different things,'

there there is no divine living.

The Tathāgata reaches neither of these two extremes;
he teaches a Middle [Way], and says:

'Conditioned by craving is grasping.'

■

'Now what is craving?

And whose is this craving?'

you might ask, brethren,
or you might say,
'craving is one thing,
but [the person] who craves is another thing' -
if you did so,
both would be the same in meaning,
different only in form.

Where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are one and the same,'

there there is no divine living.

Or where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are different things,'

there there is no divine living.

The Tathāgata reaches neither of these two extremes;
he teaches a Middle [Way], and says:

'Conditioned by feeling is craving.'

■

'Now what is feeling?

And whose is this feeling?'

you might ask, brethren,
or you might say,
'feeling is one thing,
but [the person] who feels is another thing' -
if you did so,
both would be the same in meaning,
different only in form.

Where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are one and the same,'

there there is no divine living.

Or where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are different things,'

there there is no divine living.

The Tathāgata reaches neither of these two extremes;
he teaches a Middle [Way], and says:

'Conditioned by contact is feeling.'

■

'Now what is contact?

And whose is this contact?'

you might ask, brethren,
or you might say,
'contact is one thing,
but [the person] who contacts is another thing' -
if you did so,
both would be the same in meaning,
different only in form.

Where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are one and the same,'

there there is no divine living.

Or where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are different things,'

there there is no divine living.

The Tathāgata reaches neither of these two extremes;
he teaches a Middle [Way], and says:

'Conditioned by six-fold-sense is contact.'

■

'Now what is six-fold-sense?

And whose is this six-fold-sense?'

you might ask, brethren,
or you might say,
'six-fold-sense is one thing,
but [the person] with six-fold-sense is another thing' -
if you did so,
both would be the same in meaning,
different only in form.

Where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are one and the same,'

there there is no divine living.

Or where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are different things,'

there there is no divine living.

The Tathāgata reaches neither of these two extremes;
he teaches a Middle [Way], and says:

'Conditioned by name-and-shape is six-fold-sense.'

■

'Now what is name-and-shape?

And whose is this name-and-shape?'

you might ask, brethren,
or you might say,
'name-and-shape is one thing,
but [the person] with name-and-shape is another thing' -
if you did so,
both would be the same in meaning,
different only in form.

Where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are one and the same,'

there there is no divine living.

Or where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are different things,'

there there is no divine living.

The Tathāgata reaches neither of these two extremes;
he teaches a Middle [Way], and says:

'Conditioned by consciousness is name-and-shape.'

■

'Now what is consciousness?

And whose is this consciousness?'

you might ask, brethren,
or you might say,
'consciousness is one thing,
but [the person] with consciousness is another thing' -
if you did so,
both would be the same in meaning,
different only in form.

Where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are one and the same,'

there there is no divine living.

Or where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are different things,'

there there is no divine living.

The Tathāgata reaches neither of these two extremes;
he teaches a Middle [Way], and says:

'Conditioned by activities is consciousness.'

■

'Now what are activities?

And whose are these activities?'

you might ask, brethren,
or you might say,
'activities are one thing,
but [the person] with activities is another thing' -
if you did so,
both would be the same in meaning,
different only in form.

Where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are one and the same,'

there there is no divine living.

Or where, brother, there is the view:

'Soul and body are different things,'

there there is no divine living.

The Tathāgata reaches neither of these two extremes;
he teaches a Middle [Way], and says:

'Conditioned by ignorance are activities.'

§

But, brother, from the utter fading out and ceasing of ignorance
these disorders,
these disagreements,
these distortions,
all whatever they be, -

the asking first what is decay-and-dying
and then whose is this decay-and-dying,
or saying decay-and-dying and he who decays-and-dies
are different one from the other,
or to say soul is body,
or soul and body are different things -

all such props become cast out,
they have been cut off at the root,

made like the stump of a palmtree,
made things that have ceased to be,
so that they cannot grow up again in the future.

■

From the utter fading out and ceasing of ignorance
these disorders,
these disagreements,
these distortions,
all whatever they be, -

the asking first what is birth
and then whose is this birth,
or saying birth and he who is born
are different one from the other,
or to say soul is body,
or soul and body are different things -

all such props become cast out,
they have been cut off at the root,
made like the stump of a palmtree,
made things that have ceased to be,
so that they cannot grow up again in the future.

■

From the utter fading out and ceasing of ignorance
these disorders,
these disagreements,
these distortions,
all whatever they be, -

the asking first what is becoming
and then whose is this becoming,
or saying becoming and he who becomes
are different one from the other,

or to say soul is body,
or soul and body are different things -

all such props become cast out,
they have been cut off at the root,
made like the stump of a palmtree,
made things that have ceased to be,
so that they cannot grow up again in the future.

■

From the utter fading out and ceasing of ignorance
these disorders,
these disagreements,
these distortions,
all whatever they be, -

the asking first what is grasping
and then whose is this grasping,
or saying grasping and he who grasps
are different one from the other,
or to say soul is body,
or soul and body are different things -

all such props become cast out,
they have been cut off at the root,
made like the stump of a palmtree,
made things that have ceased to be,
so that they cannot grow up again in the future.

■

From the utter fading out and ceasing of ignorance
these disorders,
these disagreements,
these distortions,
all whatever they be, -

the asking first what is craving
and then whose is this craving,
or saying craving and he who craves
are different one from the other,
or to say soul is body,
or soul and body are different things -

all such props become cast out,
they have been cut off at the root,
made like the stump of a palmtree,
made things that have ceased to be,
so that they cannot grow up again in the future.

■

From the utter fading out and ceasing of ignorance
these disorders,
these disagreements,
these distortions,
all whatever they be, -

the asking first what is feeling
and then whose is this feeling,
or saying feeling and he who feels
are different one from the other,
or to say soul is body,
or soul and body are different things -

all such props become cast out,
they have been cut off at the root,
made like the stump of a palmtree,
made things that have ceased to be,
so that they cannot grow up again in the future.

■

From the utter fading out and ceasing of ignorance
these disorders,
these disagreements,
these distortions,
all whatever they be, -

the asking first what is contact
and then whose is this contact,
or saying contact and he who contacts
are different one from the other,
or to say soul is body,
or soul and body are different things -

all such props become cast out,
they have been cut off at the root,
made like the stump of a palmtree,
made things that have ceased to be,
so that they cannot grow up again in the future.

■

From the utter fading out and ceasing of ignorance
these disorders,
these disagreements,
these distortions,
all whatever they be, -

the asking first what is sixfold sense
and then whose is this sixfold sense,
or saying sixfold sense and he who has sixfold sense
are different one from the other,
or to say soul is body,
or soul and body are different things -

all such props become cast out,
they have been cut off at the root,
made like the stump of a palmtree,

made things that have ceased to be,
so that they cannot grow up again in the future.

■

From the utter fading out and ceasing of ignorance
these disorders,
these disagreements,
these distortions,
all whatever they be, -

the asking first what is name-and-shape
and then whose is this name-and-shape,
or saying name-and-shape and he who has name-and-shape
are different one from the other,
or to say soul is body,
or soul and body are different things -

all such props become cast out,
they have been cut off at the root,
made like the stump of a palmtree,
made things that have ceased to be,
so that they cannot grow up again in the future.

■

From the utter fading out and ceasing of ignorance
these disorders,
these disagreements,
these distortions,
all whatever they be, -

the asking first what is consciousness
and then whose is this consciousness,
or saying consciousness and he who has consciousness
are different one from the other,

or to say soul is body,
or soul and body are different things -

all such props become cast out,
they have been cut off at the root,
made like the stump of a palmtree,
made things that have ceased to be,
so that they cannot grow up again in the future.

■

From the utter fading out and ceasing of ignorance
these disorders,
these disagreements,
these distortions,
all whatever they be, -

the asking first what are activities
and then whose are these activities,
or saying activities and he who has activity
are different one from the other,
or to say soul is body,
or soul and body are different things -

all such props become cast out,
they have been cut off at the root,
made like the stump of a palmtree,
made things that have ceased to be,
so that they cannot grow up again in the future."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
4. Kaḷara-Khattiya Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

4. Kaḷāra the Nobleman

Sutta 37

Na Tumha Suttaṃ

Not Yours

---

[64] [44]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"This body, brethren, is not your own,
neither is it that of any others.[1]

It should be regarded as brought about by action of the past,
by plans,[2]
by volitions,
by feelings.

[45] Now here, brethren, the well-taught Ariyan disciple gives his mind thoroughly and systematically
to the causal law, to wit,

'This being,
that comes to be;
from the arising of this,
that arises;
this not being,
that ceases;
from the ceasing of this,
that ceases.'

To wit:

Conditioned by ignorance activities come to pass;
conditioned by activities consciousness,
conditioned by consciousness name-and-shape,
conditioned by name-and-shape six-fold-sense,
conditioned by six-fold-sense contact,
conditioned by contact feeling,
conditioned by feeling craving,
conditioned by craving grasping,

conditioned by grasping becoming,
conditioned by becoming birth,
conditioned by birth old age-and death,
grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

But from the utter fading away and ceasing of ignorance [comes] ceasing of activities;
from ceasing of activities ceasing of consciousness;
from ceasing of consciousness ceasing of name-and-shape;
from ceasing of name-and-shape ceasing of six-fold-sense;
from ceasing of six-fold-sense ceasing of contact;
from ceasing of contact ceasing of feeling;
from ceasing of feeling ceasing of craving;
from ceasing of craving ceasing of grasping;
from ceasing of grasping ceasing of becoming;
from ceasing of becoming ceasing of birth;
from ceasing of birth,
old age-and-death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

[1] This is to be understood as the same doctrine set out in Nos. 17, 18. Your present kāya (body, person) is not an entity always self-identical, nor is it different from an entity other than any past 'you.' It is the outcome of the kāyas in the past series of your lives. The Comy. bears out this interpretation.

[2] But Comy.: paccayehi kato.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
4. Kaḷara-Khattiya Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

4. Kaḷāra the Nobleman

Sutta 38

Paṭhama Cetanā Suttaṃ

Will (1)

---

[65] [45]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"That which we will, brethren,
and that which we intend to do
and that wherewithal we are occupied:[1] -
this becomes an object
for the persistence of consciousness.[2]

The object being there,
there comes to be a station of consciousness.

Consciousness being stationed
and growing,
rebirth of renewed existence
takes place in the future,
and here
from birth,
decay-and-death,
grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
and despair
come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

Even if we do not will,
or intend to do,
and yet are occupied about something,
this is an object
for the persistence of consciousness.

The object being there,
there comes to be a station of consciousness.

Consciousness being stationed
and growing,
rebirth of renewed existence
takes place in the future,
and here
from birth,
decay-and-death,
grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
and despair
come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

§

But if we neither will,
nor intend to do,
nor are occupied about something,
there is no becoming of an object
for the persistence of consciousness.

The object being absent,
there comes to be no station of consciousness.

Consciousness not being stationed
nor growing,
no rebirth of renewed existence

takes place in the future,
and here
from birth,
decay-and-death,
grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow
and despair
cease.

Such ia the ceasing of this entire mass of ill."

---

[1] Anuseti to sit down about.

[2] B. qualifies viññāṇa here as kamma-viññāṇa.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
4. Kaḷara-Khattiya Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

4. Kaḷāra the Nobleman

Sutta 39

Dutiya Cetanā Suttaṃ

Will (2)

---

[66] [46]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"That which we will, brethren,
and that which we intend to do
and that wherewithal we are occupied: -
this becomes an object
for the persistence of consciousness.

The object being there,
there comes to be a station of consciousness.

Consciousness being stationed
and growing,
there comes to pass descent of name-and-shape;
because of name-and-shape, sense;
because of sense, contact;
because of contact, feeling;
because of feeling, craving;
because of craving, grasping;
because of grasping, becoming;
because of becoming, birth;
because of birth,
decay-and-death,
grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
and despair
come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

■

Even if we do not will,
or intend to do,
and yet are occupied about something,
this is an object
for the persistence of consciousness.

The object being there,
there comes to be a station of consciousness.

The object being there,
there comes to be a station of consciousness.

Consciousness being stationed
and growing,
there comes to pass descent of name-and-shape;
because of name-and-shape, sense;
because of sense, contact;
because of contact, feeling;
because of feeling, craving;
because of craving, grasping;
because of grasping, becoming;
because of becoming, birth;
because of birth,
decay-and-death,
grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
and despair
come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

§

But if we neither will,
nor intend to do,
nor are occupied about something,
there is no becoming of an object
for the persistence of consciousness.

The object being absent,
there comes to be no station of consciousness.

Consciousness not being stationed
nor growing,
there comes to pass no descent of name-and-shape;
because of the cessation of name-and-shape, the cessation of sense;
because of the cessation of sense, the cessation of contact;
because the cessation of contact, the cessation of feeling;
because of the cessation of feeling, the cessation of craving;
because of the cessation of craving, the cessation of grasping;
because of the cessation of grasping, the cessation of becoming;
because of the cessation of becoming, the cessation of birth;
because of the cessation of birth,
the cessation of decay-and-death,
grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
and despair.

Such ia the ceassation of this entire mass of ill."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
4. Kaḷara-Khattiya Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

4. Kaḷāra the Nobleman

Sutta 40

Tatiya Cetanā Suttaṃ

Will (3)

---

[66] [46]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"That which we will, brethren,
and that which we intend to do
and that wherewithal we are occupied: -
this becomes an object
for the persistence of consciousness.

The object being there,
there comes to be a station of consciousness.

Consciousness being stationed
and having growing,
there comes a bending;
there being a bending,
there comes a going to a coming;[1]
there being a going to a coming,
there is decease and rebirth;
there being decease and rebirth,
birth,
old age-and-death happen in the [47] future,
and grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
and despair
come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

■

Even if we do not will,
or intend to do,
and yet are occupied about something,
this an object
for the persistence of consciousness.

The object being there,
there comes to be a station of consciousness.

The object being there,
there comes to be a station of consciousness.

Consciousness being stationed
and growing,
there comes to pass descent of name-and-shape;
and having growing,
there comes a bending;
there being a bending,
there comes a going to a coming;
there being a going to a coming,
there is decease and rebirth;
there being decease and rebirth,
birth,
old age-and-death happen in the future,
and grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
and despair
come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

§

But if we neither will,
nor intend to do,
nor are occupied about something,
there is no becoming of an object
for the persistence of consciousness.

The object being absent,
there comes to be no station of consciousness.

Consciousness not being stationed
nor growing,
there comes no bending;
there being no bending,
there comes no going to a coming;
there being no going to a coming,
there is no decease and rebirth;
there being no decease and rebirth,
birth,
old age-and-death do not happen in the future,
and grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
and despair
cease.

Such ia the ceassation of this entire mass of ill."

---

[1] Āgati-gati. Āgatimhi gati hoti (there comes to be a going, in, or with respect to coming). Comy.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
5. Gahapati Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

5. The Housefather

Sutta 41

Paṭhavi Pañca-Vera-Bhagayā Suttaṃ

The Fivefold Guilty Dread (1)

---

[68] [47]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now housefather Anāthapiṇḍika came into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him,
and sat down at one side.

To him, so seated,
the Exalted One said:

"When, housefather, for the Ariyan disciple
the fivefold guilty dread[1] is mastered,
when his are the four possessions of the Streamwinner,
and when he has well seen,
well penetrated by insight
the Ariyan Law,[2]
he if he desire it
may declare himself by himself:

'I am he for whom purgatory is perished,
I am he for whom the womb of beasts is perished,
I am he for whom the Peta-realm is perished,
I am he for whom perished is the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall.

Streamwinner am I!

Not for me is the falling back.

I am sure, having enlightenment as my goal!'

§

[48] Which 'fivefold guilty dread' has he mastered?

[1] That guilty dread
which even in this life
the taker of life,
conditioned by his lifetaking engenders,

the guilty dread which he engenders also
for a future state,
the mental suffering too,
the sorrow which he experiences: -

he abstaining from taking life
has mastered this guilty dread.

[2] That guilty dread
which even in this life
the taker of what is not given,
conditioned by that taking engenders,
the guilty dread as to a future state also which he engenders,
the mental suffering too,
the sorrow which he experiences: -

he abstaining from taking that which is not given
has mastered this guilty dread.

[3] That guilty dread
which even in this life
he who acts wrongly in sense-desires,
conditioned by that wrong action engenders;
the guilty dread also as to a future state which he engenders;
the mental suffering too,
the sorrow which he experiences: -

he abstaining from wrongful action in sense-desires
has mastered this guilty dread.

[4] That guilty dread
which even in this life the liar,
conditioned by lying engenders,
the guilty dread also as to a future state which he engenders;
the mental suffering too,
the sorrow which he experiences: -

he abstaining from lying
has mastered this guilty dread.

[5] That guilty dread
which even in this life
he who persists in indulging in strong drinks,
conditioned by that indulging engenders;
the guilty dread also as to a future state which he engenders;
the mental suffering too,
the sorrow which he experiences: -

he abstaining from that indulgence
has mastered this guilty dread.

This fivefold guilty dread has he mastered.

§

Which 'four possessions of the Streamwinner' are his?

[1] In this religion, housefather, the Ariyan disciple possesses unwavering faith in the Buddha:[3]

He it is, the Exalted One,
Arahant supremely enlightened,
proficient in wisdom and [49] righteousness,
Wellfarer,
Worldknower,
peerless Driver of men to be tamed,
Teacher,
Buddha of devas and men,
Exalted One.

[2] He is possessed of unwavering faith in the Doctrine; -

Well proclaimed by the Exalted One is the Norm,
[a gospel] for the things we see,
not a matter of time,
[bidding man] come and see,
guiding him on,
to be understood by the intelligent,
each for himself.

[3] He is possessed of unwavering faith in the Order: -

Well practised is the Exalted One's Order of disciples,
upright is their practice,
practised are they in the Law[4],
practised in right lines of action,
to wit,
the four pairs,
the eight groups of persons,
this the Exalted One's Order of disciples,
worthy of offerings,
of oblations,
of gifts,
meet to be reverently saluted,
the world's peerless field for merit.

[4] He is possessed of the virtues dear to Ariyans,
kept unbroken,
intact,
unspotted,
unblemished,
enfranchizing,[5] praised by the intelligent, unperverted,
conducive to concentration.

His are these four possessions of the Streamwinner.

§

And which is the Ariyan truth that he has well seen by insight,
well penetrated?

Here, housefather, the Ariyan disciple thoroughly and systematically gives his mind to the Causal Law,
thus: -

This being,
that comes to be;
this not being,
that does not come to be.

From the arising of this,
that arises;
from the ceasing of this,
that ceases.

Namely:

Conditioned by ignorance activities come to pass;
conditioned by activities consciousness,
conditioned by consciousness name-and-shape,
conditioned by name-and-shape sense,
conditioned by sense contact,
conditioned by contact feeling,
conditioned by feeling craving,
conditioned by craving grasping,
conditioned by grasping becoming,
conditioned by becoming birth,
conditioned by birth old age-and death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow,
despair come to pass.

Even such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

But from the utter fading away and ceasing of ignorance [comes] ceasing of activities;
from ceasing of activities ceasing of consciousness;
from ceasing of consciousness ceasing of name-and-shape;
from ceasing of name-and-shape ceasing of sense;
from ceasing of sense ceasing of contact;
from ceasing of contact ceasing of feeling;
from ceasing of feeling ceasing of craving;
from ceasing of craving ceasing of grasping;
from ceasing of grasping ceasing of becoming;
from ceasing of becoming ceasing of birth;
from ceasing of birth,
old age-and-death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

§

And when, housefather, for the Ariyan disciple
this fivefold guilty dread is mastered,
when his are the four possessions of the Streamwinner,
and when he has by insight well seen and penetrated this Ariyan truth,
he, if he desire it,
may declare himself by himself:

'I am he for whom perished is purgatory,
[50] perished the womb of beasts,
perished the Peta-realm,
perished is the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall.

Streamwinner am I!

Not for me is the falling back.

I am sure, having enlightenment as my goal.'"

---

[1] Pañca bhayāni verāni, in the title pañca verabhayāni. The Comy. calls them cetanāyo, volitions. Vera = hostile, from vīra, heroic. The Sutta occurs in Aṇguttara v, 152 f. [Ed.: There is nothing like this there, but see AN 5.179, which is on page 155 of The Book of the Fives; a sutta, AN 5.176, dealing with Anāthapiṇḍika but unrelated to this topic is found on page 152 there].

[2] Ñāyo. Often used in apposition with Dhamma and kusala. See Dialogues, ii, 167 (my Buddhism, p. 89 f.); Majjhima i, 181; Saṃyutta, v. 19; above i, 240, where 'truth' replaces ñāya. Identified with kalyāṇ-dhammatā, kusala-dhammatā ('law of righteousness, of goodness'), Aṇguttara ii, 36. Buddhaghosa quotes a text which says that the Causal Law and the Eightfold Path are both ñāyo.

[3] Cf. vol. i, 282. The text is a formula and identical. The rendering here is more literal.

[4] Ñāya. See 47, n. 2.

[5] Reading bhujissāni. Cf. Dialogues, ii, 85.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
5. Gahapati Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

5. The Housefather

Sutta 42

Dutiya Pañca-Vera-Bhagayā Suttaṃ

The Fivefold Guilty Dread (2)

---

[69] [50]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now very many brethren came into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him,

and sat down at one side.

To them, so seated,
the Exalted One said:

"When, brethren, for the Ariyan disciple
the fivefold guilty dread is mastered,
when his are the four possessions of the Streamwinner,
and when he has well seen,
well penetrated by insight
the Ariyan Law,
he if he desire it
may declare himself by himself:

'I am he for whom purgatory is perished,
I am he for whom the womb of beasts is perished,
I am he for whom the Peta-realm is perished,
I am he for whom perished is the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall.

Streamwinner am I!

Not for me is the falling back.

I am sure, having enlightenment as my goal!'

§

Which 'fivefold guilty dread' has he mastered?

[1] That guilty dread
which even in this life

the taker of life,
conditioned by his lifetaking engenders,
the guilty dread which he engenders also
for a future state,
the mental suffering too,
the sorrow which he experiences: -

he abstaining from taking life
has mastered this guilty dread.

[2] That guilty dread
which even in this life
the taker of what is not given,
conditioned by that taking engenders,
the guilty dread as to a future state also which he engenders,
the mental suffering too,
the sorrow which he experiences: -

he abstaining from taking that which is not given
has mastered this guilty dread.

[3] That guilty dread
which even in this life
he who acts wrongly in sense-desires,
conditioned by that wrong action engenders;
the guilty dread also as to a future state which he engenders;
the mental suffering too,
the sorrow which he experiences: -

he abstaining from wrongful action in sense-desires
has mastered this guilty dread.

[4] That guilty dread
which even in this life the liar,
conditioned by lying engenders,
the guilty dread also as to a future state which he engenders;

the mental suffering too,
the sorrow which he experiences: -

he abstaining from lying
has mastered this guilty dread.

[5] That guilty dread
which even in this life
he who persists in indulging in strong drinks,
conditioned by that indulging engenders;
the guilty dread also as to a future state which he engenders;
the mental suffering too,
the sorrow which he experiences: -

he abstaining from that indulgence
has mastered this guilty dread.

This fivefold guilty dread has he mastered.

§

Which 'four possessions of the Streamwinner' are his?

[1] In this religion, brethren, the Ariyan disciple
possesses unwavering faith in the Buddha:

'He it is, the Exalted One,
Arahant supremely enlightened,
proficient in wisdom and righteousness,
Wellfarer,
Worldknower,
peerless Driver of men to be tamed,
Teacher,

Buddha of devas and men,
Exalted One.'

[2] He is possessed of unwavering faith in the Doctrine; -

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One is the Norm,
[a gospel] for the things we see,
not a matter of time,
[bidding man] come and see,
guiding him on,
to be understood by the intelligent,
each for himself.'

[3] He is possessed of unwavering faith in the Order: -

'Well practised is the Exalted One's Order of disciples,
upright is their practice,
practised are they in the Law,
practised in right lines of action,
to wit,
the four pairs,
the eight groups of persons,
this the Exalted One's Order of disciples,
worthy of offerings,
of oblations,
of gifts,
meet to be reverently saluted,
the world's peerless field for merit.'

[4] He is possessed of the virtues dear to Ariyans,
kept unbroken,
intact,
unspotted,
unblemished,
enfranchizing, praised by the intelligent, unperverted,
conducive to concentration.

His are these four possessions of the Streamwinner.

§

And which is the Ariyan truth that he has well seen by insight,
well penetrated?

Here, brethren, the Ariyan disciple thoroughly and systematically gives his mind to the Causal Law,
thus: -

This being,
that comes to be;
this not being,
that does not come to be.

From the arising of this,
that arises;
from the ceasing of this,
that ceases.

Namely:

Conditioned by ignorance activities come to pass;
conditioned by activities consciousness,
conditioned by consciousness name-and-shape,
conditioned by name-and-shape sense,
conditioned by sense contact,
conditioned by contact feeling,
conditioned by feeling craving,
conditioned by craving grasping,
conditioned by grasping becoming,

conditioned by becoming birth,
conditioned by birth old age-and death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair come to pass.

Even such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

But from the utter fading away and ceasing of ignorance [comes] ceasing of activities;
from ceasing of activities ceasing of consciousness;
from ceasing of consciousness ceasing of name-and-shape;
from ceasing of name-and-shape ceasing of sense;
from ceasing of sense ceasing of contact;
from ceasing of contact ceasing of feeling;
from ceasing of feeling ceasing of craving;
from ceasing of craving ceasing of grasping;
from ceasing of grasping ceasing of becoming;
from ceasing of becoming ceasing of birth;
from ceasing of birth,
old age-and-death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

§

And when, brethren, for the Ariyan disciple
this fivefold guilty dread is mastered,
when his are the four possessions of the Streamwinner,
and when he has by insight well seen and penetrated this Ariyan truth,
he, if he desire it,
may declare himself by himself:

'I am he for whom perished is purgatory,
perished the womb of beasts,

perished the Peta-realm,
perished is the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall.

Streamwinner am I!

Not for me is the falling back.

I am sure, having enlightenment as my goal.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
5. Gahapati Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

5. The Housefather

Sutta 43

Dukkha Suttaṃ

Ill

---

[71] [50]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"I will teach you, brethren,
how ill arises
and how it passes away.

Listen to this,
give your minds thoroughly,
and I will speak."

"Even so, lord",
responded the brethren.

"What, brethren, is the arising of ill?

Because of sight and visible objects
visual consciousness arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

This, brethren, is the arising of ill.

■

Because of hearing and audible objects
consciousness of sound arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

This, brethren, is the arising of ill.

■

Because of nose and odorous objects
consciousness of smell arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

This, brethren, is the arising of ill.

■

Because of tongue and sapid objects
consciousness of taste arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

This, brethren, is the arising of ill.

■

Because of body and tangible objects
the tangible consciousness of body arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

This, brethren, is the arising of ill.

■

Because of mind and things
mind-consciousness arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

This, brethren, is the arising of ill.

§

And what, brethren, is the passing away of ill?

Because of sight and visible objects
visual consciousness arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

By the utter fading away and ceasing of the craving,
grasping ceases,
by the ceasing of the grasping,
becoming ceases,
by the ceasing of becoming,
birth ceases,
by the ceasing of birth decay-and-death,
grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

■

Because of hearing and audible objects
consciousness of sound arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

By the utter fading away and ceasing of the craving,
grasping ceases,
by the ceasing of the grasping,
becoming ceases,
by the ceasing of becoming,
birth ceases,
by the ceasing of birth decay-and-death,
grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

■

Because of nose and odorous objects
consciousness of smell arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

By the utter fading away and ceasing of the craving,
grasping ceases,
by the ceasing of the grasping,
becoming ceases,
by the ceasing of becoming,
birth ceases,
by the ceasing of birth decay-and-death,
grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

■

Because of tongue and sapid objects
consciousness of taste arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

By the utter fading away and ceasing of the craving,
grasping ceases,
by the ceasing of the grasping,
becoming ceases,
by the ceasing of becoming,
birth ceases,
by the ceasing of birth decay-and-death,
grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

■

Because of body and tangible objects
the tangible consciousness of body arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

By the utter fading away and ceasing of the craving,
grasping ceases,
by the ceasing of the grasping,
becoming ceases,
by the ceasing of becoming,
birth ceases,
by the ceasing of birth decay-and-death,
grief,

lamenting,
suffering,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

■

Because of mind and things
mind-consciousness arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

By the utter fading away and ceasing of the craving,
grasping ceases,
by the ceasing of the grasping,
becoming ceases,
by the ceasing of becoming,
birth ceases,
by the ceasing of birth decay-and-death,
grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

This, brethren, is the passing away of ill."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
5. Gahapati Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

5. The Housefather

Sutta 44

Loka Suttaṃ

The World

---

[73] [51]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"I will teach you, brethren,
how the world comes to be
and how it passes away.

Listen to this,
give your minds thoroughly,
and I will speak."

"Even so, lord",
responded the brethren.

"What, brethren, is the arising of the world?

Because of sight and visible objects
visual consciousness arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

This, brethren, is the arising of the world.

■

Because of hearing and audible objects
consciousness of sound arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

This, brethren, is the arising of the world.

■

Because of nose and odorous objects
consciousness of smell arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

This, brethren, is the arising of the world.

■

Because of tongue and sapid objects
consciousness of taste arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

This, brethren, is the arising of the world.

■

Because of body and tangible objects
the tangible consciousness of body arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

This, brethren, is the arising of the world.

■

Because of mind and things
mind-consciousness arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

This, brethren, is the arising of the world.

§

And what, brethren, is the passing away of the world?

Because of sight and visible objects
visual consciousness arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

By the utter fading away and ceasing of the craving,
grasping ceases,
by the ceasing of the grasping,
becoming ceases,
by the ceasing of becoming,
birth ceases,
by the ceasing of birth decay-and-death,
grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of the world.

■

Because of hearing and audible objects
consciousness of sound arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

By the utter fading away and ceasing of the craving,
grasping ceases,
by the ceasing of the grasping,
becoming ceases,
by the ceasing of becoming,
birth ceases,
by the ceasing of birth decay-and-death,
grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of the world.

■

Because of nose and odorous objects
consciousness of smell arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

By the utter fading away and ceasing of the craving,
grasping ceases,
by the ceasing of the grasping,
becoming ceases,
by the ceasing of becoming,
birth ceases,
by the ceasing of birth decay-and-death,
grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of the world.

■

Because of tongue and sapid objects
consciousness of taste arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

By the utter fading away and ceasing of the craving,
grasping ceases,
by the ceasing of the grasping,
becoming ceases,
by the ceasing of becoming,
birth ceases,
by the ceasing of birth decay-and-death,
grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of the world.

■

Because of body and tangible objects
the tangible consciousness of body arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

By the utter fading away and ceasing of the craving,
grasping ceases,
by the ceasing of the grasping,
becoming ceases,
by the ceasing of becoming,
birth ceases,
by the ceasing of birth decay-and-death,
grief,

lamenting,
suffering,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of the world.

■

Because of mind and things
mind-consciousness arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

By the utter fading away and ceasing of the craving,
grasping ceases,
by the ceasing of the grasping,
becoming ceases,
by the ceasing of becoming,
birth ceases,
by the ceasing of birth decay-and-death,
grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

This, brethren, is the passing away of the world."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
5. Gahapati Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

5. The Housefather

Sutta 45

Ñātika Suttaṃ

Ñātika[1]

---

[74] [51]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying at Ñātika,
in the Brick Hall.[2]

Now the Exalted One, meditating in solitude, gave utterance to that way

of setting forth the Doctrine:

"Because of sight and visible objects
visual consciousness arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

This is the arising of ill.

■

Because of hearing and audible objects
consciousness of sound arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

This is the arising of ill.

■

Because of nose and odorous objects
consciousness of smell arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

This is the arising of ill.

■

Because of tongue and sapid objects
consciousness of taste arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

This is the arising of ill.

■

Because of body and tangible objects
the tangible consciousness of body arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

This is the arising of ill.

■

Because of mind and things
mind-consciousness arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

This is the arising of ill.

§

And what is the passing away of ill?

Because of sight and visible objects
visual consciousness arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

By the utter fading away and ceasing of the craving,
grasping ceases,

by the ceasing of the grasping,
becoming ceases,
by the ceasing of becoming,
birth ceases,
by the ceasing of birth decay-and-death,
grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

■

Because of hearing and audible objects
consciousness of sound arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

By the utter fading away and ceasing of the craving,
grasping ceases,
by the ceasing of the grasping,
becoming ceases,
by the ceasing of becoming,
birth ceases,
by the ceasing of birth decay-and-death,
grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

■

Because of nose and odorous objects
consciousness of smell arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

By the utter fading away and ceasing of the craving,
grasping ceases,
by the ceasing of the grasping,
becoming ceases,
by the ceasing of becoming,
birth ceases,
by the ceasing of birth decay-and-death,
grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

■

Because of tongue and sapid objects
consciousness of taste arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

By the utter fading away and ceasing of the craving,
grasping ceases,
by the ceasing of the grasping,
becoming ceases,
by the ceasing of becoming,
birth ceases,
by the ceasing of birth decay-and-death,
grief,

lamenting,
suffering,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

■

Because of body and tangible objects
the tangible consciousness of body arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

By the utter fading away and ceasing of the craving,
grasping ceases,
by the ceasing of the grasping,
becoming ceases,
by the ceasing of becoming,
birth ceases,
by the ceasing of birth decay-and-death,
grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

■

Because of mind and things
mind-consciousness arises,
contact is the clash of the three;
feeling is conditioned by the contact,
craving by the feeling.

By the utter fading away and ceasing of the craving,
grasping ceases,
by the ceasing of the grasping,
becoming ceases,
by the ceasing of becoming,
birth ceases,
by the ceasing of birth decay-and-death,
grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill."

And at that time a certain brother stood overhearing the Exalted One.

Then the Exalted One saw him standing and overhearing,
and seeing him,
he spake thus unto him:

"Didst thou hear, brother,
this our way of setting forth the Doctrine?"

"Even so, lord."

"Do thou learn this way, brother,
do thou master it.

It belongs to thy good, brother,
this way of setting forth the Doctrine,
it is of the rudiments of the divine life."

---

[1] See below, p. XIV, 2, § 13. On Ñātika, or Nādika, or the Nādikas see Dialogues, ii, 97 f. n. 1, 237; Vin. Texts, ii, 108. Here the Comy. calls it the village of the two kinsmen (Ñātika).

[2] A public resthouse, 'made of "itthaka"s.' Comy.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
5. Gahapati Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

5. The Housefather

Sutta 46

Aññatara Brāhmaṇa Suttaṃ

A Certain [Brahmin]

---

[75] [51]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there a certain brahmin came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and exchanged greetings with him,

and in courteous and friendly converse
sat down at one side.

So seated he said to the Exalted One:

"What [say you] here, Master Gotama:

He who does the deed, is he the one to experience?[1]

[52] "'He who does the deed and he who experiences are the same': -
this, brahmin, is one extreme."

"Well, then, Master Gotama, [what of this:] -
he who does the deed is not the same as he who experiences?"

"'He who does the deed is not the same as he who experiences': -
this, brahmin, is the other extreme.

The Tathāgata, not approaching either of these extremes, teaches you a Doctrine by a middle [way]:

Conditioned by ignorance activities come to pass;
conditioned by activities consciousness,
conditioned by consciousness name-and-shape,
conditioned by name-and-shape sense,
conditioned by sense contact,
conditioned by contact feeling,
conditioned by feeling craving,
conditioned by craving grasping,
conditioned by grasping becoming,
conditioned by becoming birth,
conditioned by birth old age-and death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow,
despair come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

But from the utter fading away and ceasing of ignorance [comes] ceasing of activities;
from ceasing of activities ceasing of consciousness;
from ceasing of consciousness ceasing of name-and-shape;
from ceasing of name-and-shape ceasing of sense;
from ceasing of sense ceasing of contact;
from ceasing of contact ceasing of feeling;
from ceasing of feeling ceasing of craving;
from ceasing of craving ceasing of grasping;
from ceasing of grasping ceasing of becoming;
from ceasing of becoming ceasing of birth;
from ceasing of birth,
old age-and-death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill."

And when he had thus spoken, that brahmin said:

"Wonderful, Master Gotama, wonderful!

Just as if a man were to set up
that which had been thrown down,
or were to reveal
that which was hidden away,
or were to point out the right road
to him who had gone astray,
or were to bring a lamp into the darkness,
so that those who had eyes could see shapes, -
even so, lord, has the lord Gotama shown me
his doctrine in various ways.

I, even I, lord, betake myself to the Exalted One as my refuge,
to the Norm
and to the Order.

May Master Gotama accept me as a follower,
as one who from this day forth,

as long as life lasts,
has taken his refuge therein!"

---

[1] Cf. above, §§ 17, 18, 25.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
5. Gahapati Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

5. The Housefather

Sutta 47

Jāṇussoṇi Suttaṃ

Jāṇussoṇi

---

[76] [52]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there Jānussoṇi the brahmin[1] came into the presence of the Exalted One,

and exchanged greetings with him,
and in courteous and friendly converse
sat down at one side.

So seated Jānussoṇi the brahmin said to the Exalted One:

"What [say you] here, Master Gotama:

Everything is?[2]

"'Everything is': -
this, brahmin, is one extreme."

"Well, then, Master Gotama, -
nothing is?"

"'Nothing is': -
this, brahmin, is the other extreme.

The Tathāgata, not approaching either of these extremes, teaches you a Doctrine by a middle [way]:

Conditioned by ignorance activities come to pass;
conditioned by activities consciousness,
conditioned by consciousness name-and-shape,
conditioned by name-and-shape sense,
conditioned by sense contact,
conditioned by contact feeling,
conditioned by feeling craving,
conditioned by craving grasping,
conditioned by grasping becoming,
conditioned by becoming birth,
conditioned by birth old age-and death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

But from the utter fading away and ceasing of ignorance [comes] ceasing of activities;
from ceasing of activities ceasing of consciousness;
from ceasing of consciousness ceasing of name-and-shape;
from ceasing of name-and-shape ceasing of sense;
from ceasing of sense ceasing of contact;
from ceasing of contact ceasing of feeling;
from ceasing of feeling ceasing of craving;
from ceasing of craving ceasing of grasping;
from ceasing of grasping ceasing of becoming;
from ceasing of becoming ceasing of birth;
from ceasing of birth,
old age-and-death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill."

And when he had thus spoken, Jānussoṇi the brahmin said:

"Wonderful, Master Gotama, wonderful!

Just as if a man were to set up
that which had been thrown down,
or were to reveal
that which was hidden away,
or were to point out the right road
to him who had gone astray,
or were to bring a lamp into the darkness,
so that those who had eyes could see shapes, -
even so, lord, has the lord Gotama shown me
his doctrine in various ways.

I, even I, lord, betake myself to the Exalted One as my refuge,
to the Norm
and to the Order.

May Master Gotama accept me as a follower,
as one who from this day forth,

as long as life lasts,
has taken his refuge therein!"

---

[1] A frequent interlocutor of the Buddha, wealthy and learned, residing at Manasākata in Kosala. Dialogues, i, 300. He is encountered in all the Nikāyas. According to the Comy. on Aṇguttara i, 56, the name was in reality a title conferred by royal warrant. MSS. spell it variously.

[2] Cf. above, § 15.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
5. Gahapati Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

5. The Housefather

Sutta 48

Lokāya-Tika Suttaṃ

The Brahmin Wise in World-Lore[1]

---

[77] [53]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There a world-wise brahmin came into the presence of the Exalted One,
and exchanged greetings with him,

and in courteous and friendly converse
sat down at one side.

So seated he said to the Exalted One:

"What [say you] here, Master Gotama: -
everything is?"

"'Everything is' -
that, brahmin, is the chief world-wisdom."

"Well then, Master Gotama: -
nothing is?"

"'Nothing is': -
that, brahmin, is the second world-wisdom."

"Well then, Master Gotama,
everything is a unity?"

"'Everything is a unity': -
that, brahmin, is the third world-wisdom."

"Well then, Master Gotama: -
everything is a plurality?"

"'Everything is a plurality': -
that, brahmin, is the fourth world-wisdom.

The Tathāgata, not approaching either of these extremes,
teaches you a Doctrine by a middle [way]:

Conditioned by ignorance activities come to pass;
conditioned by activities consciousness,
conditioned by consciousness name-and-shape,
conditioned by name-and-shape sense,
conditioned by sense contact,

conditioned by contact feeling,
conditioned by feeling craving,
conditioned by craving grasping,
conditioned by grasping becoming,
conditioned by becoming birth,
conditioned by birth old age-and death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

But from the utter fading away and ceasing of ignorance [comes] ceasing of activities;
from ceasing of activities ceasing of consciousness;
from ceasing of consciousness ceasing of name-and-shape;
from ceasing of name-and-shape ceasing of sense;
from ceasing of sense ceasing of contact;
from ceasing of contact ceasing of feeling;
from ceasing of feeling ceasing of craving;
from ceasing of craving ceasing of grasping;
from ceasing of grasping ceasing of becoming;
from ceasing of becoming ceasing of birth;
from ceasing of birth,
old age-and-death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill."

And when he had thus spoken, the world-wise brahmin said:

"Wonderful, Master Gotama, wonderful!

Just as if a man were to set up
that which had been thrown down,
or were to reveal
that which was hidden away,
or were to point out the right road
to him who had gone astray,
or were to bring a lamp into the darkness,

so that those who had eyes could see shapes, -
even so, lord, has the lord Gotama shown me
his doctrine in various ways.

I, even I, lord, betake myself to the Exalted One as my refuge,
to the Norm
and to the Order.

May Master Gotama accept me as a follower,
as one who from this day forth,
as long as life lasts,
has taken his refuge therein!"

---

[1] Lokāyatika. Cf. a discussion of lokāyata knowledge by Rhys Davids, Dialogues, i, 166-72.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
5. Gahapati Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

5. The Housefather

Sutta 49

Paṭhama Ariya Sāvaka Suttaṃ

The Ariyan Disciple (1)

---

[77] [54]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"The well taught Ariyan disciple, brethren, does not [wonder]:

'How now?

What being, what comes to be?

From the arising of what, what arises?[1]

There being what,
does name-and-shape come to be?

There being what,
does sense come to be?

There being what,
does contact come to be?

There being what,
does feeling come to be?

There being what,
does craving come to be?

There being what,
does grasping come to be?

There being what,
does becoming come to be?

There being what,
does birth come to be?

There being what,
does decay-and-death come to be?'

■

Nay, brethren, the well taught Ariyan disciple has come to know,
without depending upon another,
that here:

'This being,
that comes to be;
from the arising of this,
that arises.[2]

There being consciousness,
name-and-shape comes to be.

There being name-and-shape,
sense comes to be.

There being sense,
contact comes to be.

There being contact,
feeling comes to be.

There being feeling,
craving comes to be.

There being craving,
grasping comes to be.

There being grasping,
becoming comes to be.

There being becoming,
birth comes to be.

There being birth,
decay-and-death comes to be.

Thus it is he knows that of such is the arising of the world.'

§

Nor does the Ariyan disciple, brethren, [wonder]:

'How now?

There not being what,
what does not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
does what cease?[3]

There not being what,
does name-and-shape not come to be?

There not being what,
does sense not come to be?

There not being what,
does contact not come to be?

There not being what,
does feeling not come to be?

There not being what,
does craving not come to be?

There not being what,
does grasping not come to be?

There not being what,
does becoming not come to be?

There not being what,
does birth not come to be?

There not being what,
does decay-and-death not come to be?'

■

Nay, brethren, the well taught Ariyan disciple has come to know,
without depending upon another,
that here:

'This not being,
that does not come to be.

From the ceasing of this,
that ceases.[3]

That there not being consciousness,
name- [55] and-shape does not come to be.

That there not being name-and-shape,
sense does not come to be.

That there not being sense,
contact does not come to be.

That there not being contact,
feeling does not come to be,

That there not being feeling,
craving does not come to be.

That there not being craving,
grasping does not come to be.

That there not being grasping,
becoming does not come to be.

That there not being becoming,
birth does not come to be.

That there not being becoming,
decay-and-death does not come to be.'

Thus it is he knows that thus this world ceases.

§

When, brethren, the Ariyan disciple thus knows as it really is
the coming to pass
and the passing away of the world,
he is what we call
an Ariyan disciple who has won the view,
won vision,
has arrived at this Norm,
sees this Norm,
his is the knowledge of the trained man,
the lore of the trained man,
has won to the stream of the Doctrine;
he is Ariyan with the insight of revulsion,
he stands knocking at the door of the Deathless."[4]

---

[1] The clauses: - 'There being what, do activities come to be? There being what, does consciousness come to be?' are found in only one MS., a Burmese, used by Feer.

[2] 'There being ignorance, activities arise; there being activities, consciousness arises.' This also is found only in the one Burmese MS.

[3] The corresponding clauses (see preceding note) also occur only in this Burmese MS.

[4] See §§ 27, 28, 33.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
5. Gahapati Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

5. The Housefather

Sutta 50

Dutiya Ariya-Sāvaka Suttaṃ

The Ariyan Disciple (2)

---

[79] [55]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"The well taught Ariyan disciple, brethren,
does not [wonder]:

'How now?

What being, what comes to be?

From the arising of what, what arises?

There being what,
does name-and-shape come to be?

There being what,
does sense come to be?

There being what,
does contact come to be?

There being what,
does feeling come to be?

There being what,
does craving come to be?

There being what,
does grasping come to be?

There being what,
does becoming come to be?

There being what,
does birth come to be?

There being what,
does decay-and-death come to be?'

Nay, brethren, the well taught Ariyan disciple has come to know,
without depending upon another,
that here:

This being,
that comes to be;
from the arising of this,
that arises.

There being consciousness,
name-and-shape comes to be.

There being name-and-shape,
sense comes to be.

There being sense,
contact comes to be.

There being contact,
feeling comes to be.

There being feeling,
craving comes to be.

There being craving,
grasping comes to be.

There being grasping,
becoming comes to be.

There being becoming,
birth comes to be.

There being birth,
decay-and-death comes to be.

Thus it is he knows that of such is the arising of the world.

§

Nor does the Ariyan disciple, brethren, [wonder]:

'How now?

There not being what,
what does not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
does what cease?

There not being what,
does name-and-shape not come to be?

There not being what,
does sense not come to be?

There not being what,
does contact not come to be?

There not being what,
does feeling not come to be?

There not being what,
does craving not come to be?

There not being what,
does grasping not come to be?

There not being what,
does becoming not come to be?

There not being what,
does birth not come to be?

There not being what,
does decay-and-death not come to be?'

Nay, brethren, the well taught Ariyan disciple has come to know,
without depending upon another,
that here:

This not being,
that does not come to be.

From the ceasing of this,
that ceases.

That there not being consciousness,
name-and-shape does not come to be.

That there not being name-and-shape,
sense does not come to be.

That there not being sense,
contact does not come to be.

That there not being contact,
feeling does not come to be,

That there not being feeling,
craving does not come to be.

That there not being craving,
grasping does not come to be.

That there not being grasping,
becoming does not come to be.

That there not being becoming,
birth does not come to be.

That there not being becoming,
decay-and-death does not come to be.

Thus it is he knows that thus this world ceases.

And when, brethren, the Ariyan disciple thus knows as it really is the coming to pass and the passing away of the world, he is what we call an Ariyan disciple who has won the view,
he sees this Norm,
his is the knowledge of the trained man,
he has won to the stream of the Doctrine,
he is Ariyan with the insight of revulsion;
he stands knocking at the door of the Deathless."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
6. Rukkha Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

6. 'The Tree' Suttas

Sutta 51

Parivīmaṃsana Suttaṃ

Pondering

---

[80] [55]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"In how many ways should a brother
when pondering
ponder for the complete right destroying of ill?"

[56] "For us, lord, things have the Exalted One as their root,
their guide,
their resort.

Well indeed were it
if the meaning of this that he has spoken
were to manifest itself to the Exalted One.

Hearing it from him,
the brethren will remember it."

"Well then, brethren,
listen,
give your mind thoroughly
and I will speak."

"Even so, lord," responded those brethren.

The Exalted One spake thus:

"In this religion, brethren,
a pondering brother ponders:

'This diverse and manifold ill
that arises in the world
as old age and death: -
what is this ill based on,

how comes it to pass,
what brings it forth,
what causes it?

What being there,
does old age-and-death come to be?

What not being there,
does old age-and-death not come to be?'

He pondering comes to know
that this diverse and manifold ill,
that arises in the world
as old age and death,
is based on birth,
comes to pass by birth,
is brought forth by birth,
is caused by birth.

There being birth,
old age-and-death comes to be;
there not being birth,
old age-and-death does not come to be.

He comes to know old age-and-death,
he comes to know its arising,
he comes to know its ceasing,
and he comes to know the way going to its ceasing.

Thus practising, he becomes a brother
'who walks according to Doctrine.'[1]

This man, brethren, we call a brother
who has wholly practised for the complete destroying of ill,
for the ceasing of old age and death.

■

Then again pondering,
he ponders:

'This becoming
that arises in the world
as birth: -
what is this becoming based on,
how comes it to pass,
what brings it forth,
what causes it?

What being there,
does becoming come to be?

What not being there,
does becoming not come to be?'

He pondering comes to know
that this becoming,
that arises in the world
as birth,
is based on grasping,
comes to pass by grasping,
is brought forth by grasping,
is caused by grasping.

There being grasping,
becoming comes to be;
there not being grasping,
beoming does not come to be.

He comes to know beoming,
he comes to know its arising,
he comes to know its ceasing,
and he comes to know the way going to its ceasing.

Thus practising, he becomes a brother
'who walks according to Doctrine.'

This man, brethren, we call a brother
who has wholly practised for the complete destroying of ill,
for the ceasing of becoming.

■

Then again pondering,
he ponders:

'This grasping
that arises in the world
as becoming: -
what is this grasping based on,
how comes it to pass,
what brings it forth,
what causes it?

What being there,
does grasping come to be?

What not being there,
does grasping not come to be?'

He pondering comes to know
that this grasping,
that arises in the world
as becoming,
is based on craving,
comes to pass by craving,
is brought forth by craving,
is caused by craving.

There being craving,
grasping comes to be;

there not being craving,
grasping does not come to be.

He comes to know grasping,
he comes to know its arising,
he comes to know its ceasing,
and he comes to know the way going to its ceasing.

Thus practising, he becomes a brother
'who walks according to Doctrine.'

This man, brethren, we call a brother
who has wholly practised for the complete destroying of ill,
for the ceasing of grasping.

■

Then again pondering,
he ponders:

'This craving
that arises in the world
as grasping: -
what is this craving based on,
how comes it to pass,
what brings it forth,
what causes it?

What being there,
does craving come to be?

What not being there,
does craving not come to be?'

He pondering comes to know
that this craving,
that arises in the world

as grasping,
is based on feeling,
comes to pass by feeling,
is brought forth by feeling,
is caused by feeling.

There being feeling,
craving comes to be;
there not being feeling,
craving does not come to be.

He comes to know craving,
he comes to know its arising,
he comes to know its ceasing,
and he comes to know the way going to its ceasing.

Thus practising, he becomes a brother
'who walks according to Doctrine.'

This man, brethren, we call a brother
who has wholly practised for the complete destroying of ill,
for the ceasing of craving.

■

Then again pondering,
he ponders:

'This feeling
that arises in the world
as craving: -
what is this feeling based on,
how comes it to pass,
what brings it forth,
what causes it?

What being there,
does feeling come to be?

What not being there,
does feeling not come to be?'

He pondering comes to know
that this feeling,
that arises in the world
as craving,
is based on contact,
comes to pass by contact,
is brought forth by contact,
is caused by contact.

There being contact,
feeling comes to be;
there not being contact,
feeling does not come to be.

He comes to know feeling,
he comes to know its arising,
he comes to know its ceasing,
and he comes to know the way going to its ceasing.

Thus practising, he becomes a brother
'who walks according to Doctrine.'

This man, brethren, we call a brother
who has wholly practised for the complete destroying of ill,
for the ceasing of feeling.

■

Then again pondering,
he ponders:

'This contact
that arises in the world
as feeling: -
what is this contact based on,
how comes it to pass,
what brings it forth,
what causes it?

What being there,
does contact come to be?

What not being there,
does contact not come to be?'

He pondering comes to know
that this contact,
that arises in the world
as feeling,
is based on sense,
comes to pass by sense,
is brought forth by sense,
is caused by sense.

There being sense,
contact comes to be;
there not being sense,
contact does not come to be.

He comes to know contact,
he comes to know its arising,
he comes to know its ceasing,
and he comes to know the way going to its ceasing.

Thus practising, he becomes a brother
'who walks according to Doctrine.'

This man, brethren, we call a brother
who has wholly practised for the complete destroying of ill,
for the ceasing of contact.

■

Then again pondering,
he ponders:

'This sense
that arises in the world
as contact: -
what is this sense based on,
how comes it to pass,
what brings it forth,
what causes it?

What being there,
does sense come to be?

What not being there,
does sense not come to be?'

He pondering comes to know
that this sense,
that arises in the world
as contact,
is based on name-and-shape,
comes to pass by name-and-shape,
is brought forth by name-and-shape,
is caused by name-and-shape.

There being name-and-shape,
sense comes to be;
there not being name-and-shape,
sense does not come to be.

He comes to know sense,
he comes to know its arising,
he comes to know its ceasing,
and he comes to know the way going to its ceasing.

Thus practising, he becomes a brother
'who walks according to Doctrine.'

This man, brethren, we call a brother
who has wholly practised for the complete destroying of ill,
for the ceasing of sense.

■

Then again pondering,
he ponders:

'This name-and-shape
that arises in the world
as sense: -
what is this name-and-shape based on,
how comes it to pass,
what brings it forth,
what causes it?

What being there,
does name-and-shape come to be?

What not being there,
does name-and-shape not come to be?'

He pondering comes to know
that this name-and-shape,
that arises in the world
as sense,
is based on consciousness,
comes to pass by consciousness,

is brought forth by consciousness,
is caused by consciousness.

There being consciousness,
name-and-shape comes to be;
there not being consciousness,
name-and-shape does not come to be.

He comes to know name-and-shape,
he comes to know its arising,
he comes to know its ceasing,
and he comes to know the way going to its ceasing.

Thus practising, he becomes a brother
'who walks according to Doctrine.'

This man, brethren, we call a brother
who has wholly practised for the complete destroying of ill,
for the ceasing of name-and-shape.

■

Then again pondering,
he ponders:

'This consciousness
that arises in the world
as name-and-shape: -
what is this consciousness based on,
how comes it to pass,
what brings it forth,
what causes it?

What being there,
does consciousness come to be?

What not being there,
does consciousness not come to be?'

He pondering comes to know
that this consciousness,
that arises in the world
as name-and-shape,
is based on activities,
comes to pass by activities,
is brought forth by activities,
is caused by activities.

There being activities,
consciousness comes to be;
there not being activities,
consciousness does not come to be.

He comes to know consciousness,
he comes to know its arising,
he comes to know its ceasing,
and he comes to know the way going to its ceasing.

Thus practising, he becomes a brother
'who walks according to Doctrine.'

This man, brethren, we call a brother
who has wholly practised for the complete destroying of ill,
for the ceasing of consciousness.

■

Then again pondering,
he ponders:

'These activities
that arise in the world
as consciousness: -

what are these activities based on,
how come they to pass,
what brings them forth,
what causes them?

What being there,
do activities come to be?

What not being there,
do activities not come to be?'

He pondering comes to know
that these activities,
that arises in the world
as consciousness,
are based on ignorance,
come to pass by ignorance,
are brought forth by ignorance,
are caused by ignorance.

There being ignorance,
activities come to be;
there not being ignorance,
activities do not come to be.

He comes to know activities,
he comes to know their [57] uprising,
he comes to know their ceasing,
and he comes to know the way going to their ceasing.

Thus practising, he becomes a brother
'who walks according to Doctrine.'

This man, brethren, we call a brother
who has wholly practised for the complete destroying of ill,
for the ceasing of activities.

§

If, brethren, a man who is ignorant
plans an act of merit,
consciousness is on its way to merit;
if he plans an act of demerit,
consciousness is on its way to demerit;
if he plans an act that is stationary,[2]
consciousness is on its way to that which is stationary.

But when in a brother ignorance is banished
and wisdom has arisen,
because of the fading away of ignorance
and the arising of wisdom,
he does not plan an act of merit,
he does not plan an act of demerit,
he does not plan an act that is stationary.

Not planning,
not willing,
he grasps at nothing whatever in the world;
not grasping he is not perturbed;
unperturbed,
he is of and by himself
utterly well.[3]

And he knows that:

'Birth is perished.
The divine life is lived.
Done is what should be done.
There is no more of these conditions!'

If he feels a pleasant feeling
he knows it is transient,
he knows it is not clung to,
he knows it has no lure for him.

If he feels a painful feeling
he knows it is transient,
he knows it is not clung to,
he knows it has no lure for him.

If he feels a neutral feeling
he knows it is transient,
he knows it is not clung to,
he knows it has no lure for him.

If he feels a pleasant feeling,
he feels that feeling with detachment.

If he feels a painful feeling,
he feels that feeling with detachment.

if he feels a neutral feeling,
he feels that feeling with detachment.

[58] When he feels a feeling
that his powers have reached their limit,
he knows that he feels such a feeling.

When he feels a feeling
that life has reached its term,
he knows that he feels such a feeling.

He knows that,
at the breaking up of the body,
from the end of his life here,
all that he has felt,
all that lacked lure for him

will grow cold,
and bodies will be left on one side.

It is just as if a man, brethren,
were to draw out from a potter's oven
a heated jar
and were to place it on a smooth portion of earth,
so that the heat could there cool off
and the sherds dry up.

Even so when the brother feels a feeling
that his powers have reached their limit,
or when he feels a feeling that life has reached its term,
he knows that he feels such a feeling.

He knows that,
at the breaking up of the body,
from the end of his life here
all that he has felt,
all that lacked lure for him
will grow cold,
and bodies will be left on one side.

What think you, brethren,
would a brother for whom the intoxicants[4] are perished
plan either an act of merit,
or an act of demerit,
or an act that is stationary?"

"He would not, lord."

"Or if all activities were absent,
would there from the ceasing of activities
be any consciousness manifested?"

"There would not, lord."

"Or if consciousness were absent,
would there from the ceasing of consciousness
be any name-and-shape manifested?"

"There would not, lord."

"Or if name-and-shape were absent,
would there from the ceasing of name-and-shape
be any sensation manifested?"

"There would not, lord."

"Or if sensation were absent,
would there from the ceasing of sensation
be any contact manifested?"

"There would not, lord."

"Or if contact were absent,
would there from the ceasing of [59] contact be any feeling manifested?"

"There would not, lord."

"Or if feeling were absent,
would there from the ceasing of feeling be any grasping manifested?"

"There would not, lord."

"Or if grasping were absent,
would there from the ceasing of grasping be any becoming manifested?"

"There would not, lord."

"Or if becoming were absent, would there from the ceasing of becoming

be any birth manifested?"

"There would not, lord."

"Or if birth were absent,
would there from the ceasing of birth
be any old age and death manifested?"

"There would not, lord."

"Well done, well done, brethren.

So is it, brethren,
not otherwise is it.

Believe me, brethren,
be convinced of this,
be ye without doubt herein,
without hesitation:

Just this is the end of ill."

---

[1] See § 16, and anudhamma-cāri*.

[2] Āneñjaṃ.

[3] Parinibbāyati. Here where we should have valued a comment the Comy. is silent. This difficult term, meaning literally he is wholly extinct (as to all evil), is used not only for the attainment of the unrevealed summum bonum at the last death, but also for other accomplishment, such as the pulling a man out of a bog, and the completed training of a horse (Majjhima i, 45, 446). That the allied word Nibbāna conveyed a sense of perfect wellbeing appears in such a passage as Majjhima i, 508*f*. Cf. my Buddhism, p. 177 f.

[4] Khīṇ'āsavo. See above i, p. 20, n. 4. A usual name for a saint or Arahant is khīṇāsava.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
6. Rukkha Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

6. 'The Tree' Suttas

Sutta 52

Upādāna Suttaṃ

Grasping

---

[84] [59]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"In him, brethren, who contemplates
the enjoyment that there is
in all that makes for grasping,
craving grows.

Grasping is conditioned by craving.

Becoming is conditioned by grasping.

Birth is conditioned by becoming.

Decay-and-death is conditioned by birth.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

It is just as if there should be a blazing bonfire
of ten or twenty or thirty
or forty
loads of faggots;
thereon a man should throw from time to time
dry grasses,
should throw dry cow-dung,
should throw dry faggots.

Verily such a great bonfire so fed,
so supplied with fuel,
would burn for a long while.

Even so in him who contemplates
the enjoyment that there is
in all that makes for grasping,
craving grows.

Grasping is conditioned by craving.

Becoming is conditioned by grasping.

Birth is conditioned by becoming.

Decay-and-death is conditioned by birth.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

§

In him, brethren, who contemplates the misery that there is
in all that makes for grasping,
craving ceases.

When craving ceases, grasping ceases.

When grasping ceases becoming ceases.

When becoming ceases birth ceases.

When birth ceases decay-and-death ceases.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

It is just as if there should be a blazing bonfire
of ten,
or twenty,
or thirty,
or forty
loads of faggots;
thereon no man should
from time to time
throw dry grasses,
dry cow-dung,
dry sticks.

Verily that great bonfire,
when the first laid fuel [60] were come to an end,
and it were not fed by other fuel,
would without food
become extinct.

Even so in him who contemplates
the misery that there is
in all that makes for grasping,
craving ceases.

When craving ceases, grasping ceases.

When grasping ceases becoming ceases.

When becoming ceases birth ceases.

When birth ceases decay-and-death ceases.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
6. Rukkha Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

6. 'The Tree' Suttas

Sutta 53

Saṇyojana Suttaṃ

Fetters

---

[86] [60]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"In him, brethren, who contemplates the enjoyment that there is
in all that makes for enfettering,
craving grows.

Grasping is conditioned by craving.

Becoming is conditioned by grasping.

Birth is conditioned by becoming.

Decay-and-death is conditioned by birth.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

It is just as if, brethren, because of oil
and because of wick,
an oil-lamp were to be burning,
and in it
from time to time
a man were to pour oil
and to adjust a wick.

Verily such an oil-lamp
so fed,

so supplied with fuel
would burn for a long while.

Even so in him who contemplates the enjoyment that there is
in all that makes for enfettering,
craving grows.

Grasping is conditioned by craving.

Becoming is conditioned by grasping.

Birth is conditioned by becoming.

Decay-and-death is conditioned by birth.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

§

In him, brethren, who contemplates the misery that there is
in all that makes for enfettering,
craving ceases.

When craving ceases, grasping ceases.

When grasping ceases becoming ceases.

When becoming ceases birth ceases.

When birth ceases decay-and-death ceases.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

It is just as if, because of oil
and because of wick,
an oil-lamp were to be burning,
and in it no man should
from time to time
pour oil
or adjust a wick.

Verily such an oil-lamp,
when its first fuel were come to an end,
and no other food were brought to it, would
without food
become extinct.

Even so in him who contemplates the misery that there is
in all that makes for enfettering,
craving ceases.

When craving ceases, grasping ceases.

When grasping ceases becoming ceases.

When becoming ceases birth ceases.

When birth ceases decay-and-death ceases.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
6. Rukkha Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

6. 'The Tree' Suttas

Sutta 54

Dutiya Saṇyojana Suttaṃ

Fetters (2)

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"It is just as if, brethren, because of oil
and because of wick,
an oil-lamp were to be burning,
and in it
from time to time
a man were to pour oil
and to adjust a wick.

Verily such an oil-lamp
so fed,
so supplied with fuel
would burn for a long while.

Even so in him who contemplates the enjoyment that there is
in all that makes for enfettering,
craving grows.

Grasping is conditioned by craving.

Becoming is conditioned by grasping.

Birth is conditioned by becoming.

Decay-and-death is conditioned by birth.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

It is just as if, because of oil
and because of wick,
an oil-lamp were to be burning,
and in it no man should
from time to time
pour oil
or adjust a wick.

Verily such an oil-lamp,
when its first fuel were come to an end,
and no other food were brought to it, would
without food
become extinct.

Even so in him who contemplates the misery that there is
in all that makes for enfettering,
craving ceases.

When craving ceases, grasping ceases.

When grasping ceases becoming ceases.

When becoming ceases birth ceases.

When birth ceases decay-and-death ceases.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
6. Rukkha Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

6. 'The Tree' Suttas

Sutta 55

Mahā Rukkha Suttaṃ

The Great Tree (1)

---

[87] [61]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"In him, brethren, who contemplates the enjoyment that there is
in all that makes for grasping,
craving grows.

Grasping is conditioned by craving.

Becoming is conditioned by grasping.

Birth is conditioned by becoming.

Decay-and-death is conditioned by birth.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

It is just as if there were a great tree,
the roots whereof
going downward and across
bring upward all the juice.[1]

Verily, brethren, such a great tree
so fed,
so supplied with fuel
would stand for a long while.

Even so in him who contemplates the enjoyment that there is
in all that makes for grasping,
craving grows.

Grasping is conditioned by craving.

Becoming is conditioned by grasping.

Birth is conditioned by becoming.

Decay-and-death is conditioned by birth.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

§

In him, brethren, who contemplates the misery that there is
in all that makes for grasping,
craving ceases.

When craving ceases, grasping ceases.

When grasping ceases becoming ceases.

When becoming ceases birth ceases.

When birth ceases decay-and-death ceases.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,

sorrow,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

It is just as if there were a great tree,
and a man were to come with axe and basket,
and were to cut down that tree at the root.

Cutting it by the root
he were to dig a trench
and were to pull out the roots
even to the rootlets
and root-fibres.

Then he were to cut the tree into logs,
and were then to split [62] the logs,
and were then to make the logs into chips.

Then he were to dry the chips in wind and sun,
then burn them by fire,
then make an ashheap,
then winnow the ashes in a strong wind,
or let them be borne down
by the swift stream of a river.

Verily that great tree
thus cut down at the root
would be made as a palmtree stump,
a no-thing,
incapable of growing again in the future.[2]

Even so in him who contemplates the misery that there is
in all that makes for grasping,
craving ceases.

When craving ceases, grasping ceases.

When grasping ceases becoming ceases.

When becoming ceases birth ceases.

When birth ceases decay-and-death ceases.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill."

---

[1] Abhikaranti.

[2] As on p. 44.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
6. Rukkha Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

6. 'The Tree' Suttas

Sutta 56

Dutiya Mahā Rukkha Suttaṃ

The Great Tree (2)

---

[88] [62]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"It is just as if there were a great tree,
the roots whereof
going downward and across
bring upward all the juice.

Verily, brethren, such a great tree
so fed,
so supplied with fuel
would stand for a long while.

Even so in him who contemplates the enjoyment that there is
in all that makes for grasping,
craving grows.

Grasping is conditioned by craving.

Becoming is conditioned by grasping.

Birth is conditioned by becoming.

Decay-and-death is conditioned by birth.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

§

It is just as if there were a great tree,
and a man were to come with axe and basket,
and were to cut down that tree at the root.

Cutting it by the root
he were to dig a trench
and were to pull out the roots
even to the rootlets
and root-fibres.

Then he were to cut the tree into logs,
and were then to split the logs,
and were then to make the logs into chips.

Then he were to dry the chips in wind and sun,
then burn them by fire,
then make an ashheap,
then winnow the ashes in a strong wind,
or let them be borne down
by the swift stream of a river.

Verily that great tree
thus cut down at the root
would be made as a palmtree stump,
a no-thing,
incapable of growing again in the future.

Even so in him who contemplates the misery that there is
in all that makes for grasping,
craving ceases.

When craving ceases, grasping ceases.

When grasping ceases becoming ceases.

When becoming ceases birth ceases.

When birth ceases decay-and-death ceases.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
6. Rukkha Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

6. 'The Tree' Suttas

Sutta 57

Taruṇa-Rukkha Suttaṃ

The Sapling

---

[89] [62]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"In him, brethren, who contemplates the enjoyment that there is
in all that makes for enfettering,
craving grows.

Grasping is conditioned by craving.

Becoming is conditioned by grasping.

Birth is conditioned by becoming.

Decay-and-death is conditioned by birth.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

It is just as if, brethren, there were a tender sapling, and a man were from time to time to clear around[1] the roots,
were from time to time to give it earth,
were from time to time to give it water.

Verily, brethren, such a tender sapling
so fed,
so given nutriment,[2] would attain to growth,
to development,
to abundance.

Even so in him who contemplates the enjoyment that there is
in all that makes for enfettering,

craving grows.

Grasping is conditioned by craving.

Becoming is conditioned by grasping.

Birth is conditioned by becoming.

Decay-and-death is conditioned by birth.

Grief,
lamenting,
[63] suffering,
sorrow,
despair come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

§

In him, brethren, who contemplates the misery that there is
in all that makes for enfettering,
craving ceases.

When craving ceases, grasping ceases.

When grasping ceases becoming ceases.

When becoming ceases birth ceases.

When birth ceases decay-and-death ceases.

Grief,
lamenting,

suffering,
sorrow,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

It is just as if there were a tender sapling;
and a man were to come with axe and basket,
and were to cut down that tree at the root,
and were then to dig a trench
and were to pull out the roots
even to the rootlets
and root-fibres.

Then he were to cut the sapling into logs,
and were then to split the logs,
and were then to make the logs into chips.

Then he were to dry the chips in wind and sun,
then burn them by fire,
then make an ashheap,
then winnow the ashes in a strong wind,
or let them be borne down
by the swift stream of a river.

Verily that sapling
thus cut down at the root
would be made as a palmtree stump,
a no-thing,
incapable of growing again in the future.

Even so in him who contemplates the misery that there is
in all that makes for grasping,
craving ceases.

When craving ceases, grasping ceases.

When grasping ceases becoming ceases.

When becoming ceases birth ceases.

When birth ceases decay-and-death ceases.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill."

---

[1] Palisajjeyya.

[2] Tad-upādāno. The word upādāna means equally grasping and food or fuel.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
6. Rukkha Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

6. 'The Tree' Suttas

Sutta 58

Nāma-Rūpa Suttaṃ

Name-and-Shape

---

[90] [63]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"In him, brethren, who contemplates the enjoyment that there is
in all that makes for grasping,
there comes a descent of name-and-shape.[1]

Sense is conditioned by name-and-shape.

Contact is conditioned by sense.

Feeling is conditioned by contact.

Craving is condtitioned by feeling.

Grasping is conditioned by craving.

Becoming is conditioned by grasping.

Birth is conditioned by becoming.

Decay-and-death is conditioned by birth.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

It is just as if there were a great tree,
the roots whereof
going downward and across
bring upward all the juice.

Verily, brethren, such a great tree
so fed,
so supplied with fuel
would stand for a long while.

Even so in him who contemplates the enjoyment that there is
in all that makes for grasping,
there comes a descent of name-and-shape.

Sense is conditioned by name-and-shape.

Contact is conditioned by sense.

Feeling is conditioned by contact.

Craving is condtitioned by feeling.

Grasping is conditioned by craving.

Becoming is conditioned by grasping.

Birth is conditioned by becoming.

Decay-and-death is conditioned by birth.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

§

In him, brethren, who contemplates the misery that there is
in all that makes for grasping,
there comes no descent of name-and-shape.

When name-and-shape ceases, sense ceases.

When sense ceases, contact ceases.

When contact ceases, feeling ceases.

When feeling ceases, craving ceases.

When craving ceases, grasping ceases.

When grasping ceases becoming ceases.

When becoming ceases birth ceases.

When birth ceases decay-and-death ceases.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

It is just as if there were a great tree,
and a man were to come with axe and basket,
and were to cut down that tree at the root.

Cutting it by the root
he were to dig a trench
and were to pull out the roots
even to the rootlets
and root-fibres.

Then he were to cut the tree into logs,
and were then to split the logs,
and were then to make the logs into chips.

Then he were to dry the chips in wind and sun,
then burn them by fire,
then make an ashheap,
then winnow the ashes in a strong wind,
or let them be borne down
by the swift stream of a river.

Verily that great tree
thus cut down at the root
would be made as a palmtree stump,
a no-thing,
incapable of growing again in the future.

Even so in him who contemplates the misery that there is
in all that makes for grasping,
there comes no descent of name-and-shape.

When name-and-shape ceases, sense ceases.

When sense ceases, contact ceases.

When contact ceases, feeling ceases.

When feeling ceases, craving ceases.

When craving ceases, grasping ceases.

When grasping ceases becoming ceases.

When becoming ceases birth ceases.

When birth ceases decay-and-death ceases.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

---

[1] I.e. at rebirth.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
6. Rukkha Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

6. 'The Tree' Suttas

Sutta 59

Viññāṇa Suttaṃ

Consciousness

---

[91] [64]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"In him, brethren, who contemplates the enjoyment that there is
in all that makes for grasping,
there comes a descent of consciousness.

Name-and-shape is conditioned by consciousness.

Sense is conditioned by name-and-shape.

Contact is conditioned by sense.

Feeling is conditioned by contact.

Craving is condtitioned by feeling.

Grasping is conditioned by craving.

Becoming is conditioned by grasping.

Birth is conditioned by becoming.

Decay-and-death is conditioned by birth.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

It is just as if there were a great tree,
the roots whereof
going downward and across
bring upward all the juice.

Verily, brethren, such a great tree
so fed,
so supplied with fuel
would stand for a long while.

Even so in him who contemplates the enjoyment that there is
in all that makes for grasping,
there comes a descent of consciousness.

Name-and-shape is conditioned by consciousness.

Sense is conditioned by name-and-shape.

Contact is conditioned by sense.

Feeling is conditioned by contact.

Craving is condtitioned by feeling.

Grasping is conditioned by craving.

Becoming is conditioned by grasping.

Birth is conditioned by becoming.

Decay-and-death is conditioned by birth.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

§

In him, brethren, who contemplates the misery that there is
in all that makes for grasping,
there comes no descent of consciousness.

When consciousness ceases, name-and-shape ceases.

When name-and-shape ceases, sense ceases.

When sense ceases, contact ceases.

When contact ceases, feeling ceases.

When feeling ceases, craving ceases.

When craving ceases, grasping ceases.

When grasping ceases becoming ceases.

When becoming ceases birth ceases.

When birth ceases decay-and-death ceases.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

It is just as if there were a great tree,
and a man were to come with axe and basket,
and were to cut down that tree at the root.

Cutting it by the root
he were to dig a trench

and were to pull out the roots
even to the rootlets
and root-fibres.

Then he were to cut the tree into logs,
and were then to split the logs,
and were then to make the logs into chips.

Then he were to dry the chips in wind and sun,
then burn them by fire,
then make an ashheap,
then winnow the ashes in a strong wind,
or let them be borne down
by the swift stream of a river.

Verily that great tree
thus cut down at the root
would be made as a palmtree stump,
a no-thing,
incapable of growing again in the future.

Even so in him who contemplates the misery that there is
in all that makes for grasping,
there comes no descent of consciousness.

When consciousness ceases, name-and-shape ceases.

When name-and-shape ceases, sense ceases.

When sense ceases, contact ceases.

When contact ceases, feeling ceases.

When feeling ceases, craving ceases.

When craving ceases, grasping ceases.

When grasping ceases becoming ceases.

When becoming ceases birth ceases.

When birth ceases decay-and-death ceases.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
6. Rukkha Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

6. 'The Tree' Suttas

Sutta 60

Nidāna (Paṭicca-Samuppāda) Suttaṃ

The Base

---

[92] [64]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying among the Kurus at Kammāsadamma, a township of the Kurus.[1]

And the venerable Ānanda went into the presence of the Exalted One, and saluting him sat down at one side.

So seated he said thus to the Exalted One:

"Wonderful, lord, marvellous, lord,
is the depth of this causal law
and how deep it appears.[2]

And yet I reckon it as ever so plain."

"Say not so, Ānanda,
say not so!

Deep indeed is this causal law,
and deep indeed it appears.

It is through not knowing,
not understanding,
not penetrating,
that doctrine,
that this generation has become entangled
like a ball of string,
and covered with blight,
like unto munja grass and rushes,
unable to overpass the doom of the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
the Constant Faring on.

In him, Ānanda, who contemplates the enjoyment that there is
in all [65] that makes for grasping,
there comes a descent of consciousness.

Name-and-shape is conditioned by consciousness.

Sense is conditioned by name-and-shape.

Contact is conditioned by sense.

Feeling is conditioned by contact.

Craving is condtitioned by feeling.

Grasping is conditioned by craving.

Becoming is conditioned by grasping.

Birth is conditioned by becoming.

Decay-and-death is conditioned by birth.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

It is just as if there were a great tree,
the roots whereof
going downward and across
bring upward all the juice.

Verily, Ānanda, such a great tree
so fed,
so supplied with fuel
would stand for a long while.

Even so in him who contemplates the enjoyment that there is
in all that makes for grasping,
there comes a descent of consciousness.

Name-and-shape is conditioned by consciousness.

Sense is conditioned by name-and-shape.

Contact is conditioned by sense.

Feeling is conditioned by contact.

Craving is condtitioned by feeling.

Grasping is conditioned by craving.

Becoming is conditioned by grasping.

Birth is conditioned by becoming.

Decay-and-death is conditioned by birth.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

§

In him, Ānanda, who contemplates the misery that there is
in all that makes for grasping,
there comes no descent of consciousness.

When consciousness ceases, name-and-shape ceases.

When name-and-shape ceases, sense ceases.

When sense ceases, contact ceases.

When contact ceases, feeling ceases.

When feeling ceases, craving ceases.

When craving ceases, grasping ceases.

When grasping ceases becoming ceases.

When becoming ceases birth ceases.

When birth ceases decay-and-death ceases.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

It is just as if there were a great tree,
and a man were to come with axe and basket,
and were to cut down that tree at the root.

Cutting it by the root
he were to dig a trench
and were to pull out the roots
even to the rootlets
and root-fibres.

Then he were to cut the tree into logs,
and were then to split the logs,
and were then to make the logs into chips.

Then he were to dry the chips in wind and sun,
then burn them by fire,
then make an ashheap,

then winnow the ashes in a strong wind,
or let them be borne down
by the swift stream of a river.

Verily that great tree
thus cut down at the root
would be made as a palmtree stump,
a no-thing,
incapable of growing again in the future.

Even so in him who contemplates the misery that there is
in all that makes for grasping,
there comes no descent of consciousness.

When consciousness ceases, name-and-shape ceases.

When name-and-shape ceases, sense ceases.

When sense ceases, contact ceases.

When contact ceases, feeling ceases.

When feeling ceases, craving ceases.

When craving ceases, grasping ceases.

When grasping ceases becoming ceases.

When becoming ceases birth ceases.

When birth ceases decay-and-death ceases.

Grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill."

---

[1] Their country lay around Delhi. Their capital was Indraprastha. Tradition gives their kingdom a circumference of 2,000 miles, but at this time they were not politically of importance. Some important Suttas are associated with Kammāsadamma. Rhys Davids, Buddhist India, p. 27.

[2] See above, p. 29 (§ 24) and Dialogues, ii, p. 50. Buddhaghosa expatiates at some length on Ānanda's remark and the Master's caveat, giving legendary antecedents for the same.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
7. Mahā Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

7. The Great Chapter

Sutta 61

Paṭhama Assutavantu Suttaṃ

The Untaught

---

[94] [65]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"The untaught manyfolk, brethren,
might well be repelled by this body,
child of the four great elements,
might cease to fancy it
and wish to be free from it.

Why so?

Seen is the growth and decay of this body,
child of the four great elements,
the taking on
and the laying down of it.

Hence well might the manyfolk be repelled by it,
cease to fancy it,
and wish to be free from it.

Yet this, brethren, that we call thought,
that we call mind,
that we call consciousness,
by this the untaught manyfolk
are not able to feel repelled,
they are not able to cease fancying it
or to be freed from it.

Why so?

For many a long day, brethren,
has it been for the uneducated manyfolk
that to which they cleave,
that which they call 'mine,'
that which they wrongly conceive thinking:

'That is mine;
this I am;
this is my spirit.'

Hence the untaught manyfolk
are not able to feel repelled by it,
are not able to cease fancying it,
are not able to be freed from it.

It were better, brethren,
if the untaught manyfolk approached this body,
child of the four great elements,
as the self rather than the mind.

Why so?

Seen is it, brethren, how this body,
child of the four great elements,
persists for a year,
[66] persists for two years,
persists for three,
four,
five,
ten,
twenty,
thirty years,
persists for forty,
for fifty years,
persists for a hundred years
and even longer.

But this, brethren, that we call thought,
that we call mind,
that we call consciousness,
that arises as one thing,

ceases as another,
whether by night or by day.[1]

Just as a monkey, brethren,
faring through the woods,
through the great forest
catches hold of a bough,
letting it go
seizes another,
even so that which we call thought,
that we call mind,
that we call consciousness,
that arises as one thing,
ceases as another,
both by night and by day.

Herein, brethren, the well taught Ariyan disciple
gives his mind thoroughly and systematically
to the causal law:

This being,
that comes to be;
from the arising of this,
that arises.

This not being,
that does not come to be;
from the cessation of this,
that ceases.

That is to say:

Conditioned by ignorance activities come to pass;
conditioned by activities consciousness,
conditioned by consciousness name-and-shape,
conditioned by name-and-shape sense,

conditioned by sense contact,
conditioned by contact feeling,
conditioned by feeling craving,
conditioned by craving grasping,
conditioned by grasping becoming,
conditioned by becoming birth,
conditioned by birth old age-and death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair come to pass.

Such is the uprising of this entire mass of ill.

But from the utter fading away and ceasing of ignorance ceasing of activities;
from ceasing of activities ceasing of consciousness;
from ceasing of consciousness ceasing of name-and-shape;
from ceasing of name-and-shape ceasing of sense;
from ceasing of sense ceasing of contact;
from ceasing of contact ceasing of feeling;
from ceasing of feeling ceasing of craving;
from ceasing of craving ceasing of grasping;
from ceasing of grasping ceasing of becoming;
from ceasing of becoming ceasing of birth;
from ceasing of birth,
old age-and-death, grief, lamenting, suffering, sorrow, despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this entire mass of ill.

Seeing thus, brethren,
the well taught Ariyan disciple
is repelled by bodily shape,
is repelled by feeling
and by perception
and by activities
and by consciousness.

Being repelled
he is not attracted by them;
unattracted he is set free,
and the knowledge comes in freedom
about freedom.

And he knows that birth is perished,
the divine life lived,
done that which was to be done,
no hereafter to these conditions!

---

[1] Or 'by day as by night one arises when another perishes.' The aññno ... aññno (alter ... alter) is not easy to render exactly. This illustration of consciousness, mind, thought by a monkey became classical in Buddhist countries. Cf. my Buddhist Psychology (Quest Series), p. 34*f*. 'Child of,' etc. = literally 'four-great-element-ish.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
7. Mahā Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

7. The Great Chapter

Sutta 62

Dutiya Assutavantu Suttaṃ

The Untaught (2)

---

[95] [67]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"The untaught manyfolk, brethren,
might well be repelled by this body,
child of the four great elements,
might cease to fancy it
and wish to be free from it.

Why so?

Seen is the growth and decay of this body,
child of the four great elements,
the taking on
and the laying down of it.

Hence well might the manyfolk be repelled by it,
cease to fancy it,
and wish to be free from it.

Yet this, brethren, that we call thought,
that we call mind,
that we call consciousness,
by this the untaught manyfolk are not able to feel repelled,
they are not able to cease fancying it
or to be freed from it.

Why so?

For many a long day, brethren,
has it been for the uneducated manyfolk
that to which they cleave,
that which they call 'mine,'
that which they wrongly conceive thinking:

'That is mine; this I am; this is my spirit.'

Hence the untaught manyfolk
are not able to feel repelled by it,
are not able to cease fancying it,
are not able to be freed from it.

It were better, brethren,
if the untaught manyfolk approached this body,
child of the four great elements,
as the self rather than the mind.

Why so?

Seen is it, brethren, how this body,
child of the four great elements,
persists for a year,
[66] persists for two years,
persists for three,
four,
five,
ten,
twenty,
thirty years,
persists for forty,
for fifty years,
persists for a hundred years
and even longer.

But this, brethren, that we call thought,
that we call mind,
that we call consciousness,
that arises as one thing,
ceases as another,
whether by night or by day.

Because of a contact which makes for pleasant feeling, brethren,
pleasant feeling arises.

From the ceasing of that contact which makes for pleasant feeling,
the pleasant feeling, -
which had arisen because of the contact making for pleasant feeling, -
that ceases,
that is quenched.

Because of a contact which makes for painful feeling, brethren,
painful feeling arises.

From the ceasing of that contact which makes for painful feeling,
the painful feeling, -
which had arisen because of the contact making for painful feeling, -
that ceases,
that is quenched.

Because of a contact which makes for neutral feeling, brethren,
neutral feeling arises.

From the ceasing of that contact which makes for neutral feeling,
the neutral feeling, -
which had arisen because of the contact making for neutral feeling, -
that ceases,
that is quenched.

Just as if from the adjusted friction of two sticks,
heat is born,
a spark is brought forth,
but from the separating
and withdrawing
of just those two sticks,
the heat which was consequent,
that ceases,
that is quenched.

Even so because of a contact which makes for pleasant feeling, brethren,
pleasant feeling arises,
from the ceasing of that contact which makes for pleasant feeling,

the pleasant feeling, -
which had arisen because of the contact making for pleasant feeling, -
that ceases,
that is quenched;

because of a contact which makes for painful feeling, brethren,
painful feeling arises,
From the ceasing of that contact which makes for painful feeling,
the painful feeling, -
which had arisen because of the contact making for painful feeling, -
that ceases,
that is quenched;

because of a contact which makes for neutral feeling, brethren,
neutral feeling arises,
From the ceasing of that contact which makes for neutral feeling,
the neutral feeling, -
which had arisen because of the contact making for neutral feeling, -
that ceases,
that is quenched.

So seeing, brethren,
the well taught Ariyan disciple
is repelled by contact,
is repelled by feeling,
is repelled by perception,[1]
is repelled by consciousness.

Being repelled
he is not attracted by them,
unattracted he is set free,
and the knowledge comes in freedom
about freedom!

And he knows that birth is perished,
that the divine life is lived,

done that which was to be done,
no hereafter to these conditions!

---

[1] Text omits saṅkhāra's.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
7. Mahā Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

7. The Great Chapter

Sutta 63

Putta-Maṃsa Suttaṃ

Child's Flesh

---

[67]

While at Sāvatthī the Exalted One said: —

"There are these four foods,[1] brethren,
for the maintenance [68] of beings
that have come to birth,
or for the forwarding of those
who seek to come to be.

Which are the four?

Material food, coarse or fine;
contact is the second,
willing of mind is the third,
consciousness is the fourth.

These are the four foods
for the maintenance of beings
that have come to birth,
or for the forwarding of those
who seek to come to be.

§

And how, brethren,
is material food to be considered?

It is as if two parents who had taken slender provisions
were on their way in the path through the jungle,
and theirs was an only child dear and sweet.

Now suppose that the scanty provisions of those parents in the jungle came to an end, used up.

And suppose that there was yet
a portion of the jungle untraversed.

Then those parents might say:

'What scanty provisions we had
are come to an end, are used up,
and there is this remainder of the jungle to traverse.

What if we were to slay
this our only child, sweet and dear,
and make both dried pieces and juicy pieces,
and so eating flesh of child,
might traverse that remainder of the jungle.

Let us not all three perish!'

And so those two parents
slew that only child sweet and dear,
and made both dried pieces and juicy pieces,
and so, eating flesh of child
they could traverse that remainder of the jungle.

They would both eat child-flesh
and smite on their breasts crying;
'Where is our only child?
Where is our only child?'

Now what think you, brethren?

Would they take the food for sport?

Or would they take the food from indulgence?

Or would they take the food for personal charm?

Or would they take the food for plumpness?"[2]

"Not so; lord."

"Would they not take the food, brethren,
in order that they might last

till the jungle was crossed?"

"Even so, lord."

"Even so, brethren,
I declare should solid food be regarded.

When such food is well understood,
the passions of the five senses are well understood.

When the passions of the five [69] senses are well understood, the fetters do not exist
bound by which the Ariyan disciple could come again to this world.

■

And how, brethren,
is the food that is contact to be regarded?

It is as if, brethren,
a cow with a sore hide
should stand leaning against a wall,
the creatures that live on the wall would bite her;
if she stood leaning against a tree,
the creatures that live on the tree would bite her;
yea, whatever she stood leaning against,
whatever creatures lived thereon would bite her.

If she stood buoyed up by water,
the creatures that live in the water would bite her;
if she stood buoyed up by the air,
the creatures that live in dependence on the air would bite her,
yea, whatever she stood up against,
whatsoever creatures that lived in dependence thereon would bite her.

Even so do I declare that the food which is contact should be regarded.

When such food is well understood,
the three feelings[3] are well understood.

When the three feelings are well understood,
I declare that there is nothing further which the Ariyan disciple has to do.

■

And how, brethren,
is the food that is will of mind to be regarded?

It is as if, brethren, there were a pit of charcoal,
deeper than a man is high,
filled with clear, glowing, smokeless charcoal.

And a man were to come by,
loving his life,
not loving death,
loving happiness,
and loathing pain.

And two strong men
seizing him by each arm
were to drag him up to the pit.

Now to be far from that, brethren,
would be the will of that man,
to be far would be his wish,
to be far would be his aspiration.

Why so?

Verily the man would think:
— 'I shall fall on that heap of charcoal;
through that I shall come in for death,
or for mortal pain.'

Even so, brethren, I declare that the food which is will of mind should be regarded.

When that food is well understood,
the three cravings[4] are well understood.

When these are well understood, I declare that there is nothing further that the Ariyan disciple has to do.

■

[70] And how, brethren,
is the food that is consciousness to be regarded?

It is as if, brethren,
they were to seize a robber, an evildoer,
and were to show him to the king, saying:
— 'This man, sire, is a robber, an evildoer.
Inflict on him such punishment as is desired.'

And the king should pronounce this concerning him:
— 'Go, masters, smite this man at dawn
with a hundred darts.'[5]

And they were to do so.

Then at noon the king should declare this:
— 'Ho, masters, how is that man?'

'At this moment, sire, he is alive.'

And the king should pronounce this concerning him:
— 'Go, masters, smite this man at noon
with a hundred darts.'

And they were to do so.

Then at eventide the king should declare this:
— 'Ho, masters, how is that man?'

'At this moment, sire, he is alive.'

And the king should pronounce this concerning him:
— 'Go, masters, smite this man at eventide
with a hundred darts.'

And they were to do so.

What think you, brethren?
Would that man,
smitten during the day by three hundred darts,
suffer therefrom pain and sorrow?"

"Were he smitten, lord,
by but one dart,
he would therefrom suffer pain and sorrow;
what need to speak of being smitten by three hundred?"

"Even so, brethren, do I declare that the food called consciousness should be regarded.

When consciousness, brethren, is well understood,
name-and-shape is well understood.

When name-and-shape is well understood, I declare there is nothing further that the Ariyan disciple has to do."

---

[1] Cf. above §§ 11, 12. The grim parable that follows is referred to in Psalms of the Brethren, verse 445.

[2] On these four terms, in the formula for 'moderation in eating," see Expositor, 511; Visuddhi Magga, p. 31 f.

[3] Pleasant, painful and neutral feeling.

[4] S. iii, 26, 158.

[5] Satti. Or lances, or spears, or javelins.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
7. Mahā Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

7. The Great Chapter

Sutta 64

Atthi-Rāga Suttaṃ

There is Passion

---

[70]

While at Sāvatthī the Exalted One said: —

There are these four sustenances, brethren,
for the maintenance of beings
that have come to birth,
or for the forwarding of those
who seek to come to be.

Which are the four?

[71] Solid food, coarse or fine,
contact the second,
willing of mind the third,
consciousness the fourth.

These are the four[1] sustenances, brethren,
for the maintenance of beings
that have come to birth,
or for the forwarding of those
who seek to come to be.

If there be passion, brethren,
if there be delight,
if there be craving
as to solid food,
it is there that consciousness is firmly placed
and becomes fruitful.[2]

Where consciousness is firmly placed and fruitful,
there is descent of name-and-shape.

Where there is descent of name-and-shape,
there is growth of activities.

Where there is growth of activities
there in the future is renewed becoming and rebirth.

Where in the future is renewed becoming and rebirth,
there in the future is decay-and-death.

Where there is in the future decay-and-death,
I declare, brethren,
that with it is grief,
affliction,
despair.

If there be passion, brethren,
if there be delight,
if there be craving
as to contact,
it is there that consciousness is firmly placed
and becomes fruitful.

Where consciousness is firmly placed and fruitful,
there is descent of name-and-shape.

Where there is descent of name-and-shape,
there is growth of activities.

Where there is growth of activities
there in the future is renewed becoming and rebirth.

Where in the future is renewed becoming and rebirth,
there in the future is decay-and-death.

Where there is in the future decay-and-death,
I declare, brethren,
that with it is grief,
affliction,
despair.

If there be passion, brethren,
if there be delight,
if there be craving
as to willing of mind,
it is there that consciousness is firmly placed
and becomes fruitful.

Where consciousness is firmly placed and fruitful,
there is descent of name-and-shape.

Where there is descent of name-and-shape,
there is growth of activities.

Where there is growth of activities
there in the future is renewed becoming and rebirth.

Where in the future is renewed becoming and rebirth,
there in the future is decay-and-death.

Where there is in the future decay-and-death,
I declare, brethren,
that with it is grief,
affliction,
despair.

If there be passion, brethren,
if there be delight,
if there be craving
as to consciousness,
it is there that consciousness is firmly placed
and becomes fruitful.

Where consciousness is firmly placed and fruitful,
there is descent of name-and-shape.

Where there is descent of name-and-shape,
there is growth of activities.

Where there is growth of activities
there in the future is renewed becoming and rebirth.

Where in the future is renewed becoming and rebirth,
there in the future is decay-and-death.

Where there is in the future decay-and-death,
I declare, brethren,
that with it is grief,
affliction,
despair.

Just as if a dyer, brethren,
or a painter,
if there be dye,
or lac,
or turmeric,
or indigo
or madder,
or a well polished panel or wall
or strip of cloth
can fashion a woman's shape
or a man's shape
complete in all its parts,
even so, brethren, if there be passion,
delight,
craving as to any one of these four foods,
there consciousness,
being firmly placed and fruitful,
name-and-shape descends,
activities grow,
in the future is renewed becoming and rebirth,
decay-and-death,
grief, affliction,
despair.

Even so, if there be passion, brethren,
if there be delight,
if there be craving
as to solid food,
it is there that consciousness is firmly placed
and becomes fruitful.

Where consciousness is firmly placed and fruitful,
there is descent of name-and-shape.

Where there is descent of name-and-shape,
there is growth of activities.

Where there is growth of activities
there in the future is renewed becoming and rebirth.

Where in the future is renewed becoming and rebirth,
there in the future is decay-and-death.

Where there is in the future decay-and-death,
I declare, brethren,
that with it is grief,
affliction,
despair.

Even so, if there be passion, brethren,
if there be delight,
if there be craving
as to contact,
it is there that consciousness is firmly placed
and becomes fruitful.

Where consciousness is firmly placed and fruitful,
there is descent of name-and-shape.

Where there is descent of name-and-shape,
there is growth of activities.

Where there is growth of activities
there in the future is renewed becoming and rebirth.

Where in the future is renewed becoming and rebirth,
there in the future is decay-and-death.

Where there is in the future decay-and-death,
I declare, brethren,
that with it is grief,
affliction,
despair.

Even so, if there passion, brethren,
if there be delight,
if there be craving
as to willing of mind,
it is there that consciousness is firmly placed
and becomes fruitful.

Where consciousness is firmly placed and fruitful,
there is descent of name-and-shape.

Where there is descent of name-and-shape,
there is growth of activities.

Where there is growth of activities
there in the future is renewed becoming and rebirth.

Where in the future is renewed becoming and rebirth,
there in the future is decay-and-death.

Where there is in the future decay-and-death,
I declare, brethren,
that with it is grief,
affliction,
despair.

Even so, if there passion, brethren,
if there be delight,
if there be craving
as to consciousness,
it is there that consciousness is firmly placed
and becomes fruitful.

Where consciousness is firmly placed and fruitful,
there is descent of name-and-shape.

Where there is descent of name-and-shape,
there is growth of activities.

Where there is growth of activities
there in the future is renewed becoming and rebirth.

Where in the future is renewed becoming and rebirth,
there in the future is decay-and-death.

Where there is in the future decay-and-death,
I declare, brethren,
that with it is grief,
affliction,
despair.

If there be not passion, brethren,
nor delight,
nor craving
as to solid food,
there consciousness is not firmly placed nor fruitful,
there in consequence name-and-shape does not descend,
there activities do not grow,
there in the future
is no renewed becoming and rebirth,
nor yet decay-and-death
with grief, affiiction,
despair.

If there be not passion, brethren,
nor delight,
nor craving
as to contact,
there consciousness is not firmly placed nor fruitful,
there in consequence name-and-shape does not descend,
there activities do not grow,
there in the future
is no renewed becoming and rebirth,
nor yet decay-and-death

with grief, affiiction,
despair.

If there be not passion, brethren,
nor delight,
nor craving
as to willing of mind,
there consciousness is not firmly placed nor fruitful,
there in consequence name-and-shape does not descend,
there activities do not grow,
there in the future
is no renewed becoming and rebirth,
nor yet decay-and-death
with grief, affiiction,
despair.

If there be not passion, brethren,
nor delight,
nor craving
as to consciousness,
there consciousness is not firmly placed nor fruitful,
there in consequence name-and-shape does not descend,
there activities do not grow,
there in the future
is no renewed becoming and rebirth,
nor yet decay-and-death
with grief, affiiction,
despair.

Just as if, brethren,
there were a roofed house
or hall
having windows on the north,
or the south
or the east.

When at sunrise a sunbeam enters by the window,
where does it alight?"

"On the west wall, lord."

[72] "If there be no west wall, brethren,
where does it alight?"

"On the ground, lord."

If there be no ground, brethren,
where does it alight?"

"On water, lord."

"If there be no water, brethren,
where does it alight?"

"It alights nowhere, lord."

"Even so, brethren,
if there be not passion,
nor delight,
nor craving as solid food,
there consciousness is not stationed nor fruitful,
there in consequence name-and-shape does not descend,
there activities do not grow,
there in the future
is no renewed becoming and rebirth,
nor yet decay-and-death
with grief, affliction,
despair.

Even so, brethren,
if there be not passion,
nor delight,
nor craving as contact,

there consciousness is not stationed nor fruitful,
there in consequence name-and-shape does not descend,
there activities do not grow,
there in the future
is no renewed becoming and rebirth,
nor yet decay-and-death
with grief, affliction,
despair.

Even so, brethren,
if there be not passion,
nor delight,
nor craving as willing of mind,
there consciousness is not stationed nor fruitful,
there in consequence name-and-shape does not descend,
there activities do not grow,
there in the future
is no renewed becoming and rebirth,
nor yet decay-and-death
with grief, affliction,
despair.

Even so, brethren,
if there be not passion,
nor delight,
nor craving as consciousness,
there consciousness is not stationed nor fruitful,
there in consequence name-and-shape does not descend,
there activities do not grow,
there in the future
is no renewed becoming and rebirth,
nor yet decay-and-death
with grief, affliction,
despair."

[1]First sentence repeated in full. [ed.: added back]

[2]Cf. § 38.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
7. Mahā Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

7. The Great Chapter

Sutta 65

Nagara Suttaṃ

The City

---

[72]

While at Sāvatthī the Exalted One said: —

"Before I was enlightened, brethren,
it came to me,
a Bodhisat yet unenlightened,
thus: —

'Alas! this world has fallen upon trouble!

There is getting born
and growing old and dying
and falling and arising,
but there is not the knowing
of an escape from suffering,
from decay-and-death.

O when shall an escape be revealed from suffering,
from decay-and-death?'

§

Then, brethren, this came to me: —

'What now being,
does decay-and-death come to be?

What conditions decay and-death?'

To me, brethren, thinking according to law
came grasp of insight: —

'Where there is birth,
decay-and-death comes to be;
decay-and-death is conditioned by birth.'

■

To me, brethren, came this: —

'What now being,
does birth come to be?

What conditions birth?'

To me, brethren, thinking according to law
came grasp of insight: —

'Where there is becoming,
there is birth;
birth is conditioned by becoming.'

■

To me, brethren, came this: —

'What now being,
does becoming come to be?

What conditions becoming?'

To me, brethren, thinking according to law
came grasp of insight: —

'Where there is grasping,
there is becoming;
becoming is conditioned by grasping.'

■

To me, brethren, came this: —

'What now being,
does grasping come to be?[1]

What conditions grasping?'

To me, brethren, thinking according to law
came grasp of insight: —

'Where there is craving,
there is grasping;
grasping is conditioned by craving.'

■

To me, brethren, came this: —

'What now being,
does craving come to be?

What conditions craving?'

To me, brethren, thinking according to law
came grasp of insight: —

'Where there is feeling,
there is craving;
craving is conditioned by feeling.'

■

To me, brethren, came this: —

'What now being,
does feeling come to be?

What conditions feeling?'

To me, brethren, thinking according to law
came grasp of insight: —

'Where there is contact,
there is feeling;
feeling is conditioned by contact.'

■

To me, brethren, came this: —

'What now being,
does contact come to be?

What conditions contact?'

To me, brethren, thinking according to law
came grasp of insight: —

'Where there is sense,
there is contact;
contact is conditioned by sense.'

■

To me, brethren, came this: —

'What now being,
does sense come to be?

What conditions sense?'

To me, brethren, thinking according to law
came grasp of insight: —

'Where there is name-and-shape,
there is sense;
sense is conditioned by name-and-shape.'

■

To me, brethren, came this: —

'What now being,
does name-and-shape come to be?

What conditions name-and-shape?'

To me, brethren, thinking according to law
came grasp of insight: —

'Where there is consciousness,
there is name-and-shape;
name-and-shape is conditioned by consciousness.'

■

To me, brethren, came this: —

'What now being,
does consciousness come to be?
what conditions consciousness?'

To me, brethren, thinking ac- [73] cording to law
came grasp of insight: —

'Where there is name-and-shape,
there is consciousness;
consciousness is conditioned by name-and-shape.'

■

To me, brethren, came this: —

'This consciousness turns back,
it goes no further than name-and-shape.

Thus far are ye born,
or grow old,
or die,
or fall,
or arise.

Consciousness, namely,
comes to pass conditioned by name-and-shape,
name-and-shape conditioned by consciousness,
sense conditioned by name-and-shape,
contact conditioned by sense,

feeling is conditioned by contact,
craving is conditioned by feeling,
grasping is conditioned by craving,
becoming is conditioned by grasping,
birth is conditioned by becoming,
decay-and-death is conditioned by birth,
with grief,
lamenting,
sufiering,
sorrow,
despair —
even such is the coming to be
of this entire mass of ill.'

'Coming to be, coming to be!'
at the thought, brethren,
there arose in me
concerning things not taught before
vision,
knowledge arose,
insight arose,
wisdom arose,
light arose.

■

To me, brethren, came this: —

'What now not being,
does decay-and-death not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
ceases decay-and-death?'

To me, brethren, thinking according to law
came grasp of insight: —

'Where there is not birth, decay-and-death is not;
from the ceasing of birth
ceases decay-and-death.'

■

To me, brethren, came this: —

'What now not being,
does birth not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
ceases birth?'

To me, brethren, thinking according to law
came grasp of insight: —

'Where there is not becoming,
birth is not;
from the ceasing of becoming ceases birth.'

■

To me, brethren, came this: —

'What now not being,
does becoming not come to be?

From the ceasing of what ceases becoming?'

To me, brethren, thinking according to law
came grasp of insight: —

'Where there is not grasping,
becoming is not;

from the ceasing of grasping
ceases becoming.'

■

To me, brethren, came this: —

'What now not being,
does grasping not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
ceases grasping?'

To me, brethren, thinking according to law
came grasp of insight: —

'Where there is not feeling, grasping is not;
from the ceasing of feeling
ceases grasping.'

■

To me, brethren, came this: —

'What now not being,
does feeling not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
ceases feeling?'

To me, brethren, thinking according to law
came grasp of insight: —

'Where there is not contact,
feeling is not;
from the ceasing of contact
ceases feeling.'

■

To me, brethren, came this: —

'What now not being,
does contact not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
ceases contact?'

To me, brethren, thinking according to law
came grasp of insight: —

'Where there is not sense, contact is not;
from the ceasing of sense
ceases contact.'

■

To me, brethren, came this: —

'What now not being,
does sense not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
ceases sense?'

To me, brethren, thinking according to law
came grasp of insight: —

'Where there is not name-and-shape,
sense is not;
from the ceasing of name-and-shape
ceases sense.'

■

To me, brethren, came this: —

'What now not being,
does name-and-shape not come to be?

From the ceasing of what
ceases name-and-shape?'

To me, brethren, thinking according to law
came grasp of insight: —

'Where there is not consciousness,
name-and-shape is not;
from the ceasing of consciousness
ceases name-and-shape.'

To me, brethren, came this: —

'Won have I
to the path of enlightenment,
to this:
that from the ceasing of name-and-shape
consciousness ceases;
from the ceasing of consciousness,
name-and-shape ceases;
from the ceasing of name-and-shape
sense ceases;
from the ceasing of sense
contact ceases
from the ceasing of contact
feeling ceases
from the ceasing of feeling
craving ceases
from the ceasing of craving
grasping ceases,
from the ceasing of grasping
becoming ceases,

from the ceasing of becoming
birth ceases,
from the ceasing of birth
decay-and-death,
with grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair
cease.

Even such is the ceasing
of this entire mass of ill.'

§

'Ceasing, ceasing!'

At that thought, brethren,
concerning [74] things not taught before
there arose in me vision,
knowledge arose,
insight arose,
wisdom arose,
light arose.

Just as if, brethren,
a man faring through the forest
through the great wood
should see an ancient path,
an ancient road traversed by men of former days.

And he were to go along it,
and going along it he should see an ancient city,
an ancient prince's domain,
wherein dwelt men of former days,
having gardens,
groves,
pools,
foundations of walls,
a goodly spot.

And that man, brethren,
should bring word to the prince
or to the prince's minister: —

'Pardon, lord, know this.

I have seen as I fared through the forest,
through the great wood,
an ancient path,
an ancient road traversed by men of former days.

I have been along it,
and going along it
I have seen an ancient city,
an ancient prince's domain,
wherein dwelt men of former days,
having gardens,
groves,
pools,
foundations of walls,
a goodly spot.

Lord, restore that city.'

And, brethren,
the prince or his minister should restore that city.

That city should thereafter
become prosperous and flourishing,
populous,
teeming with folk,
grown and thriven.[2]

Even so have I, brethren,
seen an ancient path,
an ancient road traversed
by the rightly enlightened ones
of former times.

And what, brethren,
is that ancient path,
that ancient road
traversed by the rightly enlightened ones
of former times?

Just this Ariyan eightfold path, to wit,
right views,
right aims,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right effort,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

This, brethren, is that ancient path,
that ancient road,
traversed by the rightly enlightened ones
of former times.

Along that have I gone,
[75] and going along it
I have fully come to know decay-and-death,

I have fully come to know the uprising of decay-and-death,
I have fully come to know the ceasing of decay-and-death,
I have fully come to know the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death.

Along that have I gone,
and going along it
I have fully come to know birth, yea, and becoming,
and grasping,
and craving,
and feeling,
and contact,
and sense,
and name-and-shape,
and consciousness.

Along that have I gone,
and going along it
I have fully come to know activities,
I have fully come to know the uprising of activities,
I have fully come to know the ceasing of activities,
I have fully come to know the way going to the ceasing of activities.

This that I have fully come to know
I have declared to the brethren,
to the sisters,
to laymen,
to laywomen,
even this divine life, brethren,
that is prosperous and flourishing,
widespread,
and to be known by many,
and multiplied so far as it is well made manifest
by devas and men."[3]

---

[1] Each item in the text is dealt vith in full. See above §10. [Ed.: restored here]

[2] So is Nālandi described, Dialogues, i, 277. In this beautiful Sutta that has the stamp of an ipse dixit, stress, for a special purpose, is laid in my Buddhism. p. 33, on the Teacher not being unique, but in a series. As a whole the Sutta lays stress on the antiquity of the moral instinct, the 'ought,' the Path-law in human nature shown by teachers.

Here as in the Mahā-Nidāna Suttanta (Dialogues, ii, 51 f.) 'ignorance' and 'activities' are dropped. Why? asks the Comy. 'These belong to a third life.' ... This teaching is concerned with the present. These belong to the causes active in past lives. It is curious that no reference is made to the above-named Sutta, let alone to No. 10 above.

[3] The Comy. reads not yāvad-eva but yāva deva-. Its paraphrase is 'to be known by many (bahujana viññeyyaṇ) so far as there is the division as to devas and men (deva manussehi paricchedo atthi) in the ten-thousandfold-universe (cakkavāḷe) ... well manifested by the Tathāgata' I do not hink for a moment that the Sutta would have omitted Tathāgatena, had this been meant. The Suttas never do so. The success of the divine life is precisely in proportion as devas and men lead it and so manifest it.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
7. Mahā Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

7. The Great Chapter

Sutta 66

Sammasana Suttaṃ

Handling

---

[107] [75]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying among the Kurus,
at Kammasadamma,
a township of the Kurus.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Lord!"[1] responded those brethren.

The Exalted One spake thus:

"Do ye handle, brethren, with an inward handling?"

[2] [76] When he had said this,
a certain brother spake thus to the Exalted One:

"I, Lord, handled with an inward handling."

"Now how, brother, do you handle
with an inward handling?"

Then that brother answered, but thereby did not win over the heart of the Exalted One.

When he had thus said,
the venerable Ānanda spake thus:

"Now is the time, Exalted One,
now is the time, Blessed One,
for the Exalted One to speak of the inward handling,
when they have heard the Exalted One,
the brethren will bear it in mind."

"Well then, Ānanda,
do ye listen,
give your mind thoroughly
and I will speak."

"Even so, lord,"
responded those brethren to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One spake thus:

"In this religion, brethren,
a brother handling
handles the inward handling:

'This various, manifold suffering
that arises in the world
which is decay-and-death: -
this suffering
what is its basis,
what is its uprising,
what is its source,
what is its cause?

What being does decay-and-death come to be?

What not being does decay-and-death not come to be?'

He handling knows thus:

'This various, manifold suffering
that arises in the world
which is decay-and-death: -
this suffering has substance[3] as its basis,
has substance as its uprising,
has substance as its source,
has substance as its cause.

Where there is substance,
there decay-and-death comes to be.

Where substance is not,
decay-and-death comes not to be.

And he knows decay-and-death,
its uprising
and its ceasing,

and he knows the way that is meet
for going to the ceasing of decay-and-death.'

Thus practising he becomes one who walks according to the doctrine.

Him, brethren, we call a brother who practises [77] rightly
for the entire destruction of suffering,
for the ceasing of decay-and-death.

■

Next, handling
he handles the inward handling:

'This substance
what is its basis,
what is its uprising,
what is its source,
what is its cause?

What being does substance come to be?

What not being does it not come to be?'

He rightly handling knows thus:

'Substance has craving as its basis,
has craving as its uprising,
has craving as its source,
has craving as its cause.

Where there is craving,
there substance comes to be.

Where craving is not,
substance comes not to be.'

And he knows substance,
its uprising,
and its ceasing,
and he knows the way that is meet
for going to the ceasing of substance.

Thus practising
he becomes one who walks according to the doctrine.

Him, brethren, we call a brother who practises rightly
for the entire right extinction of suffering,
for the ceasing of substance.

■

Next, handling
he handles the inward handling:

'This craving
what is its basis,
what is its uprising,
what is its source,
what is its cause?

This craving
where when it arises
does it arise?

Where when it settles
does it settle?'

He in handling comes to know this: -

'Whatever in the world seems lovely and pleasant, here when it arises
doth craving arise,

here when it settles
doth craving settle.

And what in the world
seems lovely and pleasant?

Sight in the world
seems lovely and pleasant,
here where it arises
doth craving arise,
here when it settles
doth craving settle.

Hearing in the world
seems lovely and pleasant,
here where it arises
doth craving arise,
here when it settles
doth craving settle.

Smell in the world
seems lovely and pleasant,
here where it arises
doth craving arise,
here when it settles
doth craving settle.

Taste in the world
seems lovely and pleasant,
here where it arises
doth craving arise,
here when it settles
doth craving settle.

Touch in the world
seems lovely and pleasant,
here where it arises

doth craving arise,
here when it settles
doth craving settle.

Mind in the world
seems lovely and pleasant,
here where it arises
doth craving arise,
here when it settles
doth craving settle.'

§

Whosoever in past times, brethren,
whether recluses or brahmins,
saw whatever in the world seemed lovely and pleasant
as permanent,
saw it as happy,
saw it as good,
saw it as health,
saw it as safety,
they made craving to grow.

They in making craving to grow
made substance to grow;
in making substance to grow
they made suffering to grow;
in making suffering to grow
they were not liberated from birth,
from old age,
from death,
from griefs,
from lamentings,

from sufferings,
from sorrows,
from despairs -
yea, I declare,
they were not liberated from ill.

■

Whosoever in future times, brethren,
whether recluses or brahmins,
will see whatever in the world seems lovely and pleasing
as permanent,
will see it as happy,
as good,
as health,
as safety,
they will make craving to grow.

They in making [78] craving to grow
will make substance to grow;
they in making substance to grow
will make suffering to grow;
in making suffering to grow
they will not be liberated from birth,
from old age,
from death,
from griefs,
from lamentings,
from sufferings,
from sorrows,
from despairs -
yea, I declare,
they will not be liberated from ill.

■

Verily even so is it when whosoever now, brethren,
whether recluses or brahmins,
sees whatever in the world seems lovely and pleasing
as permanent,
sees it as happy,
as good,
as health,
as safety,
they will make craving to grow.

They in making craving to grow
make substance to grow;
they in making substance to grow
make suffering to grow;
in making suffering to grow
they are not liberated from birth,
from old age,
from death,
from griefs,
from lamentings,
from sufferings,
from sorrows,
from despairs -
yea, I declare,
they are not liberated from ill.

■

It is as if, brethren, there were a drinking-bowl,[4]
beautiful and fragrant,
and holding liquid
with poison mixed therein.

And a man foredone with heat,
far gone with heat,
weary,

trembling,
thirsty
should come by,
and they should say to him:

'Here, good fellow,
is a drinking bowl,
beautiful and fragrant,
but it has poison in it.

If you wish, drink;
surely if you drink
you will relish the beauty
and the fragrance
and the taste,
but when you have drunk,
you will thereby incur death
or mortal pain.'

Then
if heedless and unreflecting
he drink,
not denying himself,
he will thereby incur death
or mortal pain.

■

Even so, brethren, whosoever in future times,
whether recluses or brahmins,
will see whatever in the world seems lovely and pleasing
as permanent,
will see it as happy,
as good,
as health,

as safety,
they will make craving to grow.

They in making craving to grow
will make substance to grow;
they in making substance to grow
will make suffering to grow;
in making suffering to grow
they will not be liberated from birth,
from old age,
from death,
from griefs,
from lamentings,
from sufferings,
from sorrows,
from despairs -
yea, I declare,
they will not be liberated from ill.

■

Verily even so is it when whosoever now, brethren,
whether recluses or brahmins,
sees whatever in the world seems lovely and pleasing
as permanent,
sees it as happy,
as good,
as health,
as safety,
they will make craving to grow.

They in making craving to grow
make substance to grow;
they in making substance to grow
make suffering to grow;
in making suffering to grow

they are not liberated from birth,
from old age,
from death,
from griefs,
from lamentings,
from sufferings,
from sorrows,
from despairs -
yea, I declare,
they are not liberated from ill.

§

Whosoever in past times, brethren,
whether recluses or brahmins,
saw whatever in the world seemed lovely and pleasant
as impermanent,
as suffering,
as not good,
as disease,
as danger,
they put off craving.

They who put off craving
put off substance;
they who put off substance
put off suffering;
in putting off suffering
they were liberated from birth,
from old age,
from death,
from griefs,

from lamentings,
from sufferings,
from sorrows,
from despairs -
yea, I declare,
they were liberated from ill.

■

Whosoever in future times, brethren,
whether recluses or brahmins,
will see whatever in the world seems lovely and pleasant
as impermanent,
as suffering,
as not good,
as disease,
as danger,
they will put off craving.

They who will put off craving
will put off substance;
they who will put off substance
will put off suffering;
in putting off suffering
they will be liberated from birth,
from old age,
from death,
from griefs,
from lamentings,
from sufferings,
from sorrows,
from despairs -
yea, I declare,
they will be liberated from ill.

■

Verily even so is it when whosoever now, brethren,
whether recluses or brahmins,
see whatever in the world seems lovely and pleasant
as impermanent,
as suffering,
as not good,
as disease,
as danger,
they put off craving.

They who put off craving
put off substance;
they who put off substance
put off suffering;
in putting off suffering
they are liberated from birth,
from old age,
from death,
from griefs,
from lamentings,
from sufferings,
from sorrows,
from despairs -
yea, I declare,
they are liberated from ill.

■

It is just as if, brethren,
there were a drinking-bowl,
beautiful,
fragrant,
holding liquid with poison mixed therein.

And a man foredone with heat,
far gone with heat,

weary,
trembling,
thirsty,
should come by,
and they should say to him:

'Here, good fellow,
is a drinking-bowl,
beautiful,
[79] fragrant,
holding liquid,
but it has poison in it.

If you wish, drink;
surely if you drink
you will relish the beauty
and the fragrance
and the taste,
but when you have drunk,
you will thereby incur death
or mortal pain.'

And, brethren, that man should think:

'Here am I
able to allay this strong thirst
by liquor,
by a drink of curds,
or by whey
or by gruel.

But I should not drink
that which would be hurtful
and baneful to me for many a day.'

He thus reflecting
should not drink the draught,

denying himself.

He thereby should incur
neither death
nor mortal pain.

Even so, brethren, whosoever in former times,
whether recluses or brahmins,
saw whatever in the world seemed lovely and pleasant
as impermanent,
as suffering,
as not good,
as disease,
as danger,
they put off craving.

They who put off craving
put off substance;
they who put off substance
put off suffering;
in putting off suffering
they were liberated from birth,
from old age,
from death,
from griefs,
from lamentings,
from sufferings,
from sorrows,
from despairs -
yea, I declare,
they were liberated from ill.

■

Whosoever in future times, brethren,
whether recluses or brahmins,

will see whatever in the world seems lovely and pleasant
as impermanent,
as suffering,
as not good,
as disease,
as danger,
they will put off craving.

They who will put off craving
will put off substance;
they who will put off substance
will put off suffering;
in putting off suffering
they will be liberated from birth,
from old age,
from death,
from griefs,
from lamentings,
from sufferings,
from sorrows,
from despairs -
yea, I declare,
they will be liberated from ill.

■

Verily even so is it when whosoever now, brethren,
whether recluses or brahmins,
see whatever in the world seems lovely and pleasant
as impermanent,
as suffering,
as not good,
[5] as disease,
as danger,
they put off craving.

They who put off craving
put off substance;
they who put off substance
put off suffering;
in putting off suffering
they are liberated from birth,
from old age,
from death,
from griefs,
from lamentings,
from sufferings,
from sorrows,
from despairs -
yea, I declare,
they are liberated from ill.

---

[1] Bhadante. See p. 1., n.*

[2] Antaraṃ sammasaṃ. In Burmese MSS. abbhantaraṃ, very inward. The Comy. calls this a paccayasammasanaṃ, a handling by way of causal relations, and considers it a compliment to the intellectual calibre of the Kurus of that district that the Master taught there such Suttas as the Satipatthana Suttas (Dīgha and Majjhima collections), the Maha-Nidana, and these Suttas. The brother whose 'handling' proved unsatisfactory is said to have discoursed on the body (the 32 constituents): the Teacher's 'handled subject' was that of causal law.

[3] Upadhi. Or substrate; lit. basis, or support. 'Upadhi is here the five khandhas' (bodily and mental constituents). Comy.

[4] Told also Majjhima i, 316, to illustrate the desirability of conduct that involves both present and future happiness and not conduct that involves present happiness and future pain.

[5] Atthato attato.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
7. Mahā Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

7. The Great Chapter

Sutta 67

Nala-Kalapiyaṃ Suttaṃ

The Sheaf of Reeds

---

[112] [79]

Thus have I heard:

The venerable Sāriputta and the venerable Mahā-Koṭṭhita were once staying at Benares, in Isipatana,
in Antelope Wood.

Now the venerable Maha-Koṭṭhita arose at eventide from meditation
and came into the presence of the venerable Sāriputta.

Exchanging friendly greetings with him
and the compliments of courtesy,
he sat down at one side.[1]

So seated
he said to the venerable Sāriputta: -

"What now, friend Sāriputta,
old age-and-death,
is it wrought in one and the same person,
in a different person,
in one who is both same and different,
or in one who is neither the same nor a different person[2] -
is it [a state] that arises by chance?"

[80] "Not any one of these, friend Koṭṭhita,
is [the case with] old age-and-death;
but old age-and-death is conditioned by birth."

"What now, friend Sāriputta,
is birth wrought in one and the same person,
in a different person,
in one who is both same and different,
or in one who is neither the same nor a different person -
is it a state that arises by chance?"

"Not any one of these, friend Koṭṭhita,
is birth,
but birth is conditioned by becoming."

"What now, friend Sāriputta,
is becoming wrought in one and the same person,
in a different person,

in one who is both same and different,
or in one who is neither the same nor a different person -
is it a state that arises by chance?"

"Not any one of these, friend Koṭṭhita,
is becoming,
but becoming is conditioned by grasping."

"What now, friend Sāriputta,
is grasping wrought in one and the same person,
in a different person,
in one who is both same and different,
or in one who is neither the same nor a different person -
is it a state that arises by chance?"

"Not any one of these, friend Koṭṭhita,
is grasping,
but grasping is conditioned by craving."

"What now, friend Sāriputta,
is craving wrought in one and the same person,
in a different person,
in one who is both same and different,
or in one who is neither the same nor a different person -
is it a state that arises by chance?"

"Not any one of these, friend Koṭṭhita,
is craving,
but craving is conditioned by feeling."

"What now, friend Sāriputta,
is feeling wrought in one and the same person,
in a different person,
in one who is both same and different,
or in one who is neither the same nor a different person -
is it a state that arises by chance?"

"Not any one of these, friend Koṭṭhita,
is feeling,
but feeling is conditioned by contact."

"What now, friend Sāriputta,
is contact wrought in one and the same person,
in a different person,
in one who is both same and different,
or in one who is neither the same nor a different person -
is it a state that arises by chance?"

"Not any one of these, friend Koṭṭhita,
is contact,
but contact is conditioned by sense."

"What now, friend Sāriputta,
is name-and-shape wrought in one and the same person,
in a different person,
in one who is both same and different,
or in one who is neither the same nor a different person -
is it a state that arises by chance?"

"Not any one of these, friend Koṭṭhita,
is name-and-shape,
but sense is conditioned by name-and-shape."

"What now, friend Sāriputta,
is name-and-shape wrought in one and the same person,
in a different person,
in one who is both same and different,
or in one who is neither the same nor a different person -
is it a state that arises by chance?"

"Not any one of these, friend Koṭṭhita,
is name-and-shape,
but name-and-shape is conditioned by consciousness."

"What now, friend Sāriputta,
is consciousness wrought in one and the same person,
in a different person,
in one who is both same and different,
or in one who is neither the same nor a different person -
is it [a state] that has arisen by chance?"

"Not any one of these, friend Koṭṭhita,
is consciousness,
but consciousness is conditioned by name-and-shape."

"Lo! now we understand the venerable Sāriputta's words thus: -

Neither name-and-shape,
nor consciousness
is any one of these four:
wrought in one and the same person,
wrought in a different person,
wrought by one who is both,
wrought by one who is neither the same nor a different person -
but arisen by chance;
moreover name-and-shape
is conditioned by consciousness,
consciousness is conditioned by name-and-shape.

How, friend Sāriputta, is the meaning of what you have said to be regarded?"

"Well, friend, I will make you a simile, for through a simile
some intelligent men
admit the meaning of what has been said.

It is just as if, friend,
there stood two sheaves of reeds
leaning one against the other.

Even so, friend, name-and-shape
comes to pass conditioned [81] by consciousness, consciousness conditioned by name-and-shape,
sense conditioned by name-and-shape,
contact is conditioned by sense,
feeling is conditioned by contact,
craving is conditioned by feeling,
grasping is conditioned by craving,
becoming is conditioned by grasping,
birth is conditioned by becoming.

Even such is the uprising
of this entire mass of ill.

If, friend, I were to pull towards me one of those sheaves of reeds,
the other would fall;
if I were to pull towards me the other,
the former would fall.

Even so, friend, from the ceasing of name-and-shape,
consciousness ceases;
from the ceasing of consciousness,
name-and-shape ceases;
from the ceasing of name-and-shape
sense ceases,
from the ceasing of sense,
contact ceases,
from the ceasing of contact,
craving ceases,
from the ceasing of craving,
feeling ceases,
from the ceasing of feeling,
grasping ceases,
from the ceasing of grasping,
becoming ceases,
from the ceasing of becoming,

birth ceases,
even such is the ceasing,
of this entire mass of ill."

"Wonderful, friend Sāriputta!

Marvellous, friend Sāriputta!

How well is this uttered by the venerable Sāriputta,
and for this that has been uttered by him
with these thirty-six bases we thank him."

§

"If, friend,[3] a brother, teaches a doctrine
of revulsion from decay-and-death,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'Norm-teaching Brother'.

If a brother teaches a doctrine[ed1]
of revulsion from birth,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'Norm-teaching Brother'.

If a brother teaches a doctrine
of revulsion from becoming,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,

this is enough for him to be called
'Norm-teaching Brother'.

If a brother teaches a doctrine
of revulsion from grasping,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'Norm-teaching Brother'.

If a brother teaches a doctrine
of revulsion from craving,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'Norm-teaching Brother'.

If a brother teaches a doctrine
of revulsion from feeling,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'Norm-teaching Brother'.

If a brother teaches a doctrine
of revulsion from contact,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'Norm-teaching Brother'.

If a brother teaches a doctrine
of revulsion from sense,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,

this is enough for him to be called
'Norm-teaching Brother'.

If a brother teaches a doctrine
of revulsion from name-and-shape,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'Norm-teaching Brother'.

If a brother teaches a doctrine
of revulsion from consciousness,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'Norm-teaching Brother'.

If a brother teaches a doctrine
of revulsion from activities,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'Norm-teaching Brother'.

If a brother teaches a doctrine
of revulsion from ignorance,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'Norm-teaching Brother'.

■

If, friend, a brother have practised himself
in this revulsion of decay-and-death,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,

this is enough for him to be called
'one versed in that which is in conformity with the Norm.'

If a brother have practised himself

in this revulsion from birth,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one versed in that which is in conformity with the Norm.'

If a brother have practised himself

in this revulsion from becoming,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one versed in that which is in conformity with the Norm.'

If a brother have practised himself

in this revulsion from grasping,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one versed in that which is in conformity with the Norm.'

If a brother have practised himself

in this revulsion from craving,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one versed in that which is in conformity with the Norm.'

If a brother have practised himself

in this revulsion from feeling,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one versed in that which is in conformity with the Norm.'

If a brother have practised himself

in this revulsion from contact,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one versed in that which is in conformity with the Norm.'

If a brother have practised himself

in this revulsion from sense,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one versed in that which is in conformity with the Norm.'

If a brother have practised himself

in this revulsion from name-and-shape,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one versed in that which is in conformity with the Norm.'

If a brother have practised himself

in this revulsion from consciousness,
of its fading away,

of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one versed in that which is in conformity with the Norm.'

If a brother have practised himself

in this revulsion from activities,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one versed in that which is in conformity with the Norm.'

If a brother have practised himself

in this revulsion from ignorance,
of its fading away,
of the ceasing thereof,
this is enough for him to be called
'one versed in that which is in conformity with the Norm.'

■

If, friend, a brother because of revulsion of decay-and-death,
because of its fading away,
and ceasing,
be freed from any form of grasping,
this is enough for him to be called
'one who hath won Nibbāna in this life.'

If a brother from revulsion from birth,
because of its fading away,
and ceasing,
be freed from any form of grasping,
this is enough for him to be called
'one who hath won Nibbāna in this life.'

If a brother from revulsion from becoming,
because of its fading away,
and ceasing,
be freed from any form of grasping,
this is enough for him to be called
'one who hath won Nibbāna in this life.'

If a brother from revulsion from grasping,
because of its fading away,
and ceasing,
be freed from any form of grasping,
this is enough for him to be called
'one who hath won Nibbāna in this life.'

If a brother from revulsion from craving,
because of its fading away,
and ceasing,
be freed from any form of grasping,
this is enough for him to be called
'one who hath won Nibbāna in this life.'

If a brother from revulsion from feeling,
because of its fading away,
and ceasing,
be freed from any form of grasping,
this is enough for him to be called
'one who hath won Nibbāna in this life.'

If a brother from revulsion from contact,
because of its fading away,
and ceasing,
be freed from any form of grasping,
this is enough for him to be called
'one who hath won Nibbāna in this life.'

If a brother from revulsion from sense,
because of its fading away,
and ceasing,
be freed from any form of grasping,
this is enough for him to be called
'one who hath won Nibbāna in this life.'

If a brother from revulsion from name-and-shape,
because of its fading away,
and ceasing,
be freed from any form of grasping,
this is enough for him to be called
'one who hath won Nibbāna in this life.'

If a brother from revulsion from consciousness,
because of its fading away,
and ceasing,
be freed from any form of grasping,
this is enough for him to be called
'one who hath won Nibbāna in this life.'

If a brother from revulsion from activities,
because of its fading away,
and ceasing,
be freed from any form of grasping,
this is enough for him to be called
'one who hath won Nibbāna in this life.'

If a brother from revulsion from ignorance,
because of its fading away,
and ceasing,
be freed from any form of grasping,
this is enough for him to be called
'one who hath won Nibbāna in this life.'"

---

[1] The Maha-vedalla Sutta of the Majjhima (No. 43) is another dialogue between these two eminent Teachers. Both, I incline to think, were compiled rather as 'lessons' for learners than as genuine inquiries by Koṭṭhita. He would not have ranked as a leading Thera, had he needed instruction on any one of the points raised. Cf. the 'we' for 'I,' p. 80. See my Buddhist Psychology (Quest), p. 52 f.

[2] I.e. as always, re-birth. Cf. the [usual Indian] logical alternatives with those above, §§ 17, 18 etc.

[3] See p. 14.

[ed1] Mrs. Rhys Davids here omits the rest where she has abridged it in SN 2.12.16 by: "In the same way you can so call a brother after this threefold manner if he teach, if he practise, if he be in consequence set free from any form of grasping with respect to birth, becoming, grasping, craving, feeling, contact, sense, name-and-shape, consciousness, activities, ignorance." It is included but similarly abridged in the PTS Pali.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
7. Mahā Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

7. The Great Chapter

Sutta 68

Kosambī Suttaṃ

Kosambī

---

[115] [81]

Thus have I heard:

The venerable Musīla
and the venerable Saviṭṭha
and the venerable Nārada
and the venerable Ānanda
were once staying at Kosambī
in Ghosita Park.

Now the venerable Saviṭṭha said thus to the venerable Musīla:-

"Apart, friend Musīla, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Musīla
as his very own
the knowledge
that decay-and-death is conditioned by birth?"

[82] "Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
decay-and-death is conditioned by birth."

"Apart, friend Musīla, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Musīla
as his very own
the knowledge
that birth is conditioned by becoming?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
birth is conditioned by becoming."

"Apart, friend Musīla, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Musīla
as his very own
the knowledge
that becoming is conditioned by grasping?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
that becoming is conditioned by grasping."

"Apart, friend Musīla, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,

and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Musīla
as his very own
the knowledge
that grasping is conditioned by craving?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
that grasping is conditioned by craving."

"Apart, friend Musīla, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Musīla
as his very own
the knowledge
that craving is conditioned by feeling?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
that craving is conditioned by feeling."

"Apart, friend Musīla, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Musīla
as his very own
the knowledge
that feeling is conditioned by contact?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
that feeling is conditioned by contact."

"Apart, friend Musīla, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Musīla
as his very own
the knowledge
that contact is conditioned by sense?"

Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,

apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
that contact is conditioned by sense."

"Apart, friend Musīla, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Musīla
as his very own
the knowledge
that sense is conditioned by name-and-shape?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
that sense is conditioned by name-and-shape."

"Apart, friend Musīla, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Musīla
as his very own

the knowledge
that name-and-shape is conditioned by consciousness?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
that name-and-shape is conditioned by consciousness."

"Apart, friend Musīla, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Musīla
as his very own
the knowledge
that consciousness is conditioned by activities?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
that consciousness is conditioned by activities."

"Apart, friend Musīla, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,

apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Musīla
as his very own
the knowledge
that activities are conditioned by ignorance?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
that activities are conditioned by ignorance."

§

"Apart, friend Musīla, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Musīla
as his very own
the knowledge
that:-

from the ceasing of birth,
decay-and-death ceases?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
from the ceasing of birth,
decay-and-death ceases."

"Apart, friend Musīla, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Musīla
as his very own
the knowledge
that:-
from the ceasing of becoming,
birth ceases?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-

from the ceasing of becoming,
birth ceases."

"Apart, friend Musīla, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Musīla
as his very own
the knowledge
that:-
from the ceasing of grasping,
becoming ceases?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
from the ceasing of grasping,
becoming ceases."

"Apart, friend Musīla, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Musīla
as his very own
the knowledge

that:-
from the ceasing of craving,
grasping ceases?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
from the ceasing of craving,
grasping ceases?"

"Apart, friend Musīla, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Musīla
as his very own
the knowledge
that:-
from the ceasing of feeling,
craving ceases?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-

from the ceasing of feeling,
craving ceases."

"Apart, friend Musīla, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Musīla
as his very own
the knowledge
that:-
from the ceasing of contact,
feeling ceases?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
from the ceasing of contact,
feeling ceases."

"Apart, friend Musīla, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Musīla
as his very own
the knowledge

that:-
from the ceasing of sense,
contact ceases?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
from the ceasing of sense,
contact ceases."

"Apart, friend Musīla, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Musīla
as his very own
the knowledge
that:-
from the ceasing of name-and-shape,
sense ceases?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-

from the ceasing of name-and-shape,
sense ceases."

"Apart, friend Musīla, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Musīla
as his very own
the knowledge
that:-
from the ceasing of consciousness,
name-and-shape ceases?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
from the ceasing of consciousness,
name-and-shape ceases."

"Apart, friend Musīla, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Musīla
as his very own
the knowledge

that:-
from the ceasing of activities,
consciousness ceases?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
from the ceasing of activities,
consciousness ceases."

"Apart, friend Musīla, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Musīla
as his very own
the knowledge
that:-
from the ceasing of ignorance,
activities cease?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-

from the ceasing of ignorance,
activities cease."

"Apart, friend Musīla, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Musīla
as his very own
the knowledge
that:-
the ceasing of becoming is Nibbāna?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
the ceasing of becoming is Nibbāna."

"Well then, the venerable Musīla is Arahant,
for whom the intoxicants are perished."

When this was said the venerable Musīla became silent.

§

Then the venerable Nārada
spake thus to the venerable Saviṭṭha:-

"It were well, friend Saviṭṭha,
if I were given these questions.

Ask me these questions.

I will give answer to you thereon."

"Take, friend Nārada, these questions.

I ask them of the venerable Nārada.

Let the venerable Nārada give answer to these questions.

[83] Apart, friend Nārada, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Nārada
as his very own
the knowledge
that decay-and-death is conditioned by birth?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
decay-and-death is conditioned by birth."

"Apart, friend Nārada, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Nārada
as his very own
the knowledge
that birth is conditioned by becoming?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
birth is conditioned by becoming."

"Apart, friend Nārada, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Nārada
as his very own
the knowledge
that becoming is conditioned by grasping?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,

apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
that becoming is conditioned by grasping."

"Apart, friend Nārada, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Nārada
as his very own
the knowledge
that grasping is conditioned by craving?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
that grasping is conditioned by craving."

"Apart, friend Nārada, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Nārada
as his very own

the knowledge
that craving is conditioned by feeling?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
that craving is conditioned by feeling."

"Apart, friend Nārada, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Nārada
as his very own
the knowledge
that feeling is conditioned by contact?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
that feeling is conditioned by contact."

"Apart, friend Nārada, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,

apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Nārada
as his very own
the knowledge
that contact is conditioned by sense?"

Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
that contact is conditioned by sense."

"Apart, friend Nārada, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Nārada
as his very own
the knowledge
that sense is conditioned by name-and-shape?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,

I know this,
I see this:-
that sense is conditioned by name-and-shape."

"Apart, friend Nārada, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Nārada
as his very own
the knowledge
that name-and-shape is conditioned by consciousness?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
that name-and-shape is conditioned by consciousness."

"Apart, friend Nārada, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Nārada
as his very own
the knowledge
that consciousness is conditioned by activities?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
that consciousness is conditioned by activities."

"Apart, friend Nārada, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Nārada
as his very own
the knowledge
that activities are conditioned by ignorance?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
that activities are conditioned by ignorance."

§

"Apart, friend Nārada, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Nārada
as his very own
the knowledge
that:-
from the ceasing of birth,
decay-and-death ceases?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
from the ceasing of birth,
decay-and-death ceases."

"Apart, friend Nārada, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Nārada
as his very own
the knowledge
that:-
from the ceasing of becoming,
birth ceases?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
from the ceasing of becoming,
birth ceases."

"Apart, friend Nārada, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Nārada
as his very own
the knowledge
that:-
from the ceasing of grasping,
becoming ceases?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
from the ceasing of grasping,
becoming ceases."

"Apart, friend Nārada, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Nārada
as his very own
the knowledge
that:-
from the ceasing of craving,
grasping ceases?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
from the ceasing of craving,
grasping ceases?"

"Apart, friend Nārada, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Nārada
as his very own
the knowledge
that:-
from the ceasing of feeling,
craving ceases?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
from the ceasing of feeling,
craving ceases."

"Apart, friend Nārada, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Nārada
as his very own
the knowledge
that:-
from the ceasing of contact,
feeling ceases?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
from the ceasing of contact,
feeling ceases."

"Apart, friend Nārada, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Nārada
as his very own
the knowledge
that:-
from the ceasing of sense,
contact ceases?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
from the ceasing of sense,
contact ceases."

"Apart, friend Nārada, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Nārada
as his very own
the knowledge
that:-
from the ceasing of name-and-shape,
sense ceases?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
from the ceasing of name-and-shape,
sense ceases."

"Apart, friend Nārada, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Nārada
as his very own
the knowledge
that:-
from the ceasing of consciousness,
name-and-shape ceases?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
from the ceasing of consciousness,
name-and-shape ceases."

"Apart, friend Nārada, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Nārada
as his very own
the knowledge
that:-
from the ceasing of activities,
consciousness ceases?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
from the ceasing of activities,
consciousness ceases."

"Apart, friend Nārada, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Nārada
as his very own
the knowledge
that:-
from the ceasing of ignorance,
activities cease?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
from the ceasing of ignorance,
activities cease."

"Apart, friend Nārada, from your belief,
apart from your inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on,
and approval of an opinion,
has the venerable Nārada
as his very own
the knowledge
that:-
the ceasing of becoming is Nibbāna?"

"Apart from belief, friend Saviṭṭha,
apart from inclination,
apart from hearsay,
apart from argument as to method,
apart from reflection on
and approval of an opinion,
I know this,
I see this:-
the ceasing of becoming is Nibbāna."

"Well then, the venerable Nārada is Arahant,
for whom the intoxicants are perished."

"'The ceasing of becoming is Nibbāna':-

I have well seen this, friend,
by right insight as it really is,
and yet I am not Arahant
for whom the intoxicants are perished.

It is just as if, friend,
there were in the jungle-path a well,
and neither rope nor drawer of water.

And a man should come by foredone with heat,
far gone with heat,
weary,
trembling,
athirst.

He should look down into the well.

Verily in him would be the knowledge:-

Water!

- yet would he not be in a position to touch it.

Even so, friend, I have well seen by right insight
as it really is
that the ceasing of becoming is Nibbāna,
and yet I am not Arahant
for whom the intoxicants are perished."

When this was said the venerable Ānanda
spake thus to the venerable Saviṭṭha:-

"Holding the view you do, friend Saviṭṭha, what say you to the venerable Nārada?"

"Holding the view I do, friend Ānanda,
I say nothing that is not lovely and good of the venerable Nārada."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
7. Mahā Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

7. The Great Chapter

Sutta 69

Upayanti Suttaṃ

The Swelling [Tide]

---

[118] [83]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"The ocean, brethren, when it swells[1]
makes the great rivers swell,
the great rivers when they swell
make their tributaries swell, these when they swell
make the mountain lakes swell,
when mountain lakes swell,
they make the mountain tarns swell.

Even so, brethren, swelling ignorance
makes activities swell,
swelling activities make consciousness swell,
swelling consciousness makes name-and-shape swell,
swelling name-and-shape makes sense swell,
swelling sense makes contact [84] swell,
swelling contact makes feeling swell,
swelling feeling makes craving swell,
swelling craving makes grasping swell,
swelling grasping makes becoming swell,
swelling becoming makes birth swell,
swelling birth makes decay-and-death swell.

The ocean, brethren, when it ebbs
makes the great rivers ebb,
these make the tributaries ebb,
these make the mountain lakes ebb,
these make the mountain tarns ebb.

Even so, brethren, ebbing ignorance makes activities ebb,
ebbing consciousness makes name-and-shape ebb,
ebbing name-and-shape makes sense ebb,
ebbing sense makes contact ebb,

ebbing contact makes feeling ebb,
ebbing feeling makes craving ebb,
ebbing craving makes grasping ebb,
ebbing grasping makes becoming ebb,
ebbing becoming makes birth ebb,
ebbing birth makes decay-and-death ebb."

---

[1] At flood tide, says the Comy. lit. when it goes upward at water-increase-time.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
7. Mahā Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

7. The Great Chapter

Sutta 70

Susīma Suttaṃ

Susīma

"Now here, venerable ones,
is both your replying
and your non-attainment of these things?"

"There is none, friend."

"How is that?"

Where the BJT and CSCD have:

"Ettha dāni āyasmanto,
idañ ca veyyā-karaṇaṃ imesañ ca dhammānaṃ asamāpatti.|| ||

Idaṃ no āvuso kathan" ti?|| ||

Translated by Bhk. Thanissaro as:

"So just now, friends, didn't you make that declaration without having attained any of these Dhammas?"

And translated by Bhk. Bodhi as:

"Here now, venerable ones: this answer and the nonattainment of those states, how could this be, friends?"

I suggest that what is the case here is that the fragment present in the $S^{I.3}$ manuscript represents what was an abridgment where Susīmaā is to repeat the entire series of questions and answers: When asked X you responded Y. Then to be followed with: How is this to be understood, that you claim that you have attained aññā but you deny you have attained these things? This would follow the practice found in many other cases in the suttas. This form needs to be followed also in the conclusion made by Gotama below.

p.p. explains it all — p.p.

"Now here, venerable ones,
is both your replying
and your non-attainment of these things?"

"There is none, friend.

[88] We have been freed by insight,[7] friend Susīma.

I do not know fully
the matter stated concisely by the venerable ones.

It would be well if the venerable ones were to state it so that I might come to know fully the matter they have stated concisely."

"Whether you know it, friend Susīma,
or whether you do not know it,
we have been freed by insight."

Then the venerable Susīma rising from his seat
went into the presence of the Exalted One,
and saluting him sat down at one side.

So seated the venerable Susīma so far as he had conversed with those brethren told all to the Exalted One.

"First, Susīma, [comes] knowledge of the law of cause [and effect],[8] afterwards [comes] knowledge about Nibbāna."

"I do not know fully
this matter stated concisely by the Exalted One.

It would be well, lord,
if the Exalted One were to state it so that I might come to know fully the matter he has stated concisely."

"Whether you come to know it, Susīma,
or whether you do not,
first comes knowledge of the law of cause [and effect],
afterwards comes knowledge about Nibbāna.

Now what think you, Susīma?

Is the body[9] permanent or impermanent?"

"Impermanent, lord."

"But that which is impermanent, is it painful or pleasant?"

"Painful, lord."

"But that which is impermanent,
painful,
changeable by nature,
do we well to contemplate it as:

'This is mine,
I am it,
it is my spirit'?"

[89] "Not so, lord."

"And is not the same true of feeling,

of perception,

of activities,

of consciousness?"

"It is, lord."

"Wherefore, Susīma, whatsoever body,
past,
future
or present,
internal or external,
coarse or fine,
mean or lofty,

far or near -
of all body to say it is not mine,
I am not it,
it is not my spirit: -
so is this to be regarded by right insight
as it really is.

And so too are feeling,

perception,

activities,

consciousness to be regarded.

So beholding, Susīma,
the well taught Ariyan disciple feels repulsion at body,
feeling,
perception,
activities,
consciousness.

Feeling repulsion he is not attracted by them.

Unattracted he is set free.

Knowledge comes to him freed as to being freed,[10]
and he knows that birth is perished,
that the divine life is lived,
done is what was to be done;
there is nothing further of these conditions.

Old age and dying are conditioned by birth:

Susīma, seest thou this?"

"Even so, lord."

"Birth is conditioned by becoming:

Susīma, seest thou this?"

"Even so, lord."

"Becoming is conditioned by grasping:

Susīma, seest thou this?"

"Even so, lord."

"Grasping is conditioned by craving . . .

craving by feeling . . .

feeling by contact . . .

contact by sense . . .

sense by name-and-shape . . .

name-and-shape by consciousness . . .

consciousness by activities . . .

activities by ignorance:

Susīma, seest thou this?"

"Even so, lord."

"When birth ceases, old age-and-death ceases:

Susīma, seest thou this?"

"Even so, lord."

"When becoming ceases, birth ceases:

Susīma, seest thou this?"

"Even so, lord."

[90] "When grasping ceases becoming ceases;
when craving ceases, grasping ceases;
when feeling ceases, craving ceases;
when contact ceases, feeling ceases;
when sense ceases, contact ceases;
when name-and-shape ceases, sense ceases;
when consciousness ceases, name-and-shape ceases;
when activities cease, consciousness ceases;
when ignorance ceases, activities cease:

Susīma, seest thou this?"

"Even so, lord."

"Then surely, thou, Susīma, thus knowing, thus seeing, dost enjoy divers mystic powers:

being one thou canst become many;
being many thou canst become one;
thou goest here visible
there invisible
without let or hindrance
through wall,
through rampart,
through hill
as if through air;
thou divest into earth
and up again
as if in water;
thou walkest on water
without cleaving it as if on earth;
thou travellest seated cross-legged through air
as if thou wert a bird on the wing;

thou canst handle and stroke with the hand
this moon and sun,
mighty and powerful though they be,
yea, even to Brahmaworld canst thou dispose of thyself
in the body?"

"Not so, lord."

"Then surely, Susīma, thus knowing thus seeing,
thou canst hear,
with pure deva-hearing passing that of men,
sounds divine and human,
be they remote or near?"

"Not so, lord."

"Then surely, Susīma, thus knowing thus seeing,
thou canst understand with thy mind
the mind of other beings,
other persons,
so that thou knowest the character of their thought?"

"Not so, lord."

"Then surely, Susīma, thus knowing thus seeing,
thou canst remember divers former lives,
even one birth or many,
in circumstance and detail?"

"Not so, lord."

"Then surely, Susīma, thus knowing thus seeing,
with pure deva-vision passing that of men thou canst behold beings as they go according to their deeds, deceasing,
re-arising?" [91]

"Not so, lord."

"Then surely, Susīma, thus knowing thus seeing,
thou attaining by volition
canst dwell in those stages of deliverance
where the Rūpa-world is transcended and the Immaterial [world is reached]?"

"Not so, lord."

"Here then, Susīma:

This catechism and the non-attainment of these things:[11] —
this is what we have done."

Then the venerable Susīma falling prone at the feet of the Exalted One
spake thus:

"Transgression, lord, hath caused me,
so foolish,
so stupid,
so wrong am I,
to transgress.

I have gained admission
as a thief of the Norm
into this Norm and Discipline
so well set forth.

May the Exalted One, lord, accept this my confession
for my restraining myself in future."[12]

"Verily, Susīma, transgression hath caused thee,
so foolish,
so stupid,

so wrong art thou,
to transgress,
who didst gain admission
as a thief of the Norm
into this Norm and Discipline
so well set forth.

It is as if, Susīma,
they had caught a robber,
an evildoer,
and showed him to the prince saying:

'Sire, this is a robber, an evildoer.

Inflict on him what penalty you wish.'

And the prince were to say:

'Go, men, bind this man's arms behind him with a strong rope,
shave him bald,
lead him around in a tumbril
with a tam-tam
from street to street,
from crossroads to crossroads,
and take him out by the south gate
and at the south of the city
cut off his head.'

And the princes' men were to do even as they were told.

What think you, Susīma?

Would not that man in consequence experience woe and sorrow?"

"Even so, lord."

"Whether he experienced woe and sorrow or not,
would not the gaining admission
as a thief of doctrine into a Norm and [92] Discipline so well set forth have still more woeful
and still bitterer results,
yea, conduce to downfall hereafter?

But inasmuch as thou, Susīma, hast seen thy transgression as transgression and hast made confession as is right,
we do accept this from thee.

For this, Susīma, it is to grow in the Ariyan discipline, when having seen our transgression as transgression
we make confession as is right
and in future practise self-restraint."

---

[1] On this term see Buddhist India, pp. 141-49.

[2] The Comy. represents the Master here as planning hereby to bring Susīma to confess his unworthy motive of doctrine-theft. 'Ordain' is lit. 'cause S. to go forth' (from the world). A Wanderer was not, as such, a religieux. On Ānanda's offices, see Pss. Brethren, p. 352.

[3] Aññā, lit. 'ad-science.' 'A name for Arahantship.' Comy.

[4] Iddhividhā.

[5] Saṇvaṭṭa-kappa, vivaṭṭa-kappa, rolling together, rolling apart aeons of this cakkavāṭa or world.

[6] The Comy. paraphrases kāyena phusitvā by nāmakāyena paṭila bhitvā, attaining by mental faculties.

[7] Cf. Dialogues, ii, 68, n. 2: 'emancipated without the aid of the eight grades of deliverance.' Comy. on Mahā-Nidāna Suttanta.

[8] Dhammaṭṭhiti-ñāṇaṃ. Cf. above, § 20. Here the Comy. has: first insight, then with active insight knowledge of the Path of procedure (pavattamagga). In other words, Path and Fruit are not necessarily a consequence of concentrative exercises. But they are a consequence of insight.

[9] Rūpa: the material part of the personality.

[10] Cf., p. 66.

[11] Susīma shows he has leamt (a) 'the knowledge about Nibbāna,' and also (b) 'the causal law,' yet has he neither the assurance of Aññā, nor any supernormal powers. Whether the Susīma above, i, 88, 281, was this man reborn, B. does not say.

[12] The formula of confession, Vin. Texts, ii, 260.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
8. Samaṇa-Brāhmaṇa Vagga

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

8. Recluses and Brahmins Suttas

Suttas 71-81

---

[92]

71. Jarā-Māraṇa Suttaṃ

Decay-and-Death

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Any recluses or brahmins whatsoever, brethren,
who know not decay-and-death,
know not the arising of decay-and-death,
know not the cessation of decay-and-death,
know not the way leading to the cessation of decay-and-death -
those recluses or brahmins
are not approved as recluses among recluses
nor as brahmins among brahmins,
nor have those venerable ones attained to
and realized for themselves
in this present life
the good of being either recluse or brahmin.

And any recluses or brahmins, whatsoever, brethren,
who know decay-and-death,
know the arising of decay-and-death,
know the cessation of decay-and-death,
know the way leading to the cessation of decay-and-death -
they, even those recluses, or those brahmins,
are approved as recluses among recluses
and as brahmins among brahmins,
and those venerable ones have attained to
and realized for themselves
in this present life
the good of being either recluse or brahmin."

[93]

72. Jāti Suttaṃ

Birth

[72.1 "Any recluses or brahmins whatsoever, brethren,
who know not birth,
know not the arising of birth,
know not the cessation of birth,
know not the way leading to the cessation of birth -
those recluses or brahmins
are not approved as recluses among recluses
nor as brahmins among brahmins,
nor have those venerable ones attained to
and realized for themselves
in this present life
the good of being either recluse or brahmin.

And any recluses or brahmins, whatsoever, brethren,
who know birth,
know the arising of birth,
know the cessation of birth,
know the way leading to the cessation of birth -
they, even those recluses, or those brahmins,
are approved as recluses among recluses
and as brahmins among brahmins,
and those venerable ones have attained to
and realized for themselves
in this present life
the good of being either recluse or brahmin."

■

73. Bhava Suttaṃ

Becoming

[73.1 "Any recluses or brahmins whatsoever, brethren,
who know not becoming,
know not the arising of becoming,

know not the cessation of becoming,
know not the way leading to the cessation of becoming -
those recluses or brahmins
are not approved as recluses among recluses
nor as brahmins among brahmins,
nor have those venerable ones attained to
and realized for themselves
in this present life
the good of being either recluse or brahmin.

And any recluses or brahmins, whatsoever, brethren,
who know becoming,
know the arising of becoming,
know the cessation of becoming,
know the way leading to the cessation of becoming -
they, even those recluses, or those brahmins,
are approved as recluses among recluses
and as brahmins among brahmins,
and those venerable ones have attained to
and realized for themselves
in this present life
the good of being either recluse or brahmin."

■

74. Upādāna Suttaṃ

Grasping

[74.1 "Any recluses or brahmins whatsoever, brethren,
who know not grasping,
know not the arising of grasping,
know not the cessation of grasping,
know not the way leading to the cessation of grasping -
those recluses or brahmins

are not approved as recluses among recluses
nor as brahmins among brahmins,
nor have those venerable ones attained to
and realized for themselves
in this present life
the good of being either recluse or brahmin.

And any recluses or brahmins, whatsoever, brethren,
who know grasping,
know the arising of grasping,
know the cessation of grasping,
know the way leading to the cessation of grasping -
they, even those recluses, or those brahmins,
are approved as recluses among recluses
and as brahmins among brahmins,
and those venerable ones have attained to
and realized for themselves
in this present life
the good of being either recluse or brahmin."

■

75. Taṇhā Suttaṃ

Craving

[75.1 "Any recluses or brahmins whatsoever, brethren,
who know not craving,
know not the arising of craving,
know not the cessation of craving,
know not the way leading to the cessation of craving -
those recluses or brahmins
are not approved as recluses among recluses
nor as brahmins among brahmins,
nor have those venerable ones attained to

and realized for themselves
in this present life
the good of being either recluse or brahmin.

And any recluses or brahmins, whatsoever, brethren,
who know craving,
know the arising of craving,
know the cessation of craving,
know the way leading to the cessation of craving -
they, even those recluses, or those brahmins,
are approved as recluses among recluses
and as brahmins among brahmins,
and those venerable ones have attained to
and realized for themselves
in this present life
the good of being either recluse or brahmin."

■

76. Vedanā Suttaṃ

Feeling

[76.1 "Any recluses or brahmins whatsoever, brethren,
who know not feeling,
know not the arising of feeling,
know not the cessation of feeling,
know not the way leading to the cessation of feeling -
those recluses or brahmins
are not approved as recluses among recluses
nor as brahmins among brahmins,
nor have those venerable ones attained to
and realized for themselves
in this present life
the good of being either recluse or brahmin.

And any recluses or brahmins, whatsoever, brethren,
who know feeling,
know the arising of feeling,
know the cessation of feeling,
know the way leading to the cessation of feeling -
they, even those recluses, or those brahmins,
are approved as recluses among recluses
and as brahmins among brahmins,
and those venerable ones have attained to
and realized for themselves
in this present life
the good of being either recluse or brahmin."

■

77. Phassa Suttaṃ

Contact

[77.1 "Any recluses or brahmins whatsoever, brethren,
who know not contact,
know not the arising of contact,
know not the cessation of contact,
know not the way leading to the cessation of contact -
those recluses or brahmins
are not approved as recluses among recluses
nor as brahmins among brahmins,
nor have those venerable ones attained to
and realized for themselves
in this present life
the good of being either recluse or brahmin.

And any recluses or brahmins, whatsoever, brethren,
who know contact,
know the arising of contact,

know the cessation of contact,
know the way leading to the cessation of contact -
they, even those recluses, or those brahmins,
are approved as recluses among recluses
and as brahmins among brahmins,
and those venerable ones have attained to
and realized for themselves
in this present life
the good of being either recluse or brahmin."

■

78. Saḷāyatana Suttaṃ

Sense

[78.1 "Any recluses or brahmins whatsoever, brethren,
who know not sense,
know not the arising of sense,
know not the cessation of sense,
know not the way leading to the cessation of sense -
those recluses or brahmins
are not approved as recluses among recluses
nor as brahmins among brahmins,
nor have those venerable ones attained to
and realized for themselves
in this present life
the good of being either recluse or brahmin.

And any recluses or brahmins, whatsoever, brethren,
who know sense,
know the arising of sense,
know the cessation of sense,
know the way leading to the cessation of sense -
they, even those recluses, or those brahmins,

are approved as recluses among recluses
and as brahmins among brahmins,
and those venerable ones have attained to
and realized for themselves
in this present life
the good of being either recluse or brahmin."

■

79. Nāma-rūpa Suttaṃ

Name-and-Shape

[79.1 "Any recluses or brahmins whatsoever, brethren,
who know not name-and-shape,
know not the arising of name-and-shape,
know not the cessation of name-and-shape,
know not the way leading to the cessation of name-and-shape -
those recluses or brahmins
are not approved as recluses among recluses
nor as brahmins among brahmins,
nor have those venerable ones attained to
and realized for themselves
in this present life
the good of being either recluse or brahmin.

And any recluses or brahmins, whatsoever, brethren,
who know name-and-shape,
know the arising of name-and-shape,
know the cessation of name-and-shape,
know the way leading to the cessation of name-and-shape -
they, even those recluses, or those brahmins,
are approved as recluses among recluses
and as brahmins among brahmins,
and those venerable ones have attained to

and realized for themselves
in this present life
the good of being either recluse or brahmin."

■

80. Viññāṇa Suttaṃ

Consciousness

[80.1 "Any recluses or brahmins whatsoever, brethren,
who know not consciousness,
know not the arising of consciousness,
know not the cessation of consciousness,
know not the way leading to the cessation of consciousness -
those recluses or brahmins
are not approved as recluses among recluses
nor as brahmins among brahmins,
nor have those venerable ones attained to
and realized for themselves
in this present life
the good of being either recluse or brahmin.

And any recluses or brahmins, whatsoever, brethren,
who know consciousness,
know the arising of consciousness,
know the cessation of consciousness,
know the way leading to the cessation of consciousness -
they, even those recluses, or those brahmins,
are approved as recluses among recluses
and as brahmins among brahmins,
and those venerable ones have attained to
and realized for themselves
in this present life
the good of being either recluse or brahmin."

■

81. Saṅkhāra Suttaṃ

Activities

[81.1 "Any recluses or brahmins whatsoever, brethren,
who know not activities,
know not the arising of activities,
know not the cessation of activities,
know not the way leading to the cessation of activities -
those recluses or brahmins
are not approved as recluses among recluses
nor as brahmins among brahmins,
nor have those venerable ones attained to
and realized for themselves
in this present life
the good of being either recluse or brahmin.

And any recluses or brahmins, whatsoever, brethren,
who know activities,
know the arising of activities,
know the cessation of activities,
know the way leading to the cessation of activities -
they, even those recluses, or those brahmins,
are approved as recluses among recluses
and as brahmins among brahmins,
and those venerable ones have attained to
and realized for themselves
in this present life
the good of being either recluse or brahmin."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
9. Antara Peyyālaṃ

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

9. Abridged Contents Suttas

Suttas 82

Satthā Vagga

The Teacher

---

[93]

1. Decay-and-Death

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the uprising of decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is."

■

2. Birth

By him who knows not,
who sees not
birth as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of birth as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the uprising of birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of birth as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the ceasing of birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of birth as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of birth as it really is."

■

3. Becoming

By him who knows not,
who sees not
becoming as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not

the uprising of becoming as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the uprising of becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of becoming as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the ceasing of becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of becoming as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of becoming as it really is."

■

4. Grasping

By him who knows not,
who sees not
grasping as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of grasping as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the uprising of grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of grasping as it really is, brethren,

a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the ceasing of grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of grasping as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of grasping as it really is."

■

5. Craving

By him who knows not,
who sees not
craving as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of craving as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the uprising of craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of craving as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the ceasing of craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of craving as it really is, brethren,

a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of craving as it really is."

■

6. Feeling

By him who knows not,
who sees not
feeling as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of feeling as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the uprising of feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of feeling as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the ceasing of feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of feeling as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of feeling as it really is."

■

7. Contact

By him who knows not,
who sees not
contact as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of contact as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the uprising of contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of contact as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the ceasing of contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of contact as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of contact as it really is."

■

8. Sense

By him who knows not,
who sees not
sense as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not

the uprising of sense as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the uprising of sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of sense as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the ceasing of sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of sense as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of sense as it really is."

■

9. Name-and-Shape

By him who knows not,
who sees not
name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the uprising of name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,

a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is."

■

10. Consciousness

By him who knows not,
who sees not
consciousness as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the uprising of consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the ceasing of consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
a teacher should be sought

for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of consciousness as it really is."

■

11. Activities

By him who knows not,
who sees not
activities as they really are, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of activities as they really are, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the uprising of activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of activities as they really are, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the ceasing of activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of activities as they really are, brethren,
a teacher should be sought
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of activities as they really are."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
9. Antara Peyyālaṃ

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

9. Abridged Contents Suttas

Suttas 83

Sikkhā Vagga

Training

---

[93]

1. Decay-and-Death

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about the uprising of decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is."

■

2. Birth

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
birth as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of birth as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about the uprising of birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of birth as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about the ceasing of birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of birth as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of birth as it really is."

■

3. Becoming

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
becoming as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not

the uprising of becoming as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about the uprising of becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of becoming as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about the ceasing of becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of becoming as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of becoming as it really is."

■

4. Grasping

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
grasping as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of grasping as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about the uprising of grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of grasping as it really is, brethren,

training must be done
for knowledge about the ceasing of grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of grasping as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of grasping as it really is."

■

5. Craving

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
craving as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of craving as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about the uprising of craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of craving as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about the ceasing of craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of craving as it really is, brethren,

training must be done
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of craving as it really is."

■

6. Feeling

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
feeling as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of feeling as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about the uprising of feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of feeling as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about the ceasing of feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of feeling as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of feeling as it really is."

■

7. Contact

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
contact as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of contact as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about the uprising of contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of contact as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about the ceasing of contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of contact as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of contact as it really is."

■

8. Sense

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
sense as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not

the uprising of sense as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about the uprising of sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of sense as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about the ceasing of sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of sense as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of sense as it really is."

■

9. Name-and-Shape

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about the uprising of name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,

training must be done
for knowledge about the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is."

■

10. Consciousness

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
consciousness as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about the uprising of consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about the ceasing of consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
training must be done

for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of consciousness as it really is."

■

11. Activities

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
activities as they really are, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of activities as they really are, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about the uprising of activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of activities as they really are, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about the ceasing of activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of activities as they really are, brethren,
training must be done
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of activities as they really are."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
*9. Antara Peyyālaṃ*W

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

9. Abridged Contents Suttas

Suttas 84

Yogo Vagga

Practice[1]

---

[93]

1. Decay-and-Death

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about the uprising of decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is."

■

2. Birth

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
birth as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of birth as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about the uprising of birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of birth as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about the ceasing of birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of birth as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of birth as it really is."

■

3. Becoming

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
becoming as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not

the uprising of becoming as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about the uprising of becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of becoming as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about the ceasing of becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of becoming as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of becoming as it really is."

■

4. Grasping

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
grasping as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of grasping as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about the uprising of grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of grasping as it really is, brethren,

practice must be done
for knowledge about the ceasing of grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of grasping as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of grasping as it really is."

■

5. Craving

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
craving as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of craving as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about the uprising of craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of craving as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about the ceasing of craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of craving as it really is, brethren,

practice must be done
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of craving as it really is."

■

6. Feeling

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
feeling as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of feeling as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about the uprising of feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of feeling as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about the ceasing of feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of feeling as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of feeling as it really is."

■

7. Contact

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
contact as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of contact as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about the uprising of contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of contact as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about the ceasing of contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of contact as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of contact as it really is."

■

8. Sense

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
sense as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not

the uprising of sense as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about the uprising of sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of sense as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about the ceasing of sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of sense as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of sense as it really is."

■

9. Name-and-Shape

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about the uprising of name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,

practice must be done
for knowledge about the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is."

■

10. Consciousness

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
consciousness as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about the uprising of consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about the ceasing of consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
practice must be done

for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of consciousness as it really is."

■

11. Activities

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
activities as they really are, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of activities as they really are, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about the uprising of activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of activities as they really are, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about the ceasing of activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of activities as they really are, brethren,
practice must be done
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of activities as they really are."

---

[1] Yogo. 'Or payogo' is the only Comment.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
9. Antara Peyyālaṃ

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

9. Abridged Contents Suttas

Suttas 85

Chando Vagga

Will[1]

---

[94]

1. Decay-and-Death

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about the uprising of decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is."

■

2. Birth

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
birth as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of birth as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about the uprising of birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of birth as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about the ceasing of birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of birth as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of birth as it really is."

■

3. Becoming

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
becoming as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not

the uprising of becoming as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about the uprising of becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of becoming as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about the ceasing of becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of becoming as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of becoming as it really is."

■

4. Grasping

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
grasping as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of grasping as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about the uprising of grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of grasping as it really is, brethren,

will must be exercised
for knowledge about the ceasing of grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of grasping as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of grasping as it really is."

■

5. Craving

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
craving as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of craving as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about the uprising of craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of craving as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about the ceasing of craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of craving as it really is, brethren,

will must be exercised
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of craving as it really is."

■

6. Feeling

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
feeling as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of feeling as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about the uprising of feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of feeling as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about the ceasing of feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of feeling as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of feeling as it really is."

■

7. Contact

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
contact as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of contact as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about the uprising of contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of contact as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about the ceasing of contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of contact as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of contact as it really is."

■

8. Sense

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
sense as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not

the uprising of sense as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about the uprising of sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of sense as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about the ceasing of sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of sense as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of sense as it really is."

■

9. Name-and-Shape

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about the uprising of name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,

will must be exercised
for knowledge about the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is."

■

10. Consciousness

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
consciousness as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about the uprising of consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about the ceasing of consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
will must be exercised

for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of consciousness as it really is."

■

11. Activities

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
activities as they really are, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of activities as they really are, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about the uprising of activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of activities as they really are, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about the ceasing of activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of activities as they really are, brethren,
will must be exercised
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of activities as they really are."

---

[1] Chando. 'Good will, the desire to act.' Comy.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
9. Antara Peyyālaṃ

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

9. Abridged Contents Suttas

Suttas 86

Ussoḷhī Vagga

Exertion

---

[94]

1. Decay-and-Death

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about the uprising of decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is."

■

2. Birth

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
birth as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of birth as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about the uprising of birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of birth as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about the ceasing of birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of birth as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of birth as it really is."

■

3. Becoming

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
becoming as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not

the uprising of becoming as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about the uprising of becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of becoming as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about the ceasing of becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of becoming as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of becoming as it really is."

■

4. Grasping

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
grasping as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of grasping as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about the uprising of grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of grasping as it really is, brethren,

exertion must be made
for knowledge about the ceasing of grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of grasping as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of grasping as it really is."

■

5. Craving

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
craving as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of craving as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about the uprising of craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of craving as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about the ceasing of craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of craving as it really is, brethren,

exertion must be made
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of craving as it really is."

■

6. Feeling

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
feeling as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of feeling as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about the uprising of feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of feeling as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about the ceasing of feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of feeling as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of feeling as it really is."

■

7. Contact

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
contact as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of contact as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about the uprising of contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of contact as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about the ceasing of contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of contact as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of contact as it really is."

■

8. Sense

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
sense as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not

the uprising of sense as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about the uprising of sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of sense as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about the ceasing of sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of sense as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of sense as it really is."

■

9. Name-and-Shape

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about the uprising of name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,

exertion must be made
for knowledge about the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is."

■

10. Consciousness

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
consciousness as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about the uprising of consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about the ceasing of consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
exertion must be made

for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of consciousness as it really is."

■

11. Activities

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
activities as they really are, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of activities as they really are, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about the uprising of activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of activities as they really are, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about the ceasing of activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of activities as they really are, brethren,
exertion must be made
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of activities as they really are."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
9. Antara Peyyālaṃ

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

9. Abridged Contents Suttas

Suttas 87

Appaṭivāni Vagga

No Turning Back

---

[94]

1. Decay-and-Death

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the uprising of decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is."

■

2. Birth

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
birth as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of birth as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the uprising of birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of birth as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the ceasing of birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of birth as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of birth as it really is."

■

3. Becoming

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
becoming as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not

the uprising of becoming as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the uprising of becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of becoming as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the ceasing of becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of becoming as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of becoming as it really is."

■

4. Grasping

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
grasping as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of grasping as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the uprising of grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of grasping as it really is, brethren,

there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the ceasing of grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of grasping as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of grasping as it really is."

■

5. Craving

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
craving as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of craving as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the uprising of craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of craving as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the ceasing of craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of craving as it really is, brethren,

there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of craving as it really is."

■

6. Feeling

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
feeling as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of feeling as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the uprising of feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of feeling as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the ceasing of feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of feeling as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of feeling as it really is."

■

7. Contact

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
contact as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of contact as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the uprising of contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of contact as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the ceasing of contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of contact as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of contact as it really is."

■

8. Sense

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
sense as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not

the uprising of sense as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the uprising of sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of sense as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the ceasing of sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of sense as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of sense as it really is."

■

9. Name-and-Shape

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the uprising of name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,

there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is."

■

10. Consciousness

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
consciousness as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the uprising of consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the ceasing of consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
there must be no turning back

for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of consciousness as it really is."

■

11. Activities

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
activities as they really are, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of activities as they really are, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the uprising of activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of activities as they really are, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the ceasing of activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of activities as they really are, brethren,
there must be no turning back
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of activities as they really are."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
9. Antara Peyyālaṃ

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

9. Abridged Contents Suttas

Suttas 88

Atappam Vagga

Ardour

---

[94]

1. Decay-and-Death

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the uprising of decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is."

■

2. Birth

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
birth as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of birth as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the uprising of birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of birth as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the ceasing of birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of birth as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of birth as it really is."

■

3. Becoming

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
becoming as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not

the uprising of becoming as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the uprising of becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of becoming as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the ceasing of becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of becoming as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of becoming as it really is."

■

4. Grasping

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
grasping as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of grasping as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the uprising of grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of grasping as it really is, brethren,

there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the ceasing of grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of grasping as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of grasping as it really is."

■

5. Craving

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
craving as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of craving as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the uprising of craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of craving as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the ceasing of craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of craving as it really is, brethren,

there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of craving as it really is."

■

6. Feeling

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
feeling as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of feeling as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the uprising of feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of feeling as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the ceasing of feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of feeling as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of feeling as it really is."

■

7. Contact

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
contact as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of contact as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the uprising of contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of contact as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the ceasing of contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of contact as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of contact as it really is."

■

8. Sense

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
sense as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not

the uprising of sense as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the uprising of sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of sense as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the ceasing of sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of sense as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of sense as it really is."

■

9. Name-and-Shape

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the uprising of name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,

there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is."

■

10. Consciousness

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
consciousness as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the uprising of consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the ceasing of consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
there must be ardour,

for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of consciousness as it really is."

■

11. Activities

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
activities as they really are, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of activities as they really are, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the uprising of activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of activities as they really are, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the ceasing of activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of activities as they really are, brethren,
there must be ardour,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of activities as they really are."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
9. Antara Peyyālaṃ

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

9. Abridged Contents Suttas

Suttas 89

Viriyam Vagga

Energy

---

[94]

1. Decay-and-Death

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about the uprising of decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is."

■

2. Birth

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
birth as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of birth as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about the uprising of birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of birth as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about the ceasing of birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of birth as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of birth as it really is."

■

3. Becoming

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
becoming as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not

the uprising of becoming as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about the uprising of becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of becoming as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about the ceasing of becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of becoming as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of becoming as it really is."

■

4. Grasping

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
grasping as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of grasping as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about the uprising of grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of grasping as it really is, brethren,

there must be energy,
for knowledge about the ceasing of grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of grasping as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of grasping as it really is."

■

5. Craving

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
craving as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of craving as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about the uprising of craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of craving as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about the ceasing of craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of craving as it really is, brethren,

there must be energy,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of craving as it really is."

■

6. Feeling

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
feeling as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of feeling as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about the uprising of feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of feeling as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about the ceasing of feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of feeling as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of feeling as it really is."

■

7. Contact

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
contact as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of contact as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about the uprising of contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of contact as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about the ceasing of contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of contact as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of contact as it really is."

■

8. Sense

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
sense as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not

the uprising of sense as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about the uprising of sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of sense as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about the ceasing of sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of sense as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of sense as it really is."

■

9. Name-and-Shape

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about the uprising of name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,

there must be energy,
for knowledge about the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is."

■

10. Consciousness

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
consciousness as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about the uprising of consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about the ceasing of consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
there must be energy,

for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of consciousness as it really is."

■

11. Activities

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
activities as they really are, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of activities as they really are, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about the uprising of activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of activities as they really are, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about the ceasing of activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of activities as they really are, brethren,
there must be energy,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of activities as they really are."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
9. Antara Peyyālaṃ

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

9. Abridged Contents Suttas

Suttas 90

Sātaccam Vagga

Perseverance

---

[94]

1. Decay-and-Death

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the uprising of decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is."

■

2. Birth

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
birth as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of birth as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the uprising of birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of birth as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the ceasing of birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of birth as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of birth as it really is."

■

3. Becoming

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
becoming as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not

the uprising of becoming as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the uprising of becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of becoming as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the ceasing of becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of becoming as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of becoming as it really is."

■

4. Grasping

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
grasping as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of grasping as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the uprising of grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of grasping as it really is, brethren,

there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the ceasing of grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of grasping as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of grasping as it really is."

■

5. Craving

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
craving as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of craving as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the uprising of craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of craving as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the ceasing of craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of craving as it really is, brethren,

there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of craving as it really is."

■

6. Feeling

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
feeling as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of feeling as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the uprising of feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of feeling as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the ceasing of feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of feeling as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of feeling as it really is."

■

7. Contact

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
contact as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of contact as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the uprising of contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of contact as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the ceasing of contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of contact as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of contact as it really is."

■

8. Sense

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
sense as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not

the uprising of sense as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the uprising of sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of sense as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the ceasing of sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of sense as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of sense as it really is."

■

9. Name-and-Shape

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the uprising of name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,

there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is."

■

10. Consciousness

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
consciousness as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the uprising of consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the ceasing of consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
there must be perseverance,

for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of consciousness as it really is."

■

11. Activities

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
activities as they really are, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of activities as they really are, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the uprising of activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of activities as they really are, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the ceasing of activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of activities as they really are, brethren,
there must be perseverance,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of activities as they really are."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
9. Antara Peyyālaṃ

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

9. Abridged Contents Suttas

Suttas 91

Sati Vagga

Mindfulness

---

[94]

1. Decay-and-Death

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the uprising of decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is."

■

2. Birth

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
birth as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of birth as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the uprising of birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of birth as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the ceasing of birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of birth as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of birth as it really is."

■

3. Becoming

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
becoming as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not

the uprising of becoming as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the uprising of becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of becoming as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the ceasing of becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of becoming as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of becoming as it really is."

■

4. Grasping

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
grasping as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of grasping as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the uprising of grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of grasping as it really is, brethren,

there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the ceasing of grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of grasping as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of grasping as it really is."

■

5. Craving

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
craving as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of craving as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the uprising of craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of craving as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the ceasing of craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of craving as it really is, brethren,

there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of craving as it really is."

■

6. Feeling

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
feeling as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of feeling as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the uprising of feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of feeling as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the ceasing of feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of feeling as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of feeling as it really is."

■

7. Contact

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
contact as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of contact as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the uprising of contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of contact as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the ceasing of contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of contact as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of contact as it really is."

■

8. Sense

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
sense as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not

the uprising of sense as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the uprising of sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of sense as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the ceasing of sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of sense as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of sense as it really is."

■

9. Name-and-Shape

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the uprising of name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,

there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is."

■

10. Consciousness

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
consciousness as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the uprising of consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the ceasing of consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,

for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of consciousness as it really is."

■

11. Activities

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
activities as they really are, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of activities as they really are, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the uprising of activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of activities as they really are, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the ceasing of activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of activities as they really are, brethren,
there must be mindfulness,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of activities as they really are."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
9. Antara Peyyālaṃ

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

9. Abridged Contents Suttas

Suttas 92

Sampajaññaṃ Vagga

Understanding

---

[94]

1. Decay-and-Death

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the uprising of decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is."

■

2. Birth

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
birth as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of birth as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the uprising of birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of birth as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the ceasing of birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of birth as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of birth as it really is."

■

3. Becoming

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
becoming as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not

the uprising of becoming as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the uprising of becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of becoming as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the ceasing of becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of becoming as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of becoming as it really is."

■

4. Grasping

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
grasping as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of grasping as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the uprising of grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of grasping as it really is, brethren,

there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the ceasing of grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of grasping as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of grasping as it really is."

■

5. Craving

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
craving as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of craving as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the uprising of craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of craving as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the ceasing of craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of craving as it really is, brethren,

there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of craving as it really is."

■

6. Feeling

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
feeling as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of feeling as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the uprising of feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of feeling as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the ceasing of feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of feeling as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of feeling as it really is."

■

7. Contact

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
contact as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of contact as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the uprising of contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of contact as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the ceasing of contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of contact as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of contact as it really is."

■

8. Sense

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
sense as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not

the uprising of sense as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the uprising of sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of sense as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the ceasing of sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of sense as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of sense as it really is."

■

9. Name-and-Shape

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the uprising of name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,

there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is."

■

10. Consciousness

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
consciousness as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the uprising of consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the ceasing of consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
there must be understanding,

for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of consciousness as it really is."

■

11. Activities

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
activities as they really are, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of activities as they really are, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the uprising of activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of activities as they really are, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the ceasing of activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of activities as they really are, brethren,
there must be understanding,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of activities as they really are."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
12. Nidāna Saṃyutta
9. Antara Peyyālaṃ

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

12. The Kindred Sayings on Cause

9. Abridged Contents Suttas

Suttas 93

Appamādo Vagga

Earnestness

---

[94]

1. Decay-and-Death

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the uprising of decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of decay-and-death as it really is."

■

2. Birth

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
birth as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of birth as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the uprising of birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of birth as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the ceasing of birth as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of birth as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of birth as it really is."

■

3. Becoming

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
becoming as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not

the uprising of becoming as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the uprising of becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of becoming as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the ceasing of becoming as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of becoming as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of becoming as it really is."

■

4. Grasping

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
grasping as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of grasping as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the uprising of grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of grasping as it really is, brethren,

there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the ceasing of grasping as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of grasping as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of grasping as it really is."

■

5. Craving

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
craving as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of craving as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the uprising of craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of craving as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the ceasing of craving as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of craving as it really is, brethren,

there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of craving as it really is."

■

6. Feeling

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
feeling as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of feeling as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the uprising of feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of feeling as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the ceasing of feeling as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of feeling as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of feeling as it really is."

■

7. Contact

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
contact as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of contact as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the uprising of contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of contact as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the ceasing of contact as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of contact as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of contact as it really is."

■

8. Sense

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
sense as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not

the uprising of sense as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the uprising of sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of sense as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the ceasing of sense as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of sense as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of sense as it really is."

■

9. Name-and-Shape

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the uprising of name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,

there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of name-and-shape as it really is."

■

10. Consciousness

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
consciousness as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the uprising of consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the ceasing of consciousness as it really is;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of consciousness as it really is, brethren,
there must be earnestness,

for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of consciousness as it really is."

■

11. Activities

"By him who knows not,
who sees not
activities as they really are, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the uprising of activities as they really are, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the uprising of activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the ceasing of activities as they really are, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the ceasing of activities as they really are;

By him who knows not,
who sees not
the way going to the ceasing of activities as they really are, brethren,
there must be earnestness,
for knowledge about the way going to the ceasing of activities as they really are."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
13. Abhisamaya Saṃyutta

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

13. The Kindred Sayings on Understanding

Sutta 1

Nakha-Sikhā Suttaṃ

The Tip of the Nail

---

[95]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvathi at the Jeta's Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One took up a little pinch of dust
on the tip of his finger-nail and said to the brethren: —

"What think ye, brethren?

Whether is this pinch of dust
that I have taken up on my finger-nail
the greater,
or the mighty earth?"

"The latter, lord, the mighty earth is the greater.

Infinitely small is this pinch of dust taken up by the Exalted One on his finger-nail,
not by a hundredth part,
nor by a thousandth part,
not by a hundred thousandth part does it equal the mighty earth
when set beside it
— this pinch of dust
taken up by the Exalted One on his finger-nail."

"Even so, brethren,
for the Ariyan disciple who has won vision,
for the person who has understanding
this is the greater ill, to wit,
that which for him is wholly perished,
wholly finished;
little is the ill that remains,
not worth the hundredth part,
not worth the thousandth part,
not worth the hundred thousandth part
when measured with the former ill
which for him is wholly perished,
wholly finished,
to wit, a term of seven times.[1]

So great in good, brethren,
is it to be wise in the Norm;

so great in good is it
to have gained the eye of the Norm."

---

[1] Satta-k-khattuṇ paramatā. Cf. Points of Controversy, 77, 268; S. v, 458; A. i, 233 f. The Comy. explains as 'a measure of seven lives (bhavā),' or rebirths.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
13. Abhisamaya Saṃyutta

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

13. The Kindred Sayings on Understanding

Sutta 2

Pokkharaṇī Suttaṃ

The Bathing Tank

---

[96]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose, brethren, there were a bathing-tank
fifty yojanas in length,
fifty yojanas in breadth,
fifty yojanas in depth,
full of water,
brimming over so that a crow might drink;
and therefrom a man were to draw water
on the tip of a grass-blade.

What think ye, brethren?

Which is the greater:
the water brought up by the tip of the grass-blade,
or the water of the bathing-tank?"

"Just this, lord, is the greater,
the water of the bathing-tank.

Scant is the water brought up by the tip of the grass-blade,
not a hundredth part does it equal,
not a thousandth part does it equal,
not a hundred thousandth part does the water brought up by the tip of the grass-blade equal the measure of the water of the tank."

"Even so, brethren,
for the Ariyan disciple who has won vision,
for the person who has understanding
this is the greater ill, to wit,
that which for him is wholly perished,
wholly finished;
little is the ill that remains,
not worth the hundredth part,
not worth the thousandth part,
not worth the hundred thousandth part

when measured with the former ill
which for him is wholly perished,
wholly finished,
to wit, a term of seven times.

So great in good, brethren,
is it to be wise in the Norm;
so great in good is it
to have gained the eye of the Norm."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
13. Abhisamaya Saṃyutta

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

13. The Kindred Sayings on Understanding

Sutta 3

Paṭhama Sambhejja-Udaka Suttaṃ

Confluent Waters (1)

---

[96]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose, brethren, that where those great rivers flow together,
meet together, to wit,
Gangā,
Yamunā,
Aciravatī,
Sarabhū,
Mahī,
a man should therefrom
draw out two or three drops of water.

As to that what think ye, brethren?

Which is the greater:
those two or three drops of water brought up,
or the water that has flowed together?"

"Just this, lord, is greater,
even the water that has flowed together.

Scant are the two or three drops of water brought up,
not equal to the hundredth part,
the thousandth,
the hundred thousandth part
when compared with the water that has flowed together are those two or three drops of water."

"Even so, brethren,
for the Ariyan disciple who has won vision,
for the person who has understanding
this is the greater ill, to wit,
that which for him is wholly perished,
wholly finished;
little is the ill that remains,
not worth the hundredth part,
not worth the thousandth part,

not worth the hundred thousandth part
when measured with the former ill
which for him is wholly perished,
wholly finished,
to wit, a term of seven times.

So great in good, brethren,
is it to be wise in the Norm;
so great in good is it
to have gained the eye of the Norm."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
13. Abhisamaya Saṃyutta

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

13. The Kindred Sayings on Understanding

Sutta 4

Dutiya Sambhejja-Udaka Suttaṃ

Confluent waters (2)

---

[96]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose, brethren, that where those great rivers flow together,
meet together, to wit,
Gangā,
Yamunā,
Aciravatī,
[97] Sarabhū,
Mahī,
the water should die away and come to an end, excepting two or three drops.

As to that what think ye, brethren?

Which is the greater:
the water that, having flowed together,
has died away and come to an end,
or those two or three drops remaining over?"

"Just that, lord, is greater,
even the water that having flowed together
has died away and come to an end;
scant are the two or three drops remaining over,
not a hundredth part do they equal,
not a thousandth,
not a hundred thousandth part do they equal
when compared with the water that having flowed together
has died away and come to an end,
those two or three drops of water."

"Even so, brethren,
for the Ariyan disciple who has won vision,
for the person who has understanding
this is the greater ill, to wit,
that which for him is wholly perished,

wholly finished;
little is the ill that remains,
not worth the hundredth part,
not worth the thousandth part,
not worth the hundred thousandth part
when measured with the former ill
which for him is wholly perished,
wholly finished,
to wit, a term of seven times.

So great in good, brethren,
is it to be wise in the Norm;
so great in good is it
to have gained the eye of the Norm."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
13. Abhisamaya Saṃyutta

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

13. The Kindred Sayings on Understanding

Sutta 5

Paṭhavī Suttaṃ

The Earth (1)

---

[97]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose, brethren, that a man were to lay together on the earth
seven little balls of clay [as big as] jujube kernels.

As to that what think ye, brethren,
which is more?

The seven little jujube-kernel clay balls laid together,
or the earth?"

"Just this, lord, is more,
the earth itself;
scant are the seven little jujube-kernel clay balls
laid together.

They do not make up one hundredth part,
nor one thousandth,
nor one hundred thousandth part when compared with the earth -
those seven little clay balls."

"Even so, brethren,
for the Ariyan disciple who has won vision,
for the person who has understanding
this is the greater ill, to wit,
that which for him is wholly perished,
wholly finished;
little is the ill that remains,
not worth the hundredth part,
not worth the thousandth part,
not worth the hundred thousandth part
when measured with the former ill
which for him is wholly perished,
wholly finished,
to wit, a term of seven times.

So great in good, brethren,
is it to be wise in the Norm;
so great in good is it
to have gained the eye of the Norm."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
13. Abhisamaya Saṃyutta

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

13. The Kindred Sayings on Understanding

Sutta 6

Dutiya Paṭhavī Suttaṃ

The Earth (2)

---

[97]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose, brethren, the earth perishing and coming to an end, except for seven little clay balls
like jujube kernels.

As to that, what think ye, brethren,
which is more?

The great earth, perished and come to an end,
or the seven surviving little jujube-kernel clay balls?"

"Just that is more, lord,
even the great earth.

Scant are the seven surviving little clay balls.

They do not make up one hundredth,
one thousandth,
one hundred thousandth part
when compared with the great earth -
those seven surviving little clay balls."

"Even so, brethren,
for the Ariyan disciple who has won vision,
for the person who has understanding
this is the greater ill, to wit,
that which for him is wholly perished,
wholly finished;
little is the ill that remains,
not worth the hundredth part,
not worth the thousandth part,
not worth the hundred thousandth part
when measured with the former ill
which for him is wholly perished,
wholly finished,
to wit, a term of seven times.

So great in good, brethren,
is it to be wise in the Norm;
so great in good is it
to have gained the eye of the Norm."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
13. Abhisamaya Saṃyutta

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

13. The Kindred Sayings on Understanding

Sutta 7

Paṭhama Samudda Suttaṃ

The Sea (1)

---

[98]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose, brethren, that a man were to draw from the sea
two or three drops of water.

As to that what think ye, brethren,
which is more?

Those two or three drops of water brought up,
or the water in the sea?"

"Just this is more, lord,
even the water in the sea.

Scanty are the two or three drops of water brought up;
they do not make up one hundredth,
one thousandth,
one hundred thousandth part
when compared with the water in the sea -
those two or three little drops."

"Even so, brethren,
for the Ariyan disciple who has won vision,
for the person who has understanding
this is the greater ill, to wit,
that which for him is wholly perished,
wholly finished;
little is the ill that remains,
not worth the hundredth part,
not worth the thousandth part,
not worth the hundred thousandth part
when measured with the former ill
which for him is wholly perished,
wholly finished,
to wit, a term of seven times.

So great in good, brethren,
is it to be wise in the Norm;
so great in good is it
to have gained the eye of the Norm."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
13. Abhisamaya Saṃyutta

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

13. The Kindred Sayings on Understanding

Sutta 8

Dutiya Samudda Suttaṃ

The Sea (2)

---

[98]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose, brethren, that the sea were to come to extinction,
to an end
except for two or three drops
of water brought from it.

As to that what think ye, brethren,
which is more?

The water in the sea
or the two or three surviving drops of water?"

"Just that is more, lord,
even the water in the sea
that has come to extinction,
to an end.

Scanty are the two or three surviving drops.

They do not make up one hundredth,
one thousandth,
one hundred thousandth part
when compared with the sea that has come to extinction,
to an end -
those two or three drops."

"Even so, brethren,
for the Ariyan disciple who has won vision,
for the person who has understanding
this is the greater ill, to wit,
that which for him is wholly perished,
wholly finished;
little is the ill that remains,
not worth the hundredth part,
not worth the thousandth part,
not worth the hundred thousandth part

when measured with the former ill
which for him is wholly perished,
wholly finished,
to wit, a term of seven times.

So great in good, brethren,
is it to be wise in the Norm;
so great in good is it
to have gained the eye of the Norm."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
13. Abhisamaya Saṃyutta

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

13. The Kindred Sayings on Understanding

Sutta 9

Paṭhama Pabbat'Ūpama Suttaṃ

The Mountain Simile (1)

---

[98]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose, brethren, that a man were to lay together
on Himalaya, lord of the hills,
seven grains of gravel
as large as mustard-seeds.

As to that what think ye, brethren,
which is more?

The seven grains of gravel
as large as mustard-seeds
or Himalaya, lord of the hills?"

"Just this, lord, is more,
even Himalaya, lord of the hills.

Small are the seven grains of gravel
as large as mustard-seeds
laid together.

They do not make up one hundredth,
one thousandth,
one hundred thousandth part
when compared with Himalaya lord of the hills -
those seven grains of gravel
as large as mustard-seeds
laid together."

"Even so, brethren,
for the Ariyan disciple who has won vision,
for the person who has understanding
this is the greater ill, to wit,
that which for him is wholly perished,
wholly finished;
little is the ill that remains,
not worth the hundredth part,

not worth the thousandth part,
not worth the hundred thousandth part
when measured with the former ill
which for him is wholly perished,
wholly finished,
to wit, a term of seven times.

So great in good, brethren,
is it to be wise in the Norm;
so great in good is it
to have gained the eye of the Norm."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
13. Abhisamaya Saṃyutta

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

13. The Kindred Sayings on Understanding

Sutta 10

Dutiya Pabbat'Ūpama Suttaṃ

The Mountain Simile (2)

---

[99]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose, brethren, that Himalaya, lord of the hills,
were to come to extinction,
come to an end,
save for seven surviving grains of gravel
as large as mustard-seeds.

As to that what think ye, brethren, which is more?

That Himalaya, lord of the hills,
which has come to extinction,
come to an end,
or those seven surviving grains of gravel
as large as mustard-seeds?"

"Just that is more, lord, even Himalaya, lord of the hills.

Small are the seven grains of gravel
as large as mustard-seeds that survive.

They do not make up a hundredth,
a thousandth,
a hundred thousandth part
when compared with Himalaya, lord of the hills -
those seven grains of gravel laid together
as large as mustard-seeds."

"Even so, brethren,
for the Ariyan disciple who has won vision,
for the person who has understanding
this is the greater ill, to wit,
that which for him is wholly perished,
wholly finished;
little is the ill that remains,
not worth the hundredth part,
not worth the thousandth part,

not worth the hundred thousandth part
when measured with the former ill
which for him is wholly perished,
wholly finished,
to wit, a term of seven times.

So great in good, brethren,
is it to be wise in the Norm;
so great in good is it
to have gained the eye of the Norm."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
13. Abhisamaya Saṃyutta

Part II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

13. The Kindred Sayings on Understanding

Sutta 11

Tatiya Pabbat'Ūpama Suttaṃ

The Mountain Simile (3)

---

[99]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose, brethren, that a man should lay together on Sineru, lord of the hills,
seven grains of gravel as large as beans.

As to that what think ye, brethren, which is more?

Those seven grains of gravel as large as beans laid together,
or Sineru, lord of the hills?"

"Just this is more, lord, even Sineru, lord of the hills.

Small are seven grains of gravel laid together as large as beans.

They do not make up a hundredth,
a thousandth,
a hundred thousandth part
when compared with Sineru, lord of the hills - those seven grains of gravel laid together as large as beans."

"Even so, brethren,
for the Ariyan disciple who has won vision,
for the person who [100] has understanding
this is the greater ill, to wit,
that which for him is wholly perished,
wholly finished;
little is the ill that remains,
not worth the hundredth part,
not worth the thousandth part,
not worth the hundred thousandth part
when measured with the former ill
which for him is wholly perished,
wholly finished,
to wit, a term of seven times.

So great in good, brethren,
is it to be wise in the Norm;
so great in good is it
to have gained the eye of the Norm."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
I. Nānatta Vagga Paṭhama
1. Ajjhatta-Pañcakaṃ

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

1. Five (Discourses on) Internal Element

Sutta 1

Dhātu [Dhātu-Nānatta] Suttaṃ

Element

---

[101]

THUS have I heard.

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"I will teach you, brethren, the divesity in elements[1].

Do ye listen; give your minds thoroughly; I will speak.'

"Even so, lord," responded the brethren.

The Exalted One said this: —

"What, brethren, is the diversity in elements?

The elements of eye,
of visible object,
of eye-awareness;[2]

the elements of ear,
of sound,
of ear-awareness;

the elements of nose,
of odour,
of nose-awareness;

the elements of tongue,
of taste,
of tongue-awareness;

the elements of body,
of tangibles,
of body-awareness;

the elements of mind,
of ideas,
of mind-awareness:

this, brethren, is called the diversity in elements."

---

[1] 'Element' is by no means a good fit for dhātu, but it is difficult to find any better single word. In itself it may mean what the commentators say it does (cf. S.Z. Aung's note, Compendium, p. 254 f.), 'that which bears its own intrinsic nature' — an ultimate — or 'its own characteristic mark'; something not reducible to simpler terms. But in relation to life and conduct — and Buddhist interest in it was limited to that — it seems to mean the wherewithal, the datum, the sine qua non, given which some given experience can be had; any 'set of conditions.' In this section we are concerned with those 'conditions' without which we can have no sense-, or mundane experience.

[2] Or consciousness (viññāṇa).

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
I. Nānatta Vagga Paṭhama
1. Ajjhatta-Pañcakaṃ

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

1. Five (Discourses on) Internal Element

Sutta 2

Samphassa [Phassa-Nānatta] Suttaṃ

Touching

---

[101]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthi at the Jeta's Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Because of the diversity in elements, brethren, arises diversity of contact.

What, brethren, is the diversity in elements?

The eye-element[ed1],
the ear-element,
the nose-element,
the tongue-element,
the body-element,
the mind-element.

This, brethren, is called the diversity in elements.

And what is the consequent diversity of contact?

An [102] eye-contact arises because of the eye-element.

An ear-contact arises because of the ear-element.

A nose-contact arises because of the nose-element.

A tongue-contact arises because of the tongue-element.

A body-contact arises because of the body-element.

A mind-contact arises because of the mind-element.

It is thus, brethren, that because of diversity of elements diversity of contact arises."

[ed1] The translators footnote: "§ 1 is repeated." But it is not repeated as in § 1, but as given here. Repetition as in § 1 makes no sense either.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
I. Nānatta Vagga Paṭhama
1. Ajjhatta-Pañcakaṃ

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

1. Five (Discourses on) Internal Element

Sutta 3

No ce tam [No Phassa-Nānatta] Suttaṃ

And Not in This Way[1]

---

[102]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthi at the Jeta's Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Because of the diversity in elements, brethren, arises diversity of contact; diversity in elements does not arise because of diversity of contact.

What, brethren, is the diversity in elements?

The eye-element[ed1],
the ear-element,
the nose-element,
the tongue-elements,
the body-elements,
the mind-elements.

This, brethren, is called the diversity in elements.

And what is the consequent diversity of contact?

An eye-contact arises because of the eye-element.

An ear-contact arises because of the ear-element.

A nose-contact arises because of the nose-element.

A tongue-contact arises because of the tongue-element.

A body-contact arises because of the body-element.

A mind-contact arises because of the mind-element.

It is thus, brethren, that because of diversity of elements diversity of contact arises.

And now the order of happening has been told you."

[ed1] This passage, abbreviated by reference in the translation has been restored. The following section is incomplete in the translation but has not been expanded as a consequence of the manner in which the abbreviation has been referenced in the final line. This is simply carlessness on the part of the translator as the entire meaning is contained in the statement of the reverse condition and needs emphasis. It is the title of the sutta!

[1] Reading no c'etaṇ.

The formulas of §§ 1,2 are repeated, and so is here the first sentence of § 3. [Ed.: inserted but not as in § 1, which does not fit here, but as given here and in § 2.]

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
I. Nānatta Vagga Paṭhama
1. Ajjhatta-Pañcakaṃ

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

1. Five (Discourses on) Internal Element

Sutta 4

Paṭhama Vedanā [Vedanā-Nānatta] Suttaṃ

Feeling (1)

---

[102]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthi at the Jeta's Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Because of the diversity in elements, brethren, arises diversity of contact; because of the diversity of contact arises diversity of feeling.[1]

What, brethren, is the diversity in elements?

The elements of eye,
of visible object,
of eye-awareness;

the elements of ear,
of sound,
of ear-awareness;

the elements of nose,
of odour,
of nose-awareness;

the elements of tongue,
of taste,
of tongue-awareness;

the elements of body,
of tangibles,
of body-awareness;

the elements of mind,
of ideas,
of mind-awareness:

this, brethren, is called the diversity in elements.

And what is the consequent diversity of contact?

An eye-contact arises because of the eye-element.

An ear-contact arises because of the ear-element.

A nose-contact arises because of the nose-element.

A tongue-contact arises because of the tongue-element.

A body-contact arises because of the body-element.

A mind-contact arises because of the mind-element.

It is thus, brethren, that because of diversity of elements diversity of contact arises.

How is it that because of diversity in element there arises diversity of contact?
that because of diversity of contact there arises diversity of feeling?

Because of eye-element, brethren, arises eye-contact;
because of eye-contact arises feeling produced by eye-contact.

Because of ear-element, arises ear-contact;
because of ear-contact arises feeling produced by ear-contact.

Because of nose-element, arises nose-contact;
because of nose-contact arises feeling produced by nose-contact.

Because of tongue-element, arises tongue-contact;
because of tongue-contact arises feeling produced by tongue-contact.

Because of body-element, arises body-contact;
because of body-contact arises feeling produced by body-contact.

Because of mind-element, arises mind-contact;
because of mind-contact arises feeling produced by mind-contact.

Thus it is that because of diversity in element
there arises diversity of contact,
because of diversity of contact
there arises diversity of feeling."

---

[1] Catechism on the first two modes of diversity (§§ 1,2) follows. [Ed.: inserted]

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
I. Nānatta Vagga Paṭhama
1. Ajjhatta-Pañcakaṃ

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

1. Five (Discourses on) Internal Element

Sutta 5

Dutiya Vedanānā [No Vedanā-Nānatta] Suttaṃ

Feeling (2)

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthi at the Jeta's Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

Because of the diversity in elements, brethren, arises diversity of contact; because of the diversity of contact arises diversity of feeling. Diversity of contact does not arise because of diversity of feeling; diversity in elements does not arise because of diversity of contact.

What, brethren, is the diversity in elements?

The elements of eye,
of visible object,
of eye-awareness;

the elements of ear,
of sound,
of ear-awareness;

the elements of nose,
of odour,
of nose-awareness;

the elements of tongue,
of taste,
of tongue-awareness;

the elements of body,
of tangibles,
of body-awareness;

the elements of mind,
of ideas,
of mind-awareness:

this, brethren, is called the diversity in elements.

And what is the consequent diversity of contact?

An eye-contact arises because of the eye-element.

An ear-contact arises because of the ear-element.

A nose-contact arises because of the nose-element.

A tongue-contact arises because of the tongue-element.

A body-contact arises because of the body-element.

A mind-contact arises because of the mind-element.

It is thus, brethren, that because of diversity of elements diversity of contact arises.

How is it that because of diversity in element there arises diversity of contact? that because of diversity of contact there arises diversity of feeling?

Because of eye-element, brethren, arises eye-contact; because of eye-contact arises feeling produced by eye-contact.

Because of ear-element, arises ear-contact; because of ear-contact arises feeling produced by ear-contact.

Because of nose-element, arises nose-contact; because of nose-contact arises feeling produced by nose-contact.

Because of tongue-element, arises tongue-contact; because of tongue-contact arises feeling produced by tongue-contact.

Because of body-element, arises body-contact; because of body-contact arises feeling produced by body-contact.

Because of mind-element, arises mind-contact; because of mind-contact arises feeling produced by mind-contact.

Thus it is that because of diversity in element there arises diversity of contact, because of diversity of contact there arises diversity of feeling. And now ye know the order is not otherwise.

And it is true in the case of each of the six pairs of elements.[1]

---

[1] I have avoided merely repeating the formulas of §§ 1-3, as the text does. [Ed.: inserted]

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
I. Nānatta Vagga Paṭhama
1. Ajjhatta-Pañcakaṃ

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

2. Five (Discourses on) External Element

Sutta 6

Dhātu [Bāhira-Dhātu-Nānatta] Suttaṃ

Element

---

[103]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthi at the Jeta's Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

I will teach you, brethren, the diversity in elements.

Do ye listen; give your minds thoroughly; I will speak.

What, brethren, is the diversity in elements?

Visible object-element,
sound-element,
odour-element,
taste-element,
tangible-element,
idea-element.

This is called the diversity in elements."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
I. Nānatta Vagga Paṭhama
1. Ajjhatta-Pañcakaṃ

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

2. Five (Discourses on) External Element

Sutta 7

Saññā [Pariyesanā-Nānatta] Suttaṃ

Perception

---

[103]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthi at the Jeta's Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Because of the diversity in elements, brethren, arises diversity in perceptions,
because of diversity in perceptions arises diversity in aims,
because of diversity in aims arises diversity in desires,
because of diversity in desires arises diversity in yearnings,
because of diversity in yearnings arises diversity in quests.

What, brethren, is the diversity in elements?[ed1]

Visible object-element,
sound-element,
odour-element,
taste-element,
tangible-element,
idea-element.

This is called the diversity in elements.

How is it that because of diversity in elements there arises diversity in perceptions,
because of diversity in perceptions arises diversity in aims,
because of diversity in aims arises diversity in desires,
because of diversity in desires arises diversity in yearnings,
because of diversity in yearnings arises diversity in quests?

Because of visible object-element, brethren, arises visible object-perception,
because of visible object-perception arises visible object-aims,
because of visible object-aims arises visible object-desires,
because of visible object-desires arises visible object-yearnings,
because of visible object-yearnings arises visible object quests.

Because of sound-element, brethren, arises sound-perception,
because of sound-perception arises sound-aims,
because of sound-aims arises sound-desires,
because of sound-desires arises sound-yearnings,
because of sound-yearnings arises sound-quests.

Because of odour-element, brethren, arises odour-perception,
because of odour-perception arises odour-aims,
because of odour-aims arises odour-desires,
because of odour-desires arises odour-yearnings,
because of odour-yearnings arises odour-quests.

Because of taste-element, brethren, arises taste-perception,
because of taste-perception arises taste-aims,
because of taste-aims arises taste-desires,
because of taste-desires arises taste-yearnings,
because of taste-yearnings arises taste-quests.

Because of tangibles-element, brethren, arises tangibles-perception,
because of tangibles-perception arises tangibles-aims,
because of tangibles-aims arises tangibles-desires,
because of tangibles-desires arises tangibles-yearnings,
beause of tangibles-yearnings arises tangibles-quests.

Because of ideas-element, brethren, arises ideas-perception,
because of ideas-perception arises ideas-aims,
because of ideas-aims arises ideas-desires,
because of ideas-desires arises ideas-yearnings,
because of ideas-yearnings arises ideas-quests.

Thus it is that because of the diversity in elements, brethren, arises diversity in perceptions,
because of diversity in perceptions arises diversity in aims,
because of diversity in aims arises diversity in desires,
because of diversity in desires arises diversity in yearnings,
because of diversity in yearnings arises diversity in quests."

---

ed1 From here down summarized by the translators thus: "The diversity in elements, to wit, in the six afore-named [Ed.: SN 2.14.6], ye know, and now ye know the causal connection in the consequences thereof, true in each of the six."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
I. Nānatta Vagga Paṭhama
1. Ajjhatta-Pañcakaṃ

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

2. Five (Discourses on) External Element

Sutta 8

No ce tam [No Pariyesanā-Nānatta] Suttaṃ

And Not in This Way

---

[103]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthi at the Jeta's Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

2. "Because of the diversity in elements, brethren, arises diversity in perceptions,
because of diversity in perceptions arises diversity in aims,
because of diversity in aims arises diversity in desires,
because of diversity in desires arises diversity in yearnings,
because of diversity in yearnings arises diversity in quests.

3. Diversity in yearnings does not arise because of [104] diversity in quests, diversity in desires does not arise because of diversity in yearnings,
diversity in aims does not arise because of diversity in desires,
diversity in perceptions does not arise becuse of diversity in aims,
diversity in elements does not arise because of diversity in perceptions.

4. What, brethren, is the diversity in elements?

Visible object-element,
sound-element,
odour-element,
taste-element,
tangible-element,
idea-element.

This is called the diversity in elements.

5.How is it that because of diversity in elements there arises diversity in perceptions,
because of diversity in perceptions arises diversity in aims,
because of diversity in aims arises diversity in desires,
because of diversity in desires arises diversity in yearnings,
because of diversity in yearnings arises diversity in quests;
[that] diversity in yearnings does not arise because of diversity in quests,

diversity in desires does not arise because of diversity in yearnings,
diversity in aims does not arise because of diversity in desires,
diversity in perceptions does not arise becuse of diversity in aims,
diversity in elements does not arise because of diversity in perceptions?

6. Because of visible object-element, brethren, arises visible object-perception,
because of visible object-perception arises visible object-aims,
because of visible object-aims arises visible object-desires,
because of visible object-desires arises visible object-yearnings,
because of visible object-yearnings arises visible object-quests;
visible object-yearnings do not arise because of visible object-quests,
visible object-desires do not arise because of visible object-yearnings,
visible object-aims do not arise because of visible object-desires,
visible object-perceptions do not arise because of visible object-aims,
visible object-elements do not arise because of visible object-perceptions.

7. Because of sound-element, brethren, arises sound-perception,
because of sound-perception arises sound-aims,
because of sound-aims arises sound-desires,
because of sound-desires arises sound-yearnings,
because of sound-yearnings arises sound-quests;
sound-yearnings do not arise because of sound-quests,
sound-desires do not arise because of sound-yearnings,
sound-aims do not arise because of sound-desires,
sound-perceptions do not arise because of sound-aims,
sound-elements do not arise because of sound-perceptions.

8. Because of odour-element, brethren, arises odour-perception,
because of odour-perception arises odour-aims,
because of odour-aims arises odour-desires,
because of odour-desires arises odour-yearnings,
because of odour-yearnings arises odour-quests;
odour-yearnings do not arise because of odour-quests,
odour-desires do not arise because of odour-yearnings,
odour-aims do not arise because of odour-desires,

odour-perceptions do not arise because of odour-aims,
odour-elements do not arise because of odour-perceptions.

9. Because of taste-element, brethren, arises taste-perception,
because of taste-perception arises taste-aims,
because of taste-aims arises taste-desires,
because of taste-desires arises taste-yearnings,
because of taste-yearnings arises taste-quests;
taste-yearnings do not arise because of taste-quests,
taste-desires do not arise because of taste-yearnings,
taste-aims do not arise because of taste-desires,
taste-perceptions do not arise because of taste-aims,
taste-elements do not arise because of taste-perceptions.

10. Because of tangibles-element, brethren, arises tangibles-perception,
because of tangibles-perception arises tangibles-aims,
because of tangibles-aims arises tangibles-desires,
because of tangibles-desires arises tangibles-yearnings,
beause of tangibles-yearnings arises tangibles-quests;
tangibles-yearnings do not arise because of tangibles-quests,
tangibles-desires do not arise because of tangibles-yearnings,
tangibles-aims do not arise because of tangibles-desires,
tangibles-perceptions do not arise because of tangibles-aims,
tangibles-elements do not arise because of tangibles-perceptions.

11. Because of ideas-element, brethren, arises ideas-perception,
because of ideas-perception arises ideas-aims,
because of ideas-aims arises ideas-desires,
because of ideas-desires arises ideas-yearnings,
because of ideas-yearnings arises ideas-quests;
ideas-yearnings do not arise because of ideas-quests,
ideas-desires do not arise because of ideas-yearnings,
ideas-aims do not arise because of ideas-desires,
ideas-perceptions doe not arise because of ideas-aims,
ideas-elements do not arise because of ideas-perceptions.

12. Thus it is that because of the diversity in elements, brethren, arises diversity in perceptions,
because of diversity in perceptions arises diversity in aims,
because of diversity in aims arises diversity in desires,
because of diversity in desires arises diversity in yearnings,
because of diversity in yearnings arises diversity in quests;
[that] diversity in yearnings does not arise because of diversity in quests,
diversity in desires does not arise because of diversity in yearnings,
diversity in aims does not arise because of diversity in desires,
diversity in perceptions does not arise becuse of diversity in aims, diversity in elements does not arise because of diversity in perceptions."[ed1]

[ed1] The translators include only § 3, summarizing the rest."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
I. Nānatta Vagga Paṭhama
1. Ajjhatta-Pañcakaṃ

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

2. Five (Discourses on) External Element

Sutta 9

Paṭhama Phassa [Lābha-Nānatta] Suttaṃ

Contact 1

---

[104]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthi at the Jeta's Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

2. "Because of the diversity in elements, brethren, arises diversity in perceptions,[1]
because of diversity in perceptions arises diversity in aims,
because of diversity in aims arises diversity in desires,
because of diversity in desires arises diversity in yearnings,
because of diversity in yearnings arises diversity in quests,
because of diversity in quests arises diversity in gains.

3. What, brethren, is the diversity in elements?

Visible object-element,
sound-element,
odour-element,
taste-element,
tangible-element,
idea-element.

This is called the diversity in elements.

4. How is it that because of diversity in elements there arises diversity in perceptions,
because of diversity in perceptions arises diversity in aims,
because of diversity in aims arises diversity in desires,
because of diversity in desires arises diversity in yearnings,
because of diversity in yearnings arises diversity in quests,
because of diversity in quests arises diversity in gains?

5. Because of visible object-element, brethren, arises visible object-perception,
because of visible object-perception arises visible object-aims,
because of visible object-aims arises visible object-desires,

because of visible object-desires arises visible object-yearnings,
because of visible object-yearnings arises visible object-quests,
because of visible object-quests arises visible object=gains.

6. Because of sound-element, brethren, arises sound-perception,
because of sound-perception arises sound-aims,
because of sound-aims arises sound-desires,
because of sound-desires arises sound-yearnings,
because of sound-yearnings arises sound-quests,
because of sound-quests arises sound-gains.

7. Because of odour-element, brethren, arises odour-perception,
because of odour-perception arises odour-aims,
because of odour-aims arises odour-desires,
because of odour-desires arises odour-yearnings,
because of odour-yearnings arises odour-quests,
because of odour-quests arises odour-gains.

8. Because of taste-element, brethren, arises taste-perception,
because of taste-perception arises taste-aims,
because of taste-aims arises taste-desires,
because of taste-desires arises taste-yearnings,
because of taste-yearnings arises taste-quests,
because of taste-quests arises taste-gains.

9. Because of tangibles-element, brethren, arises tangibles-perception,
because of tangibles-perception arises tangibles-aims,
because of tangibles-aims arises tangibles-desires,
because of tangibles-desires arises tangibles-yearnings,
beause of tangibles-yearnings arises tangibles-quests,
because of tangibles-quests arises tangibles-gains.

10. Because of ideas-element, brethren, arises ideas-perception,
because of ideas-perception arises ideas-aims,
because of ideas-aims arises ideas-desires,
because of ideas-desires arises ideas-yearnings,

because of ideas-yearnings arises ideas-quests,
because of ideas-quests arises ideas-gains.

11. Thus it is that because of the diversity in elements, brethren, arises diversity in perceptions,
because of diversity in perceptions arises diversity in aims,
because of diversity in aims arises diversity in desires,
because of diversity in desires arises diversity in yearnings,
because of diversity in yearnings arises diversity in quests,
because of diversity in quests arises diversity in gains."

---

ed1 The translators conclude this section abbreviating: "hence diversity of aims, hence diversity of contact, hence diversity of feeling, hence diversity of desires, hence diversity of yearnings, hence diversity of quests, hence diversity of gains." and then conclude the sutta: "The diversity and the causal order are true of each element."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
I. Nānatta Vagga Paṭhama
1. Ajjhatta-Pañcakaṃ

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

2. Five (Discourses on) External Element

Sutta 10

Dutiya Phassa [No Lābha-Nānatta] Suttaṃ

Contact 2

---

[104]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthi at the Jeta's Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

2. "Because of the diversity in elements, brethren, arises diversity in perceptions,
because of diversity in perceptions arises diversity in aims,
because of diversity in aims arises diversity in desires,
because of diversity in desires arises diversity in yearnings,
because of diversity in yearnings arises diversity in quests,
because of diversity in quests arises diversity in gains.

3. Diversity in quests does not arise because of diversity in gains, diversity in yearnings does not arise because of diversity in quests,
diversity in desires does not arise because of diversity in yearnings,
diversity in aims does not arise because of diversity in desires,
diversity in perceptions does not arise becuse of diversity in aims,
diversity in elements does not arise because of diversity in perceptions.

4. What, brethren, is the diversity in elements?

Visible object-element,
sound-element,
odour-element,
taste-element,
tangible-element,
idea-element.

This is called the diversity in elements.

5.How is it that because of diversity in elements there arises diversity in perceptions,
because of diversity in perceptions arises diversity in aims,
because of diversity in aims arises diversity in desires,
because of diversity in desires arises diversity in yearnings,

because of diversity in yearnings arises diversity in quests,
because of diversity in quests arises diversity in gains;
[that] diversity in quests does not arise because of diversity in gains,
diversity in yearnings does not arise because of diversity in quests,
diversity in desires does not arise because of diversity in yearnings,
diversity in aims does not arise because of diversity in desires,
diversity in perceptions does not arise becuse of diversity in aims,
diversity in elements does not arise because of diversity in perceptions?

6. Because of visible object-element, brethren, arises visible object-perception,
because of visible object-perception arises visible object-aims,
because of visible object-aims arises visible object-desires,
because of visible object-desires arises visible object-yearnings,
because of visible object-yearnings arises visible object-quests,
because of visible object-quests arises visible object gains;
visible object-quests do not arise because of visible object-gains,
visible object-yearnings do not arise because of visible object-quests,
visible object-desires do not arise because of visible object-yearnings,
visible object-aims do not arise because of visible object-desires,
visible object-perceptions do not arise because of visible object-aims,
visible object-elements do not arise because of visible object-perceptions.

7. Because of sound-element, brethren, arises sound-perception,
because of sound-perception arises sound-aims,
because of sound-aims arises sound-desires,
because of sound-desires arises sound-yearnings,
because of sound-yearnings arises sound-quests,
because of sound-quests arises sound-gains;
sound-quests do not arise because of sound-gains,
sound-yearnings do not arise because of sound-quests,
sound-desires do not arise because of sound-yearnings,
sound-aims do not arise because of sound-desires,
sound-perceptions do not arise because of sound-aims,
sound-elements do not arise because of sound-perceptions.

8. Because of odour-element, brethren, arises odour-perception,
because of odour-perception arises odour-aims,
because of odour-aims arises odour-desires,
because of odour-desires arises odour-yearnings,
because of odour-yearnings arises odour-quests,
because of odour-quests arises odour-gains;
odour-quests do not arise because of odour-gains,
odour-yearnings do not arise because of odour-quests,
odour-desires do not arise because of odour-yearnings,
odour-aims do not arise because of odour-desires,
odour-perceptions do not arise because of odour-aims,
odour-elements do not arise because of odour-perceptions.

9. Because of taste-element, brethren, arises taste-perception,
because of taste-perception arises taste-aims,
because of taste-aims arises taste-desires,
because of taste-desires arises taste-yearnings,
because of taste-yearnings arises taste-quests,
because of taste-quests arises taste-gains;
taste-quests do not arise because of taste-gains,
taste-yearnings do not arise because of taste-quests,
taste-desires do not arise because of taste-yearnings,
taste-aims do not arise because of taste-desires,
taste-perceptions do not arise because of taste-aims,
taste-elements do not arise because of taste-perceptions.

10. Because of tangibles-element, brethren, arises tangibles-perception,
because of tangibles-perception arises tangibles-aims,
because of tangibles-aims arises tangibles-desires,
because of tangibles-desires arises tangibles-yearnings,
beause of tangibles-yearnings arises tangibles-quests,
because of tangibles-quests arises tangibles-gains;
tangibles-quests do not arise because of tangibles gains,
tangibles-yearnings do not arise because of tangibles-quests,
tangibles-desires do not arise because of tangibles-yearnings,
tangibles-aims do not arise because of tangibles-desires,

tangibles-perceptions do not arise because of tangibles-aims,
tangibles-elements do not arise because of tangibles-perceptions.

11. Because of ideas-element, brethren, arises ideas-perception,
because of ideas-perception arises ideas-aims,
because of ideas-aims arises ideas-desires,
because of ideas-desires arises ideas-yearnings,
because of ideas-yearnings arises ideas-quests,
because of ideas-quests arises ideas-gains;
ideas-gains do not arise because of ideas-quests,
ideas-yearnings do not arise because of ideas-quests,
ideas-desires do not arise because of ideas-yearnings,
ideas-aims do not arise because of ideas-desires,
ideas-perceptions doe not arise because of ideas-aims,
ideas-elements do not arise because of ideas-perceptions.

12. Thus it is that because of the diversity in elements, brethren, arises diversity in perceptions,
because of diversity in perceptions arises diversity in aims,
because of diversity in aims arises diversity in desires,
because of diversity in desires arises diversity in yearnings,
because of diversity in yearnings arises diversity in quests,
because of diversity in quests arises diversity in gains;
[that] diversity in quests does not arise because of diversity in gains,
diversity in yearnings does not arise because of diversity in quests,
diversity in desires does not arise because of diversity in yearnings,
diversity in aims does not arise because of diversity in desires,
diversity in perceptions does not arise becuse of diversity in aims,
diversity in elements does not arise because of diversity in perceptions."[ed1]

[ed1] The translators summarize the whole sutta: "This Sutta is a virtual repetition of § 9, with emphasis on the rejection of the inverse order of causation."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
II. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

Sutta 11

Satta-Dhatu Suttaṃ

These Seven

---

[104]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthi
at the Jeta's Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"There are these seven elements, brethren — which seven?

The radiance-element,
the beauty-element,
the space-infinity- [105] element,
the consciousness-infinity-element,
the nothingness-sphere-element,
the neither perception-nor-non-perception-sphere-element,
the perception-and-feeling-cessation-element
— these are the seven.[1]

When he had so said, a certain brother said this to him: —

'Because of what, lord, are these seven elements revealed?'

That radiance-element, brother, is revealed through darkness.

That beauty-element is revealed through ugliness.

That space-infinity-element is revealed through visible object.

That consciousness-infinity-element is revealed through space-infinity-element.

And similarly each of the remaining three is revealed through the element named previously.

And how, lord, can there be attainment
of each of these seven elements?

The radiance, beauty, space-infinity, consciousness-infinity-sphere and nothingness-sphere-elements are to be won by attainment in perception.

The neither-perception-nor-non-perception-sphere-element is to be won by attainment in the remaning activities of mind.

The perception and feeling cessation-element is to be won by attainment of cessation.

---

[1] All — so the Comy. — the first two included, are modes of Jhāna. Cf. Dialogues, i, 249-51; ii, 119; Bud. Psych. Ethics, 72, 182, 204. Bud. Psychology, 105 f.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
II. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

Sutta 12

Sa-Nidāna Suttaṃ

With Causal Basis

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
II. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

Sutta 13

Giñjak-ā-Vasatha Suttaṃ

Brick Hall[1]

---

[107]

THUS have I heard.

The Exalted One was once staying in Ñātika at the Brick Hall.

There he addressed the brethren:

"Brethren!"

"Even so, lord," they responded.

The Exalted One said this:-

"Because of [an] element, brethren,
arises a notion,
arises an opinion,
arises thought."

When he had said thus,
the venerable believer Kaccāyana
said to the Exalted One:-

"The opinion, lord,
that of those who are not supremely enlightened [some one is] supremely enlightened - what causes this opinion to manifest itself?"

"Mighty is that element, Kaccayana,
to wit,
the element of ignorance.

Low, I tell you, Kaccayana,
is the element through which low notions,
low opinions,
low thoughts,
low volitions,
low wishes,
low aspirations,
a low person,
low speech arises,
low is what he declares,
what he teaches,
what he reveals,
sets forth,
discloses,
analyzes,

explains,
and low is the rebirth of him.

Average I tell you, Kaccayana,
is the element through which average notions,
average opinions,
average thoughts,
average volitions,
average wishes,
average aspirations,
average average persons,
average speech arises,
moderately good[2] is what he declares,
teaches,
reveals,
sets forth,
discloses,
analyzes,
explains,
and moderately good is the rebirth of him.

[108] Excellent, I tell you, Kaccayana, is the element through which excellent notions,
excellent opinions,
excellent thoughts,
excellent volitions,
excellent wishes,
excellent aspirations,
excellent persons,
excellent speech arises,
excellent is what he declares,
teaches,
reveals,
sets forth,
discloses,
analyzes,

explains,
and excellent is the rebirth of him."

---

[1] See above, p. 51.

[2] Average, moderately good = both majjhima, lit. middling.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
II. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

Sutta 14

Hīn-ā-dhimuttika Suttaṃ

Low Tastes[1]

---

[108]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren."

"Yes, lord," replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Beings of low tastes
flow together,
meet together
with them of low tastes.

They of virtuous tastes
flow together,
meet together
with them of virtuous tastes.

In the past, brethren, through an element it was,
that beings flowed together,
met together.

Beings of low tastes
flowed together,
met together
with them of low tastes.

Beings of virtuous tastes
flowed together,
met together
with them of virtuous tastes.

In the future, brethren, through an element it will be,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Beings of low tastes
will flow together,

meet together
with them of low tastes.

Beings of virtuous tastes
will flow together,
meet together
with them of virtuous tastes.

In the present, brethren, through an element it is,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Beings of low tastes
flow together,
meet together
with them of low tastes.

Beings of virtuous tastes
flow together,
meet together
with them of virtuous tastes."

---

[1] Adhimutti

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
II. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

Sutta 15

Kammam [Caṇkama] Suttaṃ

Conduct[1]

---

[108]

THUS have I heard.

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha
on the hill Vulture's Peak.

Now at that time the venerable Sāriputta
with many brethren
was walking to and fro
not far from the Exalted One.

And the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
with many brethren
was walking to and fro
not far from the Exalted One.

And the venerable Mahā-Kassapa
with many brethren
was walking to and fro
not far from the Exalted One.

And the venerable Anuruddha
with many brethren
was walking to and fro
not far from the Exalted One.

And the venerable Puṇṇa Mantānī's son
with many brethren
was walking to and fro
not far from the Exalted One.

And the venerable Upāli
with many brethren
was walking to and fro
not far from the Exalted One.

And the venerable Ānanda
with many brethren
was walking to and fro
not far from the Exalted One.

And the venerable Devadatta
with many brethren
was walking to and fro
not far from the Exalted One.

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren:[2] -

"Do ye see Sāriputta, brethren, walking to and fro with many brethren?"

"Even so, lord."

"All of those brethren are of great wisdom."

Do ye see Moggallāna, brethren,
so walking to and fro with many brethren?"

"Even so, lord."

[109] "All of those brethren are of great will-potency.

Do ye see Kassapa, brethren,
so walking to and fro with many brethren?"

"Even so, lord."

"All of those brethren keep the stricter observances.[3]

Do ye see Anuruddha, brethren,
so walking to and fro with many brethren?"

"Even so, lord."

"All of those brethren have the deva-sight.[4]

Do ye see Puṇṇa Mantānī's son, brethren,
so walking to and fro with many brethren?"

"Even so, lord."

"All of those brethren are of righteous converse.

Do ye see Upāli, brethren,
so walking to and fro with many brethren?"

"Even so, lord."

"All of those brethren know the Vinaya by heart.[5]

Do ye see Ānanda, brethren,
so walking to and fro with many brethren?"

"Even so, lord."

"All of those brethren have learnt much.[6]

Do ye see Devadatta, brethren,
so walking to and fro with many brethren?"

"Even so, lord."

"All of those brethren have evil wants.

Through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Beings of low tastes
flow together,
meet together
with them of low tastes.

They of virtuous tastes
flow together,
meet together
with them of virtuous tastes.

In the past, brethren, through an element it was,
that beings flowed together,
met together.

Beings of low tastes
flowed together,
met together
with them of low tastes.

Beings of virtuous tastes
flowed together,
met together
with them of virtuous tastes.

In the future, brethren, through an element it will be,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Beings of low tastes
will flow together,
meet together
with them of low tastes.

Beings of virtuous tastes
will flow together,
meet together
with them of virtuous tastes.

In the present, brethren, through an element it is,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Beings of low tastes
flow together,
meet together
with them of low tastes.

Beings of virtuous tastes
flow together,
meet together
with them of virtuous tastes."

---

[1] Kammaṃ.

[2] The following acknowledgments made by the Head may be compared with the longer list in A. i, 23 f. There is consonance in the commendation.

[3] Dhutanga. In the Milinda trans. 'extra vows.'

[4] Clairvoyance.

[5] Lit. 'Vinaya-bearers.'

[6] Lit. 'much-heard.' As we might say 'well read.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
II. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

Sutta 16

Sa-Gātha Suttaṃ

[Sutta] with Verses

---

[109]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren."

"Yes, lord," replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Beings of low tastes
flow together,
meet together
with them of low tastes.

In the past, brethren, through an element it was,
that beings flowed together,
met together.

Beings of low tastes
flowed together,
met together
with them of low tastes.

In the future, brethren, through an element it will be,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Beings of low tastes
will flow together,
meet together
with them of low tastes.

In the present, brethren, through an element it is,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Beings of low tastes
flow together,
meet together
with them of low tastes.

Just, brethren, as muck flows together,
meets together with muck,
urine with urine,
pus with pus,
blood with blood,
through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Beings of low tastes
flow together,
meet together
with them of low tastes.

In the past, brethren, through an element it was,
that beings flowed together,
met together.

Beings of low tastes
flowed together,
met together
with them of low tastes.

In the future, brethren, through an element it will be,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Beings of low tastes
will flow together,
meet together
with them of low tastes.

In the present, brethren, through an element it is,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Beings of low tastes
flow together,
meet together
with them of low tastes.

§

[110] Through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

They of virtuous tastes
flow together,
meet together
with them of virtuous tastes.

In the past, brethren, through an element it was,
that beings flowed together,
met together.

Beings of virtuous tastes
flowed together,
met together
with them of virtuous tastes.

In the future, brethren, through an element it will be,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Beings of virtuous tastes
will flow together,
meet together
with them of virtuous tastes.

In the present, brethren, through an element it is,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Beings of virtuous tastes
flow together,
meet together
with them of virtuous tastes.

Just, brethren, as milk flows together,
meets together with milk,
oil with oil,
ghee with ghee,
honey with honey,
molasses with molasses,
even so through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

They of virtuous tastes
flow together,
meet together
with them of virtuous tastes.

In the past, brethren, through an element it was,
that beings flowed together,
met together.

Beings of virtuous tastes
flowed together,
met together
with them of virtuous tastes.

In the future, brethren, through an element it will be,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Beings of virtuous tastes
will flow together,
meet together
with them of virtuous tastes.

In the present, brethren, through an element it is,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Beings of virtuous tastes
flow together,
meet together
with them of virtuous tastes.

This said the Exalted One.

The Well-farer so saying,
the Master said this yet further:-

Lust's jungle, of association born,
By not associating is cut down.
As one who, mounted on a puny plank,
Is in mid-ocean whelmed beneath the waves,
So even he of blameless life doth sink
When thrown together with the man of sloth.
Wherefore from such let him keep well apart -
The sluggard and the poor in energy.
Let him consort with those who live aloof,
With noble, eager, contemplative souls,
With men of constant quickened energies,
Yea, let him hold communion with the wise.[1]

---

[1] = Pss. of the Brethren, verses 147, 148, save for the first two lines. The translation is here made a little more correct.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
II. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

Sutta 17

Asaddha Suttaṃ

Unbelievers

---

[110]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren."

"Yes, lord," replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Unbelievers flow together, meet together with unbelievers,
the unconscientious with the unconscientious,
the indiscreet with the indiscreet,
the untaught with the untaught,
the lazy with the lazy,
the muddleminded with the muddleminded,
the unwise with the unwise.

In the past, brethren, through an element it was,
that beings flowed together,
met together.

Unbelievers flowed together, met together with unbelievers,
the unconscientious with the unconscientious,
the indiscreet with the indiscreet,
the untaught with the untaught,
the lazy with the lazy,
the muddleminded with the muddleminded,
the unwise with the unwise.

In the future, brethren, through an element it will be,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Unbelievers will flow together, meet together with unbelievers,
the unconscientious with the unconscientious,
the indiscreet with the indiscreet,
the untaught with the untaught,
the lazy with the lazy,
the muddleminded with the muddleminded,
the unwise with the unwise.

In the present, brethren, through an element it is,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Unbelievers flow together, meet together with unbelievers,
the unconscientious with the unconscientious,
the indiscreet with the indiscreet,
the untaught with the untaught,
the lazy with the lazy,
the muddleminded with the muddleminded,
the unwise with the unwise.

Through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Believers flow together, meet together with believers,
the conscientious with the conscientious,
the discreet with the discreet,
the educated with the educated,
the energetic with [111] the energetic,
the levelheaded with the levelheaded,
the wise with the wise.

In the past, brethren, through an element it was,
that beings flowed together,
met together.

Believers flowed together, met together with believers,
the conscientious with the conscientious,
the discreet with the discreet,
the educated with the educated,

the energetic with the energetic,
the levelheaded with the levelheaded,
the wise with the wise.

In the future, brethren, through an element it will be,
that beings will flow together,
meet together.

Believers will flow together, meet together with believers,
the conscientious with the conscientious,
the discreet with the discreet,
the educated with the educated,
the energetic with the energetic,
the levelheaded with the levelheaded,
the wise with the wise.

In the present, brethren, through an element it is,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Believers flow together, meet together with believers,
the conscientious with the conscientious,
the discreet with the discreet,
the educated with the educated,
the energetic with the energetic,
the levelheaded with the levelheaded,
the wise with the wise."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
II. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

Sutta 18

Asaddha-Mmulaka Panca [Assaddha-Mulakatika Pancaka] Suttaṃ

The Five Based on Unbelievers

---

[111]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren."

"Yes, lord," replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Unbelievers flow together, meet together with unbelievers,
the unconscientious with the unconscientious,
the unwise with the unwise.

Believers flow together, meet together with believers,
the conscientious with the conscientious,
the wise with the wise.

In the past, brethren, through an element it was,
that beings flowed together,
met together.

Unbelievers flowed together, met together with unbelievers,
the unconscientious with the unconscientious,
the unwise with the unwise.

Believers flowed together, met together with believers,
the conscientious with the conscientious,
the wise with the wise.

In the future, brethren, through an element it will be,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Unbelievers will flow together, meet together with unbelievers,
the unconscientious with the unconscientious,
the unwise with the unwise.

Believers will flow together, meet together with believers,
the conscientious with the conscientious,
the wise with the wise.

In the present, brethren, through an element it is,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Unbelievers flow together, meet together with unbelievers,
the unconscientious with the unconscientious,
the unwise with the unwise.

Believers flow together, meet together with believers,
the conscientious with the conscientious,
the wise with the wise.

§

"Through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Unbelievers flow together, meet together with unbelievers,
the indiscreet with the indiscreet,
the unwise with the unwise.

Believers flow together, meet together with believers,
the discreet with the discreet,
the wise with the wise.

In the past, brethren, through an element it was,
that beings flowed together,
met together.

Unbelievers flowed together, met together with unbelievers,
the indiscreet with the indiscreet,
the unwise with the unwise.

Believers flowed together, met together with believers,
the discreet with the discreet,
the wise with the wise.

In the future, brethren, through an element it will be,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Unbelievers will flow together, meet together with unbelievers,
the indiscreet with the indiscreet,
the unwise with the unwise.

Believers will flow together, meet together with believers,
the discreet with the discreet,
the wise with the wise.

In the present, brethren, through an element it is,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Unbelievers flow together, meet together with unbelievers,
the indiscreet with the indiscreet,
the unwise with the unwise.

Believers flow together, meet together with believers,
the discreet with the discreet,
the wise with the wise.

§

"Through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Unbelievers flow together, meet together with unbelievers,
the untaught with the untaught,
the unwise with the unwise.

Believers flow together, meet together with believers,
the educated with the educated,
the wise with the wise.

In the past, brethren, through an element it was,
that beings flowed together,
met together.

Unbelievers flowed together, met together with unbelievers,
the untaught with the untaught,
the unwise with the unwise.

Believers flowed together, met together with believers,
the educated with the educated,
the wise with the wise.

In the future, brethren, through an element it will be,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Unbelievers will flow together, meet together with unbelievers,
the untaught with the untaught,
the unwise with the unwise.

Believers will flow together, meet together with believers,
the educated with the educated,
the wise with the wise.

In the present, brethren, through an element it is,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Unbelievers flow together, meet together with unbelievers,
the untaught with the untaught,
the unwise with the unwise.

Believers flow together, meet together with believers,
the educated with the educated,
the wise with the wise.

§

"Through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Unbelievers flow together, meet together with unbelievers,
the lazy with the lazy,
the unwise with the unwise.

Believers flow together, meet together with believers,
the energetic with the energetic,
the wise with the wise.

In the past, brethren, through an element it was,
that beings flowed together,
met together.

Unbelievers flowed together, met together with unbelievers,
the lazy with the lazy,
the unwise with the unwise.

Believers flowed together, met together with believers,
the energetic with the energetic,
the wise with the wise.

In the future, brethren, through an element it will be,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Unbelievers will flow together, meet together with unbelievers,
the lazy with the lazy,
the unwise with the unwise.

Believers will flow together, meet together with believers,
the energetic with the energetic,
the wise with the wise.

In the present, brethren, through an element it is,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Unbelievers flow together, meet together with unbelievers,
the lazy with the lazy,
the unwise with the unwise.

Believers flow together, meet together with believers,
the energetic with the energetic,
the wise with the wise.

§

"Through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Unbelievers flow together, meet together with unbelievers,
the muddleminded with the muddleminded,
the unwise with the unwise.

Believers flow together, meet together with believers,
the levelheaded with the levelheaded,
the wise with the wise.

In the past, brethren, through an element it was,
that beings flowed together,
met together.

Unbelievers flowed together, met together with unbelievers,
the muddleminded with the muddleminded,
the unwise with the unwise.

Believers flowed together, met together with believers,
the levelheaded with the levelheaded,
the wise with the wise.

In the future, brethren, through an element it will be,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Unbelievers will flow together, meet together with unbelievers,
the muddleminded with the muddleminded,
the unwise with the unwise.

Believers will flow together, meet together with believers,
the levelheaded with the levelheaded,
the wise with the wise.

In the present, brethren, through an element it is,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Unbelievers flow together, meet together with unbelievers,
the muddleminded with the muddleminded,
the unwise with the unwise.

Believers flow together, meet together with believers,
the levelheaded with the levelheaded,
the wise with the wise."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
II. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

Sutta 19

Ahirika-Mulaka Catukka [Ahirika-Mūlakatika-Catukka] Suttaṃ

The Four Based on 'The Unconscientiousness'

---

[111]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren."

"Yes, lord," replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The unconscientious flow together,
meet together with the unconscientious,
the indiscreet with the indiscreet,
the unwise with the unwise.

The conscientious flow together,
meet together with the conscientious,
the discreet with the discreet,
the wise with the wise.

In the past, brethren,
through an element it was,
that beings flowed together,
met together.

The unconscientious flowed together,
met together the unconscientious,
the indiscreet with the indiscreet,
the unwise with the unwise.

The conscientious flowed together,
met together with the conscientious,
the discreet with the discreet,
the wise with the wise.

In the future, brethren,
through an element it will be,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The unconscientious will flow together,
meet together the unconscientious,
the indiscreet with the indiscreet,
the unwise with the unwise.

The conscientious will flow together,
meet together with the conscientious,
the discreet with the discreet,
the wise with the wise.

In the present, brethren,
through an element it is,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The unconscientious flow together,
meet together the unconscientious,
the indiscreet with the indiscreet,
the unwise with the unwise.

The conscientious flow together,
meet together with the conscientious,
the discreet with the discreet,
the wise with the wise.

§

"Through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The unconscientious flow together,
meet together the unconscientious,

the untaught with the untaught,
the unwise with the unwise.

The conscientious flow together,
meet together with the conscientious,
the educated with the educated,
the wise with the wise.

In the past, brethren,
through an element it was,
that beings flowed together,
met together.

The unconscientious flowed together,
met together the unconscientious,
the untaught with the untaught,
the unwise with the unwise.

The conscientious flowed together,
met together with the conscientious,
the educated with the educated,
the wise with the wise.

In the future, brethren,
through an element it will be,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The unconscientious will flow together,
meet together the unconscientious,
the untaught with the untaught,
the unwise with the unwise.

The conscientious will flow together,
meet together with the conscientious,
the educated with the educated,
the wise with the wise.

In the present, brethren,
through an element it is,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The unconscientious flow together,
meet together the unconscientious,
the untaught with the untaught,
the unwise with the unwise.

The conscientious flow together,
meet together with the conscientious,
the educated with the educated,
the wise with the wise.

§

"Through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The unconscientious flow together,
meet together the unconscientious,
the lazy with the lazy,
the unwise with the unwise.

The conscientious flow together,
meet together with the conscientious,
the energetic with the energetic,
the wise with the wise.

In the past, brethren,
through an element it was,

that beings flowed together,
met together.

The unconscientious flowed together,
met together the unconscientious,
the lazy with the lazy,
the unwise with the unwise.

The conscientious flowed together,
met together with the conscientious,
the energetic with the energetic,
the wise with the wise.

In the future, brethren,
through an element it will be,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The unconscientious will flow together,
meet together the unconscientious,
the lazy with the lazy,
the unwise with the unwise.

The conscientious will flow together,
meet together with the conscientious,
the energetic with the energetic,
the wise with the wise.

In the present, brethren,
through an element it is,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The unconscientious flow together,
meet together the unconscientious,
the lazy with the lazy,
the unwise with the unwise.

The conscientious flow together,
meet together with the conscientious,
the energetic with the energetic,
the wise with the wise.

§

"Through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The unconscientious flow together,
meet together the unconscientious,
the muddleminded with the muddleminded,
the unwise with the unwise.

The conscientious flow together,
meet together with the conscientious,
the levelheaded with the levelheaded,
the wise with the wise.

In the past, brethren,
through an element it was,
that beings flowed together,
met together.

The unconscientious flowed together,
met together the unconscientious,
the muddleminded with the muddleminded,
the unwise with the unwise.

The conscientious flowed together,
met together with the conscientious,

the levelheaded with the levelheaded,
the wise with the wise.

In the future, brethren,
through an element it will be,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The unconscientious will flow together,
meet together the unconscientious,
the muddleminded with the muddleminded,
the unwise with the unwise.

The conscientious will flow together,
meet together with the conscientious,
the levelheaded with the levelheaded,
the wise with the wise.

In the present, brethren,
through an element it is,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The unconscientious flow together,
meet together the unconscientious,
the muddleminded with the muddleminded,
the unwise with the unwise.

The conscientious flow together,
meet together with the conscientious,
the levelheaded with the levelheaded,
the wise with the wise.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
II. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

Sutta 20

Anottāpa-Mūlaka Tīni [Anottāpa-Mūlaka-Tikattaya] Suttaṃ

The Three Based on 'The Indiscreet',

---

[111]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren."

"Yes, lord," replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The indiscreet flow together,
meet together the indiscreet,
the untaught with the untaught,
the unwise with the unwise.

The discreet flow together,
meet together with the discreet,
the educated with the educated,
the wise with the wise.

In the past, brethren,
through an element it was,
that beings flowed together,
met together.

The indiscreet flowed together,
met together the indiscreet,
the untaught with the untaught,
the unwise with the unwise.

The discreet flowed together,
met together with the discreet,
the educated with the educated,
the wise with the wise.

In the future, brethren,
through an element it will be,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The indiscreet will flow together,
meet together the indiscreet,
the untaught with the untaught,
the unwise with the unwise.

The discreet will flow together,
meet together with the discreet,
the educated with the educated,
the wise with the wise.

In the present, brethren,
through an element it is,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The indiscreet flow together,
meet together the indiscreet,
the untaught with the untaught,
the unwise with the unwise.

The discreet flow together,
meet together with the discreet,
the educated with the educated,
the wise with the wise.

§

"Through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The indiscreet flow together,
meet together the indiscreet,

the lazy with the lazy,
the unwise with the unwise.

The discreet flow together,
meet together with the discreet,
the energetic with the energetic,
the wise with the wise.

In the past, brethren,
through an element it was,
that beings flowed together,
met together.

The indiscreet flowed together,
met together the indiscreet,
the lazy with the lazy,
the unwise with the unwise.

The discreet flowed together,
met together with the discreet,
the energetic with the energetic,
the wise with the wise.

In the future, brethren,
through an element it will be,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The indiscreet will flow together,
meet together the indiscreet,
the lazy with the lazy,
the unwise with the unwise.

The discreet will flow together,
meet together with the discreet,
the energetic with the energetic,
the wise with the wise.

In the present, brethren,
through an element it is,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The indiscreet flow together,
meet together the indiscreet,
the lazy with the lazy,
the unwise with the unwise.

The discreet flow together,
meet together with the discreet,
the energetic with the energetic,
the wise with the wise.

§

"Through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The indiscreet flow together,
meet together the indiscreet,
the muddleminded with the muddleminded,
the unwise with the unwise.

The discreet flow together,
meet together with the discreet,
the levelheaded with the levelheaded,
the wise with the wise.

In the past, brethren,
through an element it was,

that beings flowed together,
met together.

The indiscreet flowed together,
met together the indiscreet,
the muddleminded with the muddleminded,
the unwise with the unwise.

The discreet flowed together,
met together with the discreet,
the levelheaded with the levelheaded,
the wise with the wise.

In the future, brethren,
through an element it will be,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The indiscreet will flow together,
meet together the indiscreet,
the muddleminded with the muddleminded,
the unwise with the unwise.

The discreet will flow together,
meet together with the discreet,
the levelheaded with the levelheaded,
the wise with the wise.

In the present, brethren,
through an element it is,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The indiscreet flow together,
meet together the indiscreet,
the muddleminded with the muddleminded,
the unwise with the unwise.

The discreet flow together,
meet together with the discreet,
the levelheaded with the levelheaded,
the wise with the wise.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
II. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

Sutta 21

Appa-s-Sutena Dvi [Appa-s-Suta-Mūlaka-Tika-Dvaya] Suttaṃ

The Two by the term 'The Uneducated,'

---

[111]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren."

"Yes, lord," replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The untaught flow together,
meet together with the untaught,
the lazy with the lazy,
the unwise with the unwise.

The educated flow together,
meet together with the educated,
the energetic with the energetic,
the wise with the wise.

In the past, brethren,
through an element it was,
that beings flowed together,
met together.

The untaught flowed together,
met together with the untaught,
the lazy with the lazy,
the unwise with the unwise.

The educated flowed together,
met together with the educated,
the energetic with the energetic,
the wise with the wise.

In the future, brethren,
through an element it will be,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The untaught will flow together,
meet together with the untaught,
the lazy with the lazy,
the unwise with the unwise.

The educated will flow together,
meet together with the educated,
the energetic with the energetic,
the wise with the wise.

In the present, brethren,
through an element it is,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The untaught flow together,
meet together with the untaught,
the lazy with the lazy,
the unwise with the unwise.

The educated flow together,
meet together with the educated,
the energetic with the energetic,
the wise with the wise.

§

"Through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The untaught flow together,
meet together with the untaught,

the muddleminded with the muddleminded,
the unwise with the unwise.

The educated flow together,
meet together with the educated,
the levelheaded with the levelheaded,
the wise with the wise.

In the past, brethren,
through an element it was,
that beings flowed together,
met together.

The untaught flowed together,
met together with the untaught,
the muddleminded with the muddleminded,
the unwise with the unwise.

The educated flowed together,
met together with the educated,
the levelheaded with the levelheaded,
the wise with the wise.

In the future, brethren,
through an element it will be,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The untaught will flow together,
meet together with the untaught,
the muddleminded with the muddleminded,
the unwise with the unwise.

The educated will flow together,
meet together with the educated,
the levelheaded with the levelheaded,
the wise with the wise.

In the present, brethren,
through an element it is,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The untaught flow together,
meet together with the untaught,
the muddleminded with the muddleminded,
the unwise with the unwise.

The educated flow together,
meet together with the educated,
the levelheaded with the levelheaded,
the wise with the wise."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
II. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

Sutta 22

Kusita [Kusita-Mulaka-Tik'Eka] Suttaṃ

The Lazy

---

[111]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren."

"Yes, lord," replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The lazy flow together,
meet together with the lazy,
the muddleminded with the muddleminded,
the unwise with the unwise.

The energetic flow together,
meet together with the energetic,
the levelheaded with the levelheaded,
the wise with the wise.

In the past, brethren,
through an element it was,
that beings flowed together,
met together.

The lazy flowed together,
met together the lazy,
the muddleminded with the muddleminded,
the unwise with the unwise.

The energetic flowed together,
met together with the energetic,
the levelheaded with the levelheaded,
the wise with the wise.

In the future, brethren,
through an element it will be,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The lazy will flow together,
meet together with the lazy,
the muddleminded with the muddleminded,
the unwise with the unwise.

The energetic will flow together,
meet together with the energetic,
the levelheaded with the levelheaded,
the wise with the wise.

In the present, brethren,
through an element it is,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

The lazy flow together,
meet together with the lazy,
the muddleminded with the muddleminded,
the unwise with the unwise.

The energetic flow together,
meet together with the energetic,
the levelheaded with the levelheaded,
the wise with the wise."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
III. Kamma-Patha Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

3. Courses of Action

Sutta 23

Asamāhita Suttaṃ

The Unconcentrated

---

[111]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren."

"Yes, lord," replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Unbelievers flow together,
meet together with unbelievers,
the unconscientious with the unconscientious,
the indiscreet with the indiscreet,
the unconcentrated with the unconcentrated,
the unwise with the unwise.

Believers flow together,
meet together with believers,
the conscientious with the conscientious,
the discreet with the discreet,
the concentrated with the concentrated,
the wise with the wise."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
III. Kamma-Patha Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

3. Courses of Action

Sutta 24

Du-s-Sīla Suttaṃ

The Vicious

---

[112]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren."

"Yes, lord," replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Unbelievers flow together,
meet together with unbelievers,
the unconscientious with the unconscientious,
the indiscreet with the indiscreet,
the vicious with the vicious,
the unwise with the unwise.

Believers flow together,
meet together with believers,
the conscientious with the conscientious,
the discreet with the discreet,
the virtuous with the virtuous,
the wise with the wise."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
III. Kamma-Patha Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

3. Courses of Action

Sutta 25

Pañca Sikkhāpadani Suttaṃ

The Five Moral Precepts[1]

---

[112]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren."

"Yes, lord," replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Unbelievers flow together,
meet together with unbelievers,
they who take life with they who take life,
they who take what is not given with they who take what is not given,
they who wrongly act in desires of sense with they who wrongly act in desires of sense,
the liars with the liars
those given to strong drink with those given to strong drink.

In the past, brethren,
through an element it was,
that beings flowed together,
met together.

Unbelievers flowed together,
met together with unbelievers,
those who took life with those who took life,
those who took what is not given with those who took what is not given,
those who wrongly acted in desires of sense with those who wrongly acted in desires of sense,
the liars with the liars
those given to strong drink with those given to strong drink.

In the future, brethren,
through an element it will be,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Unbelievers will flow together,
meet together with unbelievers,
they who take life with they who take life,
they who take what is not given with they who take what is not given,
they who wrongly act in desires of sense with they who wrongly act in desires of sense,
the liars with the liars
those given to strong drink with those given to strong drink.

In the present, brethren,
through an element it is,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Unbelievers flow together,
meet together with unbelievers,
they who take life with they who take life,
they who take what is not given with they who take what is not given,
they who wrongly act in desires of sense with they who wrongly act in desires of sense,
the liars with the liars
those given to strong drink with those given to strong drink.

§

"Through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Believers flow together,
meet together with believers,
they who abstain from taking life with they who abstain from taking taking life,

they who abstain from taking what is not given with they who abstain from taking what is not given,
they who abstain from wrongly acting in desires of sense with they who abstain from wrongly acting in desires of sense,
they who are not liars with they who are not liars
those who abstain from strong drink with those who abstain from strong drink.

In the past, brethren,
through an element it was,
that beings flowed together,
met together.

Believers flowed together,
met together with believers,
they who abstained from taking life with they who abstained from taking taking life, they who abstained from taking what is not given with they who abstained from taking what is not given,
they who abstained from wrongly acting in desires of sense with they who abstained from wrongly acting in desires of sense, they who were not liars with they who were not liars
those who abstained from strong drink with those who abstained from strong drink.

In the future, brethren,
through an element it will be,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Believers will flow together,
meet together with believers,
they who abstain from taking life with they who abstain from taking taking life,
they who abstain from taking what is not given with they who abstain from taking what is not given,

they who abstain from wrongly acting in desires of sense with they who abstain from wrongly acting in desires of sense,
they who are not liars with they who are not liars
those who abstain from strong drink with those who abstain from strong drink.

In the present, brethren,
through an element it is,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Believers flow together,
meet together with believers,
they who abstain from taking life with they who abstain from taking taking life,
they who abstain from taking what is not given with they who abstain from taking what is not given,
they who abstain from wrongly acting in desires of sense with they who abstain from wrongly acting in desires of sense,
they who are not liars with they who are not liars
those who abstain from strong drink with those who abstain from strong drink."

---

[1] Sikkhāpadāni. Pañcasīlani or pañcasīla seems to be a later term.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
III. Kamma-Patha Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

3. Courses of Action

Sutta 26

Satta Kamma-Patha Suttaṃ

The Seven Courses of Action

---

[112]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren."

"Yes, lord," replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Unbelievers flow together,
meet together with unbelievers,
they who take life with they who take life,
they who take what is not given with they who take what is not given,
they who wrongly act in desires of sense with they who wrongly act in desires of sense,
the liars with the liars
those given to slander with those given to slander

those given to abuseive speech with those given to abusive speech those given to idle talk with those given to idle talk.

Believers flow together,
meet together with believers,
they who abstain from taking life with they who abstain from taking taking life,
they who abstain from taking what is not given with they who abstain from taking what is not given,
they who abstain from wrongly acting in desires of sense with they who abstain from wrongly acting in desires of sense,
they who are not liars with they who are not liars
those who abstain from slander with those those who abstain from slander

those those who abstain from abuseive speech with those those who abstain from abusive speech those those who abstain from idle talk with those those who abstain from idle talk."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
III. Kamma-Patha Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

3. Courses of Action

Sutta 27

Dasa Kamma-Patha Suttaṃ

The Ten Courses of Action

---

[112]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren."

"Yes, lord," replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

Unbelievers flow together,
meet together with unbelievers,
they who take life with they who take life,
they who take what is not given with they who take what is not given,
they who wrongly act in desires of sense with they who wrongly act in desires of sense,
the liars with the liars,
those given to slander with those given to slander,

those given to abuseive speech with those given to abusive speech,
those given to idle talk with those given to idle talk,
the covetous with those that are covetous,
the malicious with those that are malicious,
those of wrong views with those of wrong views.[1]

Believers flow together,
meet together with believers,
they who abstain from taking life with they who abstain from taking taking life,
they who abstain from taking what is not given with they who abstain from taking what is not given,
they who abstain from wrongly acting in desires of sense with they who abstain from wrongly acting in desires of sense,
they who are not liars with they who are not liars
those who abstain from slander with those those who abstain from slander

those those who abstain from abuseive speech with those those who abstain from abusive speech

those those who abstain from idle talk with those those who abstain from idle talk,
those not covetous with those that are not covetous,
those not malicious with those that are not malicious,
those of right views with those of right views."

---

[1] Cf. Dialogues, iii, 247, (#iii.), (#iv.).

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
III. Kamma-Patha Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

3. Courses of Action

Sutta 28

Aṭṭh'Aṇgika Suttaṃ

The Eightfold

---

[112]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren."

"Yes, lord," replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

They of wrong views with them of wrong views;
they of wrong aims with them of wrong aims,
they of wrong speech with them of wrong speech,
they of wrong conduct with them of wrong conduct,
they of wrong livelihood with them of wrong livelihood,
they of wrong endeavour with them of wrong endeavour,
they of wrong mindfulness with them of wrong mindfulness,
they of wrong concentration with them of wrong concentration.

They of right views with them of right views,
they of right aims with them of right aims,
they of right speech with them of right speech,
they of right conduct with them of right conduct,
they of right livelihood with them of right livelihood,
they of right endeavour with them of right endeavour,
they of right mindfulness with them of right mindfulness,
they of right concentration with them of right concentration."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
III. Kamma-Patha Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

3. Courses of Action

Sutta 29

Das'Aṇgika Suttaṃ

Ten Factors

---

[113]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren."

"Yes, lord," replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Through an element it is, brethren,
that beings flow together,
meet together.

They of wrong views with them of wrong views;
they of wrong aims with them of wrong aims,
they of wrong speech with them of wrong speech,
they of wrong conduct with them of wrong conduct,
they of wrong livelihood with them of wrong livelihood,
they of wrong endeavour with them of wrong endeavour,
they of wrong mindfulness with them of wrong mindfulness,
they of wrong concentration with them of wrong concentration,
they of wrong knowledge[1] with them of wrong knowledge,
they of wrong emancipation with them of wrong emancipation.

They of right views with them of right views,
they of right aims with them of right aims,
they of right speech with them of right speech,
they of right conduct with them of right conduct,
they of right livelihood with them of right livelihood,
they of right endeavour with them of right endeavour,
they of right mindfulness with them of right mindfulness,
they of right concentration with them of right concentration,
they of right knowledge with them of right knowledge, they of right emancipation with them of right emancipation."

---

[1] Cf. S. iii, 109 [Ed.? the 8]; v, 1, [again only the 8] 15, 18, 20, 23, 334. Mentioned also in A. v several times, and in D. iii, 290 f.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
IV. Catuttha Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

4. [Untitled]

Sutta 30

Catu-Dhātu Suttaṃ

The Four

---

[113]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī
in Jeta Grove,
the Anāthapiṇḍika Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren."

"Yes, lord," replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"There are these four elements, brethren.

Which are the four?

Earth-element,
water-element,
heat-element,
air-element:
these are the four."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
IV. Catuttha Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

4. [Untitled]

Sutta 31

Pubba Suttaṃ

Before

---

[113]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta Grove, the Anāthapiṇḍika Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren."

"Yes, lord," replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Before my enlightenment, brethren,
to me,
being unenlightened and Bodhisat only,
this occurred: -

'What is the satisfaction,
what the misery,
what the escape
that comes to us
in connection with the earth-element?

What is the satisfaction,
what the misery,
what the escape
that comes to us
in connection with the water-element?

What is the satisfaction,
what the misery,
what the escape
that comes to us
in connection with the heat-element?

What is the satisfaction,
what the misery,
what the escape
that comes to us
in connection with the air-element?'[1]

§

To me it occurred
that the pleasure,
the happiness
arising [114] through the earth-element
is the satisfaction that comes
in connection with the earth-element.

To me it occurred
that the transience,
the suffering,
the changeful nature
arising through the earth-element
is the misery that comes
in connection with the earth-element.

To me it occurred
that the suppression of passion and desire,
the elimination thereof
in connection with the earth-element
is the escape that comes
in connection with the earth-element.

■

To me it occurred
that the pleasure,
the happiness
arising through the water-element
is the satisfaction that comes
in connection with the water-element.

To me it occurred
that the transience,
the suffering,
the changeful nature

arising through the water-element
is the misery that comes
in connection with the water-element.

To me it occurred
that the suppression of passion and desire,
the elimination thereof
in connection with the water-element
is the escape that comes
in connection with the water-element.

■

To me it occurred
that the pleasure,
the happiness
arising through the heat-element
is the satisfaction that comes
in connection with the earth-element.

To me it occurred
that the transience,
the suffering,
the changeful nature
arising through the heat-element
is the misery that comes
in connection with the heat-element.

To me it occurred
that the suppression of passion and desire,
the elimination thereof
in connection with the heat-element
is the escape that comes
in connection with the heat-element.

■

To me it occurred
that the pleasure,
the happiness
arising through the air-element
is the satisfaction that comes
in connection with the air-element.

To me it occurred
that the transience,
the suffering,
the changeful nature
arising through the earth-element
is the misery that comes
in connection with the air-element.

To me it occurred
that the suppression of passion and desire,
the elimination thereof
in connection with the earth-element
is the escape that comes
in connection with the air-element.

§

So long as I, brethren,
had not fully come to know
even as it really is
the satisfaction as such,
the misery as such,
the escape as such
that there is in the four elements,
so long did I not discern
what it was to be enlightened

with supreme enlightenment
with regard to the world and its deities -
its Maras,
its Brahmas -
and to the generations of recluses and brahmins,
devas[2] and men.

But when I, brethren,
had fully come to know
even as it really is
the satisfaction as such,
the misery as such,
the escape as such
that there is in the four elements,
then did I discern
what it is to be enlightened
with supreme enlightenment
with regard to the world and its deities,
its Maras,
its Brahmas,
and to the generations of recluses and brahmins,
devas and men.

And knowledge, insight arose in me
that sure is my emancipation of mind.

'This is the last birth!

Now is there no more rebecoming!'"

---

[1] In his comments B. reads into these four the more abstract meanings - extension, cohesion, calorific property, mobility - that they came to have in later Abhidhamma. He refers throughout to their presence in the human body. The three characteristics here discerned in the four elements are also discerned in the senses, S. iv, 7-13; v, 194, 203 f.; in the bodily and mental factors in general, ib. iii, 81, 160 etc.; in feeling in particular, ib. iv, 208, 234; in sense-desires, M. i, 85, 92. Suttas 31, 32 occur in A. i, 258 f. and 33 in A. i, 260, where 'the elements' are replaced by 'the world.'

[2] Deities and devas are in the text both deva: - sa-devake, sa-deva-manussāya. We have no word that does not mislead, for to the Buddhist devas were not gods in the Vedic or the Greek or Christian sense, nor were they 'spirits,' since they were not 'discarnate.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
IV. Catuttha Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

4. [Untitled]

Sutta 32

Acarim [Assāda-Pariyesana] Suttaṃ

I Walked

---

[114]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta Grove, the Anāthapiṇḍika Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren."

"Yes, lord," replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"I walked seeking the satisfaction, brethren,
that comes from the earth-element.

I found that satisfaction, brethren,
that comes from the earth-element
so that by insight
I saw it well.

I walked seeking the misery, brethren,
that comes from the earth-element.

I found that misery, brethren,
that comes from the earth-element
so that by insight
I saw it well.

I walked seeking the escape, brethren,
from the earth-element.

I found the escape, brethren,
from the earth-element.
so that by insight
I saw it well.

■

I walked seeking the satisfaction, brethren,
that comes from the water-element.

I found that satisfaction, brethren,
that comes from the water-element
so that by insight
I saw it well.

I walked seeking the misery, brethren,
that comes from the water-element.

I found that misery, brethren,
that comes from the water-element
so that by insight
I saw it well.

I walked seeking the escape, brethren,
from the water-element.

I found the escape, brethren,
from the water-element,
so that by insight
I saw it well.

■

I walked seeking the satisfaction, brethren,
that comes from the heat-element.

I found that satisfaction, brethren,
that comes from the heat-element
so that by insight
I saw it well.

I walked seeking the misery, brethren,
that comes from the heat-element.

I found that misery, brethren,
that comes from the heat-element
so that by insight
I saw it well.

I walked seeking the escape, brethren,
from the water-element.

I found the escape, brethren,
from the heat-element,
so that by insight
I saw it well.

■

I walked seeking the satisfaction, brethren,
that comes from the air-element.

I found that satisfaction, brethren,
that comes from the air-element
so that by insight
I saw it well.

I walked seeking the misery, brethren,
that comes from the air-element.

I found that misery, brethren,
that comes from the air-element
so that by insight
I saw it well.

I walked seeking the escape, brethren,
from the water-element.

I found the escape, brethren,
from the air-element,
so that by insight
I saw it well.

§

So long as I, brethren,
had not fully come to know
even as it really is
the satisfaction as such,
the misery as such,
the escape as such
that there is in the four elements,
so long did I not discern
what it was to be enlightened
with supreme enlightenment
with regard to the world and its deities -
its Maras,
its Brahmas -
and to the generations of recluses and brahmins,
devas and men.

But when I, brethren,
had fully come to know
even as it really is
the satisfaction as such,
the misery as such,
the escape as such
that there is in the four elements,
then did I discern
what it is to be enlightened
with supreme enlightenment
with regard to the world and its deities,
its Maras,
its Brahmas,
and to the generations of recluses and brahmins,
devas and men.

And knowledge, insight arose in me
that sure is my emancipation of mind.

'This is the last birth!

Now is there no more rebecoming!'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
IV. Catuttha Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

4. [Untitled]

Sutta 33

Yo No Cedaṃ [No Cedaṃ] Suttaṃ

If There Were Not This

---

[115]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta Grove, the Anāthapiṇḍika Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren."

"Yes, lord," replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"If there were not, brethren,
this satisfaction that comes from the earth-element,
beings would not lust after the earth-element.

But inasmuch as there is,
this satisfaction that comes from the earth-element,
beings lust after the earth-element.

If it were not, brethren,
that misery comes from the earth-element,
beings would not be repelled by the earth-element.

But inasmuch as there is,
that misery comes from the earth-element,
beings are repelled by the earth-element.

If it were not, brethren, that there is
escape from the earth-element,
beings could not escape from the earth-element.

But inasmuch as that there is
escape from the earth-element,
beings do escape from the earth-element.

■

"If there were not, brethren,
this satisfaction that comes from the water-element,
beings would not lust after the water-element.

But inasmuch as there is,
this satisfaction that comes from the water-element,
beings lust after the water-element.

If it were not, brethren,
that misery comes from the water-element,
beings would not be repelled by the water-element.

But inasmuch as there is,
that misery comes from the water-element,
beings are repelled by the water-element.

If it were not, brethren, that there is
escape from the water-element,
beings could not escape from the water-element.

But inasmuch as that there is
escape from the water-element,
beings do escape from the water-element.

■

"If there were not, brethren,
this satisfaction that comes from the heat-element,
beings would not lust after the heat-element.

But inasmuch as there is,
this satisfaction that comes from the heat-element,
beings lust after the heat-element.

If it were not, brethren,
that misery comes from the heat-element,
beings would not be repelled by the heat-element.

But inasmuch as there is,
that misery comes from the heat-element,
beings are repelled by the heat-element.

If it were not, brethren, that there is
escape from the heat-element,
beings could not escape from the heat-element.

But inasmuch as that there is
escape from the heat-element,
beings do escape from the heat-element.

■

"If there were not, brethren,
this satisfaction that comes from the air-element,
beings would not lust after the air-element.

But inasmuch as there is,
this satisfaction that comes from the air-element,
beings lust after the air-element.

If it were not, brethren,
that misery comes from the air-element,
beings would not be repelled by the air-element.

But inasmuch as there is,
that misery comes from the air-element,
beings are repelled by the air-element.

If it were not, brethren, that there is
escape from the air-element,
beings could not escape from the air-element.

But inasmuch as that there is
escape from the air-element,
beings do escape from the air-element.

§

In so far, brethren, as beings
have not fully come to know,
even as it really is,
the satisfaction as such,
the misery as such,
the escape as such
in these four elements,
they have not lived aloof,
detached,
separate,
disassociated,
with the barriers to the mind
done away with,
from the world and its deities -
its Maras,
its Brahmas -
and from the generations of recluses and brahmins,
devas and men.

But when, brethren,
beings have fully come to know,
as it really is,
the satisfaction as such,
the misery as such,
the escape as such
in these four elements,
then do beings live aloof,
detached,
separate,
disassociated,
with the barriers to the mind
done away with,
from the world and its deities -
its Maras,
its Brahmas -

and from the generations of recluses and brahmins,
devas and men."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
IV. Catuttha Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

4. [Untitled]

Sutta 34

Dukkha [Dukkha-Lakkhaṇa] Suttaṃ

Pain

---

[115]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta Grove, the Anāthapiṇḍika Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren."

"Yes, lord," replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"If this earth-element, brethren,
were entirely painful,
beset with pain,
immersed in pain,
not immersed in happiness,
beings would not be lusting after the earth-element.

But inasmuch as this earth-element, brethren,
is pleasant,
beset with pleasure,
immersed in [116] pleasure,
not in pain,
therefore it is
that beings get lusting after the earth-element.

■

If this water-element, brethren,
were entirely painful,
beset with pain,
immersed in pain,
not immersed in happiness,
beings would not be lusting after the water-element.

But inasmuch as this water-element, brethren,
is pleasant,
beset with pleasure,
immersed in pleasure,
not in pain,
therefore it is
that beings get lusting after the water-element.

■

If this heat-element, brethren,
were entirely painful,
beset with pain,
immersed in pain,
not immersed in happiness,
beings would not be lusting after the heat-element.

But inasmuch as this heat-element, brethren,
is pleasant,
beset with pleasure,
immersed in pleasure,
not in pain,
therefore it is
that beings get lusting after the heat-element.

■

If this air-element, brethren,
were entirely painful,
beset with pain,
immersed in pain,
not immersed in happiness,
beings would not be lusting after the air-element.

But inasmuch as this air-element, brethren,
is pleasant,
beset with pleasure,
immersed in pleasure,
not in pain,
therefore it is
that beings get lusting after the air-element.

§

If this earth-element, brethren,
were entirely pleasant,
beset with pleasure,
immersed in pleasure,
not immersed in pain,
beings would not be repelled by the earth-element.

But inasmuch as the earth-element
is painful,
is beset with pain,
immersed in pain,
not immersed in pleasure,
therefore it is that beings are repelled by the earth-element.

■

If this water-element, brethren,
were entirely pleasant,
beset with pleasure,
immersed in pleasure,
not immersed in pain,
beings would not be repelled by the water-element.

But inasmuch as the water-element
is painful,
is beset with pain,
immersed in pain,
not immersed in pleasure,
therefore it is that beings are repelled by the water-element.

■

If this heat-element, brethren,
were entirely pleasant,
beset with pleasure,
immersed in pleasure,

not immersed in pain,
beings would not be repelled by the heat-element.

But inasmuch as the heat-element
is painful,
is beset with pain,
immersed in pain,
not immersed in pleasure,
therefore it is that beings are repelled by the heat-element.

■

If this air-element, brethren,
were entirely pleasant,
beset with pleasure,
immersed in pleasure,
not immersed in pain,
beings would not be repelled by the air-element.

But inasmuch as the air-element
is painful,
is beset with pain,
immersed in pain,
not immersed in pleasure,
therefore it is that beings are repelled by the air-element."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
IV. Catuttha Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

4. [Untitled]

Sutta 35

Abhinandana Suttaṃ

Taking Delight In

---

[116]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta Grove, the Anāthapiṇḍika Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren."

"Yes, lord," replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"He who takes delight, brethren, in the earth-element,
takes delight in pain.

He who takes delight in pain,
he, I say,
is not set wholly free from pain.

■

He who takes delight, brethren, in the water-element,
takes delight in pain.

He who takes delight in pain,
he, I say,
is not set wholly free from pain.

■

He who takes delight, brethren, in the heat-element,
takes delight in pain.

He who takes delight in pain,
he, I say,
is not set wholly free from pain.

■

He who takes delight, brethren, in the air-element,
takes delight in pain.

He who takes delight in pain,
he, I say,
is not set wholly free from pain.

§

He who takes no delight in the earth-element,
takes no delight in pain.

He who takes no delight in pain,
he, I say,
is set wholly free from pain.[1]

■

He who takes no delight in the water-element,
takes no delight in pain.

He who takes no delight in pain,
he, I say,
is set wholly free from pain.

■

He who takes no delight in the heat-element,
takes no delight in pain.

He who takes no delight in pain,
he, I say,
is set wholly free from pain.

■

He who takes no delight in the air-element,
takes no delight in pain.

He who takes no delight in pain,
he, I say,

is set wholly free from pain.

---

[1] Most of these Suttas are repeated with amplifications in chap. xxxv, 2. 'Pain' must not be understood here as actual suffering, bodily or mental, but as the liability to suffering inherent in our present life-as 'ill.' Cf. my Bud. Psych., p. 83*f*. To be 'set wholly free from' this (parimutto, cf. Dialogues, i, 96, 1, 2; Milinda ii, 217) is to be quit of desire to prolong life in any of the worlds. So above, p. 24. And 'delight in pain' must mean: delight in things wherein liability to suffering may become actualized.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
IV. Catuttha Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

4. [Untitled]

Sutta 36

Uppāda Suttaṃ

Uprising

---

[116]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta Grove, the Anāthapiṇḍika Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren."

"Yes, lord," replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"That, brethren, which is the uprising,
the persisting,
the rebirth,
the manifestation of the earth-element,
that is the uprising,
the persisting,
the rebirth,
the manifestation of pain.

That, brethren, which is the uprising,
the persisting,
the rebirth,
the manifestation of the water-element,
that is the uprising,
the persisting,
the rebirth,
the manifestation of pain.

That, brethren, which is the uprising,
the persisting,
the rebirth,
the manifestation of the fire-element,
that is the uprising,
the persisting,
the rebirth,
the manifestation of pain.

That, brethren, which is the uprising,
the persisting,
the rebirth,
the manifestation of the air-element,
that is the uprising,

the persisting,
the rebirth,
the manifestation of pain.

§

That which is the ceasing,
the quelling,
the going out of the earth-element,
that is the ceasing,
the quelling,
the going out of pain.

That which is the ceasing,
the quelling,
the going out of the water-element,
that is the ceasing,
the quelling,
the going out of pain.

That which is the ceasing,
the quelling,
the going out of the fire-element,
that is the ceasing,
the quelling,
the going out of pain.

That which is the ceasing,
the quelling,
the going out of the air-element,
that is the ceasing,
the quelling,
the going out of pain."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
IV. Catuttha Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

4. [Untitled]

Sutta 37

Samaṇa-Brāhmaṇa Suttaṃ

Recluses and Brahmins (1)

---

[117]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta Grove, the Anāthapiṇḍika Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren."

"Yes, lord," replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"There are these four elements, brethren.

Which are the four?

Earth-element,
water-element,
heat-element,
air-element.

Verily, any recluses or brahmins whatever
who do not understand,
even as it really is,
the satisfaction,
the misery,
the escape
with regard to these four elements,
they for me
are not approved of among recluses as recluses
nor among brahmins as brahmins,
nor have those venerable ones
come even in this life
fully to know of themselves,
to realize,
to live
in the attainment of,
the good of
being recluse or brahmin.

But any recluses or brahmins whatever
who do understand,
even as it really is,
the satisfaction,
the misery,

the escape
with regard to these four elements,
they for me
are approved of among recluses as recluses
or among brahmins as brahmins,
and those venerable ones have come
even in this life
fully to know of themselves,
to realize,
to live
in the attainment of,
the good of
being recluse or brahmin."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
IV. Catuttha Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

4. [Untitled]

Sutta 38

Dutiya Samaṇa-Brāhmaṇa Suttaṃ

Recluses and Brahmins (2)

---

[117]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta Grove, the Anāthapiṇḍika Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren."

"Yes, lord," replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"There are these four elements, brethren.

Which are the four?

Earth-element,
water-element,
heat-element,
air-element.

Yea, any recluses or brahmins whatever
who do not understand,
even as it really is,
the coming to pass
and the going away,
of any one of the four elements,
they for me
are not approved of among recluses as recluses
nor among brahmins as brahmins,
nor have those venerable ones
come even in this life
fully to know of themselves,
to realize,
to live
in the attainment of,
the good of
being recluse or brahmin.

But any recluses or brahmins whatever
who do understand,
even as it really is,
the coming to pass
and the going away,
of any one of the four elements,

they for me
are approved of among recluses as recluses
or among brahmins as brahmins,
and those venerable ones have come
even in this life
fully to know of themselves,
to realize,
to live
in the attainment of,
the good of
being recluse or brahmin."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
14. Dhātu-Saṃyuttaṃ
IV. Catuttha Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

14. The Kindred Sayings on Element

4. [Untitled]

Sutta 39

Tatiya Samaṇa-Brāhmaṇa Suttaṃ

Recluses and Brahmins (3)

---

[117]

THUS have I heard.

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī in Jeta Grove, the Anāthapiṇḍika Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren."

"Yes, lord," replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"There are these four elements, brethren.

Which are the four?

Earth-element,
water-element,
heat-element,
air-element.

Yea, any recluses or brahmins whatever
who do not understand,
even as it really is,
the nature of the earth-element,
the coming to pass of the earth-element,
the ceasing of the earth-element,
the way going to the ceasing of the earth-element,
they for me
are not approved of among recluses as recluses
nor among brahmins as brahmins,
nor have those venerable ones
come even in this life
fully to know of themselves,
to realize,
to live
in the attainment of,
the good of
being recluse or brahmin.

■

Yea, any recluses or brahmins whatever
who do not understand,
even as it really is,

the nature of the water-element,
the coming to pass of the water-element,
the ceasing of the water-element,
the way going to the ceasing of the water-element,
they for me
are not approved of among recluses as recluses
nor among brahmins as brahmins,
nor have those venerable ones
come even in this life
fully to know of themselves,
to realize,
to live
in the attainment of,
the good of
being recluse or brahmin.

■

Yea, any recluses or brahmins whatever
who do not understand,
even as it really is,
the nature of the fire-element,
the coming to pass of the fire-element,
the ceasing of the fire-element,
the way going to the ceasing of the fire-element,
they for me
are not approved of among recluses as recluses
nor among brahmins as brahmins,
nor have those venerable ones
come even in this life
fully to know of themselves,
to realize,
to live
in the attainment of,
the good of
being recluse or brahmin.

■

Yea, any recluses or brahmins whatever
who do not understand,
even as it really is,
the nature of the air-element,
the coming to pass of the air-element,
the ceasing of the air-element,
the way going to the ceasing of the air-element,
they for me
are not approved of among recluses as recluses
nor among brahmins as brahmins,
nor have those venerable ones
come even in this life
fully to know of themselves,
to realize,
to live
in the attainment of,
the good of
being recluse or brahmin.

§

But any recluses or brahmins whatever
who do understand,
even as it really is,
the nature of the earth-element,
the coming to pass of the earth-element,
the ceasing of the earth-element,
the way going to the ceasing of the earth-element,
they for me
are approved of among recluses as recluses

or among brahmins as brahmins,
and those venerable ones have come
even in this life
fully to know of themselves,
to realize,
to live
in the attainment of,
the good of
being recluse or brahmin.

■

But any recluses or brahmins whatever
who do understand,
even as it really is,
the nature of the water-element,
the coming to pass of the water-element,
the ceasing of the water-element,
the way going to the ceasing of the water-element,
they for me
are approved of among recluses as recluses
or among brahmins as brahmins,
and those venerable ones have come
even in this life
fully to know of themselves,
to realize,
to live
in the attainment of,
the good of
being recluse or brahmin.

■

But any recluses or brahmins whatever
who do understand,
even as it really is,

the nature of the fire-element,
the coming to pass of the fire-element,
the ceasing of the fire-element,
the way going to the ceasing of the fire-element,
they for me
are approved of among recluses as recluses
or among brahmins as brahmins,
and those venerable ones have come
even in this life
fully to know of themselves,
to realize,
to live
in the attainment of,
the good of
being recluse or brahmin.

■

But any recluses or brahmins whatever
who do understand,
even as it really is,
the nature of the air-element,
the coming to pass of the air-element,
the ceasing of the air-element,
the way going to the ceasing of the air-element,
they for me
are approved of among recluses as recluses
or among brahmins as brahmins,
and those venerable ones have come
even in this life
fully to know of themselves,
to realize,
to live
in the attainment of,
the good of
being recluse or brahmin."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
15. Anamat'agga-Saṃyuttaṃ
I. Paṭhama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

15. Kindred Sayings on the Incalculable Beginning

1. [Untitled]

Sutta 1

Tiṇa-Kaṭṭha Suttaṃ

Grass and Brushwood

---

[118]

THUS have I heard: —

The Exalted One was once staying at Sāvatthi
in Jeta Grove, the Anāthapiṇḍika Park.

Now there the Exalted One addressed the brethren: —

"Brethren!"

"Lord"[1] they made response.

The Exalted One said this: —

"Incalculable is the beginning,[2] brethren, of this faring on.[3]

The earliest point[4] is not revealed
of the running on, the faring on,
of beings[5] cloaked in ignorance,
tied to craving.

If a man, brethren, were to prune out
the grasses, sticks, boughs and twigs in this India
and collecting them together,
should make a pile
laying them in a stack of squares[6]
saying for each:

'This is my mother;
this is my mother's mother.'

Brethren, the grasses, sticks, boughs, twigs in this India
would be used up, ended
or ever the mothers of that man's mother
were come to an end.

[119] Why is that?

Incalculable is the beginning, brethren, of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of the faring on, running on,
of beings cloaked in ignorance,
tied to craving.

Thus many a day, brethren,
have ye been suffering ill,

have ye been suffering pain,[7]
have ye been suffering disaster,
have the charnel-fields been growing.

Thus far enough is there, brethren,
for you to be repelled
by all the things of this world,[8]
enough to lose all passion for them,
enough to be delivered therefrom.

---

[1] Bhadante, p. 1.

[2] Ana-mata-'gga. Ana is negative prefix. Mata = thought, judged. Agga = beginning. Comy.: — avidita-'ggo. Cf. Rhys Davids and Stede, Pali-English Dictionary; Pss. of the Sisters, ver. 495*f*.

[3] Saṇsāro

[4] Pubba-koṭi. Or past, or former extreme. B. paraphrases: — The first boundary is not seen, the beginning of which is the first point. Nor is the last extreme revealed. Just in the middle beings are passing on.

[5] Lit.: of beings running on, faring on.

[6] Caturangulaṇ caturangulaṇ ghaṭikaṇ C. is silent. Cf. Dialogues, i, 10(6), where a game of tip-cat is so called.

[7] Tibbaṇ.

[8] Sabba-sankhāresu. Usually explained as all that has arisen from conditions. But I doubt whether this more philosophical import was any more present to the mind of the Sutta editors than it is to-day to any Buddhist, when on the occasion of a death, he utters the usual exclamation Aniccā vata saṅkhāra!

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
15. Anamat'agga-Saṃyuttaṃ
I. Paṭhama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

15. Kindred Sayings on the Incalculable Beginning

1. [Untitled]

Sutta 2

Paṭhavī Suttaṃ

Earth

---

[119]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Incalculable is the beginning, brethren,
of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of the running on, the faring on,
of beings cloaked in ignorance,
tied to craving.

If a man, brethren,
were to make this great earth
into clay balls
each the size only of a kola kernel
and laid them down saying:

'This is my father,
this is my father's father.'

Brethren, this great earth would be used up, ended
or ever the fathers of that man's father
were come to an end.

Why is that?

Incalculable is the beginning, brethren, of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of the faring on, running on,
of beings cloaked in ignorance,
tied to craving.

Thus many a day, brethren,
have ye been suffering ill,

have ye been suffering pain,
have ye been suffering disaster,
have the charnel-fields been growing.

Thus far enough is there, brethren,
for you to be repelled
by all the things of this world,
enough to lose all passion for them,
enough to be delivered therefrom."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
15. Anamat'agga-Saṃyuttaṃ
I. Paṭhama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

15. Kindred Sayings on the Incalculable Beginning

1. [Untitled]

Sutta 3

Assu Suttaṃ

Tears

---

[120]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

2. "Incalculable is the beginning, brethren, of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of the running on, the faring on,
of beings cloaked in ignorance,
tied to craving.

3. As to that what think ye, brethren?

Which is greater: -
the flood of tears[1] shed by you crying and weeping
as ye fare on,
run on this long while,[2]
united as ye have been
with the undesirable,
sundered as ye have been
from the desirable,
or the waters in the four seas?"

4. "As we allow, lord,
that we have been taught by the Exalted One,
it is this that is greater:
the flood of tears shed by us
crying and weeping
as we fare on,
run on this long while,
united as we have been
with the undesirable,
separated as we have been
from the desirable -
not the waters in the four seas."

5. "Well said!

Well said, brethren!

Well do ye allow that so has the doctrine been taught by me.

6. Truly the flood of tears shed by you crying and weeping
as ye fare on,
run on this long while,
united as ye have been
with the undesirable,
sundered as ye have been
from the desirable is greater -
not the waters in the four seas.

■

7. For many a long day, brethren,
have ye experienced the death of mother.[ed1]

Greater is the flood of tears shed by you
crying and weeping over the death of mother,
as ye fare on,
run on this many a long day,
united with the undesirable,
sundered from the desirable,
than are the waters in the four seas.

■

8. For many a long day, brethren,
have ye experienced the death of father.

Greater is the flood of tears shed by you
crying and weeping over the death of father,

as ye fare on,
run on this many a long day,
united with the undesirable,
sundered from the desirable,
than are the waters in the four seas.

■

9. For many a long day, brethren,
have ye experienced the death of brother.

Greater is the flood of tears shed by you
crying and weeping over the death of brother,
as ye fare on,
run on this many a long day,
united with the undesirable,
sundered from the desirable,
than are the waters in the four seas.

■

10. For many a long day, brethren,
have ye experienced the death of sister.

Greater is the flood of tears shed by you
crying and weeping over the death of sister,
as ye fare on,
run on this many a long day,
united with the undesirable,
sundered from the desirable,
than are the waters in the four seas.

■

11. For many a long day, brethren,
have ye experienced the death of son.

Greater is the flood of tears shed by you
crying and weeping over the death of son,
as ye fare on,
run on this many a long day,
united with the undesirable,
sundered from the desirable,
than are the waters in the four seas.

■

12. For many a long day, brethren,
have ye experienced the death of daughter.

Greater is the flood of tears shed by you
crying and weeping over the death of daughter,
as ye fare on,
run on this many a long day,
united with the undesirable,
sundered from the desirable,
than are the waters in the four seas.

■

13. For many a long day, brethren,
have ye experienced the the ruin of kinsfolk.

Greater is the flood of tears shed by you
crying and weeping over the the ruin of kinsfolk,
as ye fare on,
run on this many a long day,
united with the undesirable,
sundered from the desirable,
than are the waters in the four seas.

■

14. For many a long day, brethren,
have ye experienced the the ruin of wealth.

Greater is the flood of tears shed by you
crying and weeping over the the ruin of wealth,
as ye fare on,
run on this many a long day,
united with the undesirable,
sundered from the desirable,
than are the waters in the four seas.

■

15. For many a long day, brethren,
have ye experienced the the calamity of disease.

Greater is the flood of tears shed by you
crying and weeping over the the calamity of disease,
as ye fare on,
run on this many a long day,
united with the undesirable,
sundered from the desirable,
than are the waters in the four seas.

16. Why is that?

Incalculable is the beginning, brethren, of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of the faring on, running on,
of beings cloaked in ignorance,
tied to craving.

17. Thus far enough is there, brethren,
for you to be repelled
by all the things of this world,

enough to lose all passion for them,
enough to be delivered therefrom."

---

[1] Assu-pasanna.

[2] Cf. Pss. of the Sisters, verses 496, 497: -

"Call ye to mind how it was said that tears
And milk and blood flow on world without end.

Remember the four oceans as compared
With all the flow of tears and milk and blood."

The 'milk' Sutta follows; the 'blood' Sutta (overlooked in that translation) is the one called Just thirty, § 13.

[ed1] This has been expanded in accordance with the CSCD version of this sutta. The PTS version has: Mātu-, Putta-, Dhitu-, Ñativyasanam; Bhogavyasanam; rogavyasanam: Mother, son daughter, kinsfolk, wealth, disese. The CSCD: mātu-, pitu-, bhātu-, bhagini-, putta-, dhītu-, ñātibyasanaṃ-, bhogabyasanaṃ-, rogabyasanaṃ.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
15. Anamat'agga-Saṃyuttaṃ
I. Paṭhama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

15. Kindred Sayings on the Incalculable Beginning

1. [Untitled]

Sutta 4

Khīram Suttaṃ

Milk

---

[121]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Incalculable is the beginning, brethren,
of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of the running on, the faring on,
of beings cloaked in ignorance,
tied to craving.

As to that what think ye brethren?

Which is greater:

- the mother's milk[1]
that ye have drunk
as ye have fared on,
run on this long while,
or the water in the four seas?"

"As we allow, lord,
that we have been taught by the Exalted One,
it is this, lord, that is greater:
the mother's milk drunk by us
as we have fared on,
run on this long while,
and not the water in the four seas."

"Well said!

Well said, brethren!

Well do ye allow that
so has the doctrine been taught by me.

Truly the mother's milk that ye have drunk
as ye have fared on,
run on this long while is greater,
and not the water in the four seas.

Why is this?

Incalculable is the beginning, brethren,
of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of the faring on, running on,
of beings cloaked in ignorance,
tied to craving.

Thus many a day, brethren,
have ye been suffering ill,
have ye been suffering pain,
have ye been suffering disaster,
have the charnel-fields been growing.

Thus far enough is there, brethren,
for you to be repelled
by all the things of this world,
enough to lose all passion for them,
enough to be delivered therefrom."

---

[1] Lit.: mother's breast.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
15. Anamat'agga-Saṃyuttaṃ
I. Paṭhama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

15. Kindred Sayings on the Incalculable Beginning

1. [Untitled]

Sutta 5

Pabbata Suttaṃ

The Hill

---

[121]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain brother came to the Exalted One,
and saluting him
sat down at one side.

Seated at one side
he said this to the Exalted One:

"How long, lord, is an aeon?"

"Long, brother, is an aeon.

It is not easy to reckon how long
by saying so many years,
so many centuries,
so many thousand centuries."

"Can it be told, lord, by a parable?"

"It can, brother", said the Exalted One.

"Suppose, brother, there were a great crag,
a hill one yojana wide,
one yojana across,
one yojana high
without chasms or clefts,
a solid mass.

And a man at the end of every hundred years
were to stroke it [122] once each time with a Kasi cloth.

Well, that mountain
in this way
would be sooner done away with
and ended
than would an aeon.

So long, brother, is an aeon.

And of aeons thus long
more than one has passed,

more than a hundred have passed,
more than a thousand,
more than a hundred thousand.

Why is this?

Incalculable is the beginning, brother, of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of the faring on, running on,
of beings cloaked in ignorance,
tied to craving.

Thus many a day, brother,
have ye been suffering ill,
have ye been suffering pain,
have ye been suffering disaster,
have the charnel-fields been growing.

Thus far enough is there, brother,
for you to be repelled
by all the things of this world,
enough to lose all passion for them,
enough to be delivered therefrom."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
15. Anamat'agga-Saṃyuttaṃ
I. Paṭhama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

15. Kindred Sayings on the Incalculable Beginning

1. [Untitled]

Sutta 6

Sāsapā Suttaṃ

Mustard Seed

---

[122]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain brother came to the Exalted One,
and saluting him
sat down at one side.

Seated at one side
he said this to the Exalted One:

"How long, lord, is an aeon?"

"Long, brother, is an aeon.

It is not easy to reckon how long
by saying so many years,
so many centuries,
so many thousand centuries."

"Can it be told, lord, by a parable?"

"It can, brother", said the Exalted One.

"Suppose, brother, there were a city of iron [walls]
one yojana in length,
one in width,
one yojana high,
filled up with mustard-seed [to the top as if] turban-bound.[1]

Therefrom a man were to take out at the end of every hundred years
a mustard-seed.

That great pile of mustard-seed, brother,
would in this way
be sooner done away with and ended
than an aeon.

So long, brother, is an aeon.

And of aeons thus long
more than one has passed,
more than a hundred have passed,

more than a thousand,
more than a hundred thousand.

Why is this?

Incalculable is the beginning, brother, of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of the faring on, running on,
of beings cloaked in ignorance,
tied to craving.

Thus many a day, brother,
have ye been suffering ill,
have ye been suffering pain,
have ye been suffering disaster,
have the charnel-fields been growing.

Thus far enough is there, brother,
for you to be repelled
by all the things of this world,
enough to lose all passion for them,
enough to be delivered therefrom.

---

[1] Cuḷikābaddhaṇ = top-knot-bound - a quaint conceit meet for such a fanciful simile.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
15. Anamat'agga-Saṃyuttaṃ
I. Paṭhama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

15. Kindred Sayings on the Incalculable Beginning

1. [Untitled]

Sutta 7

Sāvakā Suttaṃ

Disciples

---

[122]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now many brethren came to the Exalted One,
saluted him
and took seats at one side.

So seated they said to him:

"How many aeons, lord, have passed and gone by?"

[123] "Many, brethren, are the aeons passed and gone by.

Them it is not easy to count up:
so many aeons,
so many hundreds,
so many thousands,
so many hundred thousand aeons."

"Can it be done, lord, by a parable?"

"It can, brethren," said the Exalted One.

"Suppose that there were four disciples
who went on living here for a century,
and they were to recollect each day
a hundred thousand aeons.[1]

The aeons should be just recalled by them.

And at the lapse of the century
they were to die.

Even so many aeons, brethren,
have passed and gone by.

Them it is not easy to count up:
so many aeons,
so many hundreds,
so many thousands,
so many hundred thousand aeons."

Why is this?

Incalculable is the beginning, brethren, of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of the faring on, running on,
of beings cloaked in ignorance,
tied to craving.

Thus many a day, brethren,
have ye been suffering ill,
have ye been suffering pain,
have ye been suffering disaster,
have the charnel-fields been growing.

Thus far enough is there, brethren,
for you to be repelled
by all the things of this world,
enough to lose all passion for them,
enough to be delivered therefrom."

---

[1] Making a sum of 400,000 a day.

[ed]: 4 X 365 X 100,000 X 100 + (25 leap-days X 100000 X 4 = 10,000,000) = 14,610,000,000 aeons. Fourteen-billion-six-hundred-and-ten-million aeons.
Modern science (2019) estimates the age of the universe to be between 13.772 billion and 13.82 billion years old.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
15. Anamat'agga-Saṃyuttaṃ
I. Paṭhama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

15. Kindred Sayings on the Incalculable Beginning

1. [Untitled]

Sutta 8

Gaṇgā Suttaṃ

Ganges

---

[123]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha
at the Bamboo Grove.

Now a certain brahmin came to the Exalted One saluted him and sat down beside him.

"How many aeons, Master Gotama, have passed and gone by?"

"Many, brahmin, are the aeons passed and gone by."

Them it is not easy to count up:
so many aeons,
so many hundreds,
so many thousands,
so many hundred thousand aeons."

"Can it be done, Master Gotama, by a parable?"

"It can, brahmin," said the Exalted One.

"Take whence the river Ganges has its source and where it reaches the sea.

The sand that lies between,
that is not easy to count -
so many [grains of] sand,
so many hundreds,
so many thousands,
so many hundred thousand grains of sand.[1]

More than that are [124] the aeons that have passed and gone by.

Even so many aeons, brethren,
have passed and gone by.

Them it is not easy to count up:
so many aeons,
so many hundreds,
so many thousands,
so many hundred thousand aeons.

Why is this?

Incalculable is the beginning, brethren, of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of the faring on, running on,
of beings cloaked in ignorance,
tied to craving.

Thus many a day, brethren,
have ye been suffering ill,
have ye been suffering pain,
have ye been suffering disaster,
have the charnel-fields been growing.

Thus far enough is there, brethren,
for you to be repelled
by all the things of this world,
enough to lose all passion for them,
enough to be delivered therefrom."

When he had thus said,
that brahmin said to the Exalted One:

"Excellent, master Gotama!

Excellent, master Gotama!

Just as if a man were to set up
that which had been thrown down,
or were to reveal
that which was hidden away,
or were to point out the right road
to him who had gone astray,
or were to bring a lamp into the darkness,
so that those who had eyes could see shapes, -
even so, lord, has the lord Gotama shown me
his doctrine in various ways.

May master Gotama accept me as a follower
who from this day forth
as long as life shall last has taken refuge under him!"

---

[1] That is 500 yojanas, reckons the Commentary. Our gazetteers reckon the river as 1,455 miles in length. This gives us the disputed length of the yojana as nearly three miles (2 91/100 miles). I do not know whether this is borne out by Buddhaghosa's estimate of the distance from Benares to Gaya as 18 yojanas. There are a few others. Rhys Davids concludes, from the distance given in the Mahāvaṃsa from Anurādhapura to Mahintale as one yojana, in favour of 7-1/2 miles (Ancient Coins and Measures of Ceylon).

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
15. Anamat'agga-Saṃyuttaṃ
I. Paṭhama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

15. Kindred Sayings on the Incalculable Beginning

1. [Untitled]

Sutta 9

Daṇḍa Suttaṃ

The Stick

---

[124]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthi at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Incalculable is the beginning, brethren, of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of the running on, the faring on,
of beings cloaked in ignorance,
tied to craving.

Just as a stick, brethren,
thrown up into the air,
falls now on the butt-end,
now on its side,
now on its tip,
even so do beings,
cloaked in ignorance,
tied by craving,
running on,
faring on,
go now from this world to the other world,
now from the other world to this.

How is this?

Incalculable is the beginning, brethren, of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of the faring on, running on,
of beings cloaked in ignorance,
tied to craving.

Thus many a day, brethren,
have ye been suffering ill,
have ye been suffering pain,

have ye been suffering disaster,
have the charnel-fields been growing.

Thus far enough is there, brethren,
for you to be repelled
by all the things of this world,
enough to lose all passion for them,
enough to be delivered therefrom."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
15. Anamat'agga-Saṃyuttaṃ
I. Paṭhama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

15. Kindred Sayings on the Incalculable Beginning

1. [Untitled]

Sutta 10

Eka-Puggala Suttaṃ

A Person

---

[124]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was at Rājagaha
on Vulture's Peak.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Incalculable is the beginning, brethren,
of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of the running on, the faring on,
of beings cloaked in ignorance,
tied to craving.

The bones of one single person, brethren,
running on, faring [125] on for an aeon
would be a cairn,
a pile,
a heap
as great as Mount Vepulla,
were there a collector of those bones
and the collection were not destroyed.

How is this?

Incalculable is the beginning, brethren, of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of the faring on, running on,
of beings cloaked in ignorance,
tied to craving.

Thus many a day, brethren,
have ye been suffering ill,
have ye been suffering pain,
have ye been suffering disaster,
have the charnel-fields been growing.

Thus far enough is there, brethren,
for you to be repelled
by all the things of this world,
enough to lose all passion for them,
enough to be delivered therefrom."

This spake the Exalted One.

The Wellfarer saying this, the Master said this further:

The pile of bones of [all the bodies of] one man
Who has alone one aeon lived,

Were heaped a mountain high - so said the mighty seer -
Yea, reckoned high as Vipula

To north of Vulture's Peak, crag-fort of Magadha.[1]
When he with perfect insight sees

The Ariyan Truths: - what suffering is and how it comes
And how it may be overpassed,

The Ariyan Eightfold Path, the way all ill to abate -
Seven times at most reborn, a man

Yet running on, through breaking every fetter down,
Endmaker doth become of ill.

---

[1] Cf. Pss. of the Sisters, pp. 66, 172; Pss. of the Brethren, ver. 545. Above, vol. i, p. 92; cf. Buddhist India, p. 37. The parable and verses occur in Iti-Vuttaka, § 24. 'To north': Comy.: Gijjhakāṭassa uttara-passe ṭhito. Vipula is here spelt Vepulla.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
15. Anamat'agga-Saṃyuttaṃ
II. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

15. Kindred Sayings on the Incalculable Beginning

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 11

Duggata Suttaṃ

Hard Lot

---

[125]

The Exalted One was once staying at Sāvatthī.

There he addressed the brethren:-

"Incalculable is the beginning, brethren,
of this faring on.

[126] The earliest point is not revealed of the running on,
the faring on of beings cloaked in ignorance,
tied to craving.

When, brethren, ye behold a hard lot,[1] [or] that which is hard to come to,
then should ye thus judge:

'We too have suffered on this wise
down that long time.'

How is this?

Incalculable is the beginning, brethren, of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed of the running on,
the faring on of beings cloaked in ignorance,
tied to craving.

Thus far enough is there, brethren,
for you to be repelled by all the things of this world,
enough to lose all passion for them,
enough to be delivered therefrom."

---

[1] Explained as poverty in the C.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
15. Anamat'agga-Saṃyuttaṃ
II. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

15. Kindred Sayings on the Incalculable Beginning

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 12

Sukhita Suttaṃ

Happy

---

[126]

The Exalted One was once staying at Sāvatthī.

There he addressed the brethren: —

"Incalculable is the beginning, brethren,
of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of the running on,
the faring on
of beings cloaked in ignorance,
tied to craving.

When, brethren, ye behold that which is happy, prosperous,[1]
then should ye thus judge:

'We too have enjoyed[2] on this wise
down that long time.'

How is this?

Incalculable is the beginning, brethren,
of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of the running on,
the faring on
of beings cloaked in ignorance,
tied to craving.

Thus far enough is there, brethren,
for you to be repelled by all the things of this world,
enough to lose all passion for them,
enough to be delivered therefrom.

---

[1] Lit.: equipped. Explained as rich etc., in the C.

[2] The same word as that rendered 'suffered' in § 11: — paccanubhūtaṇ.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
15. Anamat'agga-Saṃyuttaṃ
II. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

15. Kindred Sayings on the Incalculable Beginning

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 13

Tiṃ Samatta Suttaṃ

Thirty Only

---

[126]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was at Rājagaha
at the Bamboo Grove:

Now thirty brethren only,
from Pāvā,[1]
all forest dwellers,

all almsmen,
all rag-robed,
all three-garment-men,[2]
all not yet fetter-free
came to the Exalted One
and saluting him
sat down at the side of him.

Now he thought:

"These thirty from Pāvā
all forest-dwellers,
all almsmen,
all rag-robed,
all three-garment-men,
all not yet fetter-free,
what if I were now so to teach them such a doctrine,
that at this very sitting
their hearts were to be liberated,
without grasping,
from the intoxicants?"

So he addressed them:

"Brethren!"

"Lord!"[3] they responded.

The Exalted One said this:

"Incalculable is the beginning, brethren,
of this faring on.

[127] The earliest point is not revealed
of the running on,
the faring on

of beings cloaked in ignorance,
tied by craving.

As to that what think ye, brethren?

Which is the greater?

The blood that has flowed,
that has been shed
by the loss of your heads
as ye have run on,
fared on
this long while,
or the waters in the four seas?"

"As we allow, lord,
that we have been taught by the Exalted One,
it is this that is greater,
even the blood that has flowed,
that has been shed
by the loss of our heads
as we have run on,
fared on
this long while,
and not the waters of the four seas."

"Well said!

Well said, brethren!

Well do ye allow
that I have thus taught you the doctrine.

Even the blood that has flowed,
that has been shed
by the loss of your heads
as you have run on,

fared on
this long while,
that is greater,
and not the waters of the four seas.

For many a long day
did blood flow,
was blood shed
by the loss of your heads
when ye were oxen,
born as oxen,
more blood than there are waters in the four seas.

For many a long day
did blood flow,
was blood shed
by the loss of your heads
when ye were buffaloes,
born as buffaloes,
more blood than there are waters in the four seas.

For many a long day
did blood flow,
was blood shed
by the loss of your heads
when ye were rams
born as rams,
more blood than there are waters in the four seas.

For many a long day
did blood flow,
was blood shed
by the loss of your heads
when ye were goats,
born as goats,
more blood than there are waters in the four seas.

For many a long day
did blood flow,
was blood shed
by the loss of your heads
when ye were as wild beasts,[4]
born as wild beasts,
more blood than there are waters in the four seas.

For many a long day
did blood flow,
was blood shed
by the loss of your heads
when ye were fowls,
born as fowls,
more blood than there are waters in the four seas.

For many a long day
did blood flow,
was blood shed
by the loss of your heads
when ye were swine
born as swine,
more blood than there are waters in the four seas.

For many a long day
did blood flow,
was blood shed
by the loss of your heads
when ye were seized as robbers,
more blood than there are waters in the four seas.

For many a long day
did blood flow,
was blood shed
by the loss of your heads

when ye were seized as village-plunderers,
more blood than there are waters in the four seas.

For many a long day
did blood flow,
was blood shed
by the loss of your heads
when ye were seized as highwaymen,
more blood than there are waters in the four seas.

For many a long day
did blood flow,
was blood shed
by the loss of your heads
when ye were seized as adulterers,
more blood than there are waters in the four seas.

How is this?

Incalculable is the beginning, brethren,
of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of beings running on,
faring on,
cloaked in ignorance,
tied to craving.

Thus many a day, brethren,
have ye been suffering ill,
have ye been suffering pain,
have ye been suffering disaster,
have the charnel-fields been growing.

Thus far enough is there, brethren,
for you to be repelled
by all the things of this world,

enough to lose all passion for them,
enough to be delivered therefrom."

The Exalted One spake this.

Pleased at heart
those brethren took delight
in that which was spoken by the Exalted One.

And during the speaking of this catechism
the hearts [128] of the thirty Pāvā brothers were set free, without any grasping,
from the intoxicants.

---

[1] See Dialogues, ii, 183 f.; iii, 201.

[2] Cf. Pss. of the Brethren, p. 317, n. 2.

[3] Bhadante.

[4] Miga means both this and 'deer.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
15. Anamat'agga-Saṃyuttaṃ
II. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

15. Kindred Sayings on the Incalculable Beginning

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 14

Mātā Suttaṃ

Mother

---

[128]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Incalculable is the beginning, brethren,
of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of the running on,
the faring on
of beings cloaked in ignorance,
tied by craving.

Not an easy thing is it, brethren,
to find a being
who during this long many-a-day
has not at one time been a mother.

How is this?

Incalculable is the beginning, brethren,
of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of beings running on,
faring on,
cloaked in ignorance,
tied to craving.

Thus many a day, brethren,
have ye been suffering ill,
have ye been suffering pain,
have ye been suffering disaster,
have the charnel-fields been growing.

Thus far enough is there, brethren,
for you to be repelled

by all the things of this world,
enough to lose all passion for them,
enough to be delivered therefrom."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
15. Anamat'agga-Saṃyuttaṃ
II. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

15. Kindred Sayings on the Incalculable Beginning

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 15

Pitā Suttaṃ

Father

---

[128]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Incalculable is the beginning, brethren,
of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of the running on,
the faring on
of beings cloaked in ignorance,
tied by craving.

Not an easy thing is it, brethren,
to find a being
who during this long many-a-day
has not at one time been a father.

How is this?

Incalculable is the beginning, brethren,
of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of beings running on,
faring on,
cloaked in ignorance,
tied to craving.

Thus many a day, brethren,
have ye been suffering ill,
have ye been suffering pain,
have ye been suffering disaster,
have the charnel-fields been growing.

Thus far enough is there, brethren,
for you to be repelled

by all the things of this world,
enough to lose all passion for them,
enough to be delivered therefrom."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
15. Anamat'agga-Saṃyuttaṃ
II. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

15. Kindred Sayings on the Incalculable Beginning

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 16

Bhātā Suttaṃ

Brother

---

[128]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Incalculable is the beginning, brethren,
of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of the running on,
the faring on
of beings cloaked in ignorance,
tied by craving.

Not an easy thing is it, brethren,
to find a being
who during this long many-a-day
has not at one time been a brother.

How is this?

Incalculable is the beginning, brethren,
of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of beings running on,
faring on,
cloaked in ignorance,
tied to craving.

Thus many a day, brethren,
have ye been suffering ill,
have ye been suffering pain,
have ye been suffering disaster,
have the charnel-fields been growing.

Thus far enough is there, brethren,
for you to be repelled

by all the things of this world,
enough to lose all passion for them,
enough to be delivered therefrom."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
15. Anamat'agga-Saṃyuttaṃ
II. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

15. Kindred Sayings on the Incalculable Beginning

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 17

Bhagini Suttaṃ

Sister

---

[128]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Incalculable is the beginning, brethren,
of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of the running on,
the faring on
of beings cloaked in ignorance,
tied by craving.

Not an easy thing is it, brethren,
to find a being
who during this long many-a-day
has not at one time been a sister.

How is this?

Incalculable is the beginning, brethren,
of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of beings running on,
faring on,
cloaked in ignorance,
tied to craving.

Thus many a day, brethren,
have ye been suffering ill,
have ye been suffering pain,
have ye been suffering disaster,
have the charnel-fields been growing.

Thus far enough is there, brethren,
for you to be repelled

by all the things of this world,
enough to lose all passion for them,
enough to be delivered therefrom."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
15. Anamat'agga-Saṃyuttaṃ
II. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

15. Kindred Sayings on the Incalculable Beginning

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 18

Putto Suttaṃ

Son

---

[128]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Incalculable is the beginning, brethren,
of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of the running on,
the faring on
of beings cloaked in ignorance,
tied by craving.

Not an easy thing is it, brethren,
to find a being
who during this long many-a-day
has not at one time been a son.

How is this?

Incalculable is the beginning, brethren,
of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of beings running on,
faring on,
cloaked in ignorance,
tied to craving.

Thus many a day, brethren,
have ye been suffering ill,
have ye been suffering pain,
have ye been suffering disaster,
have the charnel-fields been growing.

Thus far enough is there, brethren,
for you to be repelled

by all the things of this world,
enough to lose all passion for them,
enough to be delivered therefrom."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
15. Anamat'agga-Saṃyuttaṃ
II. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

15. Kindred Sayings on the Incalculable Beginning

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 19

Dhītā Suttaṃ

Daughter

---

[128]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Incalculable is the beginning, brethren,
of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of the running on,
the faring on
of beings cloaked in ignorance,
tied by craving.

Not an easy thing is it, brethren,
to find a being
who during this long many-a-day
has not at one time been a daughter.

How is this?

Incalculable is the beginning, brethren,
of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of beings running on,
faring on,
cloaked in ignorance,
tied to craving.

Thus many a day, brethren,
have ye been suffering ill,
have ye been suffering pain,
have ye been suffering disaster,
have the charnel-fields been growing.

Thus far enough is there, brethren,
for you to be repelled

by all the things of this world,
enough to lose all passion for them,
enough to be delivered therefrom."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
15. Anamat'agga-Saṃyuttaṃ
II. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

15. Kindred Sayings on the Incalculable Beginning

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 20

Vepulla-Pabbata Suttaṃ

Mount Vipula

---

[128]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was at Rājagaha
on Vulture's Peak.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Incalculable is the beginning, brethren,
of this faring on.

The earliest point is not revealed
of the running on, the faring on,
of beings cloaked in ignorance,
tied to craving.

§

There was once a time, brethren,
when this Mount Vipula[1]
was given the name East Ridge.

At that time
the people [here] were given the name of Tivaras,
and the measure of their life
was forty thousand years.

It took those Tivaras [129] four days
to climb Mount East Ridge
and four days to descend it.

At that time Kakusandha,
Exalted One,
Arahant,
Buddha Supreme,
had arisen in the world.

And he had a pair of disciples as chief,
Vidhura and Sañjīva,
a comely pair.[2]

Behold, brethren,
how both the name of this hill has disappeared,
how those people have died
and how that Exalted One
has passed utterly away!

So impermanent, brethren,
are the things of this world,
so transient are they,
so comfortless are they.

Thus far enough is there, brethren,
for you to feel repelled
by all the things of this world,
enough to lose all passion for them,
enough to be liberated therefrom.

■

There was once a time, brethren,
when this Mount Vipula
was given the name of Vankaka.[3]

At that time the people [here]
were given the name of Rohitassas,
and the measure of their life
was thirty thousand years.

It took those Rohitassas
three days to climb Mount Vankaka
and three days to descend it.

At that time Konāgamana,
Exalted One,
Arahant,
Buddha Supreme,
had arisen in the world.

And he had a pair of disciples as chief,
Bhiyyosa and Uttara,
a comely pair.

Behold, brethren,
how both the name of this hill has disappeared,
how those people have died
and how that Exalted One
has passed utterly away!

So impermanent, brethren,
are the things of this world,
so transient are they,
so comfortless are they.

Thus far enough is there, brethren,
for you to feel repelled
by all the things of this world,
enough to lose all passion for them,
enough to be liberated therefrom.

■

There was once a time, brethren,
when this Mount Vipula
was given the name of Fairside.

At that time the people [here]
were given the name of Suppiyas,
and the measure of their life
was twenty thousand years.

It took those Suppiyas
two days to climb Mount Fairside
and two days to descend it.

At that time Kassapa,
Exalted One,
Arahant,
Buddha Supreme
had arisen in the world.

And he had a pair of disciples as chief,
Tissa and Bhāradvāja,
a comely pair.

[130] Behold, brethren,
how both the name of this hill has disappeared,
how those people have died
and how that Exalted One
has passed utterly away!

So impermanent, brethren,
are the things of this world,
so transient are they,
so comfortless are they.

Thus far enough is there, brethren,
for you to feel repelled
by all the things of this world,
enough to lose all passion for them,
enough to be liberated therefrom.

■

But now, brethren, to this Mount Vipula
has come just the name 'Vipula.'

But now, brethren, to these people has come just the name 'Magadhese'.

The measure of the age of the Magadhese is small,
very limited,
fleeting.

He who lives long
lives for a hundred years
or but little more.

The men of Magadha
climb Mount Vipula
in a little while,
descend it in a little while.

But now, brethren,
I have arisen in the world,
Arahant,
Buddha Supreme.

But I have a pair of disciples as chief,
Sāriputta and Moggallāna,
a comely pair.

There will come a time, brethren,
when both the name of this hill will disappear,
when these people will die
and when I shall pass utterly away.

So impermanent, brethren,
are the things of this world,
so transient are they,
so comfortless are they.

Thus far enough is there, brethren,
for you to feel repelled
by all the things of this world,
enough to lose all passion for them,
enough to be liberated therefrom."

The Exalted One spake this;
the Wellfarer so speaking,
the Master spake this further:

East Ridge this mountain for the Tivaras,
And Crooked Crest for Rohitassa folk,
Fairside its name among the Suppiyas,
Now for the Magadhese't is Vipula.

Alas! impermanent is all this world.
Growth is its very nature and decay.
Things spring to being and again they cease.
Happy the mastery of them and the peace.[4]

---

[1] Or Vepulla. On the surviving wrecks of these great hills round Rāgagaha, see Pss. of the Sisters, pp. 28, 66; Pss. of the Brethren, p. 364; Cunningham's Archceological Survey (Rājgir), iii, Pl. xli. There wae evidently a settlement or 'vihara' on Vulture's Peak.

[2] These three chief pairs are given in the Nidana (introductory narrative) to the Jātakas. Rhys Davids, Buddhist Birth Stories, p. 50*f*. The Comy. renders bhaddayugaṃ by sundarayugaṃ.

[3] = 'Crooked.' Cf. Therīgāthā Comy., p. 15.

[4] Above, i, 197.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
16. Kassapa Saṃyutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

16. Kindred Sayings on Kassapa

Sutta 1

Saṇtuṭṭha Suttaṃ

Contented

[3] Knowing 'escape' spoken of above, he enjoys it as sufficing against cold. Comy.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
16. Kassapa Saṃyutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

16. Kindred Sayings on Kassapa

Sutta 2

Anottāpi Suttaṃ

Careless

---

[195] [132]

Thus have I heard:

The venerable Mahā-Kassapa and the venerable Sāriputta were once staying near Benares at Isipatana at the Deerpark.

Now the venerable Sāriputta had arisen at eventide from meditation and he came to Mahā-Kassapa.

After exchanging greetings and talk of courtesy and friendliness
he sat down by Mahā-Kassapa and said:

"It is said, friend Kassapa,
that without ardour[1]
and without care[2]
a man is incapable of enlightenment,
incapable of Nibbāna,
incapable of reaching the uttermost safety,[3]
but that with ardour and with care
he is capable of enlightenment,
capable of Nibbāna,
capable of reaching the uttermost safety.

Now how far is this so
that without ardour
and without care
a man is incapable of enlightenment,
incapable of Nibbāna,
incapable of reaching the uttermost safety,
but that with ardour and with care
he is capable of enlightenment,
capable of Nibbāna,
capable of reaching the uttermost safety?"

■

"When, friend, a brother thinks thus:

'Bad and evil states that have not arisen,
were they to arise,
would conduce to my hurt'
- and no ardour is aroused.

'Bad and evil states that have arisen,
if they are not eliminated,
would conduce to my hurt,'
- and no ardour is aroused.

'Good states that have not arisen,
were they not to arise,
would conduce to my hurt,'
- and no ardour is aroused.

'Good states that have arisen,
were they to cease,
would conduce to my hurt,'
- and no ardour is aroused.|| ||

This is to be without ardour.

■

And how, friend, is a man without care?

"When, friend, a brother thinks thus:

'Bad and evil states that have not arisen,
were they to arise,
would conduce to my hurt'
- and no care is aroused.

'Bad and evil states that have arisen,
if they are not eliminated,
would conduce to my hurt,'
- and no care is aroused.

'Good states that have not arisen,
were they not to arise,
would conduce to my hurt,'
- and no care is aroused.

'Good states that have arisen,
were they to cease,
would conduce to my hurt,'
- and no care is aroused.|| ||

This is to be without care.

Thus it is, friend,
that a man who is without ardour,
without [133] care,
is incapable of enlightenment,
incapable of Nibbāna,
incapable of the uttermost security.

§

And how, friend, is he ardent?

When, friend, a brother thinks thus:

'Bad and evil states that have not arisen,
were they to arise,
would conduce to my hurt'
- and ardour is aroused.

'Bad and evil states that have arisen,
if they are not eliminated,
would conduce to my hurt,'
- and ardour is aroused.

'Good states that have not arisen,
were they not to arise,
would conduce to my hurt,'
- and ardour is aroused.

'Good states that have arisen,
were they to cease,

would conduce to my hurt,'
- and ardour is aroused.|| ||

This is to have ardour.

■

And how, friend, is he careful?

"When, friend, a brother thinks thus:

'Bad and evil states that have not arisen,
were they to arise,
would conduce to my hurt'
- and care is aroused.

'Bad and evil states that have arisen,
if they are not eliminated,
would conduce to my hurt,'
- and care is aroused.

'Good states that have not arisen,
were they not to arise,
would conduce to my hurt,'
- and care is aroused.

'Good states that have arisen,
were they to cease,
would conduce to my hurt,'
- and care is aroused.|| ||

This is to have care.

Thus it is, friend,
that a man who is ardent and careful
is capable of enlightenment,

is capable of Nibbāna,
is capable of the uttermost safety."[4]

---

[1] Anātājpī: deprived of that energy which burns up the lower nature. Comy.

[2] Anottāpīi: deprived of fear lest the lower nature arise and the good do not arise. Comy.

[3] Yogakkhema.

[4] I have condensed the repetitions of the formula: 'When, friend, a brother thinks thus,' etc. [Ed.: Expanded here] The efforts to be made are known as the Four Right Endeavours: - e.g., Dialogues iii, 215; M. ii, 11, 26; S. iii, 96; v. 244 f.: A. ii, 15; Bud. Psy. Eth., p. 358; Vibh. p. 208 f.; Visuddhi Magga, p. 679.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
16. Kassapa Saṃyutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

16. Kindred Sayings on Kassapa

Sutta 3

Cand'Ūpama Suttaṃ

Comparable to the Moon

---

[197] [133]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"Be ye comparable to the moon, brethren,
when ye go among the families,[1]
drawing back
in both heart and demeanour,
ever as new-comers
unobtrusive among the families.[2]

Just as a man would contemplate a decayed well,
or a precipice,
or a river-swamp,
drawing back
in both heart and demeanour,
even so be ye among the families.

Kassapa, brethren,
is comparable to the moon
when he goes among the families,
drawing back
in both heart and demeanour,
ever as a new-comer
unobtrusive among the families.

What think ye, brethren, as to that?

What manner of brother
is worthy to go among the families?"

"For us, lord, things have the Exalted One as their root,
their guide,
their resort.

Well indeed were it
if the meaning of this that he has spoken
were to manifest itself in the Exalted One.

Hearing it from him
the brethren will bear it in mind."[3]

Then the Exalted One waved his hand in space.

"Just as this hand, brethren,
does not sink down in space,
nor is seized,
nor bound,
even so that brother, whose heart
when he [134] goes among the families
does not sink down,
or get seized
or bound,
but thinks:

'Let them who desire gains,
gain!

Let them who desire merit,
work merit!'

Let a man be pleased and joyous,
at the gains of others,
even as he is pleased and joyous
at his own gains!

This manner of brother
is worthy to go among the families.

Kassapa, brethren,
when he goes among the families
does not let his heart sink down,
or get seized,
or bound.

He thinks:

'Let them who desire gains,
gain!

Let them who desire merit,
work merit!'

Let a man be pleased and joyous
at the gains of others,
even as he is pleased and joyous
at his own gains!'

Such a brother, brethren,
is worthy to go among the families.

§

What think ye, brethren,
as to this?

Of what manner of brother
is the teaching of doctrine impure?

Of what manner of brother
is the teaching of the doctrine pure?"

"For us, lord,
things have the Exalted One as their root,
their guide,
their resort.

Well, indeed, were it
if the meaning of this that he has spoken
were to manifest itself in the Exalted One.

Hearing it from him
the brethren will bear it in mind."

"Well then, brethren, listen,
give your mind thoroughly,
I will speak."

"Even so, lord,"
they responded.

The Exalted One said this:

Any brother, brethren,
who teaches doctrine with such a mind:

'0 that they may hear my doctrine,
and hearing it may be satisfied,
and being satisfied
may give expression to their satisfaction!'

of this manner of brother
the teaching of doctrine is impure.

But that brother who teaches doctrine to others
with such a mind:

'0 that they may hear my doctrine, -
for it is the doctrine
which the Exalted One hath so well declared,
relating to the present,
not a matter of time;
the doctrine that says:
"Come, see!"
that leads on,
that is to be understood by the wise
each man for himself, -
and hearing it,

may acknowledge the doctrine,
and acknowledging it,
may practise
that they may so attain!'

he thus teaches doctrine to others
because of the fair order of the Norm,
he teaches doctrine to others
out of pity,
out of caring for them,
[135] because of his compassion for them.

Of such manner of brother
the teaching of doctrine is very pure.

Kassapa, brethren, teaches the doctrine
with such a mind:

'0 that they may hear my doctrine, -
for it is the doctrine
which the Exalted One hath so well declared,
relating to the present,
not a matter of time;
the doctrine that says:
"Come, see!"
that leads on,
that is to be understood by the wise
each man for himself, -
and hearing it,
may acknowledge the doctrine,
and acknowledging it,
may practise
that they may so attain!'

he thus teaches doctrine to others
because of the fair order of the Norm,

he teaches doctrine to others
out of pity,
out of caring for them,
because of his compassion for them.

Of such manner of brother
the teaching of doctrine is very pure.

Verily by Kassapa, brethren,
will I exhort you,
or by one like Kassapa.

By them exhorted
ye are to practise
that ye may so attain."

---

[1] Or clans (kula).

[2] Quoted in the Milinda, ii, 319. On the conduct prescribed see also Pss. of the Brethren, verses 124, 494, 495; Ps. ccxxxviii. On that of Kassapa, verse 1051 f.; Uddāna, p. 4.

[3] Cf. above, p. 19.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
16. Kassapa Saṃyutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

16. Kindred Sayings on Kassapa

Sutta 4

Kul'Ūpaga Suttaṃ

Visiting the Families

---

[200] [135]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"What think ye as to this, brethren?

What manner of brother is worthy,
and what manner of brother is unworthy
to go among the families?"

"For us, lord, things have the Exalted One as their root,
their guide,
their resort.

Well indeed were it
if the meaning of this that he has spoken
were to manifest itself in the Exalted One.

Hearing it from him
the brethren will bear it in mind."

"Well then, brethren, listen,
give your mind thoroughly,
I will speak."

"Even so, lord,"
they responded.

The Exalted One said this:

"Verily, brethren, if a brother go among the families with such a mind:

'Let them only give!

Let them not refuse to give!

Let them only give to me abundantly,
not scantily!

Let them give me excellent things only,
not poor things!

Let them only give quickly,
not tardily!

Let them only give to me respectfully,
not disrespectfully!'

He, going among the families
with such thoughts,
if they give not,
is vexed,
and he feels pain and sorrow because of that.

He, going among the families
with such thoughts,
if they give scantily,
is vexed,
and he feels pain and sorrow because of that.

He, going among the families
with such thoughts,
if they give poor things,
is vexed,
and he feels pain and sorrow because of that.

He, going among the families
with such thoughts,
if they give tardily,
is vexed,
and he feels pain and sorrow because of that.

He, going among the families
with such thoughts,
if they give disrespectfully,

is vexed,
and he feels pain and sorrow because of that.

This manner of brother
is unworthy to go among the families.

■

But that brother who goes among the families
with such a mind:

'How could I possibly think
on this occasion
with regard to others,

"Let them only give!

Let them not refuse to give!

Let them only give to me abundantly,
not scantily.

Let them only give to me excellent things,
not poor things.

Let them only give to me quickly,
not tardily.

Let them only give to me respectfully,
not disrespectfully!"'

He, when they give not,
is not vexed,
nor does he feel pain and sorrow because of that.

So, too, if they give scantily,
is not vexed,
nor does he feel pain and sorrow because of that.

He, when they give poor things,
is not vexed,
nor does he feel pain and sorrow because of that.

He, when they give tardily,
is not vexed,
nor does he feel pain and sorrow because of that.

He, when they give disrespectfully,
is not vexed,
nor does he feel pain and sorrow because of that.

Such a manner of brother
is worthy to go among the families.

§

Kassapa, brethren, is of such a mind
as he goes among the families:

'How could I possibly think
on this occasion
with regard to others:

"Let them only give!

Let them not refuse to give!

Let them only give to me abundantly,
not scantily.

Let them only give to me excellent things,
not poor things.

Let them only give to me quickly,
not tardily.

Let them only give to me respectfully,
not disrespectfully!"'

He, when they give not,
is not vexed,
nor does he feel pain and sorrow because of that.

So, too, if they give scantily,
is not vexed,
nor does he feel pain and sorrow because of that.

He, when they give poor things,
is not vexed,
nor does he feel pain and sorrow because of that.

He, when they give tardily,
is not vexed,
nor does he feel pain and sorrow because of that.

He, when they give disrespectfully,
is not vexed,
nor does he feel pain and sorrow because of that.

Such a manner of brother
is worthy to go among the families.

Verily, brethren, by [136] Kassapa will I exhort you,
or by one like Kassapa.

By them exhorted
ye are to practise
that ye may so attain."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
16. Kassapa Saṃyutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

16. Kindred Sayings on Kassapa

Sutta 5

Jiṇṇa Suttaṃ

Grown Old

---

[202] [136]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was at Rājagaha
at the Bamboo Grove:

Now the venerable Mahā-Kassapa came into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him,
and sat down at his side.

To him so seated
the Exalted One said this:

"Thou art old, Kassapa,
and these coarse cast-off rags
are past wearing
and irksome to thee.

Wherefore do thou, Kassapa,
wear the raiment [given] by householders
and enjoy their invitations and abide near me."

"I, lord, for many a day
have been a forest dweller
and have commended forest life;
have been an almsman
and have commended alms-living;
have been a rag-robe wearer
and have commended rag-robe wearing;
have been a three-garment man
and have commended the triple-raiment;
have wanted little
and have commended few wants;
have been contented
and have commended contentment;
have dwelt in seclusion
and have commended seclusion;
have held aloof from society
and have commended such aloofness;
have lived in strenuous energy
and have commended strenuous energy."

"But what advantage dost thou, Kassapa, discern in this
that for many a day

thou hast been a forest dweller
and have commended forest life;
have been an almsman
and have commended alms-living;
have been a rag-robe wearer
and have commended rag-robe wearing;
have been a three-garment man
and have commended the triple-raiment;
have wanted little
and have commended few wants;
have been contented
and have commended contentment;
have dwelt in seclusion
and have commended seclusion;
have held aloof from society
and have commended such aloofness;
have lived in strenuous energy
and have commended strenuous energy?"

"Discerning two advantages, lord,
have I for many a day
been a forest dweller
and have commended forest life;
have been an almsman
and have commended alms-living;
have been a rag-robe wearer
and have commended rag-robe wearing;
have been a three-garment man
and have commended the triple-raiment;
have wanted little
and have commended few wants;
have been contented
and have commended contentment;
have dwelt in seclusion
and have commended seclusion;
have held aloof from society

and have commended such aloofness;
have lived in strenuous energy
and have commended strenuous energy:

Discerning mine own present happiness
and being filled with compassion
for them who will come after us.

For surely these may fall into error.

But let them say:

'They who were disciples of the Buddha and of the followers of the Buddha[1]
were for many a day forest dwellers
and commended forest life;
they were almsmen
and commended alms-living;
they were rag-robe wearers
and commended rag-robe wearing;
they were three-garment men
and commended the triple-raiment;
they were of few wants
and commended few wants;
they were contented
and commended contentment;
they dwelt in seclusion
and commended seclusion;
they held aloof from society
and commended such aloofness;
they lived in strenuous energy,
and they commended strenuous energy,'|| ||

So saying they will practise that so they [137] may attain this end.

This for many a day
will be for their good
and for their happiness.

These are the two advantages, lord,
the which discerning
I have for many a day
lived on this wise."

"Well said, well said, Kassapa.

For the good of many,
truly, hast thou thus practised,
for the happiness of many folk,
out of compassion for the world,
for the salvation,
the good,
the happiness
of devas and of men.

Wherefore, Kassapa,
wear thou thy coarse rag-robes
that are past wearing,
go thy rounds for alms
and dwell in the forest."[2]

---

[1] Buddhānubuddhasāvakā. B. is silent, though extremely wordy on the former advantage.

[2] Buddhaghosa judges that the Master intentionally afforded his great follower opportunity here to 'roar his lion's roar.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
16. Kassapa Saṃyutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

16. Kindred Sayings on Kassapa

Sutta 6

Paṭhama Ovāda Suttaṃ

Exhortation (1)

---

[203] [137]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was at Rājagaha
at the Bamboo Grove:

Now the venerable Mahā-Kassapa came into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him,
and sat down at his side.

To him so seated
the Exalted One said this:

"Exhort the brethren, Kassapa.

Give them discourse on doctrine, Kassapa.

Either I, Kassapa, or thou
must exhort the brethren.

Either I or thou[1]
must give them discourse on doctrine."

"Just now, lord,
it is difficult to speak to[2] the brethren.

They are in a state
that makes it difficult to speak to them.

They are intractable,
they pay no deference to instruction.[3]

For instance, lord,
I saw Bhaṇḍa,
the brother who is the colleague of Ānanda,
and Abhiñjika,
who is the colleague of Anuruddha
out-talking each other thus:

'Come, brother,
which will speak the more?
which will speak the better?
which will speak the longer?'"

Then the Exalted One addressed a brother:

"Come thou, brother!

tell my word to Bhaṇḍa,
the brother who dwelleth with Ānanda
and Abhiñjika,
the brother who dwelleth with Anuruddha:

"The Master would speak to you."

[138] "Even so, lord,"
responded that brother,
and he went into the presence of Bhaṇḍa,
the brother who dwelleth with Ānanda
and Abhiñjika,
the brother who dwelleth with Anuruddha and said:

"The Master, friends, would speak to you."

"Even so, friend", they responded and they went into the presence of the Exalted one.

Having come into the prsence of the Exalted one they saluted him,
and sat down down beside him.

To them thus seated
the Exalted One said this:

"Is it true what they say, brethren,
that ye have been out-talking each other thus:

'Come, brother,
which will speak the more?
which will speak the better?
which will speak the longer?'"

"Even so, lord."

"Do ye affirm, brethren,
that I have been teaching you
to out-talk each other in this way:

'Come, brother,
which will speak the more?
which will speak the better?
which will speak the longer?'"

"Not so, lord."

"If as ye say, brethren,
ye do not affirm that I have been teaching you thus:

'Come, brother,
which will speak the more?
which will speak the better?
which will speak the longer?',

whatever then,
futile men that ye are,
have ye come to know,
have ye come to see,
in a Doctrine and a Discipline so well declared,
wherein ye are in orders,
that ye should be out-talking each other
as to what ye have learnt,
saying:

'Come, brother,
which will speak the more?
which will speak the better?
which will speak the longer?'".

Then those brethren,[4]
falling prone at the feet of the Exalted One,
spake thus:

"Transgression hath overcome us, lord,
so foolish,
so stupid,
so wrong were we,
in that we,
who are in orders
under a Doctrine and Discipline so well declared,
did out-talk one another therein, saying:

'Come, brother,
which will speak the more?
which will speak the better?
which will speak the longer.'

May the Exalted One accept this our confession, lord,
for restraint in the future."

"Verily, brethren, hath transgression overcome you,
so foolish,
so stupid,
so wrong were ye
in that ye, who are in orders
under a Doctrine and Discipline so well declared,
did out-talk each other, saying:

'Come, brother,
which will speak the more?
which will speak the better?
which will speak the longer.'

But inasmuch as ye, brethren,
have seen your transgression as transgression,
and have made confession,
as is right,
we do accept this from you.

For this, brethren, it is to grow in the Ariyan Discipline, when having [139] seen transgression as transgression
we make confession as is right,
and in future practise self-restraint."

---

[1] 'Why not Sāriputta or Moggallāna? He knew they would not survive him.' Comy. It seems more probable, from Kassapa's (and hence from the Mastsr's) advanced age, that the 'great twin brethren' had already passed away.

[2] Dubbaco.

[3] Apadakkhiṇaggāhī.

[4] Cf. above, p. 91 f.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
16. Kassapa Saṃyutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

16. Kindred Sayings on Kassapa

Sutta 7

Dutiya Ovāda Suttaṃ

Exhortation (2)

---

[205] [139]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was at Rājagaha
at the Bamboo Grove:

Now the venerable Mahā-Kassapa came into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him,
and sat down at his side.

To him so seated
the Exalted One said this:

"Exhort the brethren, Kassapa.

Give them discourse on doctrine, Kassapa.

Either I, Kassapa, or thou
must exhort the brethren.

Either I or thou
must give them discourse on doctrine."

"Just now, lord,
it is difficult to speak to the brethren.

They are in a state
that makes it difficult to speak to them.

They are intractable;
they pay no deference to instruction.

In whomsoever, lord, there is no faith
in that which is good,
in whomsoever there is no inward shame[1]
in that which is good,
in whomsoever there is no outward discretion
as to that which is good,
in whom there is no energy
as to that which is good,
in whom there is no insight
as to that which is good,
of him, come day come night,
decline in that which is good
is to be looked for,
not growth.

Just as the moon, lord,
during the dark fortnight
come night come day
wanes in beauty,
wanes in roundness,
wanes in splendour,
wanes in the height and compass of its orbit,
even so lord, in whomsoever there is no faith
in that which is good,
in whomsoever there is no inward shame
in that which is good,
in whomsoever there is no outward discretion
as to that which is good,
in whom there is no energy
as to that which is good,
in whom there is no insight
as to that which is good,
of him, come day come night,
decline in that which is good
is to be looked for,
not growth.

That a man is unbelieving -
this, lord, is a state of decline.

That a man has no inward shame -
this, lord, is a state of decline.

That a man has no external discretion -
this, lord, is a state of decline.

That a man is slothful,
dull of wit,
hot-tempered,
splenetic -
this is a state of decline.

To say, the brethren do not exhort -
this, lord, is a state of decline.

§

In whomsoever, lord, there is faith
in that which is good,
in whomsoever there is inward shame
in that which is good,
in whomsoever there is outward discretion
as to that which is good,
in whom there is energy
as to that which is good,
in whom there is insight
as to that which is good,
of him, come day come night,
growth in that which is good
is to be looked for,
not decline.

[140] Just as the moon, lord,
during the bright fortnight
come night come day
waxes in beauty,
in roundness,
in splendour,
in the height and compass of its orbit,
even so in whomsoever, lord, there is faith
in that which is good,
in whomsoever there is inward shame
in that which is good,
in whomsoever there is outward discretion

as to that which is good,
in whom there is energy
as to that which is good,
in whom there is insight
as to that which is good,
of him, come day come night,
growth in that which is good
is to be looked for,
not decline.

That a man is believing -
this, lord, is not a state of decline.

That a man have inward shame -
this, lord, is not a state of decline.

That a man have external discretion -
this, lord, is not a state of decline.

That a man have strenuous energy -
this, lord, is not a state of decline.

That a man have insight -
this, lord, is not a state of decline.

That a man have mildness -
this, lord, is not a state of decline.

That a man have amity -
this, lord, is not a state of decline.

To say 'the brethren exhort'-
this, lord, is not a state of decline."

§

"Well said! Well said, Kassapa!

In whomsoever, Kassapa, there is no faith
in that which is good,
in whomsoever there is no inward shame
in that which is good,
in whomsoever there is no outward discretion
as to that which is good,
in whom there is no energy
as to that which is good,
in whom there is no insight
as to that which is good,
of him, come day come night,
decline in that which is good
is to be looked for,
not growth.

Just as the moon, Kassapa,
during the dark fortnight
come night come day
wanes in beauty,
wanes in roundness,
wanes in splendour,
wanes in the height and compass of its orbit,
even so Kassapa, in whomsoever there is no faith
in that which is good,
in whomsoever there is no inward shame
in that which is good,
in whomsoever there is no outward discretion
as to that which is good,
in whom there is no energy
as to that which is good,
in whom there is no insight
as to that which is good,

of him, come day come night,
decline in that which is good
is to be looked for,
not growth.

That a man is unbelieving -
this, Kassapa, is a state of decline.

That a man has no inward shame -
this, Kassapa, is a state of decline.

That a man has no external discretion -
this, Kassapa, is a state of decline.

That a man is slothful,
dull of wit,
hot-tempered,
splenetic -
this is a state of decline.

To say, the brethren do not exhort -
this, Kassapa, is a state of decline.

■

In whomsoever, Kassapa, there is faith
in that which is good,
in whomsoever there is inward shame
in that which is good,
in whomsoever there is outward discretion
as to that which is good,
in whom there is energy
as to that which is good,
in whom there is insight
as to that which is good,
of him, come day come night,
growth in that which is good

is to be looked for,
not decline.

Just as the moon, Kassapa,
during the bright fortnight
come night come day
waxes in beauty,
in roundness,
in splendour,
in the height and compass of its orbit,
even so in whomsoever, Kassapa, there is faith
in that which is good,
in whomsoever there is inward shame
in that which is good,
in whomsoever there is outward discretion
as to that which is good,
in whom there is energy
as to that which is good,
in whom there is insight
as to that which is good,
of him, come day come night,
growth in that which is good
is to be looked for,
not decline.

That a man is believing -
this, Kassapa, is not a state of decline.

That a man have inward shame -
this, Kassapa, is not a state of decline.

That a man have external discretion -
this, Kassapa, is not a state of decline.

That a man have strenuous energy -
this, Kassapa, is not a state of decline.

That a man have insight -
this, Kassapa, is not a state of decline.

That a man have mildness -
this, Kassapa, is not a state of decline.

That a man have amity -
this, Kassapa, is not a state of decline.

To say 'the brethren exhort'-
this, Kassapa, is not a state of decline."

---

[1] Or conscientiousness (kiri).

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
16. Kassapa Saṃyutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

16. Kindred Sayings on Kassapa

Sutta 8

Tatiya Ovāda Suttaṃ

Exhortation (3)

---

[208] [140]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was at Rājagaha
at the Bamboo Grove:

Now the venerable Mahā-Kassapa came into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him,
and sat down at his side.

To him so seated
the Exalted One said this:

"Exhort the brethren, Kassapa.

Give them discourse on doctrine, Kassapa.

Either I, Kassapa, or thou
must exhort the brethren.

Either I or thou
must give them discourse on doctrine."

"Just now, lord,
it is difficult to speak to the brethren.

They are in a state that makes it difficult to speak to them.

They are intractable; they pay no deference to instruction."

"Yea, Kassapa, there was a time when the senior brethren were forest dwellers
and commenders of the forest life, almsmen were they
and they commended going for alms, rag-robe wearers were they
and they commended rag-robe wearing,
three-garment men were they
and they commended the triple-raiment;
of little wants were they,
and they commended few wants;
contented were they,
and they commended contentment;
secluded were they,
and they commended seclusion;
aloof from society were they,
and they commended such aloofness;

strenuous in energy were they,
and they commended such strenuous energy.

Then the brother who was a forest dweller
and commender of the forest life,
almsman
and commendeder of going for alms,
rag-robe wearer
and commendeder of rag-robe wearing,
three-garment man
and commendeder of the triple-raiment;
of little wants,
and commendeder of few wants;
contented,
and commendeder of contentment;
secluded,
and commendeder of seclusion;
aloof from society,
and commendeder of such aloofness;
strenuous in energy,
and commendeder of such strenuous energy,
the senior brethren would invite to a seat,
saying:

'Come brother!

Who may this brother be?

Welcome indeed is this brother!

Anxious to learn truly is this brother!

Come, brother, take this seat.'

■

Then, Kassapa, the novice [141] who was a forest dweller
and commender of the forest life,
almsman
and commendeder of going for alms,
rag-robe wearer
and commendeder of rag-robe wearing,
three-garment man
and commendeder of the triple-raiment;
of little wants,
and commendeder of few wants;
contented,
and commendeder of contentment;
secluded,
and commendeder of seclusion;
aloof from society,
and commendeder of such aloofness;
strenuous in energy,
and commendeder of such strenuous energy,
the senior brethren would invite to a seat,
saying:

'Come brother!

Who may this brother be?

Welcome indeed is this brother!

Anxious to learn truly is this brother!

Come, brother, take this seat.'

They practised that they might so attain;
that made for many a day
for their good,
for their happiness.

But now, Kassapa, the senior brethren
are neither forest dwellers,
nor do they commend forest life;
they are neither almsmen,
nor do they commend going for alms;
they are neither rag-robe men,
nor do they commend rag-robe wearing;
they are neither three-garment men,
nor do they commend the triple-raiment;
they are neither of little wants,
nor do they commend few wants;
they are neither contented,
nor do they commend contentment;
they are neither secluded,
nor do they commend seclusion;
they are neither aloof from society,
nor do they commend such aloofness;
they are neither strenuous in energy,
nor do they commend such strenuous energy.

So it is that the brother who is known,
is of repute,
one who gets presents of raiment,
alms,
lodging
and medical requisites -
him it is that the senior brethren invite to a seat,
saying:

'Come brother!

Who may this brother be?

Welcome indeed is this brother!

Anxious to learn truly is this brother!

Come, brother, take this seat.'

So it is, Kassapa, the novice who is known,
is of repute,
one who gets presents of raiment,
alms,
lodging
and medical requisites -
him it is that the senior brethren invite to a seat,
saying:

'Come brother!

Who may this brother be?

Welcome indeed is this brother!

Anxious to learn truly is this brother!

Come, brother, take this seat.'

They practise that they may so attain.

That makes for many a day
for their hurt
and for their sorrow.

If anyone, Kassapa, were to say,

'They who lead the religious life
are harassed by its own dangers;
they who lead the religious life
are fighters of that which assails it,'[1]
he would thereby be saying that which is right.

---

[1] See brahmacārī*. The dangers 'within the fold,' B. explains, are excessive desire for material comforts.

brahmacārī*. The inflexions in this sentence are puzzling. One would think the text should read 'upaddutā brahmacārino ... abhibhūta brahmacārino. The printed S. text of the Comy. says, that Burmese texts read abhitthanā for abhibhavanā. This does not help. p. 141. [Ed.: from Index II]

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
16. Kassapa Saṃyutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

16. Kindred Sayings on Kassapa

Sutta 9

Jhān-ā-bhiññā Suttaṃ

Jhāna and Super-Knowledge

---

[210] [141]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

And there the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren!"

"Master!" responded those brethren.

The Exalted One said:

"I, brethren,
according as I desire [can],
aloof from sense and evil,
attain to
and abide in First Jhāna,
wherein thought is applied and sustained,
which is born of solitude
and filled with zest and pleasant emotion.

Kassapa too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
aloof from sense and evil,
attain to
and abide in First Jhāna,
wherein thought is applied and sustained,
which is born of solitude
and filled with zest and pleasant emotion.

■

[1] [142] I, brethren,
according as I desire,
from the subsiding of thought applied and sustained,
[can] attain to
and abide in Second Jhāna,
which is inward tranquillizing,
uplifting of will,
where is no applying and sustaining of thought,
which is born of concentration
and filled with zest and pleasant emotion.

Kassapa too, brethren,
according as he desires,
from the subsiding of thought applied and sustained,

[can] attain to
and abide in Second Jhāna,
which is inward tranquillizing,
uplifting of will,
where is no applying and sustaining of thought,
which is born of concentration
and filled with zest and pleasant emotion.

■

I, brethren,
according as I desire,
from the fading out of zest,
[can] attain to
and abide in Third Jhāna,
abiding with even mind,
mindful and discerning,
aware in the body
of that pleasant emotion
whereof the Ariyans declare:

'Happy doth he abide with even, lucid mind!'

Kassapa too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
from the fading out of zest,
[can] attain to
and abide in Third Jhāna,
abiding with even mind,
mindful and discerning,
aware in the body
of that pleasant emotion
whereof the Ariyans declare:

'Happy doth he abide with even, lucid mind!'

■

I, brethren,
according as I desire,
from putting away both pleasant and painful emotion,
by the dying out
of the joy and sorrow I felt before,
[can] attain to
and abide in Fourth Jhāna,
that utterly pure lucidity
and indifference of mind,
wherein is neither happiness nor unhappiness.

Kassapa too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
from putting away both pleasant and painful emotion,
by the dying out
of the joy and sorrow he felt before,
[can] attain to
and abide in Fourth Jhāna,
that utterly pure lucidity
and indifference of mind,
wherein is neither happiness nor unhappiness.

■

I, brethren,
according as I desire,
by passing entirely beyond the awareness of visible shapes,
by the dying out of the awareness of resistances,
by paying no heed to the awareness of diversity,
[can] attain to
and abide in
the conceptual sense of space as infinite,
thinking:

'Infinite is space.'

Kassapa too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
by passing entirely beyond the awareness of visible shapes,
by the dying out of the awareness of resistances,
by paying no heed to the awareness of diversity,
[can] attain to
and abide in
the conceptual sense of space as infinite,
thinking:

'Infinite is space.'

■

I, brethren,
according as I desire,
when I have wholly passed beyond the sense of space as infinite,
[can] attain to
and abide in
the sense of consciousness as infinite, thinking

'Infinite is consciousness.'

Kassapa too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
when he has wholly passed beyond the sense of space as infinite,
[can] attain to
and abide in
the sense of consciousness as infinite, thinking

'Infinite is consciousness.'

■

I, brethren,
according as I desire,
when I have wholly passed beyond the sense of consciousness as infinite,

[can] attain to
and abide in
the sense of nothingness, thinking,

'There is nothing.'

Kassapa too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
when he has wholly passed beyond the sense of consciousness as infinite,
[can] attain to
and abide in
the sense of nothingness, thinking,

'There is nothing.'

■

I, brethren,
according as I desire,
when I have wholly passed beyond the sense of nothingness,
[can] attain to
and abide in
the sense of neither percipience nor non-percipience.

Kassapa too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
when he has wholly passed beyond the sense of nothingness,
[can] attain to
and abide in
the sense of neither percipience nor non-percipience.

■

[143] I, brethren,
according as I desire,
when I have passed wholly beyond the sense of neither percipience nor non-percipience,

[can] attain to
and abide in [that state in which there is]
ceasing of percipience and feeling.

Kassapa too, brethren, can
according as he desires,[2]
when he has passed wholly beyond the sense of neither percipience nor non-percipience,
[can] attain to
and abide in [that state in which there is]
ceasing of percipience and feeling.

§

I, brethren,
according as I desire,
enjoy manifold mystic power:[3]

Being one I become many,
being many I become one;
here visible
there invisible
I go without let or hindrance through wall,
through rampart,
through hill,
as if through air;
I dive into earth
and up again
as if in water;
I walk on water
without cleaving it
as on earth;

I travel seated cross-legged through air
as if I were a bird on the wing;
I can handle and stroke with the hand
this moon and sun,
mighty and powerful though they be;
I can control the body
even to Brahma world.

Kassapa too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
enjoy manifold mystic power:

Being one he becomes many,
being many he becomes one;
here visible
there invisible
he goes without let or hindrance through wall,
through rampart,
through hill,
as if through air;
he dives into earth
and up again
as if in water;
he walks on water
without cleaving it
as on earth;
he travels seated cross-legged through air
as if he were a bird on the wing;
he can handle and stroke with the hand
this moon and sun,
mighty and powerful though they be;
he can control the body
even to Brahma world.

■

I, brethren, according as I desire,
with with purified hearing of devas
passing that of men,
can hear sounds both of devas and of men
whether far or near.

Kassapa too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
with with purified hearing of devas
passing that of men,
can hear sounds both of devas and of men
whether far or near.

■

I, brethren,
according as I desire,
know in mind
the mind[4] of other beings,
other persons,
I know the passionate heart as passionate,
the dispassionate heart as dispassionate,
I know the heart of hate as hating,
the heart of amity as amiable;
I know the dull heart as dull,
the intelligent heart as intelligent;
I know the confused mind as confused,
the intent mind as tense,
the lofty mind as such,
the mean mind as mean,
the far-seeing mind as far-seeing mind,
the cramped vision as cramped vision,
the concentrated mind as concentrated mind,
the desultory mind as desultory mind,
the freed mind as freed,
the bound mind as bound.

Kassapa, brethren
according as he desires,
knows in mind
the mind of other beings,
other persons,
he knows the passionate heart as passionate,
the dispassionate heart as dispassionate,
he knows the heart of hate as hating,
the heart of amity as amiable;
he knows the dull heart as dull,
the intelligent heart as intelligent;
he knows the confused mind as confused,
the intent mind as tense,
the lofty mind as such,
the mean mind as mean,
the far-seeing mind as far-seeing mind,
the cramped vision as cramped vision,
the concentrated mind as concentrated mind,
the desultory mind as desultory mind,
the freed mind as freed,
the bound mind as bound.

■

I, brethren,
according as I desire,
can remember my divers former lives,
that is to say,
one birth,
or two,
or three,
or four,
or five births,
or ten,
twenty,
thirty,

forty,
fifty births,
or a hundred,
a thousand
or even a hundred thousand,
or [144] even more than one seon of involution
or more than one aeon of evolution,
or more than one of both involution and evolution:
'Such an one was I by name,
of such a clan,
of such a social status,
so was I nourished,
such happy and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end,
deceasing thence
so did I come to be,
there too was I such by name,
of such a clan,
of such a social station,
so was I nourished,
such happy and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end,
deceasing thence
so did I come to be here:'
I can thus call to mind
in circumstance
and detail
my former lives.

Kassapa, brethren
according as he desires,
can remember his divers former lives,
that is to say,
one birth,
or two,
or three,

or four,
or five births,
or ten,
twenty,
thirty,
forty,
fifty births,
or a hundred,
a thousand
or even a hundred thousand,
or even more than one seon of involution
or more than one aeon of evolution,
or more than one of both involution and evolution:
'Such an one was I by name,
of such a clan,
of such a social status,
so was I nourished,
such happy and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end,
deceasing thence
so did I come to be,
there too was I such by name,
of such a clan,
of such a social station,
so was I nourished,
such happy and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end,
deceasing thence
so did I come to be here:'
he can thus call to mind
in circumstance
and detail
his former lives.

■

I, brethren,
according as I desire,
can behold with purified deva-vision
past that of man,
beings as they decease
and come to be
mean or excellent,
fair or foul,
I can know them going
according to their deeds
to weal or woe,
thinking:

'Lo! these good people
whose deeds were evil,
whose speech was evil,
whose thoughts were evil,
abusers of Ariyans,
having wrong views
and undertaking the acts that [come from] wrong views -
they at the breaking up of the body,
after death
have come to be
in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
hell.

Lo! those good people
whose deeds were good,
whose speech was good,
whose thoughts were good,
who abused not Ariyans,
of right views
and who undertook the acts that [come from] right views -
they at the breaking up of the body,

after death
have come to be in a good destiny,
in a bright world.'

Thus do I behold beings
with pure deva-sight
passing that of men,
how they decease,
and come to be
mean or excellent,
fair or foul,
I know them
as going according to their actions
to weal or woe.

Kassapa, brethren,
according as he desires,
can behold with purified deva-vision
past that of man,
beings as they decease
and come to be
mean or excellent,
fair or foul,
he can know them going
according to their deeds
to weal or woe,
thinking:

'Lo! these good people
whose deeds were evil,
whose speech was evil,
whose thoughts were evil,
abusers of Ariyans,
having wrong views
and undertaking the acts that [come from] wrong views -
they at the breaking up of the body,

after death
have come to be
in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
hell.

Lo! those good people
whose deeds were good,
whose speech was good,
whose thoughts were good,
who abused not Ariyans,
of right views
and who undertook the acts that [come from] right views -
they at the breaking up of the body,
after death
have come to be in a good destiny,
in a bright world.'

Thus does he behold beings
with pure deva-sight
passing that of men,
how they decease,
and come to be
mean or excellent,
fair or foul,
he knows them
as going according to their actions
to weal or woe.

■

And I, brethren,
by the withering of the intoxicants,
have entered into
and abide in

that sane and immune[5] emancipation of will,
that emancipation of insight
which I have come thoroughly to know
and to realize for myself
even in this present life.

[145] Kassapa too, brethren,
by the withering of the intoxicants,
has entered into
and abides in
that sane and immune emancipation of will,
emancipation of insight
which he has come thoroughly to know
and to realize for himself
even in this present life."

---

[1] The formulas are repeated in full for Kassapa. [Ed.: expanded here.] On the Jhānas cf. my Buddhist Psychology, pp. 107-19.

[2] Thus far the four Rūpa-Jhānas and four Arūpa-Jhānas. Now follow the six Super-knowledges (abhiññā).

[3] Cf. above, p. 86 f.

[4] Or, 'know by will the will' (ceto).

[5] Anāsava. Being cleansed of the Āsava poisons, he is both healthy and not liable to be re-infected. Cf. Pss. of the Brethren, passim.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
16. Kassapa Saṃyutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

16. Kindred Sayings on Kassapa

Sutta 10

Bhikkhun'Upassaya Suttaṃ

The Sisters' Quarters

---

[214] [145]

Thus have I heard:

The venerable Mahā-Kassapa was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Ānanda,
robing himself at an early hour
and taking his bowl and robe,
went into the presence of the venerable Mahā-Kassapa,
saluted him,
and sat down beside him.

So seated he said to the venerable Mahā-Kassapa:

"Let us go, your reverence,[1]
to a certain sisters' settlement."

"Go thou, friend Ānanda,
thou art a man of many duties,
of much work."[2]

And a second time Ānanda said to the venerable Mahā-Kassapa:

"Let us go, your reverence,
to a certain sisters' settlement."

And a second time the venerable Mahā-Kassapa responded:

"Go thou, friend Ānanda,
thou art a man of many duties,
of much work."

And a third time Ānanda said to the venerable Mahā-Kassapa:

"Let us go, your reverence,
to a certain sisters' settlement."

Then the venerable Mahā-Kassapa
at that early hour
robing himself
and taking bowl and robe,
with Ānanda walking as attendant behind him,
went to that certain sisters' settlement
and sat down on the seat made ready.

Then a number of sisters came before Mahā-Kassapa,
and saluted him
and sat down beside him.

And those sisters so seated
the venerable Mahā-Kassapa instructed by a religious talk,
enlightening,
inciting,
and inspiring them.[3]

Thereupon he rose from his seat and departed.

Now the sister Fat Tissa was not pleased,
and gave vent to words of displeasure:

"What! does Father[4] Mahā-Kassapa deem he is to speak doctrine in the presence of Father Ānanda
the learned sage?[5]

It is as if the needle-pedlar were to deem he could sell a needle
to the needlemaker!"

[146] Now the venerable Mahā-Kassapa heard that Fat Tissa the sister was talking like this.

And he said to the venerable Ānanda:

"How, now, friend Ānanda,
am I the needle-pedlar
and you the needlemaker,
or am I the needlemaker
and you the needle-pedlar?"

"Be indulgent, your reverence,
women are foolish."

"Come, come, friend Ānanda,
let not the Order inquire further concerning thee.[6]

As to this,
what thinkest thou, friend Ānanda?

Was it thou whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'I, brethren,
according as I desire [can],
aloof from sense and evil,
attain to
and abide in First Jhāna,
wherein thought is applied and sustained,
which is born of solitude
and filled with zest and pleasant emotion.

Ānanda too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
aloof from sense and evil,
attain to
and abide in First Jhāna,
wherein thought is applied and sustained,
which is born of solitude
and filled with zest and pleasant emotion?'"

"Not so, your reverence."

"Or, was it I whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'I, brethren,
according as I desire [can],
aloof from sense and evil,
attain to
and abide in First Jhāna,
wherein thought is applied and sustained,
which is born of solitude
and filled with zest and pleasant emotion.

Kassapa too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
aloof from sense and evil,
attain to
and abide in First Jhāna,
wherein thought is applied and sustained,
which is born of solitude
and filled with zest and pleasant emotion.'

■

Was it thou whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'I, brethren,
according as I desire,
from the subsiding of thought applied and sustained,
[can] attain to
and abide in Second Jhāna,
which is inward tranquillizing,
uplifting of will,
where is no applying and sustaining of thought,
which is born of concentration
and filled with zest and pleasant emotion.

Ānanda too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
from the subsiding of thought applied and sustained,
[can] attain to
and abide in Second Jhāna,
which is inward tranquillizing,
uplifting of will,
where is no applying and sustaining of thought,
which is born of concentration
and filled with zest and pleasant emotion?'"

"Not so, your reverence."

"Or, was it I whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'I, brethren,
according as I desire,
from the subsiding of thought applied and sustained,
[can] attain to
and abide in Second Jhāna,
which is inward tranquillizing,
uplifting of will,
where is no applying and sustaining of thought,
which is born of concentration
and filled with zest and pleasant emotion.

Kassapa too, brethren,
according as he desires,
from the subsiding of thought applied and sustained,
[can] attain to
and abide in Second Jhāna,
which is inward tranquillizing,
uplifting of will,
where is no applying and sustaining of thought,
which is born of concentration
and filled with zest and pleasant emotion.'

■

Was it thou whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'I, brethren,
according as I desire,
from the fading out of zest,
[can] attain to
and abide in Third Jhāna,
abiding with even mind,
mindful and discerning,
aware in the body

of that pleasant emotion
whereof the Ariyans declare:

"Happy doth he abide with even, lucid mind!"

Ānanda too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
from the fading out of zest,
[can] attain to
and abide in Third Jhāna,
abiding with even mind,
mindful and discerning,
aware in the body
of that pleasant emotion
whereof the Ariyans declare:

"Happy doth he abide with even, lucid mind!?'"

"Not so, your reverence."

"Or, was it I whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'I, brethren,
according as I desire,
from the fading out of zest,
[can] attain to
and abide in Third Jhāna,
abiding with even mind,
mindful and discerning,
aware in the body
of that pleasant emotion
whereof the Ariyans declare:

"Happy doth he abide with even, lucid mind!"

Kassapa too, brethren, can
according as he desires,

from the fading out of zest,
[can] attain to
and abide in Third Jhāna,
abiding with even mind,
mindful and discerning,
aware in the body
of that pleasant emotion
whereof the Ariyans declare:

"Happy doth he abide with even, lucid mind!"

■

Was it thou whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'I, brethren,
according as I desire,
from putting away both pleasant and painful emotion,
by the dying out
of the joy and sorrow I felt before,
[can] attain to
and abide in Fourth Jhāna,
that utterly pure lucidity
and indifference of mind,
wherein is neither happiness nor unhappiness.

Ānanda too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
from putting away both pleasant and painful emotion,
by the dying out
of the joy and sorrow he felt before,
[can] attain to
and abide in Fourth Jhāna,
that utterly pure lucidity
and indifference of mind,
wherein is neither happiness nor unhappiness?'"

"Not so, your reverence."

"Or, was it I whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'I, brethren,
according as I desire,
from putting away both pleasant and painful emotion,
by the dying out
of the joy and sorrow I felt before,
[can] attain to
and abide in Fourth Jhāna,
that utterly pure lucidity
and indifference of mind,
wherein is neither happiness nor unhappiness.

Kassapa too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
from putting away both pleasant and painful emotion,
by the dying out
of the joy and sorrow he felt before,
[can] attain to
and abide in Fourth Jhāna,
that utterly pure lucidity
and indifference of mind,
wherein is neither happiness nor unhappiness.'

■

Was it thou whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'I, brethren,
according as I desire,
by passing entirely beyond the awareness of visible shapes,
by the dying out of the awareness of resistances,
by paying no heed to the awareness of diversity,
[can] attain to
and abide in

the conceptual sense of space as infinite,
thinking:

"Infinite is space."

Ānanda too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
by passing entirely beyond the awareness of visible shapes,
by the dying out of the awareness of resistances,
by paying no heed to the awareness of diversity,
[can] attain to
and abide in
the conceptual sense of space as infinite,
thinking:

"Infinite is space."'?"

"Not so, your reverence."

"Or, was it I whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'I, brethren,
according as I desire,
by passing entirely beyond the awareness of visible shapes,
by the dying out of the awareness of resistances,
by paying no heed to the awareness of diversity,
[can] attain to
and abide in
the conceptual sense of space as infinite,
thinking:

"Infinite is space."

Kassapa too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
by passing entirely beyond the awareness of visible shapes,
by the dying out of the awareness of resistances,

by paying no heed to the awareness of diversity,
[can] attain to
and abide in
the conceptual sense of space as infinite,
thinking:

"Infinite is space."'

■

Was it thou whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'I, brethren,
according as I desire,
when I have wholly passed beyond the sense of space as infinite,
[can] attain to
and abide in
the sense of consciousness as infinite, thinking

"Infinite is consciousness."

Ānanda too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
when he has wholly passed beyond the sense of space as infinite,
[can] attain to
and abide in
the sense of consciousness as infinite, thinking

"Infinite is consciousness."'?"

"Not so, your reverence."

"Or, was it I whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'I, brethren,
according as I desire,
when I have wholly passed beyond the sense of space as infinite,

[can] attain to
and abide in
the sense of consciousness as infinite, thinking

"Infinite is consciousness."

Kassapa too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
when he has wholly passed beyond the sense of space as infinite,
[can] attain to
and abide in
the sense of consciousness as infinite, thinking

"Infinite is consciousness."

■

Was it thou whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'I, brethren,
according as I desire,
when I have wholly passed beyond the sense of consciousness as infinite,
[can] attain to
and abide in
the sense of nothingness, thinking,

"There is nothing."

Ānanda too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
when he has wholly passed beyond the sense of consciousness as infinite,
[can] attain to
and abide in
the sense of nothingness, thinking,

"There is nothing."'?"

"Not so, your reverence."

"Or, was it I whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'I, brethren,
according as I desire,
when I have wholly passed beyond the sense of consciousness as infinite,
[can] attain to
and abide in
the sense of nothingness, thinking,

"There is nothing."

Kassapa too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
when he has wholly passed beyond the sense of consciousness as infinite,
[can] attain to
and abide in
the sense of nothingness, thinking,

"There is nothing."

■

Was it thou whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'I, brethren,
according as I desire,
when I have wholly passed beyond the sense of nothingness,
[can] attain to
and abide in
the sense of neither percipience nor non-percipience.

Ānanda too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
when he has wholly passed beyond the sense of nothingness,
[can] attain to

and abide in
the sense of neither percipience nor non-percipience?'"

"Not so, your reverence."

"Or, was it I whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'I, brethren,
according as I desire,
when I have wholly passed beyond the sense of nothingness,
[can] attain to
and abide in
the sense of neither percipience nor non-percipience.

Kassapa too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
when he has wholly passed beyond the sense of nothingness,
[can] attain to
and abide in
the sense of neither percipience nor non-percipience.'

■

Was it thou whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'I, brethren,
according as I desire,
when I have passed wholly beyond the sense of neither percipience nor non-percipience,
[can] attain to
and abide in [that state in which there is]
ceasing of percipience and feeling.

Ānanda too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
when he has passed wholly beyond the sense of neither percipience nor non-percipience,

[can] attain to
and abide in [that state in which there is]
ceasing of percipience and feeling?'"

"Not so, your reverence."

"Or, was it I whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'I, brethren,
according as I desire,
when I have passed wholly beyond the sense of neither percipience nor non-percipience,
[can] attain to
and abide in [that state in which there is]
ceasing of percipience and feeling.

Kassapa too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
when he has passed wholly beyond the sense of neither percipience nor non-percipience,
[can] attain to
and abide in [that state in which there is]
ceasing of percipience and feeling.'

§

Was it thou whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'I, brethren,
according as I desire,
enjoy manifold mystic power:

Being one I become many,
being many I become one;
here visible
there invisible
I go without let or hindrance through wall,
through rampart,
through hill,
as if through air;
I dive into earth
and up again
as if in water;
I walk on water
without cleaving it
as on earth;
I travel seated cross-legged through air
as if I were a bird on the wing;
I can handle and stroke with the hand
this moon and sun,
mighty and powerful though they be;
I can control the body
even to Brahma world.

Ānanda too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
enjoy manifold mystic power:

Being one he becomes many,
being many he becomes one;
here visible
there invisible
he goes without let or hindrance through wall,
through rampart,
through hill,
as if through air;
he dives into earth
and up again

as if in water;
he walks on water
without cleaving it
as on earth;
he travels seated cross-legged through air
as if he were a bird on the wing;
he can handle and stroke with the hand
this moon and sun,
mighty and powerful though they be;
he can control the body
even to Brahma world?'"

"Not so, your reverence."

"Or, was it I whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'I, brethren,
according as I desire,
enjoy manifold mystic power:

Being one I become many,
being many I become one;
here visible
there invisible
I go without let or hindrance through wall,
through rampart,
through hill,
as if through air;
I dive into earth
and up again
as if in water;
I walk on water
without cleaving it
as on earth;
I travel seated cross-legged through air
as if I were a bird on the wing;

I can handle and stroke with the hand
this moon and sun,
mighty and powerful though they be;
I can control the body
even to Brahma world."

Kassapa too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
enjoy manifold mystic power:

Being one he becomes many,
being many he becomes one;
here visible
there invisible
he goes without let or hindrance through wall,
through rampart,
through hill,
as if through air;
he dives into earth
and up again
as if in water;
he walks on water
without cleaving it
as on earth;
he travels seated cross-legged through air
as if he were a bird on the wing;
he can handle and stroke with the hand
this moon and sun,
mighty and powerful though they be;
he can control the body
even to Brahma world.'

■

Was it thou whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'I, brethren, according as I desire,
with with purified hearing of devas
passing that of men,
can hear sounds both of devas and of men
whether far or near.

Ānanda too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
with with purified hearing of devas
passing that of men,
can hear sounds both of devas and of men
whether far or near?'

"Not so, your reverence."

"Or, was it I whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'I, brethren, according as I desire,
with with purified hearing of devas
passing that of men,
can hear sounds both of devas and of men
whether far or near.

Kassapa too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
with with purified hearing of devas
passing that of men,
can hear sounds both of devas and of men
whether far or near.'

■

Was it thou whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'I, brethren,
according as I desire,
know in mind

the mind of other beings,
other persons,
I know the passionate heart as passionate,
the dispassionate heart as dispassionate,
I know the heart of hate as hating,
the heart of amity as amiable;
I know the dull heart as dull,
the intelligent heart as intelligent;
I know the confused mind as confused,
the intent mind as tense,
the lofty mind as such,
the mean mind as mean,
the far-seeing mind as far-seeing mind,
the cramped vision as cramped vision,
the concentrated mind as concentrated mind,
the desultory mind as desultory mind,
the freed mind as freed,
the bound mind as bound.

Ānanda too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
knows in mind
the mind of other beings,
other persons,
he knows the passionate heart as passionate,
the dispassionate heart as dispassionate,
he knows the heart of hate as hating,
the heart of amity as amiable;
he knows the dull heart as dull,
the intelligent heart as intelligent;
he knows the confused mind as confused,
the intent mind as tense,
the lofty mind as such,
the mean mind as mean,
the far-seeing mind as far-seeing mind,
the cramped vision as cramped vision,

the concentrated mind as concentrated mind,
the desultory mind as desultory mind,
the freed mind as freed,
the bound mind as bound?'"

"Not so, your reverence."

"Or, was it I whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'I, brethren,
according as I desire,
know in mind
the mind of other beings,
other persons,
I know the passionate heart as passionate,
the dispassionate heart as dispassionate,
I know the heart of hate as hating,
the heart of amity as amiable;
I know the dull heart as dull,
the intelligent heart as intelligent;
I know the confused mind as confused,
the intent mind as tense,
the lofty mind as such,
the mean mind as mean,
the far-seeing mind as far-seeing mind,
the cramped vision as cramped vision,
the concentrated mind as concentrated mind,
the desultory mind as desultory mind,
the freed mind as freed,
the bound mind as bound.

Kassapa, brethren
according as he desires,
knows in mind
the mind of other beings,
other persons,

he knows the passionate heart as passionate,
the dispassionate heart as dispassionate,
he knows the heart of hate as hating,
the heart of amity as amiable;
he knows the dull heart as dull,
the intelligent heart as intelligent;
he knows the confused mind as confused,
the intent mind as tense,
the lofty mind as such,
the mean mind as mean,
the far-seeing mind as far-seeing mind,
the cramped vision as cramped vision,
the concentrated mind as concentrated mind,
the desultory mind as desultory mind,
the freed mind as freed,
the bound mind as bound.'

■

Was it thou whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'I, brethren,
according as I desire,
can remember my divers former lives,
that is to say,
one birth,
or two,
or three,
or four,
or five births,
or ten,
twenty,
thirty,
forty,
fifty births,
or a hundred,

a thousand
or even a hundred thousand,
or even more than one seon of involution
or more than one aeon of evolution,
or more than one of both involution and evolution:
"Such an one was I by name,
of such a clan,
of such a social status,
so was I nourished,
such happy and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end,
deceasing thence
so did I come to be,
there too was I such by name,
of such a clan,
of such a social station,
so was I nourished,
such happy and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end,
deceasing thence
so did I come to be here:"
I can thus call to mind
in circumstance
and detail
my former lives

Ānanda too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
can remember his divers former lives,
that is to say,
one birth,
or two,
or three,
or four,
or five births,
or ten,

twenty,
thirty,
forty,
fifty births,
or a hundred,
a thousand
or even a hundred thousand,
or even more than one seon of involution
or more than one aeon of evolution,
or more than one of both involution and evolution:
"Such an one was I by name,
of such a clan,
of such a social status,
so was I nourished,
such happy and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end,
deceasing thence
so did I come to be,
there too was I such by name,
of such a clan,
of such a social station,
so was I nourished,
such happy and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end,
deceasing thence
so did I come to be here:"
he can thus call to mind
in circumstance
and detail
his former lives?'"

"Not so, your reverence."

"Or, was it I whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'I, brethren,
according as I desire,
can remember my divers former lives,
that is to say,
one birth,
or two,
or three,
or four,
or five births,
or ten,
twenty,
thirty,
forty,
fifty births,
or a hundred,
a thousand
or even a hundred thousand,
or even more than one seon of involution
or more than one aeon of evolution,
or more than one of both involution and evolution:
"Such an one was I by name,
of such a clan,
of such a social status,
so was I nourished,
such happy and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end,
deceasing thence
so did I come to be,
there too was I such by name,
of such a clan,
of such a social station,
so was I nourished,
such happy and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end,
deceasing thence
so did I come to be here:"

I can thus call to mind
in circumstance
and detail
my former lives.

Kassapa, brethren
according as he desires,
can remember his divers former lives,
that is to say,
one birth,
or two,
or three,
or four,
or five births,
or ten,
twenty,
thirty,
forty,
fifty births,
or a hundred,
a thousand
or even a hundred thousand,
or even more than one seon of involution
or more than one aeon of evolution,
or more than one of both involution and evolution:
"Such an one was I by name,
of such a clan,
of such a social status,
so was I nourished,
such happy and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end,
deceasing thence
so did I come to be,
there too was I such by name,
of such a clan,
of such a social station,

so was I nourished,
such happy and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end,
deceasing thence
so did I come to be here:"
he can thus call to mind
in circumstance
and detail
his former lives.'

■

Was it thou whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'I, brethren,
according as I desire,
can behold with purified deva-vision
past that of man,
beings as they decease
and come to be
mean or excellent,
fair or foul,
I can know them going
according to their deeds
to weal or woe,
thinking:

"Lo! these good people
whose deeds were evil,
whose speech was evil,
whose thoughts were evil,
abusers of Ariyans,
having wrong views
and undertaking the acts that [come from] wrong views -
they at the breaking up of the body,
after death

have come to be
in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
hell.

Lo! those good people
whose deeds were good,
whose speech was good,
whose thoughts were good,
who abused not Ariyans,
of right views
and who undertook the acts that [come from] right views -
they at the breaking up of the body,
after death
have come to be in a good destiny,
in a bright world."

Thus do I behold beings
with pure deva-sight
passing that of men,
how they decease,
and come to be
mean or excellent,
fair or foul,
I know them
as going according to their actions
to weal or woe.

Ānanda too, brethren, can
according as he desires,
can behold with purified deva-vision
past that of man,
beings as they decease
and come to be
mean or excellent,

fair or foul,
he can know them going
according to their deeds
to weal or woe,
thinking:

"Lo! these good people
whose deeds were evil,
whose speech was evil,
whose thoughts were evil,
abusers of Ariyans,
having wrong views
and undertaking the acts that [come from] wrong views -
they at the breaking up of the body,
after death
have come to be
in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
hell.

Lo! those good people
whose deeds were good,
whose speech was good,
whose thoughts were good,
who abused not Ariyans,
of right views
and who undertook the acts that [come from] right views -
they at the breaking up of the body,
after death
have come to be in a good destiny,
in a bright world."

Thus does he behold beings
with pure deva-sight
passing that of men,

how they decease,
and come to be
mean or excellent,
fair or foul,
he knows them
as going according to their actions
to weal or woe?'"

"Not so, your reverence."

"Or, was it I whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'I, brethren,
according as I desire,
can behold with purified deva-vision
past that of man,
beings as they decease
and come to be
mean or excellent,
fair or foul,
I can know them going
according to their deeds
to weal or woe,
thinking:

"Lo! these good people
whose deeds were evil,
whose speech was evil,
whose thoughts were evil,
abusers of Ariyans,
having wrong views
and undertaking the acts that [come from] wrong views -
they at the breaking up of the body,
after death
have come to be
in the Waste,

the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
hell.

Lo! those good people
whose deeds were good,
whose speech was good,
whose thoughts were good,
who abused not Ariyans,
of right views
and who undertook the acts that [come from] right views -
they at the breaking up of the body,
after death
have come to be in a good destiny,
in a bright world."

Thus do I behold beings
with pure deva-sight
passing that of men,
how they decease,
and come to be
mean or excellent,
fair or foul,
I know them
as going according to their actions
to weal or woe.

Kassapa, brethren,
according as he desires,
can behold with purified deva-vision
past that of man,
beings as they decease
and come to be
mean or excellent,
fair or foul,
he can know them going

according to their deeds
to weal or woe,
thinking:

"Lo! these good people
whose deeds were evil,
whose speech was evil,
whose thoughts were evil,
abusers of Ariyans,
having wrong views
and undertaking the acts that [come from] wrong views -
they at the breaking up of the body,
after death
have come to be
in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
hell.

Lo! those good people
whose deeds were good,
whose speech was good,
whose thoughts were good,
who abused not Ariyans,
of right views
and who undertook the acts that [come from] right views -
they at the breaking up of the body,
after death
have come to be in a good destiny,
in a bright world."

Thus does he behold beings
with pure deva-sight
passing that of men,
how they decease,
and come to be

mean or excellent,
fair or foul,
he knows them
as going according to their actions
to weal or woe.'

■

Was it thou whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'And I, brethren,
by the withering of the intoxicants,
have entered into
and abide in
that sane and immune emancipation of will,
that emancipation of insight
which I have come thoroughly to know
and to realize for myself
even in this present life.

Ānanda too, brethren,
by the withering of the intoxicants,
has entered into
and abides in
that sane and immune emancipation of will,
emancipation of insight
which he has come thoroughly to know
and to realize for himself
even in this present life?'"

"Not so, your reverence."

"Or, was it I whom the Exalted One brought before the Order, saying:

'And I, brethren,
by the withering of the intoxicants,
have entered into

and abide in
that sane and immune emancipation of will,
that emancipation of insight
which I have come thoroughly to know
and to realize for myself
even in this present life.

Kassapa too, brethren,
by the withering of the intoxicants,
has entered into
and abides in
that sane and immune emancipation of will,
emancipation of insight
which he has come thoroughly to know
and to realize for himself
even in this present life.'

It were as easy, friend,
to imagine that an elephant
seven to eight cubits high
could be hidden under a young palmleaf,
as to imagine that the six Super-knowledges of me
could be hidden!"

But sister Fat Tissa fell away from the holy life.

---

[1] The Comy. represents the Master as now having passed away, and that Kassapa had taken his place and would be trusted as a preacher.

[2] Namely, just then of comforting and sustaining the congregations mourning the loss of the Buddha. Comy.

[3] On this formula see above, i, 141, n. 4.

[4] Ayyo, literally Ariya, from the dieeretic form Ayira. Ayyaka, diminutive = grandfather.

[5] On vedehamuni see above, i, 321.

[6] Comy.: That is, Stop, thou friend! let not the Order imagine hereafter there must be a keeping company, a fondness between you and any one of the Sisters.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
16. Kassapa Saṃyutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

16. Kindred Sayings on Kassapa

Sutta 11

Cīvara Suttaṃ

The Robe

---

[217] [146]

Thus have I heard:

The venerable Mahā-Kassapa was once staying at Rājagaha,
in the Bamboo Grove at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now at that time
the venerable Ānanda was making a tour about the Southern Hills[1] with a great company of brethren.

Now at that time
as many as thirty brethren,

followers of [147] Ānanda,
and for the most part youths,
had renounced the training,
and turned to low things.

Now the venerable Ānanda
when he had toured in the Southern Hills
as long as it pleased him,
came to Rājagaha,
and going to the Bamboo Grove,
to the Squirrels' Feeding-ground,
he entered the venerable Mahā-Kassapa's presence,
saluted him
and sat down.

To him so seated
Mahā-Kassapa said this:

"What were the several advantages, friend[ed1], Ānanda,
on account of which were
'three only at a meal'[2]
prescribed by the Exalted One
for the families?"

"There are three advantages, your reverence, Kassapa,
on account of which was
'three only at a meal'
prescribed by the Exalted One
for the families,
namely:

[1] For restraining ill-natured persons,[3]
[2] for the well-being of pious brethren,
(lest evil-wishers, backed by a clique, should bring discord into the Order),
[3] and for the tender care of the families.

It is these three advantages
on account of which was
'three only at a meal'
prescribed by the Exalted One
for the families."[ed2]

"Then why on earth dost thou, friend Ānanda,
tour about with these young brethren
who have the gates of their senses unguarded,
who are without moderation in their food,
who are not devoted to vigils?

Corn-trampler methinks art thou!

Despoiler of the families methinks art thou!

Thy following, friend Ānanda,
is breaking up.

Thy youngsters, friend,
are melting away!

This boy does not know his own measure!"

"Surely my head is growing grey hairs, your reverence, and yet we are not vexed at the venerable Mahā-Kassapa even at this time of day
calling us 'boy.'"

"Verily, friend Ānanda,
it is thus that thou goest on tour
with these new brethren
who have the gates of their senses unguarded,
who are without moderation in their food,
who are not devoted to vigils.

Corn-trampler methinks art thou!

Despoiler of the families methinks art thou!

Thy following, friend Ānanda,
is breaking up.

Thy youngsters, friend,
are melting away!

This boy does not know his own measure!"

[148] Now sister Fat Tissa heard that Father Ānanda
the learned sage
had been chidden
and called 'boy'
by Father Mahā-Kassapa.

Then sister Fat Tissa[ed3]
displeased
gave vent to her displeasure saying:

"What now!
does Father Mahā-Kassapa,
who was once a heretical teacher,
deem that he can chide Father Ānanda
the learned sage,
calling him 'boy'?

Now the venerable Great Kassapa heard that sister Fat Tissa was talking thus.

And he said to the venerable Ānanda:

"In faith, friend Ānanda,
it is an outrageous
and a thoughtless word
that Sister Fat Tissa has been saying,
seeing that I, friend,

when I cut off my hair
and donned the saffron raiment
and went forth from home into the homeless, acknowledged myself learner from no teacher
save the Exalted One,
Arahant,
Buddha supreme.

While I was still leading house-life, friend,
this came to me:

'Stuffy it is to live in a house,
a dusty procedure.

Free as air
is life out of the world.

Not easy is this,
that one dwelling in the house
should lead the divine life
entirely perfect,
entirely pure as a polished shell.

Let me now shave my hair,
don the saffron raiment
and go forth from home
into the homeless.

Now I, friend,
later on
had an under-robe made of cut cloth
and, following the example of the world's Arahants, I shaved my head,
donned the saffron robes
and left home for the homeless.

And having thus left the world,
and being on the highway between Rājagaha and Nalanda,[4]
saw the Exalted One seated at the shrine of the Many Children,
and seeing him I thought:

'0 to think that I may see the Master,
the Exalted One!

0 to think that I may see the Well-Farer,
the Exalted One!

0 to think that I may see the Supreme Buddha,
the Exalted One!'

And forthwith I fell prone
at the feet of the Exalted One
and said:

'My teacher, lord,
is the Exalted One!

His disciple am I!'"

Thereupon the Exalted One said:

'He, Kassapa, who,
not recognizing a disciple with his will thus fully made up,
should say
"I know,"
who not seeing him should say
"I [149] see,"
his head would split asunder.

But I, Kassapa, recognizing say
"I know,"
seeing say
"I see."

Wherefore, Kassapa,
thou must thus train thyself:

"There shall be a lively conscientiousness and discretion manifested among seniors,
novices,
and them of middle status."

'Wherefore also, Kassapa,
thou must thus train thyself:

"Whatever doctrine I shall hear,
bearing upon what is good,
to all that doctrine
I will hearken with attentive ear,
digesting it,
pondering on it,
gathering it all up with my will."

'Wherefore also, Kassapa,
thou must thus train thyself:

"Happy mindfulness
with respect to the body
shall not be neglected by me."

Yea, thus must thou train thyself.'

Then the Exalted One, friend,
when he had thus exhorted me,
rose from his seat and departed.

And I, friend,
for seven days,
not yet liberated,[5]
ate the country's alms;[6]

on the eighth day
arose in me assurance of salvation.

Now it happened, friend,
that the Exalted One came off the road
and went up to the roots of a tree.

Then I folded my under-robe of cut cloths into a square
and said this to him:

'May the lord the Exalted One sit down hereon,
that it may be for many a day
to my good and happiness.'

And the Exalted One sat down on the seat I had prepared.

So seated, he said to me this:

'Soft, Kassapa, is thy underrobe of patched cloths.'

'Would the lord, the Exalted One, accept from me
the under robe of patched cloths
out of his compassion for me?'

'But wilt thou, Kassapa,
wear my rough rag-robes
that are past wear?'

'I will wear, lord,
the Exalted One's rough rag-robes past wear.'

And I, friend, made a gift to the Exalted One of my patched-cloth under-robe,
while I used the rough rag-robes past wear
of the Exalted One.

Verily, friend, if one might speak truly of me,
truly might [150] he say that here is a very son of the Exalted One,
born of his mouth,
born of the Norm,
created by the Norm,
heir of the Norm,[7]
who has received from him
his rough cast-off rag-robes.[8]

I, friend,
according as I desire [can],
aloof from sense and evil,
attain to
and abide in First Jhāna,
wherein thought is applied and sustained,
which is born of solitude
and filled with zest and pleasant emotion.[9]

■

I, friend,
according as I desire,
from the subsiding of thought applied and sustained,
[can] attain to
and abide in Second Jhāna,
which is inward tranquillizing,
uplifting of will,
where is no applying and sustaining of thought,
which is born of concentration
and filled with zest and pleasant emotion.

■

I, friend,
according as I desire,

from the fading out of zest,
[can] attain to
and abide in Third Jhāna,
abiding with even mind,
mindful and discerning,
aware in the body
of that pleasant emotion
whereof the Ariyans declare:

Happy doth he abide with even, lucid mind!

■

I, friend,
according as I desire,
from putting away both pleasant and painful emotion,
by the dying out
of the joy and sorrow I felt before,
[can] attain to
and abide in Fourth Jhāna,
that utterly pure lucidity
and indifference of mind,
wherein is neither happiness nor unhappiness.

■

I, friend,
according as I desire,
by passing entirely beyond the awareness of visible shapes,
by the dying out of the awareness of resistances,
by paying no heed to the awareness of diversity,
[can] attain to
and abide in
the conceptual sense of space as infinite,
thinking:

'Infinite is space.'

■

I, friend,
according as I desire,
when I have wholly passed beyond the sense of space as infinite,
[can] attain to
and abide in
the sense of consciousness as infinite, thinking

'Infinite is consciousness.'

■

I, friend,
according as I desire,
when I have wholly passed beyond the sense of consciousness as infinite,
[can] attain to
and abide in
the sense of nothingness, thinking,

'There is nothing.'

■

I, friend,
according as I desire,
when I have wholly passed beyond the sense of nothingness,
[can] attain to
and abide in
the sense of neither percipience nor non-percipience.

■

I, friend,
according as I desire,
when I have passed wholly beyond the sense of neither percipience nor non-percipience,

[can] attain to
and abide in [that state in which there is]
ceasing of percipience and feeling.

■

I, friend,
according as I desire,
enjoy manifold mystic power:

Being one I become many,
being many I become one;
here visible
there invisible
I go without let or hindrance through wall,
through rampart,
through hill,
as if through air;
I dive into earth
and up again
as if in water;
I walk on water
without cleaving it
as on earth;
I travel seated cross-legged through air
as if I were a bird on the wing;
I can handle and stroke with the hand
this moon and sun,
mighty and powerful though they be;
I can control the body
even to Brahma world."

■

I, friend,
according as I desire,

with with purified hearing of devas
passing that of men,
can hear sounds both of devas and of men
whether far or near.

■

I, friend,
according as I desire,
know in mind
the mind of other beings,
other persons,
I know the passionate heart as passionate,
the dispassionate heart as dispassionate,
I know the heart of hate as hating,
the heart of amity as amiable;
I know the dull heart as dull,
the intelligent heart as intelligent;
I know the confused mind as confused,
the intent mind as tense,
the lofty mind as such,
the mean mind as mean,
the far-seeing mind as far-seeing mind,
the cramped vision as cramped vision,
the concentrated mind as concentrated mind,
the desultory mind as desultory mind,
the freed mind as freed,
the bound mind as bound.

■

I, friend,
according as I desire,
can remember my divers former lives,
that is to say,
one birth,

or two,
or three,
or four,
or five births,
or ten,
twenty,
thirty,
forty,
fifty births,
or a hundred,
a thousand
or even a hundred thousand,
or even more than one seon of involution
or more than one aeon of evolution,
or more than one of both involution and evolution:
'Such an one was I by name,
of such a clan,
of such a social status,
so was I nourished,
such happy and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end,
deceasing thence
so did I come to be,
there too was I such by name,
of such a clan,
of such a social station,
so was I nourished,
such happy and painful experiences were mine,
so did the span of life end,
deceasing thence
so did I come to be here:'
I can thus call to mind
in circumstance
and detail
my former lives.

■

I, friend,
according as I desire,
can behold with purified deva-vision
past that of man,
beings as they decease
and come to be
mean or excellent,
fair or foul,
I can know them going
according to their deeds
to weal or woe,
thinking:

'Lo! these good people
whose deeds were evil,
whose speech was evil,
whose thoughts were evil,
abusers of Ariyans,
having wrong views
and undertaking the acts that [come from] wrong views -
they at the breaking up of the body,
after death
have come to be
in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
hell.

Lo! those good people
whose deeds were good,
whose speech was good,
whose thoughts were good,
who abused not Ariyans,
of right views

and who undertook the acts that [come from] right views -
they at the breaking up of the body,
after death
have come to be in a good destiny,
in a bright world.'

Thus do I behold beings
with pure deva-sight
passing that of men,
how they decease,
and come to be
mean or excellent,
fair or foul,
I know them
as going according to their actions
to weal or woe.

■

And I, friend,
by the withering of the intoxicants,
have entered into
and abide in
that sane and immune emancipation of will,
that emancipation of insight
which I have come thoroughly to know
and to realize for myself
even in this present life.

It were as easy, friend,
to imagine that an elephant
seven to eight cubits high
could be hidden under a young palmleaf,
as to imagine that the six Super-knowledges of me
could be hidden."

But sister Fat Tissa[3] fell away from the holy life.

---

[1] The southern portion of the hills lying round about Rājagaha - Comy. The time, it says, was just after the Parinibbana. Ānanda, as a new Arahant, with all the prestige of his intimacy with his great Master, and the possession of his bowl and robe, had become a notable personage.

[2] I.e., at a layman's house (Vin. Texts iii, 251).

[3] Dummanku-: dussīla-. Comy.

[4] Cf. Dialogues i, 1, and the Comy. Sumangala-Vilāsinī, i, 34.

[5] Sāṇo.

[6] Cf. Dhammapada, verse 308; cf. M. iii, 127.

[7] Cf. Dialogues iii, 81.

[8] Cf. Pss. of the Brethren, p. 361.

[9] The text after giving the First Jhāna formula resumes this and the rest as the nine achievements in due order, the five Super-knowledges, then states the sixth. [Ed.: Here fully expanded.] See § 9.

[ed1] Mrs. Rhys Davids incorrectly has Mahā Kassapa addressing Ānanda as 'your reverence' and also incorrectly has the next paragraph being spoken by Mahā Kassapa, and there addressing Ānanda as 'friend'.

[ed2] Mrs. Rhys Davids incorrectly has here: 'prescribed by the Order.'

[ed3] Mrs. Rhys Davids incorrectly identifies this bhikkhuni. She is Thullananda [? Fat and Happy? or Delightfully Fat?], not Thullatissa from the pevious sutta.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
16. Kassapa Saṃyutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

16. Kindred Sayings on Kassapa

Sutta 12

Tathāgata Param-Māraṇa Suttaṃ

After Death

---

[222] [150]

Thus have I heard:

The venerable Mahā-Kassapa and the venerable Sāriputta
were once staying at Benares,
at Isipatana in the Deerpark.

And the venerable Sāriputta
rising at eventide from meditation
came to Mahā-Kassapa, greeted him with courtesy and friendly words
and sat down beside him.

So seated he said this:

"How is it, friend Kassapa,
does a Tathāgata[1]
come to be after death?"

"The Exalted One, friend,
has not declared that it is so."

"But, friend, does a Tathāgata not come to be after death?"

[151] "Neither has the Exalted One, friend, declared that this is so."

"Well then, friend, does a Tathāgata both come to be and also not come to be after death?"

"The Exalted One, friend,
has not declared that it is so."

"Well then, friend, does a Tathāgata neither come to be nor not come to be after death?"

"The Exalted One, friend,
has not declared that it is so."

"Why, friend, has the Exalted One not declared this?"

"Because this, friend,
doth not pertain to our good,
it belongs not to the first principles of the divine life,
it doth not conduce to repulsion,
to fading away,
to ceasing,
to quiet,

to super-knowledge,
to enlightenment,
to Nibbāna.

Therefore is it undeclared by the Exalted One."

"Come then, friend,
what hath the Exalted One declared?

'This is ill' -
so, friend, hath the Exalted One declared.

'This is the uprising of ill' -
so hath the Exalted One declared.

'This is the ceasing of ill' -
so hath the Exalted One declared.

'This is the way going to the ceasing of ill' -
so hath the Exalted One declared."

"And why, friend,
hath the Exalted One declared this?"

"Because this, friend,
pertaineth to our good,
it belongs to the first principles of the divine life,
it conduces to repulsion,
to fading away,
to ceasing,
to quiet,
to super-knowledge,
to enlightenment,
to Nibbāna.

Therefore it is declared by the Exalted One."

[1] It is interesting that B. paraphrases Tathāgato by satto, 'being,' as if it were a question of the survival of any individual. The doctrine leaves no doubt about the survival of any one except of an Arahant. That is left in mystery.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
16. Kassapa Saṃyutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

16. Kindred Sayings on Kassapa

Sutta 13

Sad'Dhamma-Patirūpaka Suttaṃ

A Counterfeit Norm

---

[223] [151]

THUS have I heard: —

The Exalted One was once staying at Sāvatthī,
at the Jeta Grove,
in the Anāthapiṇḍika Park.

Now the venerable Mahā-Kassapa went into his presence,
saluted him
and sat down beside him.

So seated, the venerable Maha-Kassapa said this to the Exalted One: -

"What now, lord, are the conditions,
what is the cause
that formerly there were both fewer precepts
and more brethren were established as Arahants?[1]

What, lord, are the condi- [152] tions,
what is the cause
that now-a-days there are more precepts
and fewer brethren are established as Arahants?"

"It happens thus, Kassapa.

When members[2] decrease,
and the true doctrine disappears,
there are then more precepts,
and few brethren are established as Arahants.

There is no disappearing of the true doctrine, Kassapa,
till a counterfeit doctrine arises in the world;
but when a counterfeit doctrine does arise,
then there is a disappearance of the true doctrine.

Just as there is no disappearing of gold
so long as there is no counterfeit gold arisen in the world.

So it is with the true doctrine.

The earth-element, Kassapa, does not make the true doctrine disappear,[3] nor does the water-element,
nor the heat-element,
nor the air-element.

But here in the Order itself futile[4] men arise,
and it is they who make the true doctrine disappear.

Take the sinking of a ship, Kassapa,
by overlading:

it is not thus that the true doctrine disappears.

There are five lowering things that conduce to the obscuration and disappearance of the true doctrine.

Which five?

It is when brethren and sisters,
laymen and laywomen
live in irreverence and are unruly toward the Teacher,
live in irreverence and are unruly toward the Norm,
live in irreverence and are unruly toward the Order,
live in irreverence and are unruly toward the training,
live in irreverence and are unruly toward concentrative study.

But when they live in reverence and docility toward these Five,
then do these five things conduce to the maintenance,
the clarity,
the presence of the true doctrine."

---

[1] Aññāya, or, in assurance of final salvation. The Comy. explains by arahatte.

[2] [Ed. this note is missing.]

[3] As in the case of physical cataclysms, such as the three cosmic 'involutions' of A. iv, 100,[AN 7.62] discussed in Visuddhi-Magga, 414 f.

[4] Mogha -tuccha (hollow, empty, vain).

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga

The Book of the

II. The Nidana Book

17.
Lābha-Sakkāra Saṃyuttaṃ

17.
Kindred Sayings on Gain and Favours

---

[153]

I. Dāruṇa Vagga

I. Dire!

Sutta 1

Dire!

THUS have I heard: —

The Exalted One was once staying at Sāvaṭṭhī
at the Jeta Grove, in the Anāthapiṇḍika Park and there he addressed the brethren: —

"Dire,[1] brethren,
are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 2

The Hook

At Sāvaṭṭhī: —

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

If a fisherman were to cast a flesh-baited hook into a deep pool
and a fish with an eye to flesh should swallow it.

Verily, brethren, that fish swallowing the fisherman's hook
falls into misfortune,

falls into disaster,
is treated according to the fisherman's good pleasure.

'Fisherman' — this, brethren, means Māra, the evil one.

'Hook' — this, brethren, means gains, favours, and flattery.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

[154]

§

Sutta 3

The Tortoise

At Sāvaṭṭhī: —

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

In times gone by, brethren,
in a certain pool of water,
there had long been living a great family of tortoises.

Now one tortoise said to another tortoise: —

'Dear tortoise, go not thou into that place.'

But the tortoise went into that place and a hunter shot him
with a corded harpoon.[2]

He got back again,
and that other tortoise saw him coming a way off,
and, seeing him, said:

'What, dear tortoise,
thou didst never get to that place?'

'Nay, I did go, dear tortoise,
to that place.'

'What, dear tortoise, thou'rt never not speared, not hit?'

'Nay, not speared am I, dear tortoise, not hit,
but there's this cord
that keeps ever trailing at my back.'

'Why then for sure, dear tortoise,
thou'rt speared,
for sure thou'rt hit.

It was by this trap[3]
that thy father
and thy grandfather fell into misfortune and disaster.

Go thou now, dear tortoise,
ours art thou no longer!'

'Hunter': — this, brethren, means Māra the evil one.

'Harpoon': — this, brethren, means gains, favour, and flattery.

'Cord': — this, brethren, means lustful enjoyment.

Verily, any brother, brethren, who delights in,
who longs for gains, favour, and flattery,
him we call 'greedy for the harpoon,
fallen into misfortune and disaster,
to be treated according to Māra's good pleasure.'

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 4

Longfleece

At Sāvaṭṭhī: —

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Just as if a long-fleeced she-goat[4]
entered a thicket of briars [155]
and should now here, now there sink down, get caught;

get bound, fall into misfortune and disaster,
even so, when a brother is overcome
by gains, favours, and flattery,
and his mind possessed therewith,
he, when he rises betimes,
takes bowl and robe
and goes for alms to village and township,
now here now there sinks down, gets caught,
gets bound, falls into misfortune and disaster.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 5

Dungbeetle

At Sāvaṭṭhī: —

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle

in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Just as if a beetle,
dung-eating,
dung-filled,
stuffed with dung,
and in front of her a great dunghill.

And she, because of all that were to despise other beetles and think: —

'Surely am I a dungeater,
dung-filled,
stuffed with dung
and in front of me is this great dunghill,
even so, when a brother is overcome
by gains, favours, and flattery,
and his mind possessed therewith,
he, when he rises betimes,
takes bowl and robe and goes for alms
to village and township,
there eats his fill,
is invited for the morrow,
and his bowl is full.

He goes to the park and in the midst of the group of brethren boasts: —

'I have dined my fill,
I am invited for to-morrow.

My bowl is full.

I have gained a robe, alms,
a lodging, medical requisites.

But these other brethren
are of little merit,
of little influence,
they do not gain the requisites like me.'

He, overcome and his heart possessed
by gains, favours, and flattery,
despises other pious brethren.

Verily, brethren, that will bring harm and ill for many a day
to that futile person.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 6

Thunderbolt

At Sāvaṭṭhī: —

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

What, brethren, is the falling of a thunderbolt compared [156] with the assailing of a learner whose mind has not attained,
by gains, favours, and flattery?[5]

'Falling of a thunderbolt': — that, brethren, means gains, favours, and flattery.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 7

Poisoned

At Sāvaṭṭhī: —

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

A man whom they wound
with a poisoned dart,[6]
such is one whose mind has not attained,
who is assailed
with gains, favours, and flattery.

'Dart': — that, brethren, means gains, favours, flattery ..

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 8

The Jackal

At Sāvaṭṭhī: —

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Have ye heard the jackal
howling in the night,
at dawn?"

"Even so, lord."

'That is an old jackal, brethren,
afflicted by mange.[7]

He finds no pleasure in lonely places,
nor in the woods,
nor in the open air.

Wherever he goes,
wherever he stays,
wherever he sits down,
wherever he lies down,
there he falls into misfortune and disaster.

Even so is a brother who is overcome,
and whose heart is possessed
by gains, favours, and flattery.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

[157]

§

Sutta 9

Hurricanes

At Sāvaṭṭhī: —

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

In the upper air there blow winds that are hurricanes.

If a bird goes thither,
the hurricanes toss him about;
feet, wings, head, body are scattered in all directions.

Even so here also a brother who is overcome,
and whose heart is possessed
by gains, favours, and flattery,
when he rises betimes,
takes bowl and robe
and enters village or township for alms,
his acts unguarded,
his speech unguarded,
his mind unguarded,
mindfulness not set up,
senses unrestrained,
he there sees womenfolk lightly clad,
ill shrouded.

Seeing them thus,
lust assails his thoughts.

He thus assailed,
rejects the training
and turns toward low things.

And one takes his robe,
another his bowl,
another his sitting-mat,
another his needle-case,
just as the bird
hurled in pieces by the hurricane.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 10

Sutta with Verse

At Sāvaṭṭhī: —

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Concerning this matter,
I see one person overcome,
and whose mind is possessed by favours,
another who is overcome
and possessed by lack of favours,
yet another who is overcome
and possessed by both favours and the lack of them
— I see one and all,
at the separation of the body after death
reborn in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
Purgatory.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

In whom, when favours fall upon him, or
When none are shown, the mind steadfast, intent,
Sways not at all, for earnest is his life,

Him of rapt thought, [of will] unfaltering,
Of fine perception, of the vision seer,
Rejoicing that to grasp is his no more: —
Him let the people call in truth Good Man.

[158]

§

II

Sutta 11

The Bowl (1)

At Sāvaṭṭhī: —

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

As to that
I have known a certain man,
reading his will by mine,
who, even for the sake of a golden bowl filled with silver dust,
would not deliberately tell a lie.

That man have I seen at another time,
overcome and his heart possessed
by gains, favours, and flattery,
deliberately telling lies.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 12

The Bowl (2)

At Sāvaṭṭhī: —

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

As to that,
I have known a certain man,
reading his will by mine,

who, even for the sake of a silver bowl filled full with gold dust,
would not deliberately tell a lie.

That man have I seen at another time,
overcome and his heart possessed
by gains, favours, and flattery,
deliberately telling lies.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 13

Untitled

At Sāvaṭṭhī: —

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

As to that,
I have known a certain man,
reading his will by mine,
who, even for the sake of a gold nikkha,[8]
would not deliberately tell a lie.

That man have I seen at another time,
overcome and his heart possessed
by gains, favours, and flattery,
deliberately telling lies.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 14

Untitled

At Sāvaṭṭhī: —

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle

in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

As to that,
I have known a certain man,
reading his will by mine,
who, even for the sake of a hundred gold nikkhas,
would not deliberately tell a lie.

That man have I seen at another time,
overcome and his heart possessed
by gains, favours, and flattery,
deliberately telling lies.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 15

Untitled

At Sāvaṭṭhī: —

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

As to that,
I have known a certain man,
reading his will by mine,
who, even for the sake of a nikkha of gold nuggets,
would not deliberately tell a lie.

That man have I seen at another time,
overcome and his heart possessed
by gains, favours, and flattery,
deliberately telling lies.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 16

Untitled

At Sāvaṭṭhī: —

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

As to that,
I have known a certain man,
reading his will by mine,
who, even for a hundred nikkha of gold nuggets,
would not deliberately tell a lie.

That man have I seen at another time,
overcome and his heart possessed
by gains, favours, and flattery,
deliberately telling lies.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 17

Untitled

At Sāvaṭṭhī: —

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

As to that,
I have known a certain man,
reading his will by mine,
who, even for a world of gold,
would not deliberately tell a lie.

That man have I seen at another time,
overcome and his heart possessed
by gains, favours, and flattery,
deliberately telling lies.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 18

Untitled

At Sāvaṭṭhī: —

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

As to that,
I have known a certain man,
reading his will by mine,
who, even for the sake of for nothing worldly whatever,
would not deliberately tell a lie.|| ||

That man have I seen at another time,
overcome and his heart possessed
by gains, favours, and flattery,
deliberately telling lies.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 19

Untitled

At Sāvaṭṭhī: —

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

As to that,
I have known a certain man,
reading his will by mine,
who, even to save his life,
would not deliberately tell a lie.

That man have I seen at another time,
overcome and his heart possessed
by gains, favours, and flattery,
deliberately telling lies.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 20

Untitled

At Sāvaṭṭhī: —

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

As to that,
I have known a certain man,
reading his will by mine,
who, even [to win] the belle of the countryside,
would not deliberately tell a lie.

That man have I seen at another time,
overcome and his heart possessed
by gains, favours, and flattery,
deliberately telling lies.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

[159]

III

Sutta 21

Woman

At Sāvaṭṭhī: — [9]

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Of him whose heart
gains, favours, and flattery persistently possess,
no woman, she alone of him alone,
can persistently possess the heart.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 22

The Belle

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Of him whose heart
gains, favours, and flattery persistently possess,
not even the belle of the countryside,
she alone of him alone,
can persistently possess the heart.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 23

Son

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

The believing lay-sister
when rightly admonishing her only son,
dear and beloved,
would thus admonish him: —

'See, my dear, that thou become like Citta housefather, and Hatthaka of Āḷava.'[10]

These, brethren, are the standard,[11]
these are the measure
of my lay disciples,
even Citta and Hatthaka.

'If thou, my dear, go forth from home to the homeless,
see that thou become like Sāriputta and Moggallāna.'

These, brethren, are the standard,
these are the measure
of my ordained disciples,
even Sāriputta and Moggallāna.

[160] 'Let not gains, favours, and flattery assail thee, dear,
a learner with diligent mind.'

Brethren, should this happen,
it will be to his peril.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 24

The Only Daughter

"The believing lay-sister, brethren,
when rightly admonishing her only daughter,
dear and beloved,
would thus admonish her: —

'See, my dear, that thou become like Khujjuttarā the lay-sister and Veḷukaṇṭakiyā, Nanda's mother.'

These, brethren, are the standard and measure of my lay-sister disciples, even Khujjuttarā and Veḷukaṇṭakiyā.

'If thou, my dear, go forth from home to the homeless,
see that thou become like sister Khemā and Uppa1avaññā.'[12]

These, brethren, are the standard,
these are the measure of my sister disciples,
even Khemā and Uppa1avaññā.

'Let not gains, favours, and flattery assail thee, my dear,
a learner diligent in mind.

Therein lies danger for thee.'

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 25

Recluses and Brahmins (1)

"Verily any recluses or brahmins whatever, brethren,
who do not understand,
even as it really is,
the satisfaction,
the danger,[13]
the escape
with regard to gains, favours, and flattery,
they for me are not approved of
among recluses as recluses,
nor among brahmins as brahmins,
nor have those venerable ones come even in this life
fully to know of themselves,
to realize,

to live in the attainment of,
the good of being recluse or brahmin.

But any recluses or brahmins whatever
who do understand,
even as it really is,
the satisfaction,
the danger,
the escape
with regard to gains, favours, and flattery,
they for me are approved of
among recluses as recluses,
or among brahmins as brah- [161] mins;
and those venerable ones have come even in this life
fully to know of themselves,
to realize,
to live in the attainment of,
the good of being recluse or brahmin."

§

Sutta 26

Recluses and Brahmins (2)

"Verily any recluses or brahmins whatever, brethren,
who do not understand,
even as it really is,
the coming to pass and the going away
of gains, favours, and flattery,
they for me are not approved of
among recluses as recluses,

nor among brahmins as brahmins,
nor have those venerable ones come even in this life
fully to know of themselves,
to realize,
to live in the attainment of,
the good of being recluse or brahmin.

But any recluses or brahmins whatever
who do understand,
even as it really is,
the coming to pass and the going away
of gains, favours, and flattery,
they for me are approved of
among recluses as recluses,
or among brahmins as brahmins;
and those venerable ones have come even in this life
fully to know of themselves,
to realize,
to live in the attainment of,
the good of being recluse or brahmin."

§

Sutta 27

Recluses and Brahmins (3)

"Verily any recluses or brahmins whatever, brethren,
who do not understand,
even as it really is,
the nature, the coming to pass,
the ceasing,

the way going to the ceasing
of gains, favours, and flattery,
they for me are not approved of
among recluses as recluses,
nor among brahmins as brahmins,
nor have those venerable ones come even in this life
fully to know of themselves,
to realize,
to live in the attainment of,
the good of being recluse or brahmin.

But any recluses or brahmins whatever
who do understand,
even as it really is,
the nature,
the coming to pass,
the ceasing,
the way going to the ceasing
of gains, favours, and flattery,
they for me are approved of
among recluses as recluses,
or among brahmins as brah- [161] mins;
and those venerable ones have come even in this life
fully to know of themselves,
to realize,
to live in the attainment of,
the good of being recluse or brahmin."

§

Sutta 28

The Skin

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

They cut the skin,
then they cut the underskin,
then they cut the flesh,
then they cut the tendons,
then they cut the bones,
then they press right on to the marrow.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 29

The Cord

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle

in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

They cut the skin,
then they cut the underskin,
then they cut the flesh,
then they cut the tendons,
then they cut the bones,
then they press right on to the marrow.

Just as if a strong man were to bind a stout horsehair cord about his leg
and saw his leg with it till he cut the skin,
cut the underskin,
cut the flesh,
cut the tendons,
cut the bones,
and press right on to the marrow.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 30

The Brother

"He, brethren, who is Arahant,
sane and immune,
even for that brother I say that gains, favours, and flattery
are a danger."

When this was said,
the venerable Ānanda said this to the Exalted One: —

"But to which sane and immune brother, lord,
are they a danger?"

[162] "I say not that they are a danger, Ānanda,
for him the freedom of whose will is unshakeable.

But to one who lives earnestly,
ardently,
strenuously,
if he come among such
as have attained to happiness in this present life,
there I say that gains, favours, and flattery
might be for him a danger.[14]

So dire, Ānanda, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, Ānanda, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,

nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

IV

Sutta 31

He Cut[15]

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Devadatta brought schism into the Order
because he was overcome
and his heart was possessed by them.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 32

The Root

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Devadatta brought schism into the Order
because he was overcome
and his heart was possessed by them.

And in him thus overcome
by gains, favours, and flattery,
that the root of good (karma)
came to be extirpated.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 33

Conditions

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Devadatta brought schism into the Order
because he was overcome
and his heart was possessed by them.

And in him thus overcome by gains, favours, and flattery, yea, the conditions of good (karma)[16]
came to be extirpated.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 34

Bright (conditions)

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Devadatta brought schism into the Order
because he was overcome
and his heart was possessed by them.

And in him thus overcome
by gains, favours, and flattery,
yea, even the bright conditions
came to be extirpated.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

[163]

§

Sutta 35

Seceding

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha
on Vulture's Peak hill
not long after Devadatta had seceded.

There the Exalted One addressed the brethren touching Devadatta: —

"To his own destruction,
gains, favours, and flattery befel Devadatta,
yea, to his decline.

Just as a plantain
yields fruit to its own destruction,
to its decline,
even so to his own destruction,
to his decline
did gains, favours, and flattery befall Devadatta.

Just as a bamboo
yields fruit to its own destruction,
to its decline,
even so to his own destruction,
to his decline
did gains, favours, and flattery befall Devadatta.

Just as a rush
yields fruit to its own destruction,
to its decline,
even so to his own destruction,
to his decline
did gains, favours, and flattery befall Devadatta.

Just as a mule
bears young to her own destruction,[17]
to her decline,
even so to his own destruction,

to his decline
did gains, favours, and flattery befall Devadatta.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,
nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

The Exalted One spake this: the Wellfarer speaking this, the Teacher spake thus further: —

As is the plantain, bamboo, and the rush
Each by the fruit it bears undone,
So is the foolish man by favours slain,
As by her embryo the mule.[18]

§

Sutta 36

The Car

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha
in the Bamboo Grove
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now at that time prince Ajātasattu was ministering to Devadatta late and early
by five hundred cars,
and was providing food
conveying it in five hundred cooking pans.[19]

Thereupon many brethren came into the presence of the Exalted One, saluting and taking their seat beside him,
and told him of this.

"Do not ye desire gains, favours, and flattery for Devadatta, brethren.

So long as prince Ajātasattu ministers to [164] Devadatta in this way, it is only falling away that is to be expected from him,
not growth in good conditions.

Just as if they were to crumble [dried] liver[20]
on the nose of a fierce dog, —
the dog would thereby become fiercer,
even so,
so long as prince Ajātasattu ministers to Devadatta in this way,
it is only falling away that is to be expected from him,
not growth in good conditions.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,

nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 37

For Mother's Sake

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

I have known a certain man,
reading his will by mine,
who, even for his mother's sake[21]
would not deliberately tell a lie.

Him have I seen thereafter
overcome and his heart possessed
by gains, favours, and flattery
deliberately telling lies.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,

nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 38

For Father's Sake

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

I have known a certain man,
reading his will by mine,
who, even for his father's sake
would not deliberately tell a lie.

Him have I seen thereafter
overcome and his heart possessed
by gains, favours, and flattery
deliberately telling lies.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,

nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 39

For Brother's Sake

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

I have known a certain man,
reading his will by mine,
who, even for his brother's sake
would not deliberately tell a lie.

Him have I seen thereafter
overcome and his heart possessed
by gains, favours, and flattery
deliberately telling lies.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,

nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 40

For Sister's Sake

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

I have known a certain man,
reading his will by mine,
who, even for his sister's sake
would not deliberately tell a lie.

Him have I seen thereafter
overcome and his heart possessed
by gains, favours, and flattery
deliberately telling lies.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,

nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 41

For Son's Sake

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

I have known a certain man,
reading his will by mine,
who, even for his son's sake
would not deliberately tell a lie.

Him have I seen thereafter
overcome and his heart possessed
by gains, favours, and flattery
deliberately telling lies.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,

nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 42

For Daughter's Sake

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

I have known a certain man,
reading his will by mine,
who, even for his daughter's sake
would not deliberately tell a lie.

Him have I seen thereafter
overcome and his heart possessed
by gains, favours, and flattery
deliberately telling lies.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,

nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

§

Sutta 43

For Wife's Sake

"Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

I have known a certain man,
reading his will by mine,
who, even for his wife's sake
would not deliberately tell a lie.

Him have I seen thereafter
overcome and his heart possessed
by gains, favours, and flattery
deliberately telling lies.

So dire, brethren, are gains, favours, and flattery,
a bitter, harsh obstacle
in the way of arriving at uttermost safety.

Wherefore, brethren, thus should ye train yourselves: —

'When gains, favours, and flattery come to us,
we will put them aside,

nor when they come
shall they take lasting hold on our hearts.'"

---

[1] Dāruṇo.

[2] The Comy. explains papatā as a dart encased in a coiled sheath of twine, to be hurled by hand.

[3] Luddakena, lit. 'hunter-ish (thing).' The Burmese read suttakena, 'by this cord': — easier, but not therefore more plausible.

[4] Eḷakā, not as in Childers eḷikā.

[5] The Comy. gives, as clue to the elliptical Pali, that a thunderbolt destroys one life-span only, but gains, etc., bring a man to infinitely prolonged misery hereafter.

[6] The title should read diddhaṇ, with the Comy. This accepts the inclusion of visallena: — visamakkhitena sallena, sattiyā. But it should surely read visa-sallena?

[7] A disease, says B., arising during the winter. The fur falls off; he shivers; sores produced by cold winds pain him; he reels about seeking respite like a man bitten by a mad dog.

[8] On nikkha and singi (nugget), cf. my 'Early Economic Conditions of North India' JRAS, 1901, p. 877 f.; Gooneratne's Aṇguttara Nikāya, p. 235, n. 1 f. (Galle, 1913).

[9] The following ten are all referred to Sāvaṭṭhī.

[10] This and the following three pairs of followers are also grouped for similar admonition in Aṇguttara i, 88 f.; cf. also ib. i, 23-6; Nanda's mother is there called Uttarā. Kindred Sayings XLI is devoted to Citta. (pron. Chitta). Nanda may be the half-brother of Gotama who became a Thera. (Vin. Texts, i, 210; Pss. of the Brethren, p. 126; Buddhist Birth Stories, p. 128).

[11] Lit. scales (talā), or weights.

[12] Cf. Pss. of the Sisters, pp. 81 f. and 111 f.; S. iv. 374 f.

[13] Trans. 'misery' in Chapter XIV. See ib., §§ 37-39.

[14] The syntax of this sentence seems to me corrupt, even if the drift of it be clear. According to the Comy. 'happiness in this present life' applies to the religious circle of whom the earnest man is a member.

[15] The following four Suttas are of Sāvaṭṭhī.

[16] Namely, alobha, adosa, amoha. Comy.

[17] The mule is not able to bring forth, and has to be slain to effect parturition. Comy.

[18] = above, i, 192.

[19] One such pan containing food for ten men. Comy.

[20] Pittaṇ: — acchapittaṇ vā macchapittaṇ vā (of a bear or a fish). Comy.

[21] E.g., to make brigands set his mother at liberty. Comy.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
18. Rāhula Saṃyuttam
1. Pathama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

18. Kindred Sayings about Rāhula

1. [Untitled]

Sutta 1

Cakkhu Suttaṃ

The Eye[1]

---

[165]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Rāhula
came into the presence of the Exalted One,

saluted him
and eat down beside him.

So seated
the venerable Rāhula said to the Exalted One:

"Well for me, lord, if the Exalted One were to teach me a doctrine which,
having heard,
I might live alone,
secluded,
zealous,
ardent,
and aspiring."

"What think you as to this, Rāhula?

Is sight[ed1] abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is hearing abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is smelling abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is taste abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is touch abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is mind abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"So seeing, Rāhula,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
is repelled by sight,
is repelled by hearing,
is repelled by smelling,
is repelled by tast,
is repelled by touch,
is repelled by mind.

Being repelled,
he loses desire for it;
from losing desire
he is set free;
concerning that which is free,
knowledge comes to him:

'I am free!

Perished is birth,
lived is the divine life,
done what was to be done,
there is nothing more in this state!' -
thus he knows."

---

[1] Or sight, or seeing. Cf. below §11.

[ed1] Mrs. Rhys Davids translation is misleading. The terms in the Pali are for the organs, not for the sense experience. "Eye, Ear, Nose, Tongue, Body, Mind."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
18. Rāhula Saṃyuttam
1. Pathama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

18. Kindred Sayings about Rāhula

1. [Untitled]

Sutta 2

Rūpa Suttaṃ

Thing Seen

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
18. Rāhula Saṃyuttam
1. Pathama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

18. Kindred Sayings about Rāhula

1. [Untitled]

S

Sutta 3

Viññāṇa Suttaṃ

Awareness

---

[166]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Rāhula came into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him and eat down beside him.

So seated the venerable Rāhula said to the Exalted One:

"Well for me, lord, if the Exalted One were to teach me a doctrine which,
having heard,
I might live alone,
secluded,
zealous,
ardent,
and aspiring."

"What think you as to this, Rāhula?

"Is visual awareness abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is ear-awareness[ed1] abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is nose-awareness abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is taste awareness abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is body awareness abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is mind awareness abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"So seeing, Rāhula,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
is repelled by sight,
is repelled by hearing,
is repelled by smelling,
is repelled by tast,
is repelled by touch,
is repelled by mind.

Being repelled,
he loses desire for it;
from losing desire
he is set free;
concerning that which is free,
knowledge comes to him:

'I am free!

Perished is birth,
lived is the divine life,
done what was to be done,
there is nothing more in this state!' -
thus he knows."

[ed1] Mrs. Rhys Davids abridges after 'is visual awareness'. Following that the result would be 'auditory, nasal, gustatory, tactile, mental', etc. But the Pali is 'eye-consciousness (or her 'awareness'), ear-, nose-, tongue-, body-, mind-' which I have used in the following.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
18. Rāhula Saṃyuttam
1. Pathama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

18. Kindred Sayings about Rāhula

1. [Untitled]

Sutta 4

Samphassa Suttaṃ

Contact

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Rāhula came into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him and eat down beside him.

So seated the venerable Rāhula said to the Exalted One:

"Well for me, lord, if the Exalted One were to teach me a doctrine which, having heard,
I might live alone,
secluded,
zealous,
ardent,
and aspiring."

"What think you as to this, Rāhula?

"Is eye-contact[ed1] abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is ear-contact abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is nose-contact abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is taste-contact abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is body-contact abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is mind-contact abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"So seeing, Rāhula,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
is repelled by sight,
is repelled by hearing,
is repelled by smelling,
is repelled by tast,
is repelled by touch,
is repelled by mind.

Being repelled,
he loses desire for it;
from losing desire
he is set free;
concerning that which is free,
knowledge comes to him:

'I am free!

Perished is birth,
lived is the divine life,
done what was to be done,
there is nothing more in this state!' -
thus he knows."

---

ed1 Mrs. Rhys Davids abridges the whole with 'sense-contact' which is not an abridgment but an interpretation. The Pali is cakkhu-samphasso ...: eye-contact, etc. which I use here.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
18. Rāhula Saṃyuttam
1. Pathama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

18. Kindred Sayings about Rāhula

1. [Untitled]

Sutta 5

Vedanā Suttaṃ

Feeling

---

[166]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Rāhula came into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him and eat down beside him.

So seated the venerable Rāhula said to the Exalted One:

"Well for me, lord, if the Exalted One were to teach me a doctrine which, having heard,
I might live alone,
secluded,
zealous,
ardent,
and aspiring."

"What think you as to this, Rāhula?

"Is eye-contact feeling[ed1] abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is ear-contact feeling abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is nose-contact feeling abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is taste-contact feeling abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is body-contact feeling abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is mind-contact feeling abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?"

"Not so, lord."

■

"So seeing, Rāhula,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
is repelled by sight,
is repelled by hearing,
is repelled by smelling,
is repelled by tast,
is repelled by touch,
is repelled by mind.

Being repelled,
he loses desire for it;
from losing desire
he is set free;
concerning that which is free,
knowledge comes to him:

'I am free!

Perished is birth,
lived is the divine life,
done what was to be done,
there is nothing more in this state!' -
thus he knows."

---

ed1 Mrs. Rhys Davids abridges the whole with 'sense-contact feeling' which is not an abridgment but an interpretation. The Pali is cakkhu-samphasso vedanā ...: eye-contact, etc. which I use here.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
18. Rāhula Saṃyuttam
1. Pathama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

18. Kindred Sayings about Rāhula

1. [Untitled]

Sutta 6

Saññā Suttaṃ

Perception

---

[166]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Rāhula came into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him and eat down beside him.

So seated the venerable Rāhula said to the Exalted One:

"Well for me, lord, if the Exalted One were to teach me a doctrine which, having heard,
I might live alone,
secluded,
zealous,
ardent,
and aspiring."

"What think you as to this, Rāhula?

"Is perception of a visible object abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is perception of a sound abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is perception of a scent abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is perception of a taste abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is perception of a contact abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is perception of a mental object abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"So seeing, Rāhula,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
is repelled by sight,
is repelled by hearing,
is repelled by smelling,
is repelled by tast,
is repelled by touch,
is repelled by mind.

Being repelled,
he loses desire for it;
from losing desire
he is set free;
concerning that which is free,
knowledge comes to him:

'I am free!

Perished is birth,
lived is the divine life,
done what was to be done,
there is nothing more in this state!' -
thus he knows."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
18. Rāhula Saṃyuttam
1. Pathama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

18. Kindred Sayings about Rāhula

1. [Untitled]

Sutta 7

Sañcetanā Suttaṃ

Volition

---

[166]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Rāhula came into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him and eat down beside him.

So seated the venerable Rāhula said to the Exalted One:

"Well for me, lord, if the Exalted One were to teach me a doctrine which, having heard,
I might live alone,
secluded,
zealous,
ardent,
and aspiring."

"What think you as to this, Rāhula?

"Is volition in connection with visible objects abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is volition in connection with sounds abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is volition in connection with scents abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is volition in connection with tastes abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is volition in connection with contacts abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is volition in connection with mental objects abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"So seeing, Rāhula,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
is repelled by sight,
is repelled by hearing,
is repelled by smelling,
is repelled by tast,
is repelled by touch,
is repelled by mind.

Being repelled,
he loses desire for it;
from losing desire
he is set free;
concerning that which is free,
knowledge comes to him:

'I am free!

Perished is birth,
lived is the divine life,
done what was to be done,
there is nothing more in this state!' -
thus he knows."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
18. Rāhula Saṃyuttam
1. Pathama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

18. Kindred Sayings about Rāhula

1. [Untitled]

Sutta 8

Taṇhā Suttaṃ

Craving

---

[166]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Rāhula came into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him and eat down beside him.

So seated the venerable Rāhula said to the Exalted One:

"Well for me, lord, if the Exalted One were to teach me a doctrine which, having heard,
I might live alone,
secluded,
zealous,
ardent,
and aspiring."

"What think you as to this, Rāhula?

"Is craving in connection with visible objects abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is craving in connection with sounds abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is craving in connection with scents abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is craving in connection with tastes abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is craving in connection with contacts abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is craving in connection with mental objects abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"So seeing, Rāhula,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
is repelled by sight,
is repelled by hearing,
is repelled by smelling,
is repelled by tast,
is repelled by touch,
is repelled by mind.

Being repelled,
he loses desire for it;
from losing desire
he is set free;
concerning that which is free,
knowledge comes to him:

'I am free!

Perished is birth,
lived is the divine life,
done what was to be done,
there is nothing more in this state!' -
thus he knows."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
18. Rāhula Saṃyuttam
1. Pathama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

18. Kindred Sayings about Rāhula

1. [Untitled]

Sutta 9

Dhātu Suttaṃ

Element

---

[166]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Rāhula came into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him and eat down beside him.

So seated the venerable Rāhula said to the Exalted One:

"Well for me, lord, if the Exalted One were to teach me a doctrine which, having heard,
I might live alone,
secluded,
zealous,
ardent,
and aspiring."

"What think you as to this, Rāhula?

Is the earthy element abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is the watery element abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is the fiery element abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is the mobile[ed1] element abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

"So seeing, Rāhula,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
is repelled by sight,
is repelled by hearing,
is repelled by smelling,
is repelled by tast,
is repelled by touch,
is repelled by mind.

Being repelled,
he loses desire for it;
from losing desire
he is set free;
concerning that which is free,
knowledge comes to him:

'I am free!

Perished is birth,
lived is the divine life,
done what was to be done,
there is nothing more in this state!' -
thus he knows."

[ed1] Mrs. Rhys Davids translations of 'vāyo' are "mobile and aerial", and here 'aerial' would better follow in style, but 'air' is an incorrect translation where mobile comes closer to the correct 'windy' or better 'wind'.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
18. Rāhula Saṃyuttam
1. Pathama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

18. Kindred Sayings about Rāhula

1. [Untitled]

Sutta 10

Khandha Suttaṃ

Aggregates

---

[166]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Rāhula came into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him and eat down beside him.

So seated the venerable Rāhula said to the Exalted One:

"Well for me, lord, if the Exalted One were to teach me a doctrine which, having heard,
I might live alone,
secluded,
zealous,
ardent,
and aspiring."

"What think you as to this, Rāhula?

"Is the material aggregate of [individual life] abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is the feeling aggregate of [individual life] abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is the perception aggregate of [individual life] abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is the volitional complex aggregate of [individual life] abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is the consciousness aggregate of [individual life] abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

[167] "But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

"So seeing, Rāhula,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
is repelled by sight,
is repelled by hearing,
is repelled by smelling,
is repelled by tast,
is repelled by touch,
is repelled by mind.

Being repelled,
he loses desire for it;
from losing desire
he is set free;
concerning that which is free,
knowledge comes to him:

'I am free!

Perished is birth,
lived is the divine life,
done what was to be done,
there is nothing more in this state!' -
thus he knows."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
18. Rāhula Saṃyuttam
2. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

18. Kindred Sayings about Rāhula

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 11

Cakkhu Suttaṃ

The Eye

---

[167]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Rāhula came into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him and eat down beside him.

So seated the Exalted One said this to the venerable Rāhula:

"What think you as to this, Rāhula?

Is sight abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is hearing abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is smelling abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is taste abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is touch abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is mind abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"So seeing, Rāhula,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
is repelled by sight,
is repelled by hearing,

is repelled by smelling,
is repelled by tast,
is repelled by touch,
is repelled by mind.

Being repelled,
he loses desire for it;
from losing desire
he is set free;
concerning that which is free,
knowledge comes to him:

'I am free!

Perished is birth,
lived is the divine life,
done what was to be done,
there is nothing more in this state!' -
thus he knows."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
18. Rāhula Saṃyuttam
2. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

18. Kindred Sayings about Rāhula

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 12

Rūpa Suttaṃ

Thing Seen

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
18. Rāhula Saṃyuttam
2. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

18. Kindred Sayings about Rāhula

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 13

Viññāṇa Suttaṃ

Awareness

---

[167]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Rāhula came into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him and eat down beside him.

So seated the Exalted One said this to the venerable Rāhula:

"What think you as to this, Rāhula?

"Is visual awareness abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is ear-awareness[ed1] abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is nose-awareness abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is taste awareness abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is body awareness abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is mind awareness abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"So seeing, Rāhula,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
is repelled by sight,
is repelled by hearing,

is repelled by smelling,
is repelled by tast,
is repelled by touch,
is repelled by mind.

Being repelled,
he loses desire for it;
from losing desire
he is set free;
concerning that which is free,
knowledge comes to him:

'I am free!

Perished is birth,
lived is the divine life,
done what was to be done,
there is nothing more in this state!' -
thus he knows."

---

ed1 Mrs. Rhys Davids abridges after 'is visual awareness'. Following that the result would be 'auditory, nasal, gustatory, tactile, mental', etc. But the Pali is 'eye-consciousness (or her 'awareness'), ear-, nose-, tongue-, body-, mind-' which I have used in the following.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
18. Rāhula Saṃyuttam
2. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

18. Kindred Sayings about Rāhula

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 14

Samphasso Suttaṃ

Contact

---

[167]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Rāhula came into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him and eat down beside him.

So seated the Exalted One said this to the venerable Rāhula:

"What think you as to this, Rāhula?

"Is eye-contact[ed1] abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is ear-contact abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is nose-contact abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is taste-contact abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is body-contact abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is mind-contact abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"So seeing, Rāhula,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
is repelled by sight,
is repelled by hearing,

is repelled by smelling,
is repelled by tast,
is repelled by touch,
is repelled by mind.

Being repelled,
he loses desire for it;
from losing desire
he is set free;
concerning that which is free,
knowledge comes to him:

'I am free!

Perished is birth,
lived is the divine life,
done what was to be done,
there is nothing more in this state!' -
thus he knows."

[ed1] Mrs. Rhys Davids abridges the whole with 'sense-contact' which is not an abridgment but an interpretation. The Pali is cakkhu-samphasso ...: eye-contact, etc. which I use here.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
18. Rāhula Saṃyuttam
2. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

18. Kindred Sayings about Rāhula

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 15

Vedanā Suttaṃ

Feeling

---

[167]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Rāhula came into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him and eat down beside him.

So seated the Exalted One said this to the venerable Rāhula:

"What think you as to this, Rāhula?

"Is eye-contact feeling[ed1] abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is ear-contact feeling abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is nose-contact feeling abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is taste-contact feeling abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is body-contact feeling abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is mind-contact feeling abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"So seeing, Rāhula,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
is repelled by sight,
is repelled by hearing,

is repelled by smelling,
is repelled by tast,
is repelled by touch,
is repelled by mind.

Being repelled,
he loses desire for it;
from losing desire
he is set free;
concerning that which is free,
knowledge comes to him:

'I am free!

Perished is birth,
lived is the divine life,
done what was to be done,
there is nothing more in this state!' -
thus he knows."

---

ed1 Mrs. Rhys Davids abridges the whole with 'sense-contact feeling' which is not an abridgment but an interpretation. The Pali is cakkhu-samphasso vedanā ...: eye-contact, etc. which I use here.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
18. Rāhula Saṃyuttam
2. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

18. Kindred Sayings about Rāhula

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 16

Saññā Suttaṃ

Perception

---

[167]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Rāhula came into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him and eat down beside him.

So seated the Exalted One said this to the venerable Rāhula:

"What think you as to this, Rāhula?

"Is perception of a visible object abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is perception of a sound abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is perception of a scent abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is perception of a taste abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is perception of a contact abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is perception of a mental object abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"So seeing, Rāhula,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
is repelled by sight,
is repelled by hearing,

is repelled by smelling,
is repelled by tast,
is repelled by touch,
is repelled by mind.

Being repelled,
he loses desire for it;
from losing desire
he is set free;
concerning that which is free,
knowledge comes to him:

'I am free!

Perished is birth,
lived is the divine life,
done what was to be done,
there is nothing more in this state!' -
thus he knows."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
18. Rāhula Saṃyuttam
2. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

18. Kindred Sayings about Rāhula

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 17

Sañcetanā Suttaṃ

Volition

---

[167]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Rāhula came into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him and eat down beside him.

So seated the Exalted One said this to the venerable Rāhula:

"What think you as to this, Rāhula?

"Is volition in connection with visible objects abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is volition in connection with sounds abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is volition in connection with scents abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is volition in connection with tastes abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is volition in connection with contacts abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is volition in connection with mental objects abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"So seeing, Rāhula,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
is repelled by sight,
is repelled by hearing,

is repelled by smelling,
is repelled by tast,
is repelled by touch,
is repelled by mind.

Being repelled,
he loses desire for it;
from losing desire
he is set free;
concerning that which is free,
knowledge comes to him:

'I am free!

Perished is birth,
lived is the divine life,
done what was to be done,
there is nothing more in this state!' -
thus he knows."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
18. Rāhula Saṃyuttam
2. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

18. Kindred Sayings about Rāhula

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 18

Taṇhā Suttaṃ

Craving

---

[167]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Rāhula came into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him and eat down beside him.

So seated the Exalted One said this to the venerable Rāhula:

"What think you as to this, Rāhula?

"Is craving in connection with visible objects abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is craving in connection with sounds abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is craving in connection with scents abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is craving in connection with tastes abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is craving in connection with contacts abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is craving in connection with mental objects abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"So seeing, Rāhula,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
is repelled by sight,
is repelled by hearing,

is repelled by smelling,
is repelled by tast,
is repelled by touch,
is repelled by mind.

Being repelled,
he loses desire for it;
from losing desire
he is set free;
concerning that which is free,
knowledge comes to him:

'I am free!

Perished is birth,
lived is the divine life,
done what was to be done,
there is nothing more in this state!' -
thus he knows."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
18. Rāhula Saṃyuttam
2. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

18. Kindred Sayings about Rāhula

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 19

Dhātu Suttaṃ

Element

---

[167]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Rāhula came into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him and eat down beside him.

So seated the Exalted One said this to the venerable Rāhula:

"What think you as to this, Rāhula?

"Is the earthy element abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is the watery element abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is the fiery element abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is the mobile[ed1] element abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

"So seeing, Rāhula,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
is repelled by sight,
is repelled by hearing,
is repelled by smelling,
is repelled by tast,
is repelled by touch,
is repelled by mind.

Being repelled,
he loses desire for it;
from losing desire
he is set free;
concerning that which is free,
knowledge comes to him:

'I am free!

Perished is birth,
lived is the divine life,
done what was to be done,
there is nothing more in this state!' -
thus he knows."

---

ed1 Mrs. Rhys Davids translations of 'vāyo' are "mobile and aerial", and here 'aerial' would better follow in style, but 'air' is an incorrect translation where mobile comes closer to the correct 'windy' or better 'wind'.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
18. Rāhula Saṃyuttam
2. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

18. Kindred Sayings about Rāhula

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 20

Khandha Suttaṃ

Aggregates

---

[167]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Rāhula came into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him and eat down beside him.

So seated the Exalted One said this to the venerable Rāhula:

"What think you as to this, Rāhula?

"Is the material aggregate of [individual life] abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is the feeling aggregate of [individual life] abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is the perception aggregate of [individual life] abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is the volitional complex aggregate of [individual life] abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

■

"Is the consciousness aggregate of [individual life] abiding or fleeting?"

"Fleeting, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
is it happy or unhappy?"

"Unhappy, lord."

"But that which is fleeting,
unhappy,
changeable -
is it fit to consider that as:

'This is mine!

This am I!

This is my spirit?'"

"Not so, lord."

"So seeing, Rāhula,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
is repelled by sight,
is repelled by hearing,
is repelled by smelling,
is repelled by tast,
is repelled by touch,
is repelled by mind.

Being repelled,
he loses desire for it;
from losing desire
he is set free;
concerning that which is free,
knowledge comes to him:

'I am free!

Perished is birth,
lived is the divine life,
done what was to be done,
there is nothing more in this state!' -
thus he knows."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
18. Rāhula Saṃyuttam
2. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

18. Kindred Sayings about Rāhula

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 21

Anusaya Suttaṃ

Insidious Tendency

[4] Cf. above i, 17, 21 f., 141.

[ed1] Sankhara. Own-making or confounding or constructing. Elsewhere translated by Mrs. Rhys Davids as: volitional complexes, dispositions, synergies.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
18. Rāhula Saṃyuttam
2. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

18. Kindred Sayings about Rāhula

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 22

Mān-Ā-pagata Suttaṃ

Gone Away From

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
19. Lakkhaṇa-Saṇuttaṃ
1. Paṭhama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

19. Kindred Sayings on Lakkhana's Questions

1. [Untitled]

Sutta 1

Aṭṭhi-Pesi (Aṭṭhi-Sankhalika) Suttaṃ

A Lump of Bones

---

[169]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha
in the Bamboo Grove
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now at that time the venerable Lakkhana[1]
and the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna

were staying at Vulture's Peak hill.

And the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
rising at an early hour
and taking bowl and robe
went to see the venerable Lakkhana
and said:

"Let us go, friend Lakkhana,
and enter Rājagaha for alms."

And the venerable Lakkhana consented.

Now the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
as he was descending the hill
and passing a certain place
smiled.

Then Lakkhana said to him:

"What is the reason,
what is the cause, friend Moggallāna,
that you smile?"

"It is not the right time for that question, friend Lakkhana.

Ask me the question in the Exalted One's presence."

Then when the twain had made their alms-round in Rājagaha,
had dined
and come away from their meal,
they went into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him
and took their seat beside him.

So seated
the venerable Lakkhana said to Mahā-Moggallāna:-

"As the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna was descending Vulture's Peak hill just now, [170] as he came to a certain place
he smiled:-

What was the reason,
what was the cause for the smile?"

"Just now, friend,
as I was descending Vulture's Peak hill,
I saw a skeleton[2] going through the air,
and vultures,
crows
and falcons
kept flying after it,
pecking at[3] its ribs,[4]
pulling it apart
while it[5] uttered cries of pain.

To me, friend, came this thought:-

'0 but this is wonderful!

0 but this is marvellous
that a person will come to have such a shape,
that the individuality acquired
will come to have such a shape!'"

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren: -

"Disciples, brethren, live the life of vision,
yea, of insight,
since a disciple will know,
or will see,
or will testify
to a thing like this.

I also, brethren, had seen that being before now,
yet I did not reveal it.

I might have revealed it,
and others would not have believed me.

Had they not believed me,
it would have been to their hurt and their sorrow.

This being, brethren,
was a cattle-butcher
in this very Rājagaha.

He by the effect of that work
has been punished[6] for many years,
for many hundreds,
nay, hundred thousands of years
in purgatory.

Now by the remaining effect of that work
he has acquired a personality of that kind."[7]

---

[1] This was a thera, one of the 1,000 Jaṭilas ordained by the Buddha when the three famous Kassapas were converted by him (Vin. Texts i, 132-5), and he had preached the 'Burning' Sermon; a very worthy saint. Comy.

[2] * Aṭṭhisankhalikaṃ.

[3] Comy. reads vitudenti. On vitacchenti, tearing, cf. M. i, 364. Cf. with virājeyyuṃ there, the more intelligible vibhajenti here. Cf. also, here, text p. 256, nn. 2, 3.

[4] Or inside of, or between, or about.

[5] Sāssūdarṃ = Sa sudaṃ.

[6] Pacitvā, matured.

[7] The comment on the vision may thus be summarized:- The skeleton was a Peta. He and the birds, not being earth-dwellers, could only be seen clairvoyantly. They would not come into the focus of the earthly eye (pasāda-cakkhu). M.-M. should have felt pity - why did he smile? He thought of how the Buddha's wisdom and he too had prevailed, so that never could he come again to such a state. His exclamations were prompted by pity. Lakkhana could also have seen the vision, but he was not attending as a clairvoyant must.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
19. Lakkhaṇa-Saṇuttaṃ
1. Paṭhama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

19. Kindred Sayings on Lakkhana's Questions

1. [Untitled]

Sutta 2

Gāvaghāṭaka Suttaṃ

Cattle-butcher

---

[170]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha
in the Bamboo Grove
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now at that time the venerable Lakkhana
and the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna

were staying at Vulture's Peak hill.

And the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
rising at an early hour
and taking bowl and robe
went to see the venerable Lakkhana
and said:

"Let us go, friend Lakkhana,
and enter Rājagaha for alms."

And the venerable Lakkhana consented.

Now the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
as he was descending the hill
and passing a certain place
smiled.

Then Lakkhana said to him:

"What is the reason,
what is the cause, friend Moggallāna,
that you smile?"

"It is not the right time for that question, friend Lakkhana.

Ask me the question in the Exalted One's presence."

Then when the twain had made their alms-round in Rājagaha,
had dined
and come away from their meal,
they went into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him
and took their seat beside him.

So seated
the venerable Lakkhana said to Mahā-Moggallāna:-

"As the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna was descending Vulture's Peak hill just now,
as he came to a certain place
he smiled:-

What was the reason,
what was the cause for the smile?"

[171] "Just now, friend,
as I was descending Vulture's Peak hill,
I saw a lump of flesh[1]
going through the air,
and vultures,
crows
and falcons
kept flying after it,
pecking at it,
pulling it apart
while it uttered cries of pain.

To me, friend, came this thought:-

'0 but this is wonderful!

0 but this is marvellous
that a person will come to have such a shape,
that the individuality acquired
will come to have such a shape!'"

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren: -

"Disciples, brethren, live the life of vision,
yea, of insight,
since a disciple will know,
or will see,
or will testify
to a thing like this.

I also, brethren, had seen that being before now,
yet I did not reveal it.

I might have revealed it,
and others would not have believed me.

Had they not believed me,
it would have been to their hurt and their sorrow.

This being, brethren,
was a cattle-butcher
in this very Rājagaha.

He by the effect of that work
has been punished for many years,
for many hundreds,
nay, hundred thousands of years
in purgatory.

Now by the remaining effect of that work
he has acquired a personality of that kind."

---

[1] Such was the body of the unfortunate Peta. He had thought when dying of the dried meats he sold. Comy. The lively imagination of the Commentarial tradition pictured these bodies as very vast, and thus susceptible of a greater volume of suffering!

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
19. Lakkhaṇa-Saṇuttaṃ
1. Paṭhama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

19. Kindred Sayings on Lakkhana's Questions

1. [Untitled]

Sutta 3

Piṇḍa-Sakuṇiyam Suttaṃ

Morsel and Fowler

---

[171]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha
in the Bamboo Grove
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now at that time the venerable Lakkhana
and the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna

were staying at Vulture's Peak hill.

And the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
rising at an early hour
and taking bowl and robe
went to see the venerable Lakkhana
and said:

"Let us go, friend Lakkhana,
and enter Rājagaha for alms."

And the venerable Lakkhana consented.

Now the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
as he was descending the hill
and passing a certain place
smiled.

Then Lakkhana said to him:

"What is the reason,
what is the cause, friend Moggallāna,
that you smile?"

"It is not the right time for that question, friend Lakkhana.

Ask me the question in the Exalted One's presence."

Then when the twain had made their alms-round in Rājagaha,
had dined
and come away from their meal,
they went into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him
and took their seat beside him.

So seated
the venerable Lakkhana said to Mahā-Moggallāna:-

"As the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna was descending Vulture's Peak hill just now,
as he came to a certain place
he smiled:-

What was the reason,
what was the cause for the smile?"

"Just now, friend,
as I was descending Vulture's Peak hill,
I saw a morsel of flesh
going through the air,
and vultures,
crows and falcons
kept flying after it,
pecking at it,
pulling it apart
while it uttered cries of pain.

To me, friend, came this thought:-

'0 but this is wonderful!

0 but this is marvellous
that a person will come to have such a shape,
that the individuality acquired
will come to have such a shape!'"

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren: -

"Disciples, brethren, live the life of vision,
yea, of insight,
since a disciple will know,
or will see,
or will testify
to a thing like this.

I also, brethren, had seen that being before now,
yet I did not reveal it.

I might have revealed it,
and others would not have believed me.

Had they not believed me,
it would have been to their hurt and their sorrow.

This being, brethren,
was a fowler
in this very Rājagaha.

He by the effect of that work
has been punished for many years,
for many hundreds,
nay, hundred thousands of years
in purgatory.

Now by the remaining effect of that work
he has acquired a personality
of that kind."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
19. Lakkhaṇa-Saṇuttaṃ
1. Paṭhama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

19. Kindred Sayings on Lakkhana's Questions

1. [Untitled]

Sutta 4

Niccha-Vorabbhi Suttaṃ

The Flayed Sheep-butcher

---

[171]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha
in the Bamboo Grove
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now at that time the venerable Lakkhana
and the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna

were staying at Vulture's Peak hill.

And the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
rising at an early hour
and taking bowl and robe
went to see the venerable Lakkhana
and said:

"Let us go, friend Lakkhana,
and enter Rājagaha for alms."

And the venerable Lakkhana consented.

Now the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
as he was descending the hill
and passing a certain place
smiled.

Then Lakkhana said to him:

"What is the reason,
what is the cause, friend Moggallāna,
that you smile?"

"It is not the right time for that question, friend Lakkhana.

Ask me the question in the Exalted One's presence."

Then when the twain had made their alms-round in Rājagaha,
had dined
and come away from their meal,
they went into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him
and took their seat beside him.

So seated
the venerable Lakkhana said to Mahā-Moggallāna:-

"As the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna was descending Vulture's Peak hill just now,
as he came to a certain place
he smiled:-

What was the reason,
what was the cause for the smile?"

"Just now, friend,
as I was descending Vulture's Peak hill,
I saw a flayed man
going through the air,
and vultures,
crows and falcons
kept flying after it,
pecking at it,
pulling it apart
while it uttered cries of pain.

To me, friend, came this thought:-

'0 but this is wonderful!

0 but this is marvellous
that a person will come to have such a shape,
that the individuality acquired
will come to have such a shape!'"

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren: -

"Disciples, brethren, live the life of vision,
yea, of insight,
since a disciple will know,
or will see,
or will testify
to a thing like this.

I also, brethren, had seen that being before now,
yet I did not reveal it.

I might have revealed it,
and others would not have believed me.

Had they not believed me,
it would have been to their hurt and their sorrow.

'This being, brethren,
was a sheep-butcher
in this very Rājagaha.

He by the effect of that work
has been punished for many years,
for many hundreds,
nay, hundred thousands of years
in purgatory.

Now by the remaining effect of that work
he has acquired a personality
of that kind."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
19. Lakkhaṇa-Saṇuttaṃ
1. Paṭhama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

19. Kindred Sayings on Lakkhana's Questions

1. [Untitled]

Sutta 5

Asi-Sūkariko Suttaṃ

Sword-pig-butcher

---

[171]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha
in the Bamboo Grove
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now at that time the venerable Lakkhana
and the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna

were staying at Vulture's Peak hill.

And the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
rising at an early hour
and taking bowl and robe
went to see the venerable Lakkhana
and said:

"Let us go, friend Lakkhana,
and enter Rājagaha for alms."

And the venerable Lakkhana consented.

Now the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
as he was descending the hill
and passing a certain place
smiled.

Then Lakkhana said to him:

"What is the reason,
what is the cause, friend Moggallāna,
that you smile?"

"It is not the right time for that question, friend Lakkhana.

Ask me the question in the Exalted One's presence."

Then when the twain had made their alms-round in Rājagaha,
had dined
and come away from their meal,
they went into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him
and took their seat beside him.

So seated
the venerable Lakkhana said to Mahā-Moggallāna:-

"As the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna was descending Vulture's Peak hill just now,
as he came to a certain place
he smiled:-

What was the reason,
what was the cause for the smile?"

"Just now, friend,
as I was descending Vulture's Peak hill,
I saw a man with bristles of sword-blades
going through the air.

The swords kept rising and falling
just on his body
while he uttered cries of pain.

To me, friend, came this thought:-

'0 but this is wonderful!

0 but this is marvellous
that a person will come to have such a shape,
that the individuality acquired
will come to have such a shape!'"

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren: -

"Disciples, brethren, live the life of vision,
yea, of insight,
since a disciple will know,
or will see,
or will testify
to a thing like this.

I also, brethren, had seen that being before now,
yet I did not reveal it.

I might have revealed it,
and others would not have believed me.

Had they not believed me,
it would have been to their hurt and their sorrow.

'This being, brethren,
was a pig-butcher
in this very Rājagaha.

He by the effect of that work
has been punished for many years,
for many hundreds,
nay, hundred thousands of years
in purgatory.

Now by the remaining effect of that work
he has acquired a personality
of that kind."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
19. Lakkhaṇa-Saṇuttaṃ
1. Paṭhama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

19. Kindred Sayings on Lakkhana's Questions

1. [Untitled]

Sutta 6

Satti-Māgavi Suttaṃ

Javelin-Deer-Hunter

---

[171]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha
in the Bamboo Grove
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now at that time the venerable Lakkhana
and the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna

were staying at Vulture's Peak hill.

And the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
rising at an early hour
and taking bowl and robe
went to see the venerable Lakkhana
and said:

"Let us go, friend Lakkhana,
and enter Rājagaha for alms."

And the venerable Lakkhana consented.

Now the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
as he was descending the hill
and passing a certain place
smiled.

Then Lakkhana said to him:

"What is the reason,
what is the cause, friend Moggallāna,
that you smile?"

"It is not the right time for that question, friend Lakkhana.

Ask me the question in the Exalted One's presence."

Then when the twain had made their alms-round in Rājagaha,
had dined
and come away from their meal,
they went into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him
and took their seat beside him.

So seated
the venerable Lakkhana said to Mahā-Moggallāna:-

"As the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna was descending Vulture's Peak hill just now,
as he came to a certain place
he smiled:-

What was the reason,
what was the cause for the smile?"

"Just now, friend,
as I was descending Vulture's Peak hill,
I saw a man with bristles of javelins
going through the air.

The javelins kept rising and falling
just on his body
while he uttered cries of pain.

To me, friend, came this thought:-

'0 but this is wonderful!

0 but this is marvellous
that a person will come to have such a shape,
that the individuality acquired
will come to have such a shape!'"

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren: -

"Disciples, brethren, live the life of vision,
yea, of insight,
since a disciple will know,
or will see,
or will testify
to a thing like this.

I also, brethren, had seen that being before now,
yet I did not reveal it.

I might have revealed it,
and others would not have believed me.

Had they not believed me,
it would have been to their hurt and their sorrow.

'This being, brethren,
was a deer-hunter
in this very Rājagaha.

He by the effect of that work
has been punished for many years,
for many hundreds,
nay, hundred thousands of years
in purgatory.

Now by the remaining effect of that work
he has acquired a personality
of that kind."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
19. Lakkhaṇa-Saṇuttaṃ
1. Paṭhama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

19. Kindred Sayings on Lakkhana's Questions

1. [Untitled]

Sutta 7

Usu-Kāraṇiyo Suttaṃ

Arrow-judge

---

[171]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha
in the Bamboo Grove
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now at that time the venerable Lakkhana
and the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna

were staying at Vulture's Peak hill.

And the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
rising at an early hour
and taking bowl and robe
went to see the venerable Lakkhana
and said:

"Let us go, friend Lakkhana,
and enter Rājagaha for alms."

And the venerable Lakkhana consented.

Now the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
as he was descending the hill
and passing a certain place
smiled.

Then Lakkhana said to him:

"What is the reason,
what is the cause, friend Moggallāna,
that you smile?"

"It is not the right time for that question, friend Lakkhana.

Ask me the question in the Exalted One's presence."

Then when the twain had made their alms-round in Rājagaha,
had dined
and come away from their meal,
they went into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him
and took their seat beside him.

So seated
the venerable Lakkhana said to Mahā-Moggallāna:-

"As the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna was descending Vulture's Peak hill just now,
as he came to a certain place
he smiled:-

What was the reason,
what was the cause for the smile?"

"Just now, friend,
as I was descending Vulture's Peak hill,
I saw a man bristling with arrows
going through the air.

The the arrows kept rising and falling
just on his body
while he uttered cries of pain.

To me, friend, came this thought:-

'0 but this is wonderful!

0 but this is marvellous
that a person will come to have such a shape,
that the individuality acquired
will come to have such a shape!'"

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren: -

"Disciples, brethren, live the life of vision,
yea, of insight,
since a disciple will know,
or will see,
or will testify
to a thing like this.

I also, brethren, had seen that being before now,
yet I did not reveal it.

I might have revealed it,
and others would not have believed me.

Had they not believed me,
it would have been to their hurt and their sorrow.

'This being, brethren,
was a judge[1]
in this very Rājagaha.

He by the effect of that work
has been punished for many years,
for many hundreds,
nay, hundred thousands of years
in purgatory.

Now by the remaining effect of that work
he has acquired a personality
of that kind."

---

[1] Cruel with Criminals. Comy.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
19. Lakkhaṇa-Saṇuttaṃ
1. Paṭhama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

19. Kindred Sayings on Lakkhana's Questions

1. [Untitled]

Sutta 8

Sūci-Sārathi Suttaṃ

Sharp-Point-Driver

---

[172]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha
in the Bamboo Grove
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now at that time the venerable Lakkhana
and the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna

were staying at Vulture's Peak hill.

And the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
rising at an early hour
and taking bowl and robe
went to see the venerable Lakkhana
and said:

"Let us go, friend Lakkhana,
and enter Rājagaha for alms."

And the venerable Lakkhana consented.

Now the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
as he was descending the hill
and passing a certain place
smiled.

Then Lakkhana said to him:

"What is the reason,
what is the cause, friend Moggallāna,
that you smile?"

"It is not the right time for that question, friend Lakkhana.

Ask me the question in the Exalted One's presence."

Then when the twain had made their alms-round in Rājagaha,
had dined
and come away from their meal,
they went into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him
and took their seat beside him.

So seated
the venerable Lakkhana said to Mahā-Moggallāna:-

"As the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna was descending Vulture's Peak hill just now,
as he came to a certain place
he smiled:-

What was the reason,
what was the cause for the smile?"

"Just now, friend,
as I was descending Vulture's Peak hill,
I saw a man bristling with stilettos
going through the air.

The the stilettos kept rising and falling
just on his body
while he uttered cries of pain.

To me, friend, came this thought:-

'0 but this is wonderful!

0 but this is marvellous
that a person will come to have such a shape,
that the individuality acquired
will come to have such a shape!'"

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren: -

"Disciples, brethren, live the life of vision,
yea, of insight,
since a disciple will know,
or will see,
or will testify
to a thing like this.

I also, brethren, had seen that being before now,
yet I did not reveal it.

I might have revealed it,
and others would not have believed me.

Had they not believed me,
it would have been to their hurt and their sorrow.

'This being, brethren,
was an animal-tamer[1]
in this very Rājagaha.

He by the effect of that work
has been punished for many years,
for many hundreds,
nay, hundred thousands of years
in purgatory.

Now by the remaining effect of that work
he has acquired a personality
of that kind."

---

[1] Reading sūto for sūcako. One who was cruel in his methods. Comy.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
19. Lakkhaṇa-Saṇuttaṃ
1. Paṭhama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

19. Kindred Sayings on Lakkhana's Questions

1. [Untitled]

Sutta 9

Sūcako Suttaṃ

The Spy

---

[172]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha
in the Bamboo Grove
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now at that time the venerable Lakkhana
and the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna

were staying at Vulture's Peak hill.

And the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
rising at an early hour
and taking bowl and robe
went to see the venerable Lakkhana
and said:

"Let us go, friend Lakkhana,
and enter Rājagaha for alms."

And the venerable Lakkhana consented.

Now the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
as he was descending the hill
and passing a certain place
smiled.

Then Lakkhana said to him:

"What is the reason,
what is the cause, friend Moggallāna,
that you smile?"

"It is not the right time for that question, friend Lakkhana.

Ask me the question in the Exalted One's presence."

Then when the twain had made their alms-round in Rājagaha,
had dined
and come away from their meal,
they went into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him
and took their seat beside him.

So seated
the venerable Lakkhana said to Mahā-Moggallāna:-

"As the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna was descending Vulture's Peak hill just now,
as he came to a certain place
he smiled:-

What was the reason,
what was the cause for the smile?"

"Just now, friend,
as I was descending Vulture's Peak hill,
I saw a man bristling with stilettos.
going through the air.

These pierced his head and came out of his mouth;
they entered his mouth and came out at his breast;
they entered his breast and came out at his belly;
they entered his belly and came out at his thighs;
they entered his thighs and came out at his shins;
they entered his shins and came out at his feet,
while he uttered cries of distress.'.

To me, friend, came this thought:-

'0 but this is wonderful!

0 but this is marvellous
that a person will come to have such a shape,
that the individuality acquired
will come to have such a shape!'"

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren: -

"Disciples, brethren, live the life of vision,
yea, of insight,
since a disciple will know,
or will see,

or will testify
to a thing like this.

I also, brethren, had seen that being before now,
yet I did not reveal it.

I might have revealed it,
and others would not have believed me.

Had they not believed me,
it would have been to their hurt and their sorrow.

'This being, brethren,
was a slanderer[1]
in this very Rājagaha.

He by the effect of that work
has been punished for many years,
for many hundreds,
nay, hundred thousands of years
in purgatory.

Now by the remaining effect of that work
he has acquired a personality
of that kind."

---

[1] Sūcako ti pesuñña-kārako Comy.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
19. Lakkhaṇa-Saṇuttaṃ
1. Paṭhama Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

19. Kindred Sayings on Lakkhana's Questions

1. [Untitled]

Sutta 10

Aṇḍabharī-Gāmakuṭako Suttaṃ[ed1]

The Corrupt Judge[1]

[ed3] tam enaṃ gijjhā pi kākā pi kulalā pi anupatitvā anupatitvā vitacchenti, virājenti. Again Mrs. Rhys Davids omits.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
19. Lakkhaṇa-Saṇuttaṃ
2. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

19. Kindred Sayings on Lakkhana's Questions

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 11

Kupe Nimuggo Paradāriko Suttaṃ

The Adulterer Sunk in the Pit

---

[172]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha
in the Bamboo Grove
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now at that time the venerable Lakkhana
and the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna

were staying at Vulture's Peak hill.

And the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
rising at an early hour
and taking bowl and robe
went to see the venerable Lakkhana
and said:

"Let us go, friend Lakkhana,
and enter Rājagaha for alms."

And the venerable Lakkhana consented.

Now the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
as he was descending the hill
and passing a certain place
smiled.

Then Lakkhana said to him:

"What is the reason,
what is the cause, friend Moggallāna,
that you smile?"

"It is not the right time for that question, friend Lakkhana.

Ask me the question in the Exalted One's presence."

Then when the twain had made their alms-round in Rājagaha,
had dined
and come away from their meal,
they went into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him
and took their seat beside him.

So seated
the venerable Lakkhana said to Mahā-Moggallāna:-

"As the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna was descending Vulture's Peak hill just now,
came to a certain place
he smiled:-

What was the reason,
what was the cause for the smile?"

"Just now, friend,
as I was descending Vulture's Peak hill,
I saw a man sunk up to his head in a dung-pit.

To me, friend, came this thought:-

'0 but this is wonderful!

0 but this is marvellous
that a person will come to have such a shape,
that the individuality acquired
will come to have such a shape!'"

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren: -

"Disciples, brethren, live the life of vision,
yea, of insight,
since a disciple will know,
or will see,
or will testify
to a thing like this.

I also, brethren, had seen that being before now,
yet I did not reveal it.

I might have revealed it,
and others would not have believed me.

Had they not believed me,
it would have been to their hurt and their sorrow.

This being, brethren,
was an adulterer
in this very Rājagaha.

He by the effect of that work
has been punished for many years,
for many hundreds,
nay, hundred thousands of years
in purgatory.

Now by the remaining effect of that work
he has acquired a personality
of that kind."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
19. Lakkhaṇa-Saṇuttaṃ
2. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

19. Kindred Sayings on Lakkhana's Questions

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 12

Gūtha-Khādi-Duṭṭha-Brāhmaṇo Suttaṃ

The Dung-Eating Wicked Brahmin

---

[173]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha
in the Bamboo Grove
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now at that time the venerable Lakkhana
and the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna

were staying at Vulture's Peak hill.

And the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
rising at an early hour
and taking bowl and robe
went to see the venerable Lakkhana
and said:

"Let us go, friend Lakkhana,
and enter Rājagaha for alms."

And the venerable Lakkhana consented.

Now the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
as he was descending the hill
and passing a certain place
smiled.

Then Lakkhana said to him:

"What is the reason,
what is the cause, friend Moggallāna,
that you smile?"

"It is not the right time for that question, friend Lakkhana.

Ask me the question in the Exalted One's presence."

Then when the twain had made their alms-round in Rājagaha,
had dined
and come away from their meal,
they went into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him
and took their seat beside him.

So seated
the venerable Lakkhana said to Mahā-Moggallāna:-

"As the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna was descending Vulture's Peak hill just now,
came to a certain place
he smiled:-

What was the reason,
what was the cause for the smile?"

"Just now, friend,
as I was descending Vulture's Peak hill,
I saw a man sunk in a dung-pit
eating dung with both hands.

To me, friend, came this thought:-

'0 but this is wonderful!

0 but this is marvellous
that a person will come to have such a shape,
that the individuality acquired
will come to have such a shape!'"

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren: -

"Disciples, brethren, live the life of vision,
yea, of insight,
since a disciple will know,
or will see,
or will testify
to a thing like this.

I also, brethren, had seen that being before now,
yet I did not reveal it.

I might have revealed it,
and others would not have believed me.

Had they not believed me,
it would have been to their hurt and their sorrow.

This being, brethren,
was a brahmin
in this very Rājagaha.

He, when Kassapa Buddha had been teaching,
invited the Order of brethren to a meal.

Then letting a vessel be filled with dung he said:

"Aha! let my masters eat their fill and carry away as much as they need!"

He by the effect of that work
has been punished for many years,
for many hundreds,
nay, hundred thousands of years
in purgatory.

Now by the remaining effect of that work
he has acquired a personality
of that kind."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
19. Lakkhaṇa-Saṇuttaṃ
2. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

19. Kindred Sayings on Lakkhana's Questions

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 13

Niccha-Vitthi-Aticārini Suttaṃ

The Flayed Adultress

---

[173]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha
in the Bamboo Grove
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now at that time the venerable Lakkhana
and the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna

were staying at Vulture's Peak hill.

And the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
rising at an early hour
and taking bowl and robe
went to see the venerable Lakkhana
and said:

"Let us go, friend Lakkhana,
and enter Rājagaha for alms."

And the venerable Lakkhana consented.

Now the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
as he was descending the hill
and passing a certain place
smiled.

Then Lakkhana said to him:

"What is the reason,
what is the cause, friend Moggallāna,
that you smile?"

"It is not the right time for that question, friend Lakkhana.

Ask me the question in the Exalted One's presence."

Then when the twain had made their alms-round in Rājagaha,
had dined
and come away from their meal,
they went into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him
and took their seat beside him.

So seated
the venerable Lakkhana said to Mahā-Moggallāna:-

"As the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna was descending Vulture's Peak hill just now,
came to a certain place
he smiled:-

What was the reason,
what was the cause for the smile?"

"Just now, friend,
as I was descending Vulture's Peak hill,
I saw flayed woman going through the air.

Vultures and crows and falcons were flying after her
tearing her,
pulling her to pieces
while she uttered cries of distres.

To me, friend, came this thought:-

'0 but this is wonderful!

0 but this is marvellous
that a person will come to have such a shape,
that the individuality acquired
will come to have such a shape!'"

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren: -

"Disciples, brethren, live the life of vision,
yea, of insight,
since a disciple will know,
or will see,
or will testify
to a thing like this.

I also, brethren, had seen that being before now,
yet I did not reveal it.

I might have revealed it,
and others would not have believed me.

Had they not believed me,
it would have been to their hurt and their sorrow.

This woman, brethren,
was an adulteress
in this very Rājagaha.

She by the effect of that work
has been punished for many years,
for many hundreds,
nay, hundred thousands of years
in purgatory.

Now by the remaining effect of that work
she has acquired a personality
of that kind."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
19. Lakkhaṇa-Saṇuttaṃ
2. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

19. Kindred Sayings on Lakkhana's Questions

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 14

Maṇgul'Itthi Ikkhan'Itthi Suttaṃ

Ugly Woman, Fortune-Teller

---

[173]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha
in the Bamboo Grove
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now at that time the venerable Lakkhana
and the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna

were staying at Vulture's Peak hill.

And the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
rising at an early hour
and taking bowl and robe
went to see the venerable Lakkhana
and said:

"Let us go, friend Lakkhana,
and enter Rājagaha for alms."

And the venerable Lakkhana consented.

Now the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
as he was descending the hill
and passing a certain place
smiled.

Then Lakkhana said to him:

"What is the reason,
what is the cause, friend Moggallāna,
that you smile?"

"It is not the right time for that question, friend Lakkhana.

Ask me the question in the Exalted One's presence."

Then when the twain had made their alms-round in Rājagaha,
had dined
and come away from their meal,
they went into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him
and took their seat beside him.

So seated
the venerable Lakkhana said to Mahā-Moggallāna:-

"As the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna was descending Vulture's Peak hill just now,
came to a certain place
he smiled:-

What was the reason,
what was the cause for the smile?"

"Just now, friend,
as I was descending Vulture's Peak hill,
I saw a malodorous, ill-favored woman going through the air.

Vultures and crows and falcons were flying after her
tearing her,
pulling her to pieces
while she uttered cries of distres.

To me, friend, came this thought:-

'0 but this is wonderful!

0 but this is marvellous
that a person will come to have such a shape,
that the individuality acquired
will come to have such a shape!'"

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren: -

"Disciples, brethren, live the life of vision,
yea, of insight,
since a disciple will know,
or will see,
or will testify
to a thing like this.

I also, brethren, had seen that being before now,
yet I did not reveal it.

I might have revealed it,
and others would not have believed me.

Had they not believed me,
it would have been to their hurt and their sorrow.

'This woman, brethren,
was a fortune-teller[1]
in this very Rājagaha.

She by the effect of that work
has been punished for many years,
for many hundreds,
nay, hundred thousands of years
in purgatory.

Now by the remaining effect of that work
she has acquired a personality
of that kind."

---

[1] Accepting perfumes and flowers with a view to deceiving the people, saying to one and the other, 'You will become rich,' she is now malodorous, etc. Comy. which reads mankuliṃ.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
19. Lakkhaṇa-Saṇuttaṃ
2. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

19. Kindred Sayings on Lakkhana's Questions

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 15

Okilini-Sapatt'Aṇgārako-Kiri Suttaṃ

The Dried-up Woman, Scatterer of Coals Over One of Her Fellows[1]

---

[173]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha
in the Bamboo Grove
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now at that time the venerable Lakkhana
and the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
were staying at Vulture's Peak hill.

And the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
rising at an early hour
and taking bowl and robe
went to see the venerable Lakkhana
and said:

"Let us go, friend Lakkhana,
and enter Rājagaha for alms."

And the venerable Lakkhana consented.

Now the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
as he was descending the hill
and passing a certain place
smiled.

Then Lakkhana said to him:

"What is the reason,
what is the cause, friend Moggallāna,
that you smile?"

"It is not the right time for that question, friend Lakkhana.

Ask me the question in the Exalted One's presence."

Then when the twain had made their alms-round in Rājagaha,
had dined
and come away from their meal,
they went into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him
and took their seat beside him.

So seated
the venerable Lakkhana said to Mahā-Moggallāna:-

"As the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna was descending Vulture's Peak hill just now,
came to a certain place
he smiled:-

What was the reason,
what was the cause for the smile?"

"Just now, friend,
as I was descending Vulture's Peak hill,
I saw a woman, parched, dried-up, sooty, going through the air while uttering cries of distres.

To me, friend, came this thought:-

'0 but this is wonderful!

0 but this is marvellous
that a person will come to have such a shape,
that the individuality acquired
will come to have such a shape!'"

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren: -

"Disciples, brethren, live the life of vision,
yea, of insight,
since a disciple will know,
or will see,
or will testify
to a thing like this.

I also, brethren, had seen that being before now,
yet I did not reveal it.

I might have revealed it,
and others would not have believed me.

Had they not believed me,
it would have been to their hurt and their sorrow.

'That woman, brethren,
was the head queen of a king of Kalinga.

She, moved with jealousy,
scattered a brazier of coals
over one of the king's women.

She by the effect of that work
has been punished for many years,
for many hundreds,
nay, hundred thousands of years
in purgatory.

Now by the remaining effect of that work
she has acquired a personality
of that kind."

---

[1] Sapattī, according to the Comy. this was a dancer who pleased the king once by massaging him.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
19. Lakkhaṇa-Saṇuttaṃ
2. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

19. Kindred Sayings on Lakkhana's Questions

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 16

Sīsa-Chinno-Cora-Ghātako Suttaṃ

The Headless Man, the Bandit

---

[173]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha
in the Bamboo Grove
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now at that time the venerable Lakkhana
and the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna

were staying at Vulture's Peak hill.

And the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
rising at an early hour
and taking bowl and robe
went to see the venerable Lakkhana
and said:

"Let us go, friend Lakkhana,
and enter Rājagaha for alms."

And the venerable Lakkhana consented.

Now the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
as he was descending the hill
and passing a certain place
smiled.

Then Lakkhana said to him:

"What is the reason,
what is the cause, friend Moggallāna,
that you smile?"

"It is not the right time for that question, friend Lakkhana.

Ask me the question in the Exalted One's presence."

Then when the twain had made their alms-round in Rājagaha,
had dined
and come away from their meal,
they went into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him
and took their seat beside him.

So seated
the venerable Lakkhana said to Mahā-Moggallāna:-

"As the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna was descending Vulture's Peak hill just now,
came to a certain place
he smiled:-

What was the reason,
what was the cause for the smile?"

"Just now, friend,
as I was descending Vulture's Peak hill,
I saw a headless trunk of a man going through the air;
his eyes wereon his chest
and vultures,
crows
and falcons
kept flying after it,
pecking at its ribs,
pulling it apart
while it uttered cries of pain.

To me, friend, came this thought:-

'0 but this is wonderful!

0 but this is marvellous
that a person will come to have such a shape,
that the individuality acquired
will come to have such a shape!'"

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren: -

"Disciples, brethren, live the life of vision,
yea, of insight,
since a disciple will know,
or will see,
or will testify
to a thing like this.

I also, brethren, had seen that being before now,
yet I did not reveal it.

I might have revealed it,
and others would not have believed me.

Had they not believed me,
it would have been to their hurt and their sorrow.

'That being, brethren,
was a bandit named Hārika
in this very Rājagaha.

He by the effect of that work
has been punished for many years,
for many hundreds,
nay, hundred thousands of years
in purgatory.

Now by the remaining effect of that work
he has acquired a personality
of that kind."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
19. Lakkhaṇa-Saṇuttaṃ
2. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

19. Kindred Sayings on Lakkhana's Questions

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 17

Bhikkhu Suttaṃ

The Almsman

---

[174]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha
in the Bamboo Grove
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now at that time the venerable Lakkhana
and the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna

were staying at Vulture's Peak hill.

And the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
rising at an early hour
and taking bowl and robe
went to see the venerable Lakkhana
and said:

"Let us go, friend Lakkhana,
and enter Rājagaha for alms."

And the venerable Lakkhana consented.

Now the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
as he was descending the hill
and passing a certain place
smiled.

Then Lakkhana said to him:

"What is the reason,
what is the cause, friend Moggallāna,
that you smile?"

"It is not the right time for that question, friend Lakkhana.

Ask me the question in the Exalted One's presence."

Then when the twain had made their alms-round in Rājagaha,
had dined
and come away from their meal,
they went into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him
and took their seat beside him.

So seated
the venerable Lakkhana said to Mahā-Moggallāna:-

"As the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna was descending Vulture's Peak hill just now,
came to a certain place
he smiled:-

What was the reason,
what was the cause for the smile?"

"Just now, friend,
as I was descending Vulture's Peak hill,
I saw an almsman going through the air,
his under-robe was on fire, burning and blazing,
his bowl was on fire, burning and blazing,
his girdle was on fire, burning and blazing,
his body was on fire, burning and blazing,
and he was uttering cries of distress.

To me, friend, came this thought:-

'0 but this is wonderful!

0 but this is marvellous
that a person will come to have such a shape,
that the individuality acquired
will come to have such a shape!'"

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren: -

"Disciples, brethren, live the life of vision,
yea, of insight,
since a disciple will know,
or will see,
or will testify
to a thing like this.

I also, brethren, had seen that almsman before now,
yet I did not reveal it.

I might have revealed it,
and others would not have believed me.

Had they not believed me,
it would have been to their hurt and their sorrow.

'This almsman, brethren,
was an evil-living brother
when Kassapa Buddha was teaching.

He by the effect of that work
has been punished for many years,
for many hundreds,
nay, hundred thousands of years
in purgatory.

Now by the remaining effect of that work
he has acquired a personality
of that kind."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
19. Lakkhaṇa-Saṇuttaṃ
2. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

19. Kindred Sayings on Lakkhana's Questions

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 18

Bhikkhunī Suttaṃ

The Almswoman

---

[174]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha
in the Bamboo Grove
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now at that time the venerable Lakkhana
and the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna

were staying at Vulture's Peak hill.

And the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
rising at an early hour
and taking bowl and robe
went to see the venerable Lakkhana
and said:

"Let us go, friend Lakkhana,
and enter Rājagaha for alms."

And the venerable Lakkhana consented.

Now the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
as he was descending the hill
and passing a certain place
smiled.

Then Lakkhana said to him:

"What is the reason,
what is the cause, friend Moggallāna,
that you smile?"

"It is not the right time for that question, friend Lakkhana.

Ask me the question in the Exalted One's presence."

Then when the twain had made their alms-round in Rājagaha,
had dined
and come away from their meal,
they went into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him
and took their seat beside him.

So seated
the venerable Lakkhana said to Mahā-Moggallāna:-

"As the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna was descending Vulture's Peak hill just now,
came to a certain place
he smiled:-

What was the reason,
what was the cause for the smile?"

"Just now, friend,
as I was descending Vulture's Peak hill,
I saw an almswoman going through the air,
her under-robe was on fire, burning and blazing,
her bowl was on fire, burning and blazing,
her girdle was on fire, burning and blazing,
her body was on fire, burning and blazing,
and she was uttering cries of distress.

To me, friend, came this thought:-

'0 but this is wonderful!

0 but this is marvellous
that a person will come to have such a shape,
that the individuality acquired
will come to have such a shape!'"

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren: -

"Disciples, brethren, live the life of vision,
yea, of insight,
since a disciple will know,
or will see,
or will testify
to a thing like this.

I also, brethren, had seen that almswoman before now,
yet I did not reveal it.

I might have revealed it,
and others would not have believed me.

Had they not believed me,
it would have been to their hurt and their sorrow.

'This almswoman, brethren,
was an evil-living almswoman
when Kassapa Buddha was teaching.

She by the effect of that work
has been punished for many years,
for many hundreds,
nay, hundred thousands of years
in purgatory.

Now by the remaining effect of that work
she has acquired a personality
of that kind."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
19. Lakkhaṇa-Saṇuttaṃ
2. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

19. Kindred Sayings on Lakkhana's Questions

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 19

Sikkhamānā Suttaṃ

The Sister-in-training

---

[174]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha
in the Bamboo Grove
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now at that time the venerable Lakkhana
and the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna

were staying at Vulture's Peak hill.

And the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
rising at an early hour
and taking bowl and robe
went to see the venerable Lakkhana
and said:

"Let us go, friend Lakkhana,
and enter Rājagaha for alms."

And the venerable Lakkhana consented.

Now the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
as he was descending the hill
and passing a certain place
smiled.

Then Lakkhana said to him:

"What is the reason,
what is the cause, friend Moggallāna,
that you smile?"

"It is not the right time for that question, friend Lakkhana.

Ask me the question in the Exalted One's presence."

Then when the twain had made their alms-round in Rājagaha,
had dined
and come away from their meal,
they went into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him
and took their seat beside him.

So seated
the venerable Lakkhana said to Mahā-Moggallāna:-

"As the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna was descending Vulture's Peak hill just now,
came to a certain place
he smiled:-

What was the reason,
what was the cause for the smile?"

"Just now, friend,
as I was descending Vulture's Peak hill,
I saw a sister-in-training going through the air,
her under-robe was on fire, burning and blazing,
her bowl was on fire, burning and blazing,
her girdle was on fire, burning and blazing,
her body was on fire, burning and blazing,
and she was uttering cries of distress.

To me, friend, came this thought:-

'0 but this is wonderful!

0 but this is marvellous
that a person will come to have such a shape,
that the individuality acquired
will come to have such a shape!'"

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren: -

"Disciples, brethren, live the life of vision,
yea, of insight,
since a disciple will know,
or will see,
or will testify
to a thing like this.

I also, brethren, had seen that sister-in-training before now,
yet I did not reveal it.

I might have revealed it,
and others would not have believed me.

Had they not believed me,
it would have been to their hurt and their sorrow.

'This almswoman, brethren,
was an evil-living sister-in-training
when Kassapa Buddha was teaching.

She by the effect of that work
has been punished for many years,
for many hundreds,
nay, hundred thousands of years
in purgatory.

Now by the remaining effect of that work
she has acquired a personality
of that kind."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
19. Lakkhaṇa-Saṇuttaṃ
2. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

19. Kindred Sayings on Lakkhana's Questions

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 20

Sāmaṇera Suttaṃ

The Novice

---

[174]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha
in the Bamboo Grove
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now at that time the venerable Lakkhana
and the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna

were staying at Vulture's Peak hill.

And the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
rising at an early hour
and taking bowl and robe
went to see the venerable Lakkhana
and said:

"Let us go, friend Lakkhana,
and enter Rājagaha for alms."

And the venerable Lakkhana consented.

Now the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
as he was descending the hill
and passing a certain place
smiled.

Then Lakkhana said to him:

"What is the reason,
what is the cause, friend Moggallāna,
that you smile?"

"It is not the right time for that question, friend Lakkhana.

Ask me the question in the Exalted One's presence."

Then when the twain had made their alms-round in Rājagaha,
had dined
and come away from their meal,
they went into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him
and took their seat beside him.

So seated
the venerable Lakkhana said to Mahā-Moggallāna:-

"As the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna was descending Vulture's Peak hill just now,
came to a certain place
he smiled:-

What was the reason,
what was the cause for the smile?"

"Just now, friend,
as I was descending Vulture's Peak hill,
I saw a novice going through the air,
his under-robe was on fire, burning and blazing,
his bowl was on fire, burning and blazing,
his girdle was on fire, burning and blazing,
his body was on fire, burning and blazing,
and he was uttering cries of distress.

To me, friend, came this thought:-

'0 but this is wonderful!

0 but this is marvellous
that a person will come to have such a shape,
that the individuality acquired
will come to have such a shape!'"

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren: -

"Disciples, brethren, live the life of vision,
yea, of insight,
since a disciple will know,
or will see,
or will testify
to a thing like this.

I also, brethren, had seen that novice before now,
yet I did not reveal it.

I might have revealed it,
and others would not have believed me.

Had they not believed me,
it would have been to their hurt and their sorrow.

'This almsman, brethren,
was an evil-living novice
when Kassapa Buddha was teaching.

He by the effect of that work
has been punished for many years,
for many hundreds,
nay, hundred thousands of years
in purgatory.

Now by the remaining effect of that work
he has acquired a personality
of that kind."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
19. Lakkhaṇa-Saṇuttaṃ
2. Dutiya Vagga

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

19. Kindred Sayings on Lakkhana's Questions

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 21

Sāmaṇeriyo Suttaṃ

The Woman-Novice

---

[174]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha
in the Bamboo Grove
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now at that time the venerable Lakkhana
and the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna

were staying at Vulture's Peak hill.

And the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
rising at an early hour
and taking bowl and robe
went to see the venerable Lakkhana
and said:

"Let us go, friend Lakkhana,
and enter Rājagaha for alms."

And the venerable Lakkhana consented.

Now the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
as he was descending the hill
and passing a certain place
smiled.

Then Lakkhana said to him:

"What is the reason,
what is the cause, friend Moggallāna,
that you smile?"

"It is not the right time for that question, friend Lakkhana.

Ask me the question in the Exalted One's presence."

Then when the twain had made their alms-round in Rājagaha,
had dined
and come away from their meal,
they went into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him
and took their seat beside him.

So seated
the venerable Lakkhana said to Mahā-Moggallāna:-

"As the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna was descending Vulture's Peak hill just now,
came to a certain place
he smiled:-

What was the reason,
what was the cause for the smile?"

"Just now, friend,
as I was descending Vulture's Peak hill,
I saw a woman-novice going through the air,
her under-robe was on fire, burning and blazing,
her bowl was on fire, burning and blazing,
her girdle was on fire, burning and blazing,
her body was on fire, burning and blazing,
and she was uttering cries of distress.

To me, friend, came this thought:-

'0 but this is wonderful!

0 but this is marvellous
that a person will come to have such a shape,
that the individuality acquired
will come to have such a shape!'"

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren: -

"Disciples, brethren, live the life of vision,
yea, of insight,
since a disciple will know,
or will see,
or will testify
to a thing like this.

I also, brethren, had seen that woman-novice before now,
yet I did not reveal it.

I might have revealed it,
and others would not have believed me.

Had they not believed me,
it would have been to their hurt and their sorrow.

'This almswoman, brethren,
was an evil-living woman-novice
when Kassapa Buddha was teaching.

She by the effect of that work
has been punished for many years,
for many hundreds,
nay, hundred thousands of years
in purgatory.

Now by the remaining effect of that work
she has acquired a personality
of that kind."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
20. Opamma-Saṃutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

20. Kindred Sayings on Parables

Sutta 1

Kūṭa Suttaṃ

The Roof-Peak

---

[175]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthi at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the brethren: —

"Friends, brethren!"

"Yes, friend," responded the brethren.

"Just as in a peaked house,[1] brethren, whatever rafters there are all converge to the roof-peak,
resort equally to the roof-peak,
are fixed together in the roof-peak,
all go to junction there,
even so, whatever wrong states there are all have their root in ignorance,
all may be referred to ignorance,
all are fixed together in ignorance,
all go to junction there.

Wherefore, brethren, ye must thus train yourselves: —

'We will live earnestly'[2]

— even thus."

---

[1] Kūṭāgāra, a hut or building with a peaked-roof or pinnacles, possibly gabled or with an upper storey. Cf. above, p. 71, PTS. Dictionary. For other parables on it see my Index to Similes in the Nikāyas, PDF icon*JPTS,* 1906-7, pp. 58*f*., where this parable has been inadvertently omitted.

[2] All of the Suttas in this chapter except §8 are referred to Sāvatthī.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
20. Opamma-Saṃutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

20. Kindred Sayings on Parables

Sutta 2

Nakha-Sikhā Suttaṃ

Tip of the Nail[1]

---

[175]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthi at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One, lifting up a little sand on the tip of his finger-nail, addressed the brethren:-

"As to this what think ye, brethren?

Which is greater,
this little sand lifted on my finger-nail,
or this great earth?"

[176] "This lord, is greater,
even this great earth.

A trifle is the little sand
lifted by the Exalted One on to his finger-nail.

It cannot come into reckoning,
it cannot come into comparison,
it cannot form a fraction
when compared with the great earth —
this little sand lifted by the Exalted One on to his finger-nail."

"Even so, brethren,
are the beings that are reborn among humans few in number as against the greater number that are reborn elsewhere
and not among humans.[2]

Wherefore, brethren,
thus must ye train yourselves:

'We will live earnestly'
- even thus."

---

[1] Cf. above p.95 [SN 2.13.1]

[2] Somewhat arbitrarily the commentarial tradition judges that the greater alternative includes only rebirth in the four woeful spheres: — purgatory, animals, asuras and petas, deva-rebirth being included under the former alternative.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
20. Opamma-Saṃutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

20. Kindred Sayings on Parables

Sutta 3

Nakhasikhaṃ Suttaṃ

The Clans

---

[176]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthi at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

"Just as whatever clans have many women,
few men,
are easily molested by robbers and pot-thieves,[1]
even so, brethren,
any brother who has not developed
and often practised

liberation of will through love
is easily molested by beings other than human.

Just as whatever clans have few women,
many men,
are hard to molest by robbers and pot-thieves,
even so any brother who has developed
and often practised
liberation of will through love
is hardly molested by beings other than human.

Wherefore, brethren, thus must ye train yourselves:

Liberation of the will through love we will develop,
we will often practise it,
make it a vehicle,
make it a base,
take our stand upon it,
store it up,
thoroughly set it going."

---

[1] Burglars who conceal their lights in jars when house-breaking. Comy.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
20. Opamma-Saṃutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

20. Kindred Sayings on Parables

Sutta 4

Ukkhā-Sata Suttaṃ aka Okkhā Suttaṃ

The Rich Gift

---

[176]

"If anyone, brethren,
were to give a morning gift of a hundred ukkā's,
and the same at noon
and the same at eventide,
[177] or if anyone were to practise a morning heart of love,
a noontide heart of love,
an eventide heart of love,
even if it were as slight
as one pull at the cow's udder,[1]
this practice would be by far the more fruitful of the two.

Wherefore, brethren, thus must ye train yourselves:

'Liberation of the will through love
we will develop,
we will often practise it,
we will make it a vehicle and a base,
take our stand upon it,
store it up,
thoroughly set it going.'"

---

[1] Gadduhana-mattam pi is so described in the Comy. 'Pulling just once the udder-teat of a cow.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
20. Opamma-Saṃutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

20. Kindred Sayings on Parables

Sutta 5

Satti Suttaṃ

The Blade

---

[177]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthi at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There he addressed the brethren: —

"Just as if there were a sharp-bladed spear, brethren, and a man were to come, and say: -

'With my hand,
or with my fist
I will double up[1] this sharp-bladed spear,
I will knock it together,
I will twist it round.'

As to that what think ye, brethren?

Is that man able to do all this
to that sharpbladed spear
with hand or fist?"

"Not so, lord.

Why is that?

Because, lord,
it is no easy mattter to double up,
to knock together,
to twist round
that sharp-bladed spear
with hand or fist,
without the man coming in for distress and injury."

"Even so, brethren,
where liberation of the will through love
has been developed,
practised often,
made a vehicle and a basis,
served for a stand to be taken upon it,
stored up and thoroughly set going,
if a creature other than human fancy that he can overthrow such a mind,
he will come in for distress and injury.

Wherefore, brethren, thus must ye train yourselves:—
Liberation of the will through love we will develop,

we will often practise it,
we will make a vehicle, a basis of it,
take our stand upon it,
store it up,
set it thoroughly going."

---

[1] Pati'enissāmi ... patikotṭṭissāmi ... pativaṭṭessāmi. The Comy. explains these three acts as hitting the blade on the point so as to fold it double, and hitting it on the side of the blade so as to fold it (lengthwise), and curling it round as if it were spun cotton yarn.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
20. Opamma-Saṃutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

20. Kindred Sayings on Parables

Sutta 6

Dhanu-g-Gaha Suttaṃ

The Archer

---

[178]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthi
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the brethren: —

"Suppose, brethren, there were four archers
mighty with the bow,
well trained,
expert,

past masters in their art[1]
standing one at each quarter,
and a man were to come saying:

'I will catch and bring the shafts let fly by these four archers
mighty with the bow,
well trained,
expert,
past masters in their art
standing one at each quarter
or ever they reach the ground.'

As to that what think ye, brethren?

Were this enough for him to be called a swift man
possessed of supreme speed?"

"Even, lord, if he caught and brought the shafts let fly
by only one of the four archers
mighty with the bow,
well trained,
expert,
past masters in their art
standing one at each quarter
or ever they reached the ground, it were enough for him to be called
a swift man
possessed of supreme speed.

What need to speak of four such bowmen?"

"Brethren, as is the speed of that man,
as is the speed of moon and sun,

swifter than he,
as is the speed of those spirits
who run ahead[2] of moon and sun
swifter than he,
swifter than them both,
so swifter than even these is the passing away of the things of this life.[3]

Wherefore, brethren, thus must ye train yourselves:

'We will live earnestly'" — even thus."

---

[1] Cf. above, i, 86. One adjective in the formula is here missing.

[2] Aerial devatā's now preceding, now falling behind when they stay to bathe ... In the Expositor i, 80, the spirits are called Yama's. Comy.

[3] Āyusaṅkhāra, — things of physical life, for the incorporeal things pass away too quick for any reckoning. Comy.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
20. Opamma-Saṃutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

20. Kindred Sayings on Parables

Sutta 7

Āṇi Suttaṃ

The Drum-Peg

---

[178]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthi at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park. There the Exalted One addressed the brethren: —

"Once upon a time, brethren,
the Dasārahas had a kettledrum called Summoner.[1]

As it began to split
the Dasārahas fixed in ever another peg, until the time came that the Summoner's original drumhead
had vanished
and only the framework of pegs remained.

[179] Even so, brethren,
will the brethren become
in the future.

Those Suttantas uttered by the Tathāgata,
deep,
deep in meaning,
not of the world,
dealing with the void,
to these when uttered,
they will not listen,
they will not lend a ready ear,
they will not bring to them
an understanding heart,
they will not deem those doctrines
that which should be learnt by heart,
that which should be mastered.

But those Suttantas
which are made by poets,
which are poetry,
which are a manifold of words,
a manifold of phrases,
alien,
the utterances of disciples,
to these when uttered
they will listen,
they will lend a ready ear,
they will bring an understanding heart,

they will deem these doctrines
that which should be learnt by heart,
which should be mastered.

Thus it is, brethren,
that the Suttantas uttered by the Tathāgata,
deep,
deep in meaning,
not of the world,
dealing with the void,
will disappear.

Wherefore, brethren, ye are thus to train yourselves :-

To these very Suttantas will we listen,
will we give a ready ear,
to these will we bring an understanding heart.

And we will deem these doctrines
that which should be learnt by heart,
and mastered:
- even thus.

---

[1] Ānaka or āṇaka, so explained by the Comy.. 'As if summoning the people, it brought them together.' Summoning by drum is mentioned in Jāt. ii, 70 (No. 186); iv, 171 (No. 483), 256. On the name see Jātaka ii, p. 237 (No. 499) (No. 267), where the allusion looks like a gloss.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
20. Opamma-Saṃutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

20. Kindred Sayings on Parables

Sutta 8

Kaliṇgara Suttaṃ

Straw

---

[179]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying at Vesali in the Great Wood at the Gable Hall.

There he addressed the brethren:-

"Brethren."

"Lord,"[1] they replied.

The Exalted One spake this:-

"Sleeping on couches of straw, brethren,
such now is the way of the Licchavis;
strenuous are they
and zealous in their service.[2]

Against them Ajatasattu,
son of the Vedehi [princess],
king of Magadha,
gets no access,
gets no occasion.

In the coming days, brethren,
the Licchavis will become delicate,
soft and tender
in hands and feet.

On soft couches,
on pillows of down
they will lie till rise of sun.

Against them Ajatasattu
son of the Vedehi [princess],
king of Magadha,
will get access,
will get occasion.[3]

Sleeping on couches of straw, brethren,
- such now is the way of the brethren,
strenuous are they
and ardent in their energy.

To them Māra
the evil one

gets no access.

Against them he gets no occasion.

In the coming days, brethren,
the brethren will become delicate,
soft and tender in hands and feet.

On soft couches,
on pillows of down
they will lie till rise of sun.

To them Māra
the evil one
will gain access.

Against [180] them he will find occasion.

Wherefore, brethren,
thus must ye train yourselves:

'We will use couches of straw,
strenuous and zealous in energy'
- even thus.

---

[1] See p. 1, n.*. [Bhadante.

[2] As very skilful, hardy archers. Comy.

[3] On the struggle between Ajāsattu and the Vajjian confederation, in which the Licchavi republic was the predominant member, cf. Dialogues ii, 78 f.; Buddhist India, pp. 25, 26, 40 f. Mr. B.C. Law, J.A.S.B., xvii (N.S.), 1921, has collected the available materials, early and late, about them.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
20. Opamma-Saṃutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

20. Kindred Sayings on Parables

Sutta 9

Nāga Suttaṃ

The Elephant

---

[180]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthi at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now at that time a certain novice
spent too much time among the clansmen's houses.

And the brethren admonished him not to do so.

He being spoken to said thus:-

"Verily these senior brethren deem it permissible to go about among the clansmen's houses;
why then should not I?"[1]

Then many of the brethren
went into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him and sat down beside him.

So seated they told him of this.

"Once upon a time, brethren,
there was a great lake in a wooded region,
and elephants dwelt by it.

They, plunging into the lake,
plucked up stalks and root-fibres of lotuses,
cleansed them well,
worked them free from mud and swallowed them.

This made in them
for beauty and strength;
there was naught therein
whence they should suffer death or mortal pain.

But following the example of those great elephants
tender baby-elephants[2] plunged into the lake,
plucked up stalks and [181] root-fibres of lotuses,
and swallowed them not cleansed,
and kneaded together all muddy.

This made in them
neither for beauty nor for strength;
there was herein whence
they came to suffer death or mortal pain.

Even so, brethren, with us
when the senior brethren rise at an early hour
and taking bowl and robe
enter village or township for alms,
there they utter the doctrine[3]
the laymen pleased with them do their duty.

They enjoy what they get without greed or longing,
void of offence,
watchful of danger
and discerning their salvation.[4]

Thus these things make in them
for beauty and strength;
there is naught therein
whence they should come to death
or to mortal pain.

But novices, when they,
following the training of the senior brethren,
rise at an early hour,
and taking bowl and robe
enter village or town for alms,
there they utter the doctrine.

The laity pleased with them do their duty.

The novices enjoy what they get greedily and with longing,
committing offence,
heedless of danger
and undiscerning their salvation.

Thus these things do not make in them
for beauty or strength;

for that reason they come to death
or to mortal pain.

Wherefore, brethren,
thus must ye train yourselves: -

'We will enjoy what we get without greed,
or longing,
or offence,
watchful of danger,
discerning our salvation'
even thus."

---

[1] Kim angaṇ = kiṇ kāraṇā. Comy.

[2] Called bhinkacchāpā, (chāpā = young ones), because their usual cry is 'bhing'. Comy.

[3] Jātakas or Suttas, says B., a little 'previously' perhaps.

[4] Or escape (nissaraṇa).

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
20. Opamma-Saṃutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

20. Kindred Sayings on Parables

Sutta 10

Bilāra (Biḷāla) Suttaṃ

The Cat

---

[181]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthi at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now at that time a certain brother
spent too much time among the clansmen's houses.

And the brethren admonished him
not to spend too much time
over such intercourse.

That brother being spoken to by them
did not desist.

Then many of them went and told the Exalted One.

"Once upon a time, brethren,
a cat was standing on the refuse-heap of a house-sewer,[1]
watching for a mouse,
thinking:

'When this mouse will come out of her home,
I shall then [182] and there catch and eat her.'

And that mouse did come out of her home,
and the cat pounced violently on her,
disposed of her,
swallowed her.

But the mouse gnawed his guts,
gnawed his bowels,
thence he came to death
or to mortal pain.

Even so, brethren, with us
when a brother rising betimes
and taking bowl and robe
enters the village or township for alms,
unguarded in deed,
word
and thought,
without calling up self-possession,
without self-restraint,

it happens that there he sees womenfolk thinly clad
or slightly clad.

And seeing them
lust begins to assail his heart.

Whereby he comes to death
or to mortal pain.

For this, brethren,
is death in the discipline of the Ariyan
that a man reject the training and turn away to the low things.

This, brethren,
is mortal pain -
that he incur some dire offence,
an offence, that is,
whence recovery is declared possible.

Wherefore, brethren,
thus must ye train yourselves:

'Only with guarded deed,
word
and thought,
calling up self-possession,
and self-restraint
will we enter village or township for alms'
—even thus."

---

[1] Sandhi-samala-sankaṭīra.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
20. Opamma-Saṃutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

20. Kindred Sayings on Parables

Sutta 11

Paṭhama Singālaka Suttaṃ[1] 1

The Jackal 1

---

[182]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthi at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There he addressed the brethren: —

"Have ye heard the jackal, brethren,
howling in the night,

at dawn?"

"Even so, lord."

"That will be an old jackal, brethren,
afflicted by mange.

Wherever he wishes to go,
to stand,
to sit,
to lie,
there he goes,
he stands,
he sits,
he lies,
and the cold wind blows on him.

Twere well, brethren,
if a certain man among us,
pledged to the Son of the Sakyans,
were to experience even such a reborn life as that.[2]

Wherefore, brethren,
thus must ye train yourselves:

'We will live earnestly'
-even thus."

---

[1] See above, p. 156

[2] 'This was said concerning Devadatta: - "He will not get in his future birth even so much ease of heart as that jackal."' Comy.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
20. Opamma-Saṃutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

20. Kindred Sayings on Parables

Sutta 12

Dutiya Sigālaka Suttaṃ

The Jackal 2

---

[183]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthi at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There he addressed the brethren: —

"Have ye heard the jackal, brethren,
howling in the night,

at dawn?"

"Even so, lord."

"That will be an old jackal, brethren,
afflicted by mange.

Wherever he wishes to go,
to stand,
to sit,
to lie,
there he goes,
he stands,
he sits,
he lies,
and the cold wind blows on him.

It may be, brethren,
that there is in that decrepit old jackal
more thankfulness,
more gratitude
than there is in a certain man among us
pledged to the Son of the Sakyans.

Wherefore, brethren,
thus must ye train yourselves:

'We will be thankful and grateful.

Not even the least thing that is done for us shall be lost'
-even thus."[1]

---

[1] The Comy. has a tale about the jackal's gratitude. Released by a peasant from a snake coiled about it, the snake thereupon attacked the peasant. The jackal brought the peasant his axe in its mouth.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
21. Bhikkhu Saṃyutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

21. Kindred Sayings about Brethren

Sutta 1

Kolita [Moggallāna] Suttaṃ

Kolita[1]

---

[273] [184]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthi at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna addressed the brethren: —

"Friends, brethren!"

"Yes, friend," responded the brethren.

The venerable Mahā-Moggallāna said this: —

"To me, friends, as I was meditating in seclusion, there arose a consideration
of that which we call Ariyan silence.

'Ariyan silence' — what may that be?

And methought:

'When a brother
from the suppression of applying and sustaining his thinking enters into
and abides in Second Jhāna,
a state of inward mental calm,
uplifted,
with no applying or sustaining of thought,
which is born of concentration,
full of zest and ease,
then this is what we call Ariyan silence.'

Now I, friends, entered into and remained in Second Jhāna.

But when I had remained therein,[2] perceptions and work of mind
in applying thought still went on.

Then, friends, the Exalted One came to me
by the power of his will and said:

'Moggallāna, Moggallāna!

Be not careless, brahmin,[3]
as to the Ariyan silence.

Establish thy mind therein.

Lift up thy heart therein.

Plant thy thought[4] therein.'

Thereafter, friends,
I entered into and remained in Second Jhāna.

Verily, friends,
if anyone were to say righty of anyone:

'Furthered by the Master
the disciple attained
to great super-knowledge,'

it is of me that he would say it."[5]

---

[1] The personal name of Great Moggallāna. See Pss. of the Brethren, p.341.

[2] And had emerged therefrom. Comy.

[3] He was of the brahmin class

[4] Mind, heart, thought, all = cittaṃ. These admonitions are, in Chapter XL., repeated for each jhāna.

[5] According to the Comy. the Buddha developed Moggallāna's concentration in this manner for a week, whereby Moggallāna attained all six super-knowledges.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
21. Bhikkhu Saṃyutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

21. Kindred Sayings about Brethren

Sutta 2

Upatissa (Sāriputta) Suttaṃ

Upatisso[1]

---

[274] [185]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Sāvatthi
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the venerable Sāriputta addressed the brethren: —

"Friends, brethren!"

"Yes, friend," responded the brethren.

The venerable Sāriputta said this: —

"To me, friends, as I was meditating in seclusion, there arose this consideration: —

'Is there now anything in the whole world, wherein a changing,
a becoming otherwise
would give rise in me
to grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair?'

And methought:
'No, there is no such thing.'

Then the venerable Ānanda said this to the venerable Sāriputta:

"But the Master, friend Sāriputta —
would not a changing,
a becoming otherwise in him
give rise in you
to grief,
lamentaing,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair?"

"Not even a changing,
a becoming otherwise in him,
friend Ānanda.[2]

Nevertheless I should [feel] thus: —

'O may not the mighty one,
O may not the Master
so gifted,
so wonderful
be taken from us!

Verily if the Exalted One may abide yet a long while withus,
out of love to the world,
it would be for the weal,
the happiness
of many many folk,
the good,
the weal,
the happiness of devas and men!'"

[186] "Surely long time have notions of 'I'
and of 'mine'
and insidious conceits
been rooted out
from the venerable Sāriputta!

On that account
is it that for the venerable Sāriputta
a changing,
a becoming otherwise
even in the Master
would not give rise to grief,
lamenting,
suffering,
sorrow,
despair."

---

[1] Sāriputta's personal name. See Pss. of the Brethren, loc. cit. This and the next four Suttas are all referred to Sāvatthī.

[2] I have ventured to place this sentence in Sāriputta's mouth, changing, in the Feer edition, 'Sāriputta' to Ānanda. It is unlikely S. would have kept silence; moreover, the wish expresed by S. is precisely that which Ā. was later on to utter too late. See Dialogues ii, 111.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
21. Bhikkhu Saṃyutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

21. Kindred Sayings about Brethren

Sutta 3

Ghaṭo or Mahā-Nāga Suttaṃ

The Jar

---

[275] [186]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Savatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

At this time both the venerable ones
Sāriputta and Mahā-Moggallāna were staying at Rājagaha
in the Bamboo Grove
at the Suirrels' Feeding-ground
in the same cell.[1]

Now the venerable Sāriputta
rising at eventide from meditation
went to the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna
and exchanged kind and friendly greetings with him.

Seated by his side
the venerable Sāriputta said thus: —

"Very serene, friend, Moggallāna,
are you looking,
very pure and clear
is your complexion.

Has the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna spent to-day in peace?"[2]

"I spent to-day, friend,
in the exercise of sense,[3]
moreover I had pious converse."

"With whom did the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna hold pious converse?"

"With the Exalted One, friend."

"Far away, friend,
the Exalted One now stays at Savatthī,
at Jeta Grove
in the Anāthapiṇḍika Park.

What then?

Did the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna go by will-power to the Exalted one,
or was it the other way about?"

"I neither went by will-power to the Exalted One, friend, nor did the Exalted One come by will-power to me.

Nevertheless
even as with him,
so also with me
the deva-sight
and the deva-hearing
are made clear."[4]

[187] "What kind of pious converse did the Exalted One hold with the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna?"

"As to that, friend,
I asked the Exalted One:

'We say, lord,
[this one] is of consummate energy,[5]
[that one] is of consummate energy;
in wht way is a man so?"

And the Exalted One said to me this: —

"It is herein, Moggallāna,
that a brother practises consummate energy: —

'Verily let skin and sinews and bones
wilt in my body,
let flesh and blood dry up,
or ever there be halting of energy
till I have won
that which by a man's strength,
by man's energy,

by man's progress
may be won!'[6] —

— thus Moggallāna, does one become of consummate energy.'

It was just thus that I had pious converse with the Exalted One."

"As if a little mound of gravel
were set up alongside of Himālaya,
lord of the hills, friend,
even so are we
when set up alongside of the venerable Mahā-Moggallāna.

Verily may he,
so gifted,
so wonderful
abide here for an aeon
if he so desire!"

"As if a little pinch of salt
were set up alongside of a big jar of salt, friend,
even so are we
when set up alongside of the venerable Sāriputta.

Verily hath the Exalted One praised,
commended,
extolled the venerable Sāriputta in divers ways.

'Even as Sāriputta was supreme
In insight, morals, and self-mastery,
So may the brother who hath won the goal
Rank even with the highest of them all.'"[7]

Thus verily did these two great souls give cheer one to the other in that they spoke well,
in that they talked well.

---

[1] Eka-vihāre.

[2] Santena vihārena.

[3] Oḷārikena vihārena: lit. in a material or gross sense, as compared, presumably, with purely mental exercise. He was exercising clairvoyance and clairaudience, and the objects thereof are 'gross.' Comy.

[4] The thera wondering where the Master was just then, developed the light and saw him, with deva-sight, seated in his 'Fragrant Chamber,' and heard him. Comy.

[5] Āraddha-viriyo.

[6] Cf. above, p.24.

[7] Above, i, 80. The verses are there ascribed to Anāthapiṇḍika, on his revisiting his park, his gift to the Order, as a deva after his passing over.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
21. Bhikkhu Saṃyutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

21. Kindred Sayings about Brethren

Sutta 4

Nava Bhikkhu Suttaṃ

The Novice

---

[277] [187]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Savatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now at that time a certain novice
after he had returned from his almsround
and had dined,
entered his cell
and sat at leisure,
in silence and resigned,

nor did he render service to the brethren
at the time of robe-making.[1]

Then a number of the brethren went and informed the Exalted One of his conduct.

And the Exalted One bade a certain brother:

"Come thou, brother,
bid that brother by my word hither
saying, 'The Master bids thee, friend.'"

"Even so, lord," was the response,
and that brother came,
saluted the Exalted One,
and sat down at one side.

To him so seated the Exalted One said: —

"Is it true what they say that thou, brother,
after almsround and meal
dost sit at leisure,
in silence
and resigned,
nor renderest service
to the brethren
at the time of robe-making?"

"I do my own work, lord."

Then the Exalted One,
reading by his mind
that brother's mind,
bade the brethren: —

"Be ye not vexed, brethren,
with this brother.

He is a brother who can attain at will,[2]
who can attain
without trouble,
without toil
the Four Jhānas,
happy states,
under present conditions,
of highest consciousness.[3]

And that for the sake of which the clansmen rightly leave home
for the homeless —
that uttermost goal of divine living
he has comoe to know thoroughly for himself
and to realize,
has attained it
and therein abides."

The Exalted One spake this.

The Wellfarer so saying, the Master spake this yet further: —

No slacker nor the man of puny strength
May win Nibbāna, freedom from all ill.
And this young brother, yea, this peerless man
Bears the last burden, devil's[4] conqueror.

[1] Cf. above, i, 258.

[2] Nikāma-lābhī.

[3] Abhiceta-sikānaṇ.

[4] Lit.: of Māra and his mount of elephant. Cf. Dhammapada, verse 175.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
21. Bhikkhu Saṃyutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

21. Kindred Sayings about Brethren

Sutta 5

Sujāta Suttaṃ

Sujāta

---

[278] [188]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Savatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Sujāta
came into the presence of the Exalted One.

The Exalted One saw the venerable Sujāta coming,
and seeing him
he addressed the brethren: —

'Truly, brethren, that clansman
in both ways is beautiful; [189] not only in that he is gifted with berfect beauty,
is very handsome, attractive and lovely,
but also in that he has come to know thoroughly for himself
and to realize,
and so attain to
and abide in
that uttermost goal of devine living,
for the sake of which
the clansmen rightly leave home
for the homeless.'

The Exalted One spake this.

The Wellfarer so saying, the Master spake this yet further: —

Fair, I ween, this brother is.
Straight and sincere theheart of him.
Detached, unyoked [from worldly ties],
In grasing not O well is him!
He bears thefinal body now,
Victor o'er Māra and his mount.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
21. Bhikkhu Saṃyutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

21. Kindred Sayings about Brethren

Sutta 6

Bhaddi or Lakuṇṭaka Bhaddiya Suttaṃ

Bhaddiya

---

[279] [189]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Savatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Bhaddiya the Dwarf[1]
came into thepresence of the Exalted One.

And the Exalted One saw him coming,
and seeinghim he addressed the brethren: —

"See ye, brethren,
this brother coming,
ugly,
unsightly,
hunchbacked,
dispised by the brethren?"

"We do, sir."

"Now that brother is highly gifted, brethren,
of a lofty nature.

Not easy matter is it
to win that which he formerly had not won,
even that for the sake of which
clansmen rightly leave the home
for the homeless,
even that uttermost goal of the divine living
which he has attained,
wherein he abides,
having come to know it thoroughly for himself
and to realize it."

The Exalted One spake this.

The Wellfarer so saying, the Master spake this yet further: —

Swans, herons, peacocks, elephants, and eke the dappled deer,
Varied as may their bodies be, all dothe lion fear.
So among men a puny lada, if o nlyhe be wise,
Is truly great, not so the fool though large he be in size.

[1] See Pss. of the Brethren, p. 230. The Comy. here also gives the legends of the karma that made him so unslghtly (as a rāja he mocked old people), and that gave him the lovely voice which finds no mention in this work.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
21. Bhikkhu Saṃyutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

21. Kindred Sayings about Brethren

Sutta 7

Visākha Pañcāli-Putta Suttaṃ

Visākha

---

[280] [190]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying at Vesālī
at the Great Grove in the Gabled Hall.

Now at that time the venerable Visākha of the Pañcālans[1]
was in the meeting-hall
instructing,
inciting,
enlightening,
and inspiring the brethren

with pious discourse,
with urbane speech,
well articulated,
without hoarseness,
expounding the meaning,
relevant,
unworldly.[2]

Then the Exalted One,
when he had risen from meditation at eventide,
went to the meeting-hall
and sat down on the seat prepared.

So seated he addressed the brethren: —

"Who was it, brethren,
that was in the meeting-hall
instructing,
inciting,
enlightening,
and inspiring the brethren
with pious discourse,
in urbane speech,
well articulated,
without hoarseness,
expounding the meaning,
relevant,
unwordly?"

"It was the venerable Visākha of the Pañcālans, lord."

Then the Exalted One addressed Visākha saying: —

"Well done, well done, Visākha!

Well hast thou done
on this wise to address the brethren."

The Exalted One spake this.

The Wellfarer so saying, the Master spake this yet further: —

They know the wise man mixing with the fools
Though naught he say.
They know him when he speaks, teaching [us all]
The Deathless Way.
Let him speak doctrine, make it shine, lift up
The banner of the seers. Bright shining words Have they for banner, yea, they have the Norm.[3]

---

[1] Cf. Pss of the Brethren, p. 152 f.

[2] This formula for a good delivery occurs above, i, 241, with the last two adjectives omitted. B. discusses the terms as if they occurred here for the first time. He had probably forgotten (as also had the translator, but her collaborator had not). The last two terms, literally 'included, independent,' are explained by the Comy. to mean, 'included in the Four Truths-doctrine,' 'not on themes of saṇsāra.'

[3] Cf. Pss. of the Brethren, p. 65, n. 3, and references there. It is not easy to reproduce the word-play on bhāsati to speak, and to shine (bhāsay make shine). Cf. above, i, 23, *n.*1; 67, *n.*1.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
21. Bhikkhu Saṃyutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

21. Kindred Sayings about Brethren

Sutta 8

Nanda Suttaṃ

Nanda

---

[281] [191]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Savatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Nanda,
nephew of the Exalted One's mother, donning robes that had been dressed on both sides,[1]
painting his eyes
and taking a bright, clean bowl,
went into the presence of the Exalted One,

saluted him,
and took his seat beside him.

To him so seated the Exalted One said: —

"Not meet is it for thee, Nanda,
who as a clansman,
left the world infaith,
going from home to the homeless,
to don robes that have been dressed on both sides,
to paint thine eyes
and bear about a bright, spotless bowl.

Meet for thee, Nanda,
is it that thou shouldst be a forest-dweller,
an almsman
and a ragged robeman,
and that thou shouldst dwell unheeding desires of sense."

The Exalted One spake this.

The Wellfarer so saying, the Master spake this yet further: —

Maybe some day shall I see Nanda a forest-votary,
In gear cast out he knows not whence,
His maintenance supplied
By food he knows as cast aside,[2]
Heedless to calls of sense.

Then the venerable Nanda after that became a forest-dweller and an almsman, and a rag-robeman, heedless as to desires of sense.

---

[1] This method, corresponding posssibly to our 'presssing cloth,' is described as rapping with hand or mallet, and again rapping after reversing the cloth. Cf. Dhammapada, Comy. i, 37. On Nanda see Udāna, p. 21, Pss. of the Brethren, p. 46. B. here states that he 'got himself up' to evoke an opinion from his cousin — either 'truly this little brother of mine is beautiful!' or a fault-finding — that he might dress accordingly for the rest of his life.

[2] So the Comy. 'marked off when choice food is selected for the great folk.' Cf. Pss. of the Sisters, p. 144, n.1.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
21. Bhikkhu Saṃyutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

21. Kindred Sayings about Brethren

Sutta 9

Tissa Suttaṃ

Tissa

---

[281] [191]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Savatthī at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Tissa, nephew to the Exalted One's father,[1] went into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him,
[192] and took his seat beside him,
unhappy,

sorrowful,
the tears rolling down.

Then the Exalted One said this: —

"What is it, Tissa,
that you sit there unhappy,
sorrowful,
the tears rolling down?"

"It's because the brethren, lord,
with one accord
have been abusing and teasing me."[2]

"That is because, Tissa,
thou wilt do the talking,
and dost not bear with their talk.

Not meet is it for thee, Tissa,
a clansman who in faith
didst leave the world,
the home for the homeless,
to be the talker
and not suffer the talk of others.

Meet it is for such as thee,
if thou be the talker,
to suffer also that others talk."[3]

The Exalted One spake this.

The Wellfarer so saying, the Master spake this yet further: —

Now why be wrath? Nay, Tissa, be not wrath!
To bear no anger, this is best for thee.
Yea, to suppress anger, conceit and guile —[4]
For this we live the living tht's divine.

---

[1] See Pss. of the Brethren, p. 43; cf. below, iii (text), p. 106.

[2] On this stock Pali phrase see JPTS, 1909-10,s.v. sañjambhari, Dialogues i, 255; A. i, 187. See Sañjambhariṇ karoti*.

[3] The Comy. explains that he appeared in the Order smartly attired, and still gave himself the airs of a young noble, not carrying out the duties of a novice. An original 'Jātaka' is added.

[4] Reading kodha-māna-maccha-vinaya-.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
21. Bhikkhu Saṃyutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

21. Kindred Sayings about Brethren

Sutta 10

Thera-Nāmo or Thera-Namaka Suttaṃ

Senior by Name

---

[282] [192]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying at Rājagaha
in the Bamboo Grove at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

Now at that time a certain brother
by name Senior[1]
was living alone
and was commending such a life.

He entered the village alone for alms,
he returned alone,
alone he sat in private [meditation]
and alone he practised his terrace-walk.

Then a number of brethren went into the presence of the Exalted One and told him of this brother's mode of life.

And the Exalted One spoke to a certain brother saying: —

"Come thou, brother,
tell my word to Brother Senior: —
'The Master, friend Senior, calls for thee.'"

"So be it, lord," responded the brother, and called the venerable Senior.

"So be it, friend," responded the venerable Senior,
and he came into the presence of the Exalted One,
saluted him,
and sat down beside him.

To him so seated
the Exalted One said: —

"Is it true what they say, Senior,
that you are living quite alone
and commending such a life?"

"That is so, lord."

"What sort of life is this that you lead and commend?"

"It is this, lord,
that I enter the village alone for alms,
return alone,

sit alone [to meditate],
and perform the terrace-walk alone."

"That is livig alone, Senior;
I do not say it is not so.

But further,
there is a way of perfecting the solitary life in detail
which I will tell you.

Listen well
and give your mind thoroughly."

"Even so, lord."

"How, Senior,
is the solitary life perfected in detai?

It is when that which is past
is put away;
when that which is future
is given up,
and when, with regard to present self-states
that we have got,
will and passion have been thoroughly mastered.

It is thus, Senior,
that the solitary life is perfected in detail."

The Exalted One spake this.

The Wellfarer so saying, the Master spake this yet further: —

Who overcometh all, who understandeth all,
Whoso is very wise, in all things undefiled,
Who all abandoning, in death of craving free,[2]
That is the man of whom I'd say, 'He lives alone.'

---

[1] Thera

[2] Craving is sometimes called one's 'second' (alter ego or mate). Cf. Pss. of the Brethren, verse 54, 1091; Majjhima i, 171.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
21. Bhikkhu Saṃyutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

21. Kindred Sayings about Brethren

Sutta 11

Mahā Kappina Suttaṃ

Kappina

---

[284] [193]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Savatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Mahā-Kappina[1] came into the presence of the Exalted One.

The Exalted One saw him coming while afar,
and seeing him he called the brethren:—

[194] "Do you see, brethren, that brother coming to us,
pale, thin, with a prominent nose?"

"Even so, lord."

"That brother is highly gifted, brethren,
of wondrous power.
No easy matter is it
to win that which he formerly had not won,
even that for the sake of which clansmen
rightly leave the home for the homeless,
even that uttermost goal of the divine living
which he has attained,
wherein he abides,
having come just here and now
to know it thoroughly for himself
and to realize it."

The Exalted One spake this.

The Wellfarer so saying,
the Master spake this yet further: —

The noble is the best among the folk
Who put their trust in lineage.
But one in wisdom and in virtue clothed
Is best of all 'mong spirits and men.[2]

By day the sun shines and by night the moon.
In armor shines the warrior; ardent, rapt,

The brahmin shines, but through both day and night
Shineth the Buddha's glowing (love for men).[3]

---

[1] See Pss. of the Brethren, p. 254 f. for his story and verses; also p. 366. B. gives the same story here, a somewhat amplified version.

[2] Dialogues iii, 94.

[3] Dhammapada, verse 387; cf. above, i. 22, 67. These are simple ideas in simple Pali. I cannot give the play on words in jhāyi, which means both burning and meditating, save that 'ardent' has an analogous double meaning. 'Glowing love for men' is freely rendered. Tejo also bears a double meaning, like 'ardent.' It means both 'heat' and that efflux of feeling and will for which we have no word as yet, but which Jesus meant by 'virtue,' and we mean by 'vim.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
II. Nidāna Vagga
21. Bhikkhu Saṃyutta

II. The Book Called the Nidāna-Vagga

Containing Kindred sayings on Cause

and Other Subjects

21. Kindred Sayings about Brethren

Sutta 12

Sahāya Suttaṃ

The Comrade

---

[285] [194]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once staying near Savatthī
at the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now two brethren who were comrades,
dwelling together with the venerable Mahā-Kappina,
came into the presence of the Exalted One.

The Exalted One saw them coming yet afar,
and seeing them he called to the brethren: —

"Do you see coming to us, brethren, those two comrade-brethren who are dwelling together with Kappina?"

"Even so, lord."

"Those two, brrethren, are highly gifted,
of wondrous power.

No easy matter is it to win
that which they formerly had not won,
even that for the sake of which
clansmen rightly leave the home
for the homeless,
even that uttermost goal of the divine living
which they have attained,
wherein they abide,
having come just here and now
to know it thoroughly for themselves
and to realize it.'

The Exalted One spake this.

The Wellfarer so saying, the Master spake this yet further: —

Comrades these brethren are for sure.
Long time have they together fared.[1]
The holy Norm fares on in them,
The Norm that Buddhas tell to men,
The Norm that Ariyans tell to men,
By Kappina therein well trained,
They bear their final body now,
For they are devil-conquerors.[2]

HERE ENDS THE BOOK ON CAUSE[3]

---

[1] Sameti = saṇsandati, the word rendered 'flow together,' above, p. 108. The legend is that they had been somehow with each other in five hundred previous lives.

[2] Cf. above, pp. 18, 189

[3] There is a poetically framed envoi added, by scribe or editor, in the three Singhalese MSS. used by Feer: — Long may the river of the Word of the Conqueror, springing from the rock of him of the ten powers, having the ocean of Nibbāna as its goal, [flowing with] the wters of the passing away, bear [us] on!

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
1. Pathama Nakula-Pita Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

1. Nakula-pitar (the First)

Namo tassa Bhagavato arahato Sammā-Sam-Buddhassa

Sutta 1

Nakula-Pitā Suttaṃ

Nakula-Pitar

---

[1] [1]

THUS have I heard:—

The Exalted One was once staying among the Bhaggi, at Crocodile-Haunt[1]
in Bhesakala[2] Grove
in the Deer-Park.

Then the housefather Nakula-pitar came to the Exalted One,
saluted him and sat down at one side.

As he sat there, the housefather Nakula-pitar addressed the Exalted One,
saying:—

"Master, I am a broken-down old man, aged, far-gone in years,[3]
I have reached life's end,
I am sick and always ailing.

Moreover, Master, I am one to whom rarely comes the sight
of the Exalted One
and the worshipful brethren.[4]

Let the Exalted One cheer and comfort me,
so that it be a profit and a blessing unto me
for many a long day."

[2] "True it is, true it is, housefather,
that your body is weak[5] and cumbered.[6]

For one carrying this body about, housefather,
to claim but a moment's health
would be sheer foolishness.

Wherefore, housefather,
thus you should train yourself:—

"Though my body is sick,
my mind shall not be sick."

Thus, housefather, must you train yourself."

Then Nakula-pitar, the housefather, welcomed and gladly heard the words of the Exalted One,

and rising from his seat
he saluted the Exalted One by the right,
and departed.

§

And he came to the venerable Sāriputta,
saluted him and sat down at one side.

As he sat there,
the venerable Sāriputta said to the housefather Nakula-pitar:—

"Calmed are your senses, housefather:
clear and pure is your complexion.[7]

Surely to-day you have had pious converse face-to-face with the Exalted One?"

"How could it be otherwise, Master?

I have just now been sprinkled with the nectar[8]
of pious converse by the Exalted One."

"And in what way, housefather,
were you sprinkled with the nectar
of pious converse by the Exalted One?"

"Well, Master, I went to the Exalted One,
saluted him, and sat down at one side.

As I sat thus, Master,
I said to the Exalted One:—

'Master, I am a broken-down old man,
aged, far gone in years,
I have reached my life's end,
I am sick and always ailing.

Moreover, Master, I am one to whom rarely comes the sight of the Exalted One
and the worshipful brethren.

Let the Exalted One cheer and comfort me,
so that it be a profit and a blessing unto me
for many a long day.'

'True it is, true it is, housefather,
that your body is weak and cumbered.

For one carrying this body about, housefather,
to claim but a moment's health
were sheer foolishness.

[3] Wherefore, housefather, thus you should train yourself:—

"Though my body is sick,
my mind shall not be sick."

Thus, housefather, must you train yourself.'"

"But did not it occur to you, housefather,
to question the Exalted One further?

Thus:

'Pray, how far, Master,
is body sick and mind sick?

And how far is body sick and mind not sick?'"

"I would travel far indeed, Master,
to learn from the lips of the venerable Sāriputta
the meaning of this saying.

Well for me if the venerable Sāriputta should think fit to expound to me
the meaning of this saying."

"Then listen, housefather;
apply your mind
and give heed to what I shall tell you."

"Even so, Master," said housefather Nakula-pitar,
and listened to the venerable Sāriputta.

The venerable Sāriputta thus spake:—

§

"And how is body sick, housefather,
and mind sick too?

Herein,[9] housefather, the untaught many-folk,
who discern not those who are Ariyans,[10]
who are unskilled in the Ariyan doctrine,
who are untrained in the Ariyan doctrine,
who discern not those who are worthy ones,
who are unskilled in the worthy doctrine,
untrained in the worthy doctrine
— these regard body as the self,[11]
they regard the self as having body,
body as being in the self,
the self as being in the body.

'I am the body,' say they,
'body is mine,'
and are possessed by this idea;
and so, possessed by this idea,
when body alters and changes,
owing to the unstable and changeful nature of body,
then sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation, and despair arise in them.

■

They regard feeling as the self,
they regard the self as having feeling,
feeling as being the self,
the self as being in feeling.

'I am feeling;' they say,
'feeling is mine,'
and are possessed by this idea;
and so possessed by this idea,
when feeling alters and changes
owing to the unstable and changeful [4] nature of feeling,
then sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation, and despair arise in them.

■

They regard perception as the self,
they regard the self as having perception,
perception as being in the self,
the self as being in perception.

'I am perception,' they say,
'perception is mine,'
and are possessed by this idea;
and so possessed by this idea,
when perception alters and changes

owing to the unstable and changeful nature of perception,
then sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation, and despair arise in them.

■

They regard the activities as the self,
they regard the self as having activities,
activities as being in the self,
the self as being in the activities.

'I am the activities,' they say,
'the activities are mine,'
and are possessed by this idea;
and so possessed by this idea,
when perception alters and changes
owing to the unstable and changeful nature of perception,
then sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation, and despair arise in them.

■

They regard consciousness as the self,
they regard the self as having consciousness,
consciousness as being in the self,
the self as being in consciousness.

'I am consciousness,' they say:
'consciousness is mine,'
and are possessed by this idea;
and so possessed by this idea,
when consciousness alters and changes
owing to the unstable and changeful nature of consciousness,
then sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation, and despair arise in them.

That, housefather, is how body is sick
and mind is sick too.

§

And how is body sick,
but mind not sick?

[12] Herein, housefather, the well-taught Ariyan disciple,
who discerns those that are Ariyans,
who is skilled in the Ariyan doctrine,
well trained in the Ariyan doctrine,
skilled in the worthy doctrine,
well trained in the worthy doctrine,
regards not body as the self,
regards not the self as having body,
nor body as being in the self,
nor self as being in body.

He says not 'I am body,'
he says not 'body is mine,'
nor is possessed by this idea.

As he is not so possessed,
when body alters and changes
owing to the unstable [5] and changeful nature of body,
then sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation, and despair
do not arise in him.

■

He regards not feeling as the self,
regards not the self as having feeling,
nor feeling as being in the self,
nor the self as being in feeling.

He says not 'I am feeling,
feeling is mine,'
nor is he possessed by this idea.

As he is not so possessed,
when feeling alters and changes
owing to the unstable and changeful nature of feeling,
then sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation, and despair
arise not in him.

■

He regards not perception as the self,
regards not the self as having perception,
nor perception as being in the self,
nor the self as being in perception.

He says not 'I am perception,
perception is mine,'
nor is he possessed by this idea.

As he is not so possessed,
when perception alters and changes
owing to the unstable and changeful nature of perception,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation, and despair
do not arise in him.

■

He regards not the activities as the self,
regards not the self as having activities,
nor the activities as being in the self,
nor the self as being in the activities.

He says not 'I am the activities,
the activities are mine,'
nor is he possessed by this idea.

As he is not so possessed,
when the activities alter and change
owing to the unstable and changeful nature of the activities,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair
do not arise in him.

■

He regards not consciousness as the self,
regards not the self as having consciousness,
nor consciousness as being in the self,
nor the self as being in consciousness.

He says not 'I am consciousness,
consciousness is mine,'
nor is he possessed by this idea.

As he is not so possessed,
when consciousness alters and changes
owing to the unstable and changeful nature of consciousness,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair
do not arise in him.

Thus, housefather, body is sick,
but mind is not sick."

Thus spake the venerable Sāriputta,
and the housefather Nakula-pitar was pleased
and welcomed what was said by the venerable Siiriputta.

---

[1] A town, so called, says Comy., because when it was a-building 'a crocodile made a noise.'

[2] Named after a yakkhinī. Cf. K.S. i, 262, n., on these beings; Pali Dict., s.v.

[3]addha-gato. Comy. 'Come to the third and last stage of life.'

[4] 'Owing to his sickness.' Comy.

[5] Aṇḍabhūto (egg-born), for text addhabhūto. Comy. explains 'as weak as if just hatched from the egg.'

[6] Pari(y)onaddho. Cf. M. i,25. Pap. 141, equivalent to sañchanna, 'enveloped with overgrowth' like a tree in a jungle, or as C., 'covered with a fine film.'

[7] Cf. K.S. i, 186.

[8]Amatena abhisitto.

[9] See Warren, Buddhism in Translations, p. 143. This view includes the annihilationist (uccheda) and eternalist (sassata) heresies. Comy.

[10] Bud. Psy. Ethics, § 1003, n. on Ariyānaṇ adassāvī.

[11] Attā, Vedic āitmān.

[12] See Warren, p. 422.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
1. Pathama Nakula-Pita Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

1. Nakulapitar (the First)

Sutta 2

Devadaha Suttaṃ

Devadaha[1]

---

[5] [6]

THUS have I heard:—

Once the Exalted One was staying among the Sakkas[2] at Devadaha,[3] a township of the Sakkas.

Now on that occasion
a number of westward-faring brethren
came to the Exalted One,
saluted him and sat down at one side.

As they sat there
they addressed the Exalted One thus:

"Master, we wish to go to the western province,
and in the western province
to take up residence."[4]

"And have ye got leave, brethren,
from the venerable Sāriputta?"

"No, Master, we have not got leave
from the venerable Sāriputta."[5]

"Then, brethren, do ye get leave
from the venerable Sāriputta.

A wise man is Sāriputta.

He is the patron[6] of those brethren who live the righteous life along with him."

"Even so, Master," replied those brethren to the Exalted One.'

Now on that occasion, the venerable Sāriputta was seated
not far from the Exalted One,
under a cassia tree.[7]

Then those brethren, having welcomed and approved the [7] words of the Exalted One, saluted him and departed by the right and came to the venerable Sāriputta.

Thereupon they greeted him with friendly words, and,
exchanging the compliments of courtesy,
sat down on one side.

So seated those brethren thus addressed the venerable Sāriputta:

"Friend Sāriputta,
we desire to go to the western province
and in the western province
to take up residence.

The Master has permitted us."

"Friends, there are those who will be questioners[8] of a brother
who roams the various provinces
— Wise men of the nobles,[9]
of the brahmins,[10]
among householders[11]
and wanderers[12]
— there are wise men, friends,
of an inquiring mind (who will ask):

'What does the Teacher of your reverences dec1are,
what does he announce?'

Now it may be, friends,
that your doctrines are well learned,
well grasped,
well thought over
and well understood:
so that, in answering,
you might be able to repeat the views of the Exalted One and not misrepresent the Exalted One
by uttering an untruth,
but rightly state your doctrine
in agreement with his doctrine, so that one who is of his way of thinking[13]
may not give grounds for reproach in stating it."[14]

"We would come from far, friend,
to hear from the lips of the venerable Sāriputta
the meaning of this saying.

Well for us
if it would please the venerable Sāriputta
to state its meaning."

"Very well, friends.
Do ye listen carefully.
Give heed and I will speak."

"Even so, friend,"
replied those brethren to the venerable Sāriputta.

[8] Thus spake the venerable Sāriputta:

"Friends, there are those who will ask a question of a brother
who roams the various provinces
— Wise men of the nobles,
of the brahmins,
among householders
and wanderers
— there are wise men, friends,
of an inquiring mind (who will ask):

'What does the teacher of your reverences declare,
what does he announce?'

Thus asked, friends,
thus should ye reply:

'Friends, our teacher is one who tells
of the restraining of desire and lust.'

Upon this reply, friends,
there might be those
who would put a further question
— Wise men of the nobles,
of the brahmins,
among householders
and wanderers
— there are wise men, friends,
of an inquiring mind (who will ask):

'But in what way does your reverences' teacher tell
of the restraining of desire and lust?'

Thus questioned, friends,
thus should ye reply:

'In body surely, friends,
our teacher tells
of the restraining of desire and lust;
in feeling,
in perception,
in the activities,
in consciousness
does our teacher tell
of the restraining of desire and lust.'

Upon this reply, friends,
there might be those
who would put a further question
— Wise men of the nobles,
of the brahmins,
among householders
and wanderers
— there are wise men, friends,
of an inquiring mind (who might ask):

'But seeing what danger therein, friends,
does your reverences' teacher tell
of the restraining of desire and lust in the body,
likewise in feeling,
perception,
the activities
and consciousness?'

Thus questioned, friends,
thus should ye make reply:

'In body, friends,
he who is not rid of desire,
who is not rid of lust,
who is not rid of affection,
nor yet of thirst and fever and craving,
— owing to the unstable and changeful nature of body,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair
arise in him.

In feeling,
he who is not rid of desire,
who is not rid of lust,
who is not rid of affection,
nor yet of thirst and fever and craving,
— owing to the unstable and changeful nature of feeling,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair
arise in him.

In perception,
he who is not rid of desire,
who is not rid of lust,
who is not rid of affection,
nor yet of thirst and fever and craving,

— owing to the unstable and changeful nature of perception,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair
arise in him.

In the activities,
he who is not rid of desire,
who is not rid of lust,
who is not rid of affection,
nor yet of thirst and fever and craving,
— owing to the unstable and changeful nature of the activities,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair
arise in him.

In consciousness, he who is not rid of desire,
who is not rid of lust,
who is not rid of affection,
nor yet of thirst and fever and craving,
— owing to the1 unstable and changeful nature of consciousness,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair
[9] arise in him.

That, friends, is the danger,
seeing which in body,
our teacher tells
of the restraining of desire and lust in body;
so also in feeling,
perception,
the activities
that, friends, is the danger,
seeing which in consciousness
our teacher tells
of the restraining of desire and lust in consciousness.'

Upon this reply, friends,
there might be those
who would put a further question
— Wise men of the nobles,
of the brahmins,
among householders
and wanderers
— there are wise men, friends,
of an inquiring mind (who might ask):

'But seeing what profit therein
does your reverences' teacher tell
of the restraining of desire and lust in the body,
in feeling,
in perception,
in the activities,
likewise in consciousness?'

Thus questioned, friends,
thus should ye make reply:

'In body, friends,
he who is rid of desire,
who is rid of lust,
who is rid of affection,
of thirst and fever and craving,
owing to the unstable and changeful nature of body,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair
do not arise in him;
so also with feeling,
perception,
the activities
and consciousness.

This, friends, is the profit, seeing which our teacher tells
of the restraining of desire and lust in body,
in feeling,
in perception,
in the activities
and in consciousness.

And, friends,
that in fostering evil states
and dwelling therein,
in this very life
he would live pleasantly, unharassed and free
from life's fret and fever,
and, when body dissolves, after death
he may look for the abode of bliss
— this is not the putting away of evil states
that the Exalted One would approve.

But, friends, inasmuch as having fostered evil states
and dwelling therein,
in this very life
one would live painfully,
harassed, unfreed
from life's fret and fever,
and, when body dissolves, after death
one may look for the woeful state
— therefore does the Exalted One approve
of the putting away of evil states.

And, friends,
that in fostering righteous states
and dwelling therein,
in this very life

one would live painfully,
harassed, unfreed
from life's fret and fever,
and, when body dissolves, after death
one may look for the woeful state
— this is not the way of fostering righteous states
that the Exalted One would approve.

[10] But, friends,
inasmuch as having fostered righteous[15] states
and dwelling therein,
in this very life
one would live pleasantly, unharassed, free
from life's fret and fever,
and, when body dissolves, after death
one may look for the abode of bliss,
— therefore does the Exalted One approve
of the accomplishing of righteous states.'"

Thus spake the venerable Sāriputta,
and those brethren were delighted
and welcomed the words of the venerable Siriputta.

---

[1] Cf. S. iv, 124.

[2] Cf. K.S. i, 36, n. 'The Sakkas or Sakyas, a noble clan of the highlands or Himālayan foothills of Kosala, the Buddha's own clan.' Infra text, p. 91.[?]

[3] Devadaha, see Jāt. 52.[?] The native place of the Buddha's mother, journeying to which she gave birth to her son at Lumbinī Grove. Comy. says 'Royal Pool,' so called because kings are called devas, or because the pool was of natural formation and so divine (not man-made).

[4] C., 'for the rainy season.'

[5] His death is described at S. v, 161, and this epithet of 'patron of co-religionists' is there applied to him, and he is called 'The radiance, the treasure, the patron of the Norm.' Here he is held up to the brethren as a pattern of propriety in the etiquette of the Order. Comy. says he used to visit the sick ward and wait on the brethren there, and was a great stickler for the neatness of the Residence, 'lest heretics' should cast a slur on the followers of the Master. Cf. Pss. of the Brethren, p. 46.

[6] anuggāhako, 'uplifter, companion.'

[7] elagalā-gumba. C. 'said to be a tree that grows by steady- flowing water.'

[8] Pucchitāro. Cf. Sn. 140 for a similar case.

[9] Comy. gives as example 'Bimbisāra the Kosalan ruler.'

[10] Comy., 'Like Cankin and Tārukkha, etc.' These names occur among those of other learned brahmins at Sn. 115.

[11] Comy., 'Like Citta and Sudatta (Anāthapiṇḍika),' chief supporters of the Buddha. See the list at A, i, 24-6.

[12] Comy., 'Like Sabhiya, after whom a Sutta is named.' Cf. Sn. 90-102 and S. ii, 153; S. iv, 401.

[13] Text, vādānuvādo. Comy. reads vadānupāto, and explains as 'following the teacher's path.'

[14] Cf. K.S. ii, 28 (S. ii, 33) for a similar passage.

[15] Text wrongly reads akusale here.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
1. Pathama Nakula-Pita Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

1. Nakulapitar (the First)

Sutta 3

Pathama Hāliddikāni Suttaṃ

Hāliddikāni

---

[9] [10]

THUS have I heard:—

Once the venerable Kaccāna[1] the Great was dwelling among the folk of Avanti at Ospreys' Haunt
on a sheer mountain crag.[2]

Then the housefather Hāliddikāni came to the venerable Kaccāna the Great and saluting him sat down at one side.

So seated the housefather Hāliddikāni thus addressed the venerable Kaccāna the Great:

"Master, it was said by the Exalted One in the eighth chapter in the Questions of Māgandiya —[3]

'Home he abandons: homeless wandering
The sage with village-folk not making ties.
Empty of lusts, showing no preference,[4]
With no man wageth wordy warfare more.'

Pray, Master, how should one regard the full meaning of this concisely spoken saying
of the Exalted One?"

"The material element, housefather,
is the home of consciousness.[5]

Now consciousness,
being lust-tied to the material [11] element,
is called 'home-haunter.'

Then again, housefather, the feeling-element
is the home of consciousness.

Thus being lust-tied to the feeling-element,
consciousness is called 'home-haunter.'

Now the perception-element, housefather,
is the home of consciousness.

Thus being lust-tied to the perception-element,
consciousness is called 'home-haunter.'

Now the activities-element, housefather,
is the home of consciousness.

Thus being lust-tied to the activities element,
consciousness is called 'home-haunter.'[6]

That, housefather,
is the meaning of the word
'home-haunter.'

And how, housefather,
is one a 'home-abandoner'?

Now as to the material element, housefather,
that desire, that lust, that lure,
that craving,
those system-graspings,
that mental standpoint,
that dogmatic bias
which is inherent therein[7]
— all these for a Tathāgata are struck off,
cut down at the root,
made like a palm-tree stump,
made things that have ceased to be,
so that they cannot grow up again in the future.[8]

So it is also, housefather,
with the feeling-element,
the perception-element,
the activities-element,
the consciousness-element
— that desire, that lust, that lure,
cannot grow up again in the future.

Therefore, housefather,
a Tathāgata is called 'home-abandoner.'

That is the meaning of the word.

And how is one an 'adherent'?[9]

One who is in bondage to the impressions[10] of things seen, housefather,
is called 'adherent.'

Likewise with regard to sounds,
smells,
savours,
tangibles
and mental objects
— he who is in bondage to these impressions
is called 'adherent.'

And how is one 'non-adherent,' housefather?

Such bondage to impressions of things seen is,
for a Tathāgata,
struck off,
cut down at the root,
made like a palm-tree [12] stump,
made things that have ceased to be,
so that they cannot grow up again in the future.

Therefore, housefather, a Tathāgata is called 'non-adherent.'

So also with regard to sounds,
smells,
savours,
tangibles
and mental objects
— such bondage is not found in a Tathāgata:
therefore is he called 'non-adherent.'

That, housefather, is the meaning of the word.

And how is one 'a former of ties in the village'?[11]

Herein, housefather,
a certain one lives intimate with householders.

He shares their joys and sorrows;
among the happy he is happy,
among the unhappy he is unhappy.

When affairs of business arise,
he involves himself in these.

That, housefather, is how one is 'a former of ties in the village.'

And how is one 'no former of ties in the village'?

Herein, housefather, a brother[12] dwells not associating with householders:
he shares not their joys and sorrows,
is not happy amid the happy,
unhappy amid the unhappy.

When affairs of business arise,
he does not involve himself in them.

Thus, housefather, one forms no ties in the village.

And how is one 'not empty'?[13]

Herein, housefather, a certain one
has not abandoned lust,
has not abandoned desire,
nor affection,
nor thirst,
nor fever and craving.

Thus, housefather, he is 'not empty.'

And how is one 'empty'?

Herein, housefather, a certain one
has abandoned lust,
has abandoned desire,
likewise affection
and thirst,
fever and craving.

Thus, housefather, is one 'empty.'

And how does one 'show no preference'?[14]

Herein, housefather, one thinks thus:

'May I have such and such a body in future time:
may I feel thus and thus:
may I perceive thus and thus:
may my activities be such and such:
may my consciousness be such and such in future time.'

Thus, housefather, does one show preference.

[13] And how does one 'show no preference'?

Herein, housefather, one does not think thus:

'May I have such and such a body in future time:
may I feel,
may I perceive thus and thus:
may my activities be such and such:
may my consciousness be such and such in future time.'

Thus, housefather, does one show no preference.

And how is one a 'wager of wordy warfare with people'?

Herein, housefather, a certain one makes talk like this:

'You know not about this norm-discipline.[15]

I do know about this norm-discipline.

How could you know about it?

You have fallen on wrong views.[16]

I have come by right views.

You speak last what should come first,
and first what should come last.

I am speaking to the point:
you are not.[17]

What you have thought out so long is quite upset.[18]

Your view is confuted.

Go, explain yourself.

You are shown up.

Clear yourself if you can!"

That, housefather, is how one is a 'wager of wordy warfare with people.'

And how is one
'no wager of wordy warfare with people'?

Herein, housefather, a brother makes not talk like this:

'You know not about this norm-discipline.

I do know about this norm-discipline.

How could you know about it?

You have fallen on wrong views.

I have come by right views.

You speak last what should come first,
and first what should come last.

I am speaking to the point:
you are not.

What you have thought out so long is quite upset.

Your view is confuted.

Go, explain yourself.

You are shown up.

Clear yourself if you can!'

That is how one is 'no wager of wordy warfare with people.'

And this, housefather, is the meaning of what was said by the Exalted One in the eighth chapter of Magandiya's Questions, to wit:

'Home he abandons: homeless wandering
The sage with village-folk not making ties.
Empty of lusts, showing no preference,
With no man wageth wordy warfare more.'

Thus, housefather, should be understood in full what was concisely stated by the Exalted One.'

---

[1] Pronounce Kach-chāna.

[2] Cf. S. iv, 115, 288, and Udāna vi, 1, where Comy. so translates, reading papāte pabbate. Here Comy. reads papāte pavatte for text pavatte pabbate.

[3] The name of a section of Sutta Nipāta, where (v, 844) the quotation occurs. See Comy. on it (Param. Jot. ii, 547), and M. ii, 510. [?]

[4]Apurekkarāno (text wrongly apurakkharāno). Comy. at Sn. says, 'not giving rise to any future personality.' The word means 'showing no preference.'

[5] Cf. Dhp. 34; Thag. 36.

[6] Comy. asks, 'Why does he omit the fifth factor, consciousness-element? and says sammoha-vighāt'atthaṇ, 'to obviate any confusion.'

[7] Cf. S. ii, 17; K.S. ii, 13.

[8] S. ii, 88; K.S. 44.

[9] Niketa-sārī. Niketa, connected with ketu, 'sign or banner,' thus , follower of a token,' an adherent.

[10] Nimitta.

[11] Cf. S. i, 63; ii, 202, for the duties of the bhikkhu.

[12] The 'freeman' is here regarded as the bhikkhu or mendicant, for he alone is not bound by such ties.

[13] Ritto.

[14] Comy., vattaṇ purato kurumāno, purekkharāno, see above, 'showing' preference for such and such a future state.' Comy. to Sn. 844.

[15] Dhamma-vinaya, the original name for the Buddha's method. See the Introduction to Oldenberg's Vinaya Piṭaka.

[16] Dial. i, 14 (D. i, 8); D. iii, 117. S. i, 160; iv, 323; v, 419, etc.

[17] Sahitarṇ. Comy., 'coherent,' siliṭṭhaṇ. Sahitaṇ me, 'the combine is mine.'

[18] Comy., adhicinnaṇ te viparāvattarṇ. S. v, 419 reads āciṇṇaṇ 'your system or performance.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
1. Pathama Nakula-Pita Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

1. Nakulapitar (the First)

Sutta 4

Dutiya Hāliddikāni Suttaṃ

Hāliddikāni (2)

---

[12] [14]

THUS have I heard:—

Once the venerable Kaccāna the Great was staying among the folk of Avanti at Ospreys' Haunt
on a sheer mountain crag.

Then the housefather, Hāliddikāni came to the venerable Kaccāna the Great.

As he sat beside him,
the housefather Hāliddikāni said to the venerable Kaccāna the Great:

"Thus was it said, Master, by the Exalted One,
in the Questions of Sakka:[1]

'Those recluses and brahmins
who are freed by the utter destruction of craving,
they only are fully proficient,
they only have fully reached the infinite safety,
they only fully live the righteous life,
have fully reached the goal
— best of devas and men are they.'[2]

Pray, Master, how should one regard the full meaning of this concise saying
of the Exalted One?"

"As to the material element, housefather,
that desire,
that lust,
that lure,
that craving,
those system-graspings,
that mental standpoint,
that dogmatic bias
which is inherent therein
— it is by the destruction,
by the not lusting for,
by the cessation,
the giving up,
the utter surrender of those things
that the heart is called 'fully freed.'

"As to the feeling-element, housefather,
that desire,

that lust,
that lure,
that craving,
those system-graspings,
that mental standpoint,
that dogmatic bias
which is inherent therein
— it is by the destruction,
by the not lusting for,
by the cessation,
the giving up,
the utter surrender of those things
that the heart is called 'fully freed.'

"As to the perception-element, housefather,
that desire,
that lust,
that lure,
that craving,
those system-graspings,
that mental standpoint,
that dogmatic bias
which is inherent therein
— it is by the destruction,
by the not lusting for,
by the cessation,
the giving up,
the utter surrender of those things
that the heart is called 'fully freed.'

"As to the activities-element, housefather,
that desire,
that lust,
that lure,
that craving,
those system-graspings,

that mental standpoint,
that dogmatic bias
which is inherent therein
— it is by the destruction,
by the not lusting for,
by the cessation,
the giving up,
the utter surrender of those things
that the heart is called 'fully freed.'

"As to the consciousness-element, housefather,
that desire,
that lust,
that lure,
that craving,
those system-graspings,
that mental standpoint,
that dogmatic bias
which is inherent therein
— it is by the destruction,
by the not lusting for,
by the cessation,
the giving up,
the utter surrender of those things
that the heart is called 'fully freed.'

Thus, housefather, what was said by the Exalted One in the Questions of Sakka, to wit:

'Those recluses and brahmins
who are freed by the utter destruction of craving,
they only are fully proficient,
they only have fully reached the infinite safety,
fully practise the righteous life,
have fully reached the goal
— best of devas and men are they'

— that is how one should regard the full meaning of this concise saying of the Exalted One.'

---

[1] Dialog. ii, 316 (D. ii. 282); cf. A. v, 326. For these 'riddles of Sakka.' see Buddhist India (T. W. Rhys Davids), p. 180.

[2] This last phrase occurs in A. but not in D.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
1. Pathama Nakula-Pita Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

1. Nakulapitar (the First)

Sutta 5

Samādhi Suttaṃ

Concentration

---

[13] [15]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

Then thus spake the Exalted One:

"Concentration, brethren, practise[1] concentration.

A brother who is concentrated, brethren, knows a thing as it really is.

And what does he know as it really is?

The arising of body
and the passing away thereof;
the arising of feeling
and the passing away thereof;
the arising of perception
and the passing away thereof;
the arising of activities
and the passing away thereof;
the arising of consciousness
and the passing away thereof.

§

And what, brethren,
is the arising of body
what is the arising of feeling
what is the arising of perception
what is the aising of the activities
what is the arising of consciousness?

Herein, brethren, one is enamoured,
one welcomes;[2]
having clung one persists.

To what?

He is enamoured of body;
he welcomes body,

clings to body;
so clinging there comes a lure upon him.

That lure which is in body is grasping.

Conditioned by that grasping is becoming.

Conditioned by becoming is birth.

Conditioned by birth
old age and decay,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair
together come into being.

Thus is the arising of this whole mass of Ill.

■

And what, brethren,
is the arising of feeling?

Herein, brethren, one is enamoured,
one welcomes;
having clung one persists.

To what?

He is enamoured of feeling;
he welcomes feeling,
clings to feeling;
so clinging there comes a lure upon him.

That lure which is in feeling is grasping.

Conditioned by that grasping is becoming.

Conditioned by becoming is birth.

Conditioned by birth
old age and decay,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair
together come into being.

Thus is the arising of this whole mass of Ill.[3]

■

And what, brethren,
is the arising of perception?

Herein, brethren, one is enamoured,
one welcomes;
having clung one persists.

To what?

He is enamoured of perception;
he welcomes perception,
clings to perception;
so clinging there comes a lure upon him.

That lure which is in perception is grasping.

Conditioned by that grasping is becoming.

Conditioned by becoming is birth.

Conditioned by birth
old age and decay,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair
together come into being.

Thus is the arising of this whole mass of Ill.

■

And what, brethren,
is the arising of the activities?

Herein, brethren, one is enamoured,
one welcomes;
having clung one persists.

To what?

He is enamoured of the activities;
he welcomes the activities,
clings to the activities;
so clinging there comes a lure upon him.

That lure which is in the activities is grasping.

Conditioned by that grasping is becoming.

Conditioned by becoming is birth.

Conditioned by birth
old age and decay,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair
together come into being.

Thus is the arising of this whole mass of Ill.

■

And what, brethren,
is the arising of of consciousness?

Herein, brethren, one is enamoured,
one welcomes;
having clung one persists.

To what?

He is enamoured of consciousness;
he welcomes consciousness,
clings to consciousness;
so clinging there comes a lure upon him.

That lure which is in consciousness is grasping.

Conditioned by that grasping is becoming.

Conditioned by becoming is birth.

Conditioned by birth
old age and decay,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair
together come into being.

Thus is the arising of this whole mass of Ill.

Such, brethren,
is the arising of body
such is the arising of feeling
such is the arising of perception
such is the aising of the activities
such is the arising of consciousness.

§

And what, brethren,
is the passing away of body
what is the passing away of feeling

what is the passing away of perception
what is the passing away of the activities
what is the passing away of consciousness?

■

[16] In this case, brethren, he is not enamoured,
he does not welcome,
not having clung does not persist.

With respect to what?

He is not enamoured of body;
he does not welcome body,
does not cling to body
not having clung he does not persist
with respect to body.

In him, not being enamoured of body,
not welcoming it,
not having clung,
not persisting with respect to body,
there arises not the lure which is in body.

The passing away of that lure
is the passing away of grasping.

The passing away of grasping
is the passing away of becoming.

The passing away of becoming
is the passing away of birth.

The passing away of birth
is the passing away of old age and decay,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair.

Thus is the passing away of this whole mass of Ill.

■

And what, brethren, is the passing away of feeling?

In this case, brethren, he is not enamoured,
he does not welcome,
not having clung does not persist.

With respect to what?

He is not enamoured of feeling;
he does not welcome feeling,
does not cling to feeling
not having clung he does not persist
with respect to feeling.

In him, not being enamoured of feeling,
not welcoming it,
not having clung,
not persisting with respect to feeling,
there arises not the lure which is in feeling.

The passing away of that lure
is the passing away of grasping.

The passing away of grasping
is the passing away of becoming.

The passing away of becoming
is the passing away of birth.

The passing away of birth
is the passing away of old age and decay,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair.

Thus is the passing away of this whole mass of Ill.

■

And what, brethren, is the passing away of perception?

In this case, brethren, he is not enamoured,
he does not welcome,
not having clung does not persist.

With respect to what?

He is not enamoured of perception;
he does not welcome perception,
does not cling to perception
not having clung he does not persist
with respect to perception.

In him, not being enamoured of perception,
not welcoming it,
not having clung,
not persisting with respect to perception,
there arises not the lure which is in perception.

The passing away of that lure
is the passing away of grasping.

The passing away of grasping
is the passing away of becoming.

The passing away of becoming
is the passing away of birth.

The passing away of birth
is the passing away of old age and decay,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair.

Thus is the passing away of this whole mass of Ill.

■

And what, brethren, is the passing away of the activities?

In this case, brethren, he is not enamoured,
he does not welcome,
not having clung does not persist.

With respect to what?

He is not enamoured of the activities;
he does not welcome the activities,
does not cling to the activities
not having clung he does not persist
with respect to the activities.

In him, not being enamoured of the activities,
not welcoming it,
not having clung,
not persisting with respect to the activities,
there arises not the lure which is in the activities.

The passing away of that lure
is the passing away of grasping.

The passing away of grasping
is the passing away of becoming.

The passing away of becoming
is the passing away of birth.

The passing away of birth
is the passing away of old age and decay,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair.

Thus is the passing away of this whole mass of Ill.

■

And what, brethren, is the passing away of consciousness?

In this case, brethren, he is not enamoured,
he does not welcome,
not having clung does not persist.

With respect to what?

He is not enamoured of consciousness;
he does not welcome consciousness,
does not cling to consciousness
not having clung he does not persist
with respect to consciousness.

In him, not being enamoured of consciousness,
not welcoming it,
not having clung,
not persisting with respect to consciousness,
there arises not the lure which is in consciousness.

The passing away of that lure
is the passing away of grasping.

The passing away of grasping
is the passing away of becoming.

The passing away of becoming
is the passing away of birth.

The passing away of birth
is the passing away of old age and decay,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair.

Thus is the passing away of this whole mass of Ill.

Such, brethren,
is the passing away of body
such is the passing away of feeling
such is the passing away of perception
such is the passing away of the activities
such is the passing away of consciousness."

---

[1] Cf. S. v, 414, quoted at V.M. i, 371; Expos. i, 216. The whole chapter is found at intervals in K.S. ii. Buddhaghosa, commenting on this passage at V.M. 523, likens the process to that of four men pulling up a creeper; the two men who hold on to the middle of it go off with their bit when it is cut; but the man who cuts the root is the one who knows the truth of the whole matter.

[2] abhivadati. Comy., 'Cries out in raptures over it.'

[3] The full formula is repeated for each group. [Ed.: included back in in this edition, standardizing the repititions.]

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
1. Pathama Nakula-Pita Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

1. Nakulapitar (the First)

Sutta 6

Paṭisallāna Suttaṃ

Solitude

---

[15] [16]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

Then thus spake the Exalted One:

2. "Apply yourselves, brethren, to solitude.[1]
A brother who is given to solitude knows a thing as it really is.

3. And what does he know as it really is?

The arising of body
and the passing away thereof;
the arising of feeling
and the passing away thereof;
the arising of perception
and the passing away thereof;
the arising of activities[2]
and the passing away thereof;
the arising of consciousness
and the passing away thereof.

§

§

And what, brethren,
is the arising of body
what is the arising of feeling
what is the arising of perception
what is the aising of the activities
what is the arising of consciousness?

Herein, brethren, one is enamoured,
one welcomes;
having clung one persists.

To what?

He is enamoured of body;
he welcomes body,
clings to body;
so clinging there comes a lure upon him.

That lure which is in body is grasping.

Conditioned by that grasping is becoming.

Conditioned by becoming is birth.

Conditioned by birth
old age and decay,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair
together come into being.

Thus is the arising of this whole mass of Ill.

■

And what, brethren,
is the arising of feeling?

Herein, brethren, one is enamoured,
one welcomes;
having clung one persists.

To what?

He is enamoured of feeling;
he welcomes feeling,
clings to feeling;
so clinging there comes a lure upon him.

That lure which is in feeling is grasping.

Conditioned by that grasping is becoming.

Conditioned by becoming is birth.

Conditioned by birth
old age and decay,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair
together come into being.

Thus is the arising of this whole mass of Ill.

■

And what, brethren,
is the arising of perception?

Herein, brethren, one is enamoured,
one welcomes;
having clung one persists.

To what?

He is enamoured of perception;
he welcomes perception,
clings to perception;
so clinging there comes a lure upon him.

That lure which is in perception is grasping.

Conditioned by that grasping is becoming.

Conditioned by becoming is birth.

Conditioned by birth
old age and decay,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair
together come into being.

Thus is the arising of this whole mass of Ill.

■

And what, brethren,
is the arising of the activities?

Herein, brethren, one is enamoured,
one welcomes;
having clung one persists.

To what?

He is enamoured of the activities;
he welcomes the activities,
clings to the activities;
so clinging there comes a lure upon him.

That lure which is in the activities is grasping.

Conditioned by that grasping is becoming.

Conditioned by becoming is birth.

Conditioned by birth
old age and decay,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair
together come into being.

Thus is the arising of this whole mass of Ill.

■

And what, brethren,
is the arising of of consciousness?

Herein, brethren, one is enamoured,
one welcomes;
having clung one persists.

To what?

He is enamoured of consciousness;
he welcomes consciousness,
clings to consciousness;
so clinging there comes a lure upon him.

That lure which is in consciousness is grasping.

Conditioned by that grasping is becoming.

Conditioned by becoming is birth.

Conditioned by birth
old age and decay,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair
together come into being.

Thus is the arising of this whole mass of Ill.

Such, brethren,
is the arising of body
such is the arising of feeling
such is the arising of perception
such is the aising of the activities
such is the arising of consciousness.

§

And what, brethren,
is the passing away of body
what is the passing away of feeling
what is the passing away of perception
what is the passing away of the activities
what is the passing away of consciousness?

And what, brethren, is the passing away of body?

In this case, brethren, he is not enamoured,
he does not welcome,
not having clung does not persist.

With respect to what?

He is not enamoured of body;
he does not welcome body,
does not cling to body
not having clung he does not persist
with respect to body.

In him, not being enamoured of body,
not welcoming it,
not having clung,
not persisting with respect to body,
there arises not the lure which is in body.

The passing away of that lure
is the passing away of grasping.

The passing away of grasping
is the passing away of becoming.

The passing away of becoming
is the passing away of birth.

The passing away of birth
is the passing away of old age and decay,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair.

Thus is the passing away of this whole mass of Ill.

■

And what, brethren, is the passing away of feeling?

In this case, brethren, he is not enamoured,
he does not welcome,
not having clung does not persist.

With respect to what?

He is not enamoured of feeling;
he does not welcome feeling,
does not cling to feeling
not having clung he does not persist
with respect to feeling.

In him, not being enamoured of feeling,
not welcoming it,
not having clung,
not persisting with respect to feeling,
there arises not the lure which is in feeling.

The passing away of that lure
is the passing away of grasping.

The passing away of grasping
is the passing away of becoming.

The passing away of becoming
is the passing away of birth.

The passing away of birth
is the passing away of old age and decay,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair.

Thus is the passing away of this whole mass of Ill.

■

And what, brethren, is the passing away of perception?

In this case, brethren, he is not enamoured,
he does not welcome,
not having clung does not persist.

With respect to what?

He is not enamoured of perception;
he does not welcome perception,
does not cling to perception
not having clung he does not persist
with respect to perception.

In him, not being enamoured of perception,
not welcoming it,
not having clung,
not persisting with respect to perception,
there arises not the lure which is in perception.

The passing away of that lure
is the passing away of grasping.

The passing away of grasping
is the passing away of becoming.

The passing away of becoming
is the passing away of birth.

The passing away of birth
is the passing away of old age and decay,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair.

Thus is the passing away of this whole mass of Ill.

■

And what, brethren, is the passing away of the activities?

In this case, brethren, he is not enamoured,
he does not welcome,
not having clung does not persist.

With respect to what?

He is not enamoured of the activities;
he does not welcome the activities,
does not cling to the activities
not having clung he does not persist
with respect to the activities.

In him, not being enamoured of the activities,
not welcoming it,
not having clung,
not persisting with respect to the activities,
there arises not the lure which is in the activities.

The passing away of that lure
is the passing away of grasping.

The passing away of grasping
is the passing away of becoming.

The passing away of becoming
is the passing away of birth.

The passing away of birth
is the passing away of old age and decay,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair.

Thus is the passing away of this whole mass of Ill.

■

And what, brethren, is the passing away of consciousness?

In this case, brethren, he is not enamoured,
he does not welcome,
not having clung does not persist.

With respect to what?

He is not enamoured of consciousness;
he does not welcome consciousness,
does not cling to consciousness
not having clung he does not persist
with respect to consciousness.

In him, not being enamoured of consciousness,
not welcoming it,
not having clung,
not persisting with respect to consciousness,
there arises not the lure which is in consciousness.

The passing away of that lure
is the passing away of grasping.

The passing away of grasping
is the passing away of becoming.

The passing away of becoming
is the passing away of birth.

The passing away of birth
is the passing away of old age and decay,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair.

Thus is the passing away of this whole mass of Ill.

Such, brethren,
is the passing away of body
such is the passing away of feeling
such is the passing away of perception
such is the passing away of the activities
such is the passing away of consciousness."

---

[1] Paṭisallāna. Paṭi-saṇ-lī, 'sticking-on-again,' is applied to solitude chosen in order to meditate.

[2] Text follows here with 'Yathā pathamasutte tathā vitthāretabbo||'; Woodward trans. (As in the first section, so should this be expanded.), and footnotes 'So the Burmese recensions. The Sinh. MSS. expand. [I understand this to refer to the previous sutta, not the first sutta of the saṇyutta — Ed.]

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
1. Pathama Nakula-Pita Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

1. Nakulapitar (the First)

Sutta 7

Paṭhama Upādā-Paritassanā Suttaṃ

Grasping and worry[1]

---

[15] [16]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

Then thus spake the Exalted One:

"I will show you grasping and worry, brethren:
likewise not grasping and not worrying.

Listen to it,
apply your minds to it thoroughly
and I will speak."

"Even so, lord," replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

Thus spake the Exalted One:

"And how, brethren, is there grasping and worry?

Herein, brethren, the untaught many- [17] folk,
who discern not those who are Ariyans,
who are unskilled in the Ariyan doctrine,
untrained in the Ariyan doctrine,
who discern not those who are worthy,
who are unskilled in the worthy doctrine,
untrained in the worthy doctrine
— these regard body as the self,
the self as having body,
body as being in the self,
the self as being in the body.

Of such an one
the body alters and becomes otherwise.

Owing to the altering
and otherwiseness of the body,
his consciousness is busied[2] with the altering body.

From this being busied with the altering body,
worried thoughts arise and persist,
laying hold of the heart.[3]

From this laying hold of the heart
he becomes troubled,
and owing to vexation and clinging
he is worried.

■

He regards feeling as the self,
the self as having feeling,
feeling as being in the self,
the self as being in feeling.

Of such an one
feeling alters and becomes otherwise.

Owing to the altering
and otherwiseness of feeling,
his consciousness is busied with the altering feeling.

From this being busied with the altering feeling,
worried thoughts arise and persist,
laying hold of the heart.

From this laying hold of the heart
he becomes troubled,
and owing to vexation and clinging
he is worried.

■

He regards perception as the self,
the self as having perception,
perception as being in the self,
the self as being in perception.

Of such an one
perception alters and becomes otherwise.

Owing to the altering
and otherwiseness of perception,
his consciousness is busied with the altering perception.

From this being busied with the altering perception,
worried thoughts arise and persist,
laying hold of the heart.

From this laying hold of the heart
he becomes troubled,
and owing to vexation and clinging
he is worried.

■

He regards the activities as the self,
the self as having the activities,
the activities as being in the self,
the self as being in the activities.

Of such an one
the activities alter and become otherwise.

Owing to the altering
and otherwiseness of the activities,
his consciousness is busied with the altering activities.

From this being busied with the altering activities,
worried thoughts arise and persist,
laying hold of the heart.

From this laying hold of the heart
he becomes troubled,
and owing to vexation and clinging
he is worried.

§

He regards consciousness as the self,
the self as having consciousness,
consciousness as being in the self,
the self as being in consciousness.

Of such an one
consciousness alters and becomes otherwise.

Owing to the altering
and otherwiseness of consciousness,
his consciousness is busied with the altering consciousness.

From this being busied with the altering consciousness,
worried thoughts arise and persist,
laying hold of the heart.

From this laying hold of the heart
he becomes troubled,
and owing to vexation and clinging
he is worried.

Thus, brethren, comes grasping and worry.

§

And how, brethren, is there no grasping and worry?

Herein the well-taught Ariyan disciple,
who discerns those that are Ariyans,
who is skilled in the Ariyan doctrine,
well trained in the Ariyan doctrine,
skilled in the worthy doctrine,
well trained in the worthy doctrine

— these regard not body as the self,
regard not the self as having body,
regard not body as being in the self,
regard not the self as being in the body.

Of such an one
the body alters and becomes otherwise.

But in spite of the altering and otherwiseness of body,
his consciousness is not busied with the altering body.

From not being busied with the altering body,
worried thoughts do not arise and persist,
laying hold of the heart.

As his heart is not so possessed,
he is not troubled,
and through absence of vexation and clinging
he is not worried.

■

He regards not feeling as the self,
regards not the self as having feeling,
regard not feeling as being in the self,
regard not the self as being in feeling.

Of such an one
the feeling alters and becomes otherwise.

But in spite of the altering and otherwiseness of feeling,
his consciousness is not busied with the altering feeling.

From not being busied with the altering feeling,
worried thoughts do not arise and persist,
laying hold of the heart.

As his heart is not so possessed,
he is not troubled,
and through absence of vexation and clinging
he is not worried.

■

He regards not perception as the self,
regards not the self as having perception,
regard not perception as being in the self,
regard not the self as being in perception.

Of such an one
perception alters and becomes otherwise.

But in spite of the altering and otherwiseness of perception,
his consciousness is not busied with the altering perception.

From not being busied with the altering perception,
worried thoughts do not arise and persist,
laying hold of the heart.

As his heart is not so possessed,
he is not troubled,
and through absence of vexation and clinging
he is not worried.

■

He regards not the activities as the self,
regards not the self as having the activities,
regard not the activities as being in the self,
regard not the self as being in the activities.

Of such an one
the activities alter and become otherwise.

But in spite of the altering and otherwiseness of the activities,
his consciousness is not busied with the altering activities.

From not being busied with the altering activities,
worried thoughts do not arise and persist,
laying hold of the heart.

As his heart is not so possessed,
he is not troubled,
and through absence of vexation and clinging
he is not worried.

■

He regards not consciousness as the self,
regards not the self as having consciousness,
regard not consciousness as being in the self,
regard not the self as being in consciousness.

Of such an one
consciousness alters and becomes otherwise.

But in spite of the altering and otherwiseness of consciousness,
his consciousness is not busied with the altering consciousness.

From not being busied with the altering consciousness,
worried thoughts do not arise and persist,
laying hold of the heart.

As his heart is not so possessed,
he is not troubled,
and through absence of vexation and clinging
he is not worried.

Thus, brethren, is there no grasping and worry."

---

[1] Upādāna-paritassana (so Comy.). Cf. Dialog. i, 53 and n. Paritassana, 'fidgetiness or worry.' Cf. M. i, 136; Mil. Pan. 253, 400; and M. i, 36, na asati paritassati, 'is not worried at the non-existent.'

[2] Anuparivatti, mind is occupied with the petty concerns of body. Cf. J.P.T.S., 1913, p. 125, etc. 'Of the name as term and concept.'

[3] Cf. S. ii, 235, pariyādāya tiṭṭhanti; 'make an impression on,' is not forceful enough. 'Having altogether laid hold of (him) they persist.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
1. Pathama Nakula-Pita Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

1. Nakulapitar (the First)

Sutta 8

Dutiya Upādā-Paritassanā Suttaṃ

Grasping and worry (2)

---

[18] [18]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

Then thus spake the Exalted One:

"I will show you grasping and worry, brethren:
likewise not grasping and not worrying.

Listen to it,
apply your minds to it thoroughly
and I will speak."

"Even so, lord," replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

Thus spake the Exalted One:

"And how, brethren, is there grasping and worry?

Herein, brethren, the untaught many-folk have this view:

'This body is mine:
I am this:
this is my self.'

Of such an one
the body alters and becomes otherwise.

Owing to the altering and otherwiseness of body,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair arise in him.

'This feeling is mine:
I am this:
this is my self.'

Of such an one
feeling alters and becomes otherwise.

Owing to the altering and otherwiseness of feeling,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair arise in him.

'This perception is mine:
I am this:
this is my self.'

Of such an one
perception alters and becomes otherwise.

Owing to the altering and otherwiseness of perception,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair arise in him.

'These activities are mine:
I am this:
this is my self.'

Of such an one
the activities alter and become otherwise.

Owing to the altering and otherwiseness of the activities,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair arise in him.

'This consciousness is mine:
I am this:
this is my self.'

Of such an one
consciousness alters and becomes otherwise.

Owing to the altering and otherwiseness of consciousness,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair arise in him.

Thus, brethren, is there grasping and worry.

§

And how, brethren, is there no grasping and no worry?

Herein, brethren, the well-taught Ariyan disciple has this view:

'This body is not mine:
I am not this:
this is not my self.'

Of such an one
the body alters and becomes otherwise.

But in spite of the altering and otherwiseness of body,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair arise not in him.

'This feeling is not mine:
I am not this:
this is not my self.'

Of such an one
feeling alters and becomes otherwise.

But in spite of the altering and otherwiseness of feeling,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair arise not in him.

'This perception is not mine:
I am not this:
this is not my self.'

Of such an one
perception alters and becomes otherwise.

But in spite of the altering and otherwiseness of perception,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair arise not in him.

'These activities are not mine:
I am not this:

this is not my self.'

Of such an one
the activities alter and become otherwise.

But in spite of the altering and otherwiseness of the activities,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair arise not in him.

'This consciousness is not mine:
I am not this:
this is not my self.'

Of such an one
consciousness alters and becomes otherwise.

But in spite of the altering and otherwiseness of consciousness,
sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair arise not in him."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
1. Pathama Nakula-Pita Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

1. Nakulapitar (the First)

Sutta 9

Paṭhama Atīt-Ā-nāgata-Paccuppanna Suttaṃ

Past, Future and Present (1)

---

[19] [18]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One thus addressed the brethren:

"Body, brethren, is impermanent,
both in the past and in the future,
not to speak of the present.

So seeing, brethren,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
cares not for a body that is [19] past,
is not in love with a body to be,
and for the present body
seeks to be repelled by it,
seeks dispassion for it,
seeks the ceasing of it.

■

Feeling, brethren, is impermanent,
both in the past and in the future,
not to speak of the present'.

So seeing, brethren,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
cares not for feeling that is past,
is not in love with feeling to be,
and for the present feeling
seeks to be repelled by it,
seeks dispassion for it,
seeks the ceasing of it.

■

Perception, brethren, is impermanent,
both in the past and in the future,
not to speak of the present'.

So seeing, brethren,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
cares not for perception that is past,
is not in love with perception to be,
and for the present perception
seeks to be repelled by it,

seeks dispassion for it,
seeks the ceasing of it.

■

The activities, brethren, are impermanent,
both in the past and in the future,
not to speak of the present'.

So seeing, brethren,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
cares not for activities that are past,
is not in love with activities to be,
and for the present activities
seeks to be repelled by them,
seeks dispassion for them,
seeks the ceasing of them.

■

Consciousness, brethren, is impermanent,
both in the past and in the future,
not to speak of the present'.

So seeing, brethren,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
cares not for consciousness that is past,
is not in love with consciousness to be,
and for the present consciousness
seeks to be repelled by it,
seeks dispassion for it,
seeks the ceasing of it."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
1. Pathama Nakula-Pita Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

1. Nakulapitar (the First)

Sutta 10

Dutiya Atīt-Ā-nāgata-Paccuppanna Suttaṃ

Past, Future and Present (2)

---

[19] [19]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One thus addressed the brethren:

"Body, brethren, is an ill,
both in the past and in the future,
not to speak of the present.

So seeing, brethren,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
cares not for a body that is past,
is not in love with a body to be,
and for the present body
seeks to be repelled by it,
seeks dispassion for it,
seeks the ceasing of it.

■

Feeling, brethren, is an ill,
both in the past and in the future,
not to speak of the present.

So seeing, brethren,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
cares not for feeling that is past,
is not in love with feeling to be,
and for the present feeling
seeks to be repelled by it,
seeks dispassion for it,
seeks the ceasing of it.

■

Perception, brethren, is an ill,
both in the past and in the future,
not to speak of the present.

So seeing, brethren,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
cares not for perception that is past,
is not in love with perception to be,
and for the present perception
seeks to be repelled by it,

seeks dispassion for it,
seeks the ceasing of it.

■

The activities, brethren, are an ill,
both in the past and in the future,
not to speak of the present.

So seeing, brethren,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
cares not for the activities that are past,
is not in love with the activities to be,
and for the present activities
seeks to be repelled by them,
seeks dispassion for them,
seeks the ceasing of them.

■

Again, consciousness is an ill,
both in the past and in the future,
not to speak of the present.

So seeing, brethren,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
cares not for consciousness that is past,
is not in love with consciousnesss to be,
and for present consciousness
seeks to be repelled by it,
seeks dispassion for it,
seeks the ceasing of it."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
1. Pathama Nakula-Pita Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

1. Nakulapitar (the First)

Sutta 11

Tatiya Atīt-Ā-nāgata-Paccuppanna Suttaṃ

Past, Future and Present (3)

---

[20] [19]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One thus addressed the brethren:

"Body, brethren, is without the self
both in the past and in the future,
not to speak of the present.

So seeing, brethren,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
cares not for a body that is past, [20] is not in love with a body to be,
and for the present body
seeks to be repelled by it,
seeks dispassion for it,
seeks the ceasing of it.

■

Feeling, brethren, is without the self
both in the past and in the future,
not to speak of the present.

So seeing, brethren,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
cares not for feeling that is past,
is not in love with feeling to be,
and for the present feeling
seeks to be repelled by it,
seeks dispassion for it,
seeks the ceasing of it.

■

Perception, brethren, is without the self
both in the past and in the future,
not to speak of the present.

So seeing, brethren,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
cares not for perception that is past,
is not in love with perception to be,
and for the present perception
seeks to be repelled by it,

seeks dispassion for it,
seeks the ceasing of it.

■

The activities, brethren, are without the self
both in the past and in the future,
not to speak of the present.

So seeing, brethren,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
cares not for activities that are past,
is not in love with activities to be,
and for the present activities
seeks to be repelled by them,
seeks dispassion for them,
seeks the ceasing of them.

■

Consciousness, brethren, is without the self
both in the past and in the future,
not to speak of the present.

So seeing, brethren,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
cares not for consciousness that is past,
is not in love with consciousness to be,
and for the present consciousness
seeks to be repelled by it,
seeks dispassion for it,
seeks the ceasing of it."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
2. Dutiya Anicca Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

2. The Second on Impermanence

Sutta 12

Anicca Suttaṃ

Impermanence

[2] Nāparaṃ itthattāyā ti pajānāti. Cf. K.S. ii, 17; n. S. ii, 20, etc. Buddhaghosa, explaining the phrase at DA. 226, says: idāni vatta-māna-kkhandha-santānā aparaṃ khandha-santānaṃ n'atthi. After the present life-continuum of the fivefold mass has run its course, there is no further life-continuum of the fivefold mass for me.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
2. Dutiya Anicca Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

2. The Second on Impermanence

Sutta 13

Dukkha Suttaṃ

Ill

---

[21] [20]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"Body, brethren, is ill,
feeling, is an ill,
perception, is an ill,

the activities, are an ill,
consciousness is an ill.

Thus seeing, brethren, the well-taught Ariyan disciple
is repelled by body,
is repelled by feeling,
is repelled by perception,
is repelled by the activities
is repelled by consciousness.

Being repelled
he lusts not
not lusting he is set free
in this freedom comes insight
that it is a being free.

Thus he realizes:

'Rebirth is destroyed,
lived is the righteous life,
done is my task,
for life in these conditions
there is no hereafter.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
2. Dutiya Anicca Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

2. The Second on Impermanence

Sutta 14

Anatta Suttaṃ

Without the Self

---

[21] [21]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"Body, brethren, is without the self,
feeling, is without the self,
perception, is without the self,

the activities, are without the self,
consciousness is without the self.

So seeing, brethren, the well-taught Ariyan disciple
is repelled by body,
is repelled by feeling,
is repelled by perception,
is repelled by the activities
is repelled by consciousness.

Being repelled
he lusts not
not lusting he is set free
in this freedom comes insight
that it is a being free.

Thus he realizes:

'Rebirth is destroyed,
lived is the righteous life,
done is my task,
for life in these conditions
there is no hereafter.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
2. Dutiya Anicca Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

2. The Second on Impermanence

Sutta 15

Paṭhama Yad Anicca Suttaṃ

What is Impermanent (1)

---

[22] [21]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"Body, brethren, is impermanent.

What is impermanent
that is suffering.[1]

What is suffering,
that is void of the self.

What is void of the self,
that is not mine,
I am not it,
it is not my self.

That is how it is to be regarded
by perfect insight of whet it really is.

■

Feeling, brethren, is impermanent.

What is impermanent
that is suffering.

What is suffering,
that is void of the self.

What is void of the self,
that is not mine,
I am not it,
it is not my self.

That is how it is to be regarded
by perfect insight of whet it really is.

■

Perception, brethren, is impermanent.

What is impermanent
that is suffering.

What is suffering,
that is void of the self.

What is void of the self,
that is not mine,
I am not it,
it is not my self.

That is how it is to be regarded
by perfect insight of whet it really is.

■

The activities, brethren, are impermanent.

What is impermanent
that is suffering.

What is suffering,
that is void of the self.

What is void of the self,
that is not mine,
I am not it,
it is not my self.

That is how it is to be regarded
by perfect insight of whet it really is.

■

Consciousness, brethren, is impermanent.

What is impermanent
that is suffering.

What is suffering,
that is void of the self.

What is void of the self,
that is not mine,
I am not it,
it is not my self.

That is how it is to be regarded
by perfect insight of whet it really is.

■

Thus seeing, brethren, the well-taught Ariyan disciple
is repelled by body,
is repelled by feeling,
is repelled by perception,
is repelled by the activities
is repelled by consciousness.

Being repelled
he lusts not
not lusting he is set free
in this freedom comes insight
that it is a being free.

Thus he realizes:

'Rebirth is destroyed,
lived is the righteous life,
done is my task,
for life in these conditions
there is no hereafter.'"

---

[1] The force of dukkhaṃ may in many places be better brought out by translating 'Ill-fare,' as opposed to su-khaṃ, wel-fare.' See Pāli Dict. s.v. which suggests 'ease' and 'dis-ease,' 'wealth and ilth,' 'well-being' and 'ill-being.' But all these words have now various significances. 'Ill-fare' is used in Elizabethan literature. Buddhaghosa defines the word at V.M. 461, and at p. 494 attempts its derivation (not very successfully) in du, 'mean, inferior'; 'khaṃ,' empty. But the underlying idea seems to be 'ill-put-together, temporary, unreal, unsatisfactory.' Cf. Expositor i, 53,54, and note on next page; Mrs. Rhys Davids, Bud. Psychology, 1924, p. 83 f.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
2. Dutiya Anicca Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

2. The Second on Impermanence

Sutta 16

Dutiya Yad Anicca Suttaṃ or Yaṃ Dukkha Suttaṃ

What is Impermanent (2)

---

[22] [22]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"Body, brethren, is ill-faring.

What is suffering,
that is void of the self.

What is void of the self,
that is not mine,
I am not it,
it is not my self.

That is how it is to be regarded
by perfect insight of whet it really is.

■

"Feeling, brethren, is ill-faring.

What is suffering,
that is void of the self.

What is void of the self,
that is not mine,
I am not it,
it is not my self.

That is how it is to be regarded
by perfect insight of whet it really is.

■

"Perception, brethren, is ill-faring.

What is suffering,
that is void of the self.

What is void of the self,
that is not mine,
I am not it,
it is not my self.

That is how it is to be regarded
by perfect insight of whet it really is.

■

"The activities, brethren, are ill-faring.

What is suffering,
that is void of the self.

What is void of the self,
that is not mine,
I am not it,
it is not my self.

That is how it is to be regarded
by perfect insight of whet it really is.

■

Consciousness, brethren, is ill-faring.

What is suffering,
that is void of the self.

What is void of the self,
that is not mine,
I am not it,
it is not my self.

That is how it is to be regarded
by perfect insight of whet it really is.

■

Thus seeing, brethren, the well-taught Ariyan disciple
is repelled by body,
is repelled by feeling,

is repelled by perception,
is repelled by the activities
is repelled by consciousness.

Being repelled
he lusts not
not lusting he is set free
in this freedom comes insight
that it is a being free.

Thus he realizes:

'Rebirth is destroyed,
lived is the righteous life,
done is my task,
for life in these conditions
there is no hereafter.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
2. Dutiya Anicca Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

2. The Second on Impermanence

Sutta 17

Tatiya Yad Anicca Suttaṃ

What is Impermanent (3)

---

[22] [22]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"Body, brethren, is void of self.

What is void of the self,
that is not mine,
I am not it,
it is not my self.

That is how it is to be regarded
by perfect insight of whet it really is.

■

Feeling, brethren, is void of self.

What is void of the self,
that is not mine,
I am not it,
it is not my self.

That is how it is to be regarded
by perfect insight of whet it really is.

■

Perception, brethren, is void of self.

What is void of the self,
that is not mine,
I am not it,
it is not my self.

That is how it is to be regarded
by perfect insight of whet it really is.

■

The activities, brethren, are void of self.

What is void of the self,
that is not mine,

I am not it,
it is not my self.

That is how it is to be regarded
by perfect insight of whet it really is.

■

Consciousness, brethren, is void of self.

What is impermanent
that is suffering.

What is suffering,
that is void of the self.

What is void of the self,
that is not mine,
I am not it,
it is not my self.

That is how it is to be regarded
by perfect insight of whet it really is.

■

Thus seeing, brethren, the well-taught Ariyan disciple
is repelled by body,
is repelled by feeling,
is repelled by perception,
is repelled by the activities
is repelled by consciousness.

Being repelled
he lusts not
not lusting he is set free

in this freedom comes insight
that it is a being free.

Thus he realizes:

'Rebirth is destroyed,
lived is the righteous life,
done is my task,
for life in these conditions
there is no hereafter.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
2. Dutiya Anicca Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

2. The Second on Impermanence

Sutta 18

Paṭhama Hetu Suttaṃ

Cause (1)

---

[23] [22]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"Body, brethren, is impermanent.

That which is the cause,
that which is the condition
of the arising of body,
that also is impermanent.

How, brethren, can a body
which is compounded of the impermanent
come to be permanent?

■

Feeling is impermanent.

That which is the cause,
that which is the condition
of the uprising of feeling,
that also is impermanent.

How, brethren, can feeling
which is compounded of the impermanent
come to be permanent?

■

Perception is impermanent.

That which is the cause,
that which is the condition
of the uprising of perception,
that also is impermanent.

How, brethren, can perception
which is compounded of the impermanent
come to be permanent?

■

The activities are impermanent.

That which is the cause,
that which is the condition
of the uprising of the activities,
that also is impermanent.

How, brethren, can the activities
which are compounded of the impermanent
come to be permanent?

■

Consciousness is impermanent.

That which is the cause,
that which is the condition
of the uprising of consciousness,
that also is impermanent.

How, brethren, can consciousness
which is compounded of the impermanent
come to be permanent?

■

Thus seeing, brethren, the well-taught Ariyan disciple
is repelled by body,
is repelled by feeling,
is repelled by perception,
is repelled by the activities
is repelled by consciousness.

Being repelled
he lusts not
not lusting he is set free

in this freedom comes insight
that it is a being free.

Thus he realizes:

'Rebirth is destroyed,
lived is the righteous life,
done is my task,
for life in these conditions
there is no hereafter.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
2. Dutiya Anicca Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

2. The Second on Impermanence

Sutta 19

Dutiya Hetu Suttaṃ

Cause (2)

---

[23] [22]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"Body, brethren, is ill.

That which is the cause,
that which is the condition
of the arising of body,
that also is ill.[ed1]

How, brethren, can a body
which is compounded of ill[1]
come to be ease?

■

Feeling is ill.

That which is the cause,
that which is the condition
of the uprising of feeling,
that also is ill.

How, brethren, can feeling
which is compounded of ill
come to be ease?

■

Perception is ill.

That which is the cause,
that which is the condition
of the uprising of perception,
that also is ill.

How, brethren, can perception
which is compounded of ill
come to be ease?

■

The activities are ill.

That which is the cause,
that which is the condition
of the uprising of the activities,
that also is ill.

How, brethren, can the activities
which are compounded of ill
come to be ease?

■

Consciousness is ill.

That which is the cause,
that which is the condition
of the uprising of consciousness,
that also is ill.

How, brethren, can consciousness
which is compounded of ill
come to be ease?

■

Thus seeing, brethren, the well-taught Ariyan disciple
is repelled by body,
is repelled by feeling,
is repelled by perception,
is repelled by the activities
is repelled by consciousness.

Being repelled
he lusts not
not lusting he is set free

in this freedom comes insight
that it is a being free.

Thus he realizes:

'Rebirth is destroyed,
lived is the righteous life,
done is my task,
for life in these conditions
there is no hereafter.'"

---

[1] Here especially the translation of dukkha-sambhūtaṃ, 'ill-put together,' will better bring out the idea of a compost. The universe would seem to be 'bungled' by its causes, as 'Nature trying her 'prentice band,' or 'created by some lesser god,' as Tennyson puts it in The Idylls of the Kinq. It is an experiment. This significance of 'ill-state' is suggested to me by Mr. J. van Manen. The phrase sukaṃ viharati, 'lives at ease,' means 'the miad-feeling-body-compound,' works perfectly, like a well-made and well-oiled machine.

[ed1] Woodward has here mistakenly retained 'impermanent' from the previous sutta.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
2. Dutiya Anicca Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

2. The Second on Impermanence

Sutta 20

Tatiya Hetu Suttaṃ

Cause (3)

---

[24] [23]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"Body, brethren, is void of the self.

That which is the cause,
that which is the condition
of the arising of body,
that also is void of the self.[ed1]

How, brethren, can body
which is void of the self
come to be the self?

■

Feeling is void of the self.

That which is the cause,
that which is the condition
of the uprising of feeling,
that also is void of the self.

How, brethren, can feeling
which is void of the self
come to be self?

■

Perception is void of the self.

That which is the cause,
that which is the condition
of the uprising of perception,
that also is void of the self.

How, brethren, can perception
which is void of the self
come to be self?

■

The activities are void of the self.

That which is the cause,
that which is the condition
of the uprising of the activities,
that also is void of the self.

How, brethren, can the activities
which are void of the self
come to be self?

■

Consciousness is void of the self.

That which is the cause,
that which is the condition
of the uprising of consciousness,
that also is void of the self.

How, brethren, can consciousness
which is void of the self
come to be self?

■

Thus seeing, brethren, the well-taught Ariyan disciple
is repelled by body,
is repelled by feeling,
is repelled by perception,
is repelled by the activities
is repelled by consciousness.

Being repelled
he lusts not
not lusting he is set free

in this freedom comes insight
that it is a being free.

Thus he realizes:

'Rebirth is destroyed,
lived is the righteous life,
done is my task,
for life in these conditions
there is no hereafter.'"

---

ed1 Woodward has here and in the next paragraph mistakenly retained 'impermanent' from #18.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
2. Dutiya Anicca Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

2. The Second on Impermanence

Sutta 21

Ānanda Suttaṃ

Ānanda

---

[24] [23]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

Then the venerable Ānanda came to the Exalted One,
saluted him
and sat down at one side.

As he thus sat,
the venerable Ānanda thus addressed the Exalted One:

"Lord, we hear the phrase 'Ceasing! Ceasing!'

By the ceasing of what natural states
is there said to be 'ceasing?'"

"Body, Ānanda, is impermanent,
conditioned,
arisen [24] because of (something).

It is a vanishing thing,
a decaying thing,
a fading-out thing,
a ceasing thing.

By such ceasing
is there said to be 'ceasing.'

■

Feeling is impermanent,
conditioned,
arisen because of (something).

It is a vanishing thing,
a decaying thing,
a fading-out thing,
a ceasing thing.

By such ceasing
is there said to be 'ceasing.'

■

Percption is impermanent,
conditioned,
arisen because of (something).

It is a vanishing thing,
a decaying thing,
a fading-out thing,
a ceasing thing.

By such ceasing
is there said to be 'ceasing.'

■

The activities are impermanent,
conditioned,
arisen because of (something).

They are a vanishing thing,
a decaying thing,
a fading-out thing,
a ceasing thing.

By such ceasing
is there said to be 'ceasing.'

■

Consciousness is impermanent,
conditioned,
arisen because of (something).

It is a vanishing thing,
a decaying thing,
a fading-out thing,
a ceasing thing.

By such ceasing
is there said to be 'ceasing.'

By the ceasing of these there is said to be 'ceasing.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
3. Bhāra Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

3. On the Burden

Sutta 22

Bhāra Suttaṃ

The Burden[1]

---

[25] [24]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"I will teach you the burden, brethren,
the taking hold of the burden,

the lifting of it up and the laying of it down.

Do ye listen carefully.

Give heed and I will speak."

"Even so, Master!"
replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

[25] "What, brethren, is the burden?

It is the mass of the five factors of grasping,
should be the reply.

What five?

The mass of the body factors of grasping,
the mass of the feeling factors of grasping,
the mass of the perception factors of grasping,
the mass of the activities factors of grasping,
the mass of the consciousness factors of grasping.

This, brethren is called
'the burden.'

And what, brethren, is the
'laying hold of the burden'?

'It is the person' should be the reply.

That venerable one
of such and such a name,
of such and such a family.

This, brethren, is called
'the laying hold of the burden.'

And what, brethren, is
'the taking up of the burden'?

It is that craving
that leads downwards to rebirth,[2]
along with the lure and the lust
that lingers longingly
now here,
now there:
namely,
the craving for sensation,
the craving for rebirth,
the craving to have done with rebirth.[3]

That, brethren, is called
'the taking up of the burden.'

And what, brethren, is
'the laying down of the burden'?

It is the utter passionless ceasing of craving,
the giving up of craving,
the renouncing of,
the release from,
the absence of longing for
this craving.

That, brethren, is called
'the laying down of the burden.'"

So spake the Exalted One.

The Well-Farer having thus spoken,
the Master said this yet further:

The burden is indeed the fivefold mass:
The seizer of the burden, man:
Taking it up is sorrow in this world:
The laying of it down is bliss.

If a man lay this heavy burden down,
And take not any other burden up:
If he draw out that craving, root and all,
No more an-hungered,[4] he is free.[5]

---

[1] Cf. Warren 159, who, however, wrongly translates bhārahāro as 'bearer of the burden.'

At V.M. 512, Buddhaghosa says the burden is the fact of sorrow; the taking of it up is the rise of sorrow; the throwing of it down is the ceasing of sorrow; the manner of doing so is the Path.

Professor Keith, Buddhist Philosophy (pub 1923), p 82, says: "the author of the sutra did not entertain the view that the person is nothing save the five aggregates, as these authorities (Buddhaghosa, Vasu-bandhu, Candrakirti, Yasomitra) insist, and all those who maintain that the sutra accepts a person are justified. ... To say that the aggregates are the bearer is to contradict the text.' To this, however, we may add that, in Buddhist fashion, no bearer of the burden is mentioned at all, but a bearing. Hāro is 'a taking.' The puggala is the taking hold of the fivefold mass. Nevertheless, in the second stanza, we cannot avoid the use of the word 'bearer.'

[We need not be misled by the little parable of the 'burden-bearer.' Saṃyutta (iii), xxii, 22, 1. [?] There the 'bearer,' lit. the 'bringer,' is any person; the

'burden' is the mental and bodily complex of his living organism. The 'taking up,' the 'laying down,' of it are the one the exercise, the other the extinction, of craving. The simile is not so told as to convey what one would expect, namely, the laying down at death, the taking up at rebirth. But critics have written as if it did convey this: mind as well as body laid down at death, and a 'person' or ego left burdenless, or with a new burden. This is to garble the text. Mrs. Rhys Davids, Bud. Pay., 1923, p. 259 — Ed. [Ed., that is: the originl Editor]]

[2] Ponobhavika.

[3] Vibhava-taṇhā. Comy., uccheda-diṭṭhi (the annihilationist heresy). Owing to a later use of vibhava to mean expanded (vi-) becoming, or prosperity, this term used to be wrongly rendered in English.

[4] Nicchāto, 'with hunger stilled,' being niṭṭhaṇho.

[5] Parinibbuto: he has completed the round of existence.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
3. Bhāra Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

3. On the Burden

Sutta 23

Pariññā Suttaṃ

Understanding[1]

---

[26] [26]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"I will show you things that are to be understood,
likewise understanding.

Do ye listen carefully.

Give heed and I will speak."

"Even so, Master!"
replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"And what, brethren, are the things to be understood?

Body, brethren, is a thing to be understood,
feeling is a thing to be understood,
perception is a thing to be understood,
the activities are a thing to be understood,
consciousness is a thing to be understood,.

These, brethren, are
'the things that are to be understood.'

And what, brethren, is 'understanding'?

The destruction of lust,
the destruction of hatred,
the destruction of illusion:
that, brethren, is called
'understanding.'"

---

[1] V.M. 606. B. treats of the three worldly {loktya}pariññās or knowledges, viz.: Ñāta-tīraṇa-pahāna or to have come to know things, investigation and rejection of things.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
3. Bhāra Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

3. On the Burden

Sutta 24

Pariññā Suttaṃ

Understanding, or Thorough Knowledge[1]

---

[26] [26]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"Brethren, by not thoroughly knowing,
by not understanding,
by not being detached from,

by not renouncing[2] body,
one is unfit for the destruction of suffering.

By not thoroughly knowing,
by not understanding,
by not being detached from,
by not renouncing feeling,
one is unfit for the destruction of suffering.

By not thoroughly knowing,
by not understanding,
by not being detached from,
by not renouncing perception,
one is unfit for the destruction of suffering.

By not thoroughly knowing,
by not understanding,
by not being detached from,
by not renouncing the activities,
one is unfit for the destruction of suffering.

By not thoroughly knowing,
by not understanding,
by not being detached from,
by not renouncing consciousness,
one is unfit for the destruction of suffering.

But, brethren, by thoroughly knowing,
by understanding,
by being detached from,
by renouncing body,
one is fit for the destruction of suffering.

By thoroughly knowing,
by understanding,
by being detached from,
by renouncing feeling,
one is fit for the destruction of suffering.

By thoroughly knowing,
by understanding,
by being detached from,
by renouncing perception,
one is fit for the destruction of suffering.

By thoroughly knowing,
by understanding,
by being detached from,
by renouncing the activities,
one is fit for the destruction of suffering.

By thoroughly knowing,
by understanding,
by being detached from,
by renouncing consciousness,
one is fit for the destruction of suffering.

---

[1] Parijānaṃ, abhijānaṃ

[2] At Expos. ii, 489 this passage is wrongly referred to; also where it reads: 'not to be eliminated,' not should be omitted.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
3. Bhāra Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

3. On the Burden

Sutta 25

Chanda-Rāga Suttaṃ

Desire and Lust

---

[27] [26]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"That desire and lust, brethren,
which is in body,
do ye renounce them.

So will that body become rejected,
cut down [27] at the root,
made like the stump of a palm-tree,
made something that has ceased to be,[1]
so that it cannot grow up again in the future.

That desire and lust, brethren,
which is in feeling,
do ye renounce them.

So will that feeling become rejected,
cut down at the root,
made like the stump of a palm-tree,
made something that has ceased to be,
so that it cannot grow up again in the future.

That desire and lust, brethren,
which is in perception,
do ye renounce them.

So will that perception become rejected,
cut down at the root,
made like the stump of a palm-tree,
made something that has ceased to be,
so that it cannot grow up again in the future.

That desire and lust, brethren,
which is in the activities,
do ye renounce them.

So will those activities become rejected,
cut down at the root,
made like the stump of a palm-tree,
made something that has ceased to be,
so that they cannot grow up again in the future.

That desire and lust, brethren,
which is in consciousness,
do ye renounce them.

So will that consciousness become rejected,
cut down at the root,
made like the stump of a palm-tree,
made something that has ceased to be,
so that it cannot grow up again in the future."

---

[1] Wrongly referred to at Nidd. i, 53, where 'phasso is being discussed.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
3. Bhāra Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

3. On the Burden

Sutta 26

Paṭhama Assāda Suttaṃ

Satisfaction (1)

---

[27] [27]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"Formerly, brethren,
before I was enlightened with the supreme enlightenment,

when I was yet a Bodhisat,
I thought thus:

'Now what is the satisfaction,[1]
what is the misery of,
what is the way of escape
from body?

Now what is the satisfaction,
what is the misery of,
what is the way of escape
from feeling?

Now what is the satisfaction,
what is the misery of,
what is the way of escape
from perception?

Now what is the satisfaction,
what is the misery of,
what is the way of escape
from the activities?

Now what is the satisfaction,
what is the misery of,
what is the way of escape
from consciousness?'

§

Then, brethren, to me there came this thought:

'That ease, that pleasure
which arises owing to body:
that is the satisfaction of body.

That impermanence,
that suffering,
that instability
which is body,
that is the misery of body.

That restraint of desire and lust,
that renouncing of desire and lust
which are in body, -
that is the way of escape from body.

■

That ease, that pleasure
which arises owing to feeling:
that is the satisfaction of feeling.

That impermanence,
that suffering,
that instability
which is feeling,
that is the misery of feeling.

That restraint of desire and lust,
that renouncing of desire and lust
which are in feeling, -
that is the way of escape from feeling.

■

That ease, that pleasure
which arises owing to perception:
that is the satisfaction of perception.

That impermanence,
that suffering,
that instability
which is perception,
that is the misery of perception.

That restraint of desire and lust,
that renouncing of desire and lust
which are in perception, -
that is the way of escape from perception.

■

That ease, that pleasure
which arises owing to the activities:
that is the satisfaction of the activities.

That impermanence,
that suffering,
that instability
which is the activities,
that is the misery of the activities.

That restraint of desire and lust,
that renouncing of desire and lust
which are in the activities, -
that is the way of escape from the activities.

■

That ease, that pleasure
which arises owing to consciousness:
that is the satisfaction of the consciousness.

That impermanence,
that suffering,
that instability

which is consciousness,
that is the misery of consciousness.

That restraint of desire and lust,
that renouncing of desire and lust
which are in consciousness, -
that is the way of escape from consciousness.

§

[28] So long, brethren, as I did not thoroughly understand,
as they really are,
the satisfaction of these five factors of grasping as such,
the misery of it as such,
the way of escape from it as such, -
so long, brethren, was I doubtful
whether I was enlightened
with that supreme enlightenment,
unsurpassed in the world
with its devas,
its Māras,
its Brahmas,
among the host of recluses and brahmins
and of devas and men.

But as soon, brethren, as I thoroughly understood,
as they really are,
the satisfaction of these five factors of grasping as such,
the misery of it as such,
the way of escape from it as such, -
then, brethren, I knew for certain
that I was enlightened
with that supreme enlightenment

unsurpassed in the world,
with its devas,
its Māras,
its Brahmas,
among the host of recluses and brahmins,
and of devas and men.

Then, indeed, the knowledge arose in me
and insight arose in me: -

'Sure is my release.

This is my last birth.

There is no more rebirth for me now.'"[2]

---

[1] Cf. S. ii, 171.

[2] See The First Sermon, Vin i, 10; S. v, 420. Buddhist Suttas (R.D.), 152-3. Also K.S. ii, 114.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
3. Bhāra Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

3. On the Burden

Sutta 27

Dutiya Assāda Suttaṃ

Satisfaction (2)

---

[29] [28]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"Brethren, I practised
the search after the satisfaction

which is in body,
and to this conclusion I came:

'In so far as there is satisfaction of body,
that by insight have I rightly seen.'

Brethren, I practised
the search after the misery
which is in body,
and to this conclusion I came:

'In so far as there is misery of body,
that by insight have I rightly seen.'

Brethren, I practised
the search after the way of escape from body,
and to this conclusion I came:

'In so far as there is a way of escape from body,
that by insight have I rightly seen.'

■

"Brethren, I practised
the search after the satisfaction
which is in feeling,
and to this conclusion I came:

'In so far as there is satisfaction of feeling,
that by insight have I rightly seen.'

Brethren, I practised
the search after the misery
which is in feeling,
and to this conclusion I came:

'In so far as there is misery of feeling,
that by insight have I rightly seen.'

Brethren, I practised
the search after the way of escape from feeling,
and to this conclusion I came:

'In so far as there is a way of escape from feeling,
that by insight have I rightly seen.'

■

"Brethren, I practised
the search after the satisfaction
which is in perception,
and to this conclusion I came:

'In so far as there is satisfaction of perception,
that by insight have I rightly seen.'

Brethren, I practised
the search after the misery
which is in perception,
and to this conclusion I came:

'In so far as there is misery of perception,
that by insight have I rightly seen.'

Brethren, I practised
the search after the way of escape from perception,
and to this conclusion I came:

'In so far as there is a way of escape from perception,
that by insight have I rightly seen.'

■

[29] Brethren, I practised
the search after the satisfaction
which is in the activities,
and to this conclusion I came:

'In so far as there is satisfaction of the activities,
that by insight have I rightly seen.'

Brethren, I practised
the search after the misery
which is in the activities,
and to this conclusion I came:

'In so far as there is misery of the activities,
that by insight have I rightly seen.'

Brethren, I practised
the search after the way of escape from the activities,
and to this conclusion I came:

'In so far as there is a way of escape from the activities,
that by insight have I rightly seen.'

■

"Brethren, I practised
the search after the satisfaction
which is in consciousness,
and to this conclusion I came:

'In so far as there is satisfaction of consciousness,
that by insight have I rightly seen.'

Brethren, I practised
the search after the misery
which is in consciousness,
and to this conclusion I came:

'In so far as there is misery of consciousness,
that by insight have I rightly seen.'

Brethren, I practised
the search after the way of escape from consciousness,
and to this conclusion I came:

'In so far as there is a way of escape from consciousness,
that by insight have I rightly seen.'

§

So long, brethren, as I did not thoroughly understand,
as they really are,
the satisfaction of these five factors of grasping as such,
the misery of it as such,
the way of escape from it as such, -
so long, brethren, was I doubtful
whether I was enlightened
with that supreme enlightenment,
unsurpassed in the world
with its devas,
its Māras,
its Brahmas,
among the host of recluses and brahmins
and of devas and men.

But as soon, brethren, as I thoroughly understood,
as they really are,
the satisfaction of these five factors of grasping as such,
the misery of it as such,
the way of escape from it as such, -
then, brethren, I knew for certain

that I was enlightened
with that supreme enlightenment
unsurpassed in the world,
with its devas,
its Māras,
its Brahmas,
among the host of recluses and brahmins,
and of devas and men.

Then, indeed, the knowledge arose in me
and insight aröse in me: -

'Sure is my release.

This is my last birth.

There is no more rebirth for me now.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
3. Bhāra Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

3. On the Burden

Sutta 28

Tatiya Assāda Suttaṃ

Satisfaction (3)

---

[29] [29]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"Brethren, if there were not this satisfaction[1] which comes from body, beings would not lust after body.

But inasmuch as there is satisfaction in body,
beings lust after body.

If misery, brethren, belonged not to body,
beings would not be repelled by body.

But inasmuch as there is misery in body,
beings are repelled by body.

If there were no way of escape, brethren, from body,
beings could not escape from body.

But inasmuch as there is a way of escape from body,
beings do escape from body.

■

Brethren, if there were not this satisfaction which comes from feeling, beings would not lust after feeling.

But inasmuch as there is satisfaction in feeling,
beings lust after feeling.

If misery, brethren, belonged not to feeling,
beings would not be repelled by feeling.

But inasmuch as there is misery in feeling,
beings are repelled by feeling.

If there were no way of escape, brethren, from feeling,
beings could not escape from feeling.

But inasmuch as there is a way of escape from feeling,
beings do escape from feeling.

■

Brethren, if there were not this satisfaction which comes from perception, beings would not lust after perception.

But inasmuch as there is satisfaction in perception,
beings lust after feeling.

If misery, brethren, belonged not to perception,
beings would not be repelled by perception.

But inasmuch as there is misery in perception,
beings are repelled by perception.

If there were no way of escape, brethren, from perception,
beings could not escape from perception.

But inasmuch as there is a way of escape from perception, beings do escape from perception.

■

Brethren, if there were not this satisfaction which comes from the activities, beings would not lust after the activities.

But inasmuch as there is satisfaction in the activities,
beings lust after the activities.

If misery, brethren, belonged not to the activities,
beings would not be repelled by the activities.

But inasmuch as there is misery in the activities,
beings are repelled by the activities.

If there were no way of escape, brethren, from the activities,
beings could not escape from the activities.

But inasmuch as there is a way of escape from the activities,
beings do escape from the activities.

■

Brethren, if there were not this satisfaction which comes from consciousness, beings would not lust after consciousness.

But inasmuch as there is satisfaction in consciousness,
beings lust after consciousness.

If misery, brethren, belonged not to consciousness,
beings would not be repelled by consciousness.

But inasmuch as there is misery in consciousness,
beings are repelled by consciousness.

If there were no way of escape, brethren, from consciousness, beings could not escape from consciousness.

But inasmuch as there is a way of escape from consciousness, beings do escape from consciousness.

■

So long, brethren, as beings have not thoroughly understood,
as they really are,
the satisfaction as such,
the misery as such,
the way of escape as such
in these five factors based on grasping, -
so long, brethren,
have beings
the world and its gods,
its Maras,
its [30] Brahmas,
the host of recluses and brahmins,
devas and men
not remained aloof,

detached,
separated,
with the barriers to the mind done away with.[ed1]

But so soon, brethren, as beings thoroughly understand,
even as they really are,
the satisfaction as such,
the misery as such,
the way of escape as such
in these five factors based on grasping, - then, brethren, beings
and the world
with its devas,
its Maras,
its Brahmas,
the host of recluses and brahmins,
devas and men
do remain aloof,
detached,
separated,
with the barriers of mind done away with."

---

[1] Cf. K.S. ii, 114.

[ed1] I have rearranged the order of terms here to match the following paragraph. The original makes no sense.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
3. Bhāra Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

3. On the Burden

Sutta 29

Abhinandana Suttaṃ

Taking Delight In

---

[31] [30]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the brethren, saying:

"Brethren."

"Yes, lord," replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"He who takes delight, brethren, in body,
takes delight in suffering.

He who takes delight in suffering,
I declare,
that he is not released from suffering.

"He who takes delight, brethren, in feeling,
takes delight in suffering.

He who takes delight in suffering,
I declare,
that he is not released from suffering.

"He who takes delight, brethren, in perception,
takes delight in suffering.

He who takes delight in suffering,
I declare,
that he is not released from suffering.

"He who takes delight, brethren, in the activites,
takes delight in suffering.

He who takes delight in suffering,
I declare,
that he is not released from suffering.

"He who takes delight, brethren, in consciousness,
takes delight in suffering.

He who takes delight in suffering,
I declare,
that he is not released from suffering.

§

"He who takes not delight, brethren, in body,
takes not delight in suffering.

He who takes not delight in suffering,
I declare,
that he is released from suffering.

"He who takes not delight, brethren, in feeling,
takes not delight in suffering.

He who takes not delight in suffering,
I declare,
that he is released from suffering.

"He who takes not delight, brethren, in perception,
takes not delight in suffering.

He who takes not delight in suffering,
I declare,
that he is released from suffering.

"He who takes not delight, brethren, in the activites,
takes not delight in suffering.

He who takes not delight in suffering,
I declare,
that he is released from suffering.

"He who takes not delight, brethren, in consciousness,
takes not delight in suffering.

He who takes not delight in suffering,
I declare,
that he is released from suffering.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
3. Bhāra Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

3. On the Burden

Sutta 30

Uppāda Suttaṃ

Uprising

---

[31] [30]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"That, brethren, which is the uprising,
the persisting,
the rebirth,

the manifestation of body, -
that is the uprising of suffering,
the persisting of diseases,
the manifestation of decay and death.

■

That, brethren, which is the uprising,
the persisting,
the rebirth,
the manifestation of feeling, -
that is the uprising of suffering,
the persisting of diseases,
the manifestation of decay and death.

■

That, brethren, which is the uprising,
the persisting,
the rebirth,
the manifestation of perception, -
that is the uprising of suffering,
the persisting of diseases,
the manifestation of decay and death.

■

That, brethren, which is the uprising,
the persisting,
the rebirth,
the manifestation of the activities, -
that is the uprising of suffering,
the persisting of diseases,
the manifestation of decay and death.

■

That, brethren, which is the uprising,
the persisting,
the rebirth,
the manifestation of consciousness, -
that is the uprising of suffering,
the persisting of diseases,
the manifestation of decay and death.

§

That which is the ceasing,
the quelling,
the going out of body, -
that is the ceasing,
the quelling,
the going out of suffering.

■

That which is the ceasing,
the quelling,
the going out of feeling, -
that is the ceasing,
the quelling,
the going out of suffering.

■

That which is the ceasing,
the quelling,
the going out of perception, -
that is the ceasing,

the quelling,
the going out of suffering.

■

That which is the ceasing,
the quelling,
the going out of the activities, -
that is the ceasing,
the quelling,
the going out of suffering.

■

That which is the ceasing,
the quelling,
the going out of consciousness, -
that is the ceasing,
the quelling,
the going out of suffering."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
3. Bhāra Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

3. On the Burden

Sutta 31

Agha-Mūla Suttaṃ

The Root of Pain[1]

---

[32] [31]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"I will teach you, brethren, pain
and the root of pain.

Do ye listen to it.

And what, brethren, is pain?

Body, brethren, is pain;
feeling is pain;
perception, is pain;
the activities, are pain;
consciousness is pain.

That, brethren, is the meaning of pain.

And what, brethren, is the root of pain?

It is this craving
that leads downward to rebirth,
along with the lure
and the lust,
that lingers longingly now here,
now there:
namely, the craving for sense,
the craving for rebirth,
the craving to have done with rebirth."

---

[1] Agha. Comy. Dukkhaṃ. Cf. K.S. ii, 116, n.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
3. Bhāra Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

3. On the Burden

Sutta 32

Pabhangu Suttaṃ

The Corruptible[1]

---

[32] [31]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"I will teach you, brethren, the corruptible and the incorruptible.

Do ye listen to it.

And what, brethren, is the corruptible, and what the incorruptible?

Body, brethren, is corruptible.

The ceasing,
the sinking of it to rest,[2]
the coming to an end of it,
that is the incorruptible.

Feeling, brethren, is corruptible.

The ceasing,
the sinking of it to rest,
the coming to an end of it,
that is the incorruptible.

Perception, brethren, is corruptible.

The ceasing,
the sinking of it to rest,
the coming to an end of it,
that is the incorruptible.

is corruptible, likewise

The activities, brethren, are corruptible.

The ceasing,
the sinking of them to rest,
the coming to an end of them,
that is the incorruptible.

Consciousness, brethren, is corruptible.

The ceasing,
the sinking of it to rest,

the coming to an end of it,
that is the incorruptible.

---

[1] Pobhangu, or brittle. Cf. S. v, 92, where the word is used of gold. Comy. pabhijjana sabhāvaṃ, 'of the nature to crumble away.'

[2] Cf. K.S. ii, 44 and n. [Ed.: ?] Expos. ii, 489; M. i, 140; Nidd. ii, 438; Pap. 234, all of which passages add dīgha-rattaṃ. Comy., 'by putting away desire and lust.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
4. Na Tumhāka Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

4. On Not Yours

Sutta 33

Paṭhama Na Tumhāka Suttaṃ

Not Yours (1)[1]

---

[33] [31]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"What is not of you, brethren,
put it away.

Putting it away will be for your profit and welfare.

[32] And what, brethren, is not of you?

Body, brethren, is not of you.

Put it away.

Putting it away
will be for your profit and welfare.

Feeling, brethren, is not of you.

Put it away.

Putting it away
will be for your profit and welfare.

Perception, brethren, is not of you.

Put it away.

Putting it away
will be for your profit and welfare.

The activities, brethren, are not of you.

Put them away.

Putting them away
will be for your profit and welfare.

Consciousness, brethren, is not of you.

Put it away.

Putting it away
will be for your profit and welfare.

Just as if, brethren,
a man should gather,
burn,
or do what he please
with all the grass,
all the sticks,
branches
and stalks
in this Jeta Grove, -
pray would ye say:

'This man is gathering, burning us,
doing what he please with us?'"

"Surely not, lord.

Why so?

Because, lord, this is not our self,
nor of the nature of self."

"Even so, brethren, body is not of you.

Put it away.

Putting it away
will be for your profit and welfare.

Feeling, brethren, is not of you.

Put it away.

Putting it away
will be for your profit and welfare.

Perception, brethren, is not of you.

Put it away.

Putting it away
will be for your profit and welfare.

The activities, brethren, are not of you.

Put them away.

Putting them away
will be for your profit and welfare.

Consciousness, brethren, is not of you.

Put it away.

Putting it away
will be for your profit and welfare.[2]

---

[1] Upasamo. Not literally 'rest.'

[2] On the inference that there is here implied a self who is not body or mind, see Mrs. Rhys Davids, Bud. Psy., 2nd ed., p. 284.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
4. Na Tumhāka Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

4. On Not Yours

Sutta 34

Dutiya Na Tumhāka Suttaṃ

Not Yours (2)

---

[34] [32]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"What is not of you, brethren,
put it away.

Putting it away will be for your profit and welfare.

And what, brethren, is not of you?

Body, brethren, is not of you.

Put it away.

Putting it away
will be for your profit and welfare.

Feeling, brethren, is not of you.

Put it away.

Putting it away
will be for your profit and welfare.

Perception, brethren, is not of you.

Put it away.

Putting it away
will be for your profit and welfare.

The activities, brethren, are not of you.

Put them away.

Putting them away
will be for your profit and welfare.

Consciousness, brethren, is not of you.

Put it away.

Putting it away
will be for your profit and welfare."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
4. Na Tumhāka Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

4. On Not Yours

Sutta 35

Paṭhama Bhikkhu Suttaṃ

The Mendicant[1]

---

[34] [32]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī
In jeta Grove,
at Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

I

Then a certain brother came to the Exalted One,
saluted him
and sat down at one side.

So seated, that brother thus addressed the Exalted One:

"Well for me,[2] lord,
if the Exalted One would teach me a doctrine in a few words,
so that hearing the teaching of the Exalted One
I might dwell solitary,
secluded,
zealous,
ardent [33]
and aspiring.'

(The Exalted One said):

"That for which a brother has a bias,
by that he is reckoned.[3]

That for which he does not have a bias,
by that he is not reckoned."

"I understand, 0 Exalted One!

I understand, 0 Well-farer!"

"But how far, brother, do you understand in full
the meaning of what I have thus concisely stated?"

"If one cleave to body, lord,
by that he gets a name.

If he cleave to feeling,
by that he gets a name.

If he cleave to perception,
by that he gets a name.

If he cleave to the activities,
by that he gets a name.

If he cleave to consciousness,
by that he gets a name.

And if, lord, he cleavc not to body,
he gets no name thereby.

If he cleavc not to feeling,
he gets no name thereby.

If he cleavc not to perception,
he gets no name thereby.

If he cleavc not to the activities,
he gets no name thereby.

If he cleavc not to consciousness,
he gets no name thereby."

■

"Well said! Well said, brother!

Well do you understand in full
the meaning of what I concisely stated.

"If one cleave to body,
by that he gets a name.

If one cleave to feeling,
by that he gets a name.

If one cleave to perception,
by that he gets a name.

If one cleave to the activities,
by that he gets a name.

If one cleave to consciousness,
by that he gets a name.

And if one cleavc not to body,
he gets no name thereby.

If one cleavc not to feeling,
he gets no name thereby.

If one cleavc not to perception,
he gets no name thereby.

If one cleavc not to the activities,
he gets no name thereby.

If one cleavc not to consciousness,
he gets no name thereby.

That is how to understand in full
the meaning of what I concisely stated."

Then that brother welcomed the saying of the Exalted One,
and was pleased thereat,
and he rose from his seat,
saluted the Exalted One by the right
and departed.

II.

Thereupon that brother,
living solitary,

secluded,
zealous,
ardent and aspiring,
in no long time attained that goal
for which the clansmen rightly leave home
for the homeless life,
even that unrivalled goal of righteous living;
attained it even in that very life:
and knowing it for himself,
realizing it for himself,
abode therein,
so that he came to know:

"De- [34] stroyed is rebirth,
lived is the righteous life,
done is my task,
for life in these conditions
there is no hereafter!"[4]

And that brother was now one of the saints.

---

[1] Trans. Warren, p. 161. Cf. S. ii, 244; K.S. li, 165.

[2] Sādhu. For this sense of the word see Sutta-Nipāta Comy. i, 176.

[3] Sankhaṃ gacchati, 'goes to a reckoning, comes to be called' Comy. paraphrases paññattiṃ gacchati, 'is characterised,' 'is reckoned somebody.' Warren, 'comes to be' (see below, § 36) Mrs Rhys Davids wntes: I think the teaching is this: if your bias, bent, leaning, preoccupation is towards the life of tho body, or the things of the worldly mind, you come to be reckoned accordingly; your measure is taken thereby - i.e., you are materialistic, a pleasure-lover, or you are clever, wordy, astute, etc. The true way is to turn aside from both.

[4] Supra ii, § 12.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
4. Na Tumhāka Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

4. On Not Yours

Sutta 36

Dutiya Bhikkhu Suttaṃ

The Mendicant (2)

---

[36] [34]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

I

Then a certain brother came to the Exalted One,
saluted him
and sat down at one side.

So seated, that brother thus addressed the Exalted One:

"Well for me, lord,
if the Exalted One would teach me a doctrine in a few words,
so that hearing the teaching of the Exalted One
I might dwell solitary,
secluded,
zealous,
ardent
and aspiring."

(The Exalted One said):

"That for which one has a bias,
one takes as measure.[1]

That which one takes as measure,
by that he is reckoned.

That for which one has a no bias,
one takes not as measure.

That which one takes not as measure,
by that he is not reckoned."

"I understand, 0 Exalted One!

I understand, 0 Well-farer!"

"But how far, brother, do you understand in full
the meaning of what I have thus concisely stated?"

"If one cleave to body, lord,
that one takes as a measure.[ed1]

That which he takes as a measure,
by that he gets a name.

If one cleave to feeling,
that one takes as a measure.

That which he takes as a measure,
by that he gets a name.

If one cleave to perception,
that one takes as a measure.

That which he takes as a measure,
by that he gets a name.

If one cleave to the activities,
that one takes as a measure.

That which he takes as a measure,
by that he gets a name.

If one cleave to consciousness,
that one takes as a measure.

That which he takes as a measure,
by that he gets a name.

■

If one cleave not to body, lord,
that one takes not as a measure.

That which he takes not as a measure,
he gets no name thereby.

If one cleave not to feeling,
that one takes not as a measure.

That which he takes not as a measure,
he gets no name thereby.

If one cleave not to perception,
that one takes not as a measure.

That which he takes not as a measure,
he gets no name thereby.

If one cleave not to the activities,
that one takes not as a measure.

That which he takes not as a measure,
he gets no name thereby.

If one cleave not to consciousness,
that one takes not as a measure.

That which he takes not as a measure,
he gets no name thereby."

■

"Well said! Well said, brother!

Well do you understand in full
the meaning of what I concisely stated.

If one cleave to body,
that one takes as a measure.

That which one takes as a measure,
by that one gets a name.

If one cleave to feeling,
that one takes as a measure.

That which one takes as a measure,
by that one gets a name.

If one cleave to perception,
that one takes as a measure.

That which one takes as a measure,
by that one gets a name.

If one cleave to the activities,
that one takes as a measure.

That which one takes as a measure,
by that one gets a name.

If one cleave to consciousness,
that one takes as a measure.

That which one takes as a measure,
by that one gets a name.

If one cleave not to body, lord,
that one takes not as a measure.

That which one takes not as a measure,
one gets no name thereby.

If one cleave not to feeling,
that one takes not as a measure.

That which one takes not as a measure,
one gets no name thereby.

If one cleave not to perception,
that one takes not as a measure.

That which one takes not as a measure,
one gets no name thereby.

If one cleave not to the activities,
that one takes not as a measure.

That which one takes not as a measure,
one gets no name thereby.

If one cleave not to consciousness,
that one takes not as a measure.

That which one takes not as a measure,
one gets no name thereby.

That is how to understand in full
the meaning of what I concisely stated."

Then that brother welcomed the saying of the Exalted One,
and was pleased thereat,
and he rose from his seat,
saluted the Exalted One by the right
and departed.

II.

Thereupon that brother,
living solitary,
secluded,
zealous,
ardent and aspiring,
in no long time attained that goal
for which the clansmen rightly leave home
for the homeless life,
even that unrivalled goal of righteous living;
attained it even in that very life:
and knowing it for himself,
realizing it for himself,
abode therein,
so that he came to know:

"Destroyed is rebirth,
lived is the righteous life,
done is my task,
for life in these conditions
there is no hereafter!"

And that brother was now one of the saints.

---

[1] Comy. 'That body which one cleaves to ... perishes when the cleaving dies away. When the object dissolves, the objective states no longer hold together.' So we read (K.S. ii, 45), 'if we are occupied about something, this becomes an object for the persistence of consciousness, whence birth takes place.'

[ed1] Woodward's abridgment leaves us without knowing how he would have constructed the following which is not identical to the previous sutta. I have reconstructed it as I believe he might have done using his terminology.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
4. Na Tumhāka Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

4. On Not Yours

Sutta 37

Paṭhama Ānanda Suttaṃ

Ānanda (1)

"Birth is said to be th' uprising:
passing away is called the term:
Ageing, instabibty; fixity, life's maintenance."

Cf. A. ii. 152.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
4. Na Tumhāka Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

4. On Not Yours

Sutta 38

Dutiya Ānanda Suttaṃ

Ānanda (2)

---

[38] [35]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī
In jeta Grove,
at Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the venerable Ānanda came to the Exalted One,
saluted him
and sat down at one side.

As he sat at one side,
the Exalted One thus addressed the venerable Ānanda:

"If they were to ask you, Ānanda,

'Friend Ānanda, Ānanda,
what are the things
in which uprising has been discerned,
in which passing away has been discerned,
in which otherwiseness while they last has been discerned?

What are the things
in which uprising will be discerned,
in which passing away will be discerned,
in which otherwiseness while they last will be discerned?

What are the things
in which uprising is even now discerned,
in which passing away is even now discerned,
in which otherwiseness while they last is even now discerned?'

Thus questioned, Ānanda,
what would you reply?"

§

"If I were thus questioned, lord:

'Friend Ānanda,
what are the things
in which uprising has been discerned,
in which passing away has been discerned,
in which otherwiseness while they last has been discerned?

What are the things
in which uprising will be discerned,
in which passing away will be discerned,
in which otherwiseness while they last will be discerned?

What are the things
in which uprising is even now discerned,
in which passing away is even now discerned,
in which otherwiseness while they last is even now discerned?'

thus should I reply:

'The body, friends, which is past,
perished,
altered,
of which uprising has been discerned,
of which passing away has been discerned,
of which otherwiseness while it lasts has been discerned;

the feeling, friends, which is past,
perished,
altered,
of which uprising has been discerned,
of which passing away has been discerned,
of which otherwiseness while it lasts has been discerned;

the perception, friends, which is past,
perished,
altered,
of which uprising has been discerned,
of which passing away has been discerned,
of which otherwiseness while it lasts has been discerned;

the activities, friends, which are past,
perished,
altered,
of which uprising has been discerned,

of which passing away has been discerned,
of which otherwiseness while they last has been discerned;

the consciousness, friends, which is past,
perished,
altered,
of which uprising has been discerned,
of which passing away has been discerned,
of which otherwiseness while it lasts has been discerned;

these, friends, are the things
in which uprising has been discerned,
in which passing away has been discerned,
in which otherwiseness while they last has been discerned.

■

Then again, friends, of that body which is unborn,
not yet manifested,
uprising will be discerned,
passing away will be discerned,
otherwiseness while it lasts, will be discerned;

of that feeling which is unborn,
not yet manifested,
uprising will be discerned,
passing away will be discerned,
otherwiseness while it lasts, will be discerned;

of that perception which is unborn,
not yet manifested,
uprising will be discerned,
passing away will be discerned,
otherwiseness while it lasts, will be discerned;

of those activities which are unborn,
not yet manifested,

uprising will be discerned,
passing away will be discerned,
otherwiseness while they last, will be discerned;

of that consciousness which is unborn,
not yet manifested,
uprising will be discerned,
passing away will be discerned,
otherwiseness while it lasts, will be discerned;

these, friends, are the things
in which uprising will be discerned,
in which passing away will be discerned,
in which otherwiseness while they last will be discerned.

■

Then again, friends, of that body which has been born
and manifested
uprising is even now discerned,
passing away is even now discerned,
otherwiseness while it lasts is even now discerned;

of that feeling which has been born
and manifested
uprising is even now discerned,
passing away is even now discerned,
otherwiseness while it lasts is even now discerned;

of that perception which has been born
and manifested
uprising is even now discerned,
passing away is even now discerned,
otherwiseness while it lasts is even now discerned;

of those activities which have been born
and manifested

uprising is even now discerned,
passing away is even now discerned,
otherwiseness while they last is even now discerned;

of that consciousness which has been born
and manifested
uprising is even now discerned,
passing away is even now discerned,
otherwiseness while it lasts is even now discerned;

these, friends, are the things
in which uprising is even now discerned,
in which passing away is even now discerned,
in which otherwiseness while they last is even now discerned.'

Thus questioned, lord, thus should I reply."

§

"Well said, Ānanda!

Well said, Ānanda!

It is indeed that body which is past,
perished,
altered,
of which uprising has been discerned,
of which passing away has been discerned,
of which otherwiseness while it lasts has been discerned;

feeling which is past,
perished,
altered,

of which uprising has been discerned,
of which passing away has been discerned,
of which otherwiseness while it lasts has been discerned;

perception which is past,
perished,
altered,
of which uprising has been discerned,
of which passing away has been discerned,
of which otherwiseness while it lasts has been discerned;

the activities which are past,
perished,
altered,
of which uprising has been discerned,
of which passing away has been discerned,
of which otherwiseness while they last has been discerned;

consciousness which is past,
perished,
altered,
of which uprising has been discerned,
of which passing away has been discerned,
of which otherwiseness while they last has been discerned;

which are the things
in which uprising has been discerned,
in which passing away has been discerned,
in which otherwiseness while they last has been discerned.

■

Then again of body which is unborn,
not yet manifested,
uprising will be discerned,
passing away will be discerned,
otherwiseness while it lasts, will be discerned;

of feeling which is unborn,
not yet manifested,
uprising will be discerned,
passing away will be discerned,
otherwiseness while it lasts, will be discerned;

of perception which is unborn,
not yet manifested,
uprising will be discerned,
passing away will be discerned,
otherwiseness while it lasts, will be discerned;

of activities which are unborn,
not yet manifested,
uprising will be discerned,
passing away will be discerned,
otherwiseness while they last, will be discerned;

of consciousness which is unborn,
not yet manifested,
uprising will be discerned,
passing away will be discerned,
otherwiseness while it lasts, will be discerned;

these are the things
in which uprising will be discerned,
in which passing away will be discerned,
in which otherwiseness while they last will be discerned.

■

Then again of body which has been born
and manifested
uprising is even now discerned,
passing away is even now discerned,
otherwiseness while it lasts is even now discerned;

of that feeling which has been born
and manifested
uprising is even now discerned,
passing away is even now discerned,
otherwiseness while it lasts is even now discerned

of that perception which has been born
and manifested
uprising is even now discerned,
passing away is even now discerned,
otherwiseness while it lasts is even now discerned;

of those activities which have been born
and manifested
uprising is even now discerned,
passing away is even now discerned,
otherwiseness while they last is even now discerned

of that consciousness which has been born
and manifested
uprising is even now discerned,
passing away is even now discerned,
otherwiseness while it lasts is even now discerned;

these are the things
in which uprising is even now discerned,
in which passing away is even now discerned,
in which otherwiseness while they last is even now discerned.

Thus questioned, Ānanda,
thus should you make answer."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
4. Na Tumhāka Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

4. On Not Yours

Sutta 39

Paṭhama Anu-Dhamma Suttaṃ

Conforming to the Norm (1)

---

[40] [36]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"Of that brother, brethren,
who is versed in conformity to the Norm,[1]
this is the accordant practice:

He should abide in the utter disgust for body,
he should abide in the utter disgust for feeling,
he should abide in the utter disgust for perception,
he should abide in the utter disgust for the activities,
he should abide in the utter disgust for consciousness.

So abiding in the utter disgust for body,
in the utter disgust for feeling,
in the utter disgust for perception,
in the utter disgust for the activities,
in the utter disgust for consciousness,
he fully discerns body,
he fully discerns feeling,
he fully discerns perception,
he fully discerns the activities,
he fully discerns consciousness.

Fully discerning body,
fully discerning feeling,
fully discerning perception,
fully discerning the activities,
fully discerning consciousness;
he is released from body,
he is released from feeling,
he is released from perception,
he is released from activities,
he is released from consciousness,
he is released from rebirth,
old age and decay,
sorrow and grief,
from woe,
lamentation
and despair.

I declare him to be released from suffering."

[1] Anudhammo. Comy. Anuloma-dhammo, 'in accordance or in due order.' Cf. S. ii, 18; K.S. ii, 14

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
4. Na Tumhāka Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

4. On Not Yours

Sutta 40

Dutiya Anu-Dhamma Suttaṃ

Conforming to the Norm (2)

---

[36]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"Of that brother, brethren, who is versed in conformity to the Norm,
this is the accordant practice:

He should abide seeing the impermanence of body,
he should abide seeing the impermanence of feeling,
he should abide seeing the impermanence of perception,
he should abide seeing the impermanence of the activities,
he should abide seeing the impermanence of consciousness.

So abiding seeing the impermanence of body,
seeing the impermanence of feeling,
seeing the impermanence of perception,
seeing the impermanence of the activities,
seeing the impermanence of consciousness,
he fully discerns body,
he fully discerns feeling,
he fully discerns perception,
he fully discerns the activities,
he fully discerns consciousness.

Fully discerning body,
fully discerning feeling,
fully discerning perception,
fully discerning the activities,
fully discerning consciousness;
he is released from body,
he is released from feeling,
he is released from perception,
he is released from activities,
he is released from consciousness,
he is released from rebirth,
old age and decay,
sorrow and grief,
from woe,
lamentation
and despair.

I declare him to be released from suffering."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
4. Na Tumhāka Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

4. On Not Yours

Sutta 41

Tatiya Anu-Dhamma Suttaṃ

Conforming to the Norm (3)

---

[36]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"Of that brother, brethren, who is versed in conformity to the Norm,
this is the accordant practice:

He should abide seeing the suffering of body,
he should abide seeing the suffering of feeling,
he should abide seeing the suffering of perception,
he should abide seeing the suffering of the activities,
he should abide seeing the suffering of consciousness.

So abiding seeing the suffering of body,
seeing the suffering of feeling,
seeing the suffering of perception,
seeing the suffering of the activities,
seeing the suffering of consciousness,
he fully discerns body,
he fully discerns feeling,
he fully discerns perception,
he fully discerns the activities,
he fully discerns consciousness.

Fully discerning body,
fully discerning feeling,
fully discerning perception,
fully discerning the activities,
fully discerning consciousness;
he is released from body,
he is released from feeling,
he is released from perception,
he is released from activities,
he is released from consciousness,
he is released from rebirth,
old age and decay,
sorrow and grief,
from woe,
lamentation
and despair.

I declare him to be released from suffering."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
4. Na Tumhāka Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

4. On Not Yours

Sutta 42

Catuttha Anu-Dhamma Suttaṃ

Conforming to the Norm (4)

---

[36]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"Of that brother, brethren, who is versed in conformity to the Norm,
this is the accordant practice:

He should abide seeing the lack of self of body,
he should abide seeing the lack of self in feeling,
he should abide seeing the lack of self in perception,
he should abide seeing the lack of self in the activities,
he should abide seeing the lack of self in consciousness.

So abiding seeing the lack of self in body,
seeing the lack of self in feeling,
seeing the lack of self in perception,
seeing the lack of self in the activities,
seeing the lack of self in consciousness,
he fully discerns body,
he fully discerns feeling,
he fully discerns perception,
he fully discerns the activities,
he fully discerns consciousness.

Fully discerning body,
fully discerning feeling,
fully discerning perception,
fully discerning the activities,
fully discerning consciousness;
he is released from body,
he is released from feeling,
he is released from perception,
he is released from activities,
he is released from consciousness,
he is released from rebirth,
old age and decay,
sorrow and grief,
from woe,
lamentation
and despair.

I declare him to be released from suffering."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
5. Atta-Dīpa Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

5. On Being an Island to Self

Atta-Dīpa Suttaṃ

Sutta 43

An Island to Self[1]

---

[42] [37]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

Then (the Exalted One) said:—

"Do ye abide, brethren,
islands unto yourselves,
refuges unto yourselves:

taking refuge in none other;
islanded by the Norm,
taking refuge in the Norm,
seeking refuge in none other.

By them who are islands unto themselves, brethren,
who are a refuge unto themselves,
who take refuge in none other,
who are islanded by the Norm,
take refuge in the Norm,
seek refuge in none other
— by them the very source of things[2]
is to be searched for thus:

'What is the source of sorrow and grief,
of woe, lamentation and despair?

■

What is their origin?'

What then, brethren,
is the source,
the origin of these?

Herein, brethren,
the untaught many-folk,
who discern not those that are Ariyans,
who are unskilled in the Ariyan doctrine,
untrained in the Ariyan doctrine,
who discern not those who are worthy ones,
who are unskilled in the worthy doctrine,
untrained in the worthy doctrine,
— these regard the body as the self,
the self as having body,

body as being in the self,
the self as being in the body.

But [the well-taught Ariyan disciple][3]
beholding, brethren,
the impermanence of body,
its instability,
its coming to an end,
its ceasing, says:

'Formerly also,
as well as now,
all bodies were impermanent and suffering,
unstable in nature.'

Thus seeing it as it really is,
by perfect insight,
he puts away from him
all sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair;
nor is he troubled at [38] their putting away,
but untroubled lives at ease
and so living at ease
that brother is called
'one who is rid of all that.'[4]

■

Beholding, brethren,
the impermanence of feeling,
its instability,
its coming to an end,
its ceasing,
he says:

'Formerly also,
as well as now,
all feeling was impermanent and suffering,
unstable in its nature.'

Thus seeing it as it really is,
by perfect insight,
he puts away from him
all sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair:
nor is he troubled at their putting away,
but untroubled lives at ease,
and so living at ease
this brother is called:
'One who is rid of all that.'

■

Beholding, brethren,
the impermanence of perception,
its instability,
its coming to an end,
its ceasing,
he says:

'Formerly also,
as well as now,
all perception was impermanent and suffering,
unstable in its nature.'

Thus seeing it as it really is,
by perfect insight,
he puts away from him
all sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair:
nor is he troubled at their putting away,

but untroubled lives at ease,
and so living at ease
this brother is called:
'One who is rid of all that.'

■

Beholding, brethren,
the impermanence of the activities,
their instability,
their coming to an end,
their ceasing,
he says:

'Formerly also,
as well as now,
all the activities were impermanent and suffering,
unstable in its nature.'

Thus seeing it as it really is,
by perfect insight,
he puts away from him
all sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair:
nor is he troubled at their putting away,
but untroubled lives at ease,
and so living at ease
this brother is called:
'One who is rid of all that.'

■

Beholding, brethren,
the impermanence of consciousness,
its instability,
its coming to an end,

its ceasing,
he says:

'Formerly also,
as well as now,
all consciousness was impermanent and suffering,
unstable in its nature.'

Thus seeing it as it really is,
by perfect insight,
he puts away from him
all sorrow and grief,
woe, lamentation and despair:
nor is he troubled at their putting away,
but untroubled lives at ease,
and so living at ease
this brother is called:
'One who is rid of all that.'"

---

[1]Lit., 'self-islanded'; usually rendered 'lamps (dīpa) unto yourselves.' Comy., Attadipa = tāṇaṇ, leṇaṇ, gati, parāyanaṇ = Atta-saraṇa. — i.e., 'shelter, cave of refuge, resort, goal, refuge. Cf. Dialog. ii, 108.

[2]Yoni yeva upaparikkhitabbo. Yoni[so] is ab origine (cf. Yoniso manasikāro), so 'methodical attention.' Comy.,' kāraṇaṇ ti; upāyena manasikāro. K.S. i, p. 131.

[3]The text omits 'the well-taught Ariyan disciple.'

[4]Tad-anga-nibbuto = tad'anga-vimutto — i.e., 'cooled down,' freed as to these [attributes] accordingly or respectively. — Cf. Pss. of the Sisters, 447

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
5. Atta-Dīpa Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

5. On Being an Island to Self

Sutta 44

Paṭipadā Suttaṃ

The Way To

---

[43] [38]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"I will teach you, brethren,
both the way going to the arising of bodyhood,[1]
and the way going to the ceasing of bodyhood.

Do ye listen to it.

And which, brethren,
is the way going to the arising of bodyhood?

Herein, brethren, the untaught many-folk,
who discern not those that are Ariyans,
who are unskilled in the Ariyan doctrine,
untrained in the Ariyan doctrine,
who discern not those who are worthy ones,
who are unskilled in the worthy doctrine,
untrained in the worthy doctrine, —
view body as the self
the self as possessed of body,
body as being in the self,
the self as being in body;

view feeling as the self
the self as possessed of feeling,
feeling as being in the self,
the self as being in feeling;

view perception as the self
the self as possessed of perception,
perception as being in the self,
the self as being in perception;

view the activities as the self
the self as possessed of the activities,
the activities as being in the self,
the self as being in the activities;

view consciousness as the self
the self as possessed of consciousness,
consciousness as being in the self,
the self as being in consciousness.

This, brethren, is called:

'The way going to the arising of bodyhood.'

So the meaning here is just this -
it is called, brethren:

'The view going to the arising of suffering.'

§

And which, brethren, is the way going to the ceasing of bodyhood?

Herein, brethren, the well-taught Ariyan disciple,
who discerns those that are Ariyans,
who is skilled in the Ariyan doctrine,
trained in the Ariyan doctrine,
who discerns those who are worthy ones,
who is skilled in the worthy doctrine,
trained in the worthy doctrine, —
regards not body as the self
regards not the self as possessed of body,
regards not body as being in the self,
regards not the self as being in body;

regards not feeling as the self regards not the self as possessed of feeling,
regards not feeling as being in the self,
regards not the self as being in feeling;

regards not perception as the self regards not the self as possessed of perception,

regards not perception as being in the self,
regards not the self as being in perception;

regards not view the activities as the self regards not the self as possessed of the activities,
regards not the activities as being in the self,
regards not the self as being in the activities;

regards not consciousness as the self regards not the self as possessed of consciousness,
regards not consciousness as being in the self,
regards not the self as being in consciousness.

[39] This, brethren, is called:

'The way going to the ceasing of bodyhood.'

So verily the meaning here is just this -
it is called, brethren:

'The view going to the ceasing of suffering.'"

---

[1] Sakkaya, lit. 'one's own group."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
5. Atta-Dīpa Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

5. On Being an Island to Self

Sutta 45

Paṭhama Aniccatā Suttaṃ

Impermanence (1)

---

[44] [39]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"Body, brethren, is impermanent.

What is impermanent,
that is suffering.

What is suffering,
that is without the self.

What is without the self,
'That is not mine,
I am not that,
not of me is this self'.

Thus should one view it
by perfect insight
as it really is.

For the one who thus sees it
as it really is
by perfect insight,
his heart turns away,
is released[1] from it
by not grasping at the āsavas.[2]

■

"Feeling, brethren, is impermanent.

What is impermanent,
that is suffering.

What is suffering,
that is without the self.

What is without the self,
that is not mine,
I am not that,
not of me is this self.

Thus should one view it
by perfect insight
as it really is.

For the one who thus sees it
as it really is
by perfect insight,
his heart turns away,
is released from it
by not grasping at the āsavas.

■

"Perception, brethren, is impermanent.

What is impermanent,
that is suffering.

What is suffering,
that is without the self.

What is without the self,
that is not mine,
I am not that,
not of me is this self.

Thus should one view it
by perfect insight
as it really is.

For the one who thus sees it
as it really is
by perfect insight,
his heart turns away,
is released from it
by not grasping at the āsavas.

■

"The activities, brethren, are impermanent.

What is impermanent,
that is suffering.

What is suffering,
that is without the self.

What is without the self,
that is not mine,
I am not that,
not of me is this self.

Thus should one view it
by perfect insight
as it really is.

For the one who thus sees it
as it really is
by perfect insight,
his heart turns away,
is released from it
by not grasping at the āsavas.

■

"Consciousness, brethren, is impermanent.

What is impermanent,
that is suffering.

What is suffering,
that is without the self.

What is without the self,
that is not mine,
I am not that,
not of me is this self.

Thus should one view it
by perfect insight
as it really is.

For the one who thus sees it
as it really is
by perfect insight,
his heart turns away,
is released from it
by not grasping at the āsavas.

§

But if, brethren, a brother's heart turns away from the material element,
and is released from it
by not grasping at the āsavas:

if a brother's heart turns away from the feeling element,[ed1]
and is released from it
by not grasping at the āsavas:

if a brother's heart turns away from the perception element,
and is released from it
by not grasping at the āsavas:

if a brother's heart turns away from the activities element,
and is released from it
by not grasping at the āsavas:

if a brother's heart turns away from the from consciousness element,
and is released from it
by not grasping at the āsavas;

then by its release[3] it is steadfast;
by its steadfastness it is happy;
by its happiness it is not troubled;
not being troubled,
of its own self it is utterly well;
so that he knows:

'Destroyed is rebirth,
lived is the righteous life,
done is the task,
for life in these conditions
there is no hereafter.'"

---

[1] Cf. S. ii, 48; K.S. ii, 37. Comy. explains, 'he turns away at the moment of realizing the Path, and is released at the moment of realizing the Fruits of the Path.

[2] Comy., anuppāda-nirodena niruddhehi āsavehi agahtivā.

[3] Reading for vimyuttatā, vimuttattā.

[ed1] From here Woodward neglects the 'element' (dhātuyā) connected with each of the following.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
5. Atta-Dīpa Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

5. On Being an Island to Self

Sutta 46

Dutiya Aniccatā Suttaṃ

Impermanence (2)

---

[45] [39]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"Body, brethren, is impermanent.

What is impermanent,
that is suffering.

What is suffering,
that is without the self.

What is without the self,
that is not mine,
I am not that,
not of me is this self.

Thus should one view it
by perfect insight
as it really is.

■

Feeling, brethren, is impermanent.

What is impermanent,
that is suffering.

What is suffering,
that is without the self.

What is without the self,
that is not mine,
I am not that,
not of me is this self.

Thus should one view it
by perfect insight
as it really is.

■

Perception, brethren, is impermanent.

What is impermanent,
that is suffering.

What is suffering,
that is without the self.

What is without the self,
that is not mine,
I am not that,
not of me is this self.

Thus should one view it
by perfect insight
as it really is.

■

The activities, brethren, are impermanent.

What is impermanent,
that is suffering.

What is suffering,
that is without the self.

What is without the self,
that is not mine,
I am not that,
not of me is this self.

Thus should one view it
by perfect insight
as it really is.

■

Consciousness, brethren, is impermanent.

What is impermanent,
that is suffering.

What is suffering,
that is without the self.

What is without the self,
that is not mine,
I am not that,
not of me is this self.

Thus should one view it
by perfect insight
as it really is.

§

For the one who thus sees it
as it really is
by perfect insight,
there is no more guessing at the far-off past.[1]

As there is no more guessing at the far-off past,
there is no more guessing at the far-off future.

As there is no more guessing at the far-off future,
there is no stubborn[2] perversity.

As there is no more stubborn perversity in him,
his heart turns away from body,
from feeling,
perception,
the activities

and consciousness,
and is released by not grasping at the āsavas.

Then by its release it is steadfast;
by its steadfastness it is happy;
by its happiness it is not troubled;
not being troubled,
of its own self it is utterly well;
so that he knows:|| ||

'Destroyed is rebirth,
lived is the righteous life,
done is the task,
for life in these conditions
there is no hereafter.'"

---

[1] Cf. D. 1, 12; Dialog. i, 26.

[2] Infra 110. Text reads thāmaso (gen. of thāmo) parāmaso But Comy. reads thamāmaso parāmaso (dṭṭhiyo) as below, § 85. M. i, 257 has thāmasā parāmassa abhinivissa voharati.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
5. Atta-Dīpa Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

5. On Being an Island to Self

Sutta 47

Samanupassanā Suttaṃ

View

---

[46] [40]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"Those recluses and brahmins, brethren,
who regard the self in divers ways,[1]
regard it as the body-mass

of five factors based on grasping,[2]
or as some one of these.

What five?

Herein, brethren, the untaught many-folk,
who discern not those that are Ariyans,
who are unskilled in the Ariyan doctrine,
untrained in the Ariyan doctrine,
who discern not those who are worthy ones,
who are unskilled in the worthy doctrine,
untrained in the worthy doctrine, —
regard body as the self,
self as possessed of body,
body as being in the self,
self as being in body;

view feeling as the self
the self as possessed of feeling,
feeling as being in the self,
the self as being in feeling;

view perception as the self
the self as possessed of perception,
perception as being in the self,
the self as being in perception;

view the activities as the self
the self as possessed of the activities,
the activities as being in the self,
the self as being in the activities;

view consciousness as the self
the self as possessed of consciousness,
consciousness as being in the self,
the self as being in consciousness.

Thus this is the view.

It has come to him (to think): 'I am.'

Now when it has come to anyone to think 'I am,'
there comes to pass a descent
of the five feeling-faculties[3]
the seeing-faculty,
the hearing-faculty,
the smelling-faculty,
the tasting-faculty,
the touching-faculty.[4]

[41] Mind is the result,
mind-states[5] are the result,
the ignorarnce-element is the result.[6]

Touched by the feeling
born of contact with ignorance,
there comes to the untaught many-folk (the view),
'I am';

there comes (the view),
'this same I am;'

there comes (the view),
'things will be';

there comes the view,
'things will not be';[7]

there comes the view,
'things will have body';

the view,
'things will be bodyless';

there comes the view,
'things will be conscious';

the view,
'things will be unconscious';

the view,
'things will be neither conscious nor unconscious.'

It is just therein, brethren,
that the five feeling-faculties persist.

But herein for the well-taught Ariyan disciple ignorance is put away
and knowledge arises.[8]

Along with the fading away of ignorance and the arising of knowledge
there comes to him no view that
'I am,'
that
'this same I am,'
that
'things will be,'
that
'things will not be,'
that
'things will have body,'
that
'things will not have body,'
that
'things will be conscious,'
that

'things will be unconscious,'
that
'things will be neither conscious nor unconscious.'"

---

[1] Aneka-vihitaṃ, adv. If it is past part., trans., 'as bestowed in divers ways.'

[2] Cf. Buddhism (1912) p. 58. Buddh. Psych (1924) 102.

[3] Pañcannaṃ indriyānaṃ avakkanti hoti. Comy., 'There is a rebirth {nibbatti) of the five feeling-faculties causally resulting from the existence of that net of sensuality.' Avakkanti (okkanti) = pātubhāvo, ' manifestation'

[4] Kāyindriya, 'body-faculty,' the skin enveloping body (sense of touch) being the faculty.

[5] Dhammā (says Comy.) = ārammaṇaṃ 'bass for thought.'

[6] Mano, dhamma avijjādhiātu Here text reads vijjā, but Burm and Comy. avijjā is preferable.

[7] Comy., 'The eternalist and annihilationist views.'

[8] Comy. 'Of the Arabsnt's Path.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
5. Atta-Dīpa Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

5. On Being an Island to Self

Sutta 48

Samanupassanā Suttaṃ

The Factors

---

[47] [41]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"I will teach you, brethren,
the five factors

and the five factors
that have to do with grasping.

Do ye listen to it.

And what, brethren, are the five factors?

All body, brethren,
be it past,
future
or present,
inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or lofty,
far or near, -
that is called
"the body-factor."[1]

Every feeling,
be it past,
future
or present,
inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or lofty,
far or near, -
that is called
"the feeling-factor."

Every perception,
be it past,
future
or present,
inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or lofty,

far or near, -
that is called
"the perception-factor."

All the activities,
be it past,
future
or present,
inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or lofty,
far or near, -
that is called
"the activities-factor."

Every consciousness,
be it past,
future
or present,
inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or lofty,
far or near, -
that is called
"the consciousness-factor."

These five, brethren, are called the five factors.

---

[42] And what, brethren, are the five factors that have to do with grasping?[2]

Every body, brethren,
be it past,

future
or present,
inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or lofty,
far or near
is a co-asava,
and has to do with grasping.

That is called:
"the body factor that has to do with grasping".

Every feeling,
be it past,
future
or present,
inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or lofty,
far or near
is a co-asava,
and has to do with grasping.

That is called:
"the feeling factor that has to do with grasping".

Every perception,
be it past,
future
or present,
inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or lofty,
far or near
is a co-asava,
and has to do with grasping.

That is called:
"the perception factor that has to do with grasping".

All the activities,
be it past,
future
or present,
inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or lofty,
far or near
is a co-asava,
and has to do with grasping.

That is called:
"the activities factor that has to do with grasping".

Every consciousness,
be it past,
future
or present,
inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or lofty,
far or near
is a co-asava,
and has to do with grasping.

That is called:
"the consciousness factor that has to do with grasping".

These are called the fivefold mass of factors
that have to do with grasping.'

---

[1] Cf. Compendium, p. 185; Pts. of Contr. 95; M. iii, 16 ff.

[2] Upādānīyaṃ Comy., 'which comes to be as a condition of the bases'; it is equivalent to upādātabbaṃ.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
5. Atta-Dīpa Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

5. On Being an Island to Self

Sutta 49

Paṭhama Soṇa Suttaṃ

Soṇa (1)[1]

---

[48] [42]

Thus have I heard:—

Once the Exalted One was staying near Rājagaha
in the Bamboo Grove
at the Squirrels' Feeding-Ground.

Then Soṇa,
the housefather's son,

came to the Exalted One
and sat down.

As he thus sat,
the Exalted One thus addressed Soṇa,
the housefather's son:

"Whatsoever recluses and brahmins, Soṇa,
hold views about the impermanent body,
the sorrow-fraught,
the unstable,
such as
'better am I,'
'equal am I,' or
'worse am I' (than thou),
what else are they but non-seers
of what really is?[2]

[43] Whatsoever recluses and brahmins, Soṇa,
hold views about impermanent feeling,
the sorrow-fraught,
the unstable,
such as
'better am I,'
'equal am I,' or
'worse am I' (than thou),
what else are they but non-seers
of what really is?

Whatsoever recluses and brahmins, Soṇa,
hold views about impermanent perception,
the sorrow-fraught,
the unstable,
such as
'better am I,'
'equal am I,' or

'worse am I' (than thou),
what else are they but non-seers
of what really is?

Whatsoever recluses and brahmins, Soṇa,
hold views about impermanent activities,
the sorrow-fraught,
the unstable,
such as
'better am I,'
'equal am I,' or
'worse am I' (than thou),
what else are they but non-seers
of what really is?

Whatsoever recluses and brahmins, Soṇa,
hold views about impermanent consciousness,
the sorrow-fraught,
the unstable,
such as
'better am I,'
'equal am I,' or
'worse am I' (than thou),
what else are they but non-seers
of what really is?

§

But, Soṇa,
whatsoever recluses and brahmins
hold not views about the impermanent body,
the sorrow-fraught,
the unstable,

such as
'better am I,'
'equal am I,' or
'worse am I' (than thou),
what else are they but seers
of what really is?

Whatsoever recluses and brahmins, Soṇa,
hold not views about impermanent feeling,
the sorrow-fraught,
the unstable,
such as
'better am I,'
'equal am I,' or
'worse am I' (than thou),
what else are they but seers
of what really is?

Whatsoever recluses and brahmins, Soṇa,
hold not views about impermanent perception,
the sorrow-fraught,
the unstable,
such as
'better am I,'
'equal am I,' or
'worse am I' (than thou),
what else are they but seers
of what really is?

Whatsoever recluses and brahmins, Soṇa,
hold not views about impermanent activities,
the sorrow-fraught,
the unstable,
such as
'better am I,'
'equal am I,' or

'worse am I' (than thou),
what else are they but seers
of what really is?

Whatsoever recluses and brahmins, Soṇa,
hold not views about impermanent consciousness,
the sorrow-fraught,
the unstable,
such as
'better am I,'
'equal am I,' or
'worse am I' (than thou),
what else are they but seers
of what really is?

§

Now what think you, Soṇa?

Is body permanent or impermanent?"

"Impermanent, lord."

"And what is impermanent,
is that woe or weal?"

"Woe, lord."

"And is it fitting to hold such views as
'this is mine,'
'this am I,' or
'this is the self of me,'

about that which is impermanent
and unstable?"

"Surely not, lord."

■

"Is feeling permanent or impermanent?"

"Impermanent, lord."

"And what is impermanent,
is that woe or weal?"

"Woe, lord."

"And is it fitting to hold such views as
'this is mine,'
'this am I,' or
'this is the self of me,'
about that which is impermanent
and unstable?"

"Surely not, lord."

■

"Is perception permanent or impermanent?"

"Impermanent, lord."

"And what is impermanent,
is that woe or weal?"

"Woe, lord."

"And is it fitting to hold such views as
'this is mine,'

'this am I,' or
'this is the self of me,'
about that which is impermanent
and unstable?"

"Surely not, lord."

■

Are activities permanent or impermanent?"

"Impermanent, lord."

"And what is impermanent,
is that woe or weal?"

"Woe, lord."

"And is it fitting to hold such views as
'this is mine,'
'this am I,' or
'this is the self of me,'
about that which is impermanent
and unstable?"

"Surely not, lord."

■

"Is consciousness permanent or impermanent?"

"Impermanent, lord."

"And what is impermanent,
is that woe or weal?"

"Woe, lord."

"And is it fitting to hold such views as
'this is mine,'
'this am I,' or
'this is the self of me,'
about that which is impermanent
and unstable?"

"Surely not, lord."

§

"Wherefore, Soṇa,
whatsoever body there be,
whether past,
future or
present,
inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or lofty,
far or near —
every body should thus be regarded
as it really is
by right insight
thus:
'this is not mine,'
'this am not I,'
'this of me is not the self.'

■

Whatsoever feeling there be,
whether past,
future or

present,
inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or lofty,
far or near —
every feeling should thus be regarded
as it really is
by right insight
thus:
'this is not mine,'
'this am not I,'
'this of me is not the self.'

■

Whatsoever perception there be,
whether past,
future or
present,
inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or lofty,
far or near —
every perception should thus be regarded
as it really is
by right insight
thus:
'this is not mine,'
'this am not I,'
'this of me is not the self.'

■

Whatsoever activities there be,
whether past,
future or

present,
inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or lofty,
far or near —
all activities should thus be regarded
as it really is
by right insight
thus:
'this is not mine,'
'this am not I,'
'this of me is not the self.'

■

Whatsoever consciousness there be,
whether past,
future or
present,
inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or lofty,
far or near —
every consciousness should thus be regarded
as it really is
by right insight
thus:
'this is not mine,'
'this am not I,'
'this of me is not the self.'

■

Thus seeing, Soṇa,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
feels disgust at body,

feels disgust at feeling,
feels disgust at perception,
feels disgust at the activities
feels disgust at consciousness.

Feeling disgust,
he is repelled thereby.

Being repelled he is released.

In being released,
there is knowledge thereof,
so that he knows:

'Destroyed is rebirth,
lived is the righteous life,
done is my task,
for life in these conditions
there is no hereafter.'"

---

[1] Soṇa (to be distinguished from Sona). This may have been one of the three bhikkhus of the name mentioned in Theragāthā: one of whom gives a name to a section in Uddāna.

[2] The three forms of māno (conceit). See Dialog. iii, 209 n.; also S. i. 12; K.S. i, 17. I quote the verse:

'Whoso doth build fancies concerning values: -
"Equal am I, better, or worse (than thou art)" -
Hereby he may quarrels provoke. But whoso
In all three ways holdeth his mind unshaken,
"Equal (am I), or "different" oocurs not.'

Cf. S. ii, 253.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
5. Atta-Dīpa Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

5. On Being an Island to Self

Sutta 50

Dutiya Soṇa Suttaṃ

Soṇa (2)

---

[50] [44]

Thus have I heard:—

Once the Exalted One was staying near Rājagaha
in the Bamboo Grove
at the Squirrels' Feeding-Ground.

Then Soṇa,
the housefather's son,

came to the Exalted One
and sat down.

As he thus sat,
the Exalted One thus addressed Soṇa,
the housefather's son:

"Whatsoever recluses and brahmins, Soṇa,
know not body,
know not its uprising,
know not its ceasing,
know not the way going to its ceasing
those recluses or brahmins, Soṇa,
are approved neither among recluses as such,
nor among brahmins as such:
nor have those venerable ones
in this very life
understood of themselves,
nor have they realized
the good of being recluses,
the good of being brahmins,
nor do they live in the attainment thereof.

■

Whatsoever recluses and brahmins, Soṇa,
know not feeling,
know not its uprising,
know not its ceasing,
know not the way going to its ceasing
those recluses or brahmins, Soṇa,
are approved neither among recluses as such,
nor among brahmins as such:
nor have those venerable ones
in this very life
understood of themselves,

nor have they realized
the good of being recluses,
the good of being brahmins,
nor do they live in the attainment thereof.

■

Whatsoever recluses and brahmins, Soṇa,
know not perception,
know not its uprising,
know not its ceasing,
know not the way going to its ceasing
those recluses or brahmins, Soṇa,
are approved neither among recluses as such,
nor among brahmins as such:
nor have those venerable ones
in this very life
understood of themselves,
nor have they realized
the good of being recluses,
the good of being brahmins,
nor do they live in the attainment thereof.

■

Whatsoever recluses and brahmins, Soṇa,
know not the activities,
know not their uprising,
know not their ceasing,
know not the way going to their ceasing
those recluses or brahmins, Soṇa,
are approved neither among recluses as such,
nor among brahmins as such:
nor have those venerable ones
in this very life
understood of themselves,

nor have they realized
the good of being recluses,
the good of being brahmins,
nor do they live in the attainment thereof.

■

Whatsoever recluses and brahmins, Soṇa,
know not consciousness,
know not its uprising,
know not its ceasing,
know not the way going to its ceasing
those recluses or brahmins, Soṇa,
are approved neither among recluses as such,
nor among brahmins as such:
nor have those venerable ones
in this very life
understood of themselves,
nor have they realized
the good of being recluses,
the good of being brahmins,
nor do they live in the attainment thereof.

§

And whatsoever recluses and brahmins, Soṇa,
do know body,
do know the arising of body,
do know its ceasing
and the way going to its ceasing:
those recluses or brahmins, Soṇa,
are approved both among recluses as such,
and among brahmins as such

and those venerable ones have
in this very life
understood of themselves
and have realized
the good of being recluses
the good of being brahmins,
and they do live in the attainment thereof.

■

Whatsoever recluses and brahmins, Soṇa,
do know feeling,
do know the arising of feeling,
do know its ceasing
and the way going to its ceasing:
those recluses or brahmins, Soṇa,
are approved both among recluses as such,
and among brahmins as such
and those venerable ones have
in this very life
understood of themselves
and have realized
the good of being recluses
the good of being brahmins,
and they do live in the attainment thereof.

■

Whatsoever recluses and brahmins, Soṇa,
do know perception,
do know the arising of perception,
do know its ceasing
and the way going to its ceasing:
those recluses or brahmins, Soṇa,
are approved both among recluses as such,
and among brahmins as such

and those venerable ones have
in this very life
understood of themselves
and have realized
the good of being recluses
the good of being brahmins,
and they do live in the attainment thereof.

■

Whatsoever recluses and brahmins, Soṇa,
do know the activities,
do know the arising of the activities,
do know their ceasing
and the way going to their ceasing:
those recluses or brahmins, Soṇa,
are approved both among recluses as such,
and among brahmins as such
and those venerable ones have
in this very life
understood of themselves
and have realized
the good of being recluses
the good of being brahmins,
and they do live in the attainment thereof.

■

Whatsoever recluses and brahmins, Soṇa,
do know consciousness,
do know the arising of consciousness,
do know its ceasing
and the way going to its ceasing:
those recluses or brahmins, Soṇa,
are approved both among recluses as such,
and among brahmins as such

and those venerable ones have
in this very life
understood of themselves
and have realized
the good of being recluses
the good of being brahmins,
and they do live in the attainment thereof."[1]

---

[1] Cf. S. ii, 14; K.S. ii, 11, where the same words are used of 'decay and death.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
5. Atta-Dīpa Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

5. On Being an Island to Self

Sutta 51

Paṭhama Nandi-k-Khaya Suttaṃ

The Destruction of the Lure (1)

---

[51] [44]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"Brethren, when a brother sees
that body is impermanent,
he, rightly perceiving

'this is the right view,'
feels disgust thereat.

By the destruction of the lure of lust
comes the destruction of lust.

By destruction of lust
comes the de- [45] struction of the lure,
and by this destruction of the lure
the heart is set free,
and it is called
'well freed.'

■

Brethren, when a brother sees
that feeling is impermanent,
he, rightly perceiving
'this is the right view,'
feels disgust thereat.

By the destruction of the lure of lust
comes the destruction of lust.

By destruction of lust
comes the destruction of the lure,
and by this destruction of the lure
the heart is set free,
and it is called
'well freed.'

■

Brethren, when a brother sees
that perception is impermanent,
he, rightly perceiving

'this is the right view,'
feels disgust thereat.

By the destruction of the lure of lust
comes the destruction of lust.

By destruction of lust
comes the destruction of the lure,
and by this destruction of the lure
the heart is set free,
and it is called
'well freed.'

■

Brethren, when a brother sees
that the activities are impermanent,
he, rightly perceiving
'this is the right view,'
feels disgust thereat.

By the destruction of the lure of lust
comes the destruction of lust.

By destruction of lust
comes the destruction of the lure,
and by this destruction of the lure
the heart is set free,
and it is called
'well freed.'

■

Brethren, when a brother sees
that consciousness is impermanent,
he, rightly perceiving

'this is the right view,'
feels disgust thereat.

By the destruction of the lure of lust
comes the destruction of lust.

By destruction of lust
comes the destruction of the lure,
and by this destruction of the lure
the heart is set free,
and it is called
'well freed.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
5. Atta-Dīpa Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

5. On Being an Island to Self

Sutta 51

Dutiya Nandi-k-Khaya Suttaṃ

The Destruction of the Lure (2)

---

[51] [45]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"Do ye apply your minds thoroughly, brethren,
to body

and regard it in its true nature
as impermanent.

He who so applies his mind thoroughly to body,
and regards it in its true nature
as impermanent,
feels disgust at body.

By the destruction of the lure of it
comes destruction of lust.

By the destruction of lust
comes the destruction of the lure,
and by the destruction of the lure
the heart is set free,
and it is called 'well freed.'

■

Do ye apply your minds thoroughly, brethren,
to feeling
and regard it in its true nature
as impermanent.

He who so applies his mind thoroughly to feeling,
and regards it in its true nature
as impermanent,
feels disgust at feeling.

By the destruction of the lure of it
comes destruction of lust.

By the destruction of lust
comes the destruction of the lure,
and by the destruction of the lure
the heart is set free,
and it is called 'well freed.'

■

Do ye apply your minds thoroughly, brethren,
to perception
and regard it in its true nature
as impermanent.

He who so applies his mind thoroughly to perception,
and regards it in its true nature
as impermanent,
feels disgust at perception.

By the destruction of the lure of it
comes destruction of lust.

By the destruction of lust
comes the destruction of the lure,
and by the destruction of the lure
the heart is set free,
and it is called 'well freed.'

■

Do ye apply your minds thoroughly, brethren,
to the activities
and regard them in their true nature
as impermanent.

He who so applies his mind thoroughly to the activities,
and regards them in their true nature
as impermanent,
feels disgust at the activities.

By the destruction of the lure of it
comes destruction of lust.

By the destruction of lust
comes the destruction of the lure,
and by the destruction of the lure
the heart is set free,
and it is called 'well freed.'

■

Do ye apply your minds thoroughly, brethren,
to consciousness
and regard it in its true nature
as impermanent.

He who so applies his mind thoroughly to consciousness,
and regards it in its true nature
as impermanent,
feels disgust at consciousness.

By the destruction of the lure of it
comes destruction of lust.

By the destruction of lust
comes the destruction of the lure,
and by the destruction of the lure
the heart is set free,
and it is called 'well freed.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
6. Upāya Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

6. On Attachment

Sutta 53

Upaya Suttaṃ

Attachment[1]

---

[53] [45]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"Attachment, brethren, is bondage;
aloofness is freedom.

By attachment to body, brethren,
consciousness,
if it get a standing,
may persist.

With body for its object,
with body for its platform,
seeking means of enjoyment,
it may come by growth,
increase,
abundance.[2]

With the activities for its object,
with the activities for its platform,
seeking a means of enjoyment,
it may come by growth,
increase,
abundance.

Were a man, brethren, to declare thus:

'Apart from body,
apart from feeling,
apart from perception,
apart from the [46] activities,
I will show forth the coming or the going
or the decease or the rebirth of consciousness,
or the growth or the increase
or the abundance of consciousness' -
to do that were impossible.

If lust for body, brethren,
is abandoned by a brother,
by that abandonment of lust
its foothold is cut off.[3]

Thereby there is no platform for consciousness.

If lust for feeling, brethren,
is abandoned by a brother,
by that abandonment of lust
its foothold is cut off.

Thereby there is no platform for consciousness.

If lust for perception, brethren, is abandoned by a brother,
by that abandonment of lust
its foothold is cut off.

Thereby there is no platform for consciousness.

If lust for the activities, brethren, is abandoned by a brother,
by that abandonment of lust
its foothold is cut off.

Thereby there is no platform for consciousness.

So also, brethren, if lust for the consciousness-element be abandoned by a brother,
by that abandonment of lust
its foothold is cut off.

Thereby there is no platform for consciousness.

Without that platform
consciousness has no growth,
it generates no action[4] and is freed:
by freedom it is steady:[5]
by its steadiness it is happy:
owing to happiness it is not troubled.

Being untroubled,
of itself it becomes utterly well,

so that it knows:

'Destroyed is rebirth,
lived is the righteous life,
done is the task,
for life in these conditions there is no hereafter.'"

---

[1] Cf. Warren, p 162. Upayo (text reads upāyo). Comy., 'by way of craving, views, conceit, it is subject to the five factors.'

[2] Cf. Dialog. iii, 220 and n. for a somewhat similar paragraph. Comy., 'activity-consciousness, arousing action, by its ability to induce rebirth, would experience growth, etc.'

[3] Vocchijjat'ārammaṇaṃ Comy., 'By absence of the ability to induce rebirth its support is severed.'

[4] Cf. S. ii, 82 (saṅkhāraṃ abhisankharoti). Comy. reading anabhisankhacca, 'generates (no conception).'

[5] Cf. S. ii, 65. In this connexion ṭhito is not 'fixed on an object' but 'calmed' or 'steadfast.' (Or 'he,' or 'one' is steady.)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
6. Upāya Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

6. On Attachment

Sutta 54

Bīja Suttaṃ

Seed[1]

---

[54] [46]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"There are five sorts of seed, brethren.

What five?

Root-seed,
trunk-seed,
seed from shoots,
seed from joints,
grain-seed,
making five in all.

Suppose, brethren,
that these five sorts of seed are unbroken,
not rotten,
unspoiled by wind and heat,
capable of sprouting,[2]
and happily planted,
but that [47] there is no soil
and no water.

Think ye, brethren,
that these five sorts of seed
would come to growth,
increase,
abundance?"

"Surely not, lord."

"Suppose, brethren,
that these five sorts of seed
are unbroken,
not rotten,
unspoiled by wind and heat,
capable of sprouting,
but not happily planted,
and that there were soil and water.

Now would these five sorts of seed
come to growth,

increase,
abundance?"

"Surely not, lord."

"Again, brethren,
suppose that these five sorts of seed
are unbroken,
not rotten,
unspoiled by wind and heat,
capable of sprouting,
and happily planted,
and that there is both soil and water.

Now would these five sorts of seed
come to growth,
increase,
abundance?"

"Surely, lord."

"As the earth-element, brethren,
so should the four stations of consciousness be considered.

As the water-element, brethren,
so should the lure of lust be considered.

As the five sorts of seed, brethren,
so should consciousness and its cause be considered.

By attachment to body, brethren,
consciousness,
if it got a standing,
would stand.

With body for its object,
with body for its platform,

seeking a means of enjoyment,
it would come by growth,
increase,
abundance.

By cleaving to feeling,
brethren,
consciousness,
if it got a standing,
would stand.

With feeling for its object,
with feeling for its platform,
seeking a means of enjoyment,
it would come by growth,
increase,
abundance.

By cleaving to perception,
brethren,
consciousness,
if it got a standing,
would stand.

With perception for its object,
with perception for its platform,
seeking a means of enjoyment,
it would come by growth,
increase,
abundance.

By cleaving to the activities,
brethren,
consciousness,
if it got a standing,
would stand.

With the activities for its object,
with the activities for its platform,
seeking a means of enjoyment,
it would come by growth,
increase,
abundance.

Were a man, brethren, to declare thus:

'Apart from body,
apart from feeling,
apart from perception,
apart from the activities,
I will show forth the coming or the going,
or the decease
or the rebirth of consciousness,
or the growth,
the increase,
the abundance of consciousness' -
to do that were impossible.

If lust for body, brethren,
is abandoned by a brother,
by that abandonment of lust
its foothold is cut off.

Thereby there is no platform for consciousness.

If lust for feeling, brethren,
is abandoned by a brother,
by that abandonment of lust
its foothold is cut off.

Thereby there is no platform for consciousness.

If lust for perception, brethren, is abandoned by a brother,
by that abandonment of lust

its foothold is cut off.

Thereby there is no platform for consciousness.

If lust for the activities, brethren, is abandoned by a brother,
by that abandonment of lust
its foothold is cut off.

Thereby there is no platform for consciousness.

So also, brethren, if lust for the consciousness-element be abandoned by a brother,
by that abandonment of lust
its foothold is cut off.

Thereby there is no platform for consciousness.

Without that platform
consciousness has no growth,
it generates no action and is freed:
by freedom it is steady:
by its steadiness it is happy:
owing to happiness it is not troubled.

Being untroubled,
of itself it becomes utterly well,
so that it knows:

"Destroyed is rebirth,
lived is the righteous life,
done is the task,
for life in these conditions there is no hereafter."'

---

[1] Vin v, 132. In detail at Vin. iv, 35 Cf. M.P. 52-3. Explained by Comy. with examples of each sort, such as turmeric, ginger, etc.; wild-fig; knot-grass and bamboo; samīraṇa a creeper with berries); grain, such as rice, barley, and beans.

[2] Cf. D. ii, 353-4; Dialog ii, 371 Text sāradāni (autumnal; year-old, so fertile). Comy., sārādāuinī, and explains 'containing the sap, pith, or essence.' Professor R.D. translates 'selected seed,' M.P. 255. Cf. Questions of King Milinda, ii, p. 79 n. Sāradaṃ bījaṃ "Seed which will give sāra." It has nothing to do with sāradaṃ "autumn."'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
6. Upāya Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

6. On Attachment

Sutta 55

Udāna Suttaṃ

Insspired Words[1]

---

[55] [48]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One uttered these inspired words:

"Were I not then,[2] it would not now be mine.
It shall not be, and mine it shall not be.

If a brother were thus resolved,
he could burst the bonds
that bind to the lower world."[3]

At these words, a certain brother thus addressed the Exalted One:

"But wherein, lord, could a brother,
making his resolve in these words:

'Were I not then, it would not now be mine.
It shall not be, and mine it shall not be.'

burst the bonds that bind to the lower world?"

§

"As to that, brother, the untaught many-folk,
who discern not those that are Ariyans,
who are unskilled in the Ariyan doctrine,
untrained in the Ariyan doctrine,
who discern not those who are worthy ones,
who are unskilled in the worthy doctrine,
untrained in the worthy doctrine, —
regard body as the self,
or self [49] as possessed of body,
body as being in the self,
self as being in body;

view feeling as the self
the self as possessed of feeling,
feeling as being in the self,
the self as being in feeling;

view perception as the self
the self as possessed of perception,
perception as being in the self,
the self as being in perception;

view the activities as the self
the self as possessed of the activities,
the activities as being in the self,
the self as being in the activities;

view consciousness as the self
the self as possessed of consciousness,
consciousness as being in the self,
the self as being in consciousness.

■

Of the impermanent body
they do not understand,
as it really is,
'body is impermanent.'

Of the impermanent feeling
they do not understand,
as it really is,
'feeling is impermanent.'

Of the impermanent perception
they do not understand,
as it really is,
'perception is impermanent.'

Of the impermanent activities
they do not understand,
as they really are,
'activities are impermanent.'

Of the impermanent consciousness
they do not understand,
as it really is,
'consciousness is impermanent.'

■

Of the pain-fraught body
they do not understand,
as it really is,
'body is pain-fraught.'

Of the pain-fraught feeling
they do not understand,
as it really is,
'feeling is pain-fraught.'

Of the pain-fraught perception
they do not understand,
as it really is,
'perception is pain-fraught.'

Of the pain-fraught activities
they do not understand,
as they really are,
'activities are pain-fraught.'

Of the pain-fraught consciousness
they do not understand,
as it really is,
'consciousness is pain-fraught.'

■

Of the selfless body
they do not understand,

as it really is,
'body is selfless.'

Of the selfless feeling
they do not understand,
as it really is,
'feeling is selfless.'

Of the selfless perception
they do not understand,
as it really is,
'perception is selfless.'

Of the selfless activities
they do not understand,
as they really are,
'activities are selfless.'

Of the selfless consciousness
they do not understand,
as it really is,
'consciousness is selfless.'

■

Of the conditioned body
they do not understand,
as it really is,
'body is conditioned.'

Of the conditioned feeling
they do not understand,
as it really is,
"feeling is conditioned."

Of the conditioned perception
they do not understand,

as it really is,
'perception is conditioned.'

Of the conditioned activities
they do not understand,
as they really are,
'activities are conditioned.'

Of the conditioned consciousness
they do not understand,
as it really is,
'consciousness is conditioned.'

■

That 'body will come to cease'
they do not understand,
as it really is.

That 'feeling will come to cease'
they do not understand,
as it really is.

That 'perception will come to cease'
they do not understand,
as it really is.

That 'the activies will come to cease'
they do not understand,
as it really is.

That 'consciousness will come to cease'
they do not understand,
as it really is.

§

But, brethren, the well-taught Ariyan disciple,
who discern those that are Ariyans,
who are skilled in the Ariyan doctrine,
trained in the Ariyan doctrine,
who discern those who are worthy ones,
who are skilled in the worthy doctrine,
trained in the worthy doctrine, —
do not regard body as the self,
or self as possessed of body,
or body as being in the self,
or self as being in body;

do not view feeling as the self
the self as possessed of feeling,
feeling as being in the self,
the self as being in feeling;

do not view perception as the self
the self as possessed of perception,
perception as being in the self,
the self as being in perception;

do not view the activities as the self
the self as possessed of the activities,
the activities as being in the self,
the self as being in the activities;

do not view consciousness as the self
the self as possessed of consciousness,
consciousness as being in the self,
the self as being in consciousness.

■

Of the impermanent body
they understand,
as it really is,
'body is impermanent.'

Of the impermanent feeling
they understand,
as it really is,
'feeling is impermanent.'

Of the impermanent perception
they understand,
as it really is,
'perception is impermanent.'

Of the impermanent activities
they understand,
as they really are,
'activities are impermanent.'

Of the impermanent consciousness
they understand,
as it really is,
'consciousness is impermanent.'

■

Of the pain-fraught body
they understand,
as it really is,
'body is pain-fraught.'

Of the pain-fraught feeling
they understand,
as it really is,
'feeling is pain-fraught.'

Of the pain-fraught perception
they understand,
as it really is,
'perception is pain-fraught.'

Of the pain-fraught activities
they understand,
as they really are,
'activities are pain-fraught.'

Of the pain-fraught consciousness
they understand,
as it really is,
'consciousness is pain-fraught.'

■

Of the selfless body
they understand,
as it really is,
'body is selfless.'

Of the selfless feeling
they understand,
as it really is,
'feeling is selfless.'

Of the selfless perception
they understand,
as it really is,
'perception is selfless.'

Of the selfless activities
they understand,
as they really are,
'activities are selfless.'

Of the selfless consciousness
they understand,
as it really is,
'consciousness is selfless.'

■

Of the conditioned body
they understand,
as it really is,
'body is conditioned.'

Of the conditioned feeling
they understand,
as it really is,
'feeling is conditioned.'

Of the conditioned perception
they understand,
as it really is,
'perception is conditioned.'

Of the conditioned activities
they understand,
as they really are,
'activities are conditioned.'

Of the conditioned consciousness
they understand,
as it really is,
'consciousness is conditioned.'

■

That 'body will come to cease'
they understand,
as it really is.

That 'feeling will come to cease'
they understand,
as it really is.

That 'perception will come to cease'
they understand,
as it really is.

That 'the activies will come to cease'
they understand,
as it really is.

That 'consciousness will come to cease'
they understand,
as it really is.

§

Owing to the ceasing[4] of body,
the ceasing of feeling,
of perception,
of the activities
of consciousness,
a brother making his resolve in these words:

'Were I not then, it would not now be mine.
It shall not be, and mine it shall not be.'

could burst the bonds that bind to the lower world."

§

[50] "Even so resolving, lord,
a brother could burst the bonds
that bind to the lower world.

But how knowing, lord,
how seeing,
are the āsavas
straightway[5] destroyed in him?"

"As to that, brother,
the untaught many-folk are troubled
where there is no ground for trouble.

It is by this thought, brother,
that they are troubled:

'Were I not then, it would not now be mine.
It shall not be, and mine it shall not be.'

But the well-taught Ariyan disciple
is not troubled
where there is no ground for trouble.

He is not troubled, brother, by this thought:

'Were I not then, it would not now be mine.
It shall not be, and mine it shall not be.'

§

By attachment to body, brother,
consciousness,
if it get a standing,
may persist.

With body for its object,
with body for its platform,
seeking means of enjoyment,
it may come by growth,
increase,
abundance.

With the activities for its object,
with the activities for its platform,
seeking a means of enjoyment,
it may come by growth,
increase,
abundance.

Were a man, brother, to declare thus:

"Apart from body,
apart from feeling,
apart from perception,
apart from the activities,
I will show forth the coming or the going
or the decease or the rebirth of consciousness,
or the growth or the increase
or the abundance of consciousness" -
to do that were impossible.

If lust for body, brother,
is abandoned by a brother,
by that abandonment of lust
its foothold is cut off.

Thereby there is no platform for consciousness.

If lust for feeling, brother,
is abandoned by a brother,
by that abandonment of lust
its foothold is cut off.

Thereby there is no platform for consciousness.

If lust for perception, brother, is abandoned by a brother,
by that abandonment of lust
its foothold is cut off.

Thereby there is no platform for consciousness.

If lust for the activities, brother, is abandoned by a brother,
by that abandonment of lust
its foothold is cut off.

Thereby there is no platform for consciousness.

So also, brother, if lust for the consciousness-element be abandoned by a brother,
by that abandonment of lust
its foothold is cut off.

Thereby there is no platform for consciousness.

Without that platform
consciousness has no growth,
it generates no action and is freed:
by freedom it is steady:
by its steadiness it is happy:
owing to happiness it is not troubled.

Being untroubled,
of itself it becomes utterly well,
so that it knows:

'Destroyed is rebirth,
lived is the righteous life,
done is the task,
for life in these conditions there is no hereafter.'

Thus knowing, brother,
thus seeing,
the āsavas are straightway destroyed in him."

---

[1] Udānaṃ Lit, 'up-breathing' Comy., 'breathed out an utterance originated by a strong emotion of joy, on this occasion owing to the efficacy of the teaching,' which he illustrates by two stories. Also at D.A. 141 he says, 'as pent-up waters burst forth in a flood, so, when the heart cannot hold a joyous utterance, the excess cannot be contained, but rushes out.' In this connexion cf. the riddling Udānaṃ at Ud. vi, 3 (last line at Thag. 180):

ahu pubbe, tadā n'āhu: n'āhu pubbe, tadā ahu:
na c'āhu, ca na bhavissati, na c'etarahi vijjati.|| ||

[2] Text has no c'assa, but on p. 99, 183, no c'assaṃ. I read with Comy.: -

No c'assaṃ no ca me siyā
na bhavassati na me bhavissati.|| ||

Comy. says, 'if it were not for my past karma, my present body-person would not exist.' The aspirant who is is earnest here makes up his mind that he shall no more come to be (The Pali future inflexion, bhavissati, is one and the same, not our 'shall be. will be.' It is not easy to say whether a meaning of resolve, 'shall be,' could be conveyed by it -Ed.)

[3] Orambhāgiyāni saṇyojanāni. Cf. D. i, 92, etc. The first five fetters that bind to the world of lust, by breaking which one is reborn in the brāhma world (as non-returner), thence to pass to Nibbāna, to come back no more.

[4] Vibhava, 'the absence of becoming.' Dialog. ii, 340 n.

[5] Anantarā, 'without internal.' Comy., 'Thre are two proximates, the near and the further. Insight of the Path is the close proximate.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
6. Upāya Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

6. On Attachment

Sutta 56

Upādāna Parivatta Suttaṃ

Grasping (applied to) the Series[1]

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
6. Upāya Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

6. On Attachment

Sutta 57

Satta-ṭ-Ṭhāna Suttaṃ

The Seven Points

[ed2] Translated in SN 3.22.56, eye-, ear-, nose-, tongue-, skin-, mind-.

[ed3] Nāmarūpa. both here and in SN 3.22.56, but there translated 'mind-and-body'.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
6. Upāya Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

6. On Attachment

Sutta 58

Sambuddha Suttaṃ

Fully Enlightened

---

[65] [57]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One said:

"The Tathāgata, brethren,
who being arahant,[1]
is a fully enlightened one,

because of disgust at body,
of the fading out of body,
of the ceasing of body,
is called 'freed without grasping,'
'fully enlightened.'

[58] That brother who is freed by insight,
because of disgust at body,
of the fading out of body,
the ceasing of body,
is called 'freed without grasping,'
'freed by insight.'

■

"The Tathāgata, brethren,
who being arahant,
is a fully enlightened one,
because of disgust at feeling,
of the fading out of feeling,
of the ceasing of feeling,
is called 'freed without grasping,'
'fully enlightened.'

That brother who is freed by insight,
because of disgust at feeling,
of the fading out of feeling,
the ceasing of feeling,
is called 'freed without grasping,'
'freed by insight.'

■

"The Tathāgata, brethren,
who being arahant,
is a fully enlightened one,
because of disgust at perception,

of the fading out of perception,
of the ceasing of perception,
is called 'freed without grasping,'
'fully enlightened.'

That brother who is freed by insight,
because of disgust at perception,
of the fading out of perception,
the ceasing of perception,
is called 'freed without grasping,'
'freed by insight.'

■

The Tathāgata, brethren,
who being arahant,
is a fully enlightened one,
because of disgust at the activities,
of the fading out of the activities,
of the ceasing of the activities,
is called 'freed without grasping,'
'fully enlightened.'

That brother who is freed by insight,
because of disgust at the activities,
of the fading out of the activities,
the ceasing of the activities,
is called 'freed without grasping,'
'freed by insight.'

■

The Tathāgata, brethren,
who being arahant,
is a fully enlightened one,
because of disgust at the consciousness,
of the fading out of the consciousness,

of the ceasing of the consciousness,
is called 'freed without grasping,'
'fully enlightened.'

That brother who is freed by insight,
because of disgust at the consciousness,
of the fading out of the consciousness,
the ceasing of the consciousness,
is called 'freed without grasping,'
'freed by insight.'

§

Now herein, brethren, what is the distinction,
what is the specific feature,[2]
what is the difference between the Tathāgata who,
being arahant,
is a fully enlightened one,
from the brother
who is freed by insight?"

"For us, lord, things are rooted in the Exalted One,
have the Exalted One for their guide
and their resort.

Well for us, lord,
if the Exalted One should reveal unto us
the meaning of this saying.

Hearing the Exalted One,
the brethren will bear it in mind."

"Then listen, brethren,
and apply your minds closely.

I will speak."

"Even so, lord,"
replied those brethren to the Exalted One.

"The Tathāgata, brethren,
who, being arahant,
is fully enlightened,
he it is who doth cause a way to arise[3]
which had not arisen before;
who doth bring about a way
not brought about before;
who doth proclaim a way
not proclaimed before;
who is the knower of a way,
who understandeth a way,
who is skilled in a way.

And now, brethren, his disciples
are wayfarers who follow after him.[4]

That, brethren, is the distinction,
the specific feature
which distinguishes the Tathāgata who,
being arahant,
is fully enlightened,
from the brother
who is freed by insight."

---

[1] Arahaṃ, the crude form, or present participle, not arahā, the nominative.

[2] Adhippāyoso.

[3] Cf. S. ii, 104-5; S. ii, 74. Comy. refers to the passage.

[4] Cf. S. i, 190; K.S. i, 242; M. iii, 8.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
6. Upāya Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

6. On Attachment

Sutta 59

Pañca or Anatta-Lakkhana Suttaṃ

The Five

---

[66] [59]

Thus have I heard:—

At Benares,
in the Deer Park
was the occasion[1] (for this discourse).

At that time the Exalted One thus addressed
the band of five brethren:

"Body, brethren, is not the Self.

If body, brethren, were the Self,
then body would not be involved in sickness,
and one could say of body:

'Thus let my body be.

Thus let my body not be.'

But, brethren, inasmuch as body
is not the Self,
that is why body is involved in sickness,
and one cannot say of body:

'Thus let my body be.

Thus let my body not be.'

■

Feeling, brethren, is not the Self.

If feeling, brethren, were the Self,
then feeling would not be involved in sickness,
and one could say of feeling:

'Thus let my feeling be.

Thus let my feeling not be.'

But, brethren, inasmuch as feeling is not the Self,
that is why feeling is involved in sickness,
and one cannot say of feeling:

'Thus let my feeling be.

Thus let my feeling not be.'

■

Perception, brethren, is not the Self.

If perception, brethren, were the Self,
then perception would not be involved in sickness,
and one could say of perception:

'Thus let my perception be.

Thus let my perception not be.'

But, brethren, inasmuch as perception is not the Self,
that is why perception is involved in sickness,
and one cannot say of perception:

'Thus let my perception be.

Thus let my perception not be.'

■

Activities, brethren, are not the Self.

If activities, brethren, were the Self,
then activities would not be involved in sickness,
and one could say of activities:

'Thus let my activities be.

Thus let my activities not be.'

But, brethren, inasmuch as activities are not the Self,
that is why activities are involved in sickness,
and one cannot say of activities:

'Thus let my activities be.

Thus let my activities not be.'

■

Consciousness, brethren, is not the Self.

If consciousness, brethren, were the Self,
then consciousness would not be involved in sickness,
and one could say of consciousness:

'Thus let my consciousness be.

Thus let my consciousness not be.'

But, brethren, inasmuch as consciousness is not the Self,
that is why consciousness is involved in sickness,
and one cannot say of consciousness:

'Thus let my consciousness be.

Thus let my consciousness not be.'

§

Now what think ye, brethren.

Is body permanent or impermanent?"

"Impermanent, lord."

"And what is impermanent,
is that weal or woe?"

"Woe, lord."

[60] "Then what is impermanent,
woeful,
unstable by nature,
is it fitting to regard it thus:

'This is mine;
I am this;
this is the Self of me?'"

"Surely not, lord."

■

"Now what think ye, brethren.

Is feeling permanent or impermanent?"

"Impermanent, lord."

"And what is impermanent,
is that weal or woe?"

"Woe, lord."

"Then what is impermanent,
woeful,
unstable by nature,'
is it fitting to regard it thus:

'This is mine;
I am this;
this is the Self of me?'"

"Surely not, lord."

■

"Now what think ye, brethren.

Is perception permanent or impermanent?"

"Impermanent, lord."

"And what is impermanent,
is that weal or woe?"

"Woe, lord."

"Then what is impermanent,
woeful,
unstable by nature,
is it fitting to regard it thus:

'This is mine;
I am this;
this is the Self of me?'"

"Surely not, lord."

■

"Now what think ye, brethren.

Are the activities permanent or impermanent?"

"Impermanent, lord."

"And what is impermanent,
is that weal or woe?"

"Woe, lord."

"Then what is impermanent,
woeful,
unstable by nature,
is it fitting to regard it thus:

'This is mine;
I am this;
this is the Self of me?'"

"Surely not, lord."

■

"Now what think ye, brethren.

Is consciousness permanent or impermanent?"

"Impermanent, lord."

"And what is impermanent,
is that weal or woe?"

"Woe, lord."

"Then what is impermanent,
woeful,
unstable by nature,'
is it fitting to regard it thus:

'This is mine;
I am this;
this is the Self of me?'"

"Surely not, lord."

§

"Therefore, brethren, every body whatever,
be it past,

future
or present,
be it inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or high,
far or near, -
every body should be thus regarded,
as it really is,
by right insight:

'This is not mine.

This I am not.[ed1]

This is not the Self of me.'

■

Therefore, brethren, every feeling whatever,
be it past,
future
or present,
be it inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or high,
far or near, -
every feeling should be thus regarded,
as it really is,
by right insight:

'This is not mine.

This I am not.

This is not the Self of me.'

■

Therefore, brethren, every perception whatever,
be it past,
future
or present,
be it inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or high,
far or near, -
every perception should be thus regarded,
as it really is,
by right insight:

'This is not mine.

This I am not.

This is not the Self of me.'

■

Therefore, brethren, every activity whatever,
be it past,
future
or present,
be it inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or high,
far or near, -
every activity should be thus regarded,
as it really is,
by right insight:

'This is not mine.

This I am not.

This is not the Self of me.'

■

Therefore, brethren, every consciousness whatever,
be it past,
future
or present,
be it inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or high,
far or near, -
every consciousness should be thus regarded,
as it really is,
by right insight:

'This is not mine.

This I am not.

This is not the Self of me.'

§

So seeing, brethren, the well-taught Ariyan disciple
feels disgust for body,
feels disgust for feeling,
feels disgust for perception,
feels disgust for the activities,
feels disgust for consciousness.

So feeling disgust
he is repelled;
being repelled,
he is freed;

knowledge arises
that in the freed
is the freed thing;
so that he knows:

'Destroyed is rebirth;
lived is the righteous life;
done is my task;
for life in these conditions
there is no hereafter.'"

Thus spake the Exalted One,
and the band of five brethren were pleased thereat,
and welcomed what was said by the Exalted One.

Moreover, by this teaching
thus uttered
the hearts of those five brethren were freed from the āsavas
without grasping.

---

[1] Niddānaṃ. Vin i, 12. This is the famous logion out of which the compilers have elaborated with formulas the so-called Anatta-Lakkhaṇa-Sutta. 'The five' were Aññāta-Koṇḍañña, Vappa, Bhaddiya, Mahānāma and Assajī, the early supporters of the Master. The discourse followed that which is called Dhamma-cakka-ppavarrana-sutta, or 'the Foundation of the Realm of Righteousness.' There is a tradition that it took place on the full-moon day of Āsaḷhā (July). Cf. Warren, p. 146.

[ed1] The PTS here has Woodward saying "This am not I".

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
6. Upāya Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

6. On Attachment

Sutta 60

Mahāli Suttaṃ

Mahāli

---

[68] [60]

Thus have I heard:—

Once the Exalted One was staying near Vesali,
in Great Wood,
at the Hall of the Peaked Gable.

Then Mahāli, the Licchavi,[1]
came to the Exalted One
and sat down at one side.

So seated, Mahāli, the Licchavi, thus addressed the Exalted One:

[61] "Lord, Pūraṇa Kassapa[2] thus spoke:

'There are no conditions,
there is no cause[3]
for the impurity of beings.

Without conditions,
without cause
do beings become impure.

There are no conditions,
there is no cause
for the purity of beings.

Without conditions,
without cause
do beings become pure.'

As to this,
what saith the Exalted One?"

"I say there are conditions,
there is cause
for the impurity of beings, Mahāli.

By conditions,
by a cause
do beings become impure.

There are conditions,
there is cause, Mahāli,
for the purity of beings.

By conditions,
by a cause
are beings purified."

§

"But what are the conditions, lord,
what is the cause
for the impurity of beings?

How do they become impure
by conditions,
by cause?"

"If the body, Mahāli,
were thus entirely painful,
fallen upon[4] pain,
beset with pain,
untouched by pleasure,[5]
beings would not thus delight in the body.

But whereas the body, Mahāli, is pleasant,
fallen upon pleasure,
untouched by pain,
therefore beings take delight in the body.

Linked by passion to it,
because of that union
they become impure.

These, Mahāli, are the conditions,
this is the cause
for the impurity of beings,

and thus beings become impure
by conditions,
by a cause.

■

If feeling, Mahāli,
were thus entirely painful,
fallen upon pain,
beset with pain,
untouched by pleasure,
beings would not thus delight in feeling.

But whereas feeling, Mahāli, is pleasant,
fallen upon pleasure,
untouched by pain,
therefore beings take delight in feeling.

Linked by passion to it,
because of that union
they become impure.

These, Mahāli, are the conditions,
this is the cause
for the impurity of beings,
and thus beings become impure
by conditions,
by a cause.

■

If perception, Mahāli,
were thus entirely painful,
fallen upon pain,
beset with pain,
untouched by pleasure,
beings would not thus delight in perception.

But whereas perception, Mahāli, is pleasant,
fallen upon pleasure,
untouched by pain,
therefore beings take delight in perception.

Linked by passion to it,
because of that union
they become impure.

These, Mahāli, are the conditions,
this is the cause
for the impurity of beings,
and thus beings become impure
by conditions,
by a cause.

■

If the activities, Mahāli,
were thus entirely painful,
fallen upon pain,
beset with pain,
untouched by pleasure,
beings would not thus delight in the activities.

But whereas the activities, Mahāli, are pleasant,
fallen upon pleasure,
untouched by pain,
therefore beings take delight in the activities.

Linked by passion to them,
because of that union
they become impure.

These, Mahāli, are the conditions,
this is the cause
for the impurity of beings,

and thus beings become impure
by conditions,
by a cause.

■

If consciousness, Mahāli,
were thus entirely painful,
fallen upon pain,
beset with pain,
untouched by pleasure,
beings would not thus delight in consciousness.

But whereas consciousness, Mahāli, is pleasant,
fallen upon pleasure,
untouched by pain,
therefore beings take delight in consciousness.

Linked by passion to it,
because of that union
they become impure.

These, Mahāli, are the conditions,
this is the cause
for the impurity of beings,
and thus beings become impure
by conditions,
by a cause.

[62] These, Mahāli, are the conditions,
this is the cause
for the impurity of beings,
and thus beings become impure
by conditions,
by a cause."

§

"But what, lord, are the conditions,
what is the cause
for the purity of beings?

How do beings by conditions,
by a cause,
become pure?"

"If the body, Mahāli,
were thus entirely pleasant,
fallen upon pleasure,
untouched by pain,
beings would thus delight in the body.

But whereas, Mahāli,
the body is painful,
fallen upon pain,
untouched by pleasure,
therefore beings feel disgust at the body;
by that disgust they are repelled,
by that repulsion they are made pure.

And these, Mahāli,
are the conditions,
this is the cause
for the purity of beings.

Even so they are made pure
by conditions,
by a cause.

■

If feeling, Mahāli,
were thus entirely pleasant,
fallen upon pleasure,
untouched by pain,
beings would thus delight in feeling.

But whereas, Mahāli,
feeling is painful,
fallen upon pain,
untouched by pleasure,
therefore beings feel disgust at feeling;
by that disgust they are repelled,
by that repulsion they are made pure.

And these, Mahāli,
are the conditions,
this is the cause
for the purity of beings.

Even so they are made pure
by conditions,
by a cause.

■

If perception, Mahāli,
were thus entirely pleasant,
fallen upon pleasure,
untouched by pain,
beings would thus delight in perception.

But whereas, Mahāli,
perception is painful,
fallen upon pain,
untouched by pleasure,
therefore beings feel disgust at perception;

by that disgust they are repelled,
by that repulsion they are made pure.

And these, Mahāli,
are the conditions,
this is the cause
for the purity of beings.

Even so they are made pure
by conditions,
by a cause.

■

If the activities, Mahāli,
were thus entirely pleasant,
fallen upon pleasure,
untouched by pain,
beings would thus delight in the activities.

But whereas, Mahāli,
the activities are painful,
fallen upon pain,
untouched by pleasure,
therefore beings feel disgust at the activities;
by that disgust they are repelled,
by that repulsion they are made pure.

And these, Mahāli,
are the conditions,
this is the cause
for the purity of beings.

Even so they are made pure
by conditions,
by a cause.

■

If consciousness, Mahāli,
were thus entirely pleasant,
fallen upon pleasure,
untouched by pain,
beings would thus delight in consciousness.

But whereas, Mahāli,
consciousness is painful,
fallen upon pain,
untouched by pleasure,
therefore beings feel disgust at consciousness;
by that disgust they are repelled,
by that repulsion they are made pure.

And these, Mahāli,
are the conditions,
this is the cause
for the purity of beings.

Even so they are made pure
by conditions,
by a cause.

---

[1] Cf. S. i, 230; K.S. i, 295.

[2] The head of one of the six independent sects which opposed Buddhism. Cf. S. i, 65; K.S. i, 90; Buddhism (Mrs Rhys Davids), p 85 f. By a quite curious carelessness the editors of the Kindred Sayings have imputed to Pūraṇa Kassapa the teaching imputed in the Dīgha (i, 53) to Makkhali Gosāla He denied hetu-paccayo, condition and cause; the efficacy of karma. He is ahetu-vādo, non-causationst.

[3] Compendium 280-1. Hetu-paccayo, 'something which affects a cause in the production of the effects of that cause. So "condition" is nearest.'

[4] For avakkati. See Buddh. Psychol, 22.

[5] At Expos., i, 53, sukhaṃ is defined in different ways.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
6. Upāya Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

6. On Attachment

Sutta 61

Āditta Suttaṃ

On Fire[1]

---

[71] [62]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"Body is on fire, brethren,
feeling is on fire,
perception is on fire,

the activities are on fire,
consciousness is on fire.

So seeing, brethren, the well-taught Ariyan disciple
feels disgust for body,
feels disgust for feeling,
feels disgust for perception,
feels disgust for the activities,
feels disgust for consciousness.

Feeling disgust he is repelled;
by repulsion he is freed;
knowledge arises that in the freed man
is the freed thing,
so he knows:

'Destroyed is rebirth,
lived is the righteous life,
done is the task,
for life in these conditions
there is no hereafter.'"

---

[1] More fully in the famous logion of the third or 'fire-sermon,' preached on Gāya Head, Vin. i, 21. Cf. Pts. of Controv. 128. [Ed. see also: SN 4.35.28]

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
6. Upāya Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

6. On Attachment

Sutta 62

Nirutti-Patha Suttaṃ

Mode of Reckoning

---

[71] [62]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

The Exalted One said:

"These three modes of reckoning, brethren,
of terming,
of naming,[1]

both now and formerly held distinct,
will not be con- [63] fused
by recluses and brahmins who are wise.

Which three?

Whatsoever of matter,[2] brethren,
is past,
ceased,
changed, -
that is reckoned,
termed
and named
as 'has been.'

It is not reckoned as 'is,'
nor is it reckoned as 'will be.'

■

Whatsoever feeling, brethren,
is past,
ceased,
changed, -
that is reckoned,
termed
and named
as 'has been.'

It is not reckoned as 'is,'
nor is it reckoned as 'will be.'

■

Whatsoever perception, brethren,
is past,
ceased,

changed, -
that is reckoned,
termed
and named
as 'has been.'

It is not reckoned as 'is,'
nor is it reckoned as 'will be.'

■

Whatsoever activities, brethren,
are past,
ceased,
changed, -
they are reckoned,
termed
and named
as 'has been.'

They are not reckoned as 'are,'
nor are they reckoned as 'will be.'

■

Whatsoever consciousness, brethren,
is past,
ceased,
changed, -
that is reckoned,
termed
and named
as 'has been.'

It is not reckoned as 'is,'
nor is it reckoned as 'will be.'

§

Whatsoever matter, brethren, is unborn, unmanifested, -
that is reckoned,
termed
and named
as 'will be.'

It is not reckoned as 'is,'
nor is it reckoned as 'has been.'

■

Whatsoever feeling, brethren, is unborn,
unmanifested, -
that is reckoned,
termed
and named
as 'will be.'

It is not reckoned as 'is,'
nor is it reckoned as 'has been.'

■

Whatsoever perception, brethren, is unborn,
unmanifested, -
that is reckoned,
termed
and named
as 'will be.'

It is not reckoned as 'is,'
nor is it reckoned as 'has been.'

■

Whatsoever activities, brethren, are unborn,
unmanifested, -
they are reckoned,
termed
and named
as 'will be.'

It is not reckoned as 'is,'
nor is it reckoned as 'has been.'

■

Whatsoever consciousness, brethren, is unborn,
unmanifested, -
that is reckoned,
termed
and named
as 'will be.'

It is not reckoned as 'is,'
nor is it reckoned as 'has been.'

§

Whatsoever matter, brethren, is born, manifested, -
that is reckoned,
termed

and named
as 'is.'

It is not reckoned as 'has been,'
nor is it reckoned as 'will be.'

■

Whatsoever feeling, brethren, is born,
manifested, -
that is reckoned,
termed
and named
as 'is.'

It is not reckoned as 'has been,'
nor is it reckoned as 'will be.'

■

Whatsoever perception, brethren, is born,
manifested, -
that is reckoned,
termed
and named
as 'is.'

It is not reckoned as 'has been,'
nor is it reckoned as 'will be.'

■

Whatsoever activities, brethren, are born,
manifested, -
those are reckoned,
termed

and named
as 'is.'

They are not reckoned as 'has been,'
nor are they reckoned as 'will be.'

■

Whatsoever consciousness, brethren, is born,
manifested, -
that is reckoned,
termed
and named
as 'is.'

It is not reckoned as 'has been,'
nor is it reckoned as 'will be.'

These, brethren, are the three modes of reckoning, terming
and naming,
which both now
and formerly held distinct
are not confused,
will not be confused
and obscured
by recluses and brahmins who are wise.

§

Moreover, the folk of Ukkali,[3]
preachers in the retreat,[4]

[64] deniers of the cause, deniers of the deed,
deniers of reality, -
even they used to judge
that these three modes of reckoning
were not to be blamed,
not to be scorned.

And why was that?

Because they feared blame,
attack,
reproach."

---

[1] Nirutti-adhivacana-paññatti-patha. Cf. Pts. of Cont. 96, 100, 378.

[2] Or body (rūpaṃ).

[3] Cf. Kathāvatthu, 141 [Pts. of Contr. 95 n.]. A. ii, 31.

[4] During vassa (Sinhalese was) or the rainy season, when wanderers were in residence, these 'dwellers of the Ukkali district' (Comy.) taught, as in the last sutra, [sic] that there is no condition and no cause; that ill befalls not the doer of the deed; that charity is fruitless; that nothing exists. Even these extremists upheld the distinctions of the three times. At M. iii, 78 we have Ye pi te ahesuṃ Okkalā (Ukkalā) ... ti pi dhamma-pariyāyaṃ ... maññeyuṃ, for the same alleged reasons.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
7. Arahatta Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

7. On the Arahant

Sutta 63

Upādiyamāna Suttaṃ

Clinging[1]

---

[73] [64]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī
In jeta Grove,
at Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then a certain brother came to the Exalted One, saluted him and sat down at one side.

So seated that brother thus addressed the Exalted One:

"Well for me, lord,
if the Exalted One would teach me a doctrine,
so that hearing the doctrine of the Exalted One
I might dwell solitary,
secluded,
zealous,
ardent
and aspiring."

"Brother, if one cling,[1]
he is Mara's bondsman.

If he cling not,
he is released from the evil one."

"I understand, Exalted One!

I understand, Well-farer!"

"But in what way, brother,
do you understand in full
the meaning of what I spoke concisely?"

"Thus, lord:

Clinging to body,
one is Mara's bondsman.

Not clinging,
he is released from the evil one.

Clinging to feeling,
he is Mara's bondsman.

Not clinging,
he is released from the evil one.

Clinging to perception,
he is Mara's bondsman.

Not clinging,
he is released from the evil one.

Clinging to the activities,
he is Mara's bondsman.

Not clinging,
he is released from the evil one.

Clinging to consciousness,
he is Mara's bondsman.

Not clinging,
he is released from the evil one.

That, lord, is how I understand in full
what was concisely spoken by the Exalted One."

"Well said, brother!

Well said, brother!

Well have you understood in full
the meaning of what I spoke concisely.

It is indeed by clinging to body,
one is Mara's bondsman.

Not clinging,
he is released from the evil one.

Clinging to feeling,
he is Mara's bondsman.

Not clinging,
he is released from the evil one.

Clinging to perception,
he is Mara's bondsman.

Not clinging,
he is released from the evil one.

Clinging to the activities,
he is Mara's bondsman.

Not clinging,
he is released from the evil one.

Clinging to consciousness,
he is Mara's bondsman.

Not clinging,
he is released from the evil one.

And so should be understood in full
what I said concisely."

[65] Thereupon that brother gladly heard the words of the Exalted One
and welcomed them,
and he rose from his seat,
saluted the Exalted One
and departed.

Thereafter that brother,
dwelling solitary,
secluded,
zealous,

ardent
and aspiring,
in no long time
attained that goal supreme of the righteous life,
to win which the clansmen rightly go forth from home to the homeless,
so that in that very life
of himself
he fully understood it,
realized it
and abode therein,
and knew:

"Destroyed is rebirth,
lived is the righteous life,
done is the task,
for life in these conditions there is no hereafter."

So that brother was yet another of the Arahants.

---

[1] Upādiyamāno (upa+ā+diy, from dā; giving on up to = taking, grasping). 'To craving, pride, views.' Comy.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
7. Arahatta Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

7. On the Arahant

Sutta 64

Maññamāna Suttaṃ

Imagining

---

[74] [65]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

Then a certain brother came to the Exalted One, saluted him and sat down at one side.

So seated that brother thus addressed the Exalted One:

"Well for me, lord, if the Exalted One would teach me a doctrine,
so that hearing the doctrine of the Exalted One
I might dwell solitary,
secluded,
zealous,
ardent
and aspiring."

"Brother, if one imagin,
he is Mara's bondsman.

If he imagin not,
he is released from the evil one."

"I understand, Exalted One!

I understand, Well-farer!"

"But in what way, brother,
do you understand in full
the meaning of what I spoke concisely?"

"Thus, lord:

Imagining body,
one is Mara's bondsman.

Not imagining,
he is released from the evil one.

Imagining feeling,
he is Mara's bondsman.

Not imagining,
he is released from the evil one.

Imagining perception,
he is Mara's bondsman.

Not imagining,
he is released from the evil one.

Imagining the activities,
he is Mara's bondsman.

Not imagining,
he is released from the evil one.

Imagining consciousness,
he is Mara's bondsman.

Not imagining,
he is released from the evil one.

That, lord, is how I understand in full
what was concisely spoken by the Exalted One."

"Well said, brother!

Well said, brother!

Well have you understood in full
the meaning of what I spoke concisely.

It is indeed by imagining body,
one is Mara's bondsman.

Not imagining,
he is released from the evil one.

Imagining feeling,
he is Mara's bondsman.

Not imagining,
he is released from the evil one.

Imagining perception,
he is Mara's bondsman.

Not imagining,
he is released from the evil one.

Imagining the activities,
he is Mara's bondsman.

Not imagining,
he is released from the evil one.

Imagining consciousness,
he is Mara's bondsman.

Not imagining,
he is released from the evil one.

And so should be understood in full
what I said concisely."

Thereupon that brother gladly heard the words of the Exalted One
and welcomed them,
and he rose from his seat,
saluted the Exalted One
and departed.

Thereafter that brother,
dwelling solitary,
secluded,
zealous,
ardent
and aspiring,
in no long time

attained that goal supreme of the righteous life,
to win which the clansmen rightly go forth from home to the homeless,
so that in that very life
of himself
he fully understood it,
realized it
and abode therein,
and knew:

"Destroyed is rebirth,
lived is the righteous life,
done is the task,
for life in these conditions there is no hereafter."

So that brother was yet another of the Arahants.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
7. Arahatta Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

7. On the Arahant

Sutta 65

Abhinandana Suttaṃ

Enamoured

---

[75] [65]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

Then a certain brother came to the Exalted One, saluted him and sat down at one side.

So seated that brother thus addressed the Exalted One:

"Well for me, lord, if the Exalted One would teach me a doctrine,
so that hearing the doctrine of the Exalted One
I might dwell solitary,
secluded,
zealous,
ardent
and aspiring."

"Brother, if one be enamoured,
he is Mara's bondsman.

If he be enamoured not,
he is released from the evil one."

"I understand, Exalted One!

I understand, Well-farer!"

"But in what way, brother,
do you understand in full
the meaning of what I spoke concisely?"

"Thus, lord:

Enamoured of body,
one is Mara's bondsman.

Not enamoured,
he is released from the evil one.

Enamoured of feeling,
he is Mara's bondsman.

Not enamoured,
he is released from the evil one.

Enamoured of perception,
he is Mara's bondsman.

Not enamoured,
he is released from the evil one.

Enamoured of the activities,
he is Mara's bondsman.

Not enamoured,
he is released from the evil one.

Enamoured of consciousness,
he is Mara's bondsman.

Not enamoured,
he is released from the evil one.

That, lord, is how I understand in full
what was concisely spoken by the Exalted One."

"Well said, brother!

Well said, brother!

Well have you understood in full
the meaning of what I spoke concisely.

It is indeed by enamoured body,
one is Mara's bondsman.

Not enamoured,
he is released from the evil one.

Enamoured of feeling,
he is Mara's bondsman.

Not enamoured,
he is released from the evil one.

Enamoured of perception,
he is Mara's bondsman.

Not enamoured,
he is released from the evil one.

Enamoured of the activities,
he is Mara's bondsman.

Not enamoured,
he is released from the evil one.

Enamoured of consciousness,
he is Mara's bondsman.

Not enamoured,
he is released from the evil one.

And so should be understood in full
what I said concisely."

Thereupon that brother gladly heard the words of the Exalted One
and welcomed them,
and he rose from his seat,
saluted the Exalted One
and departed.

Thereafter that brother,
dwelling solitary,
secluded,
zealous,
ardent
and aspiring,
in no long time

attained that goal supreme of the righteous life,
to win which the clansmen rightly go forth from home to the homeless,
so that in that very life
of himself
he fully understood it,
realized it
and abode therein,
and knew:

"Destroyed is rebirth,
lived is the righteous life,
done is the task,
for life in these conditions there is no hereafter."

So that brother was yet another of the Arahants.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
7. Arahatta Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

7. On the Arahant

Sutta 66

Anicca Suttaṃ

Impermanent

---

[76] [65]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

Then a certain brother came to the Exalted One, saluted him and sat down at one side.

So seated that brother thus addressed the Exalted One:

"Well for me, lord, if the Exalted One would teach me a doctrine,
so that hearing the doctrine of the Exalted One
I might dwell solitary,
secluded,
zealous,
ardent
and aspiring."

"For that which is impermanent, brother,
you must put away desire."

"I understand, Exalted One!

I understand, Well-farer!"

"But how, brother, do you understand in full
that which I said concisely?"

"Body, lord, is impermanent.

I must put away desire for that.

Feeling, lord, is impermanent.

I must put away desire for that.

Perception, lord, is impermanent.

I must put away desire for that.

The activites, lord, are impermanent.

I must put away desire for that.

Consciousness, lord, is impermanent.

I must put away desire for that.

That is how I understand in full
what was concisely spoken by the Exalted One."

[66] "Well said!

Well said, brother!

Well indeed do you understand in full
the meaning of what I said concisely.

Body, brother, is indeed impermanent.

You must put away desire for that.

"Feeling, brother, is impermanent.

You must put away desire for that.

"Perception, brother, is impermanent.

You must put away desire for that.

"The activites, brother, are impermanent.

You must put away desire for that.

"Consciousness, brother, is impermanent.

You must put away desire for that.

That is how, brother, the meaning of what I said concisely
is to be understood in full."

Thereupon that brother gladly heard the words of the Exalted One
and welcomed them,
and he rose from his seat,
saluted the Exalted One
and departed.

Thereafter that brother,
dwelling solitary,
secluded,
zealous,
ardent
and aspiring,
in no long time
attained that goal supreme of the righteous life,
to win which the clansmen rightly go forth from home to the homeless,
so that in that very life
of himself
he fully understood it,
realized it
and abode therein,
and knew:

"Destroyed is rebirth,
lived is the righteous life,
done is the task,
for life in these conditions there is no hereafter."

So that brother was yet another of the Arahants.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
7. Arahatta Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

7. On the Arahant

Sutta 67

Dukkha Suttaṃ

Suffering

---

[66]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

Then a certain brother came to the Exalted One, saluted him and sat down at one side.

So seated that brother thus addressed the Exalted One:

"Well for me, lord, if the Exalted One would teach me a doctrine,
so that hearing the doctrine of the Exalted One
I might dwell solitary,
secluded,
zealous,
ardent
and aspiring."

"For that which is suffering, brother,
you must put away desire."

"I understand, Exalted One!

I understand, Well-farer!"

"But how, brother, do you understand in full
that which I said concisely?"

"Body, lord, is suffering.

I must put away desire for that.

"Feeling, lord, is suffering.

I must put away desire for that.

"Perception, lord, is suffering.

I must put away desire for that.

"The activites, lord, are suffering.

I must put away desire for that.

"Consciousness, lord, is suffering.

I must put away desire for that.

That is how I understand in full
what was concisely spoken by the Exalted One."

"Well said!

Well said, brother!

Well indeed do you understand in full
the meaning of what I said concisely.

Body, brother, is indeed suffering.

You must put away desire for that.

Feeling, brother, is suffering.

You must put away desire for that.

Perception, brother, is suffering.

You must put away desire for that.

The activites, brother, are suffering.

You must put away desire for that.

Consciousness, brother, is suffering.

You must put away desire for that.

That is how, brother, the meaning of what I said concisely
is to be understood in full."

Thereupon that brother gladly heard the words of the Exalted One
and welcomed them,
and he rose from his seat,
saluted the Exalted One
and departed.

Thereafter that brother,
dwelling solitary,
secluded,
zealous,
ardent
and aspiring,
in no long time
attained that goal supreme of the righteous life,
to win which the clansmen rightly go forth from home to the homeless,
so that in that very life
of himself
he fully understood it,
realized it
and abode therein,
and knew:

"Destroyed is rebirth,
lived is the righteous life,
done is the task,
for life in these conditions there is no hereafter."

So that brother was yet another of the Arahants.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
7. Arahatta Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

7. On the Arahant

Sutta 68

Anattā Suttaṃ

No Self

---

[66]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

Then a certain brother came to the Exalted One, saluted him and sat down at one side.

So seated that brother thus addressed the Exalted One:

"Well for me, lord, if the Exalted One would teach me a doctrine,
so that hearing the doctrine of the Exalted One
I might dwell solitary,
secluded,
zealous,
ardent
and aspiring."

"For that which is no self, brother,
you must put away desire."

"I understand, Exalted One!

I understand, Well-farer!"

"But how, brother, do you understand in full
that which I said concisely?"

"Body, lord, is no self.

I must put away desire for that.

Feeling, lord, is no self.

I must put away desire for that.

Perception, lord, is no self.

I must put away desire for that.

The activites, lord, are no self.

I must put away desire for that.

Consciousness, lord, is no self.

I must put away desire for that.

That is how I understand in full
what was concisely spoken by the Exalted One."

"Well said!

Well said, brother!

Well indeed do you understand in full
the meaning of what I said concisely.

Body, brother, is indeed no self.

You must put away desire for that.

Feeling, brother, is no self.

You must put away desire for that.

Perception, brother, is no self.

You must put away desire for that.

The activites, brother, are no self.

You must put away desire for that.

Consciousness, brother, is no self.

You must put away desire for that.

That is how, brother, the meaning of what I said concisely
is to be understood in full."

Thereupon that brother gladly heard the words of the Exalted One
and welcomed them,
and he rose from his seat,
saluted the Exalted One
and departed.

Thereafter that brother,
dwelling solitary,
secluded,
zealous,
ardent
and aspiring,
in no long time
attained that goal supreme of the righteous life,
to win which the clansmen rightly go forth from home to the homeless,
so that in that very life
of himself
he fully understood it,
realized it
and abode therein,
and knew:

"Destroyed is rebirth,
lived is the righteous life,
done is the task,
for life in these conditions there is no hereafter."

So that brother was yet another of the Arahants.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
7. Arahatta Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

7. On the Arahant

Sutta 69

Anattaniya[1] Suttaṃ

Not Belonging to the Self

---

[66]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

Then a certain brother came to the Exalted One, saluted him and sat down at one side.

So seated that brother thus addressed the Exalted One:

"Well for me, lord, if the Exalted One would teach me a doctrine,
so that hearing the doctrine of the Exalted One
I might dwell solitary,
secluded,
zealous,
ardent
and aspiring."

"For that which does not belong to the Self, brother,
you must put away desire."

"I understand, Exalted One!

I understand, Well-farer!"

"But how, brother, do you understand in full
that which I said concisely?"

"Body, lord, does not belong to the Self.

I must put away desire for that.

Feeling, lord, does not belong to the Self.

I must put away desire for that.

Perception, lord, does not belong to the Self.

I must put away desire for that.

The activites, lord, do not belong to the Self.

I must put away desire for that.

Consciousness, lord, does not belong to the Self.

I must put away desire for that.

That is how I understand in full
what was concisely spoken by the Exalted One."

"Well said!

Well said, brother!

Well indeed do you understand in full
the meaning of what I said concisely.

Body, brother, indeed does not belong to the Self.

You must put away desire for that.

Feeling, brother, does not belong to the Self.

You must put away desire for that.

"Perception, brother, does not belong to the Self.

You must put away desire for that.

The activites, brother, do not belong to the Self.

You must put away desire for that.

Consciousness, brother, does not belong to the Self.

You must put away desire for that.

That is how, brother, the meaning of what I said concisely
is to be understood in full."

Thereupon that brother gladly heard the words of the Exalted One
and welcomed them,
and he rose from his seat,
saluted the Exalted One
and departed.

Thereafter that brother,
dwelling solitary,
secluded,
zealous,
ardent
and aspiring,
in no long time
attained that goal supreme of the righteous life,
to win which the clansmen rightly go forth from home to the homeless,
so that in that very life
of himself
he fully understood it,
realized it
and abode therein,
and knew:

"Destroyed is rebirth,
lived is the righteous life,
done is the task,
for life in these conditions there is no hereafter."

So that brother was yet another of the Arahants.

---

[1] Comy., 'na attano santakaṃ: attano parikkkāra-bhāvena suññaitaṃ,' 'not one's own property; emptiness of being one's own equipment.' The meaning here is that 'the non-essential' is to be put away.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
7. Arahatta Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

7. On the Arahant

Sutta 70

Rajanīya-Saṇṭhita Suttaṃ

Lustful

---

[66]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī.

Then a certain brother came to the Exalted One, saluted him and sat down at one side.

So seated that brother thus addressed the Exalted One:

"Well for me, lord, if the Exalted One would teach me a doctrine,
so that hearing the doctrine of the Exalted One
I might dwell solitary,
secluded,
zealous,
ardent
and aspiring."

"For that which is inherent in what is lustful, brother,
you must put away desire."

"I understand, Exalted One!

I understand, Well-farer!"

"But how, brother, do you understand in full
that which I said concisely?"

"Body, lord, is inherent in what is lustful.

I must put away desire for that.

Feeling, lord, is inherent in what is lustful.

I must put away desire for that.

Perception, lord, is inherent in what is lustful.

I must put away desire for that.

The activites, lord, do not belong to the Self.

I must put away desire for that.

Consciousness, lord, is inherent in what is lustful.

I must put away desire for that.

That is how I understand in full
what was concisely spoken by the Exalted One."

"Well said!

Well said, brother!

Well indeed do you understand in full
the meaning of what I said concisely.

Body, brother, indeed is inherent in what is lustful.

You must put away desire for that.

Feeling, brother, is inherent in what is lustful.

You must put away desire for that.

Perception, brother, is inherent in what is lustful.

You must put away desire for that.

The activites, brother, do not belong to the Self.

You must put away desire for that.

Consciousness, brother, is inherent in what is lustful.

You must put away desire for that.

That is how, brother, the meaning of what I said concisely
is to be understood in full.'

Thereupon that brother gladly heard the words of the Exalted One
and welcomed them,
and he rose from his seat,
saluted the Exalted One
and departed.

Thereafter that brother,
dwelling solitary,
secluded,
zealous,
ardent
and aspiring,
in no long time
attained that goal supreme of the righteous life,
to win which the clansmen rightly go forth from home to the homeless,
so that in that very life
of himself
he fully understood it,
realized it
and abode therein,
and knew:

"Destroyed is rebirth,
lived is the righteous life,
done is the task,
for life in these conditions there is no hereafter."

So that brother was yet another of the Arahants.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
7. Arahatta Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

7. On the Arahant

Sutta 71

Rādha Suttaṃ

Rādha[1]

---

[79] [66]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī
In jeta Grove,
at Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Rādha came to the Exalted One,
and saluting him,
sat down at one side.

So seated the venerable Rādha thus addressed the Exalted One:

"How in him who knows,
how in him who sees, lord,
are there in this body,
together with its consciousness,
and like- [67] wise in all external objects,
no (more) ideas of 'I' and 'mine,'
no more leanings to conceit?"[2]

"Whatsoever material object, Rādha,
be it past,
future
or present,
inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or high,
far or near,
one regards thus:

'This is not mine;
this am not I;
this is not the Self of me' -

that is seeing things as they really are,
by right insight.

■

Whatsoever feeling, Rādha,
be it past,
future
or present,
inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or high,

far or near,
one regards thus:

'This is not mine;
this am not I;
this is not the Self of me' -

that is seeing things as they really are,
by right insight.

■

Whatsoever perception, Rādha,
be it past,
future
or present,
inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or high,
far or near,
one regards thus:

'This is not mine;
this am not I;
this is not the Self of me' -

that is seeing things as they really are,
by right insight.

■

Whatsoever activities, Rādha,
be they past,
future
or present,
inward or outward,
gross or subtle,

low or high,
far or near,
one regards thus:

'This is not mine;
this am not I;
this is not the Self of me' -

that is seeing things as they really are,
by right insight.

■

Whatsoever consciousness, Rādha,
be it past,
future
or present,
inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or high,
far or near,
one regards thus:

'This is not mine;
this am not I;
this is not the Self of me' -

that is seeing things as they really are,
by right insight.

Thus, Rādha,
in him who knows,
thus in him who sees,
in this body,
together with its consciousness,
and likewise in all external objects,

are there no more ideas of 'I' and 'mine,'
no more leanings to conceit."

Thereupon the venerable Rādha gladly heard the words of the Exalted One
and welcomed them,
and he rose from his seat,
saluted the Exalted One
and departed.

Thereafter the venerable Rādha,
dwelling solitary,
secluded,
zealous,
ardent
and aspiring,
in no long time
attained that goal supreme of the righteous life,
to win which the clansmen rightly go forth from home to the homeless,
so that in that very life
of himself
he fully understood it,
realized it
and abode therein,
and knew:

"Destroyed is rebirth,
lived is the righteous life,
done is the task,
for life in these conditions there is no hereafter."

And the venerable Rādha was yet another of the Arahants.

---

[1] Cf. Thag. 133, Brethren, 115; infra 188, iv, 48.

[2] For this and the next section cf. S. ii, 252-3; K.S. ii, 167-8, and n., where the same words are put in the mouth of Rāhula. Cf. infra Text 135-6.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
7. Arahatta Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

7. On the Arahant

Sutta 72

Surādha Suttaṃ

Surādha[1]

---

[80] [67]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī
In jeta Grove,
at Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Surādha came to the Exalted One,
and saluting him,
sat down at one side.

So seated the venerable Surādha thus addressed the Exalted One:

"How in him who knows,
how in him who sees, lord,
in this body with its consciousness,
and likewise in all external objects,
has mind gone away from all ideas of 'I' and 'mine,'
and has passed beyond the ways of conceit[2]
and is utterly liberated?'

"Whatsoever material object, Surādha,
be it past,
future
or present,
inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or high,
far or near,
one regards thus:

'This is not mine;
this am not I;
this is not the Self of me' -

so seeing things as [68] they really are,
by right insight,
one is liberated without grasping.

■

Whatsoever feeling, Surādha,
be it past,
future
or present,
inward or outward,
gross or subtle,

low or high,
far or near,
one regards thus:

'This is not mine;
this am not I;
this is not the Self of me' -

that is seeing things as they really are,
by right insight.

■

Whatsoever perception, Surādha,
be it past,
future
or present,
inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or high,
far or near,
one regards thus:

'This is not mine;
this am not I;
this is not the Self of me' -

so seeing things as they really are,
by right insight,
one is liberated without grasping.

■

Whatsoever activities, Surādha,
be they past,
future
or present,

inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or high,
far or near,
one regards thus:

'This is not mine;
this am not I;
this is not the Self of me' -

so seeing things as they really are,
by right insight,
one is liberated without grasping.

■

Whatsoever consciousness, Surādha,
be it past,
future
or present,
inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or high,
far or near,
one regards thus:

'This is not mine;
this am not I;
this is not the Self of me' -

so seeing things as they really are,
by right insight,
one is liberated without grasping.

Thus, Surādha,
in him who knows,
in him who sees, lord,

in this body with its consciousness,
and likewise in all external objects,
has mind gone away from all ideas of 'I' and 'mine,'
and has passed beyond the ways of conceit
and is utterly liberated."

Thereupon the venerable Surādha gladly heard the words of the Exalted One
and welcomed them,
and he rose from his seat,
saluted the Exalted One
and departed.

Thereafter the venerable Surādha,
dwelling solitary,
secluded,
zealous,
ardent
and aspiring,
in no long time
attained that goal supreme of the righteous life,
to win which the clansmen rightly go forth from home to the homeless,
so that in that very life
of himself
he fully understood it,
realized it
and abode therein,
and knew:

"Destroyed is rebirth,
lived is the righteous life,
done is the task,
for life in these conditions there is no hereafter."

And the venerable Surādha was yet another of the Arahants.

[1] In Thag. Comy. (Pss. of the Brethren, p 116) a thera Surāda is the younger brother of a thera Rādha.

[2] Vidhā-samatikkantaṃ. The three forms of false opinion arising from māno have been referred to above, § 49 (Soṇa).

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
8. Khajjaniya Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

8. On what Must be Devoured

Sutta 73

Assāda Suttaṃ

Satisfction

---

[81] [68]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī
In jeta Grove,
at Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One said:

"Brethren, the untaught many-folk understand not
as they really are
the satisfaction of body,
the misery of it,
the escape from it.

They understand not
the satisfaction of feeling,
the misery of it,
the escape from it.

They understand not
the satisfaction of perception,
the misery of it,
the escape from it.

They understand not
the satisfaction of the activities,
the misery of them,
the escape from them.

They understand not
the satisfaction of consciousness,
the misery of it,
the escape from it.

§

But the well-taught Ariyan disciple
does understand as they really are
the satisfaction of body,
the misery of it,
the escape from it.

Does understand
the satisfaction of feeling,
the misery of it,
the escape from it.

Does understand
the satisfaction of perception,
the misery of it,
the escape from it.

Does understand
the satisfaction of the activities,
the misery of them,
the escape from them.

Does understand
the satisfaction of consciousness,
the misery of it,
the escape from it."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
8. Khajjaniya Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

8. On what Must be Devoured

Sutta 74

Paṭhama Samudayo Suttaṃ

Arising (1)

---

[82] [68]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī
In jeta Grove,
at Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One said:

"Brethren, the untaught many-folk understand not
as they really are
the arising of body,
the going out of it,
the escape from it.

They understand not
the arising of feeling,
the going out of it,
the escape from it.

They understand not
the arising of perception,
the going out of it,
the escape from it.

They understand not
the arising of the activities,
the going out of them,
the escape from them.

They understand not
the arising of consciousness,
the going out of it,
the escape from it.

§

But the well-taught Ariyan disciple
does understand as they really are
the arising of body,
the going out of it,
the escape from it.

Does understand
the arising of feeling,
the going out of it,
the escape from it.

Does understand
the arising of perception,
the going out of it,
the escape from it.

Does understand
the arising of the activities,
the going out of them,
the escape from them.

Does understand
the arising of consciousness,
the going out of it,
the escape from it."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
8. Khajjaniya Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

8. On what Must be Devoured

Sutta 75

Dutiya Samudayo Suttaṃ

Arising (2)

---

[82] [68]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī
In jeta Grove,
at Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One said:

"The well-taught Ariyan disciple
understands as they really are
the arising of body,
the going out of it,
the satisfaction of it,
the misery of it,
the escape from it.

Understands
the arising of feeling,
the going out of it,
the satisfaction of it,
the misery of it,
the escape from it.

Understands
the arising of perception,
the going out of it,
the satisfaction of it,
the misery of it,
the escape from it.

Understands
the arising of the activities,
the going out of them,
the satisfaction of it,
the misery of it,
the escape from them.

Understands
the arising of consciousness,
the going out of it,
the satisfaction of it,
the misery of it,
the escape from it."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
8. Khajjaniya Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

8. On what Must be Devoured

Sutta 76

Paṭhama Arahanta Suttaṃ

Arahants (1)

---

[82] [68]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī
In jeta Grove,
at Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One said:

"Body, brethren, is impermanent.

What is impermanent,
that is suffering.

What is suffering,
that is not the Self.

[69] What is not the Self,

'That is not mine,
that am not I,
that is not the Self of me.'

This is the way one should regard things
as they really are,
by right insight.

■

Feeling, brethren, is impermanent.

What is impermanent,
that is suffering.

What is suffering,
that is not the Self.

What is not the Self,

'That is not mine,
that am not I,
that is not the Self of me.'

This is the way one should regard things
as they really are,
by right insight.

■

Perception, brethren, is impermanent.

What is impermanent,
that is suffering.

What is suffering,
that is not the Self.

What is not the Self,

'That is not mine,
that am not I,
that is not the Self of me.'

This is the way one should regard things
as they really are,
by right insight.

■

The activities, brethren, are impermanent.

What is impermanent,
that is suffering.

What is suffering,
that is not the Self.

What is not the Self,

'That is not mine,
that am not I,
that is not the Self of me.'

This is the way one should regard things
as they really are,
by right insight.

■

Consciousness, brethren, is impermanent.

What is impermanent,
that is suffering.

What is suffering,
that is not the Self.

What is not the Self,

'That is not mine,
that am not I,
that is not the Self of me.'

This is the way one should regard things
as they really are,
by right insight.

§

So seeing, brethren,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
feels disgust at body,
feels disgust at feeling,
feels disgust at perception,
feels disgust at activities
feels disgust at consciousness.

Feeling disgust
he is repelled:
by repulsion he is released;

by that release
set free,
knowledge arises:

'In the freed man
is the free thing'

and he knows:

'Destroyed is rebirth;
lived is the righteous life;
done is the task;
for life in these conditions
there is no hereafter.'

§

Throughout the seven abodes, brethren,
up to the highest becoming,
these are the topmost,
these are the best in all the world, -
these Arahants."

Thus spake the Exalted One.

The Well-farer having so said,
the Teacber said this further:

"Ah, happy saints, the Arahants! In them no craving's seen.
The 'I' conceit is rooted up: delusion's net is burst.
Lust-free they have attained; translucent is the heart of them.
These god-like beings, drug-immune, unspotted in the world,
Knowing the fivefold mass, they roam the seven domains of good.[1]
Worthy of praise and worthy they - sons of the Wake true-born,
The wearers of the sevenfold gem,[2] i' the threefold training[3] trained -

These mighty heroes follow on, exempt from fear and dread:
Lords of the tenfold potency,[4] great sages tranquillized:
Best beings they in all the world; in them no craving's seen.
[70] They've won the knowledge of adepts. This compound is their last.
That essence of the holy life[5] that have they made their own.[6]
Unshaken by the triple modes,[7] set free from birth to come,
The plane of self-control they've won, victorious in the world.
Upward or crossways or below[8] - no lure is found in them.
They sound aloud their lion's roar 'Supreme are they that wake.'"

---

[1] Comy. saddhā, hiri-ottappaṃ, saccaṃ, (araddha-)viriya, sail, paññā.

[2] Comy., Satta-bojjhaqgā, the seven factors of enlightenment.

[3] The three sikkhā: adhi-sīla, citta, paññā, 'the higher morals, mind and wisdom.

[4] Dasa-balāni. Cf. M. i, 69.

[5] Comy. sāro = arahatta-phalaṃ.

[6] A-para-paccayā, not through dependence on others.

[7] Cf. § 72, tividhā. This couplet is quoted at Nidd. i, 243.

[8] Comy., Uddhaṃ, 'from the sole of the foot to the crown of the head,' or 'past time,' or 'heaven.'
Apācinaṃ (sic), 'the ground' or 'the future' or 'the hells.' Cf. Rhys Davids-Stede Dicty. s.v. at A. ii. 15: It. p. 120 apācīnaṃ.
Tiriyaṃ, 'the middle' or 'the present' or 'the world of men.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
8. Khajjaniya Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

8. On what Must be Devoured

Sutta 77

Dutiya Arahanta Suttaṃ

Arahants (2)

---

[84] [70]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī
In jeta Grove,
at Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One said:

"Body, brethren, is impermanent.

What is impermanent,
that is suffering.

What is suffering,
that is not the Self.

What is not the Self,

'That is not mine,
that am not I,
that is not the Self of me.'

This is the way one should regard things
as they really are,
by right insight.

■

Feeling, brethren, is impermanent.

What is impermanent,
that is suffering.

What is suffering,
that is not the Self.

What is not the Self,

'That is not mine,
that am not I,
that is not the Self of me.'

This is the way one should regard things
as they really are,
by right insight.

■

Perception, brethren, is impermanent.

What is impermanent,
that is suffering.

What is suffering,
that is not the Self.

What is not the Self,

'That is not mine,
that am not I,
that is not the Self of me.'

This is the way one should regard things
as they really are,
by right insight.

■

The activities, brethren, are impermanent.

What is impermanent,
that is suffering.

What is suffering,
that is not the Self.

What is not the Self,

'That is not mine,
that am not I,
that is not the Self of me.'

This is the way one should regard things
as they really are,
by right insight.

■

Consciousness, brethren, is impermanent.

What is impermanent,
that is suffering.

What is suffering,
that is not the Self.

What is not the Self,

'That is not mine,
that am not I,
that is not the Self of me.'

This is the way one should regard things
as they really are,
by right insight.

§

So seeing, brethren,
the well-taught Ariyan disciple
feels disgust at body,
feels disgust at feeling,
feels disgust at perception,
feels disgust at activities
feels disgust at consciousness.

Feeling disgust
he is repelled:
by repulsion he is released;

by that release
set free,
knowledge arises:

'In the freed man
is the free thing'

and he knows:

'Destroyed is rebirth;
lived is the righteous life;
done is the task;
for life in these conditions
there is no hereafter.'

§

Throughout the seven abodes, brethren,
up to the highest becoming,
these are the topmost,
these are the best in all the world, -
these Arahants."

Thus spake the Exalted One.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
8. Khajjaniya Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

8. On what Must be Devoured

Sutta 78

Sīh'Opama Suttaṃ

The Lion[1]

---

[84] [70]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī
In jeta Grove,
at Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One said:

"The lion, brethren,
king of beasts,
at eventide comes forth from his lair.

Having come forth from his lair
he stretches[2] himself.

Having done so
he surveys the four quarters.

Surveying the four quarters
he utters thrice his lion's roar.

Thrice having uttered his lion's roar
he sallies forth on his round.

Whatsoever brute creatures,[3] brethren,
hear the sound of the roar of the lion,
king of beasts,
for the most part are afraid,
fall a-quaking and a-tremblmg.

Those that dwell in holes seek them;
water-dwellers make for the water;
forest-dwellers enter the forest;
birds mount into the air.

Then, brethren, whatsoever royal elephants
at royal seats,
in villages,
in towns
are tethered with stout leathern bonds,[4] [71] burst and rend those bonds asunder, voiding excrements
and run to and fro
for very fear.[5]

Thus potent, brethren, is the lion,
king of beasts,
over brute creatures;
of such might,
of such power is he.

Even so, brethren,
when a Tathāgata ariseth in the world,[6]
an Arahant,
fully awakened,
perfect in lore and conduct,
well-farer,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One, -
thus he teacheth the Norm:

'Such and such is body,
its arising and its ceasing.

Such and such is feeling,
its arising and its ceasing.

Such and such is perception,
its arising and its ceasing.

Such and such the activities,
their arising and their ceasing.

Such and such is consciousness,
its arising and its ceasing.'

Then, brethren, whatsoever devas there be,
long-living,
beautiful

and blissful,
long established in lofty palaces,
when they hear the Norm-teaching of the Tathāgata,
for the most part[7] they become fearful,
fall a-trerablmg and a-quaking,
(and they say):

'It seems, friends,
that impermanent are we,
and permanent we deemed ourselves.

Unstable are we, it seems,
and stable we deemed ourselves.

Not to last, friends, it seems are we,
and lasting we deemed ourselves.

Verily, friends, are we impermanent,
unstable,
not to last,
prisoned in a person.'

Thus potent, brethren, is the Tathāgata
over devas and their world;
of such might,
of such power is he."

So spake the Exalted One,
and when the Well-farer had thus spoken,
the Teacher added this further:

[72] "When the 'waked by mighty wisdom sets the Norm-wheel rolling on, - Teacher he without a rival of the devas and the world - Teacher that the person[8] ceases and the person comes to be,
And the Noble Eightfold Path that leads to calming of all woe, -
Devas, they who live for ages, beauteous, of great renown,
Like the beasts before the lion, fall a-trembling, are afraid:[9]
For they have not conquered selfhood. 'Transient, friends,' say they 'are we,'
When they hear the Ar'hant's words, of him who hath won liberty."

---

[1] Cf. A. ii. 33, K.S. ii, 23, 41.

[2] Comy. describes in detail how a lion stretches himself.

[3] Tiracchānagatā pāṇā: explained elsewhere as 'going horizontally, as opposed to the erect gait of humans.'

[4] Reading varattehi with Comy.

[5] Comy. 'Few are they that fear not. Who are they? Lions of like nature, elephants, and steeds and bull and men of noble breed. Lions fear not because they say, 'we be of one blood, you and we' Elephants, because they trust in self and mighty power. But holy saints fear not because they have put away belief in self.'

[6] Comy. seizes the opportunity to describe in detail the Buddha's enlightenment and first sermon and gives in brief the eight orthodox derivations of the word Tathāgato (cf. Chalmers s.v. and Papañc. 45; Vis.M. 203; D. iii, 134; and Udan. Comy. (S. 84), and refers us to Vis.M. (203) and Niddesa (Culla N. 156). It is a little curious that the Comy. refers to the very slender notice in the Vism. and not to D. iii, 135, or to the full analysis in Sum Vilāsinī, p. 59.

[7] Comy., 'except those devas in this world who are Ariyan disciples' (an interesting point). Mrs. Rhys-Davids suggests 'who were so on earth.'

[8] Sakkāya. Cf. above, p. 38.

[9] Reading santāsaṃ āpāduṃ for text santā samāpāduṃ.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
8. Khajjaniya Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

8. On what Must be Devoured

Sutta 79

Khajjanīya Suttaṃ

The Prey[1]

---

[86] [72]

Thus have I heard:—

The Exalted One was staying at Sāvatthī
In jeta Grove,
at Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One said:

"Whatsoever recluses or brahmins, brethren,
remember their divers former lives,
in so doing
all of them remember the five factors of grasping,
or one or other of these factors, thus: -

'Of such and such a body
was I in time past,'

says one;
and so remembering,
it is body, brethren, that he thus remembers.

'I felt thus and thus,'

says he;
and in so remembering
it is feeling that he thus remembers.

'Thus and thus I perceived,'

says he;
and in so remembering,
it is perception that he thus remembers.

'Thus and thus in activity was I,'

says he;
and in thus remembering
it is the activities-compound[2] that he thus remembers.

'Thus and thus conscious was I,'

says he;
and in so remembering
it is consciousness that he remembers.

§

And why, brethren, do ye say 'body'?

One is affected, brethren.

That is why the word 'body' is used.

Affected by what?

Affected by touch of cold and heat,
of hunger and [73] thirst,
of gnats,
mosquitoes,
wind
and sun
and snakes.

0ne is affected, brethren.

That is why ye say 'body.'[3]

■

And why, brethren, do ye say 'feeling'?

One feels, brethren.

That is why the word 'feeling' is used.

Feels what?

Feels pleasure and pain;
feels neutral feelings.

One feels, brethren.

That is why the word 'feeling'[4] is used.

■

And why, brethren, do ye say 'perception'?

One perceives, brethren.

That is why the word 'perception' is used.

Perceives what?

Perceives blue-green,
perceives yellow,
or red,
or white.

One perceives, brethren.

That is why the word 'perception' is used.

■

And why, brethren, do ye say
'the activities-compound'?

Because they compose a compound.

That is why, brethren,
the word 'activities-compound' is used.

And what compound do they compose?

It is body that they compose into a compound of body.[5]

It is feeling that they compose into a feeling-compound.

It is perception that they compose
into a perception-compound;

It is the activities that they compose
into an activities-compound;

It is consciousness that they compose
into a consciousness-compound.

They compose a compound, brethren.

Therefore the word '(activities)-compound' is used.

[74] And why, brethren, do ye say 'consciousness'?

One is conscious, brethren.[6]

Therefore the word 'consciousness' is used.

Conscious of what?

Of (flavours) sour or bitter;
acrid or sweet;
alkaline or non-alkaline;
saline or non-saline.

One is conscious, brethren.

That is why the word 'consciousness' is used.

§

Then, brethren, the well-taught Ariyan disciple thus reflects:

'I am the prey of body now.[7]

In the past likewise
I was the prey of body,
just as now I am the prey
of this present body.

Moreover, if in future time
I should be enamoured of body,
in future time also
even thus should I be the prey of body,
just as I am now the prey
of this present body.'

Thus reflecting,
he is freed from desire for a past body;
he is not enamoured of a future body;
he is apt for disgust at the present body,
for the turning away from it,
for the ceasing of it.

■

'I am the prey of feeling now.

In the past likewise
I was the prey of feeling,
just as now I am the prey
of this present feeling.

Moreover, if in future time
I should be enamoured of feeling,
in future time also
even thus should I be the prey of feeling,

just as I am now the prey
of this present feeling.'[8]

Thus reflecting,
he is freed from desire for feeling of the past;
he is not enamoured of future feeling;
be is apt for disgust at present feeling,
for turning away from it,
for the ceasing from it.

■

'I am the prey of perception now.

In the past likewise
I was the prey of perception,
just as now I am the prey
of this present perception.

Moreover, if in future time
I should be enamoured of perception,
in future time also
even thus should I be the prey of perception,
just as I am now the prey
of this present perception.'

Thus reflecting,
he is freed from desire for perception of the past;
he is not enamoured of future perception;
be is apt for disgust at present perception,
for turning away from it,
for the ceasing from it.

■

'I am the prey of the activities now.

In the past likewise
I was the prey of the activities,
just as now I am the prey
of these present activities.

Moreover, if in future time
I should be enamoured of the activities,
in future time also
even thus should I be the prey of the activities,
just as I am now the prey
of these present activities.'

Thus reflecting,
he is freed from desire for the activities of the past;
he is not enamoured of future activities;
be is apt for disgust at present activities,
for turning away from them,
for the ceasing from them.

■

'I am the prey of consciousness now.

In the past likewise
I was the prey of consciousness,
just as now I am the prey
of this present consciousness.

Moreover, if in future time
I should be enamoured of consciousness,
in future time also
even thus should I be the prey of consciousness,
just as I am now the prey
of this present consciousness.'

Thus reflecting,
he is freed from desire for consciousness of the past;

he is not enamoured of future consciousness;
be is apt for disgust at present consciousness,
for turning away from it,
for the ceasing from it.

§

What think ye, brethren?

Is body permanent or impermanent?"

[75] "Impermanent, lord."

"And what is impermanent,
is that woe or weal?"

"Woe, lord."

"Then what is impermanent,
woeful,
unstable in nature, -
is it fitting to regard that as:

'This is mine;
this am I;
this is the Self of me?'"

"Surely not, lord."

■

What think ye, brethren?

Is feeling permanent or impermanent?"

"Impermanent, lord."

"And what is impermanent,
is that woe or weal?"

"Woe, lord."

"Then what is impermanent,
woeful,
unstable in nature, -
is it fitting to regard that as:

'This is mine;
this am I;
this is the Self of me?'"

"Surely not, lord."

■

What think ye, brethren?

Is perception permanent or impermanent?"

"Impermanent, lord."

"And what is impermanent,
is that woe or weal?"

"Woe, lord."

"Then what is impermanent,
woeful,
unstable in nature, -
is it fitting to regard that as:

'This is mine;
this am I;

this is the Self of me?'"

"Surely not, lord."

■

What think ye, brethren?

Are the activities permanent or impermanent?"

"Impermanent, lord."

"And what is impermanent,
is that woe or weal?"

"Woe, lord."

"Then what is impermanent,
woeful,
unstable in nature, -
is it fitting to regard that as:

'This is mine;
this am I;
this is the Self of me?'"

"Surely not, lord."

■

What think ye, brethren?

Is consciousness permanent or impermanent?"

"Impermanent, lord."

"And what is impermanent,
is that woe or weal?"

"Woe, lord."

"Then what is impermanent,
woeful,
unstable in nature, -
is it fitting to regard that as:

'This is mine;
this am I;
this is the Self of me?'"

"Surely not, lord."

§

"Therefore, brethren, every body,
be it past,
future
or present,
be it inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or high,
far or near -
I say, every body
should be thus regarded
as it really is,
by right insight:

'This is not mine;
this am not I;
this is not the Self of me.'[ed1]

■

"Therefore, brethren, every feeling,
be it past,
future
or present,
be it inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or high,
far or near -
I say, every feeling
should be thus regarded
as it really is,
by right insight:

'This is not mine;
this am not I;
this is not the Self of me.'

■

"Therefore, brethren, every perception,
be it past,
future
or present,
be it inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or high,
far or near -
I say, every perception
should be thus regarded
as it really is,
by right insight:

'This is not mine;
this am not I;
this is not the Self of me.'

■

"Therefore, brethren, all activity,
be it past,
future
or present,
be it inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or high,
far or near -
I say, all activity
should be thus regarded
as it really is,
by right insight:

'This is not mine;
this am not I;
this is not the Self of me.'

■

"Therefore, brethren, every consciousness,
be it past,
future
or present,
be it inward or outward,
gross or subtle,
low or high,
far or near -
I say, every consciousness
should be thus regarded
as it really is,
by right insight:

'This is not mine;
this am not I;

this is not the Self of me.'

§

He, brethren, is reckoned an Ariyan disciple
who reduces,
heaps not up;
who abandons,
grasps not;
who scatters,
binds not;
who quenches,
kindles not.

And what does he reduce[9]
and not heap up?

He spreads abroad body, heaps it not up.

He spreads abroad feeling, heaps it not up.

He spreads abroad perception, heaps it not up.

He spreads abroad activity, heaps it not up.

He spreads abroad consciousness, heaps it not up.

■

And what does he abandon, not grasp?

He abandons body, and grasps it not.

He abandons feeling, and grasps it not.

He abandons perception, and grasps it not.

He abandons activity, and grasps it not.

He abandons consciousness, and grasps it not.

■

And what does he scatter and not gather?

He scatters body and gathers it not.

He scatters feeling and gathers it not.

He scatters perception and gathers it not.

He scatters activity and gathers it not.

He scatters consciousness and gathers it not.

■

And what does he quench and not kindle?

He quenches body, and kindles it not.

He quenches feeling, and kindles it not.

He quenches perception, and kindles it not.

He quenches activity, and kindles it not.

He quenches consciousness, and kindles it not.

■

So seeing, brethren, the well-taught Ariyan disciple conceives disgust at body,
at feeling,

at perception,
at the activities,
at consciousness.

Being disgusted
he is repelled by them;
by that repulsion he is released;
by that release he is set free;
knowledge arises:
in the freed man is the freed thing,
and he knows:

'Destroyed is rebirth;
lived is the righteous life;
done is the task;
for life in these conditions
there is no hereafter.'

§

He, brethren, is reckoned
a brother[10] who neither heaps up [76] nor reduces.

Having reduced,
he stands neither abandoning nor grasping.

Having abandoned,
he stands neither scattering nor gathering.

Having scattered,
he stands neither quenching nor kindling.

■

Having quenched,
what is it
that he neither heaps up nor reduces?

Having reduced,
it is body
that he stands neither heaping up nor reducing.

Having reduced,
it is feeling
that he stands neither heaping up nor reducing.

Having reduced,
it is perception
that he stands neither heaping up nor reducing.

Having reduced,
it is the activities
that he stands neither heaping up nor reducing.

Having reduced,
it is consciousness
that he stands neither heaping up nor reducing.

■

Having reduced,
what is it
that he stands neither abandoning nor grasping?

Having abandoned,
it is body
that he stands neither abandomng nor grasping

Having abandoned,
it is feeling, perception
that he stands neither abandomng nor grasping

Having abandoned,
it is the activities
that he stands neither abandomng nor grasping

Having abandoned,
it is consciousness
that he stands neither abandoning nor grasping.

■

Having abandoned,
what is it
that he stands neither scattering nor gathering?

Having scattered,
it is body
that he stands neither scattering nor gathering.

Having scattered,
it is feeling
that he stands neither scattering nor gathering.

Having scattered,
it is perception
that he stands neither scattering nor gathering.

Having scattered,
it is the activities
that he stands neither scattering nor gathering.

Having scattered,
it is consciousness
that he stands neititer scattering nor gathering.

■

Having scattered,
what is it
that he stands neither quenching nor kindling?

Having quenched,
it is body
that he stands neither quenching nor kindling.

Having quenched,
it is feeling
that he stands neither quenching nor kindling.

Having quenched,
it is perception
that he stands neither quenching nor kindling.

Having quenched,
it is the activities
that he stands neither quenching nor kindling.

Having quenched,
it is consciousness
that he stands neither quenching nor kindling.

§

Having quenched,
he stands: -
brethren, it is even such a brother
whose heart is set free,
whom the devas,
with their governor,
and the Brahmas

and their consorts
even from afar do reverence:

'We worship thee, 0 thorough-bred of men!
We worship thee, 0 highest among men!
We do not grasp what thou dost ponder on.'"[11]

---

[1] Text seems to have a wrong title ('the lion') to this sutta. In the Uddāna, or table of contents at the end of the chapter, it is called Khajjani. The whole chapter is called Khajjanīya (to be eaten). In this section body is likened to a devourer, and at § 85 to a murderer.

[2] Cf. Mrs. C.A. Rhys Davids's analysis of the section in Buddh. Psych., p. 43. The medieval tradition of Burma conceives sankhārā not as compound but as conditioned, caused.

[3] Rūpaṃ ruppati We cannot keep up the play of words here. Form is informed, shape is shaped; body is embodied; it lives by these stimuli, without which there is no consciousness of body. Comy. paraphrases ruppati by words meaning 'is troubled, struck, oppressed, broken up' Mrs. Rhys Davids suggests 'affected' as a compromise.
'Afflicted' seems to sum up Buddhaghosa's terms. Comy. points out that these are merely reminiscences of something past and perished, not now existing; and so with all the five factors; they all have the characteristics of 'emptiness.' He misconstrues these various contacts not as referring to this life, but as 'informing' creatures in other spheres - e.g., the cold hell, the hungry-ghost world, etc. He regards 'wind' as referring to flatulence! Etymologically rūpaṃ is not connected with ruppati. This is from rup (lup) to damage; that is probably from varp, shape. See Stede, in Pali Dict.

[4] Text vediyanti, probably an error for sing. vediyati or vedayati. Comy. has both forms and comments on them, but mentions no plural. He says 'no entity feels, but there is just feeling,' omitting the recorder.

[5] Reading with Comy., rūpa-[vedan]atthāya, etc., for text's rūpattāya-vedanattāya.

[6] Comy., sañjānāti, vijānati, pajānāti: three stages of consciousness, to be distinguished ss 'awareness, discrimination, decision.'

[7] Comy., khajjāmi, 'body does not rend and eat up the flesh like a worm, but, just as one clothed in a filthy garment suffers discomfort as a consequence of that and says, "the garment eats me up," even so is discomfort to be regarded as consuming him.' Cf. Text 114, vadhakaṃ rūpaṃ, 'body is a murderer.' So inf. 143, vadhako, eso akkhāto At S. iv, 172-5 in the parable, the pañca-kkhandhā are the 'five murderers.'

[8] Comy. illustrates by a story of a bhikkhu who had a thorn in his foot, but did not troublle to pull it out in spite of the pain.

[9] [Ed.: the footnote here points to the following, but is more likely missing. It probably was some note in reference to the Pali 'apacināti', PED: "to get rid of, do away with, diminish, make less."

[10] Bhikkhu, here in its proper sense of 'almsman,' 'owning nothing.'

[11] Cf. Thag. 1084; Brethren, p 367; D. iii, 197-8; Thag. 1179, where the first line of these gāthās occurs in connexion with the praises of the Superman. 'Such a khīṇāsava,' says Comy., 'the devas honour, even as they honoured Nīlatthera (v.l. Nīta and Citta-tthera), who, having made up his mind to end all there and then, while pondering on his resolve, at the moment of having his head shaved on taking the robes, attained Arahantship.' The verse refers to the brother's resolve, on which he pondered.

[ed1] Here Woodward omits without indication the repetition with changes for the other khandhas which is included in the Pali.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
8. Khajjaniya Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

8. On what Must be Devoured

Sutta 80

Piṇḍolya Suttaṃ

Almsman[1]

p.p. explains it all — p.p.

[1] Piṇḍolyaṃ Cf. Brethren, p 110 n., 415. Comy., 'One who goes after piṇḍaa (rice-balls).'

[2] Comy. says it was owing to their noisy behaviour in the hall, described at Udana 25, on which occasion the Master likened the brethren to quarrelsome fishermen, and sent Ānanda to rebuke them.

[3] Reading with Comy., beluva-laṭṭhitāya for text velu- (bamboo).

[4] The words aññatthaṃ vipariṇāmo, lit. 'a changing, becoming otherwise,' used in these three examples, I have paraphrased to suit the context (as does Comy.).

[5] Cf. K.S. i, 172 n.

[6] Brahmā acquiesces (says C.), 'even as a skilful cook suits his sauces to the taste of his royal master.'

[7] Comy. says, 'if he had summoned them in a body to chide them, they would not have been impressed or have felt personal shame for their misconduct, numbers giving confidence to the guilty.'

[8] Reading with Comy., eka-dvīhi-kāya for fext ekavihakāya.

[9] Antaṃ, as we say 'the limit'; but Comy., lāmakaṃ These two sections are in Itivuttaka, p. 89.

[10] Comy., bhayattā na ājivikā pakatā.

[11] Comy., satipaṭṭhānesu.

[12] Na vajjavā.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
8. Khajjaniya Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

8. On what Must be Devoured

Sutta 81

Pārileyya Suttaṃ

Pārileyya[1]

---

[94] [80]

Thus have I heard:—

Once the Exalted One was staying near Kosambī
in Ghosita Park.

Then the Exalted One,
robing himself at early dawn
and taking bowl and robe,
entered Kosambī for alms.

When he had been his rounds for alms in Kosambī,
on his return from begging
he ate his meal,
and setting his own bed in order,
he took bowl and robe,
and without calling his attendants
or giving notice to the Order of brethren,
alone and unattended,
went forth a-wandering.

Now a certain brother,
not long after the Exalted One had gone out,
came to the venerable Ānanda
and addressed him [81] thus:

"Friend Ānanda, the Exalted One has set his own bed in order,
taken bowl and robe,
and without calling his attendants
or giving notice to the Order of brethren,
alone and unattended,
has gone forth a-wandering."

"Friend, when the Exalted One has set his own bed in order,
taken bowl and robe,
and without calling his attendants
or giving notice to the Order of brethren,
alone and unattended,
has gone forth a-wandering,
at such a time the Exalted One
wishes to dwell alone.

At such a time the Exalted One
is not to be followed by anyone."

So it came to pass
that the Exalted One went wandering on and came to Pārileyya[ka],

and there at Pārileyya[ka]
the Exalted One dwelt at the foot of a lucky sal-tree.[2]

Then a number of brethren
came to the venerable Ānanda
and held friendly converse with him, exchanged the courtesies of friendly talk
and sat down at one side.

So seated,
those brethren thus addressed the venerable Ānanda:

"Tis a long time, friend Ānanda,
since we had pious talk[3]
face to face with the Exalted One.

We desire, friend Ānanda,
to hear a pious talk
face to face with the Exalted One."

Thereupon the venerable Ānanda
went along with those brethren to Pārileyya
to the lucky sal-tree
where the Exalted One was dwelling,
saluted him
and sat down at one side.

As they thus sat,
the Exalted One instructed,
calmed,
aroused
and composed those brethren
with pious talk.

Now on that occasion
this train of thought
arose in a certain brother:

"How knowing, how seeing, I wonder,
can one without delay
destroy the āsavas?"

Then the Exalted One,
with his own thought
reading the thought of that brother's mind,
thus spake unto the brethren:

"Brethren, I have defined[4]
and taught you the Norm.

I have defined
and taught you the four stations of mindfulness,
likewise the right efforts,
the four bases of magic power,
the five controlling powers,
the five strengths,
the seven limbs of wisdom.

I have defined and taught you
the Ariyan Eight- [82] fold Path.

Thus, brethren, have I defined
and taught you the Norm.

And yet, brethren,
in spite of this,
in the mind of a certain brother here
there has arisen this train of thought:

"How knowing, how seeing, I wonder,
can one without delay

destroy the āsavas?"

§

And how, indeed, brethren,
can one do so without delay?

Herein, brethren, the untaught many-folk,
who discern not those that are Ariyans,
who are unskilled in the Ariyan Norm,
untrained in the Ariyan Norm,
who discern not the worthy ones,
who are unskilled in the worthy doctrine, -
such regard body as the Self.

This regarding is an activity,[5]
and this activity -
how does it result,
how does it arise,
how is it born
and how produced?

In the untaught many-folk, brethren,
nourished by feeling
that is born of contact with ignorance,
there arises craving:
thence is born that activity.

Thus, brethren, that activity is impermanent,
willed,[6]
arisen from a cause.

That craving is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That feeling is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That contact,
that ignorance
is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

Thus knowing, brethren,
thus seeing,
one can
without delay
destroy the āsavas.

■

Maybe he regards not body as the Self,
yet he regards the Self as possessing body.

And this view also is an activity.

And this activity -
how does it result,
how does it arise,
how is it born
and how produced?

In the untaught many-folk, brethren,
nourished by feeling
that is born of contact with ignorance,

there arises craving:
thence is born that activity.

Thus, brethren, that activity is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That craving is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That feeling is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That contact,
that ignorance
is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

Thus knowing, brethren,
thus seeing,
one can
without delay
destroy the āsavas.

■

Maybe he regards not body as the Self,
regards not the Self as possessing a body,
yet he regards body as being in the Self.

And this view also is an activity.

And this activity -
how does it result,

how does it arise,
how is it born
and how produced?

In the untaught many-folk, brethren,
nourished by feeling
that is born of contact with ignorance,
there arises craving:
thence is born that activity.

Thus, brethren, that activity is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That craving is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That feeling is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That contact,
that ignorance
is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

Thus knowing, brethren,
thus seeing,
one can
without delay
destroy the āsavas.

■

Maybe he regards not body as the Self,
regards not the Self as possessing body,
regards not body as being in the Self, - [83]
yet he regards the Self as being in the body.

And this view also is an activity.

And this activity -
how does it result,
how does it arise,
how is it born
and how produced?

In the untaught many-folk, brethren,
nourished by feeling
that is born of contact with ignorance,
there arises craving:
thence is born that activity.

Thus, brethren, that activity is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That craving is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That feeling is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That contact,
that ignorance
is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

Thus knowing, brethren,
thus seeing,
one can
without delay
destroy the āsavas.

■

Maybe, brethren, he regards not body as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing body,
nor body as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in the body.

Yet nevertheless he regards feeling as the Self.

This regarding is an activity,
and this activity -
how does it result,
how does it arise,
how is it born
and how produced?

In the untaught many-folk, brethren,
nourished by feeling
that is born of contact with ignorance,
there arises craving:
thence is born that activity.

Thus, brethren, that activity is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That craving is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That feeling is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That contact,
that ignorance
is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

Thus knowing, brethren,
thus seeing,
one can
without delay
destroy the āsavas.

■

Maybe, brethren, he regards not body as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing body,
nor body as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in the body
nor feeling as the Self,
yet he regards the Self as possessing feeling.

And this view also is an activity.

And this activity -
how does it result,
how does it arise,
how is it born
and how produced?

In the untaught many-folk, brethren,
nourished by feeling
that is born of contact with ignorance,

there arises craving:
thence is born that activity.

Thus, brethren, that activity is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That craving is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That feeling is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That contact,
that ignorance
is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

Thus knowing, brethren,
thus seeing,
one can
without delay
destroy the āsavas.

■

Maybe, brethren, he regards not body as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing body,
nor body as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in the body
nor feeling as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing feeling,
yet he regards feeling as being in the Self.

And this view also is an activity.

And this activity -
how does it result,
how does it arise,
how is it born
and how produced?

In the untaught many-folk, brethren,
nourished by feeling
that is born of contact with ignorance,
there arises craving:
thence is born that activity.

Thus, brethren, that activity is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That craving is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That feeling is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That contact,
that ignorance
is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

Thus knowing, brethren,
thus seeing,
one can
without delay
destroy the āsavas.

■

Maybe, brethren, he regards not body as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing body,
nor body as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in the body
nor feeling as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing feeling,
nor feeling as being in the Self,
yet he regards the Self as being in feeling.

And this view also is an activity.

And this activity -
how does it result,
how does it arise,
how is it born
and how produced?

In the untaught many-folk, brethren,
nourished by feeling
that is born of contact with ignorance,
there arises craving:
thence is born that activity.

Thus, brethren, that activity is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That craving is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That feeling is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That contact,
that ignorance
is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

Thus knowing, brethren,
thus seeing,
one can
without delay
destroy the āsavas.

■

Maybe, brethren, he regards not body as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing body,
nor body as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in the body
nor feeling as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing feeling,
nor feeling as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in feeling
yet he regards perception as the Self.

This regarding is an activity,
and this activity -
how does it result,
how does it arise,
how is it born
and how produced?

In the untaught many-folk, brethren,
nourished by feeling
that is born of contact with ignorance,
there arises craving:
thence is born that activity.

Thus, brethren, that activity is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That craving is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That feeling is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That contact,
that ignorance
is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

Thus knowing, brethren,
thus seeing,
one can
without delay
destroy the āsavas.

■

Maybe, brethren, he regards not body as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing body,
nor body as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in the body
nor feeling as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing feeling,
nor feeling as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in feeling
nor perception as the Self,
yet he regards the Self as possessiing perception.

And this view also is an activity.

And this activity -
how does it result,
how does it arise,
how is it born
and how produced?

In the untaught many-folk, brethren,
nourished by feeling
that is born of contact with ignorance,
there arises craving:
thence is born that activity.

Thus, brethren, that activity is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That craving is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That feeling is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That contact,
that ignorance
is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

Thus knowing, brethren,
thus seeing,
one can
without delay
destroy the āsavas.

■

Maybe, brethren, he regards not body as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing body,
nor body as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in the body
nor feeling as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing feeling,
nor feeling as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in feeling
nor perception as the Self,
nor the Self as possessiing perception,
yet he regards perception as being in the Self.

And this view also is an activity.

And this activity -
how does it result,
how does it arise,
how is it born
and how produced?

In the untaught many-folk, brethren,
nourished by feeling
that is born of contact with ignorance,
there arises craving:
thence is born that activity.

Thus, brethren, that activity is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That craving is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That feeling is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That contact,
that ignorance
is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

Thus knowing, brethren,
thus seeing,
one can
without delay
destroy the āsavas.

■

Maybe, brethren, he regards not body as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing body,
nor body as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in the body
nor feeling as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing feeling,
nor feeling as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in feeling
nor perception as the Self,
nor the Self as possessiing perception,
nor perception as being in the Self,
yet he regards the Self as being in perception.

And this view also is an activity.

And this activity -
how does it result,
how does it arise,

how is it born
and how produced?

In the untaught many-folk, brethren,
nourished by feeling
that is born of contact with ignorance,
there arises craving:
thence is born that activity.

Thus, brethren, that activity is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That craving is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That feeling is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That contact,
that ignorance
is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

Thus knowing, brethren,
thus seeing,
one can
without delay
destroy the āsavas.

■

Maybe, brethren, he regards not body as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing body,

nor body as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in the body
nor feeling as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing feeling,
nor feeling as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in feeling
nor perception as the Self,
nor the Self as possessiing perception,
nor perception as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in perception,
yet he regards the activities as the Self.

This regarding is an activity,
and this activity -
how does it result,
how does it arise,
how is it born
and how produced?

In the untaught many-folk, brethren,
nourished by feeling
that is born of contact with ignorance,
there arises craving:
thence is born that activity.

Thus, brethren, that activity is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That craving is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That feeling is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That contact,
that ignorance
is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

Thus knowing, brethren,
thus seeing,
one can
without delay
destroy the āsavas.

■

Maybe, brethren, he regards not body as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing body,
nor body as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in the body
nor feeling as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing feeling,
nor feeling as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in feeling
nor perception as the Self,
nor the Self as possessiing perception,
nor perception as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in perception,
nor the activities as the Self,
yet he regards the Self as possessing the activities.

And this view also is an activity.

And this activity -
how does it result,
how does it arise,
how is it born
and how produced?

In the untaught many-folk, brethren,
nourished by feeling
that is born of contact with ignorance,
there arises craving:
thence is born that activity.

Thus, brethren, that activity is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That craving is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That feeling is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That contact,
that ignorance
is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

Thus knowing, brethren,
thus seeing,
one can
without delay
destroy the āsavas.

■

Maybe, brethren, he regards not body as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing body,
nor body as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in the body
nor feeling as the Self,

nor the Self as possessing feeling,
nor feeling as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in feeling
nor perception as the Self,
nor the Self as possessiing perception,
nor perception as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in perception,
nor the activities as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing the activities,
yet he regards the activies as being in the Self.

And this view also is an activity.

And this activity -
how does it result,
how does it arise,
how is it born
and how produced?

In the untaught many-folk, brethren,
nourished by feeling
that is born of contact with ignorance,
there arises craving:
thence is born that activity.

Thus, brethren, that activity is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That craving is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That feeling is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That contact,
that ignorance
is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

Thus knowing, brethren,
thus seeing,
one can
without delay
destroy the āsavas.

■

Maybe, brethren, he regards not body as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing body,
nor body as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in the body
nor feeling as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing feeling,
nor feeling as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in feeling
nor perception as the Self,
nor the Self as possessiing perception,
nor perception as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in perception,
nor the activities as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing the activities,
nor the activies as being in the Self,
yet he regards Self as being in the activities.

And this view also is an activity.

And this activity -
how does it result,
how does it arise,

how is it born
and how produced?

In the untaught many-folk, brethren,
nourished by feeling
that is born of contact with ignorance,
there arises craving:
thence is born that activity.

Thus, brethren, that activity is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That craving is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That feeling is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That contact,
that ignorance
is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

Thus knowing, brethren,
thus seeing,
one can
without delay
destroy the āsavas.

■

Maybe, brethren, he regards not body as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing body,

nor body as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in the body
nor feeling as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing feeling,
nor feeling as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in feeling
nor perception as the Self,
nor the Self as possessiing perception,
nor perception as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in perception,
nor the activities as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing the activities,
nor the activies as being in the Self,
nor Self as being in the activities,
yet he regards consciousness as the Self.

This regarding is an activity,
and this activity -
how does it result,
how does it arise,
how is it born
and how produced?

In the untaught many-folk, brethren,
nourished by feeling
that is born of contact with ignorance,
there arises craving:
thence is born that activity.

Thus, brethren, that activity is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That craving is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That feeling is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That contact,
that ignorance
is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

Thus knowing, brethren,
thus seeing,
one can
without delay
destroy the āsavas.

■

Maybe, brethren, he regards not body as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing body,
nor body as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in the body
nor feeling as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing feeling,
nor feeling as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in feeling
nor perception as the Self,
nor the Self as possessiing perception,
nor perception as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in perception,
nor the activities as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing the activities,
nor the activies as being in the Self,
nor Self as being in the activities,
nor consciousness as the Self,
yet he regards Self as possessing consciousness.

And this view also is an activity.

And this activity -
how does it result,
how does it arise,
how is it born
and how produced?

In the untaught many-folk, brethren,
nourished by feeling
that is born of contact with ignorance,
there arises craving:
thence is born that activity.

Thus, brethren, that activity is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That craving is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That feeling is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That contact,
that ignorance
is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

Thus knowing, brethren,
thus seeing,
one can
without delay
destroy the āsavas.

■

Maybe, brethren, he regards not body as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing body,
nor body as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in the body
nor feeling as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing feeling,
nor feeling as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in feeling
nor perception as the Self,
nor the Self as possessiing perception,
nor perception as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in perception,
nor the activities as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing the activities,
nor the activies as being in the Self,
nor Self as being in the activities,
nor consciousness as the Self,
nor Self as possessing consciousness,
yet he regards consciousness as being in the Self.

And this view also is an activity.

And this activity -
how does it result,
how does it arise,
how is it born
and how produced?

In the untaught many-folk, brethren,
nourished by feeling
that is born of contact with ignorance,
there arises craving:
thence is born that activity.

Thus, brethren, that activity is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That craving is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That feeling is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That contact,
that ignorance
is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

Thus knowing, brethren,
thus seeing,
one can
without delay
destroy the āsavas.

■

Maybe, brethren, he regards not body as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing body,
nor body as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in the body
nor feeling as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing feeling,
nor feeling as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in feeling
nor perception as the Self,
nor the Self as possessiing perception,
nor perception as being in the Self,

nor the Self as being in perception,
nor the activities as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing the activities,
nor the activies as being in the Self,
nor Self as being in the activities,
nor consciousness as the Self,
nor Self as possessing consciousness,
nor consciousness as being in the Self,
yet he regards Self as being in consciousness.

And this view also is an activity.

And this activity -
how does it result,
how does it arise,
how is it born
and how produced?

In the untaught many-folk, brethren,
nourished by feeling
that is born of contact with ignorance,
there arises craving:
thence is born that activity.

Thus, brethren, that activity is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That craving is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That feeling is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That contact,
that ignorance
is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

Thus knowing, brethren,
thus seeing,
one can
without delay
destroy the āsavas.

■

Maybe, brethren, he regards not body as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing body,
nor body as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in the body
nor feeling as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing feeling,
nor feeling as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in feeling
nor perception as the Self,
nor the Self as possessiing perception,
nor perception as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in perception,
nor the activities as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing the activities,
nor the activies as being in the Self,
nor Self as being in the activities,
nor consciousness as the Self,
nor Self as possessing consciousness,
nor consciousness as being in the Self,
nor Self as being in consciousness,
but yet has this belief:

'That is the Self;
that is the world;
that hereafter shall I become,
permanent,
lasting,
eternal,
not subject to change.'

And this view also is an activity.

And this activity -
how does it result,
how does it arise,
how is it born
and how produced?

In the untaught many-folk, brethren,
nourished by feeling
that is born of contact with ignorance,
there arises craving:
thence is born that activity.

Thus, brethren, that activity is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That craving is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That feeling is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That contact,
that ignorance
is impermanent,

willed,
arisen from a cause.

Thus knowing, brethren,
thus seeing,
one can
without delay
destroy the āsavas.

■

Maybe, brethren, he regards not body as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing body,
nor body as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in the body
nor feeling as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing feeling,
nor feeling as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in feeling
nor perception as the Self,
nor the Self as possessiing perception,
nor perception as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in perception,
nor the activities as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing the activities,
nor the activies as being in the Self,
nor Self as being in the activities,
nor consciousness as the Self,
nor Self as possessing consciousness,
nor consciousness as being in the Self,
nor Self as being in consciousness,
nor has he the belief:

'That is the Self;
that is the world;
that hereafter shall I become,

permanent,
lasting,
eternal,
not subject to change,

but yet has this belief:

'Were I not then,
it would not now be mine.

I shall not be,
to me it shall not be.'[7]

But, brethren, this annihilationist belief is an activity.

And this activity -
how does it result,
how does it arise,
how is it born
and how produced?

In the untaught many-folk, brethren,
nourished by feeling
that is born of contact with ignorance,
there arises craving:
thence is born that activity.

Thus, brethren, that activity is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That craving is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That feeling is impermanent,
willed,

arisen from a cause.

That contact,
that ignorance
is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

Thus knowing, brethren,
thus seeing,
one can
without delay
destroy the āsavas.

■

Maybe, brethren, he regards not body as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing body,
nor body as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in the body
nor feeling as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing feeling,
nor feeling as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in feeling
nor perception as the Self,
nor the Self as possessiing perception,
nor perception as being in the Self,
nor the Self as being in perception,
nor the activities as the Self,
nor the Self as possessing the activities,
nor the activies as being in the Self,
nor Self as being in the activities,
nor consciousness as the Self,
nor Self as possessing consciousness,
nor consciousness as being in the Self,

nor Self as being in consciousness,
nor has he the belief:

'That is the Self;
that is the world;
that hereafter shall I become,
permanent,
lasting,
eternal,
not subject to change',

[84] nor has he the belief:

'Were I not then,
it would not now be mine.

I shall not be,
to me it shall not be,'

yet in spite of this,
maybe he is doubting,
wavering,
not firmly established in the true Norm.

But this very doubting,
this wavering,
this not being established in the true Norm, -
this is an activity.

And this activity -
how does it result,
how does it arise,
how is it born
and how produced?

In the untaught many-folk, brethren,
nourished by feeling

that is born of contact with ignorance,
there arises craving:
thence is born that activity.

Thus, brethren, that activity is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That craving is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That feeling is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That contact,
that ignorance
is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

Thus knowing, brethren,
thus seeing,
one can
without delay
destroy the āsavas.

§

Seeing that activity is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That craving is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That feeling is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

That contact,
that ignorance
is impermanent,
willed,
arisen from a cause.

Thus knowing, brethren,
thus seeing,
one can
without delay
destroy the āsavas.

---

[1] Comy. briefly tells the story which is told in full at Dhp Comy. i, 57-63 (cf. M. i, 320; iii, 152), of the Master's leaving the residence in disgust at the turbulont brethren. He retired to the jungle and was waited on by the devoted elephant Pārleyya, Then the brethren, after some time, came to Ānanda and begged him to intercede with the Master and get them admittance to his presence.

[2] Bhadda-sāla.

[3] Dhammī-kathā.

[4] Vicayaso., 'discussed in detail' Comy., 'Vicinanti-samatthena-ñāṇena paricchinditvā.'

[5] Sankhāro so.

[6] Or designed, planned: sankhato.

[7] Cf. § 55. Here the verses are slightly altered to suit the annihilationist view. The reading here is:-

No ā'assaṃ no ca me siyā
Na bhavissāmi na me bhavissati.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
3. Khandha Vagga
22. Khandha Saṃyutta
8. Khajjaniya Vagga

3. The Book Called the Khandhā-Vagga

Containing Kindred Sayings on the Elements of Sensory Existence and other Subjects

22. Kindred Sayings on Elements

8. On what Must be Devoured

Sutta 82

Puṇṇamā Suttaṃ

Full Moon

---

[100] [84]

Thus have I heard:—

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī
in East Park at the storeyed house of Migāra's mother[1]
with a great gathering of the Order of brethren.

On that occasion,
- it was the sabbath,
the fifteenth day of the moon,

on full-moon night, -
the Exalted One was seated in the open air surrounded by the Order of brethren.

Then a certain brother,
rising from his seat,
and drawing his outer robe over one shoulder,
bowed before the Exalted One with folded hands
and thus addressed the Exalted One:

"Lord, I would fain question the Exalted One
on a certain point,
if the Exalted One grants permission
and would give an answer to my question?"

"Then sit down where you are, brother,
and ask what you will."[2]

[85] "Even so, lord,"
replied that brother to the Exalted One,
