that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

§

Sutta 39

Suffering

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these three forms of suffering.

What three?

The sort of suffering caused by pain,
the sort caused by the activities,
the sort of suffering caused by the changeable nature of things.

These are the three.

It is for the full comprehension
of these three forms of suffering monks,
that the five powers is to be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,

on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,

which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,

which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these three forms of suffering.

What three?

The sort of suffering caused by pain,
the sort caused by the activities,
the sort of suffering caused by the changeable nature of things.

These are the three.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these three forms of suffering, monks,
that the five powers is to be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,

which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these three forms of suffering.

What three?

The sort of suffering caused by pain,
the sort caused by the activities,
the sort of suffering caused by the changeable nature of things.

These are the three.

It is for the wearing out of these three forms of suffering, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these three forms of suffering.

What three?

The sort of suffering caused by pain,
the sort caused by the activities,
the sort of suffering caused by the changeable nature of things.

These are the three.

It is for the abandoning of these three forms of suffering, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,

on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

§

Sutta 40

Obstructions

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these three (mental) obstructions.

What three?|| ||

The obstruction of lust,
the obstruction of hatred,
the obstruction of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the full comprehension
of these three obstructions monks,
that the five powers is to be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these three (mental) obstructions.

What three?|| ||

The obstruction of lust,
the obstruction of hatred,
the obstruction of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these three obstructions, monks, that the five powers is to be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,

on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these three (mental) obstructions.

What three?|| ||

The obstruction of lust,
the obstruction of hatred,
the obstruction of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the wearing out of these three obstructions, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,

which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,

which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these three (mental) obstructions.

What three?|| ||

The obstruction of lust,
the obstruction of hatred,
the obstruction of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the abandoning of these three obstructions, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,

which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

§

Sutta 41

Stains

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these three stains.

What three?

The stain of lust,
the stain of hatred,
the stain of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the full comprehension
of these three stains, monks,
that the five powers is to be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,

on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these three stains.

What three?

The stain of lust,
the stain of hatred,
the stain of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these three stains, monks,
that the five powers is to be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,

on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these three stains.

What three?

The stain of lust,
the stain of hatred,
the stain of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the wearing out of these three stains, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these three stains.

What three?

The stain of lust,
the stain of hatred,
the stain of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the abandoning of these three stains, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,

on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

§

Sutta 42

Pains

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these three pains.

What three?

The pain of lust,
the pain of hatred,
the pain of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the full comprehension
of these three pains, monks,
that the five powers is to be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,

on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these three pains.

What three?

The pain of lust,
the pain of hatred,
the pain of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these three pains, monks,
that the five powers is to be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,

which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these three pains.

What three?

The pain of lust,
the pain of hatred,
the pain of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the wearing out of these three pains, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these three pains.

What three?

The pain of lust,
the pain of hatred,
the pain of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the abandoning of these three pains, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,

on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

§

Sutta 43

Feelings

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these three feelings.

What three?

Feeling that is pleasant,
feeling that is painful,
feeling that is neither pleasant nor painful.

These are the three.

It is for the full comprehension
of these three feelings, monks,
that the five powers is to be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,

on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these three feelings.

What three?

Feeling that is pleasant,
feeling that is painful,
feeling that is neither pleasant nor painful.

These are the three.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these three feelings, monks, that the five powers is to be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,

which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these three feelings.

What three?

Feeling that is pleasant,
feeling that is painful,
feeling that is neither pleasant nor painful.

These are the three.

It is for the wearing out of these three feelings, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these three feelings.

What three?

Feeling that is pleasant,
feeling that is painful,
feeling that is neither pleasant nor painful.

These are the three.

It is for the abandoning of these three feelings, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,

on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

§

Sutta 44

Craving

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there axe these three cravings.

What three?

The craving for sensual delights,
the craving for becoming,
the craving for ceasing to become.

These are the three.

It is for the full comprehension
of these three cravings, monks,
that the five powers is to be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,

on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there axe these three cravings.

What three?

The craving for sensual delights,
the craving for becoming,
the craving for ceasing to become.

These are the three.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these three cravings, monks, that the five powers is to be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,

which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there axe these three cravings.

What three?

The craving for sensual delights,
the craving for becoming,
the craving for ceasing to become.

These are the three.

It is for the wearing out of these three cravings, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there axe these three cravings.

What three?

The craving for sensual delights,
the craving for becoming,
the craving for ceasing to become.

These are the three.

It is for the abandoning of these three cravings, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,

on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

§

Sutta 44.2

Thirst

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there axe these three thirsts.

What three?

The thirst for sensual delights,
the thirst for becoming,
the thirst for ceasing to become.

These are the three.

It is for the full comprehension of these three thirsts, monks,
that the five powers is to be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,

on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there axe these three thirsts.

What three?

The thirst for sensual delights,
the thirst for becoming,
the thirst for ceasing to become.

These are the three.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these three thirsts, monks,
that the five powers is to be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,

which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there axe these three thirsts.

What three?

The thirst for sensual delights,
the thirst for becoming,
the thirst for ceasing to become.

These are the three.

It is for the wearing out of these three thirsts, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there axe these three thirsts.

What three?

The thirst for sensual delights,
the thirst for becoming,
the thirst for ceasing to become.

These are the three.

It is for the abandoning of these three thirsts, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,

on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
50. Bala Saṃyutta
5. Ogha Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

50. Kindred Sayings on the Powers

5. The Flood

Suttas 45-54

---

[224]

Sutta 45

The Flood

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four floods.

What four?

The flood of sensual desire,
the flood of becoming,
the flood of view,
the flood of nescience.

These are the four floods.

It is for the full comprehension of these four floods, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,

which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these four floods.

What four?

The flood of sensual desire,
the flood of becoming,
the flood of view,
the flood of nescience.

These are the four floods.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these four floods, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these four floods.

What four?

The flood of sensual desire,
the flood of becoming,
the flood of view,
the flood of nescience.

These are the four floods.

It is for the wearing out of these four floods, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,

on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these four floods.

What four?

The flood of sensual desire,
the flood of becoming,
the flood of view,
the flood of nescience.

These are the four floods.

It is for the abandoning of these four floods, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,

which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

§

Sutta 46

Bond

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four bonds.

What four?

The bond of sensual desire,
the bond of becoming,
the bond of view,
the bond of nescience.

These are the four bonds.

It is for the full comprehension of these four bonds, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,

which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these four bonds.

What four?

The bond of sensual desire,
the bond of becoming,
the bond of view,
the bond of nescience.

These are the four bonds.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these four bonds, monks, that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these four bonds.

What four?

The bond of sensual desire,
the bond of becoming,
the bond of view,
the bond of nescience.

These are the four bonds.

It is for the wearing out of these four bonds, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,

on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these four bonds.

What four?

The bond of sensual desire,
the bond of becoming,
the bond of view,
the bond of nescience.

These are the four bonds.

It is for the abandoning these four bonds, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,

which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

§

Sutta 47

Grasping

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four graspings.

What four?

The grasping of sensual desire,
the grasping of view,
the grasping of rite and ritual,
the grasping of the self-heresy.

These are the four graspings.

It is for the full comprehension of these four graspings, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,

which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these four graspings.

What four?

The grasping of sensual desire,
the grasping of view,
the grasping of rite and ritual,
the grasping of the self-heresy.

These are the four graspings.

It is for the realization (of the meaning) of these four graspings, monks, that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these four graspings.

What four?

The grasping of sensual desire,
the grasping of view,
the grasping of rite and ritual,
the grasping of the self-heresy.

These are the four graspings.

It is for the wearing out of these four graspings, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,

on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these four graspings.

What four?

The grasping of sensual desire,
the grasping of view,
the grasping of rite and ritual,
the grasping of the self-heresy.

These are the four graspings.

It is for the abandoning of these four graspings, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,

which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

§

Sutta 48

(Bodily) Ties

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four (bodily) ties.

What four?

The bodily tie of covetousness,
the bodily tie of malevolence,
the bodily tie of contagion of rite and ritual,
the bodily tie of tendency to dogmatic view.

These are the four bodily ties.

It is for the full comprehension of these four bodily ties, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,

which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these four (bodily) ties.

What four?

The bodily tie of covetousness,
the bodily tie of malevolence,
the bodily tie of contagion of rite and ritual,
the bodily tie of tendency to dogmatic view.

These are the four bodily ties.

It is for the realization (of the meaning) of these four bodily ties, monks, that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these four (bodily) ties.

What four?

The bodily tie of covetousness,
the bodily tie of malevolence,
the bodily tie of contagion of rite and ritual,
the bodily tie of tendency to dogmatic view.

These are the four bodily ties.

It is for the wearing out of these four bodily ties, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,

on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these four (bodily) ties.

What four?

The bodily tie of covetousness,
the bodily tie of malevolence,
the bodily tie of contagion of rite and ritual,
the bodily tie of tendency to dogmatic view.

These are the four bodily ties.

It is for the abandoning of these four bodily ties, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,

which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

§

Sutta 49

Tendency

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these seven tendencies.

What seven?

The tendency to sensual lust,
the tendency to resentment,
the tendency to view,
the tendency to doubt and wavering,
the tendency to conceit,
the tendency to nescience.

These are the seven tendencies.

It is for the full comprehension of these seven tendencies, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,

which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these seven tendencies.

What seven?

The tendency to sensual lust,
the tendency to resentment,
the tendency to view,
the tendency to doubt and wavering,

the tendency to conceit,
the tendency to nescience.

These are the seven tendencies.

It is for the realization (of the meaning) of these seven tendencies, monks, that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,

on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these seven tendencies.

What seven?

The tendency to sensual lust,
the tendency to resentment,
the tendency to view,
the tendency to doubt and wavering,
the tendency to conceit,
the tendency to nescience.

These are the seven tendencies.

It is for the wearing out of these seven tendencies, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,

on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,

which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,

which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these seven tendencies.

What seven?

The tendency to sensual lust,
the tendency to resentment,
the tendency to view,
the tendency to doubt and wavering,
the tendency to conceit,
the tendency to nescience.

These are the seven tendencies.

It is for the abandoning of these seven tendencies, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,

on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

§

Sutta 50

The Sense-Pleasures

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five pleasures of sense.

What five?

There are objects cognizable by the eye,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are sounds cognizable by the ear,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are scents cognizable by the nose,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are savours cognizable by the tongue,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are tangibles cognizable by the body,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

These are the five pleasures of sense.

It is for the full comprehension of these five pleasures of sense, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,

on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these five pleasures of sense.

What five?

There are objects cognizable by the eye,
objects desirable,
pleasant,

delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are sounds cognizable by the ear,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are scents cognizable by the nose,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are savours cognizable by the tongue,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are tangibles cognizable by the body,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

These are the five pleasures of sense.

It is for the realization (of the meaning) of these five pleasures of sense,
monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,

which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,

which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these five pleasures of sense.

What five?

There are objects cognizable by the eye,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are sounds cognizable by the ear,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are scents cognizable by the nose,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are savours cognizable by the tongue,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are tangibles cognizable by the body,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

These are the five pleasures of sense.

It is for the wearing out of these five pleasures of sense, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,

on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these five pleasures of sense.

What five?

There are objects cognizable by the eye,
objects desirable,
pleasant,

delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are sounds cognizable by the ear,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are scents cognizable by the nose,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are savours cognizable by the tongue,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are tangibles cognizable by the body,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

These are the five pleasures of sense.

It is for the abandoning of these five pleasures of sense, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,

which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,

which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

§

Sutta 51

Hindrances

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five hindrances.

What five?

The hindrance of sensual desire,
the hindrance of malevolence,
the hindrance of sloth and torpor,
the hindrance of excitement and flurry,
the hindrance of doubt and wavering.

These are the five hindrances.

It is for the full comprehension of these five pleasures of sense, monks, that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,

which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these five hindrances.

What five?

The hindrance of sensual desire,
the hindrance of malevolence,
the hindrance of sloth and torpor,
the hindrance of excitement and flurry,
the hindrance of doubt and wavering.

These are the five hindrances.

It is for the realization (of the meaning) of these five hindrances, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these five hindrances.

What five?

The hindrance of sensual desire,
the hindrance of malevolence,
the hindrance of sloth and torpor,
the hindrance of excitement and flurry,
the hindrance of doubt and wavering.

These are the five hindrances.

It is for the wearing out of these five hindrances, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,

which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these five hindrances.

What five?

The hindrance of sensual desire,
the hindrance of malevolence,
the hindrance of sloth and torpor,
the hindrance of excitement and flurry,
the hindrance of doubt and wavering.

These are the five hindrances.

It is for the abandoning of these five hindrances, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,

which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

§

Sutta 52

Factors

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five factors of grasping.

What five?

The factor of grasping of body,
the factor of grasping of feeling,
the factor of grasping of perception,
the factor of grasping of the activities,
the factor of grasping of consciousness.

These are the five factors of grasping.

It is for the full comprehension of these five factors of grasping, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,

which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these five factors of grasping.

What five?

The factor of grasping of body,
the factor of grasping of feeling,
the factor of grasping of perception,
the factor of grasping of the activities,
the factor of grasping of consciousness.

These are the five factors of grasping.

It is for the realization (of the meaning) of these five factors of grasping, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these five factors of grasping.

What five?

The factor of grasping of body,
the factor of grasping of feeling,
the factor of grasping of perception,
the factor of grasping of the activities,
the factor of grasping of consciousness.

These are the five factors of grasping.

It is for the wearing out of these five factors of grasping, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,

which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these five factors of grasping.

What five?

The factor of grasping of body,
the factor of grasping of feeling,
the factor of grasping of perception,
the factor of grasping of the activities,
the factor of grasping of consciousness.

These are the five factors of grasping.

It is for the abandoning of these five factors of grasping, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,

which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

§

Sutta 53

The Lower Set (of Fetters)

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there is this set of five lower fetters.

What five?

The individual-group-view,
doubt and wavering,
contagion of rite and ritual,
desire and lust,
malevolence.

These are the five lower fetters.

It is for the full comprehension of these five lower fetters, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,

which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there is this set of five lower fetters.

What five?

The individual-group-view,
doubt and wavering,
contagion of rite and ritual,
desire and lust,
malevolence.

These are the five lower fetters.

It is for the realization (of the meaning) of these five lower fetters, monks, that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,

which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,

which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there is this set of five lower fetters.

What five?

The individual-group-view,
doubt and wavering,
contagion of rite and ritual,
desire and lust,
malevolence.

These are the five lower fetters.

It is for the wearing out of these five lower fetters, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there is this set of five lower fetters.

What five?

The individual-group-view,
doubt and wavering,
contagion of rite and ritual,
desire and lust,
malevolence.

These are the five lower fetters.

It is for the abandoning of these five lower fetters, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,

which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

§

Sutta 54

The Higher Set (of Fetters)

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there is this set of five higher fetters.

What five?

Lust of form,
lust of the formless,
conceit,
excitement,
nescience.

These are the five higher fetters.

It is for the full comprehension of these five higher fetters, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,

which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there is this set of five higher fetters.

What five?

Lust of form,
lust of the formless,
conceit,
excitement,
nescience.

These are the five higher fetters.

It is for the realization (of the meaning) of these five higher fetters, monks, that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,

which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,

which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there is this set of five higher fetters.

What five?

Lust of form,
lust of the formless,
conceit,
excitement,
nescience.

These are the five higher fetters.

It is for the wearing out of these five higher fetters, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there is this set of five higher fetters.

What five?

Lust of form,
lust of the formless,
conceit,
excitement,
nescience.

These are the five higher fetters.

It is for the abandoning of these five higher fetters, monks,
that the five powers must be cultivated.

What four stations of mindfulness?

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of energy
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of concentration
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the power of insight
based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of energy
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which ends in the restraint of passion,

which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

He cultivates the power of insight
which ends in the restraint of passion,
which ends in the restraint of hatred,
which ends in the restraint of illusion.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of energy
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

He cultivates the power of insight
which plunges into the deathless,
which has the deathless for its aim,
which has the deathless for its end.

■

Herein a monk cultivates the power of faith
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of energy
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of mindfulness
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of concentration
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

He cultivates the power of insight
which flows to Nibbāna,
which slides to Nibbāna,
which tends to Nibbāna.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
1. Cāpāla Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power[1]

1. Cāpāla[2]

Sutta 1

Aparā Suttaṃ

Neither Shore[3]

---

[225]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

'Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, these four bases of psychic power,[4]
if cultivated and made much of,
conduce to going neither to the hither
nor to the further shore.

What are the four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,[5]
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.[6]

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the [226] features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

These four bases of psychic power, monks,
if cultivated and made much of,
conduce to going neither to the hither
nor to the further shore."

---

[1] (Chanda-viriya-citta-vīmaṃsa) each + samādhi-padhāna (as saṅkhāra).

[2] This chapter is so called after the Cāpāla Shrine of § x below, q.v.

[3] Text wrongly aparāpāraṃ ('to and fro going,' exactly the opposite of the intended meaning) for a-pārāparaṃ (a-pāra-apāra), 'no more of this or that shore,' the state of Arahant, Nibbāna. Cf. supra, text, 24, 81, 180 n. [Ed.: Note reads: "B[1-2] apārā°"]

[4] Comy. [iddhi-pāda = iddhiyā-pādaṃ or iddhi-bhūtaṃ pādaṃ] refers to Vibh. 216; Vibh.A. 303; and VM. Cf. Dialog. ii, 110 n., iii, 214; S. i, 116, iii, 96. At D. iii, 221, citta-s. follows chanda-s.

[5] Chando as 'will' or 'desire to do' (def. at Vibh. loc. cit., chandī-katā kattu-kamyatā kusalo dhamma-cchando). The word 'desire-to-do,' a notable reaching out after such a fit word as our 'will' had not emerged in the Nikāyas.

[6] Padhāna. Cf. Dhs. 158 n., § 1366; Buddh. Psych. Eth., p. 358, called 'spiritual wrestlings,' or 'efforts' (as in Bk. V).

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
1. Cāpāla Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

1. Cāpāla

Sutta 2

Viraddha Suttaṃ

Neglected

---

[226]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

'Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"By whomsoever, monks,
the four bases of psychic power are neglected,
by them also is neglected
the Ariyan way that goes on to the utter destruction of ill.

By whomsoever, monks,
the four bases of psychic power are undertaken,
by them also is undertaken
the Ariyan way that goes on to the utter destruction of ill.

What are the four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates
that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates
that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates
that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

Monks, by whomsoever these four bases of psychic power are neglected,
by them also is neglected
the Ariyan way that goes on to the utter destruction of ill.

By whomsoever, monks,
the four bases of psychic power are undertaken,
by them also is undertaken
the Ariyan way that goes on to the utter destruction of ill."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
1. Cāpāla Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

1. Cāpāla

Sutta 3

Ariyā Suttaṃ

Ariyan[1]

---

[226]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

'Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, these four bases of psychic power,
if cultivated and made much of,
go hence as the Ariyan hence-goers.

For him that acts in accordance therewith they conduce to the utter destruction of ill.

What are the four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

Monks, these four bases of psychic power,
if cultivated and made much of,
go hence as the Ariyan hence-goers.

For him that acts in accordance therewith they conduce to the utter destruction of ill."

---

[1] As at text 82, for the seven limbs of wisdom.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
1. Cāpāla Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

1. Cāpāla

Sutta 4

Nibbidā Suttaṃ

Revulsion

---

[227]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

'Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, these four bases of psychic power,
if cultivated and made much of,
conduce to downright revulsion,
to dispassion,
to cessation,
to calm,
to full comprehension,
to the wisdom,
to Nibbāna.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,

together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

Monks, these four bases of psychic power,
if cultivated and made much of,
conduce to downright revulsion,
to dispassion,
to cessation,
to calm,
to full comprehension,
to the wisdom,
to Nibbāna."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
1. Cāpāla Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

1. Cāpāla

Sutta 5

Padesa Suttaṃ

Partial[1]

---

[227]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

'Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, whosoever in time past,
whether recluses or brahmins,
have successfully practised[2] psychic power
in a partial degree,[3]
all such have done so
by cultivating and making much of
the four bases of psychic power.

Whosoever in future time,
whether recluses or brahmins,
shall successfully practise psychic power
in a partial degree,
all such shall do so
by cultivating and making much of
the four bases of psychic power.

Whosoever in the present time,
whether recluses or brahmins,
do successfully practise psychic power
in a partial degree,
all such do so
by cultivating and making much of
the four bases of psychic power.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,

together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

Monks, whosoever in time past,
whether recluses or brahmins,
have successfully practised psychic power
in a partial degree,
all such have done so
by cultivating and making much of
the four bases of psychic power.

Whosoever in future time,
whether recluses or brahmins,
shall successfully practise psychic power
in a partial degree,
all such shall do so
by cultivating and making much of
the four bases of psychic power.

Whosoever in the present time,
whether recluses or brahmins,

do successfully practise psychic power
in a partial degree,
all such do so
by cultivating and making much of the four bases of psychic power."

---

[1] Padesaṃ, as opposite to samattaṃ below.

[2] Abhinipphādesuṃ, supra, text, 156.

[3] Here text has wrongly iddhi-padesaṃ for iddhi-pāde padesaṃ (as Comy.).

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
1. Cāpāla Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

1. Cāpāla

Sutta 6

Samatta Suttaṃ

Perfectly

---

[228]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

'Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, whosoever in time past,
whether recluses or brahmins,
have successfully practised psychic power
to a perfect degree,
all such have done so
by cultivating and making much of
the four bases of psychic power.

Whosoever in future time,
whether recluses or brahmins,
shall successfully practise psychic power
to a perfect degree,
all such shall do so
by cultivating and making much of
the four bases of psychic power.

Whosoever in the present time,
whether recluses or brahmins,
do successfully practise psychic power
to a perfect degree,
all such do so
by cultivating and making much of
the four bases of psychic power.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,

together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

Monks, whosoever in time past,
whether recluses or brahmins,
have successfully practised psychic power
to a perfect degree,
all such have done so
by cultivating and making much of
the four bases of psychic power.

Whosoever in future time,
whether recluses or brahmins,
shall successfully practise psychic power
to a perfect degree,
all such shall do so
by cultivating and making much of
the four bases of psychic power.

Whosoever in the present time,
whether recluses or brahmins,

do successfully practise psychic power
to a perfect degree,
all such do so
by cultivating and making much of
the four bases of psychic power."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
1. Cāpāla Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

1. Cāpāla

Sutta 7

Bhikkhū Suttaṃ

Monk

---

[228]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, whatsoever monks
in time past have,
by the destruction of the āsavas,
by their own personal knowledge
realized in this very life, attained and dwelt in
the heart's release,
the release by insight
that is freed from the āsavas,- all of them have done so
by the fact of cultivating and making much of
the four bases of psychic power.

Whatsoever monks shall
in future time,
by the destruction of the āsavas,
by their own personal knowledge realize in this very life, attain and dwell in
the heart's release,
the release by insight
that is freed from the āsavas,-
all of them will do so
by the fact of cultivating and making much of
the four bases of psychic power.

Whatsoever monks
at the present time do,
by the destruction of the āsavas,
by their own personal knowledge
realize in this very life,
attain and dwell in
the heart's release,
the release by insight
that is freed from the āsavas,-
all of them do so

by the fact of cultivating and making much of
the four bases of psychic power.

Of what four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

Monks, whatsoever monks
in time past have,
by the destruction of the āsavas,
by their own personal knowledge

realized in this very life,
attained and dwelt in
the heart's release,
the release by insight
that is freed from the āsavas,-
all of them have done so
by the fact of cultivating and making much of
the four bases of psychic power.

Whatsoever monks shall
in future time,
by the destruction of the āsavas,
by their own personal knowledge
realize in this very life,
attain and dwell in
the heart's release,
the release by insight
that is freed from the āsavas,-
all of them will do so
by the fact of cultivating and making much of
the four bases of psychic power.

Whatsoever monks
at the present time do,
by the destruction of the āsavas,
by their own personal knowledge
realize in this very life,
attain and dwell in
the heart's release,
the release by insight
that is freed from the āsavas,-
all of them do so
by the fact of cultivating and making much of
the four bases of psychic power."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
1. Cāpāla Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

1. Cāpāla

Sutta 8

Buddha or Arahanta Suttaṃ

Enlightened or Arahant

---

[228]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

'Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four bases of psychic power.

Of what four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

These indeed, monks, are the four bases of psychic power.

It is by the fact of cultivating and making much of these four bases of psychic power, monks,

that the Tathāgata is called Arahant, a Fully Enlightened One.'[1]

---

[1] Cf. Dialog. iii, 210 n., etc.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
1. Cāpāla Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

1. Cāpāla

Sutta 9

Ñāṇa Suttaṃ

Knowledge[1]

---

[229]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"At the thought, monks:

'This is the basis of psychic power which has for its features
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle, -

in things unheard of before
there arose in me vision,
there arose in me knowledge,
insight arose,
wisdom arose,
light arose.'

■

At the thought, monks:

'This basis of psychic power
which has for its features
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle,
ought to be cultivated -

in things unheard of before
there arose in me vision,
there arose in me knowledge,
insight arose,
wisdom arose,
light arose.'

■

At the thought, monks:

'This basis of psychic power
which has for its features
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle,
has been cultivated -

in things unheard of before
there arose in me vision,
there arose in me knowledge,
insight arose,
wisdom arose,
light arose.'

§

At the thought, monks:

'This is the basis of psychic power
which has for its features
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle, -

in things unheard of before
there arose in me vision,
there arose in me knowledge,
insight arose,

wisdom arose,
light arose.'

■

At the thought, monks:

'This basis of psychic power
which has for its features
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle,
ought to be cultivated -

in things unheard of before
there arose in me vision,
there arose in me knowledge,
insight arose,
wisdom arose,
light arose.'

■

At the thought, monks:

'This basis of psychic power
which has for its features
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle,
has been cultivated -

in things unheard of before
there arose in me vision,
there arose in me knowledge,

insight arose,
wisdom arose,
light arose.'

§

At the thought, monks:

'This is the basis of psychic power
which has for its features
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle, -

in things unheard of before
there arose in me vision,
there arose in me knowledge,
insight arose,
wisdom arose,
light arose.'

■

At the thought, monks:

'This basis of psychic power
which has for its features
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle,
ought to be cultivated -

in things unheard of before
there arose in me vision,
there arose in me knowledge,
insight arose,
wisdom arose,
light arose.'

■

At the thought, monks:

'This basis of psychic power
which has for its features
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle,
has been cultivated -

in things unheard of before
there arose in me vision,
there arose in me knowledge,
insight arose,
wisdom arose,
light arose.'

§

At the thought, monks:

'This is the basis of psychic power
which has for its features
investigation,

together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle, -

in things unheard of before
there arose in me vision,
there arose in me knowledge,
insight arose,
wisdom arose,
light arose.'

■

[230] At the thought, monks:

'This basis of psychic power
which has for its features
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle,
ought to be cultivated -

in things unheard of before
there arose in me vision,
there arose in me knowledge,
insight arose,
wisdom arose,
light arose.'

■

At the thought, monks:

'This basis of psychic power
which has for its features
investigation,

together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle,
has been cultivated -

in things unheard of before
there arose in me vision,
there arose in me knowledge,
insight arose,
wisdom arose,
light arose.'

---

[1] Cf. K.S. iv, 158. [see also: SN 5.56.12]

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
1. Cāpāla Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

1. Cāpāla

Sutta 10

Cetiya Suttaṃ

The Shrine[1]

[10] Oḷārike nimitte. UdA. thūla-saññ'uppādane.

[11] Pariyuṭṭhita-citto. Comy. = ajjhotthata-citto (i.e., bis heart was overspread by illusion). Commentators describe the wiles of Māra. 'He puts his hand into one's mouth and kneads the heart, so that it is senseless. ... He showed the elder a terrifying aspect, so that he could not penetrate the hint dropped by the Master.'

[12] A polite formula of dismissal. UdA. thinks he sent him away for noonday siesta.

[13] After attaining the wisdom, under the Goatherds' Banyan, on the occasion of the temptation of Māra.

[14] Our text inserts (on the authority of one MS. only) patta-yoga-kkhema, not to be found at D., Ud., or in Comy.

[15] Dhammānudhamma-paṭipannā. Rhys Davids in Buddhist Suttas ad loc., 'Masters of the lesser corollaries that follow from the larger doctrine.' Comy. 'having reached the insight that results from the Ariyan Norm.'

[16] Saha-dhammena (not 'according to the Norm' or 'by truth'). Comy. 'sa-hetukena sa-kāraṇena vacanena.'

[17] Sappāṭihāriyaṃ. Comy. yāva-niyyanikaṃ katva (making it profitable, salutary). Rhys Davids, 'wonder-working.'

[18] Text yāva-d-eva manussehi. Rhys Davids,' among men.' I follow Comy. (as on S. ii, 121, etc.). on Ud. reading yāva deva-manussehi, explained as: yattaka viññū-jātikā devā c'eva manussā c'atthi; tehi sabbehi suṭṭhu pakāsitaṃ. Cf. K.S. ii, 75 n.

[19] Appossukko. Comy. nirālayo (homeless), as at DhpA. iv, 31, but not appropriate in this connexion. UdA. nirussukko (indifferent) vigat'ussāho ... mā ... vāyāmaṃ karohi; nirālayo, together with a reading līna-viriyo (not insistent) for nirālayo.

[20] Comy. ñāṇena paricchinditvā vissaji, pajahi, 'consciously limiting it, he rejected, abandoned ... but not like crumbling a clod of earth in one's hand. He made up his mind thus: Just for three months I will reap the fruit of attainment and no longer.' UdA. thinks it was 'not because Māra asked or because Ānanda failed to ask, but from lack of any more capable of receiving the Buddha-teaching (Buddha-veneyyānaṃ abhāvato).'

[21] Āyu-sañhhāraṃ. At S. ii, 266, 'things of physical life.' Cf. M. i, 295; JA. iv, 215. At Dialog. ii, 113, Rhys Davids has: 'He renounced those tendencies, potentiahties, which in the ordinary course of things would otherwise have led to the putting together of, the building up of, more life (that is, of course, in this birth. Any more life in a future birth [as UdA. notes] he had already renounced, when, under the Wisdom Tree, he attained Nirvāna).'

[22] Atthaṃ viditvā. Comy. is silent, but UdA. 'the significance of thus rejecting his life's aggregate.'

[23] Tulaṃ, 'limited or weighable.' Comy. suggests an alternative 'weighing (tulaṃ = tūlento, tīrento) Nibbāna (atulaṃ) and becoming (sambhavaṃ.)'

[24] Atta-sambhavaṃ Comy. attani jātaṃ kilesaṃ and bhava-gāmi-kammaṃ. At D. loc. cit. the narrative continues with the Buddha's relating all this to Ānanda, and explaining the causes of earthquakes, etc.

[ed1] Woodward has abridged these sections and indicates that this should be as per the previous, but substituting "lay-disciples both male and female" but the Pali has only: "upāsakā."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
2. Pāsāda-Kampana Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

2. The Shaking of the Terraced House[1]

Sutta 11

Pubbe or Hetu Suttaṃ

Formerly or Condition

This formatted and proofread sutta submitted by Alex Genaud.

---

[235]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Formerly, monks, when I was unenlightened, but just a Bodhisattva,
this occurred to me:

'What, I wonder, is the cause, what is the motive for cultivating the bases of psychic power?'

Then, monks, it occurred to me thus:

'Herein (monks) one cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,[2]
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle, (with this intent):

"Thus shall not my desire
be over-sluggish
nor overstrained.

It shall not be inwardly cramped
nor outwardly diffuse."

So he abides fully conscious
of what is behind and what is in front.[3]

As (he is conscious of what is) in front,
so behind:
as behind,
so in front:
as below,
so above:
as above,
so below:
as by day,
so by night:

as by night,
so by day.

Thus with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.[4]

■

One cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
(with this intent):

"Thus shall not my energy
be over-sluggish
nor yet overstrained.

It shall not be inwardly cramped
nor outwardly diffuse."

So he abides fully conscious
of what is behind and what is in front.

As (he is conscious of what is) in front,
so behind:
as behind,
so in front:
as below,
so above:
as above,
so below:
[236] as by day,
so by night:
as by night,
so by day.

Thus with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

■

One cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
(with this intent):

"Thus shall not my thought
be over-sluggish
nor yet overstrained.

It shall not be inwardly cramped
nor outwardly diffuse."

So he abides fully conscious
of what is behind and what is in front.

As (he is conscious of what is) in front,
so behind:
as behind,
so in front:
as below,
so above:
as above,
so below:
as by day,
so by night:
as by night,
so by day.

Thus with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,

he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

■

One cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
(with this intent):

"Thus shall not my investigation
be over-sluggish
nor yet overstrained.

It shall not be inwardly cramped
nor outwardly diffuse."

So he abides fully conscious
of what is behind and what is in front.

As (he is conscious of what is) in front,
so behind:
as behind,
so in front:
as below,
so above:
as above,
so below:
as by day,
so by night:
as by night,
so by day.

Thus with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.'

§

When a monk has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
he enjoys manifold forms of psychic power,[5] thus: -

From being one he becomes many,
from being many he becomes one.

Manifest or invisible
he goes unhindered through a wall,
through a rampart,
through a mountain,
as if it were through air.[6]

He plunges into the earth
and shoots up again
as if in water.

He walks upon the water
without parting it,
as if on solid ground.

He travels sitting cross-legged through the air,
like a bird upon the wing.

Even this moon and sun,
though they be of such mighty power and majesty,
he handles and strokes them with his hand.

Even as far as the Brahma World
he has power with his body.[7]

■

[237] When a monk has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
with deva-power of hearing,
purified and surpassing that of man,
he hears sounds
both of devas and of humans, whether far or near.

■

When a monk has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
he knows the minds of other beings,
of other persons,
with his own mind grasping them.

Of the mind that is lustful
he knows it to be a mind that is lustful.

Of the mind that is free from lust
he knows it to be a mind that is free from lust.

Of the mind that is full of hate
he knows it to be a mind that is full of hate.

Of the mind that is free from hate
he knows it to be a mind that is free from hate.

Of the mind that is deluded
he knows it to be a mind that is deluded.

Of the mind that is free from delusion he knows it to be a mind that is free from delusion.

Of the mind that is cramped[8]
he knows it to be a mind that is cramped.

Of the mind that is diffuse
he knows it to be a mind that is diffuse.

Of the mind that is lofty
he knows it to be a mind that is lofty,

Of the mind that is mean
he knows it to be a mind that is mean.

Of the mind which is inferior
he knows it to be a mind that is inferior.

Of the mind that is superior
he knows it to be a mind that is superior.

Of the mind that is uncontrolled
he knows it to be a mind that is uncontrolled.

Of the mind that is controlled
he knows it to be a mind that is controlled.

Of the mind that is in bondage
he knows it to be a mind that is in bondage:

Of the mind that is released
he knows it to be a mind that is released.

■

When a monk has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power, he calls to mind his former births in divers ways thus:

One birth,
two births,
three births,
four births,
five births,
even ten births,
twenty births,
thirty births,
forty births,
fifty births;
even a hundred births,
a thousand births,
a hundred thousand births.

He calls to mind divers aeons of involution
divers aeons of evolution, diverse aeons of involution and evolution.[9]

He knows:

'Such was I by name,
such was I by clan,
by caste.

Thus was I nourished,
thus did I undergo pleasure and pain,
such was my span of life.'

He knows:

' Thence I deceased[10]
and rose up so and so.

There I dwelt,
of such and such a name,
of such a clan,

of such a caste,
so nourished;
such and such pleasure and pain did I undergo,
such my span of life.

Thence deceased
I rose up in the present life.'

That is how
in fact and detail[11]
he calls to mind in divers ways
his former births.

■

[238] When a monk has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
with the deva-sight,[12]
purified and surpassing that of man,
he beholds beings:
as they decease and rise up (elsewhere)
he knows them,
both mean and exalted,
of features fair and foul,
gone to weal
or gone to woe,
according to their deeds, thus:

'Alas! these good folk,[13]
given to the practice of evil deeds,
of evil words,
of evil thoughts,
scoffing at the noble ones,[14]
of perverted views
and reaping the fruit of their perverted views, -

these folk,
on the dissolution of body,
after death arose again in the Waste,
the Downfall
and the Constant Round.

Ah! and these good folk,
given to the practice of good deeds,
of good words,
of good thoughts,
not scoffing at the noble ones,
of sound views
and reaping the fruits of their sound views, -
these beings,
on the dissolution of body,
after death arose again in the Happy Way,
the Heaven World.'

Thus with deva-sight,
purified and surpassing that of man,
does he behold beings
as they decease and rise up (elsewhere):
he knows them,
both mean and exalted,
of features fair and foul,
gone to weal
or gone to woe
according to their deeds.

■

When a monk has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
by the destruction of the āsavas,
in this very life,

by his own unaided powers
he attains the heart's release,
the release by insight,
that is free from the āsavas,
realizes it
and dwells therein."[15]

---

[1] The title comes from § iv of this chapter.

[2] As in Chap. I. Chanda + samādhi-padhāna-saṅkhāra-samannāgata. For further details see infra, text, 277.

[3] Text misprints paccāpure for pacchā-pure. Comy. thinks his exercise is in front of him, but the goal is yet behind him. However, all these terms are defined by the Buddha towards the end of this chapter. Cf. D. iii, 223; A. i, 236, ii, 45 = Nett. 16; Brethren, 212 (Thag. 397), i.e., yathābhūtaṇ passati, as at Sn. 202.

[4] As at D, iii, the aspirant cultivates āloka-saññaṇ, 'consciousness of light.'

[5] Cf. D. 1, 78; S. ii, 121 (K.S. ii, 86); A. iii, 280, called iddhi-pāṭi-hāriyaṇ and cha-abhiññā.

[6] Āvi-bhāvaṇ, tiro-bhāvaṇ. Cf. Shak. Mids. Night's Dream, ii, 1:

Over hill, over dale,
Thorough bush, thorough brier,
Over park, over pale,
Thorough flood, thorough fire.

[7] Our text (and at S. ii, 121) has kāyena vasaṇ pavatteti. A. i, 170; D. i, 78, 218, read kāyena va saṇvatteti, where Dialog. trans. 'he reaches up to' (but there seems no authority for this meaning of saṇvatteti). The former reading seems preferable. DA. refers to VM. 378 ff. Our Comy. is silent, having already discussed the passage at S. ii, and again refers to VM.

[8] Sañkhitta. Cf. supra, § 1.

[9] Saṇvatta-vivatta-kappe, lit. 'uprolling and unrolling.'

[10] Ento.

[11] Sākāraṇ sa-uddesaṇ.

[12] Clairvoyance.

[13] Ime vata bhonto (both voc. and nom. plur. of bhavant) sattā. Is it (like ime vata bho) 'Alas, sirs!' or 'Alas! these good folk'? Dialog. iii, n. ad loc. trans. 'messieurs ces êtres.'

[14] Ariyānaṇ.

[15] At S. ii, 121 ff. (K.S. ii, 86) it is shown that it is possible to 'declare gnosis' (añña) without possessing any of these abnormal powers (abhiññā).

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
2. Pāsāda-Kampana Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

2. The Shaking of the Terraced House

Sutta 12

Maha-p-Phala Suttaṃ

Of Great Fruit

---

[238]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, these four bases of psychic power,
if cultivated
and made much of,
are of great fruit
and great profit.

How practised
and how made much of are these four
of great fruit
and great profit?

[239] Herein (monks) one cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
(with this intent):

'Thus shall not my desire
be over-sluggish
nor overstrained.

It shall not be inwardly cramped
nor outwardly diffuse.'

So he abides fully conscious
of what is behind and what is in front.

As (he is conscious of what is) in front, so behind:
as behind, so in front:
as below, so above:
as above, so below:
as by day, so by night:
as by night, so by day.

Thus with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,

he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

■

One cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
(with this intent):

'Thus shall not my energy
be over-sluggish
nor yet overstrained.

It shall not be inwardly cramped
nor outwardly diffuse.'

So he abides fully conscious
of what is behind and what is in front.

As (he is conscious of what is) in front, so behind:
as behind, so in front:
as below, so above:
as above, so below:
as by day, so by night:
as by night, so by day.

Thus with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

■

One cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors

of concentration and struggle,
(with this intent):

'Thus shall not my thought
be over-sluggish
nor yet overstrained.

It shall not be inwardly cramped
nor outwardly diffuse.'

So he abides fully conscious
of what is behind and what is in front.

As (he is conscious of what is) in front, so behind:
as behind, so in front:
as below, so above:
as above, so below:
as by day, so by night:
as by night, so by day.

Thus with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

■

One cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
(with this intent):

'Thus shall not my thought
be over-sluggish
nor yet overstrained.

It shall not be inwardly cramped
nor outwardly diffuse.'

So he abides fully conscious
of what is behind and what is in front.

As (he is conscious of what is) in front, so behind:
as behind, so in front:
as below, so above:
as above, so below:
as by day, so by night:
as by night, so by day.

Thus with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

§

When a monk has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
he enjoys manifold forms of psychic power, thus: -

From being one he becomes many,
from being many he becomes one.

Manifest or invisible
he goes unhindered through a wall,
through a rampart,
through a mountain,
as if it were through air.

He plunges into the earth
and shoots up again
as if in water.

He walks upon the water
without parting it,
as if on solid ground.

He travels sitting cross-legged through the air,
like a bird upon the wing.

Even this moon and sun,
though they be of such mighty power and majesty,
he handles and strokes them with his hand.

Even as far as the Brahma World
he has power with his body.

■

When a monk has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
with deva-power of hearing,
purified and surpassing that of man,
he hears sounds
both of devas and of humans, whether far or near.

■

When a monk has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
he knows the minds of other beings,
of other persons,
with his own mind grasping them.

Of the mind that is lustful
he knows it to lustful.

Of the mind that is free from lust
he knows it to be a mind that is free from lust.

Of the mind that is full of hate
he knows it to be a mind that is full of hate.

Of the mind that is free from hate
he knows it to be a mind that is free from hate.

Of the mind that is deluded
he knows it to be a mind that is deluded.

Of the mind that is free from delusion
he knows it to be a mind that is free.

Of the mind that is cramped
he knows it to be a mind that is cramped.

Of the mind that is diffuse
he knows it to be a mind that is diffuse.

Of the mind that is lofty
he knows it to be a mind that is lofty,

Of the mind that is mean
he knows it to be a mind that is mean.

Of the mind which is inferior
he knows it to be a mind that is inferior.

Of the mind that is superior
he knows it to be a mind that is superior.

Of the mind that is uncontrolled
he knows it to be a mind that is uncontrolled.

Of the mind that is controlled
he knows it to be a mind that is controlled.

Of the mind that is in bondage
he knows it to be a mind that is in bondage:

Of the mind that is released
he knows it to be a mind that is released.

■

When a monk has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
he calls to mind his former births in divers ways thus:

One birth,
two births,
three births,
four births,
five births,
even ten births,
twenty births,
thirty births,
forty births,
fifty births;
even a hundred births,
a thousand births,
a hundred thousand births.

He calls to mind divers aeons of involution
divers aeons of evolution, diverse aeons of involution and evolution.

He knows:

'Such was I by name,
such was I by clan,
by caste.

Thus was I nourished,
thus did I undergo pleasure and pain,
such was my span of life.'

He knows:

'Thence I deceased
and rose up so and so.

There I dwelt,
of such and such a name,
of such a clan,
of such a caste,
so nourished;
such and such pleasure and pain did I undergo,
such my span of life.

Thence deceased
I rose up in the present life.'

That is how
in fact and detail
he calls to mind in divers ways
his former births.

■

When a monk has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
with the deva-sight,
purified and surpassing that of man,
he beholds beings:

as they decease and rise up (elsewhere)
he knows them,
both mean and exalted,
of features fair and foul,
gone to weal
or gone to woe,
according to their deeds, thus:

'Alas! these good folk,
given to the practice of evil deeds,
of evil words,
of evil thoughts,
scoffing at the noble ones,
of perverted views
and reaping the fruit of their perverted views, -
these folk,
on the dissolution of body,
after death arose again in the Waste,
the Downfall
and the Constant Round.

Ah! and these good folk,
given to the practice of good deeds,
of good words,
of good thoughts,
not scoffing at the noble ones,
of sound views
and reaping the fruits of their sound views, -
these beings,
on the dissolution of body,
after death arose again in the Happy Way,
the Heaven World.'

Thus with deva-sight,
purified and surpassing that of man,
does he behold beings

as they decease and rise up (elsewhere):
he knows them,
both mean and exalted,
of features fair and foul,
gone to weal
or gone to woe
according to their deeds.

■

When a monk has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
by the destruction of the āsavas,
in this very life,
by his own unaided powers
he attains the heart's release,
the release by insight,
that is free from the āsavas,
realizes it
and dwells therein."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
2. Pāsāda-Kampana Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

2. The Shaking of the Terraced House

Sutta 13

Chando Suttaṃ

Desire

---

[239]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, if, emphasizing[1] desire,
a monk lays hold of concentration,
lays hold of one-pointedness of mind,
this act is called
'desire-concentration.'

■

He generates desire for the non-arising of ill,
unprofitable states
that have not yet arisen:
he makes an effort,
sets going energy,
he lays hold of
and exerts his mind
(to this end).

He generates desire for the abandomng of ill,
unprofitable states
that have arisen:
he makes an effort,
sets going energy,
he lays hold of
and exerts his mind
(to this end).

He generates desire for the arising of profitable states not yet arisen:
he makes an effort,
sets going energy,
he lays hold of
and exerts his mind
(to this end).

He generates desire for the establishing,
for the non-confusion,
for the more-becoming,

for the increase,
cultivation
and fulfilment
of profitable states that have arisen:
he makes an effort,
sets going energy,
he lays hold of
and exerts his mind
(to this end).

These, monks, are called
'the co-factors of struggling.'

■

Thus, monks, this desire and this desire-concentration and these co-factors of struggle
are called (by one name)
'the basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.'

§

Monks, if, emphasizing energy,
a monk lays hold of concentration,
lays hold of one-pointedness of mind,
this act is called
'energy-concentration.'

■

He generates desire for the non-arising of ill,
unprofitable states
that have not yet arisen:
he makes an effort,
sets going energy,
he lays hold of
and exerts his mind
(to this end).

He generates desire for the abandomng of ill,
unprofitable states
that have arisen:
he makes an effort,
sets going energy,
he lays hold of
and exerts his mind
(to this end).

He generates desire for the arising of profitable states not yet arisen:
he makes an effort,
sets going energy,
he lays hold of
and exerts his mind
(to this end).

He generates desire for the establishing,
for the non-confusion,
for the more-becoming,
for the increase,
cultivation
and fulfilment
of profitable states that have arisen:
he makes an effort,
sets going energy,
he lays hold of

and exerts his mind
(to this end).

These, monks, are called
'the co-factors of struggling.'

■

[240] Thus, monks, this energy and this energy-concentration and these co-factors of struggle
are called (by one name)
'the basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.'

§

Monks, if, emphasizing thought,
a monk lays hold of concentration,
lays hold of one-pointedness of mind,
this act is called
'thought-concentration.'

■

He generates desire for the non-arising of ill,
unprofitable states
that have not yet arisen:
he makes an effort,
sets going energy,
he lays hold of

and exerts his mind
(to this end).

He generates desire for the abandomng of ill,
unprofitable states
that have arisen:
he makes an effort,
sets going energy,
he lays hold of
and exerts his mind
(to this end).

He generates desire for the arising of profitable states not yet arisen:
he makes an effort,
sets going energy,
he lays hold of
and exerts his mind
(to this end).

He generates desire for the establishing,
for the non-confusion,
for the more-becoming,
for the increase,
cultivation
and fulfilment
of profitable states that have arisen:
he makes an effort,
sets going energy,
he lays hold of
and exerts his mind
(to this end).

These, monks, are called
'the co-factors of struggling.'

■

Thus, monks, this (work of) thought and this thought-concentration and these co-factors of struggle
are called (by one name)
'the basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.'

§

Monks, if, emphasizing investigation,
a monk lays hold of concentration,
lays hold of one-pointedness of mind,
this act is called
'investigation-concentration.'

■

He generates desire for the non-arising of ill,
unprofitable states
that have not yet arisen:
he makes an effort,
sets going energy,
he lays hold of
and exerts his mind
(to this end).

He generates desire for the abandomng of ill,
unprofitable states
that have arisen:
he makes an effort,
sets going energy,

he lays hold of
and exerts his mind
(to this end).

He generates desire for the arising of profitable states not yet arisen:
he makes an effort,
sets going energy,
he lays hold of
and exerts his mind
(to this end).

He generates desire for the establishing,
for the non-confusion,
for the more-becoming,
for the increase,
cultivation
and fulfilment
of profitable states that have arisen:
he makes an effort,
sets going energy,
he lays hold of
and exerts his mind
(to this end).

These, monks, are called
'the co-factors of struggling.'

■

Thus, monks, this (work of) investigation and this investiga- [241] tion-concentration and these co-factors of struggle
are called (by one name)
'the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,

together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.'"

---

[1] Nissāya cf. Vibh. 216, quoted by Comy. = adhipatiṇ katvā; VM. ii, 385.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
2. Pāsāda-Kampana Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

2. The Shaking of the Terraced House

Sutta 14

Moggallāna Suttaṃ

Moggallāna[1]

---

[241]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī
in East Park,
at the terraced house of Migāra's mother.

Now on that occasion a number of monks were lodging on the ground-floor of the terraced house of Migāra's mother, and they were frivolous,[2] empty-headed,[3]

busybodies,[4]
of harsh speech,[5]
loose in talk,[6]
lacking concentration,[7]
unsteady,
not composed,
of flighty minds,
with senses uncontrolled.[8]

So the Exalted One called to the venerable Moggallāna the Great, saying:

"Moggallāna,
methinks our fellows in the holy life who are lodging on the ground-floor of this terraced house are frivolous,
empty-headed,
busybodies,
of harsh speech,
loose in talk,
lacking concentration,
unsteady,
not composed,
of flighty minds,
with senses uncontrolled.

Go you, Moggallāna, and give those monks a good stirring!"

"I will, lord,"
replied the venerable Moggallāna to the Exalted One;
and he contrived such a feat of magic powder[9] that with his great toe he shook and rattled

and made the terraced house of Migāra's mother to quake
and quake again.

Thereat those monks were panic-stricken.

Their hair stood on end.

They stood aside exclaiming:

"A wonder indeed!

A miracle indeed!

This place is sheltered from the wind.

[242] This terraced house of Migāra's mother stands on deep-set foundations,[10]
it is deep-dug,
unshakable,
unquakable.

Yet it shook,
it rattled,
it quaked
and quaked again!"

Then the Exalted One went towards those monks, and when he reached them said:

"What is it, monks?

Why are ye panic-stricken, with hair on end?

Why do ye stand thus aside?"

"A wonder, lord, indeed!

A miracle, lord, indeed!

This place is sheltered from the wind.

This terraced house of Migāra's mother stands on deep-set foundations,
it is deep-dug,
unshakable,
unquakable.

Yet it shook,
it rattled,
it quaked
and quaked again!"

"Yes, monks.

This terraced house of Migāra's mother was shaken,
it was rattled,
it quaked and quaked again.

It was done by the monk Moggallāna, with his big toe,
because he wished to give you a good stirring.

Now, monks, what think ye?

By cultivating
and making much
of what conditions
is the monk Moggallāna
of such mighty magic power and majesty?"

"For us, lord, things have their root in the Exalted One (they have the Exalted One for their guide and their resort.

Well indeed if the meaning of these words should show itself in the Exalted One.

Hearing the meaning of them from the Exalted One the monks will bear it in mind)."

"Then do ye listen, monks.

It is through cultivating
and making much
of four bases of psychic power
that the monk Moggallāna is of such mighty magic power and majesty.

What are the four?

Herein (monks) the monk Moggallāna cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
(with this intent):

'Thus shall not my desire
be over-sluggish
nor overstrained.

It shall not be inwardly cramped
nor outwardly diffuse.'

So he abides fully conscious
of what is behind and what is in front.

As (he is conscious of what is) in front, so behind:
as behind, so in front:
as below, so above:
as above, so below:
as by day, so by night:
as by night, so by day.

Thus with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

■

The monk Moggallāna cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
(with this intent):

'Thus shall not my energy
be over-sluggish
nor yet overstrained.

It shall not be inwardly cramped
nor outwardly diffuse. '

So he abides fully conscious
of what is behind and what is in front.

As (he is conscious of what is) in front, so behind:
as behind, so in front:
as below, so above:
as above, so below:
as by day, so by night:
as by night, so by day.

Thus with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

■

The monk Moggallāna cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
(with this intent):

'Thus shall not my thought
be over-sluggish
nor yet overstrained.

It shall not be inwardly cramped
nor outwardly diffuse.'

So he abides fully conscious
of what is behind and what is in front.

As (he is conscious of what is) in front, so behind:
as behind, so in front:
as below, so above:
as above, so below:
as by day, so by night:
as by night, so by day.

Thus with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

■

The monk Moggallāna cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,

together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
(with this intent):

'Thus shall not my thought
be over-sluggish
nor yet overstrained.

It shall not be inwardly cramped
nor outwardly diffuse.'

So he abides fully conscious
of what is behind and what is in front.

As he is conscious of [243] what is in front, so behind:
as behind, so in front:
as below, so above:
as above, so below:
as by day, so by night:
as by night, so by day.

Thus with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

§

Monks, it is by cultivating
and making much of
these four bases of psychic power that the monk Moggallāna enjoys manifold forms of psychic power, thus: -

From being one he becomes many,
from being many he becomes one.

Manifest or invisible
he goes unhindered through a wall,
through a rampart,
through a mountain,
as if it were through air.

He plunges into the earth
and shoots up again
as if in water.

He walks upon the water
without parting it,
as if on solid ground.

He travels sitting cross-legged through the air,
like a bird upon the wing.

Even this moon and sun,
though they be of such mighty power and majesty,
he handles and strokes them with his hand.

Even as far as the Brahma World
he has power with his body.

■

When the monk Moggallāna has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
with deva-power of hearing,
purified and surpassing that of man,
he hears sounds
both of devas and of humans, whether far or near.

■

When the monk Moggallāna has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
he knows the minds of other beings,
of other persons,
with his own mind grasping them.

Of the mind that is lustful
he knows it to lustful.

Of the mind that is free from lust
he knows it to be a mind that is free from lust.

Of the mind that is full of hate
he knows it to be a mind that is full of hate.

Of the mind that is free from hate
he knows it to be a mind that is free from hate.

Of the mind that is deluded
he knows it to be a mind that is deluded.

Of the mind that is free from delusion
he knows it to be a mind that is free.

Of the mind that is cramped
he knows it to be a mind that is cramped.

Of the mind that is diffuse
he knows it to be a mind that is diffuse.

Of the mind that is lofty
he knows it to be a mind that is lofty,

Of the mind that is mean
he knows it to be a mind that is mean.

Of the mind which is inferior
he knows it to be a mind that is inferior.

Of the mind that is superior
he knows it to be a mind that is superior.

Of the mind that is uncontrolled
he knows it to be a mind that is uncontrolled.

Of the mind that is controlled
he knows it to be a mind that is controlled.

Of the mind that is in bondage
he knows it to be a mind that is in bondage:

Of the mind that is released
he knows it to be a mind that is released.

■

When the monk Moggallāna has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
he calls to mind his former births in divers ways thus:

One birth,
two births,
three births,
four births,
five births,
even ten births,
twenty births,
thirty births,
forty births,

fifty births;
even a hundred births,
a thousand births,
a hundred thousand births.

He calls to mind divers aeons of involution
divers aeons of evolution, diverse aeons of involution and evolution.

He knows:

'Such was I by name,
such was I by clan,
by caste.

Thus was I nourished,
thus did I undergo pleasure and pain,
such was my span of life.'

He knows:

'Thence I deceased
and rose up so and so.

There I dwelt,
of such and such a name,
of such a clan,
of such a caste,
so nourished;
such and such pleasure and pain did I undergo,
such my span of life.

Thence deceased
I rose up in the present life.'

That is how
in fact and detail

he calls to mind in divers ways
his former births.

■

When the monk Moggallāna has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
with the deva-sight,
purified and surpassing that of man,
he beholds beings:
as they decease and rise up (elsewhere)
he knows them,
both mean and exalted,
of features fair and foul,
gone to weal
or gone to woe,
according to their deeds, thus:

'Alas! these good folk,
given to the practice of evil deeds,
of evil words,
of evil thoughts,
scoffing at the noble ones,
of perverted views
and reaping the fruit of their perverted views, -
these folk,
on the dissolution of body,
after death arose again in the Waste,
the Downfall
and the Constant Round.

Ah! and these good folk,
given to the practice of good deeds,
of good words,
of good thoughts,

not scoffing at the noble ones,
of sound views
and reaping the fruits of their sound views, -
these beings,
on the dissolution of body,
after death arose again in the Happy Way,
the Heaven World.'

Thus with deva-sight,
purified and surpassing that of man,
does he behold beings
as they decease and rise up (elsewhere):
he knows them,
both mean and exalted,
of features fair and foul,
gone to weal
or gone to woe
according to their deeds.

■

Moreover, monks, it is by cultivating
and making much of
these four bases of psychic power
that the monk Moggallāna,
by the destruction of the āsavas,
in this very life,
by his own unaided powers
he attains the heart's release,
the release by insight,
that is free from the āsavas,
realizes it
and dwells therein."

[1] This incident gives the name to the whole chapter, and is told with additional detail at SnA. i, 336-9.

[2] For these epithets see M. i, 32 (MA. 152); K.S. i, 84; PuggA. 217. Uddhatā =viphandamāna-cittā. Comy. UdA. 238, avūpasanta-citta.

[3] Unnaḷā = uggata-naḷā, tuccha-mānā; UdA. 'like a hollow empty reed.'

[4] Capalā = 'busied with bowl and robe and finery UdA. bahukatā.

[5] Mukharā = mukha-kharā; UdA. pharusa-vācanāya.

[6] Vikiṇṇa-vācā = asaṇyata-vacana-palapino; UdA. 'given to animal-talk'; SnA. loc. cit. gives specimens of their supposed conversation.

[7] Muṭṭha-ssatino = natthā sati etesaṇ.

[8] Asampajānā, asamāhitā, vibbhanta-cittā, pālatindriyā.

[9] Comy. 'by concentrating on the element-of-water-device.'

[10] Text gambhīra-namo, misprint for -nemo (correct in next §), infra, text, 444. Comy. says g. āvāto, g. bhūmi. (Cf. Lucretius, i, 77, atque alte terminus haerens.)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
2. Pāsāda-Kampana Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

2. The Shaking of the Terraced House

Sutta 15

Brāhmaṇa Suttaṃ

The Brahmin

---

[243]

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the venerable Ānanda was staying at Kosambī in Ghosita Park.

Now the brahmin Uṇṇābha[1] came to visit the venerable Ānanda,
and on coming to him
greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and courtesies
sat down at one side.

So seated
the brahmin Uṇṇābha said this to the venerable Ānanda:

"What is it, master Ānanda, for which the holy life is lived under Gotama the recluse?"

■

"For the sake of abandoning desire,[2] brahmin, the holy life is lived under the Exalted One."

■

"But is there any way,
is there any practice, master Ānanda, for abandoning this desire?"

[244] "There is a way, brahmin, there is a practice
for abandoning this desire."

"Pray, master Ānanda, what is that way
and that practice?"

■

"Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

This, brahmin, is the way,
this is the practice
for the abandoning of this sensual desire."

■

"If that be so, master Ānanda, it were a task without end, not one with an end.[3]

That he should get rid of one desire by means of another desire is an impossible thing."

■

"Then, brahmin, I will just question you in this matter.

Do you answer as you think fit.

Now what think you, brahmin?

Was there not previously desire in you (urging you) thus:

'I will go to the Park'?

When you got to the Park, was not that appropriate[4] desire abated?"

"Yes, indeed it was, master."

"Was there not previously energy in you (urging you) thus:

'I will go to the Park'?

When you got there,
was not that appropriate energy abated?"

"Yes indeed, master."

"Was there not previously work of thought in you (urging you) thus:

'I will go to the Park'?

When you got there,
was not that appropriate work of thought abated?"

"Yes indeed, master."

"Then again, was there not previously in you consideration (which urged you) thus:

'I will go to the Park'?

When you got to the Park,
was not that appropriate consideration abated?"

[245] "Yes indeed, master."

"Very well then, brahmin.

That monk who is Arahant, one in whom the āsavas are destroyed,
who has lived the life,
done the task,
lifted the burden,
who is a winner of his own welfare, who has outworn the fetters of rebirth, one who is released by perfect insight, - that desire which he had previously to attain Arahantship,
now that Arahantship is won,
that appropriate desire is abated.

That energy which was in him previously for winning Arahantship,
now that Arahantship is won,
that appropriate energy is abated.

That work of thought for winning Arahantship which he had before,
now that Arahantship is won,
that appropriate work of thought is abated.

That investigation
for winning Arahantship which he had before, that appropriate investigation is abated,

now that Arahantship is won.

Now as to that,
what think you, brahmin?

Since this is so,
is it a task that has an end, or is it endless?"

"Sure enough, master Ānanda, since this is so,
it is a task that has an end.

It is not an endless task.

Excellent, master Ānanda!

Excellent, master Ānanda!

Just as if one should lift up the fallen, discover the hidden,
point out the way to the bewildered, show a light in the gloom, saying:

'Now they that have eyes to see can see objects,' -

even so in divers ways has the Exalted One expounded the truth.

I, even I, lord,
do go for refuge to the Exalted One,
to the Norm
and to the Order of monks.

Let the worthy Ānanda accept me as a follower, as one who from this time forth even to life's end hath gone to him for refuge."

---

[1] Cf. text, 217.

[2] Chanda, here in the sense of taṇhā, not of 'will,' which occurs alongside of it. Comy. idha taṇhā-chandassa pahān'atthaṇ. Mrs. Rhys Davids (Buddhism, p. 222-4) discusses it and quotes this passage (cf. Compendium, 244 n.): 'Desire belongs to our psychology of feeling + will, as a term of *un*moral import, as such. Hence it seems to me most important to retain it for chanda ... which is only immoral as kāma-cchanda, or when substituted for taṇhā' (as here).

[3] Here santaka = sa-antaka, 'con-fined,' limited, opposite to an-antaka. I read with Sinh. MSS. anantakaṇ no santakaṇ (contrary to the order of the text), for the brahmin changes his views, is 'converted' at the end of the Sutta, where the order of words may stand. Comy. is silent here.

[4] Tajjo.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
2. Pāsāda-Kampana Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

2. The Shaking of the Terraced House

Sutta 16

Paṭhama Samaṇa-Brāhmaṇā or Mahiddhi Suttaṃ

Recluses and Brahmins (a) or Mighty Magic Power

---

[245]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, whatsoever recluses or brahmins
in time past
were of mighty psychic power and majesty, all of them were so
by the fact of cultivating
and making much of
four bases of psychic power.

Whatsoever recluses or brahmins
in future time
shall be of mighty psychic power and majesty, all of them will be so
by the fact of cultivating
and making much of
four bases of psychic power.

Whatsoever recluses or brahmins
are now
of mighty psychic power and majesty, all of them are so
by the fact of cultivating
and making much of four bases of psychic power.

■

What are the four?

[246] "Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

■

"Monks, whatsoever recluses or brahmins
in time past
were of mighty psychic power and majesty,
all of them were so
by the fact of cultivating
and making much of
these four bases of psychic power.

Whatsoever recluses or brahmins
in future time
shall be of mighty psychic power and majesty,

all of them will be so
by the fact of cultivating
and making much of
these four bases of psychic power.

Whatsoever recluses or brahmins
are now
of mighty psychic power and majesty,
all of them are so
by the fact of cultivating
and making much of
these four bases of psychic power.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
2. Pāsāda-Kampana Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

2. The Shaking of the Terraced House

Sutta 17

Dutiya Samaṇa-Brāhmaṇā or Vidhā or Iddhi-Vidhā Suttaṃ

Recluses and Brahmins (b)
or Manifold Forms

---

[246]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, whatsoever recluses or brahmins have
in time past
enjoyed in divers ways
manifold forms of psychic power,
thus:

From being one, they were many:
from being many,
they were one:
manifest or invisible
they went unhindered through a wall,
through a rampart,
through a mountain,
as if it were through the air:
they plunged into the earth
and shot up again
as if in water:
they walked upon the water
without parting it,
as if on solid ground:
they travelled sitting cross-legged through the air,
like a bird upon the wing:
even this moon and sun,
though of such mighty magic power and majesty,
they handled and stroked with the hand:
even as far as the Brahma World
they had power with this body: -
all of these did so
by the fact of cultivating
and making much of four bases of psychic power.

■

Monks, whatsoever recluses or brahmins
in future times
shall enjoy in divers ways manifold forms of psychic power,
thus:

From being one, they were many:
from being many,
they were one:
manifest or invisible
they went unhindered through a wall,
through a rampart,
through a mountain,
as if it were through the air:
they plunged into the earth
and shot up again
as if in water:
they walked upon the water
without parting it,
as if on solid ground:
they travelled sitting cross-legged through the air,
like a bird upon the wing:
even this moon and sun,
though of such mighty magic power and majesty,
they handled and stroked with the hand:
even as far as the Brahma World
they had power with this body: -
all of these did so
by the fact of cultivating
and making much of four bases of psychic power.

■

Monks, whatsoever recluses or brahmins
do now
enjoy in divers ways
manifold forms of psychic power,
thus:

From being one, they were many:
from being many,
they were one:
manifest or invisible
they went unhindered through a wall,
through a rampart,
through a mountain,
as if it were through the air:
they plunged into the earth
and shot up again
as if in water:
they walked upon the water
without parting it,
as if on solid ground:
they travelled sitting cross-legged through the air,
like a bird upon the wing:
even this moon and sun,
though of such mighty magic power and majesty,
they handled and stroked with the hand:
even as far as the Brahma World
they had power with this body: -
all of these did so
by the fact of cultivating
and making much of four bases of psychic power.

§

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of [247]concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

§

Monks, whatsoever recluses or brahmins have
in time past
enjoyed in divers ways
manifold forms of psychic power,
thus:
From being one, they were many:
from being many,
they were one:
manifest or invisible
they went unhindered through a wall,
through a rampart,
through a mountain,
as if it were through the air:
they plunged into the earth
and shot up again
as if in water:
they walked upon the water
without parting it,
as if on solid ground:
they travelled sitting cross-legged through the air,
like a bird upon the wing:
even this moon and sun,
though of such mighty magic power and majesty,
they handled and stroked with the hand:
even as far as the Brahma World
they had power with this body: -
all of these did so
by the fact of cultivating
and making much of
these four bases of psychic power.

■

Monks, whatsoever recluses or brahmins
in future times
shall enjoy in divers ways

manifold forms of psychic power,
thus:
From being one, they were many:
from being many,
they were one:
manifest or invisible
they went unhindered through a wall,
through a rampart,
through a mountain,
as if it were through the air:
they plunged into the earth
and shot up again
as if in water:
they walked upon the water
without parting it,
as if on solid ground:
they travelled sitting cross-legged through the air,
like a bird upon the wing:
even this moon and sun,
though of such mighty magic power and majesty,
they handled and stroked with the hand:
even as far as the Brahma World
they had power with this body: -
all of these did so
by the fact of cultivating
and making much of
these four bases of psychic power.

■

Monks, whatsoever recluses or brahmins
do now
enjoy in divers ways
manifold forms of psychic power,
thus:
From being one, they were many:

from being many,
they were one:
manifest or invisible
they went unhindered through a wall,
through a rampart,
through a mountain,
as if it were through the air:
they plunged into the earth
and shot up again
as if in water:
they walked upon the water
without parting it,
as if on solid ground:
they travelled sitting cross-legged through the air,
like a bird upon the wing:
even this moon and sun,
though of such mighty magic power and majesty,
they handled and stroked with the hand:
even as far as the Brahma World
they had power with this body: -
all of these did so
by the fact of cultivating
and making much of
these four bases of psychic power."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
2. Pāsāda-Kampana Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

2. The Shaking of the Terraced House

Sutta 18

Bhikkhu Suttaṃ

Monk

---

[247]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, it is by cultivating
and making much of
four bases of psychic power
that a monk,
by the destruction of the āsavas,
realizes even in this very life
by his own unaided powers
the heart's release,
the release by insight
which is free from the āsavas,
and having won it
dwells therein.

§

What are the four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are

thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

§

Monks, it is by cultivating
and making much of
these four bases of psychic power
that a monk,
by the destruction of the āsavas,
realizes even in this very life
by his own unaided powers
the heart's release,
the release by insight
which is free from the āsavas,
and having won it
dwells therein."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
2. Pāsāda-Kampana Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

2. The Shaking of the Terraced House

Sutta 19

Desanā or Bhāvanā Suttaṃ

Teaching or Cultivation

---

[247]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, I will teach you both psychic power and the basis of psychic power and the practice that leads to the cultivation of psychic power.

Do ye listen to it.

§

And what, monks, is psychic power?

Herein a monk enjoys
in divers ways
manifold forms of psychic power such as:

From being one he becomes many,
from being many he becomes one.

Manifest or invisible
he goes unhindered through a wall,
through a rampart,
through a mountain,
as if it were through air.

He plunges into the earth
and shoots up again
as if in water.

He walks upon the water
without parting it,
as if on solid ground.

He travels sitting cross-legged through the air,
like a bird upon the wing.

Even this moon and sun,
though they be of such mighty power and majesty,
he handles and strokes them with his hand.

Even as far as the Brahma World
he has power with his body.

This, monks, is called
'psychic power.'

§

And what, monks, is the basis of psychic power?[1]

That path, that practice which conduces to the laying hold [248] of,
to the winning of
psychic power, -
that, monks, is called
'the basis of psychic power.'

§

And of what sort, monks,
is the cultivation of psychic power?

"Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

This, monks, is called
'the cultivation of the bases of psychic power.'

§

And of what sort, monks,
is the practice
that leads to the cultivation of psychic power?

It is just this Ariyan eightfold way, to wit:

Right view
right aim,
right speech,
right action,
right living,
right effort,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

This, monks, is the practice that leads to the cultivation of the bases of psychic power."

---

[1] Comy. Abhiññā-pādakaṇ catuttha-j-jhānaṇ.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
2. Pāsāda-Kampana Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

2. The Shaking of the Terraced House

Sutta 20

Vibhaṇga Suttaṃ

Analysis

---

[248]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

I.

"Monks, these four bases of psychic power,
if cultivated
and made much of,
are of great fruit
and great profit.

§

And how cultivated, monks, are they of great fruit and profit?

Herein a monk cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
(with this intent):

'Thus shall not my desire
be over-sluggish
nor overstrained.

It shall not be inwardly cramped
nor outwardly diffuse.'

So he abides fully conscious
of what is behind and what is in front.

As (he is conscious of what is) in front, so behind:
as behind, so in front:
as below, so above:
as above, so below:

as by day, so by night:
as by night, so by day.

Thus with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

■

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
(with this intent):

'Thus shall not my energy
be over-sluggish
nor yet overstrained.

It shall not be inwardly cramped
nor outwardly diffuse.'

So he abides fully conscious
of what is behind and what is in front.

As (he is conscious of what is) in front, so behind:
as behind, so in front:
as below, so above:
as above, so below:
as by day, so by night:
as by night, so by day.

Thus with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

■

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
(with this intent):

'Thus shall not my thought
be over-sluggish
nor yet overstrained.

It shall not be inwardly cramped
nor outwardly diffuse.'

So he abides fully conscious
of what is behind and what is in front.

As (he is conscious of what is) in front, so behind:
as behind, so in front:
as below, so above:
as above, so below:
as by day, so by night:
as by night, so by day.

Thus with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

■

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
(with this intent):

'Thus shall not my [249] thought
be over-sluggish

nor yet overstrained.

It shall not be inwardly cramped
nor outwardly diffuse.'

So he abides fully conscious
of what is behind and what is in front.

As (he is conscious of what is) in front, so behind:
as behind, so in front:
as below, so above:
as above, so below:
as by day, so by night:
as by night, so by day.

Thus with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

II[1]

And of what sort, monks,
is desire that is over-sluggish?

Desire which is associated with indolence,[2] which is joined with indolence,
is called
'an over-sluggish desire.'

And of what sort, monks,
is desire that is overstrained?

That desire which is associated with excitement,[3] which is joined with excitement,
is called
'an overstrained desire.'

And of what sort, monks,
is desire that is inwardly cramped?

That desire which is associated with sloth and torpor, which is joined with sloth and torpor,
is called
'an inwardly cramped desire.'

And of what sort, monks,
is desire that is outwardly diffuse?

Desire which, outwardly concerned with the five sensual delights, is scattered abroad
and dissipated,
is called
'outwardly diffuse.'

And how, monks, does a monk dwell conscious of what is behind and before,
thus:

As before, so behind:
as behind, so before?

Herein a monk's consciousness of what is behind
and what is before
is well in hand,
well attended to,
well considered,
well penetrated by insight.

That is how a monk dwells
conscious of what is behind and before,
thus:

As before, so behind:
as behind, so before.

And how does a monk dwell
'as below, so above:
as above, so below'?

Herein a monk surveys this very body[4] upwards from the [250] soles of the feet, downwards from the top of the hair of his head,
as something enclosed by skin
and full of manifold impurities.

He thus considers:

There are in this body
hair of the head,
hair of the body,
nails,
skin,
teeth,
flesh,
nerves,
bones,
marrow,
kidneys,
heart,
liver,
pleura,
spleen,
lungs,
intestines,
mesentery,
stomach,
fæces,
bile,

phlegm,
matter,
blood,
sweat,
lymph,
fat,
tears,
lubricant,
saliva,
mucus,
oil,
urine.

That, monks, is how a monk dwells
'as below, so above:
as above, so below.'

And how, monks, does a monk dwell
'as by day, so by night:
as by night, so by day'?

Herein a monk,
in cultivating the basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle, employs by day
the same signs,
characteristics
and marks
as he does
in cultivating the basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
by night,

and in cultivating the basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle, employs by night
the same signs,
characteristics
and marks
as he does
in cultivating the basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle, by day.

■

And how, monks, with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
does a monk cultivate his mind to brilliancy?

Herein a monk's consciousness of light[5]
is well grasped,
his consciousness of daylight
is well sustained.

That is how he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

III.

And of what sort, monks,
is energy that is over-sluggish?

Energy which is associated with indolence, which is joined with indolence,

is called
'an over-sluggish energy.'

And of what sort, monks,
is energy that is overstrained?

That energy which is associated with excitement, which is joined with excitement,
is called
'an overstrained energy.'

And of what sort, monks,
is energy that is inwardly cramped?

That energy which is associated with sloth and torpor, which is joined with sloth and torpor,
is called
'an inwardly cramped energy.'

And of what sort, monks,
is energy that is outwardly diffuse?

Energy which, outwardly concerned with the five sensual delights,
is scattered abroad
and dissipated,
is called
'outwardly diffuse.'

And how, monks, does a monk dwell conscious of what is behind and before,
thus:

As before, so behind:
as behind, so before?

Herein a monk's consciousness of what is behind
and what is before
is well in hand,
well attended to,
well considered,
well penetrated by insight.

That is how a monk dwells
conscious of what is behind and before,
thus:

As before, so behind:
as behind, so before.

And how does a monk dwell
'as below, so above:
as above, so below'?

Herein a monk surveys this very body upwards from the soles of the feet, downwards from the top of the hair of his head,
as something enclosed by skin
and full of manifold impurities.

He thus considers:

There are in this body
hair of the head,
hair of the body,
nails,
skin,
teeth,
flesh,
nerves,
bones,
marrow,
kidneys,

heart,
liver,
pleura,
spleen,
lungs,
intestines,
mesentery,
stomach,
fæces,
bile,
phlegm,
matter,
blood,
sweat,
lymph,
fat,
tears,
lubricant,
saliva,
mucus,
oil,
urine.

That, monks, is how a monk dwells
'as below, so above:
as above, so below.'

And how, monks, does a monk dwell
'as by day, so by night:
as by night, so by day'?

Herein a monk,
in cultivating the basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,

employs by day
the same signs,
characteristics
and marks
as he does
in cultivating the basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
by night,
and in cultivating the basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
employs by night
the same signs,
characteristics
and marks
as he does
in cultivating the basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
by day.

■

And how, monks, with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
does a monk cultivate his mind to brilliancy?

Herein a monk's consciousness of light
is well grasped,
his consciousness of daylight
is well sustained.

That is how he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

IV

And of what sort, monks,
is thought that is over-sluggish?

Thought which is associated with indolence, which is joined with indolence,
is called
'an over-sluggish thought.'

And of what sort, monks,
is thought that is overstrained?

That thought which is associated with excitement, which is joined with excitement,
is called
'an overstrained thought.'

And of what sort, monks,
is thought that is inwardly cramped?

That thought which is associated with sloth and torpor, which is joined with sloth and torpor,
is called
'an inwardly cramped thought.'

And of what sort, monks,
is thought that is outwardly diffuse?

Thought which, outwardly concerned with the five sensual delights,
is scattered abroad
and dissipated,

is called
'outwardly diffuse.'

And how, monks, does a monk dwell conscious of what is behind and before,
thus:

As before, so behind:
as behind, so before?

Herein a monk's consciousness of what is behind
and what is before
is well in hand,
well attended to,
well considered,
well penetrated by insight.

That is how a monk dwells
conscious of what is behind and before,
thus:

As before, so behind:
as behind, so before.

And how does a monk dwell
'as below, so above:
as above, so below'?

Herein a monk surveys this very body upwards from the soles of the feet, downwards from the top of the hair of his head,
as something enclosed by skin
and full of manifold impurities.

He thus considers:

There are in this body
hair of the head,
hair of the body,
nails,
skin,
teeth,
flesh,
nerves,
bones,
marrow,
kidneys,
heart,
liver,
pleura,
spleen,
lungs,
intestines,
mesentery,
stomach,
fæces,
bile,
phlegm,
matter,
blood,
sweat,
lymph,
fat,
tears,
lubricant,
saliva,
mucus,
oil,
urine.

That, monks, is how a monk dwells
'as below, so above:

as above, so below.'

And how, monks, does a monk dwell
'as by day, so by night:
as by night, so by day'?

Herein a monk,
in cultivating the basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
employs by day
the same signs,
characteristics
and marks
as he does
in cultivating the basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
by night,
and in cultivating the basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
employs by night
the same signs,
characteristics
and marks
as he does
in cultivating the basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
by day.

■

And how, monks, with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
does a monk cultivate his mind to brilliancy?

Herein a monk's consciousness of light
is well grasped,
his consciousness of daylight
is well sustained.

That is how he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

[251]

V

And of what sort, monks,
is investigation that is over-sluggish?

Investigation which is associated with indolence, which is joined with indolence,
is called
'an over-sluggish investigation.'

And of what sort, monks,
is investigation that is overstrained?

That investigation which is associated with excitement, which is joined with excitement,
is called
'an overstrained investigation.'

And of what sort, monks,
is investigation that is inwardly cramped?

That investigation which is associated with sloth and torpor, which is joined with sloth and torpor,
is called
'an inwardly cramped investigation.'

And of what sort, monks,
is investigation that is outwardly diffuse?

Investigation which, outwardly concerned with the five sensual delights,
is scattered abroad
and dissipated,
is called
'outwardly diffuse.'

And how, monks, does a monk dwell conscious of what is behind and before,
thus:

As before, so behind:
as behind, so before?

Herein a monk's consciousness of what is behind
and what is before
is well in hand,
well attended to,
well considered,
well penetrated by insight.

That is how a monk dwells
conscious of what is behind and before,
thus:

As before, so behind:
as behind, so before.

And how does a monk dwell
'as below, so above:
as above, so below'?

Herein a monk surveys this very body upwards from the soles of the feet, downwards from the top of the hair of his head,
as something enclosed by skin
and full of manifold impurities.

He thus considers:

There are in this body
hair of the head,
hair of the body,
nails,
skin,
teeth,
flesh,
nerves,
bones,
marrow,
kidneys,
heart,
liver,
pleura,
spleen,
lungs,
intestines,
mesentery,
stomach,
fæces,
bile,
phlegm,
matter,
blood,

sweat,
lymph,
fat,
tears,
lubricant,
saliva,
mucus,
oil,
urine.

That, monks, is how a monk dwells
'as below, so above:
as above, so below.'

And how, monks, does a monk dwell
'as by day, so by night:
as by night, so by day'?

Herein a monk,
in cultivating the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
employs by day
the same signs,
characteristics
and marks
as he does
in cultivating the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
by night,
and in cultivating the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors

of concentration and struggle,
employs by night
the same signs,
characteristics
and marks
as he does
in cultivating the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
by day.

■

And how, monks, with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
does a monk cultivate his mind to brilliancy?

Herein a monk's consciousness of light
is well grasped,
his consciousness of daylight
is well sustained.

That is how he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

§

Thus cultivated, monks,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power
are of great fruit,
of great profit.

It is by means of the four bases of psychic power, thus cultivated
and thus made much of,
that a monk enjoys
in divers ways
manifold farms of magic power,
thus:

From being one he becomes many,
from being many he becomes one.

Manifest or invisible
he goes unhindered through a wall,
through a rampart,
through a mountain,
as if it were through air.

He plunges into the earth
and shoots up again
as if in water.

He walks upon the water
without parting it,
as if on solid ground.

He travels sitting cross-legged through the air,
like a bird upon the wing.

Even this moon and sun,
though they be of such mighty power and majesty,
he handles and strokes them with his hand.

Even as far as the Brahma World
he has power with his body.

■

When a monk has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
with deva-power of hearing,
purified and surpassing that of man,
he hears sounds
both of devas and of humans, whether far or near.

■

When a monk has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
he knows the minds of other beings,
of other persons,
with his own mind grasping them.

Of the mind that is lustful
he knows it to lustful.

Of the mind that is free from lust
he knows it to be a mind that is free from lust.

Of the mind that is full of hate
he knows it to be a mind that is full of hate.

Of the mind that is free from hate
he knows it to be a mind that is free from hate.

Of the mind that is deluded
he knows it to be a mind that is deluded.

Of the mind that is free from delusion
he knows it to be a mind that is free.

Of the mind that is cramped
he knows it to be a mind that is cramped.

Of the mind that is diffuse
he knows it to be a mind that is diffuse.

Of the mind that is lofty
he knows it to be a mind that is lofty,

Of the mind that is mean
he knows it to be a mind that is mean.

Of the mind which is inferior
he knows it to be a mind that is inferior.

Of the mind that is superior
he knows it to be a mind that is superior.

Of the mind that is uncontrolled
he knows it to be a mind that is uncontrolled.

Of the mind that is controlled
he knows it to be a mind that is controlled.

Of the mind that is in bondage
he knows it to be a mind that is in bondage:

Of the mind that is released
he knows it to be a mind that is released.

■

When a monk has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
he calls to mind his former births in divers ways thus:

One birth,
two births,
three births,
four births,
five births,
even ten births,
twenty births,
thirty births,
forty births,
fifty births;
even a hundred births,
a thousand births,
a hundred thousand births.

He calls to mind divers aeons of involution
divers aeons of evolution, diverse aeons of involution and evolution.

He knows:

'Such was I by name,
such was I by clan,
by caste.

Thus was I nourished,
thus did I undergo pleasure and pain,
such was my span of life.'

He knows:

'Thence I deceased
and rose up so and so.

There I dwelt,
of such and such a name,
of such a clan,
of such a caste,

so nourished;
such and such pleasure and pain did I undergo,
such my span of life.

Thence deceased
I rose up in the present life.'

That is how
in fact and detail
he calls to mind in divers ways
his former births.

■

When a monk has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
with the deva-sight,
purified and surpassing that of man,
he beholds beings:
as they decease and rise up (elsewhere)
he knows them,
both mean and exalted,
of features fair and foul,
gone to weal
or gone to woe,
according to their deeds, thus:

'Alas! these good folk,
given to the practice of evil deeds,
of evil words,
of evil thoughts,
scoffing at the noble ones,
of perverted views
and reaping the fruit of their perverted views, -
these folk,

on the dissolution of body,
after death arose again in the Waste,
the Downfall
and the Constant Round.

Ah! and these good folk,
given to the practice of good deeds,
of good words,
of good thoughts,
not scoffing at the noble ones,
of sound views
and reaping the fruits of their sound views, -
these beings,
on the dissolution of body,
after death arose again in the Happy Way,
the Heaven World.'

Thus with deva-sight,
purified and surpassing that of man,
does he behold beings
as they decease and rise up (elsewhere):
he knows them,
both mean and exalted,
of features fair and foul,
gone to weal
or gone to woe
according to their deeds.

■

Moreover, monks, it is by cultivating
and making much of
these four bases of psychic power
tha a monk,
by the destruction of the āsavas,
in this very life,

by his own unaided powers attains the heart's release,
the release by insight,
that is free from the āsavas,
realizes it
and dwells therein."

---

[1] Cf. text, 263.

[2] Kosajja.

[3] Uddhacca. Cf. Compend. 18.

[4] Cf. M. i, 57; S. iv, 111; Warren, Buddhism in Translations, 359.

[5] Cf. Dialog. iii, 215, 'acquisition of intuition and insight is when a brother attends to the sensation of light, sustains the perception of daylight, and attends to light no less in the night-time, and thus, with open and unmuffled consciousness, creates a radiant, luminous mind.' Comy. 'When in his concentration on a luminous image the reflex is the same to him, whether his eyes are open or shut, by day or by night,'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
3. Ayo-Guḷa Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

3. [Untitled]

Sutta 21

Magga Suttaṃ

The Way

---

[251]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Formerly, monks,
before my enlightenment with the perfect wisdom, when I was yet a Bodhisattva,
this occurred to me:

'What, I wonder, is the way, what the practice for the cultivation of the bases of psychic power?'

Then, monks, this occurred to me:

'That monk[1] cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
(with this intent):

"Thus shall not my desire
be over-sluggish
nor overstrained.

It shall not be inwardly cramped
nor outwardly diffuse."

So he abides fully conscious
of what is behind and what is in front.

As (he is conscious of what is) in front, so behind:
as behind, so in front:
as below, so above:
as above, so below:
as by day, so by night:
as by night, so by day.

Thus with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

■

[252] He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
(with this intent):

"Thus shall not my energy
be over-sluggish
nor yet overstrained.

It shall not be inwardly cramped
nor outwardly diffuse."

So he abides fully conscious
of what is behind and what is in front.

As (he is conscious of what is) in front, so behind:
as behind, so in front:
as below, so above:
as above, so below:
as by day, so by night:
as by night, so by day.

Thus with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

■

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
(with this intent):

"Thus shall not my thought
be over-sluggish
nor yet overstrained.

It shall not be inwardly cramped
nor outwardly diffuse."

So he abides fully conscious
of what is behind and what is in front.

As (he is conscious of what is) in front, so behind:
as behind, so in front:
as below, so above:
as above, so below:
as by day, so by night:
as by night, so by day.

Thus with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

■

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
(with this intent):

"Thus shall not my thought
be over-sluggish
nor yet overstrained.

It shall not be inwardly cramped
nor outwardly diffuse."

So he abides fully conscious
of what is behind and what is in front.

As (he is conscious of what is) in front, so behind:
as behind, so in front:
as below, so above:
as above, so below:
as by day, so by night:
as by night, so by day.

Thus with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

§

Thus cultivated, monks,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power
a monk enjoys
in divers ways
manifold farms of magic power,
thus:

From being one he becomes many,
from being many he becomes one.

Manifest or invisible
he goes unhindered through a wall,
through a rampart,
through a mountain,
as if it were through air.

He plunges into the earth
and shoots up again
as if in water.

He walks upon the water
without parting it,
as if on solid ground.

He travels sitting cross-legged through the air,
like a bird upon the wing.

Even this moon and sun,
though they be of such mighty power and majesty,
he handles and strokes them with his hand.

Even as far as the Brahma World
he has power with his body.

■

When a monk has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
with deva-power of hearing,
purified and surpassing that of man,
he hears sounds
both of devas and of humans, whether far or near.

■

When a monk has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
he knows the minds of other beings,
of other persons,
with his own mind grasping them.

Of the mind that is lustful
he knows it to lustful.

Of the mind that is free from lust
he knows it to be a mind that is free from lust.

Of the mind that is full of hate
he knows it to be a mind that is full of hate.

Of the mind that is free from hate
he knows it to be a mind that is free from hate.

Of the mind that is deluded
he knows it to be a mind that is deluded.

Of the mind that is free from delusion
he knows it to be a mind that is free.

Of the mind that is cramped
he knows it to be a mind that is cramped.

Of the mind that is diffuse
he knows it to be a mind that is diffuse.

Of the mind that is lofty
he knows it to be a mind that is lofty,

Of the mind that is mean
he knows it to be a mind that is mean.

Of the mind which is inferior
he knows it to be a mind that is inferior.

Of the mind that is superior
he knows it to be a mind that is superior.

Of the mind that is uncontrolled
he knows it to be a mind that is uncontrolled.

Of the mind that is controlled
he knows it to be a mind that is controlled.

Of the mind that is in bondage
he knows it to be a mind that is in bondage:

Of the mind that is released
he knows it to be a mind that is released.

■

When a monk has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
he calls to mind his former births in divers ways thus:

One birth,
two births,
three births,
four births,
five births,
even ten births,
twenty births,
thirty births,
forty births,
fifty births;
even a hundred births,
a thousand births,
a hundred thousand births.

He calls to mind divers aeons of involution
divers aeons of evolution, diverse aeons of involution and evolution.

He knows:

"Such was I by name,
such was I by clan,
by caste.

Thus was I nourished,
thus did I undergo pleasure and pain,
such was my span of life."

He knows:

"Thence I deceased
and rose up so and so.

There I dwelt,
of such and such a name,
of such a clan,
of such a caste,
so nourished;
such and such pleasure and pain did I undergo,
such my span of life.

Thence deceased
I rose up in the present life."

That is how
in fact and detail
he calls to mind in divers ways
his former births.

■

When a monk has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
with the deva-sight,
purified and surpassing that of man,
he beholds beings:

as they decease and rise up (elsewhere)
he knows them,
both mean and exalted,
of features fair and foul,
gone to weal
or gone to woe,
according to their deeds, thus:

"Alas! these good folk,
given to the practice of evil deeds,
of evil words,
of evil thoughts,
scoffing at the noble ones,
of perverted views
and reaping the fruit of their perverted views, -
these folk,
on the dissolution of body,
after death arose again in the Waste,
the Downfall
and the Constant Round.

Ah! and these good folk,
given to the practice of good deeds,
of good words,
of good thoughts,
not scoffing at the noble ones,
of sound views
and reaping the fruits of their sound views, -
these beings,
on the dissolution of body,
after death arose again in the Happy Way,
the Heaven World."

Thus with deva-sight,
purified and surpassing that of man,
does he behold beings

as they decease and rise up (elsewhere):
he knows them,
both mean and exalted,
of features fair and foul,
gone to weal
or gone to woe
according to their deeds.'

■

Moreover, monks, it is by cultivating
and making much of
these four bases of psychic power
tha a monk,
by the destruction of the āsavas,
in this very life,
by his own unaided powers
attains the heart's release,
the release by insight,
that is free from the āsavas,
realizes it
and dwells therein."

---

[1] As there were then no bhikkhus we must take this as framework.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
3. Ayo-Guḷa Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

3. [Untitled]

Sutta 22

Ayo-Guḷa Suttaṃ

The Iron Ball

---

[252]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Now the venerable Ānanda went to visit the Exalted One,
and on coming to him
saluted him
and sat down at one side.

Thus seated
the venerable Ānanda said this to the Exalted One:

"Pray, lord, does the Exalted One understand how to reach,[1]
by psychic power
the Brahma World
in his mind-made body?"[2]

"I do understand
how to reach,
by psychic power
the Brahma World
in my mind-made body, Ānanda."

"But, lord, does the Exalted One understand how
by psychic power
to reach the Brahma World
in this (physical) body of the four great elements?"

"I do understand how
by psychic power
to reach the Brahma World
in this (physical) body of the four great elements Ānanda."

"That the Exalted One, lord, should know[3] how to reach by psychic power
the Brahma World
both in his mind-made body and in this (physical) body of the four great elements is a wonder and a marvel."

"Yes, Ānanda.

The Tathāgatas are possessed of powers that are wonderful and marvellous.

At such time, Ānanda,
as the Tathāgata concentrates body in mind[4]
and concentrates mind in body,[5] at such time as he [253] enters on and abides in
the consciousness of bliss and buoyancy, then it is, Ānanda, that the Tathāgata's body is more buoyant,
softer,
more plastic
and more radiant.

Just as, Ānanda, an iron ball, if heated all day long,[6] is lighter
and softer,
more plastic
and more radiant,
even so at such time as the Tathāgata concentrates body in mind and concentrates mind in body, - at such time as the Tathāgata enters on
and abides in
the consciousness of bliss and buoyancy,
then it is, Ānanda,
that the Tathāgata's body
is more buoyant,
softer,
more plastic
and more radiant.

Now, Ānanda, whenever the Tathāgata concentrates body in mind and mind in body,
and enters on
and abides in
the consciousness of bliss and buoyancy, -
at such time, Ānanda,

the Tathāgata's body
with but little effort
rises up from the ground
into the air.

He then enjoys
in divers ways
manifold forms of magic power,
thus:

From being one he becomes many,
from being many he becomes one.

Manifest or invisible
he goes unhindered through a wall,
through a rampart,
through a mountain,
as if it were through air.

He plunges into the earth
and shoots up again
as if in water.

He walks upon the water
without parting it,
as if on solid ground.

He travels sitting cross-legged through the air,
like a bird upon the wing.

Even this moon and sun,
though they be of such mighty power and majesty,
he handles and strokes them with his hand.

Even as far as the Brahma World
he has power with his body.

Just as, Ānanda, a tuft of cotton seed or a ball of thistledown, lightly wafted on the wind,
with but little effort
rises up from the ground
into the air,[7]
even so at such time as the Tathāgata concentrates body in mind and mind in body
and enters on
and abides in
the consciousness of bliss and buoyancy, -
at such time, Ānanda,
the Tathāgata's body
with but little effort
rises up from the ground
into the air.

He then enjoys
in divers ways
manifold forms of magic power,
thus:

From being one he becomes many,
from being many he becomes one.

Manifest or invisible
he goes unhindered through a wall,
through a rampart,
through a mountain,
as if it were through air.

He plunges into the earth
and shoots up again
as if in water.

He walks upon the water
without parting it,
as if on solid ground.

He travels sitting cross-legged through the air,
like a bird upon the wing.

Even this moon and sun,
though they be of such mighty power and majesty,
he handles and strokes them with his hand.

Even as far as the Brahma World
he has power with his body."

---

[1] Text should read upasañkamituṇ in this and next paragraph and below.

[2] Cf. V.M. 405.

[3] There is a difficulty of reading here. Text has yañ ca kho opapāti ha (?) (Sinh. v.l. opāti; Burm. omāti), for which Pali Dict. suggests opapātiyā (iddhiyā). But there is no verb in the sentence, and I would read pahoti (potest). Comy. also seems at a loss. My two Sinh. MSS. of it have nāpi opātihamā ti, pahoti, taṇ sakkoti. 'This,' says Comy. 'is the pure text of the Buddha's word in Tipitaka.' I cannot refer to printed S. ed. of it here.

[4] Comy. kāyaṇ gahetvā citte āropeti, citta-sannisitaṇ karoti (makes it dependent on mind), quoting VM. ii, 404.

[5] Comy. the reverse of the above.

[6] For the simile Cf. D. ii, 335; Dialog. ii, 360. This species of magic is called vikubbanā-iddhi or vikubban'iddhi (power of transformation). Cf. V.M. 378 [at V.M. 404, karajakāyö]; Pts. ii, 205, e.g., the power of adopting the form of a youth or a nāga.

[7] Cf. Brethren, ver. 104.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
3. Ayo-Guḷa Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

3. [Untitled]

Sutta 23

Bhikkhu Suttaṃ

Monk

---

[253]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four bases of psychic power.

WTiat four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which [254] the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

These are the four bases of psychic power.

It is by cultivating
and making much of
these four bases of psychic power that a monk, by destroying the āsavas, even in this very life, realizes by his own unaided power

the heart's release,
the release by insight,
and having attained it
dwells therein."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
3. Ayo-Guḷa Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

3. [Untitled]

Sutta 24

Suddhaka Suttaṃ

Puritan[1]

---

[254]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four bases of psychic power.

WTiat four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

These are the four bases of psychic power."

---

[1] As before, text has suddhakaṇ for suddhikaṇ. Cf. text, 173, 193 n.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
3. Ayo-Guḷa Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

3. [Untitled]

Sutta 24

Paṭhama Phalā Suttaṃ

Fruits (a)

---

[254]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four bases of psychic power.

WTiat four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

These are the four bases of psychic power.

It is by cultivating
and making much of
these four bases of psychic power that, of two fruits, one may be expected:

either realization in this very life,
or, if there be any substrate left,
at any rate the state of non-return."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
3. Ayo-Guḷa Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

3. [Untitled]

Sutta 26

Dutiya Phalā Suttaṃ

Fruit (b)

---

[254]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four bases of psychic power.

What four?

"Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

These are the four bases of psychic power.

§

It is by cultivating
and making much of
these four bases of psychic power
that seven fruits,
seven profits may be looked for.

What seven?

In this very life, previously,[1]
he establishes realization:
and if he do not so beforehand,
in this very life,
at any rate he establishes realization at the time of his death.

■

And if in this very life, beforehand, he do not establish realization, nor do so at the time of death, then, through having worn down the five fetters of the lower sort, he wins release midway.

■

But if he do not establish perfect insight, beforehand,
in this very life,
nor yet at the time of death,
and if he, by wearing down the five fetters of the lower sort,
win not release midway, -
then at any rate, after having worn down the five fetters of the lower sort, he wins release by reduction of his (allotted) time.

■

But if he do not establish perfect insight, beforehand,
in this very life,
nor yet at the time of death,
and if he, by wearing down the five fetters of the lower sort,
win not release midway, -
nor wins release by reduction of his (allotted) time, at any rate, by having worn down the five fetters of the lower sort, he wins release without much trouble.

■

Again, if he do not establish perfect insight, beforehand,
in this very life,
nor yet at the time of death,
and if he, by wearing down the five fetters of the lower sort,
win not release midway, -
nor wins release by reduction of his (allotted) time, nor wins release without much trouble,
at any rate, by having worn down the five fetters of the lower sort, then he wins release with some trouble.

■

Again, if he do not establish perfect insight, beforehand,
in this very life,
nor yet at the time of death,
and if he, by wearing down the five fetters of the lower sort,
win not release midway, -
nor wins release by reduction of his (allotted) time,
nor wins release without much trouble,
nor wins release with some trouble,
at any rate, by having worn down the five fetters of the lower sort, then he is 'one who goes upstream,' and he goes to the Pure Abodes.

■

Monks, it is by cultivating
and making much of
these four bases of psychic power
that seven fruits,
seven profits may be looked for."

---

[1] Reading *paṭikacca*a for text's paṭihacca. Cf. text, 69, 201, 204, 237, 314, 378*n*..

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
3. Ayo-Guḷa Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

3. [Untitled]

Sutta 27

Paṭhama Ānanda Suttaṃ

Ānanda (a)

---

[255]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Now the venerable Ānanda went to visit the Exalted One
on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and compliments
sat down at one side.

Seated at one side he said to the Exalted One: -

"Pray, lord, what is psychic power?

What is the basis of psychic power?

What is the cultivation and practice
that leads to the cultivation of psychic power?"

"Herein, Ānanda, a monk enjoys
in divers ways
manifold forms of psychic power such as:

From being one he becomes many,
from being many he becomes one.

Manifest or invisible
he goes unhindered through a wall,
through a rampart,
through a mountain,
as if it were through air.

He plunges into the earth
and shoots up again
as if in water.

He walks upon the water
without parting it,
as if on solid ground.

He travels sitting cross-legged through the air,
like a bird upon the wing.

Even this moon and sun,
though they be of such mighty power and majesty,
he handles and strokes them with his hand.

Even as far as the Brahma World
he has power with his body.

This, Ānanda, is called
'psychic power.'

■

And what, Ānanda, is the basis of psychic power?

That path, that practice which conduces to the laying hold of,
to the winning of
psychic power, -
that, Ānanda, is called
'the basis of psychic power.'

■

And of what sort, Ānanda,
is the cultivation of psychic power?

Herein Ānanda a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

This, Ānanda, is called
'the cultivation of the bases of psychic power.'

■

And of what sort, Ānanda,
is the practice
that leads to the cultivation of psychic power?

It is just this Ariyan eightfold way, to wit:

Right view
right aim,
right speech,
right action,
right living,
right effort,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

This, Ānanda, is called: 'the practice
that leads to the cultivation
of the bases of psychic power.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
3. Ayo-Guḷa Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

3. [Untitled]

Sutta 28

Dutiya Ānanda Suttaṃ

Ānanda (b)

---

[255]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Now the venerable Ānanda went to visit the Exalted One
on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and compliments
sat down at one side.

As he thus sat the Exalted One said this to the venerable Ānanda:

"What, Ānanda is psychic power?

What is the basis of psychic power?

What is the practice
that leads to the cultivation of psychic power?"

"For us, lord,
things have the Exalted one as their root,
their guide,
their resort.

It were well for us
if the Exalted One would reveal the meaning of what he has just uttered.

Hearing it from him
the brethren will remember it."

[256] "Herein, Ānanda, a monk enjoys
in divers ways
manifold forms of psychic power such as:

From being one he becomes many,
from being many he becomes one.

Manifest or invisible
he goes unhindered through a wall,
through a rampart,
through a mountain,
as if it were through air.

He plunges into the earth
and shoots up again
as if in water.

He walks upon the water
without parting it,
as if on solid ground.

He travels sitting cross-legged through the air,
like a bird upon the wing.

Even this moon and sun,
though they be of such mighty power and majesty,
he handles and strokes them with his hand.

Even as far as the Brahma World
he has power with his body.

This, Ānanda, is called
'psychic power.'

■

And what, Ānanda, is the basis of psychic power?

That path, that practice which conduces to the laying hold of,
to the winning of
psychic power, -
that, monks, is called
'the basis of psychic power.'

■

And of what sort, Ānanda,
is the cultivation of psychic power?

"Herein Ānanda a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are

energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

This, Ānanda, is called
'the cultivation of the bases of psychic power.'

■

And of what sort, Ānanda,
is the practice
that leads to the cultivation of psychic power?

It is just this Ariyan eightfold way, to wit:

Right view
right aim,
right speech,
right action,
right living,
right effort,

right mindfulness,
right concentration.

This, Ānanda, is called: 'the practice
that leads to the cultivation
of the bases of psychic power'."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
3. Ayo-Guḷa Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

3. [Untitled]

Sutta 29

Paṭhama Sambahulā Bhikkhū Suttaṃ

Monks (a)

---

[256]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then a number of monks came to see the Exalted One
on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and compliments
sat down at one side.

As they sat at one side
those monks said this to the Exalted One:

"Pray, lord, what, is psychic power?

What is the basis of psychic power?

What is the practice
that leads to the cultivation of psychic power?"

"Herein, monks, a monk enjoys
in divers ways
manifold forms of psychic power such as:

From being one he becomes many,
from being many he becomes one.

Manifest or invisible
he goes unhindered through a wall,
through a rampart,
through a mountain,
as if it were through air.

He plunges into the earth
and shoots up again
as if in water.

He walks upon the water
without parting it,
as if on solid ground.

He travels sitting cross-legged through the air,
like a bird upon the wing.

Even this moon and sun,
though they be of such mighty power and majesty,
he handles and strokes them with his hand.

Even as far as the Brahma World
he has power with his body.

This, monks, is called
'psychic power.'

■

And what, monks, is the basis of psychic power?

That path, that practice which conduces to the laying hold of,
to the winning of
psychic power, -
that, monks, is called
'the basis of psychic power.'

■

And of what sort, monks,
is the cultivation of psychic power?

Herein monks a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

This, monks, is called
'the cultivation of the bases of psychic power.'

■

And of what sort, monks,
is the practice
that leads to the cultivation of psychic power?

It is just this Ariyan eightfold way, to wit:

Right view
right aim,
right speech,
right action,
right living,
right effort,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

This, monks, is called: 'the practice
that leads to the cultivation
of the bases of psychic power'."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
3. Ayo-Guḷa Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

3. [Untitled]

Sutta 30

Dutiya Sambahulā Bhikkhū Suttaṃ

Monks (b)

---

[256]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then a number of monks came to see the Exalted One
on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and compliments
sat down at one side.

As they sat at one side
those the Exalted One said this to those monks:

"What, monks, is psychic power?

What is the basis of psychic power?

What is the practice
that leads to the cultivation of psychic power?"

"For us, lord,
things have the Exalted one as their root,
their guide,
their resort.

It were well for us
if the Exalted One would reveal the meaning of what he has just uttered.

Hearing it from him
the brethren will remember it."

"Herein, monks, a monk enjoys
in divers ways
manifold forms of psychic power such as:

From being one he becomes many,
from being many he becomes one.

Manifest or invisible
he goes unhindered through a wall,
through a rampart,
through a mountain,
as if it were through air.

He plunges into the earth
and shoots up again
as if in water.

He walks upon the water
without parting it,
as if on solid ground.

He travels sitting cross-legged through the air,
like a bird upon the wing.

Even this moon and sun,
though they be of such mighty power and majesty,
he handles and strokes them with his hand.

Even as far as the Brahma World
he has power with his body.

This, monks, is called
'psychic power.'

■

And what, monks, is the basis of psychic power?

That path, that practice which conduces to the laying hold of,
to the winning of
psychic power, -
that, monks, is called
'the basis of psychic power.'

■

And of what sort, monks,
is the cultivation of psychic power?

Herein monks a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

This, monks, is called
'the cultivation of the bases of psychic power.'

■

And of what sort, monks,
is the practice
that leads to the cultivation of psychic power?

It is just this Ariyan eightfold way, to wit:

Right view
right aim,

right speech,
right action,
right living,
right effort,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

This, monks, is called: 'the practice
that leads to the cultivation
of the bases of psychic power'."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
3. Ayo-Guḷa Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

3. [Untitled]

Sutta 31

Moggallāna Suttaṃ

Moggallāna

---

[256]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then a number of monks came to see the Exalted One
on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and compliments
sat down at one side.

As they sat at one side
those the Exalted One said this to those monks:

"Now, monks, what think ye?

By cultivating
and making much
of what conditions
is the monk Moggallāna
of such mighty magic power and majesty?"

"For us, lord, things have their root in the Exalted One they have the Exalted One for their guide and their resort.

Well indeed if the meaning of these words
should show itself in the Exalted One.

Hearing the meaning of them from the Exalted One
the monks will bear it in mind."

"Then do ye listen, monks.

It is through cultivating
and making much
of four bases of psychic power
that the monk Moggallāna
is of such mighty magic power
and majesty.

What are the four?

Herein (monks) the monk Moggallāna cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
(with this intent):

'Thus shall not my desire
be over-sluggish
nor overstrained.

It shall not be inwardly cramped
nor outwardly diffuse.'

So he abides fully conscious
of what is behind and what is in front.

As (he is conscious of what is) in front, so behind:
as behind, so in front:
as below, so above:
as above, so below:
as by day, so by night:
as by night, so by day.

Thus with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

■

The monk Moggallāna cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
(with this intent):

'Thus shall not my energy
be over-sluggish
nor yet overstrained.

It shall not be inwardly cramped
nor outwardly diffuse.'

So he abides fully conscious
of what is behind and what is in front.

As (he is conscious of what is) in front, so behind:
as behind, so in front:

as below, so above:
as above, so below:
as by day, so by night:
as by night, so by day.

Thus with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

■

The monk Moggallāna cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
(with this intent):

'Thus shall not my thought
be over-sluggish
nor yet overstrained.

It shall not be inwardly cramped
nor outwardly diffuse.'

So he abides fully conscious
of what is behind and what is in front.

As (he is conscious of what is) in front, so behind:
as behind, so in front:
as below, so above:
as above, so below:
as by day, so by night:
as by night, so by day.

Thus with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

■

The monk Moggallāna cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
(with this intent):

'Thus shall not my thought
be over-sluggish
nor yet overstrained.

It shall not be inwardly cramped
nor outwardly diffuse.'

So he abides fully conscious
of what is behind and what is in front.

As (he is conscious of what is) in front, so behind:
as behind, so in front:
as below, so above:
as above, so below:
as by day, so by night:
as by night, so by day.

Thus with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

§

[257] Again monks, it is by cultivating
and making much of

these four bases of psychic power that the monk Moggallāna enjoys manifold forms of psychic power, thus: -

From being one he becomes many,
from being many he becomes one.

Manifest or invisible
he goes unhindered through a wall,
through a rampart,
through a mountain,
as if it were through air.

He plunges into the earth
and shoots up again
as if in water.

He walks upon the water
without parting it,
as if on solid ground.

He travels sitting cross-legged through the air,
like a bird upon the wing.

Even this moon and sun,
though they be of such mighty power and majesty,
he handles and strokes them with his hand.

Even as far as the Brahma World
he has power with his body.

■

When the monk Moggallāna has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
with deva-power of hearing,
purified and surpassing that of man,

he hears sounds
both of devas and of humans, whether far or near.

■

When the monk Moggallāna has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
he knows the minds of other beings,
of other persons,
with his own mind grasping them.

Of the mind that is lustful
he knows it to lustful.

Of the mind that is free from lust
he knows it to be a mind that is free from lust.

Of the mind that is full of hate
he knows it to be a mind that is full of hate.

Of the mind that is free from hate
he knows it to be a mind that is free from hate.

Of the mind that is deluded
he knows it to be a mind that is deluded.

Of the mind that is free from delusion
he knows it to be a mind that is free.

Of the mind that is cramped
he knows it to be a mind that is cramped.

Of the mind that is diffuse
he knows it to be a mind that is diffuse.

Of the mind that is lofty
he knows it to be a mind that is lofty,

Of the mind that is mean
he knows it to be a mind that is mean.

Of the mind which is inferior
he knows it to be a mind that is inferior.

Of the mind that is superior
he knows it to be a mind that is superior.

Of the mind that is uncontrolled
he knows it to be a mind that is uncontrolled.

Of the mind that is controlled
he knows it to be a mind that is controlled.

Of the mind that is in bondage
he knows it to be a mind that is in bondage:

Of the mind that is released
he knows it to be a mind that is released.

■

When the monk Moggallāna has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
he calls to mind his former births in divers ways thus:

One birth,
two births,
three births,
four births,
five births,
even ten births,

twenty births,
thirty births,
forty births,
fifty births;
even a hundred births,
a thousand births,
a hundred thousand births.

He calls to mind divers aeons of involution
divers aeons of evolution, diverse aeons of involution and evolution.

He knows:

'Such was I by name,
such was I by clan,
by caste.

Thus was I nourished,
thus did I undergo pleasure and pain,
such was my span of life.'

He knows:

'Thence I deceased
and rose up so and so.

There I dwelt,
of such and such a name,
of such a clan,
of such a caste,
so nourished;
such and such pleasure and pain did I undergo,
such my span of life.

Thence deceased
I rose up in the present life.'

That is how
in fact and detail
he calls to mind in divers ways
his former births.

■

When the monk Moggallāna has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
with the deva-sight,
purified and surpassing that of man,
he beholds beings:
as they decease and rise up (elsewhere)
he knows them,
both mean and exalted,
of features fair and foul,
gone to weal
or gone to woe,
according to their deeds, thus:

'Alas! these good folk,
given to the practice of evil deeds,
of evil words,
of evil thoughts,
scoffing at the noble ones,
of perverted views
and reaping the fruit of their perverted views, -
these folk,
on the dissolution of body,
after death arose again in the Waste,
the Downfall
and the Constant Round.

Ah! and these good folk,
given to the practice of good deeds,

of good words,
of good thoughts,
not scoffing at the noble ones,
of sound views
and reaping the fruits of their sound views, -
these beings,
on the dissolution of body,
after death arose again in the Happy Way,
the Heaven World.'

Thus with deva-sight,
purified and surpassing that of man,
does he behold beings
as they decease and rise up (elsewhere):
he knows them,
both mean and exalted,
of features fair and foul,
gone to weal
or gone to woe
according to their deeds.

■

Moreover, monks, it is by cultivating
and making much of
these four bases of psychic power
that the monk Moggallāna,
by the destruction of the āsavas,
in this very life,
by his own unaided powers
he attains the heart's release,
the release by insight,
that is free from the āsavas,
realizes it
and dwells therein."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
3. Ayo-Guḷa Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

3. [Untitled]

Sutta 32

Tathāgata Suttaṃ

Tathāgata

---

[257]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then a number of monks came to see the Exalted One
on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and compliments
sat down at one side.

As they sat at one side
those the Exalted One said this to those monks:

"Now, monks, what think ye?

By cultivating
and making much
of what conditions
is the Tathāgata
of such mighty magic power and majesty?"

"For us, lord, things have their root in the Exalted One they have the Exalted One for their guide and their resort.

Well indeed if the meaning of these words
should show itself in the Exalted One.

Hearing the meaning of them from the Exalted One
the monks will bear it in mind."

"Then do ye listen, monks.

It is through cultivating
and making much
of four bases of psychic power
that the Tathāgata
is of such mighty magic power
and majesty.

What are the four?

Herein (monks) the Tathāgata cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
(with this intent):

'Thus shall not my desire
be over-sluggish
nor overstrained.

It shall not be inwardly cramped
nor outwardly diffuse.'

So he abides fully conscious
of what is behind and what is in front.

As (he is conscious of what is) in front, so behind:
as behind, so in front:
as below, so above:
as above, so below:
as by day, so by night:
as by night, so by day.

Thus with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

■

The Tathāgata cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
(with this intent):

'Thus shall not my energy
be over-sluggish
nor yet overstrained.

It shall not be inwardly cramped
nor outwardly diffuse.'

So he abides fully conscious
of what is behind and what is in front.

As (he is conscious of what is) in front, so behind:
as behind, so in front:

as below, so above:
as above, so below:
as by day, so by night:
as by night, so by day.

Thus with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

■

The Tathāgata cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
(with this intent):

'Thus shall not my thought
be over-sluggish
nor yet overstrained.

It shall not be inwardly cramped
nor outwardly diffuse.'

So he abides fully conscious
of what is behind and what is in front.

As (he is conscious of what is) in front, so behind:
as behind, so in front:
as below, so above:
as above, so below:
as by day, so by night:
as by night, so by day.

Thus with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

■

The Tathāgata cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle,
(with this intent):

'Thus shall not my thought
be over-sluggish
nor yet overstrained.

It shall not be inwardly cramped
nor outwardly diffuse.'

So he abides fully conscious
of what is behind and what is in front.

As (he is conscious of what is) in front, so behind:
as behind, so in front:
as below, so above:
as above, so below:
as by day, so by night:
as by night, so by day.

Thus with wits alert,
with wits unhampered,
he cultivates his mind to brilliancy.

§

Again monks, it is by cultivating
and making much of

these four bases of psychic power that the Tathāgata enjoys manifold forms of psychic power, thus: -

From being one he becomes many,
from being many he becomes one.

Manifest or invisible
he goes unhindered through a wall,
through a rampart,
through a mountain,
as if it were through air.

He plunges into the earth
and shoots up again
as if in water.

He walks upon the water
without parting it,
as if on solid ground.

He travels sitting cross-legged through the air,
like a bird upon the wing.

Even this moon and sun,
though they be of such mighty power and majesty,
he handles and strokes them with his hand.

Even as far as the Brahma World
he has power with his body.

■

When the Tathāgata has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
with deva-power of hearing,
purified and surpassing that of man,

he hears sounds
both of devas and of humans, whether far or near.

■

When the Tathāgata has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
he knows the minds of other beings,
of other persons,
with his own mind grasping them.

Of the mind that is lustful
he knows it to lustful.

Of the mind that is free from lust
he knows it to be a mind that is free from lust.

Of the mind that is full of hate
he knows it to be a mind that is full of hate.

Of the mind that is free from hate
he knows it to be a mind that is free from hate.

Of the mind that is deluded
he knows it to be a mind that is deluded.

Of the mind that is free from delusion
he knows it to be a mind that is free.

Of the mind that is cramped
he knows it to be a mind that is cramped.

Of the mind that is diffuse
he knows it to be a mind that is diffuse.

Of the mind that is lofty
he knows it to be a mind that is lofty,

Of the mind that is mean
he knows it to be a mind that is mean.

Of the mind which is inferior
he knows it to be a mind that is inferior.

Of the mind that is superior
he knows it to be a mind that is superior.

Of the mind that is uncontrolled
he knows it to be a mind that is uncontrolled.

Of the mind that is controlled
he knows it to be a mind that is controlled.

Of the mind that is in bondage
he knows it to be a mind that is in bondage:

Of the mind that is released
he knows it to be a mind that is released.

■

When the Tathāgata has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
he calls to mind his former births in divers ways thus:

One birth,
two births,
three births,
four births,
five births,
even ten births,

twenty births,
thirty births,
forty births,
fifty births;
even a hundred births,
a thousand births,
a hundred thousand births.

He calls to mind divers aeons of involution
divers aeons of evolution, diverse aeons of involution and evolution.

He knows:

'Such was I by name,
such was I by clan,
by caste.

Thus was I nourished,
thus did I undergo pleasure and pain,
such was my span of life.'

He knows:

'Thence I deceased
and rose up so and so.

There I dwelt,
of such and such a name,
of such a clan,
of such a caste,
so nourished;
such and such pleasure and pain did I undergo,
such my span of life.

Thence deceased
I rose up in the present life.'

That is how
in fact and detail
he calls to mind in divers ways
his former births.

■

When the Tathāgata has thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the four bases of psychic power,
with the deva-sight,
purified and surpassing that of man,
he beholds beings:
as they decease and rise up (elsewhere)
he knows them,
both mean and exalted,
of features fair and foul,
gone to weal
or gone to woe,
according to their deeds, thus:

'Alas! these good folk,
given to the practice of evil deeds,
of evil words,
of evil thoughts,
scoffing at the noble ones,
of perverted views
and reaping the fruit of their perverted views, -
these folk,
on the dissolution of body,
after death arose again in the Waste,
the Downfall
and the Constant Round.

Ah! and these good folk,
given to the practice of good deeds,

of good words,
of good thoughts,
not scoffing at the noble ones,
of sound views
and reaping the fruits of their sound views, -
these beings,
on the dissolution of body,
after death arose again in the Happy Way,
the Heaven World.'

Thus with deva-sight,
purified and surpassing that of man,
does he behold beings
as they decease and rise up (elsewhere):
he knows them,
both mean and exalted,
of features fair and foul,
gone to weal
or gone to woe
according to their deeds.

■

Moreover, monks, it is by cultivating
and making much of
these four bases of psychic power
that the Tathāgata,
by the destruction of the āsavas,
in this very life,
by his own unaided powers
he attains the heart's release,
the release by insight,
that is free from the āsavas,
realizes it
and dwells therein."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
4. Gaṇgā Peyyala

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

4. Gaṇgā-Repetition

Suttas 33-44

---

[258]

Sutta 33

Ganges — Flowing and Sliding to Eastward

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, the river Ganges
flows to the East,

slides to the East,
tends to the East,
even so a monk,
by cultivating the four bases of psychic power, making much of the four bases of psychic power,
flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna.

And how cultivating,
how making much of
the four bases of psychic power
does a monk flow,
slide
and tend
to Nibbāna?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

That is how cultivating,
how making much of
the four bases of psychic power
a monk flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna."

Sutta 34

Yamunā — Flowing and Sliding to Eastward

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, the river Yamunā
flows to the East,
slides to the East,
tends to the East,
even so a monk,
by cultivating the four bases of psychic power,
making much of the four bases of psychic power,
flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna.

And how cultivating,
how making much of
the four bases of psychic power
does a monk flow,
slide
and tend
to Nibbāna?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are

thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

That is how cultivating,
how making much of
the four bases of psychic power
a monk flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna."

Sutta 35

Acīravatī — Flowing and Sliding to Eastward

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, the river Acīravatī
flows to the East,
slides to the East,
tends to the East,
even so a monk,
by cultivating the four bases of psychic power,
making much of the four bases of psychic power,
flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna.

And how cultivating,
how making much of
the four bases of psychic power
does a monk flow,
slide
and tend
to Nibbāna?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

That is how cultivating,
how making much of
the four bases of psychic power
a monk flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna."

Sutta 36

Sarabhū — Flowing and Sliding to Eastward

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, the river Sarabhū
flows to the East,
slides to the East,
tends to the East,
even so a monk,
by cultivating the four bases of psychic power,
making much of the four bases of psychic power,
flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna.

And how cultivating,
how making much of
the four bases of psychic power
does a monk flow,
slide
and tend
to Nibbāna?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

That is how cultivating,
how making much of
the four bases of psychic power
a monk flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna"

Sutta 37

Mahī — Flowing and Sliding to Eastward

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, the river Mahī
flows to the East,
slides to the East,
tends to the East,
even so a monk,
by cultivating the four bases of psychic power,
making much of the four bases of psychic power,
flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna.

And how cultivating,
how making much of
the four bases of psychic power
does a monk flow,
slide
and tend
to Nibbāna?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are

energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

That is how cultivating,
how making much of
the four bases of psychic power
a monk flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna."

Sutta 38

Ganges, Yamunā, Acīravatī, Sarabhū, Mahī — Flowing and Sliding to Eastward

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, the river Ganges, Yamunā, Acīravatī, Sarabhū, Mahī
flows to the East,
slides to the East,
tends to the East,
even so a monk,
by cultivating the four bases of psychic power,
making much of the four bases of psychic power,
flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna.

And how cultivating,
how making much of
the four bases of psychic power
does a monk flow,
slide
and tend
to Nibbāna?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,

together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

That is how cultivating,
how making much of
the four bases of psychic power
a monk flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna."

Sutta 39

Ganges — Flowing and Sliding to the Ocean

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, the river Ganges
flows to the Ocean,
slides to the Ocean,
tends to the Ocean,
even so a monk,
by cultivating the four bases of psychic power,
making much of the four bases of psychic power,
flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna.

And how cultivating,
how making much of
the four bases of psychic power
does a monk flow,
slide
and tend
to Nibbāna?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are

desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

That is how cultivating,
how making much of
the four bases of psychic power
a monk flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna."

Sutta 40

Yamunā — Flowing and Sliding to the Ocean

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, the river Yamunā
flows to the Ocean,
slides to the Ocean,
tends to the Ocean,
even so a monk,
by cultivating the four bases of psychic power,
making much of the four bases of psychic power,
flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna.

And how cultivating,
how making much of
the four bases of psychic power
does a monk flow,
slide
and tend
to Nibbāna?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

That is how cultivating,
how making much of
the four bases of psychic power
a monk flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna."

Sutta 41

Acīravatī — Flowing and Sliding to the Ocean

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, the river Acīravatī
flows to the Ocean,
slides to the Ocean,
tends to the Ocean,
even so a monk,
by cultivating the four bases of psychic power,
making much of the four bases of psychic power,
flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna.

And how cultivating,
how making much of
the four bases of psychic power
does a monk flow,
slide

and tend
to Nibbāna?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

That is how cultivating,
how making much of
the four bases of psychic power
a monk flows,
slides

and tends
to Nibbāna."

Sutta 42

Sarabhū — Flowing and Sliding to the Ocean

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, the river Sarabhū
flows to the Ocean,
slides to the Ocean,
tends to the Ocean,
even so a monk,
by cultivating the four bases of psychic power,
making much of the four bases of psychic power,
flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna.

And how cultivating,
how making much of

the four bases of psychic power
does a monk flow,
slide
and tend
to Nibbāna?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

That is how cultivating,
how making much of

the four bases of psychic power
a monk flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna."

Sutta 43

Mahī — Flowing and Sliding to the Ocean

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, the river Mahī
flows to the Ocean,
slides to the Ocean,
tends to the Ocean,
even so a monk,
by cultivating the four bases of psychic power,
making much of the four bases of psychic power,
flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna.

And how cultivating,
how making much of
the four bases of psychic power
does a monk flow,
slide
and tend
to Nibbāna?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

That is how cultivating,
how making much of
the four bases of psychic power
a monk flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna."

Sutta 44

Ganges, Yamunā, Acīravatī, Sarabhū, Mahī — Flowing and Sliding to the Ocean

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, the river Ganges, Yamunā, Acīravatī, Sarabhū, Mahī
flows to the Ocean,
slides to the Ocean,
tends to the Ocean,
even so a monk,
by cultivating the four bases of psychic power,
making much of the four bases of psychic power,
flows,

slides
and tends
to Nibbāna.

And how cultivating,
how making much of
the four bases of psychic power
does a monk flow,
slide
and tend
to Nibbāna?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,

together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

That is how cultivating,
how making much of
the four bases of psychic power
a monk flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
5. Appamāda Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

5. Earnestness

Suttas 45-54

---

[258]

Sutta 45

Tathāgata

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, of all creatures, whether footless or having two,
four,
or many feet;
whether having forms or formless;
whether conscious or unconscious,
or neither conscious nor unconscious, —
of these the Tathāgata,
the Arahant,
the fully Enlightened One,
is reckoned chief; —
even so, monks,
of all profitable conditions which are rooted in earnestness,
which join together in earnestness, —
of those conditions
earnestness is reckoned chief.

Of the earnest monk
it may be expected
that he will cultivate,
that he will make much of
the four bases of psychic power.

And how, monks,
does a monk who is earnest
cultivate
and make much of
the four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

Thus, monks, a monk who is earnest
cultivates
and makes much of
the four bases of psychic power."

Sutta 46

The Foot

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, of all the foot-characteristics of such creatures as roam about are joined together in the foot of the elephant, and as the elephant's foot in size
is reckoned chief,
even so, monks, of all profitable conditions
which are rooted in earnestness,
which join together in earnestness, —
of those conditions
earnestness is reckoned chief.

Of the earnest monk
it may be expected
that he will cultivate,
that he will make much of
the four bases of psychic power.

And how, monks,
does a monk who is earnest
cultivate
and make much of
the four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are

desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

Thus, monks, a monk who is earnest
cultivates
and makes much of
the four bases of psychic power."

Sutta 47

The Roof-peak

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, in a peaked house all the rafters whatsoever
go together to the roof-peak,
slope to the roof-peak,
are joined together in the roof-peak,
and of them
the peak is reckoned chief, —
even so, monks, of all profitable conditions,
which are rooted in earnestness,
which join together in earnestness, —
of those conditions
earnestness is reckoned chief.

Of the earnest monk
it may be expected
that he will cultivate,
that he will make much of
the four bases of psychic power.

And how, monks,
does a monk who is earnest
cultivate
and make much of
the four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

Thus, monks, a monk who is earnest
cultivates

and makes much of the four bases of psychic power."

Sutta 48

Wood

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, of all scented woods whatsoever the dark sandal-wood is reckoned chief, — even so of all profitable conditions,
which are rooted in earnestness,
which join together in earnestness, —
of those conditions
earnestness is reckoned chief.

Of the earnest monk
it may be expected
that he will cultivate,

that he will make much of
the four bases of psychic power.

And how, monks,
does a monk who is earnest
cultivate
and make much of
the four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

Thus, monks, a monk who is earnest
cultivates
and makes much of
the four bases of psychic power."

Sutta 49

Heart-wood

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, of all scented heart-woods whatsoever the red saldal-wood is reckoned chief, —
even so, monks, of all profitable conditions,
which are rooted in earnestness,
which join together in earnestness, —
of those conditions
earnestness is reckoned chief.

Of the earnest monk
it may be expected
that he will cultivate,
that he will make much of
the four bases of psychic power.

And how, monks,
does a monk who is earnest
cultivate
and make much of
the four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,

together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

Thus, monks, a monk who is earnest
cultivates
and makes much of
the four bases of psychic power."

Sutta 50

Jasmine

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, of all scented flowers whatsoever the jasmine is reckoned chief,
even so, monks, of all profitable conditions,
which are rooted in earnestness,
which join together in earnestness, —

of those conditions
earnestness is reckoned chief.

Of the earnest monk
it may be expected
that he will cultivate,
that he will make much of
the four bases of psychic power.

And how, monks,
does a monk who is earnest
cultivate
and make much of
the four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

Thus, monks, a monk who is earnest
cultivates
and makes much of
the four bases of psychic power."

Sutta 51

Prince

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, all petty princes whatsoever follow in the train of the universal monarch,

even so, monks, of all profitable conditions,
which are rooted in earnestness,
which join together in earnestness, —
of those conditions
earnestness is reckoned chief.

Of the earnest monk
it may be expected
that he will cultivate,
that he will make much of
the four bases of psychic power.

And how, monks,
does a monk who is earnest
cultivate
and make much of
the four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

Thus, monks, a monk who is earnest
cultivates
and makes much of
the four bases of psychic power."

Sutta 52

Moon

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, of all starry bodies whatsoever the radiance does not equal one-sixteenth part of the radiance of the moon;
just as the moon is reckoned chief of them,
even so, monks, of all profitable conditions,
which are rooted in earnestness,
which join together in earnestness, —
of those conditions
earnestness is reckoned chief.

Of the earnest monk
it may be expected
that he will cultivate,
that he will make much of
the four bases of psychic power.

And how, monks,
does a monk who is earnest
cultivate
and make much of
the four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

Thus, monks, a monk who is earnest
cultivates
and makes much of
the four bases of psychic power."

Sutta 53

Sun

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, in the autumn season, when the sky is opened up
and cleared of clouds,
the sun,
leaping up into the firmament,
drives away all darkness,
and shines
and burns
and flashes forth,
even so, monks, of all profitable conditions,
which are rooted in earnestness,
which join together in earnestness, —
of those conditions
earnestness is reckoned chief.

Of the earnest monk
it may be expected
that he will cultivate,
that he will make much of
the four bases of psychic power.

And how, monks,
does a monk who is earnest
cultivate
and make much of
the four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

Thus, monks, a monk who is earnest
cultivates
and makes much of
the four bases of psychic power."

Sutta 54

Cloth

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, of all woven cloths whatsoever
the cloth of Benares is reckoned chief,
even so, monks, of all profitable conditions,
which are rooted in earnestness,
which join together in earnestness, —
of those conditions
earnestness is reckoned chief.

Of the earnest monk
it may be expected
that he will cultivate,
that he will make much of
the four bases of psychic power.

And how, monks,
does a monk who is earnest
cultivate
and make much of
the four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are

desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

Thus, monks, a monk who is earnest
cultivates
and makes much of
the four bases of psychic power."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
6. Bala-Karaṇīya Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

6. Deeds Requiring Strength

Suttas 55-66

---

[259]

Sutta 55

Strength

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, whatsoever deeds requiring strength
are done,
all of them are done
in dependence on the earth,
with the earth for their support,
even so a monk,
depending on virtue,
supported by virtue,
cultivates the four bases of psychic power,
makes much,
of the four bases of psychic power.

And how does a monk,
depending on virtue,
supported by virtue,
cultivate the four bases of psychic power,
make much,
of the four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,

together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

That is how a monk
depending on virtue,
supported by virtue,
cultivates the four bases of psychic power,
makes much,
of the four bases of psychic power."

Sutta 56

Seed

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, whatsoever species
of seed and vegetation
come to growth,
increase
and maturity,
all of them depend on the earth,
are supported by the earth;
even so, monks, a monk who,
depending on virtue,
supported by virtue,
cultivates and makes much of
the four bases of psychic power, attains growth,
increase
and maturity of conditions.

And how does a monk
depending on virtue,
supported by virtue,
cultivating and making much of
the four bases of psychic power, attain growth,
increase
and maturity of conditions?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

That is how a monk
depending on virtue,
supported by virtue,
cultivating and making much of
the four bases of psychic power,
attains growth,
increase
and maturity of conditions."

Sutta 57

The Snake

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Supported, monks, by Himalaya,
lord of mountains,
snakes grow a body
and get strength.

When they have grown a body
and got strength there, they go down to the tarns.

From the tarns
they go down to the lakes,

From the lakes
they go down to the small rivers,

From the small rivers
they go down to the great rivers,

From the great rivers
they go down to the sea,
the mighty ocean.

There they get great size and growth of body.

Just so, monks, a monk who,
depending on virtue,
supported by virtue,
cultivates and makes much of
the four bases of psychic power,
attains growth,
increase
and maturity of conditions.

And how, monks, does a monk,
depending on virtue,
supported by virtue,
cultivates and makes much of
the four bases of psychic power,
attain growth,
increase
and maturity of conditions?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are

thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

That is how a monk
depending on virtue,
supported by virtue,
cultivating and making much of
the four bases of psychic power,
attains growth,
increase
and maturity of conditions."

Sutta 58

The Tree

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose a tree, monks,
that inclines to the east,
slopes to the east,
tends to the east.

When cut down at the root,
in what direction would it fall?"

"As it slopes,
as it inclines,
as it tends, lord."

"Well, monks, even so
a monk, cultivating and makng much of
the four bases of psychic power, inclines to Nibbāna,
slopes to Nibbāna,
tends to Nibbāna,.

And how does a monk,
cultivating and makng much of
the four bases of psychic power, incline to Nibbāna,
slope to Nibbāna,
tend to Nibbāna,?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

That is how a monk,
cultivating and makng much of
the four bases of psychic power,
inclines to Nibbāna,
slopes to Nibbāna,
tends to Nibbāna."

Sutta 59

The Pot

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as a pot,
if overset,
empties out its water,
and cannot take it in again,
even so a monk
who cultivates and makes much of
the four bases of psychic power, empties out ill, unprofitable states
and cannot take them in again.

And how, monks, can a monk,
by cultivating and makng much of
the four bases of psychic power, empty out ill, unprofitable states
and not take them in again?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,

together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

That is how a monk,
cultivating and makng much of
the four bases of psychic power empties out ill, unprofitable states
and not take them in again."

Sutta 60

Bearded Wheat

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose monks, the spike of bearded wheat or bearded barley
be well aimed.

When pressed by hand or foot,
it is possible
that it will pierce hand or foot and draw blood.

Why so?

Because, monks,
the spike is well aimed.

Even so, monks,
owing to the right aim of way-culture
it is possible
that a monk will pierce ignorance,
will draw knowledge,
will realize Nibbāna,.

Why so?

Because, monks,
his view is well aimed.

And how, monks, does a monk
by view well aimed,
by well aimed way-culture
so pierce ignorance,
draw knowledge
and realize Nibbāna?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

That is how a monk,
by view well aimed,
by well aimed way-culture
pierces ignorance,
draws knowledge
and realizes Nibbāna."

Sutta 61

The Sky

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, divers winds blow in the sky, -
some winds blow from the east,
some winds blow from the west,
some winds blow from the north,

some winds blow from the south,
some winds are dusty,
some winds are dustless,
some winds are cool
some winds are hot
some winds are soft
some winds are boisterous.

Even so, monks,
when a monk cultivates the four bases of psychic power, makes much of the four bases of psychic power,
then in him
the four bases of psychic power
by culture
reach fulfilment,
the four best efforts,
by culture
reach fulfilment,
the four bases of psychic power,
by culture
reach fulfilment,
the four bases of psychic power,
by culture
reach fulfilment,
the five powers
by culture
reach fulfilment,
the Ariyan eightfold way
by culture
reaches fulfilment.

And how, monks, when a monk cultivates the four bases of psychic power, makes much of the four bases of psychic power, do the four bases of psychic power
by culture
reach fulfilment,

the four best efforts,
by culture
reach fulfilment,
the four bases of psychic power,
by culture
reach fulfilment,
the four bases of psychic power,
by culture
reach fulfilment,
the five powers
by culture
reach fulfilment,
the Ariyan eightfold way
by culture
reaches fulfilment?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

That is how monks, when a monk cultivates the four bases of psychic power,
makes much of the four bases of psychic power,
the four bases of psychic power
by culture
reach fulfilment,
the four best efforts,
by culture
reach fulfilment,
the four bases of psychic power,
by culture
reach fulfilment,
the four bases of psychic power,
by culture
reach fulfilment,
the five powers
by culture
reach fulfilment,
the Ariyan eightfold way
by culture
reaches fulfilment in him."

Sutta 62

The Rain-Cloud (a)

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, in the last month of the hot season
the dust and dirt fly up,
and then out of due season
a great rain-cloud in a moment lays and makes them vanish, - even so does a monk
who cultivates and makes much of
the four bases of psychic power lay and cause to vanish
the ill
unprofitable states
that rise from time to time.

And how does a monk
who cultivates and makes much of
the four bases of psychic power
lay and cause to vanish
the ill
unprofitable states
that rise from time to time?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

That is how monks, when a monk cultivates the four bases of psychic power, makes much of the four bases of psychic power, a monk lays and causes to vanish
the ill,
unprofitable states
that rise
and rise again."

Sutta 63

The Rain-Cloud (b)

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, from time to time
a strong wind scatters
and causes to vanish
a great mass of clouds
that has arisen,
even so a monk who cultivates and makes much of
the four bases of psychic power
from time to time
scatters and causes to vanish
the ill,
unprofitable states
that rise
and rise again.

And how does a monk who cultivates and makes much of
the four bases of psychic power
from time to time
scatter and cause to vanish
the ill,
unprofitable states
that rise
and rise again?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

That is how monks, when a monk cultivates the four bases of psychic power, makes much of the four bases of psychic power,
from time to time
scatters and causes to vanish
the ill,
unprofitable states
that rise
and rise again."

Sutta 64

The Ship

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, in the case of a sea-faring vessel rigged with masts and stays
and stranded on the bank,
for six months it is worn by the water,

while in the dry season
its rigging is spoiled by wind and sun:
then, overstrung by a shower
in the rainy season,
it is easily weakened
and rots away, -
just so, in a monk who cultivates and makes much of
the four bases of psychic power right easily the fetters are weakened
and rot away.

And how, monks, in one so cultivating and making much of
the four bases of psychic power are the fetters weakened
and rot away?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

That is how monks, in one so cultivating and making much of
the four bases of psychic power the fetters are weakened
and rot away."

Sutta 65

For All Comers

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose, monks, a guest-house.

Thither come folk from the eastern quarter,
who take up residence therein.

Thither come folk from the western quarter,
who take up residence therein.

Thither come folk from the northern quarter,
who take up residence therein.

Thither come folk from the southern quarter,
who take up residence therein.

Noblemen and brahmins,
commoners and serfs.

Even so, monks, a monk who cultivates the four bases of psychic power, who makes much of the four bases of psychic power,
by full comprehension
realizes those states
which are by full comprehension
to be fully understood.

Those states that are to be abandoned
by full comprehension,
by full comprehension
he abandons;

those states that are to be realized
by full comprehension,
by full comprehension
he realizes;

those states that are to be cultivated
by full comprehension,
by full comprehension
he cultivates.

What, monks, are the states to be realized
by full comprehension?

To that question you must reply:

'It is the five factors that have to do with grasping.'

What five?

They are these:

The body-factor
that has to do with grasping,
the factor of feeling
that has to do with grasping,
the perception-factor
that has to do with grasping,
the activities-factor
that has to do with grasping,
the consciousness-factor
that has to do with grasping.

And what, monks, are the states
that are to be abandoned
by full comprehension?

They are ignorance,
and lust of becoming.

These are the states to be abandoned
by full comprehension.

And what, monks, are the states
that are to be realized
by full comprehension?

They are knowledge and release.

These are the states
to be realized by full comprehension.

And what, monks, are the states
that are to be cultivated
by full comprehension?

They are calm and insight.

These are the states
to be cultivated by full comprehension.

And how does a monk, cultivating and making much of the four bases of psychic power,
realize,
abandon,
fully comprehend
and cultivate (these states)?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are

thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

That is how monks, a monk who cultivates the four bases of psychic power,
who makes much of the four bases of psychic power,
by full comprehension
realizes those states
which are by full comprehension
to be fully understood;

those states that are to be abandoned
by full comprehension,
by full comprehension
he abandons;

those states that are to be realized
by full comprehension,
by full comprehension
he realizes;

those states that are to be cultivated
by full comprehension,
by full comprehension
he cultivates."

Sutta 66

The River

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose, monks, the river Ganges,
that flows,
slides
and tends towards the east,
and there comes a great crowd of folk,
armed with pick and basket, saying:

'We will make this river Ganges flow,
slide
and tend towards the west.'

What think ye, monks?

Would that great crowd of folk make the river Ganges
flow,

slide
and tend towards the west?"

"Surely not, lord."

"And why not?"

"Because, lord, the river Ganges
flows,
slides
and tends towards the east, it were no easy thing
to make it flow,
slide
and tend towards the west;
insomuch that fatigue and vexation
would be the lot
of that great crowd of folk."

"Just so, monks, if the rajah's royal ministers or his friends
or boon companions
or kinsmen
or blood relatives
were to come to a monk
who is cultivating and making much of the Axiyan eightfold way, and were to seek to entice him with wealth, saying:

'Come, good man!

Why should these yellow robes torment you?

Why parade about with shaven crown and bowl?

Come!

Return to the lower life
and enjoy possessions
and do deeds of merit,' -

for that monk
so cultivating and making much of the four bases of psychic power return to the lower life is impossible.

Why so?

Because, monks, that monk's heart has for many a long day
been bent on detachment,
inclined to detachment,
turned towards detachment,
so that there is no possibility
for him to return to the lower life.

And how, monks, does a monk cultivate and make much of the four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are

thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

That is how monks, a monk cultivates and makes much of the four bases of psychic power."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
7. Esana Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

7. Longing

Suttas 67-76

---

[259]

Sutta 67

Longing

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these three longings.

What three?

The longing for sensual delights,
the longing for becoming,
the longing for the holy life.

These, monks, are the three longings.

It is for the full comprehension of these three longings, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these three longings.

What three?

The longing for sensual delights,
the longing for becoming,
the longing for the holy life.

These, monks, are the three longings.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these three longings, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these three longings.

What three?

The longing for sensual delights,
the longing for becoming,
the longing for the holy life.

These, monks, are the three longings.

It is for the wearing out of these three longings, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these three longings.

What three?

The longing for sensual delights,
the longing for becoming,
the longing for the holy life.

These, monks, are the three longings.

It is for the abandoning of these three longings, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

§

Sutta 68

Conceits

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these three conceits.

What three?

The 'better am I' conceit,
the 'equal am I' conceit,
the 'worse am I' conceit.

These are the three conceits.

It is for the full comprehension
of these three conceits, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power is to be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are

investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these three conceits.

What three?

The 'better am I' conceit,
the 'equal am I' conceit,
the 'worse am I' conceit.

These are the three conceits.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these three conceits, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power is to be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,

together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these three conceits.

What three?

The 'better am I' conceit,
the 'equal am I' conceit,
the 'worse am I' conceit.

These are the three conceits.

It is for the wearing out of these three conceits, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these three conceits.

What three?

The 'better am I' conceit,
the 'equal am I' conceit,
the 'worse am I' conceit.

These are the three conceits.

It is for the abandoning of these three conceits, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

§

Sutta 69

Āsava

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are three āsavas.

What three?

The āsava of sensual delight,
the āsava of becoming,
the āsava of nescience.

These are the three.

It is for the full comprehension
of these three āsavas, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power is to be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are three āsavas.

What three?

The āsava of sensual delight,
the āsava of becoming,
the āsava of nescience.

These are the three.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these three āsavas, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power is to be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are three āsavas.

What three?

The āsava of sensual delight,
the āsava of becoming,
the āsava of nescience.

These are the three.

It is for the wearing out of these three āsavas, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are three āsavas.

What three?

The āsava of sensual delight,
the āsava of becoming,
the āsava of nescience.

These are the three.

It is for the abandoning of these three āsava, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

§

Sutta 70

Becoming

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks there are three becomings.

What three?

Becoming in the sensuous world,
becoming in the world of form,
becoming in the formless world.

These are the three.

It is for the full comprehension
of these three becomings monks,
that the four bases of psychic power is to be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle."

---

b. Realization

"Monks there are three becomings.

What three?

Becoming in the sensuous world,
becoming in the world of form,
becoming in the formless world.

These are the three.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these three becomings, monks, that the four bases of psychic power is to be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks there are three becomings.

What three?

Becoming in the sensuous world,
becoming in the world of form,
becoming in the formless world.

These are the three.

It is for the wearing out of these three becomings, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks there are three becomings.

What three?

Becoming in the sensuous world,
becoming in the world of form,
becoming in the formless world.

These are the three.

It is for the abandoning of these three becomings, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

§

Sutta 71

Suffering

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these three forms of suffering.

What three?

The sort of suffering caused by pain,
the sort caused by the activities,
the sort of suffering caused by the changeable nature of things.

These are the three.

It is for the full comprehension
of these three forms of suffering monks,
that the four bases of psychic power is to be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these three forms of suffering.

What three?

The sort of suffering caused by pain,
the sort caused by the activities,
the sort of suffering caused by the changeable nature of things.

These are the three.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these three forms of suffering, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power is to be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these three forms of suffering.

What three?

The sort of suffering caused by pain,
the sort caused by the activities,
the sort of suffering caused by the changeable nature of things.

These are the three.

It is for the wearing out of these three forms of suffering, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these three forms of suffering.

What three?

The sort of suffering caused by pain,
the sort caused by the activities,
the sort of suffering caused by the changeable nature of things.

These are the three.

It is for the abandoning of these three forms of suffering, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

§

Sutta 72

Obstructions

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these three (mental) obstructions.

What three?|| ||

The obstruction of lust,
the obstruction of hatred,
the obstruction of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the full comprehension
of these three obstructions monks,
that the four bases of psychic power is to be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these three (mental) obstructions.

What three?|| ||

The obstruction of lust,
the obstruction of hatred,
the obstruction of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these three obstructions, monks, that the four bases of psychic power is to be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these three (mental) obstructions.

What three?|| ||

The obstruction of lust,
the obstruction of hatred,
the obstruction of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the wearing out of these three obstructions, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these three (mental) obstructions.

What three?|| ||

The obstruction of lust,
the obstruction of hatred,
the obstruction of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the abandoning of these three obstructions, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

§

Sutta 73

Stains

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these three stains.

What three?

The stain of lust,
the stain of hatred,
the stain of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the full comprehension
of these three stains, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power is to be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these three stains.

What three?

The stain of lust,
the stain of hatred,
the stain of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these three stains, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power is to be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these three stains.

What three?

The stain of lust,
the stain of hatred,
the stain of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the wearing out of these three stains, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these three stains.

What three?

The stain of lust,
the stain of hatred,
the stain of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the abandoning of these three stains, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

§

Sutta 74

Pains

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these three pains.

What three?

The pain of lust,
the pain of hatred,
the pain of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the full comprehension
of these three pains, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power is to be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these three pains.

What three?

The pain of lust,
the pain of hatred,
the pain of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these three pains, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power is to be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these three pains.

What three?

The pain of lust,
the pain of hatred,
the pain of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the wearing out of these three pains, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these three pains.

What three?

The pain of lust,
the pain of hatred,
the pain of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the abandoning of these three pains, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

§

Sutta 75

Feelings

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these three feelings.

What three?

Feeling that is pleasant,
feeling that is painful,
feeling that is neither pleasant nor painful.

These are the three.

It is for the full comprehension
of these three feelings, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power is to be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these three feelings.

What three?

Feeling that is pleasant,
feeling that is painful,
feeling that is neither pleasant nor painful.

These are the three.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these three feelings, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power is to be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these three feelings.

What three?

Feeling that is pleasant,
feeling that is painful,
feeling that is neither pleasant nor painful.

These are the three.

It is for the wearing out of these three feelings, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these three feelings.

What three?

Feeling that is pleasant,
feeling that is painful,
feeling that is neither pleasant nor painful.

These are the three.

It is for the abandoning of these three feelings, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

§

Sutta 76

Craving

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there axe these three cravings.

What three?

The craving for sensual delights,
the craving for becoming,
the craving for ceasing to become.

These are the three.

It is for the full comprehension
of these three cravings, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power is to be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there axe these three cravings.

What three?

The craving for sensual delights,
the craving for becoming,
the craving for ceasing to become.

These are the three.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these three cravings, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power is to be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there axe these three cravings.

What three?

The craving for sensual delights,
the craving for becoming,
the craving for ceasing to become.

These are the three.

It is for the wearing out of these three cravings, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there axe these three cravings.

What three?

The craving for sensual delights,
the craving for becoming,
the craving for ceasing to become.

These are the three.

It is for the abandoning of these three cravings, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
51. Iddhi-Pāda Saṃyutta
8. Ogha Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

51. Kindred Sayings on the Bases of Psychic Power

8. The Flood

Suttas 77-86

---

[260]

Sutta 77

The Flood

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four floods.

What four?

The flood of sensual desire,
the flood of becoming,
the flood of view,
the flood of nescience.

These are the four floods.

It is for the full comprehension of these four floods, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these four floods.

What four?

The flood of sensual desire,
the flood of becoming,
the flood of view,
the flood of nescience.

These are the four floods.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these four floods, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these four floods.

What four?

The flood of sensual desire,
the flood of becoming,
the flood of view,
the flood of nescience.

These are the four floods.

It is for the wearing out of these four floods, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these four floods.

What four?

The flood of sensual desire,
the flood of becoming,
the flood of view,
the flood of nescience.

These are the four floods.

It is for the abandoning of these four floods, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

§

Sutta 78

Bond

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four bonds.

What four?

The bond of sensual desire,
the bond of becoming,
the bond of view,
the bond of nescience.

These are the four bonds.

It is for the full comprehension of these four bonds, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these four bonds.

What four?

The bond of sensual desire,
the bond of becoming,
the bond of view,
the bond of nescience.

These are the four bonds.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these four bonds, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these four bonds.

What four?

The bond of sensual desire,
the bond of becoming,
the bond of view,
the bond of nescience.

These are the four bonds.

It is for the wearing out of these four bonds, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are

investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these four bonds.

What four?

The bond of sensual desire,
the bond of becoming,
the bond of view,
the bond of nescience.

These are the four bonds.

It is for the abandoning these four bonds, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are

energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

§

Sutta 79

Grasping

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four graspings.

What four?

The grasping of sensual desire,
the grasping of view,
the grasping of rite and ritual,
the grasping of the self-heresy.

These are the four graspings.

It is for the full comprehension of these four graspings, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these four graspings.

What four?

The grasping of sensual desire,
the grasping of view,
the grasping of rite and ritual,
the grasping of the self-heresy.

These are the four graspings.

It is for the realization (of the meaning) of these four graspings, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these four graspings.

What four?

The grasping of sensual desire,
the grasping of view,
the grasping of rite and ritual,
the grasping of the self-heresy.

These are the four graspings.

It is for the wearing out of these four graspings, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these four graspings.

What four?

The grasping of sensual desire,
the grasping of view,
the grasping of rite and ritual,
the grasping of the self-heresy.

These are the four graspings.

It is for the abandoning of these four graspings, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

§

Sutta 80

(Bodily) Ties

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four (bodily) ties.

What four?

The bodily tie of covetousness,
the bodily tie of malevolence,
the bodily tie of contagion of rite and ritual,
the bodily tie of tendency to dogmatic view.

These are the four bodily ties.

It is for the full comprehension of these four bodily ties, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these four (bodily) ties.

What four?

The bodily tie of covetousness,
the bodily tie of malevolence,
the bodily tie of contagion of rite and ritual,
the bodily tie of tendency to dogmatic view.

These are the four bodily ties.

It is for the realization (of the meaning) of these four bodily ties, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these four (bodily) ties.

What four?

The bodily tie of covetousness,
the bodily tie of malevolence,
the bodily tie of contagion of rite and ritual,
the bodily tie of tendency to dogmatic view.

These are the four bodily ties.

It is for the wearing out of these four bodily ties, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these four (bodily) ties.

What four?

The bodily tie of covetousness,
the bodily tie of malevolence,
the bodily tie of contagion of rite and ritual,
the bodily tie of tendency to dogmatic view.

These are the four bodily ties.

It is for the abandoning of these four bodily ties, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

§

Sutta 81

Tendency

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these seven tendencies.

What seven?

The tendency to sensual lust,
the tendency to resentment,
the tendency to view,
the tendency to doubt and wavering,
the tendency to conceit,
the tendency to nescience.

These are the seven tendencies.

It is for the full comprehension of these seven tendencies, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,

together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these seven tendencies.

What seven?

The tendency to sensual lust,
the tendency to resentment,
the tendency to view,
the tendency to doubt and wavering,
the tendency to conceit,
the tendency to nescience.

These are the seven tendencies.

It is for the realization (of the meaning) of these seven tendencies, monks, that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these seven tendencies.

What seven?

The tendency to sensual lust,
the tendency to resentment,
the tendency to view,
the tendency to doubt and wavering,
the tendency to conceit,
the tendency to nescience.

These are the seven tendencies.

It is for the wearing out of these seven tendencies, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these seven tendencies.

What seven?

The tendency to sensual lust,
the tendency to resentment,
the tendency to view,
the tendency to doubt and wavering,
the tendency to conceit,
the tendency to nescience.

These are the seven tendencies.

It is for the abandoning of these seven tendencies, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

§

Sutta 82

The Sense-Pleasures

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five pleasures of sense.

What five?

There are objects cognizable by the eye,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are sounds cognizable by the ear,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are scents cognizable by the nose,
objects desirable,

pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are savours cognizable by the tongue,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are tangibles cognizable by the body,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

These are the five pleasures of sense.

It is for the full comprehension of these five pleasures of sense, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these five pleasures of sense.

What five?

There are objects cognizable by the eye,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are sounds cognizable by the ear,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are scents cognizable by the nose,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are savours cognizable by the tongue,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are tangibles cognizable by the body,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

These are the five pleasures of sense.

It is for the realization (of the meaning) of these five pleasures of sense, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these five pleasures of sense.

What five?

There are objects cognizable by the eye,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are sounds cognizable by the ear,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are scents cognizable by the nose,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are savours cognizable by the tongue,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are tangibles cognizable by the body,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

These are the five pleasures of sense.

It is for the wearing out of these five pleasures of sense, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these five pleasures of sense.

What five?

There are objects cognizable by the eye,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are sounds cognizable by the ear,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are scents cognizable by the nose,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are savours cognizable by the tongue,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are tangibles cognizable by the body,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

These are the five pleasures of sense.

It is for the abandoning of these five pleasures of sense, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are

investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

§

Sutta 83

Hindrances

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five hindrances.

What five?

The hindrance of sensual desire,
the hindrance of malevolence,
the hindrance of sloth and torpor,

the hindrance of excitement and flurry,
the hindrance of doubt and wavering.

These are the five hindrances.

It is for the full comprehension of these five pleasures of sense, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these five hindrances.

What five?

The hindrance of sensual desire,
the hindrance of malevolence,
the hindrance of sloth and torpor,
the hindrance of excitement and flurry,
the hindrance of doubt and wavering.

These are the five hindrances.

It is for the realization (of the meaning) of these five hindrances, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these five hindrances.

What five?

The hindrance of sensual desire,
the hindrance of malevolence,
the hindrance of sloth and torpor,
the hindrance of excitement and flurry,
the hindrance of doubt and wavering.

These are the five hindrances.

It is for the wearing out of these five hindrances, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these five hindrances.

What five?

The hindrance of sensual desire,
the hindrance of malevolence,
the hindrance of sloth and torpor,
the hindrance of excitement and flurry,
the hindrance of doubt and wavering.

These are the five hindrances.

It is for the abandoning of these five hindrances, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

§

Sutta 84

Factors

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five factors of grasping.

What five?

The factor of grasping of body,
the factor of grasping of feeling,
the factor of grasping of perception,
the factor of grasping of the activities,
the factor of grasping of consciousness.

These are the five factors of grasping.

It is for the full comprehension of these five factors of grasping, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,

together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these five factors of grasping.

What five?

The factor of grasping of body,
the factor of grasping of feeling,
the factor of grasping of perception,
the factor of grasping of the activities,
the factor of grasping of consciousness.

These are the five factors of grasping.

It is for the realization (of the meaning) of these five factors of grasping, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these five factors of grasping.

What five?

The factor of grasping of body,
the factor of grasping of feeling,
the factor of grasping of perception,

the factor of grasping of the activities,
the factor of grasping of consciousness.

These are the five factors of grasping.

It is for the wearing out of these five factors of grasping, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these five factors of grasping.

What five?

The factor of grasping of body,
the factor of grasping of feeling,
the factor of grasping of perception,
the factor of grasping of the activities,
the factor of grasping of consciousness.

These are the five factors of grasping.

It is for the abandoning of these five factors of grasping, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

§

Sutta 85

The Lower Set (of Fetters)

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there is this set of five lower fetters.

What five?

The individual-group-view,
doubt and wavering,
contagion of rite and ritual,
desire and lust,
malevolence.

These are the five lower fetters.

It is for the full comprehension of these five lower fetters, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there is this set of five lower fetters.

What five?

The individual-group-view,
doubt and wavering,
contagion of rite and ritual,
desire and lust,
malevolence.

These are the five lower fetters.

It is for the realization (of the meaning) of these five lower fetters, monks, that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,

together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there is this set of five lower fetters.

What five?

The individual-group-view,
doubt and wavering,
contagion of rite and ritual,
desire and lust,
malevolence.

These are the five lower fetters.

It is for the wearing out of these five lower fetters, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there is this set of five lower fetters.

What five?

The individual-group-view,
doubt and wavering,
contagion of rite and ritual,
desire and lust,
malevolence.

These are the five lower fetters.

It is for the abandoning of these five lower fetters, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors

of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

§

Sutta 86

The Higher Set (of Fetters)

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there is this set of five higher fetters.

What five?

Lust of form,
lust of the formless,
conceit,
excitement,
nescience.

These are the five higher fetters.

It is for the full comprehension of these five higher fetters, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there is this set of five higher fetters.

What five?

Lust of form,
lust of the formless,
conceit,
excitement,
nescience.

These are the five higher fetters.

It is for the realization (of the meaning) of these five higher fetters, monks, that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there is this set of five higher fetters.

What five?

Lust of form,
lust of the formless,
conceit,

excitement,
nescience.

These are the five higher fetters.

It is for the wearing out of these five higher fetters, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there is this set of five higher fetters.

What five?

Lust of form,
lust of the formless,
conceit,
excitement,
nescience.

These are the five higher fetters.

It is for the abandoning of these five higher fetters, monks,
that the four bases of psychic power must be cultivated.

What four bases of psychic power?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are
investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration
and struggle."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
52. Anuruddha Saṃyutta
1. Raho-Gata Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

52. Kindred Sayings about Anuruddha

1. In Solitude

Sutta 1

Paṭhama Raho-Gata Suttaṃ

In Solitude (a)

---

[261]

THUS have I heard:

Once the venerable Anuruddha was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now when the venerable Anuruddha was meditating in solitude
this train of thought occurred to him:

"Whosoever neglect the four arisings of mindfulness,
by them also is neglected
the Ariyan way that goes on to the utter destruction of ill.

Whosoever undertake the four arisings of mindfulness,
by them also is undertaken
the Ariyan way that goes on to the utter destruction of ill."

■

Now the venerable Moggallāna the Great,
reading with his mind
the train of thought
in the mind of the venerable Anuruddha, -
just as a strong man might stretch out his bent arm, or draw in his outstretched arm, - even so did he appear before the venerable Anuruddha
and said this to him:

"Friend Anuruddha, to what extent are the four arisings of mindfulness undertaken?"

§

"Friend, a monk dwells contemplating the rise of things[1] as regards his own personal body;[ed1]

he dwells contemplating the fall of things as regards his own personal body;

being ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

■

As regards externals
he dwells contemplating the rise of things in body;

As regards externals
he dwells contemplating the fall of [262] things in body;

being ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

.

■

Both as regards his own person and as regards externals, he dwells in body[ed2] contemplating the rise of things in body;

Both as regards his own person and as regards externals,
he dwells in body contemplating the fall of things in body;

Both as regards his own person and as regards externals,
he dwells in body contemplating both the rise and fall of things in body;

being ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

■

If he desires:

'Let me dwell
conscious of repulsion

in what is not repulsive,' -
he does so.

If he desires:

'Let me dwell
unconscious of repulsion
in what is repulsive,' -
he does so.

If he desires:

'Let me dwell
conscious of repulsion
in what is both not repulsive and repulsive,' -
he does so.

If he desires:

'Let me dwell
unconscious of repulsion
in the repulsive
and not repulsive alike,' -
he does so.

If he desires:

'Avoiding both the not repulsive
and the repulsive,
let me dwell indifferent,
mindful
and self-possessed,' -
he does so.

§

"He dwells contemplating the rise of things as regards his own personal feelings;[ed3]

he dwells contemplating the fall of things as regards his own personal feelings;

being ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

■

As regards externals
he dwells contemplating the rise of things in feelings;

As regards externals
he dwells contemplating the fall of things in feelings;

being ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

.

■

Both as regards his own person and as regards externals, he dwells in feelings contemplating the rise of things in feelings

Both as regards his own person and as regards externals, he dwells in feelings contemplating the fall of things in feelings

Both as regards his own person and as regards externals, he dwells in feelings contemplating both the rise and fall of things in feelings;

being ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining[2] the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

.

■

If he desires:

'Let me dwell
conscious of repulsion
in what is not repulsive,' -
he does so.

If he desires:

'Let me dwell
unconscious of repulsion
in what is repulsive,' -
he does so.

If he desires:

'Let me dwell
conscious of repulsion
in what is both not repulsive and repulsive,' -
he does so.

If he desires:

'Let me dwell
unconscious of repulsion
in the repulsive
and not repulsive alike,' -
he does so.

If he desires:

Avoiding both the not repulsive
and the repulsive,
let me dwell indifferent,
mindful
and self-possessed,' -
he does so.

§

"He dwells contemplating the rise of things
as regards his own personal mind;

he dwells contemplating the fall of things
as regards his own personal mind;

being ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

■

As regards externals
he dwells contemplating the rise of things in mind;

As regards externals
he dwells contemplating the fall of things in mind;

being ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

.

■

Both as regards his own person and as regards externals,
he dwells in mind contemplating the rise of things in mind;

Both as regards his own person and as regards externals,
he dwells in mind contemplating the fall of things in mind;

Both as regards his own person and as regards externals,
he dwells in mind contemplating both the rise and fall of things in mind;

being ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

.

■

If he desires:

'Let me dwell
conscious of repulsion

in what is not repulsive,' -
he does so.

If he desires:

'Let me dwell
unconscious of repulsion
in what is repulsive,' -
he does so.

If he desires:

'Let me dwell
conscious of repulsion
in what is both not repulsive and repulsive,' -
he does so.

If he desires:

'Let me dwell
unconscious of repulsion
in the repulsive
and not repulsive alike,' -
he does so.

If he desires:

Avoiding both the not repulsive
and the repulsive,
let me dwell indifferent,
mindful
and self-possessed,' -
he does so.

§

"He dwells contemplating [263] the rise of things
as regards his own personal mind-states;

he dwells contemplating the fall of things
as regards his own personal mind-states;

being ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

■

As regards externals
he dwells contemplating the rise of things in mind-states;

As regards externals
he dwells contemplating the fall of things in mind-states;

being ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

.

■

Both as regards his own person and as regards externals, he dwells in mind-states contemplating the rise of things in mind-states;

Both as regards his own person and as regards externals, he dwells in mind-states contemplating the fall of things in mind-states;

Both as regards his own person and as regards externals, he dwells in mind-states contemplating both the rise and fall of things in mind-states;

being ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

.

■

If he desires:

'Let me dwell
conscious of repulsion
in what is not repulsive,' -
he does so.

If he desires:

'Let me dwell
unconscious of repulsion
in what is repulsive,' -
he does so.

If he desires:

'Let me dwell
conscious of repulsion
in what is both not repulsive and repulsive,' -
he does so.

If he desires:

'Let me dwell
unconscious of repulsion
in the repulsive
and not repulsive alike,' -
he does so.

If he desires:

Avoiding both the not repulsive
and the repulsive,
let me dwell indifferent,
mindful
and self-possessed,' -
he does so.

Thus far, friend, the four arisings of mindfulness are undertaken by a monk."

---

[1] Cf. Pts. of Contr., p. 105, 'the cause or genesis of (natal states) cognizable objects, ideas.' Cf. D. ii, 290 ff. (Mahā-Satipaṭṭhāna Sutta) and Introd. to Dialog. ii, 322 ff. (discussion of paṭṭhāna).

[2] Text joins (vineyyaloke) as if it were a gerundive.

[ed1] Woodward's abridgment indicates that these passages should be constructed to include 'feelings, mind, and mind-states' at this point. But the Pali and his completion of the sutta indicates that what is required is a repetition of the whole sequence once for each, 'body, feelings, mind, mind-states', which is what I have done here.

[ed2] Woodward has abridged these three passages and in so doing has altered the internal order which in the Pali is identical throughout the three passages and additionally he has inserted the idea 'dwells in body' which does not appear in this sutta but which does appear in both Satipaṭṭhāna Suttas. I have followed his construction but restored the order.

[ed3] Here and for 'mind' and 'mind-states' Woodward changes his contstruction to: "Inwardly as regards ~ he dwells ...". I have retained his first construction to parallel the consistency of the Pali.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
52. Anuruddha Saṃyutta
1. Raho-Gata Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

52. Kindred Sayings about Anuruddha

1. In Solitude

Sutta 2

Dutiya Raho-Gata Suttaṃ

In Solitude (b)

---

[263]

THUS have I heard:

Once the venerable Anuruddha was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now when the venerable Anuruddha was meditating in solitude
this train of thought occurred to him:

"Whosoever neglect the four arisings of mindfulness,
by them also is neglected
the Ariyan way that goes on to the utter destruction of ill.

Whosoever undertake the four arisings of mindfulness,
by them also is undertaken
the Ariyan way that goes on to the utter destruction of ill."

■

Now the venerable Moggallāna the Great,
reading with his mind
the train of thought
in the mind of the venerable Anuruddha, -
just as a strong man might stretch out his bent arm, or draw in his outstretched arm, -
even so did he appear before the venerable Anuruddha
and said this to him:

"Friend Anuruddha, to what extent are the four arisings of mindfulness undertaken?"[ed1]

§

"Friend, a monk dwells contemplating the rise of things
as regards his own personal body;

he dwells contemplating the fall of things
as regards his own personal body;

being ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

■

As regards externals
he dwells contemplating the rise of things in body;

As regards externals
he dwells contemplating the fall of things in body;

being ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

.

■

Both as regards his own person
and as regards externals,
he dwells in body
contemplating the rise of things in body;

Both as regards his own person
and as regards externals,
he dwells in body
contemplating the fall of things in body;

Both as regards his own person
and as regards externals,
he dwells in body
contemplating both the rise and fall of things in body;

being ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

§

He dwells contemplating the rise of things
as regards his own personal feelings;

he dwells contemplating the fall of things
as regards his own personal feelings;

being ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

■

As regards externals
he dwells contemplating the rise of things in feelings;

As regards externals
he dwells contemplating the fall of things in feelings;

being ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

.

■

Both as regards his own person
and as regards externals,

he dwells in feelings
contemplating the rise of things in feelings

Both as regards his own person
and as regards externals,
he dwells in feelings
contemplating the fall of things in feelings

Both as regards his own person and as regards externals,
he dwells in feelings
contemplating both the rise and fall of things in feelings;

being ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

.

§

"He dwells contemplating the rise of things
as regards his own personal mind;

he dwells contemplating the fall of things
as regards his own personal mind;

being ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

■

As regards externals
he dwells contemplating the rise of things in mind;

As regards externals
he dwells contemplating the fall of things in mind;

being ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

.

■

Both as regards his own person
and as regards externals,
he dwells in mind contemplating the rise of things in mind;

Both as regards his own person
and as regards externals,
he dwells in mind contemplating the fall of things in mind;

Both as regards his own person
and as regards externals,
he dwells in mind contemplating both the rise and fall of things in mind;

being ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

.

§

"He dwells contemplating the rise of things
as regards his own personal mind-states;

he dwells contemplating the fall of things
as regards his own personal mind-states;

being ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

■

As regards externals
he dwells contemplating the rise of things in mind-states;

As regards externals
he dwells contemplating the fall of things in mind-states;

being ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

.

■

Both as regards his own person
and as regards externals,

he dwells in mind-states contemplating the rise of things in mind-states;

Both as regards his own person
and as regards externals,
he dwells in mind-states
contemplating the fall of things in mind-states;

Both as regards his own person
and as regards externals,
he dwells in mind-states contemplating both the rise and fall of things in mind-states;

being ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

.

Thus far, friend, the four arisings of mindfulness are undertaken by a monk."

---

ed1 Woodward's abridgment indicates that this sutta follows the previous sutta exactly whereas it actually eliminates the refrain concerning what the bhikkhu may wish.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
52. Anuruddha Saṃyutta
1. Raho-Gata Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

52. Kindred Sayings about Anuruddha

1. In Solitude

Sutta 3

Sutanu Suttaṃ

Sutanu

---

[263]

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the venerable Anuruddha was staying on the bank of the river Sutanu[1] at Sāvatthī

[264] Now a number of monks came to visit the venerable Anuruddha,
and on coming to him
greeted him courteously and,
after the exchange of greetings and courtesies,
sat down at one side.

So seated those monks said this:

"By cultivating
and making much of what conditions
has the venerable Anuruddha attained great supernormal power?"

■

"Friends, it is by cultivating
and making much of
four arisings of mindfulness that I have done so.

What four?

Herein, friends, I dwell in body contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

So also, friends, I dwell in feelings contemplating feelings
(as transient),
ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

I dwell in mind contemplating mind
(as transient),
ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,

by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

I dwell in mind-states contemplating mind-states
(as transient),
ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

■

It is by cultivating
and making much of
these four arisings of mindfulness, friends,
that I have come by great supernormal power.

Moreover, friends, by cultivating
and making much of
these four arisings of mindfulness, I can recognize a mean state as mean, a middling state as middling, and an excellent state as excellent."[2]

---

[1] I have not met this name elsewhere.

[2] Comy. 'What states are mean? The twelve unprofitable intentions. ... What are the middling states? That which is profitable on three grounds: its fruit on three grounds; action that makes no difference (kiriy'abyākataṇ) on three grounds; and all body (rūpa). What states are excellent? The four paths in full, the four fruits of a recluse's life, and Nibhāna.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
52. Anuruddha Saṃyutta
1. Raho-Gata Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

52. Kindred Sayings about Anuruddha

1. In Solitude

Suttas 4-6

---

[264]

Sutta 4

Paṭhama Kaṇṭakī Suttaṃ

Cactus Grove (a)

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the venerable Anuruddha, Sāriputta and Moggallāna the Great were staying at Sāketa, in Cactus Grove.[1]

Then the venerable Sāriputta
and Moggallāna the Great,
rising at eventide from their solitude,

went to visit the venerable Anuruddha,
and on coming to him
greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and courtesies
sat down at one side.

As they thus sat
the venerable Sāriputta said this
to the venerable Anuruddha:

[265] "Friend Anuruddha,
what states should be abandoned
by a monk who is a pupil, after he has attained them?"

■

"Friend Sāriputta,
the four arisings of mindfulness should be abandoned
by a monk who is a pupil, after he has attained them.

What four?

Herein, friend, a monk dwells in body contemplating body
(as transient),
ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

So also, friend, a monk dwells in feelings contemplating feelings
(as transient),
ardent,
self-possessed

and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

So also, friend, a monk dwells in mind contemplating mind
(as transient),
ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

So also, friend, a monk dwells in mind-states contemplating mind-states
(as transient),
ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

By a monk who is a pupil, friend Sāriputta,
these four arisings of mindfulness
should be abandoned
after he has attained them."

Sutta 5

Dutiya Kaṇṭakī Suttaṃ

Cactus Grove (b)

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the venerable Anuruddha, Sāriputta and Moggallāna the Great were staying at Sāketa,
in Cactus Grove.

Then the venerable Sāriputta
and Moggallāna the Great,
rising at eventide from their solitude,
went to visit the venerable Anuruddha,
and on coming to him
greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and courtesies
sat down at one side.

As they thus sat
the venerable Sāriputta said this
to the venerable Anuruddha:

"Friend Anuruddha,
what states should be abandoned
by a monk who is an adept, after he has attained them?"[ed1]

■

"Friend Sāriputta,
the four arisings of mindfulness
should be abandoned
by a monk who is an adept,
after he has attained them.

What four?

Herein, friend, a monk dwells in body contemplating body
(as transient),

ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

So also, friend, a monk dwells in feelings contemplating feelings
(as transient),
ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

So also, friend, a monk dwells in mind contemplating mind
(as transient),
ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

So also, friend, a monk dwells in mind-states contemplating mind-states
(as transient),
ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

By a monk who is an adept, friend Sāriputta,
these four arisings of mindfulness
should be abandoned
after he has attained them."

Sutta 6

Tatiya Kaṇṭakī Suttaṃ

Cactus Grove (c)

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the venerable Anuruddha, Sāriputta and Moggallāna the Great were staying at Sāketa, in Cactus Grove.

Then the venerable Sāriputta
and Moggallāna the Great,
rising at eventide from their solitude,
went to visit the venerable Anuruddha,
and on coming to him
greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and courtesies
sat down at one side.

As they thus sat
the venerable Sāriputta said this
to the venerable Anuruddha:

"Friend Anuruddha,
by cultivating
and making much of what conditions have you come by such mighty magic power and majesty?"

■

"Friend, it is by cultivating
and making much of

four arisings of mindfulness
that I have done so.

What four?

Herein, friend, I dwell in body contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

So also, friend, I dwell in feelings contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

I dwell in mind contemplating mind
(as transient),
ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

I dwell in mind-states contemplating mind-states
(as transient),
ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

It is by cultivating
and making much of
these four arisings of mindfulness, friend, that I have come by mighty magic power and majesty.

Moreover, friend, it is by cultivating
and making much of
these four arisings of mindfulness,
that I have come to comprehend the thousandfold world-system."

---

[1] Kaṇtakī-vana, supra, text, 174. Comy. (reading Tikaṇṭakī-, calls it mahā karamadda-vana, which, according to Childers, is Carissa carandas, a sort of shrub). Cf. supra, 176, [? 175?] infra, 303 of text. [?]

[ed1] Woodward changes the phrasing here slightly: "Friend, Anuruddha, by a monk who is an adept what states should be abandoned ..." I have retained his original wording to parallel the Pali.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
52. Anuruddha Saṃyutta
1. Raho-Gata Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

52. Kindred Sayings about Anuruddha

1. In Solitude

Sutta 7

Taṇha-k-Khaya Suttaṃ

The Destruction of Craving

---

[266]

THUS have I heard:

Once the venerable Anuruddha was staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the venerable Anuruddha addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the venerable Anuruddha.

Thereupon the venerable Anuruddha addressed the monks, saying:

"Friends, these four arisings of mindfulness,
if cultivated
and made much of,
conduce to the destruction of craving.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells in body contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

So also he dwells in feelings contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

He dwells in mind contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

He dwells in mind-states contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
self-possessed

and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

"Friends, these four arisings of mindfulness,
if cultivated
and made much of,
conduce to the destruction of craving."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
52. Anuruddha Saṃyutta
1. Raho-Gata Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

52. Kindred Sayings about Anuruddha

1. In Solitude

Sutta 8

Salaḷā-Gāra Suttaṃ

Sāl-tree Hut

---

[266]

THUS have I heard:

Once the venerable Anuruddha was staying near Sāvatthī at Sāl-tree Hut.[1]

Then the venerable Anuruddha addressed the monks,
saying:

"Friends, take the case of the river Ganges which flows to the east,
slides to the east,
tends to the east.

Then there comes a great crowd of folk with pick and basket
saying:

'We will make this river Ganges flow,
slide
and tend to the west.'

Now what think ye, friends?

Could that great crowd of folk make the river Ganges
flow,
slide
and tend to the west?"[2]

"Surely not, friend.

And why not?

It is because, as the river Ganges
flows,
slides
and tends to the east,
it were no easy thing
to make it flow
slide
tend to the west:
insomuch that fatigue and vexation
would be the lot
of that great crowd of folk."

"Just so, friends, in the case of a monk who is cultivating the four arisings of mindfulness and making much of them, suppose the rajah's royal ministers or his friends

or boon-companions
or kinsmen
or blood-relations
were to come to [267] that monk and tempt him with the offer of wealth,[3]
saying:

'Come, good man!

Why should these yellow robes torment you?

Why parade about with shaven crown and bowl?

Come!
Return to the lower life, enjoy possessions
and do deeds of merit.'

But, friends, for that monk, who is cultivating
and making much of
the four arisings of mindfulness, to reject the training and return to the lower life were a thing impossible.

Why so?

Because, friends,
as that monk's heart has for many a long day
been flowing,
sliding,

tending to seclusion,
for him to return to the lower life
were a thing impossible.

§

And how, friends,
does a monk cultivate,
make much of,
the four arisings of mindfulness?

Herein, friends,
a monk dwells in body contemplating body (as transient),
being ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting;

contemplating feelings in feelings (as transient),
being ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting;

contemplating mind in mind (as transient),
being ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,

by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting;

contemplating mind-states in mind-states (as transient),
(as transient),
being ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

That, friends, is how a monk cultivates, makes much of the four arisings of mindfulness."

---

[1] Salaḷāgāre. Comy. 'in a leaf-hut made of a sāl-tree, with a sāl-tree standing at the door. Hence the name.' Cf. JA. v, 430 - Mil. Panh. (trans.) ii, 224, where Rhys Davids says it is Sal or Hal = Shorea robusta.

[2] K.S. iv, 124; S. iv, 191.

[3] Lit. 'should offer by bringing up.' Abhihaṭṭhuṃ is ger. of abhihaṃsati. Pāli Dict. refs, to Vinaya Texts, ii, 440 n.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
52. Anuruddha Saṃyutta
1. Raho-Gata Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

52. Kindred Sayings about Anuruddha

1. In Solitude

Sutta 9

Sabba or Ambapāla Suttaṃ

The All or Ambapālī

---

[267]

THUS have I heard:

Once the venerable Anuruddha and Sāriputta were staying at Vesālī, in Ambapālī's Grove.[1]

Now the venerable Sāriputta,
rising from his solitude at eventide,
went to visit the venerable Anuruddha,
and on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and compliments
sat down at one side.

As he thus sat he said this to the venerable Anuruddha:

"Serene, friend Anuruddha, is your air![2]

Very clear and shining is your complexion!

In what manner of living does the venerable Anuruddha now generally spend his time?"

"Friend, my mind is well grounded in four arisings of mindfulness.

That is how I generally spend my time.

What are the four?

[268] Herein, friends, I dwell in body contemplating body
(as transient),
ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

So also, friends, I dwell in feelings contemplating feelings
(as transient),
ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

I dwell in mind contemplating mind
(as transient),

ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

I dwell in mind-states contemplating mind-states
(as transient),
ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

It is in these four arisings of mindfulness, friend, that my mind is well grounded, and that is how I generally spend my time.

Friend, the monk who is Arahant, who has destroyed the āsavas,
who has lived the life,
done his task,
lifted the burden,
won his own welfare,
who has worn out the fetters of becoming,
who has won full realization and is liberated, - such an one generally spends his time with mind well grounded in these four arisings of mindfulness."

"A gain for us, friend!

Well gotten by us, friend, that face to face with the venerable Anuruddha we have heard him utter his lordly utterance!"[3]

---

[1] Cf. supra, text, 142 n.

[2] Indriyāni, lit. 'sense-faculties.' Cf. K.S. ii, 186. [also: SN 3.28.1]

[3] Āsabhī-vācā ('bull-like'). Cf. D. ii, 15. Comy. calls it 'supreme utterance denoting the state of Arahantship.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
52. Anuruddha Saṃyutta
1. Raho-Gata Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

52. Kindred Sayings about Anuruddha

1. In Solitude

Sutta 10

Bāḷha-Gilāya or Gihīnaya or Gilāna Suttaṃ

Grievously Afflicted[1]

---

[268]

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the venerable Anuruddha was staying near Sāvatthī in Dark Wood, being sick and grievously afflicted.|| ||

Now a number of monks came to visit the venerable Anuruddha,
and on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and compliments
sat down at one side.

Seated at one side thy said:

"Pray what is the venerable Anuruddha's life, in that the painful feelings that come upon him make no impression on his mind?"[2]

"Friends, it is because I dwell with my mind well grounded in four arisings of mindfulness.

That is why the painful feelings that come upon me make no impression on my mind.

What are the four?

Herein, friends, I dwell in body contemplating body
(as transient),
ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

So also, friends, I dwell in feelings contemplating feelings
(as transient),
ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

I dwell in mind contemplating mind
(as transient),
ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

I dwell in mind-states contemplating mind-states
(as transient),
ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

It is because I thus dwell, friends, that the painful feelings that come upon me make no impression on my mind."

---

[1] Text has an alternative title Gihīnayo, which seems a corruption of Sinh. MSS. Uddāna has Bāḷhagilāyanaṇ.

[2] Cittaṇ na pariyādāya tiṭṭhanti ('lay hold of and remain'). Cf. S. ii, 235; iii, 101.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
52. Anuruddha Saṃyutta
2. Sahassa Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

52. Kindred Sayings about Anuruddha

2. Thousandfold

---

[269]

Sutta 11

Thousandfold

THUS have I heard:

Once the venerable Anuruddha was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a number of monks came to visit the venerable Anuruddha,
and on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and courtesies,
sat down at one side.

As they thus sat
those monks said this to the venerable Anuruddha:

"By cultivating and making much of what conditions
has the venerable Anuruddha
come by great supernormal power?"

"Friends, it is by cultivating and making much of
four arisings of mindfulness
that I have come by great supernormal power.

What are the four?

Herein, friends, I dwell in body contemplating body,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in feelings contemplating feelings,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in mind contemplating mind,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in mind-states contemplating mind-states,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

Moreover, friends, it is by the fact of cultivating and making much of
these four arisings of mindfulness
that I have come to comprehend the thousandfold world-system."

Sutta 12

Psychic power (a)

THUS have I heard:

Once the venerable Anuruddha was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a number of monks came to visit the venerable Anuruddha,
and on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and courtesies,
sat down at one side.

As they thus sat
those monks said this to the venerable Anuruddha:

"By cultivating and making much of what conditions
has the venerable Anuruddha
come by great supernormal power?"

"Friends, it is by cultivating and making much of
four arisings of mindfulness
that I have come by great supernormal power.

What are the four?

Herein, friends, I dwell in body contemplating body,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in feelings contemplating feelings,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in mind contemplating mind,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in mind-states contemplating mind-states,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

Moreover, friends, it is by cultivating and making much of
these four arisings of mindfulness I enjoy in divers ways manifold forms of magic power, thus:[ed1]

From being one I become many from being many I became one:
manifest or invisible
I go unhindered through a wall,
through a rampart,
through a mountain,
as if it were through air.

I plunge into the earth and shoot up again
as if in water.

I walk upon the water without parting it,
as if on solid ground.

I travel sitting cross-legged through the air,
like a bird upon the wing.

Even this moon and sun,
though they be of such mighty power and majesty,
I handle and stroke them with my hand.

Even as far as the Brahma World
I have power with my body."

Sutta 13

Psychic power (b)

THUS have I heard:

Once the venerable Anuruddha was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a number of monks came to visit the venerable Anuruddha,
and on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and courtesies,
sat down at one side.

As they thus sat
those monks said this to the venerable Anuruddha:

"By cultivating and making much of what conditions
has the venerable Anuruddha
come by great supernormal power?"

"Friends, it is by cultivating and making much of
four arisings of mindfulness

that I have come by great supernormal power.

What are the four?

Herein, friends, I dwell in body contemplating body,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in feelings contemplating feelings,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in mind contemplating mind,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in mind-states contemplating mind-states,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

Moreover, friends, it is by cultivating and making much of
these four arisings of mindfulness that with the deva-power of hearing,
purified and surpassing that of man,
I hear sounds both of devas and of men, both far and near."

Sutta 14

Thought-reading

THUS have I heard:

Once the venerable Anuruddha was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a number of monks came to visit the venerable Anuruddha,
and on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and courtesies,
sat down at one side.

As they thus sat
those monks said this to the venerable Anuruddha:

"By cultivating and making much of what conditions
has the venerable Anuruddha
come by great supernormal power?"

"Friends, it is by cultivating and making much of
four arisings of mindfulness
that I have come by great supernormal power.

What are the four?

Herein, friends, I dwell in body contemplating body,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in feelings contemplating feelings,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in mind contemplating mind,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in mind-states contemplating mind-states,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

Moreover, friends, it is by cultivating and making much of
these four arisings of mindfulness that with my mind
I read and know the minds of beings,
of other persons.

I know the lustful mind as lustful, of the mind that is free from lust I know it to be so, of the mind that is full of hate I know it to be so, of the mind that is free from hate I know it to be so, of the mind that is deluded I know it to be deluded, of the mind that is free from delusion I know it to be free, of the mind that is cramped, I know it to be cramped, of the mind that is diffuse, I know it to be diffuse, of the lofty mind I know it to be lofty, of the mean mind, I know it to be mean, of the mind which is inferior I know it to be so, of the mind that is superior I know it to be so,
Of the mind that is uncontrolled, I know it is uncontrolled, of the mind that is controlled I know it to be controlled, of the mind that is in bondage, I know it to be in bondage, of the mind that is liberated, I know it as liberated."

---

[270]

Sutta 15

Causal occasion (a)

THUS have I heard:

Once the venerable Anuruddha was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a number of monks came to visit the venerable Anuruddha,
and on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and courtesies,
sat down at one side.

As they thus sat
those monks said this to the venerable Anuruddha:

"By cultivating and making much of what conditions
has the venerable Anuruddha
come by great supernormal power?"

"Friends, it is by cultivating and making much of
four arisings of mindfulness
that I have come by great supernormal power.

What are the four?

Herein, friends, I dwell in body contemplating body,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in feelings contemplating feelings,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in mind contemplating mind,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in mind-states contemplating mind-states,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

Moreover, friends, it is by cultivating and making much of
these four arisings of mindfulness that I know as it really is the causal occasion[1] as such, and wbat is not the causal occasion as such."

Sutta 16

Causal occasion (b)

THUS have I heard:

Once the venerable Anuruddha was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a number of monks came to visit the venerable Anuruddha,
and on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and courtesies,
sat down at one side.

As they thus sat
those monks said this to the venerable Anuruddha:

"By cultivating and making much of what conditions
has the venerable Anuruddha
come by great supernormal power?"

"Friends, it is by cultivating and making much of
four arisings of mindfulness
that I have come by great supernormal power.

What are the four?

Herein, friends, I dwell in body contemplating body,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in feelings contemplating feelings,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in mind contemplating mind,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in mind-states contemplating mind-states,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

Moreover, friends, it is by cultivating and making much of
these four arisings of mindfulness that I know in its causal occasion and conditions the fruit of actions[2] done in past, future and present times."

Sutta 17

Practice

THUS have I heard:

Once the venerable Anuruddha was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a number of monks came to visit the venerable Anuruddha,
and on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and courtesies,
sat down at one side.

As they thus sat
those monks said this to the venerable Anuruddha:

"By cultivating and making much of what conditions
has the venerable Anuruddha
come by great supernormal power?"

"Friends, it is by cultivating and making much of
four arisings of mindfulness
that I have come by great supernormal power.

What are the four?

Herein, friends, I dwell in body contemplating body,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in feelings contemplating feelings,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in mind contemplating mind,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in mind-states contemplating mind-states,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

Moreover, friends, it is by cultivating and making much of
these four arisings of mindfulness that I know, as it really is, all the directions[3] whatsoever of each practice."

Sutta 18

The world

THUS have I heard:

Once the venerable Anuruddha was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a number of monks came to visit the venerable Anuruddha,
and on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and courtesies,
sat down at one side.

As they thus sat
those monks said this to the venerable Anuruddha:

"By cultivating and making much of what conditions
has the venerable Anuruddha
come by great supernormal power?"

"Friends, it is by cultivating and making much of
four arisings of mindfulness
that I have come by great supernormal power.

What are the four?

Herein, friends, I dwell in body contemplating body,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in feelings contemplating feelings,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in mind contemplating mind,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in mind-states contemplating mind-states,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

Moreover, friends, it is by cultivating and making much of
these four arisings of mindfulness that I know the world as it really is, in its divers shapes and forms."

Sutta 19

Of Divers Characters

THUS have I heard:

Once the venerable Anuruddha was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a number of monks came to visit the venerable Anuruddha,
and on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and courtesies,
sat down at one side.

As they thus sat
those monks said this to the venerable Anuruddha:

"By cultivating and making much of what conditions
has the venerable Anuruddha
come by great supernormal power?"

"Friends, it is by cultivating and making much of
four arisings of mindfulness
that I have come by great supernormal power.

What are the four?

Herein, friends, I dwell in body contemplating body,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in feelings contemplating feelings,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in mind contemplating mind,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in mind-states contemplating mind-states,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

Moreover, friends, it is by cultivating and making much of
these four arisings of mindfulness
that I know,
as they really are,
the divers characters of beings."[4]

Sutta 20

Faculty

THUS have I heard:

Once the venerable Anuruddha was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a number of monks came to visit the venerable Anuruddha,
and on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and courtesies,
sat down at one side.

As they thus sat
those monks said this to the venerable Anuruddha:

"By cultivating and making much of what conditions
has the venerable Anuruddha
come by great supernormal power?"

"Friends, it is by cultivating and making much of
four arisings of mindfulness
that I have come by great supernormal power.

What are the four?

Herein, friends, I dwell in body contemplating body,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in feelings contemplating feelings,
being ardent,

self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in mind contemplating mind,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in mind-states contemplating mind-states,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

Moreover, friends, it is by cultivating and making much of
these four arisings of mindfulness
that I know,
as they really are,
the natures of the minds of other beings,
of other persons."[5]

---

[271]

Sutta 21

Trance.[6]

THUS have I heard:

Once the venerable Anuruddha was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a number of monks came to visit the venerable Anuruddha,
and on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and courtesies,
sat down at one side.

As they thus sat
those monks said this to the venerable Anuruddha:

"By cultivating and making much of what conditions
has the venerable Anuruddha
come by great supernormal power?"

"Friends, it is by cultivating and making much of
four arisings of mindfulness
that I have come by great supernormal power.

What are the four?

Herein, friends, I dwell in body contemplating body,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in feelings contemplating feelings,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in mind contemplating mind,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in mind-states contemplating mind-states,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

Moreover, friends, it is by cultivating and making much of
these four arisings of mindfulness
that I know,
as they really are,
the corruption,
purification[7] and uprising[8] of the attainments in trance, liberation
and concentration."

Sutta 22

Knowledge (a)

THUS have I heard:

Once the venerable Anuruddha was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a number of monks came to visit the venerable Anuruddha,
and on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and courtesies,
sat down at one side.

As they thus sat
those monks said this to the venerable Anuruddha:

"By cultivating and making much of what conditions
has the venerable Anuruddha
come by great supernormal power?"

"Friends, it is by cultivating and making much of
four arisings of mindfulness
that I have come by great supernormal power.

What are the four?

Herein, friends, I dwell in body contemplating body,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in feelings contemplating feelings,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in mind contemplating mind,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in mind-states contemplating mind-states,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

Moreover, friends, it is by cultivating and making much of
these four arisings of mindfulness that I can remember my divers existences in the past, to wit:

One birth,
two births,
three, four, five,
even ten births,
twenty, thirty, forty, fifty births;

even a hundred births,
a thousand, a hundred thousand births.

I call to mind divers aeons of involution and evolution.

I know:

'Such was I by name,
such was I by clan,
by caste.

Thus was I nourished,
thus did I undergo pleasure and pain,
such was my span of life.'

I know:

'Thence I deceased
and rose up so and so.

There I dwelt,
of such and such a name,
of such a clan,
of such a caste,
so nourished;
such and such pleasure and pain did I undergo,
such my span of life.

Then deceased
I rose up in the present life.'

That is how
with all details and characteristics I can remember my divers existences in past time."

Sutta 23

Knowledge (b)

THUS have I heard:

Once the venerable Anuruddha was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a number of monks came to visit the venerable Anuruddha,
and on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and courtesies,
sat down at one side.

As they thus sat
those monks said this to the venerable Anuruddha:

"By cultivating and making much of what conditions
has the venerable Anuruddha
come by great supernormal power?"

"Friends, it is by cultivating and making much of
four arisings of mindfulness
that I have come by great supernormal power.

What are the four?

Herein, friends, I dwell in body contemplating body,
being ardent,

self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in feelings contemplating feelings,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in mind contemplating mind,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in mind-states contemplating mind-states,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

Moreover, friends, it is by cultivating and making much of
these four arisings of mindfulness that with the deva-sight, purified and surpassing that of men I behold beings:
as they decease and rise up (elsewhre) I discern them,
both mean and exalted,
of features fair and foul,
gone to weal or gone to woe,
according to their deeds,
thus:

'Alas! these good folk,
given to the practice of evil deeds,
of evil words,
of evil thoughts,
scoffing at the noble ones,

of perverted views
and reaping the fruit of their perverted views, —
these folk,
on the dissolution of the body,
after death arose again in the Waste,
the Downfall
and the Constant Round.

Ah! and these good folk,
given to the practice of good deeds,
of good words,
of good thoughts,
not scoffing at the noble ones,
of sound views
and reaping the fruits of their sound views, —
these beings,
on the dissolution of the body,
after death arose again in the Happy Way,
the Heaven World.'

Thus with deva-sight,
purified and surpassing that of man do I behold beings as they decease and rise up (elsewhere): I discern them, both mean and exalted,
of features fair and foul,
gone to weal or gone to woe according to their merits."

Sutta 24

Knowledge (c)

THUS have I heard:

Once the venerable Anuruddha was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a number of monks came to visit the venerable Anuruddha,
and on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and courtesies,
sat down at one side.

As they thus sat
those monks said this to the venerable Anuruddha:

"By cultivating and making much of what conditions
has the venerable Anuruddha
come by great supernormal power?"

"Friends, it is by cultivating and making much of
four arisings of mindfulness
that I have come by great supernormal power.

What are the four?

Herein, friends, I dwell in body contemplating body,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in feelings contemplating feelings,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in mind contemplating mind,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

I dwell in mind-states contemplating mind-states,
being ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful.

Moreover, friends, it is by cultivating and making much of
these four arisings of mindfulness,
by destroying the āsavas,
I realize in this very life, by my own unaided power, I attain and abide in that heart's release, that release by insight which is freed from the āsavas."

---

[1] Ṭhānaṃ. Cf. Pts. of Contr., 139; A. iii, 417, where Comy. paraphrases as kāraṇaṃ kāraṇato. Here Comy. says: 'Disciples have this knowledge partially (ehadesena), but omniscient Buddhas have it in every particular.' These powers are the attributes [or dasa-balānī] of the Tathāgata or of one who utters the bull-like utterance, enumerated at M. 1, 69 ff.

[2] Kamma-samādāna (text 266). Cf. Expositor ii, 399.

[3] Sabbattha-gāmini.

[4] Nānādhimuttikaṃ sattānaṃ (at M. i the reading is -muttikataṃ).

[5] Indriya-paro-pariyattiṃ (at M. i, -yattaṃ).

[6] Uddāna has jānaṃ; Sinh. MSS. jānana.

[7] Vodāna. Compend. 68, 4 'adoption (gotrabhu) receives the special name of the moment of purification.'

[8] Cf. Compend., 67.

[ed1] I have picked up the abridged passages from Woodwards translation of SN 5.51.11. He has made some changes as indicated in his abridgements which I have incorporated as I think appropriate.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
53. Jhāna Saṃyutta
1. Gaṇgā Peyyala

5. The Great Chapter

53. Kindred Sayings on the Four Trances[ed1]

1. Gangā-Repetition

Suttas 1-12

---

[272]

Sutta 1

Foremost in Purity:
(Ganges — Flowing and Sliding to Eastward)

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four trances.

What four?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

These, monks, are the four trances.

■

"Just as, monks, the river Ganges
flows to the East,
slides to the East,
tends to the East,
even so a monk,
by cultivating the four trances,
making much of the four trances,
flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna.

■

And how cultivating,
how making much of
the four trances
does a monk flow,
slide
and tend
to Nibbāna?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,

apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

That is how cultivating,
how making much of
the four trances
a monk flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna."

---

[273]

Sutta 2

Yamunā — Flowing and Sliding to Eastward

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, the river Yamunā
flows to the East,
slides to the East,
tends to the East,
even so a monk,
by cultivating the four trances,
making much of the four trances,
flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna.

And how cultivating,
how making much of
the four trances
does a monk flow,
slide
and tend
to Nibbāna?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,

enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

That is how cultivating,
how making much of
the four trances

a monk flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna."

Sutta 3

Acīravatī — Flowing and Sliding to Eastward

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, the river Acīravatī
flows to the East,
slides to the East,
tends to the East,
even so a monk,
by cultivating the four trances,
making much of the four trances,
flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna.

And how cultivating,
how making much of
the four trances
does a monk flow,
slide
and tend
to Nibbāna?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

That is how cultivating,
how making much of
the four trances
a monk flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna."

Sutta 4

Sarabhū — Flowing and Sliding to Eastward

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, the river Sarabhū
flows to the East,
slides to the East,
tends to the East,
even so a monk,
by cultivating the four trances,
making much of the four trances,
flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna.

And how cultivating,
how making much of
the four trances
does a monk flow,
slide
and tend
to Nibbāna?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

That is how cultivating,
how making much of
the four trances
a monk flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna."

Sutta 5

Mahī — Flowing and Sliding to Eastward

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, the river Mahī
flows to the East,
slides to the East,
tends to the East,
even so a monk,
by cultivating the four trances,
making much of the four trances,
flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna.

And how cultivating,
how making much of
the four trances
does a monk flow,
slide
and tend
to Nibbāna?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

That is how cultivating,
how making much of
the four trances
a monk flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna."

Sutta 6

Ganges, Yamunā, Acīravatī, Sarabhū, Mahī — Flowing and Sliding to Eastward

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, the river Ganges, Yamunā, Acīravatī, Sarabhū, Mahī
flows to the East,
slides to the East,
tends to the East,
even so a monk,
by cultivating the four trances,
making much of the four trances,
flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna.

And how cultivating,
how making much of
the four trances
does a monk flow,
slide

and tend
to Nibbāna?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,

which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

That is how cultivating,
how making much of
the four trances
a monk flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna."

Sutta 7

Ganges — Flowing and Sliding to the Ocean

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, the river Ganges
flows to the Ocean,
slides to the Ocean,
tends to the Ocean,
even so a monk,
by cultivating the four trances,

making much of the four trances,
flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna.

And how cultivating,
how making much of
the four trances
does a monk flow,
slide
and tend
to Nibbāna?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

That is how cultivating,
how making much of
the four trances
a monk flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna."

Sutta 8

Yamunā — Flowing and Sliding to the Ocean

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, the river Yamunā
flows to the Ocean,
slides to the Ocean,
tends to the Ocean,
even so a monk,
by cultivating the four trances,
making much of the four trances,
flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna.

And how cultivating,
how making much of
the four trances
does a monk flow,
slide
and tend
to Nibbāna?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,

that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

That is how cultivating,
how making much of
the four trances
a monk flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna."

Sutta 9

Acīravatī — Flowing and Sliding to the Ocean

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, the river Acīravatī
flows to the Ocean,
slides to the Ocean,
tends to the Ocean,
even so a monk,
by cultivating the four trances,
making much of the four trances,
flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna.

And how cultivating,
how making much of
the four trances
does a monk flow,
slide
and tend
to Nibbāna?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,

enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

That is how cultivating,
how making much of
the four trances

a monk flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna."

Sutta 10

Sarabhū — Flowing and Sliding to the Ocean

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, the river Sarabhū
flows to the Ocean,
slides to the Ocean,
tends to the Ocean,
even so a monk,
by cultivating the four trances,
making much of the four trances,
flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna.

And how cultivating,
how making much of
the four trances
does a monk flow,
slide
and tend
to Nibbāna?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

That is how cultivating,
how making much of
the four trances
a monk flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna."

Sutta 11

Mahī — Flowing and Sliding to the Ocean

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, the river Mahī
flows to the Ocean,
slides to the Ocean,
tends to the Ocean,
even so a monk,
by cultivating the four trances,
making much of the four trances,
flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna.

And how cultivating,
how making much of
the four trances
does a monk flow,
slide
and tend
to Nibbāna?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

That is how cultivating,
how making much of
the four trances
a monk flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna."

Sutta 12

Ganges, Yamunā, Acīravatī, Sarabhū, Mahī — Flowing and Sliding to the Ocean

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, the river Ganges, Yamunā, Acīravatī, Sarabhū, Mahī
flows to the Ocean,
slides to the Ocean,
tends to the Ocean,
even so a monk,
by cultivating the four trances,
making much of the four trances,
flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna.

And how cultivating,
how making much of
the four trances
does a monk flow,
slide
and tend
to Nibbāna?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

That is how cultivating,
how making much of
the four trances
a monk flows,
slides
and tends
to Nibbāna."

---

ed1 The PTS ed. has no title. I have used Woodward's translation of 'jhāna' for the title.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
53. Jhāna Saṃyutta
2. Appamāda Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

53. Kindred Sayings on the Four Trances

2. Earnestness

Suttas 13-22

---

[273]

Sutta 13

Tathāgata

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, of all creatures, whether footless or having two,
four,
or many feet;
whether having forms or formless;
whether conscious or unconscious,
or neither conscious nor unconscious, —
of these the Tathāgata,
the Arahant,
the fully Enlightened One,
is reckoned chief; —
even so, monks,
of all profitable conditions which are rooted in earnestness,
which join together in earnestness, —
of those conditions
earnestness is reckoned chief.

Of the earnest monk
it may be expected
that he will cultivate,
that he will make much of
the four trances."

And how, monks,
does a monk who is earnest
cultivate
and make much of
the four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

Thus, monks, a monk who is earnest
cultivates
and makes much of
the four trances."

Sutta 14

The Foot

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, of all the foot-characteristics
of such creatures as roam about
are joined together in the foot of the elephant,
and as the elephant's foot
in size
is reckoned chief,
even so, monks, of all profitable conditions
which are rooted in earnestness,
which join together in earnestness, —
of those conditions
earnestness is reckoned chief.

Of the earnest monk
it may be expected
that he will cultivate,
that he will make much of
the four trances."

And how, monks,
does a monk who is earnest
cultivate
and make much of
the four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,

entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

Thus, monks, a monk who is earnest
cultivates
and makes much of
the four trances."

Sutta 15

The Roof-peak

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, in a peaked house
all the rafters whatsoever
go together to the roof-peak,
slope to the roof-peak,

are joined together in the roof-peak,
and of them
the peak is reckoned chief, —
even so, monks, of all profitable conditions,
which are rooted in earnestness,
which join together in earnestness, —
of those conditions
earnestness is reckoned chief.

Of the earnest monk
it may be expected
that he will cultivate,
that he will make much of
the four trances."

And how, monks,
does a monk who is earnest
cultivate
and make much of
the four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,

which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

Thus, monks, a monk who is earnest
cultivates
and makes much of
the four trances."

Sutta 16

Wood

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, of all scented woods whatsoever
the dark sandal-wood is reckoned chief, —
even so of all profitable conditions,
which are rooted in earnestness,
which join together in earnestness, —
of those conditions
earnestness is reckoned chief.

Of the earnest monk
it may be expected
that he will cultivate,
that he will make much of
the four trances."

And how, monks,
does a monk who is earnest
cultivate
and make much of
the four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,

born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

Thus, monks, a monk who is earnest
cultivates
and makes much of
the four trances."

Sutta 17

Heart-wood

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, of all scented heart-woods whatsoever
the red saldal-wood is reckoned chief, —
even so, monks, of all profitable conditions,
which are rooted in earnestness,
which join together in earnestness, —
of those conditions
earnestness is reckoned chief.

Of the earnest monk
it may be expected
that he will cultivate,
that he will make much of
the four trances."

And how, monks,
does a monk who is earnest
cultivate
and make much of
the four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,

entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

Thus, monks, a monk who is earnest
cultivates
and makes much of
the four trances."

Sutta 18

Jasmine

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, of all scented flowers whatsoever
the jasmine is reckoned chief,
even so, monks, of all profitable conditions,
which are rooted in earnestness,

which join together in earnestness, —
of those conditions
earnestness is reckoned chief.

Of the earnest monk
it may be expected
that he will cultivate,
that he will make much of
the four trances."

And how, monks,
does a monk who is earnest
cultivate
and make much of
the four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,

mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

Thus, monks, a monk who is earnest
cultivates
and makes much of
the four trances."

Sutta 19

Prince

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, all petty princes whatsoever follow in the train of the universal monarch,
even so, monks, of all profitable conditions,
which are rooted in earnestness,
which join together in earnestness, —
of those conditions
earnestness is reckoned chief.

Of the earnest monk
it may be expected
that he will cultivate,
that he will make much of
the four trances."

And how, monks,
does a monk who is earnest
cultivate
and make much of
the four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

Thus, monks, a monk who is earnest
cultivates
and makes much of
the four trances."

Sutta 20

Moon

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, of all starry bodies whatsoever
the radiance does not equal one-sixteenth part
of the radiance of the moon;
just as the moon is reckoned chief of them,
even so, monks, of all profitable conditions,
which are rooted in earnestness,
which join together in earnestness, —
of those conditions
earnestness is reckoned chief.

Of the earnest monk
it may be expected
that he will cultivate,
that he will make much of
the four trances."

And how, monks,
does a monk who is earnest
cultivate

and make much of
the four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,

which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

Thus, monks, a monk who is earnest
cultivates
and makes much of
the four trances."

Sutta 21

Sun

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, in the autumn season,
when the sky is opened up
and cleared of clouds,
the sun,
leaping up into the firmament,
drives away all darkness,

and shines
and burns
and flashes forth,
even so, monks, of all profitable conditions,
which are rooted in earnestness,
which join together in earnestness, —
of those conditions
earnestness is reckoned chief.

Of the earnest monk
it may be expected
that he will cultivate,
that he will make much of
the four trances."

And how, monks,
does a monk who is earnest
cultivate
and make much of
the four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,

which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

Thus, monks, a monk who is earnest
cultivates
and makes much of
the four trances."

Sutta 22

Cloth

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, of all woven cloths whatsoever
the cloth of Benares is reckoned chief,
even so, monks, of all profitable conditions,
which are rooted in earnestness,
which join together in earnestness, —
of those conditions
earnestness is reckoned chief.

Of the earnest monk
it may be expected
that he will cultivate,
that he will make much of
the four trances."

And how, monks,
does a monk who is earnest
cultivate
and make much of
the four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,

born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

Thus, monks, a monk who is earnest
cultivates
and makes much of
the four trances."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
53. Jhāna Saṃyutta
3. Bala-Karaṇīya Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

53. Kindred Sayings on the Four Trances

3. Deeds Requiring Strength

Suttas 23-34

---

[273]

Sutta 23

Strength

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, whatsoever deeds requiring strength
are done,
all of them are done
in dependence on the earth,
with the earth for their support,
even so a monk,
depending on virtue,
supported by virtue,
cultivates the four trances,
makes much,
of the four trances.

And how does a monk,
depending on virtue,
supported by virtue,
cultivate the four trances,
make much,
of the four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

That is how a monk
depending on virtue,
supported by virtue,
cultivates the four trances,
makes much,
of the four trances."

Sutta 24

Seed

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, whatsoever species
of seed and vegetation
come to growth,
increase
and maturity,
all of them depend on the earth,
are supported by the earth;
even so, monks, a monk who,
depending on virtue,
supported by virtue,
cultivates and makes much of
the four trances,
attains growth,
increase
and maturity of conditions.

And how does a monk
depending on virtue,
supported by virtue,
cultivating and making much of
the four trances,
attain growth,
increase
and maturity of conditions?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

That is how a monk
depending on virtue,
supported by virtue,
cultivating and making much of
the four trances,
attains growth,
increase
and maturity of conditions."

Sutta 25

The Snake

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Supported, monks, by Himalaya,
lord of mountains,
snakes grow a body
and get strength.

When they have grown a body
and got strength there,
they go down to the tarns.

From the tarns
they go down to the lakes,

From the lakes
they go down to the small rivers,

From the small rivers
they go down to the great rivers,

From the great rivers
they go down to the sea,
the mighty ocean.

There they get great size and growth of body.

Just so, monks, a monk who,
depending on virtue,
supported by virtue,
cultivates and makes much of
the four trances,
attains growth,
increase
and maturity of conditions.

And how, monks, does a monk,
depending on virtue,
supported by virtue,
cultivates and makes much of
the four trances,
attain growth,
increase
and maturity of conditions?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

That is how a monk
depending on virtue,
supported by virtue,
cultivating and making much of
the four trances,
attains growth,
increase
and maturity of conditions."

Sutta 26

The Tree

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose a tree, monks,
that inclines to the east,
slopes to the east,
tends to the east.

When cut down at the root,
in what direction would it fall?"

"As it slopes,
as it inclines,
as it tends, lord."

"Well, monks, even so
a monk, cultivating and makng much of
the four trances,
inclines to Nibbāna,
slopes to Nibbāna,
tends to Nibbāna."

And how does a monk,
cultivating and makng much of
the four trances,
incline to Nibbāna,
slope to Nibbāna,
tend to Nibbāna,?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,

which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

That is how a monk,
cultivating and makng much of
the four trances,
inclines to Nibbāna,
slopes to Nibbāna,
tends to Nibbāna."

Sutta 27

The Pot

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as a pot,
if overset,
empties out its water,
and cannot take it in again,
even so a monk
who cultivates and makes much of
the four trances,
empties out ill, unprofitable states
and cannot take them in again.

And how, monks, can a monk,
by cultivating and makng much of
the four trances,
empty out ill, unprofitable states
and not take them in again?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,

zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

That is how a monk,
cultivating and makng much of
the four trances
empties out ill, unprofitable states
and not take them in again."

Sutta 28

Bearded Wheat

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose monks, the spike of bearded wheat
or bearded barley
be well aimed.

When pressed by hand or foot,
it is possible
that it will pierce hand or foot and draw blood.

Why so?

Because, monks,
the spike is well aimed.

Even so, monks,
owing to the right aim of way-culture
it is possible
that a monk will pierce ignorance,
will draw knowledge,
will realize Nibbāna,.

Why so?

Because, monks,
his view is well aimed.

And how, monks, does a monk
by view well aimed,
by well aimed way-culture
so pierce ignorance,
draw knowledge
and realize Nibbāna?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

That is how a monk,
by view well aimed,
by well aimed way-culture
pierces ignorance,
draws knowledge
and realizes Nibbāna."

Sutta 29

The Sky

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, divers winds blow in the sky, -
some winds blow from the east,
some winds blow from the west,
some winds blow from the north,
some winds blow from the south,
some winds are dusty,
some winds are dustless,
some winds are cool
some winds are hot
some winds are soft
some winds are boisterous.

Even so, monks,
when a monk cultivates the four trances, makes much of the four trances,
then in him
the four trances
by culture
reach fulfilment,
the four best efforts,
by culture
reach fulfilment,
the four trances,
by culture
reach fulfilment,
the four trances,

by culture
reach fulfilment,
the five powers
by culture
reach fulfilment,
the Ariyan eightfold way
by culture
reaches fulfilment.

And how, monks, when a monk cultivates the four trances, makes much of the four trances,
do the four trances
by culture
reach fulfilment,
the four best efforts,
by culture
reach fulfilment,
the four trances,
by culture
reach fulfilment,
the four trances,
by culture
reach fulfilment,
the five powers
by culture
reach fulfilment,
the Ariyan eightfold way
by culture
reaches fulfilment?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,

zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

That is how monks, when a monk cultivates the four trances,
makes much of the four trances,
the four trances
by culture
reach fulfilment,
the four best efforts,

by culture
reach fulfilment,
the four trances,
by culture
reach fulfilment,
the four trances,
by culture
reach fulfilment,
the five powers
by culture
reach fulfilment,
the Ariyan eightfold way
by culture
reaches fulfilment in him."

Sutta 30

The Rain-Cloud (a)

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, in the last month of the hot season
the dust and dirt fly up,
and then out of due season
a great rain-cloud in a moment
lays and makes them vanish, -
even so does a monk
who cultivates and makes much of
the four trances
lay and cause to vanish
the ill
unprofitable states
that rise from time to time.

And how does a monk
who cultivates and makes much of
the four trances
lay and cause to vanish
the ill
unprofitable states
that rise from time to time?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,

which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

That is how monks, when a monk cultivates the four trances,
makes much of the four trances,
a monk lays and causes to vanish
the ill,
unprofitable states
that rise
and rise again."

Sutta 31

The Rain-Cloud (b)

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, from time to time
a strong wind scatters
and causes to vanish
a great mass of clouds
that has arisen,
even so a monk who cultivates and makes much of
the four trances
from time to time
scatters and causes to vanish
the ill,
unprofitable states
that rise
and rise again.

And how does a monk who cultivates and makes much of
the four trances
from time to time
scatter and cause to vanish
the ill,
unprofitable states

that rise
and rise again?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,

which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

That is how monks, when a monk cultivates the four trances,
makes much of the four trances,
from time to time
scatters and causes to vanish
the ill,
unprofitable states
that rise
and rise again."

Sutta 32

The Ship

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, in the case of a sea-faring vessel rigged with masts and stays

and stranded on the bank,
for six months it is worn by the water,
while in the dry season
its rigging is spoiled by wind and sun:
then, overstrung by a shower
in the rainy season,
it is easily weakened
and rots away, -
just so, in a monk who cultivates and makes much of
the four trances
right easily the fetters are weakened
and rot away.

And how, monks, in one so cultivating and making much of
the four trances
are the fetters weakened
and rot away?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

That is how monks, in one so cultivating and making much of
the four trances
the fetters are weakened
and rot away."

Sutta 33

For All Comers

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose, monks, a guest-house.

Thither come folk from the eastern quarter,
who take up residence therein.

Thither come folk from the western quarter,
who take up residence therein.

Thither come folk from the northern quarter,
who take up residence therein.

Thither come folk from the southern quarter,
who take up residence therein.

Noblemen and brahmins,
commoners and serfs.

Even so, monks, a monk who cultivates the four trances, who makes much of the four trances,
by full comprehension
realizes those states
which are by full comprehension
to be fully understood.

Those states that are to be abandoned
by full comprehension,
by full comprehension
he abandons;

those states that are to be realized
by full comprehension,
by full comprehension
he realizes;

those states that are to be cultivated
by full comprehension,
by full comprehension
he cultivates.

What, monks, are the states to be realized
by full comprehension?

To that question you must reply:

'It is the five factors that have to do with grasping.'

What five?

They are these:

The body-factor
that has to do with grasping,
the factor of feeling
that has to do with grasping,
the perception-factor
that has to do with grasping,
the activities-factor
that has to do with grasping,
the consciousness-factor
that has to do with grasping.

And what, monks, are the states
that are to be abandoned
by full comprehension?

They are ignorance,
and lust of becoming.

These are the states to be abandoned
by full comprehension.

And what, monks, are the states
that are to be realized
by full comprehension?

They are knowledge and release.

These are the states
to be realized by full comprehension.

And what, monks, are the states
that are to be cultivated
by full comprehension?

They are calm and insight.

These are the states
to be cultivated by full comprehension.

And how does a monk, cultivating and making much of the four trances, realize,
abandon,
fully comprehend
and cultivate (these states)?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

That is how monks, a monk who cultivates the four trances,
who makes much of the four trances,
by full comprehension
realizes those states
which are by full comprehension
to be fully understood;

those states that are to be abandoned
by full comprehension,

by full comprehension
he abandons;

those states that are to be realized
by full comprehension,
by full comprehension
he realizes;

those states that are to be cultivated
by full comprehension,
by full comprehension
he cultivates."

Sutta 34

The River

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose, monks, the river Ganges,
that flows,

slides
and tends towards the east,
and there comes a great crowd of folk,
armed with pick and basket, saying:

'We will make this river Ganges flow,
slide
and tend towards the west.'

What think ye, monks?

Would that great crowd of folk make the river Ganges
flow,
slide
and tend towards the west?"

"Surely not, lord."

"And why not?"

"Because, lord, the river Ganges
flows,
slides
and tends towards the east,
it were no easy thing
to make it flow,
slide
and tend towards the west;
insomuch that fatigue and vexation
would be the lot
of that great crowd of folk."

"Just so, monks, if the rajah's royal ministers
or his friends
or boon companions

or kinsmen
or blood relatives
were to come to a monk
who is cultivating and making much of the Axiyan eightfold way,
and were to seek to entice him with wealth, saying:

'Come, good man!

Why should these yellow robes torment you?

Why parade about with shaven crown and bowl?

Come!

Return to the lower life
and enjoy possessions
and do deeds of merit,' -

for that monk
so cultivating and making much of the four trances return to the lower life is impossible.

Why so?

Because, monks, that monk's heart
has for many a long day
been bent on detachment,
inclined to detachment,
turned towards detachment,
so that there is no possibility
for him to return to the lower life.

And how, monks, does a monk cultivate and make much of the four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,

enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

That is how monks, a monk cultivates and makes much of the four trances."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
53. Jhāna Saṃyutta
4. Esana Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

53. Kindred Sayings on the Four Trances

4. Longing

Suttas 35-44

---

[273]

Sutta 35

Longing

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these three longings.

What three?

The longing for sensual delights,
the longing for becoming,
the longing for the holy life.

These, monks, are the three longings.

It is for the full comprehension of these three longings, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,

mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these three longings.

What three?

The longing for sensual delights,
the longing for becoming,
the longing for the holy life.

These, monks, are the three longings.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these three longings, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these three longings.

What three?

The longing for sensual delights,
the longing for becoming,
the longing for the holy life.

These, monks, are the three longings.

It is for the wearing out of these three longings, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,

which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these three longings.

What three?

The longing for sensual delights,
the longing for becoming,
the longing for the holy life.

These, monks, are the three longings.

It is for the abandoning of these three longings, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,

by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

§

Sutta 36

Conceits

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these three conceits.

What three?

The 'better am I' conceit,
the 'equal am I' conceit,

the 'worse am I' conceit.

These are the three conceits.

It is for the full comprehension
of these three conceits, monks,
that the four trances is to be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these three conceits.

What three?

The 'better am I' conceit,
the 'equal am I' conceit,
the 'worse am I' conceit.

These are the three conceits.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these three conceits, monks,
that the four trances is to be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these three conceits.

What three?

The 'better am I' conceit,
the 'equal am I' conceit,
the 'worse am I' conceit.

These are the three conceits.

It is for the wearing out of these three conceits, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these three conceits.

What three?

The 'better am I' conceit,
the 'equal am I' conceit,
the 'worse am I' conceit.

These are the three conceits.

It is for the abandoning of these three conceits, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,

born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

§

Sutta 37

Āsava

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are three āsavas.

What three?

The āsava of sensual delight,
the āsava of becoming,
the āsava of nescience.

These are the three.

It is for the full comprehension
of these three āsavas, monks,
that the four trances is to be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,

enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are three āsavas.

What three?

The āsava of sensual delight,
the āsava of becoming,
the āsava of nescience.

These are the three.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these three āsavas, monks,
that the four trances is to be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein.

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are three āsavas.

What three?

The āsava of sensual delight,
the āsava of becoming,
the āsava of nescience.

These are the three.

It is for the wearing out of these three āsavas, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,

that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are three āsavas.

What three?

The āsava of sensual delight,
the āsava of becoming,
the āsava of nescience.

These are the three.

It is for the abandoning of these three āsava, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,

apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

§

Sutta 38

Becoming

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks there are three becomings.

What three?

Becoming in the sensuous world,
becoming in the world of form,
becoming in the formless world.

These are the three.

It is for the full comprehension
of these three becomings monks,
that the four trances is to be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

b. Realization

"Monks there are three becomings.

What three?

Becoming in the sensuous world,
becoming in the world of form,
becoming in the formless world.

These are the three.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these three becomings, monks,
that the four trances is to be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks there are three becomings.

What three?

Becoming in the sensuous world,
becoming in the world of form,
becoming in the formless world.

These are the three.

It is for the wearing out of these three becomings, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,

born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks there are three becomings.

What three?

Becoming in the sensuous world,
becoming in the world of form,
becoming in the formless world.

These are the three.

It is for the abandoning of these three becomings, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,

mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

§

Sutta 39

Suffering

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these three forms of suffering.

What three?

The sort of suffering caused by pain,
the sort caused by the activities,
the sort of suffering caused by the changeable nature of things.

These are the three.

It is for the full comprehension
of these three forms of suffering monks,
that the four trances is to be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,

which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these three forms of suffering.

What three?

The sort of suffering caused by pain,
the sort caused by the activities,
the sort of suffering caused by the changeable nature of things.

These are the three.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these three forms of suffering, monks,
that the four trances is to be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these three forms of suffering.

What three?

The sort of suffering caused by pain,
the sort caused by the activities,
the sort of suffering caused by the changeable nature of things.

These are the three.

It is for the wearing out of these three forms of suffering, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these three forms of suffering.

What three?

The sort of suffering caused by pain,
the sort caused by the activities,
the sort of suffering caused by the changeable nature of things.

These are the three.

It is for the abandoning of these three forms of suffering, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

§

Sutta 40

Obstructions

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these three (mental) obstructions.

What three?|| ||

The obstruction of lust,
the obstruction of hatred,
the obstruction of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the full comprehension
of these three obstructions monks,
that the four trances is to be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these three (mental) obstructions.

What three?|| ||

The obstruction of lust,
the obstruction of hatred,
the obstruction of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these three obstructions, monks,
that the four trances is to be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these three (mental) obstructions.

What three?|| ||

The obstruction of lust,
the obstruction of hatred,
the obstruction of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the wearing out of these three obstructions, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these three (mental) obstructions.

What three?|| ||

The obstruction of lust,
the obstruction of hatred,
the obstruction of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the abandoning of these three obstructions, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,

that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

§

Sutta 41

Stains

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these three stains.

What three?

The stain of lust,
the stain of hatred,
the stain of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the full comprehension
of these three stains, monks,
that the four trances is to be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these three stains.

What three?

The stain of lust,
the stain of hatred,
the stain of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these three stains, monks,
that the four trances is to be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these three stains.

What three?

The stain of lust,
the stain of hatred,
the stain of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the wearing out of these three stains, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these three stains.

What three?

The stain of lust,
the stain of hatred,
the stain of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the abandoning of these three stains, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,

born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

§

Sutta 42

Pains

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these three pains.

What three?

The pain of lust,
the pain of hatred,
the pain of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the full comprehension
of these three pains, monks,
that the four trances is to be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,

enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these three pains.

What three?

The pain of lust,
the pain of hatred,
the pain of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these three pains, monks,
that the four trances is to be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these three pains.

What three?

The pain of lust,
the pain of hatred,
the pain of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the wearing out of these three pains, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,

that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these three pains.

What three?

The pain of lust,
the pain of hatred,
the pain of illusion.

These are the three.

It is for the abandoning of these three pains, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,

apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

§

Sutta 43

Feelings

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these three feelings.

What three?

Feeling that is pleasant,
feeling that is painful,
feeling that is neither pleasant nor painful.

These are the three.

It is for the full comprehension
of these three feelings, monks,
that the four trances is to be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these three feelings.

What three?

Feeling that is pleasant,
feeling that is painful,
feeling that is neither pleasant nor painful.

These are the three.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these three feelings, monks,
that the four trances is to be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these three feelings.

What three?

Feeling that is pleasant,
feeling that is painful,
feeling that is neither pleasant nor painful.

These are the three.

It is for the wearing out of these three feelings, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,

born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these three feelings.

What three?

Feeling that is pleasant,
feeling that is painful,
feeling that is neither pleasant nor painful.

These are the three.

It is for the abandoning of these three feelings, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,

mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

§

Sutta 44

Craving

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there axe these three cravings.

What three?

The craving for sensual delights,
the craving for becoming,
the craving for ceasing to become.

These are the three.

It is for the full comprehension
of these three cravings, monks,
that the four trances is to be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,

which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there axe these three cravings.

What three?

The craving for sensual delights,
the craving for becoming,
the craving for ceasing to become.

These are the three.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these three cravings, monks,
that the four trances is to be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,

by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there axe these three cravings.

What three?

The craving for sensual delights,
the craving for becoming,
the craving for ceasing to become.

These are the three.

It is for the wearing out of these three cravings, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there axe these three cravings.

What three?

The craving for sensual delights,
the craving for becoming,
the craving for ceasing to become.

These are the three.

It is for the abandoning of these three cravings, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
53. Jhāna Saṃyutta
5. Ogha Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

53. Kindred Sayings on the Four Trances

5. The Flood

Suttas 45-54

---

[274]

Sutta 45

The Flood

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four floods.

What four?

The flood of sensual desire,
the flood of becoming,
the flood of view,
the flood of nescience.

These are the four floods.

It is for the full comprehension of these four floods, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,

mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these four floods.

What four?

The flood of sensual desire,
the flood of becoming,
the flood of view,
the flood of nescience.

These are the four floods.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these four floods, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these four floods.

What four?

The flood of sensual desire,
the flood of becoming,
the flood of view,
the flood of nescience.

These are the four floods.

It is for the wearing out of these four floods, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,

which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these four floods.

What four?

The flood of sensual desire,
the flood of becoming,
the flood of view,
the flood of nescience.

These are the four floods.

It is for the abandoning of these four floods, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,

by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

§

Sutta 46

Bond

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four bonds.

What four?

The bond of sensual desire,
the bond of becoming,

the bond of view,
the bond of nescience.

These are the four bonds.

It is for the full comprehension of these four bonds, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these four bonds.

What four?

The bond of sensual desire,
the bond of becoming,
the bond of view,
the bond of nescience.

These are the four bonds.

It is for the realization of (the meaning of) these four bonds, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,

zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these four bonds.

What four?

The bond of sensual desire,
the bond of becoming,
the bond of view,
the bond of nescience.

These are the four bonds.

It is for the wearing out of these four bonds, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these four bonds.

What four?

The bond of sensual desire,
the bond of becoming,
the bond of view,
the bond of nescience.

These are the four bonds.

It is for the abandoning these four bonds, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

§

Sutta 47

Grasping

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four graspings.

What four?

The grasping of sensual desire,
the grasping of view,
the grasping of rite and ritual,
the grasping of the self-heresy.

These are the four graspings.

It is for the full comprehension of these four graspings, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these four graspings.

What four?

The grasping of sensual desire,
the grasping of view,
the grasping of rite and ritual,
the grasping of the self-heresy.

These are the four graspings.

It is for the realization (of the meaning) of these four graspings, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,

which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these four graspings.

What four?

The grasping of sensual desire,
the grasping of view,
the grasping of rite and ritual,
the grasping of the self-heresy.

These are the four graspings.

It is for the wearing out of these four graspings, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,

by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these four graspings.

What four?

The grasping of sensual desire,
the grasping of view,
the grasping of rite and ritual,
the grasping of the self-heresy.

These are the four graspings.

It is for the abandoning of these four graspings, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

§

Sutta 48

(Bodily) Ties

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four (bodily) ties.

What four?

The bodily tie of covetousness,
the bodily tie of malevolence,
the bodily tie of contagion of rite and ritual,
the bodily tie of tendency to dogmatic view.

These are the four bodily ties.

It is for the full comprehension of these four bodily ties, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,

born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these four (bodily) ties.

What four?

The bodily tie of covetousness,
the bodily tie of malevolence,
the bodily tie of contagion of rite and ritual,
the bodily tie of tendency to dogmatic view.

These are the four bodily ties.

It is for the realization (of the meaning) of these four bodily ties, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,

mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these four (bodily) ties.

What four?

The bodily tie of covetousness,
the bodily tie of malevolence,
the bodily tie of contagion of rite and ritual,
the bodily tie of tendency to dogmatic view.

These are the four bodily ties.

It is for the wearing out of these four bodily ties, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these four (bodily) ties.

What four?

The bodily tie of covetousness,
the bodily tie of malevolence,
the bodily tie of contagion of rite and ritual,
the bodily tie of tendency to dogmatic view.

These are the four bodily ties.

It is for the abandoning of these four bodily ties, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,

which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

§

Sutta 49

Tendency

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these seven tendencies.

What seven?

The tendency to sensual lust,
the tendency to resentment,
the tendency to view,
the tendency to doubt and wavering,
the tendency to conceit,
the tendency to nescience.

These are the seven tendencies.

It is for the full comprehension of these seven tendencies, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these seven tendencies.

What seven?

The tendency to sensual lust,
the tendency to resentment,
the tendency to view,
the tendency to doubt and wavering,
the tendency to conceit,
the tendency to nescience.

These are the seven tendencies.

It is for the realization (of the meaning) of these seven tendencies, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these seven tendencies.

What seven?

The tendency to sensual lust,
the tendency to resentment,
the tendency to view,
the tendency to doubt and wavering,
the tendency to conceit,
the tendency to nescience.

These are the seven tendencies.

It is for the wearing out of these seven tendencies, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these seven tendencies.

What seven?

The tendency to sensual lust,
the tendency to resentment,
the tendency to view,
the tendency to doubt and wavering,
the tendency to conceit,
the tendency to nescience.

These are the seven tendencies.

It is for the abandoning of these seven tendencies, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,

that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

§

Sutta 50

The Sense-Pleasures

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five pleasures of sense.

What five?

There are objects cognizable by the eye,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are sounds cognizable by the ear,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are scents cognizable by the nose,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are savours cognizable by the tongue,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are tangibles cognizable by the body,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

These are the five pleasures of sense.

It is for the full comprehension of these five pleasures of sense, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these five pleasures of sense.

What five?

There are objects cognizable by the eye,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are sounds cognizable by the ear,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are scents cognizable by the nose,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are savours cognizable by the tongue,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are tangibles cognizable by the body,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

These are the five pleasures of sense.

It is for the realization (of the meaning) of these five pleasures of sense, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these five pleasures of sense.

What five?

There are objects cognizable by the eye,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are sounds cognizable by the ear,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are scents cognizable by the nose,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are savours cognizable by the tongue,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are tangibles cognizable by the body,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

These are the five pleasures of sense.

It is for the wearing out of these five pleasures of sense, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these five pleasures of sense.

What five?

There are objects cognizable by the eye,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are sounds cognizable by the ear,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,

passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are scents cognizable by the nose,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are savours cognizable by the tongue,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

There are tangibles cognizable by the body,
objects desirable,
pleasant,
delightful and dear,
passion-fraught,
inciting to lust.

These are the five pleasures of sense.

It is for the abandoning of these five pleasures of sense, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,

zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

§

Sutta 51

Hindrances

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five hindrances.

What five?

The hindrance of sensual desire,
the hindrance of malevolence,
the hindrance of sloth and torpor,
the hindrance of excitement and flurry,
the hindrance of doubt and wavering.

These are the five hindrances.

It is for the full comprehension of these five pleasures of sense, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these five hindrances.

What five?

The hindrance of sensual desire,
the hindrance of malevolence,
the hindrance of sloth and torpor,
the hindrance of excitement and flurry,
the hindrance of doubt and wavering.

These are the five hindrances.

It is for the realization (of the meaning) of these five hindrances, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,

which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these five hindrances.

What five?

The hindrance of sensual desire,
the hindrance of malevolence,
the hindrance of sloth and torpor,

the hindrance of excitement and flurry,
the hindrance of doubt and wavering.

These are the five hindrances.

It is for the wearing out of these five hindrances, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these five hindrances.

What five?

The hindrance of sensual desire,
the hindrance of malevolence,
the hindrance of sloth and torpor,
the hindrance of excitement and flurry,
the hindrance of doubt and wavering.

These are the five hindrances.

It is for the abandoning of these five hindrances, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,

zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

§

Sutta 52

Factors

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five factors of grasping.

What five?

The factor of grasping of body,
the factor of grasping of feeling,
the factor of grasping of perception,
the factor of grasping of the activities,
the factor of grasping of consciousness.

These are the five factors of grasping.

It is for the full comprehension of these five factors of grasping, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there are these five factors of grasping.

What five?

The factor of grasping of body,
the factor of grasping of feeling,
the factor of grasping of perception,
the factor of grasping of the activities,
the factor of grasping of consciousness.

These are the five factors of grasping.

It is for the realization (of the meaning) of these five factors of grasping, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,

zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there are these five factors of grasping.

What five?

The factor of grasping of body,
the factor of grasping of feeling,
the factor of grasping of perception,

the factor of grasping of the activities,
the factor of grasping of consciousness.

These are the five factors of grasping.

It is for the wearing out of these five factors of grasping, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there are these five factors of grasping.

What five?

The factor of grasping of body,
the factor of grasping of feeling,
the factor of grasping of perception,
the factor of grasping of the activities,
the factor of grasping of consciousness.

These are the five factors of grasping.

It is for the abandoning of these five factors of grasping, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,

zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

§

Sutta 53

The Lower Set (of Fetters)

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there is this set of five lower fetters.

What five?

The individual-group-view,
doubt and wavering,
contagion of rite and ritual,
desire and lust,
malevolence.

These are the five lower fetters.

It is for the full comprehension of these five lower fetters, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there is this set of five lower fetters.

What five?

The individual-group-view,
doubt and wavering,
contagion of rite and ritual,
desire and lust,
malevolence.

These are the five lower fetters.

It is for the realization (of the meaning) of these five lower fetters, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,

which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,

which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there is this set of five lower fetters.

What five?

The individual-group-view,
doubt and wavering,
contagion of rite and ritual,

desire and lust,
malevolence.

These are the five lower fetters.

It is for the wearing out of these five lower fetters, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there is this set of five lower fetters.

What five?

The individual-group-view,
doubt and wavering,
contagion of rite and ritual,
desire and lust,
malevolence.

These are the five lower fetters.

It is for the abandoning of these five lower fetters, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,

zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

§

Sutta 54

The Higher Set (of Fetters)

a. Full Comprehension

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there is this set of five higher fetters.

What five?

Lust of form,
lust of the formless,
conceit,
excitement,
nescience.

These are the five higher fetters.

It is for the full comprehension of these five higher fetters, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

b. Realization

"Monks, there is this set of five higher fetters.

What five?

Lust of form,
lust of the formless,
conceit,
excitement,
nescience.

These are the five higher fetters.

It is for the realization (of the meaning) of these five higher fetters, monks, that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,

which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

c. Weariing Out

"Monks, there is this set of five higher fetters.

What five?

Lust of form,
lust of the formless,
conceit,

excitement,
nescience.

These are the five higher fetters.

It is for the wearing out of these five higher fetters, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,
zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

---

d. Abandoning

"Monks, there is this set of five higher fetters.

What five?

Lust of form,
lust of the formless,
conceit,
excitement,
nescience.

These are the five higher fetters.

It is for the abandoning of these five higher fetters, monks,
that the four trances must be cultivated.

What four trances?

Herein a monk, aloof from sensuality,
aloof from evil states,
enters on the first trance
which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
born of solitude,

zestful and easeful,
and abides therein.

Then, by the calming down of thought directed and sustained,
he enters on that inward calm,
that one-pointedness of mind,
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
and abides therein.

Then, by the fading out of zest,
he abides indifferent,
mindful and composed,
and experiences ease through the body.

Having entered on the third trance,
which the Ariyans describe in these terms:

'He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily,' -
he abides therein.

Then, by the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort,
by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness that he had before,
entering on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful,
that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference,
which is the fourth trance,
he abides therein."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
54. Ānāpāna Saṃyutta
1. Eka-Dhamma Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

54. Kindred Sayings about

In-Breathing and Out-Breathing

1. The One Condition

Sutta 1

Eka-Dhamma Suttaṃ

The One Condition

---

[311] [275]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there is one condition which,
if cultivated and made much of,

is of great fruit,
of great profit.

What is that one condition?

It is concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing.

And how cultivated, monks,
how made much of,
is concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing of great fruit, of great profit?[1]

Monks, under this rule,
a monk who goes to a forest
or the foot of a tree
or a lonely place,
sits down cross-legged,
holding the body straight.
Setting mindfulness in front of him,[2]
he breathes in mindfully
and mindfully breathes out.

As he draws in a long breath he knows:

'A long breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a long breath he knows:

'I breathe out a long breath'.

As he draws in a short breath he knows:

'A short breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a short breath he knows:

'I breathe out a short breath.'

Thus he makes up his mind[3] (repeating):

'I shall breathe in,
feeling it go through the whole body.[4]

Feeling it go through the whole body
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe out.'

[276] Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe out.

Feeling the sense of ease[5]
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Aware of all mental factors[6]
I shall breathe in.

Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Aware of mind I shall breathe in.

Aware of mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Gladdening[7] my mind I shall breathe in.

Gladdening my mind I shall breathe out.

Composing my mind I shall breathe in.

Composing my mind I shall breathe out.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe in.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Contemplating impermanence[8] I shall breathe in.

Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe out.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe in.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe out.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe out.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe out.'

Thus cultivated, monks,
thus made much of,
the concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing
is of great fruit,
of great profit."[9]

---

[1] Comy. refers to the section on ānāpāna-sati at VM. 267 ff. Cf Yogavacara (Manual of A Mystic) i; D. ii, 291 = Dialog. ii, 317; M. i, 56; MA. i. 247 ff.; Paṭisambh. i, 184-6.

[2] Between the eyebrows, where the Hindus place the brow-cakram.

[3] Sikkhati = ghaṭati, vāyamati. [VM. Pāliṇ vatvā.]

[4] Paṭisaṇvedi. [VM. pākaṭaṇ karonto.] He visualizes the breath as passing in and through the whole frame and out again.

[5] 'Sukhaṇ is bodily and mental.' VM.

[6] Citta-saṇkārā = vedanādayo dve khandhā. VM.

[7] Abhippamodayaṇ = pamodento, hāsento (by way of concentration and introspection). VM.

[8] 'Freeing it from the hindrances by the first jhāna; from thought generated and sustained by the second jhāna; from zest by the third, from pleasure and pain by the fourth jhāna.' VM.

[9] He does these repeatedly by calling up (their opposites) permanence, well-being, self, passionate delight, passion, arising (of things), stinginess.' VM.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
54. Ānāpāna Saṃyutta
1. Eka-Dhamma Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

54. Kindred Sayings about

In-Breathing and Out-Breathing

1. The One Condition

Sutta 2

Bojjhaṇga Suttaṃ

Limb of Wisdom

---

[277]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One said:

"Monks, concentration on in-breathing and our-breathing,
if cultivated and made much of,

is of great fruit,
of great profit.

How cultivated?

Under this rule,
a monk cultivates the limb of wisdom that is mindfulness accompanied by concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing,
which tends to seclusion,
to dispassion,
to cessation,
that ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom that is Norm-investigation, accompanied by concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing,
which tends to seclusion,
to dispassion,
to cessation,
that ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom that is energy,
which tends to seclusion,
to dispassion,
to cessation,
that ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom that is zest,
which tends to seclusion,
to dispassion,
to cessation,
that ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom that is tranquillity,
which tends to seclusion,
to dispassion,
to cessation,
that ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom that is concentration,
which tends to seclusion,
to dispassion,
to cessation,
that ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom that is equanimity,
which tends to seclusion,
to dispassion,
to cessation,
that ends in self-surrender.

If thus cultivated and made much of, monks,
the concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing
is of great fruit,
of great profit."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
54. Ānāpāna Saṃyutta
1. Eka-Dhamma Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

54. Kindred Sayings about

In-Breathing and Out-Breathing

1. The One Condition

Sutta 3

Suddhaka Suttaṃ

Puritan

---

[277]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One said:

"Monks, concentration on in-breathing and our-breathing,
if cultivated and made much of,

is of great fruit,
of great profit.

How cultivated?

"Monks, under this rule,
a monk who goes to a forest
or the foot of a tree
or a lonely place,
sits down cross-legged,
holding the body straight.

Setting mindfulness in front of him,
he breathes in mindfully
and mindfully breathes out.

As he draws in a long breath he knows:
'A long breath I draw in'.

As he breathes out a long breath he knows:
'I breathe out a long breath'.

As he draws in a short breath he knows:
'A short breath I draw in'.

As he breathes out a short breath he knows:
'I breathe out a short breath'.

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'I shall breathe in,
feeling it go through the whole body.

Feeling it go through the whole body
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe out.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe out.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe out'.

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Aware of mind I shall breathe in.

Aware of mind I shall breathe out'.

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Gladdening my mind I shall breathe in.

Gladdening my mind I shall breathe out.

Composing my mind I shall breathe in.

Composing my mind I shall breathe out.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe in.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe out.

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe in.

Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe out.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe in.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe out.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe out.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe out'.

Thus cultivated, monks,
thus made much of,
the concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing
is of great fruit,
of great profit."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
54. Ānāpāna Saṃyutta
1. Eka-Dhamma Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

54. Kindred Sayings about

In-Breathing and Out-Breathing

1. The One Condition

Sutta 4

Paṭhama Phalā Suttaṃ

Fruits (a)

---

[278]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One said:

"Monks, concentration on in-breathing and our-breathing,
if cultivated and made much of,

is of great fruit,
of great profit.

How cultivated?

Monks, under this rule,
a monk who goes to a forest
or the foot of a tree
or a lonely place,
sits down cross-legged,
holding the body straight.

Setting mindfulness in front of him,
he breathes in mindfully
and mindfully breathes out.

As he draws in a long breath he knows:

'A long breath I draw in'.

As he breathes out a long breath he knows:

'I breathe out a long breath.'

As he draws in a short breath he knows:

'A short breath I draw in'.

As he breathes out a short breath he knows:

'I breathe out a short breath'.

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'I shall breathe in,
feeling it go through the whole body.

Feeling it go through the whole body
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe out.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe out.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Aware of mind I shall breathe in.

Aware of mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Gladdening my mind I shall breathe in.

Gladdening my mind I shall breathe out.

Composing my mind I shall breathe in.

Composing my mind I shall breathe out.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe in.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe out.

"He makes up his mind (repeating):

"Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe in.

Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe out.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe in.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe out.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe out.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe out.

Thus cultivated, monks,
thus made much of,
the concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing

is of great fruit,
of great profit.

Monks, if concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing
be thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
one of these two fruits may be looked for:
either realization in this very life,
or, if there be any substrate left,
at any rate the state of non-return."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
54. Ānāpāna Saṃyutta
1. Eka-Dhamma Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

54. Kindred Sayings about

In-Breathing and Out-Breathing

1. The One Condition

Sutta 5

Dutiya Phalā Suttaṃ

Fruits (b)

---

[278]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One said:

"Monks, concentration on in-breathing and our-breathing,
if cultivated and made much of,

is of great fruit,
of great profit.

How cultivated?

Monks, under this rule,
a monk who goes to a forest
or the foot of a tree
or a lonely place,
sits down cross-legged,
holding the body straight.

Setting mindfulness in front of him,
he breathes in mindfully
and mindfully breathes out.

As he draws in a long breath he knows:

'A long breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a long breath he knows:

'I breathe out a long breath.'

As he draws in a short breath he knows:

'A short breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a short breath he knows:

'I breathe out a short breath.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'I shall breathe in,
feeling it go through the whole body.

Feeling it go through the whole body
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe out.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe out.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Aware of mind I shall breathe in.

Aware of mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Gladdening my mind I shall breathe in.

Gladdening my mind I shall breathe out.

Composing my mind I shall breathe in.

Composing my mind I shall breathe out.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe in.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe out.

"He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe in.

Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe out.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe in.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe out.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe out.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe out.

Thus cultivated, monks,
thus made much of,
the concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing

is of great fruit,
of great profit.

Monks, if concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing
be thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
these seven fruits may be looked for.

What seven?

In this very life, previously,[10]
one establishes gnosis, and if not in this same life, previously, then one does so at the moment of death.

If not at the moment of death, then, by having worn down the five fetters of the lower sort,
he is one who wins release midway.

Failing that,
he does so by reduction of his time.

Failing that he passes away without much trouble

Or failing that he passes away with some trouble.

If he do none of these,
he is 'one who goes upstream,' and he is reborn in the Pure Abodes.

These, monks, are the seven fruits, the seven profits to be looked for if concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing be cultivated and made much of."

[10] Cf. supra, text, 204.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
54. Ānāpāna Saṃyutta
1. Eka-Dhamma Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

54. Kindred Sayings about

In-Breathing and Out-Breathing

1. The One Condition

Sutta 6

Ariṭṭha Suttaṃ

Ariṭṭha[11]

---

[278]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks, do ye practise concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing?"

At these words the venerable Ariṭṭha said to the Exalted One:

"I, lord, do practise it."

"But in what way do you practise it, Ariṭṭha?"

"Thus, lord.

I abandon sensual desire for lusts that are past.

Sensual desire for lusts to come is vanished.

Both [279] inwardly and outwardly the consciousness of repugnance for things is perfectly disciplined.[12]

Mindful I breathe in, mindful I breathe out.[13]

That, lord, is how I practise concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing."

"True, Ariṭṭha.

That is concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing.

And yet I-declare it is not.

Now, Ariṭṭha, I will tell you how concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing is done perfectly, in every detail.

Do you listen to it.

Apply your mind and I will speak."

"I will, lord," replied the venerable Ariṭṭha to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Now, Ariṭṭha, how is concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing done perfectly,
in every detail?

In this method, Ariṭṭha,
a monk who goes to a forest
or the foot of a tree
or a lonely place,
sits down cross-legged,
holding the body straight.
Setting mindfulness in front of him,
he breathes in mindfully
and mindfully breathes out.

As he draws in a long breath he knows:

'A long breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a long breath he knows:

'I breathe out a long breath.'

As he draws in a short breath he knows:

'A short breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a short breath he knows:

'I breathe out a short breath.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'I shall breathe in,
feeling it go through the whole body.

Feeling it go through the whole body
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe out.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe out.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Aware of mind I shall breathe in.

Aware of mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Gladdening my mind I shall breathe in.

Gladdening my mind I shall breathe out.

Composing my mind I shall breathe in.

Composing my mind I shall breathe out.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe in.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe in.

Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe out.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe in.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe out.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe out.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe out.'

That, Ariṭṭha, is how concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing is done perfectly,
in every detail."

[11] Cf. M. i, 130; A. iii, 451; Vinaya Texts, ii, 377.

[12] 'Herein,' says Comy. 'he declares the path of non-retum.'

[13] 'Here he declares the insight of the path of Arahantship.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
54. Ānāpāna Saṃyutta
1. Eka-Dhamma Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

54. Kindred Sayings about

In-Breathing and Out-Breathing

1. The One Condition

Sutta 7

Kappina Suttaṃ

Kappina

---

[279]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now on that occasion
the venerable Kappina the Great[14] was not far off, sitting cross-legged,

holding his body erect,
with mindfulness set in front of him.

Then the Exalted One saw the venerable Kappina sitting not far off,
sitting cross-legged,
holding his body erect,
with mindfulness set in front of him
and on seeing him he said to the monks:

"Monks, do ye ever see any wavering or shaking of body
in this monk?"

"Lord, so far as we have seen him, whether sitting amid the Order or sitting alone and solitary, we have never observed any wavering or shaking of body
in that venerable one."

[280] "Monks, it is by the fact of cultivating and making much of such concentration that there is no wavering
or shaking of body
that this monk can attain at will such concentration,
can attain it without difficulty, attain it without trouble.

And by cultivating and making much of what sort of concentration is there no wavering
and shaking of body?

It is by cultivating
and making much of
the concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing
that there no wavering
and shaking of body.

And how cultivated,
how made much of
that there no wavering
and shaking of body?

In this method, monks,
a monk who has gone to a forest
or the foot of a tree
or a lonely place,
sits down cross-legged,
holding the body straight.
Setting mindfulness in front of him,
he breathes in mindfully
and mindfully breathes out.

As he draws in a long breath he knows:

'A long breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a long breath he knows:

'I breathe out a long breath.'

As he draws in a short breath he knows:

'A short breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a short breath he knows:

'I breathe out a short breath.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'I shall breathe in,
feeling it go through the whole body.

Feeling it go through the whole body
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe out.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe out.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Aware of mind I shall breathe in.

Aware of mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Gladdening my mind I shall breathe in.

Gladdening my mind I shall breathe out.

Composing my mind I shall breathe in.

Composing my mind I shall breathe out.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe in.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe in.

Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe out.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe in.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe out.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe out.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe out.'

That, monks, is how,
when one cultivates and makes much of the concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing, there is no wavering or shaking of body, no wavering or shaking of mind."

---

[14] Cf. K.S. ii, 194; Brethren, 254. He was one of the twelve 'Great' elder brethren of the Order. At [an 1.231], the Master points him out as foremost in preaching, and as 'radiant [odātaka (?). This may mean "of light complexion"; for, as he was a monk, it cannot have its usual meaning "dressed in white"], lean and high-nosed.' See also: Maha Kappino for more biographical information.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
54. Ānāpāna Saṃyutta
1. Eka-Dhamma Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

54. Kindred Sayings about

In-Breathing and Out-Breathing

1. The One Condition

Sutta 8

Dīpa Suttaṃ

The lamp

---

[280]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing,
if cultivated and made much of,

is of great fruit,
of great profit.

And how cultivated and made much of is it of great fruit and great profit?

In this method, a monk having gotten himself off to the forest
or the foot of a tree
or a lonely place,
sits down cross-legged,
holding the body straight.
Setting mindfulness in front of him,
he breathes in mindfully
and mindfully breathes out.

As he draws in a long breath he knows:

'A long breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a long breath he knows:

'I breathe out a long breath.'

As he draws in a short breath he knows:

'A short breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a short breath he knows:

'I breathe out a short breath.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'I shall breathe in,
feeling it go through the whole body.

Feeling it go through the whole body
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe out.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe out.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Aware of mind I shall breathe in.

Aware of mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Gladdening my mind I shall breathe in.

Gladdening my mind I shall breathe out.

Composing my mind I shall breathe in.

Composing my mind I shall breathe out.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe in.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe in.

Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe out.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe in.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe out.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe out.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe out.'

Thus cultivated, monks,
thus made much of,
the concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing

is of great fruit,
of great profit."

Formerly, monks, before I myself was enlightened with the perfect wisdom, and was yet a Bodhisattva,
I used generally to spend my time in this way of living.

As I generally lived [281] in this way, neither my body nor my eyes were fatigued,[15] and my mind was freed from the āsavas.

Wherefore, monks, if a monk should desire:

'May neither my body nor my eyes be fatigued, and by not clinging may my mind be freed from the āsavas', —
he must give strict attention
to this same intent concentration
on in-breathing and out-breathing.

Wherefore, monks, if a monk should desire:

'Whatsoever memories and plans I have, attached to the worldly life,[16] may they be abandoned', —
he must give strict attention
to this same intent concentration
on in-breathing and out-breathing.

Wherefore, monks, if a monk should desire:

'May I dwell conscious of repugnance for what is not repugnant' —
he must give strict attention
to this same intent concentration
on in-breathing and out-breathing.

Wherefore, monks, if a monk should desire:

'May I dwell unconscious of repugnance for what is repugnant' —
he must give strict attention
to this same intent concentration
on in-breathing and out-breathing.

Wherefore, monks, if a monk should desire:

'May I dwell conscious of repugnance both for what is not repugnant and for what is' —
he must give strict attention
to this same intent concentration
on in-breathing and out-breathing.

Wherefore, monks, if a monk should desire:

'Both for what is repugnant and what is not,
may I dwell unconscious of repugnance', —
he must give strict attention
to this same intent concentration
on in-breathing and out-breathing.

If he should desire:

'Rejecting alike what is non-repugnant and what is repugnant, may I dwell indifferent,
mindful and composed', —
he must give strict attention
to this same intent concentration
on in-breathing and out-breathing.

If he should desire:

'Aloof from sensuality, aloof from evil conditions, having entered on the first trance,

which is accompanied by thought directed and sustained,
that is born of seclusion,
zestful and easeful,
may I abide therein' , —
he must give strict attention
to this same intent concentration
on in-breathing and out-breathing.

If he should desire:

'By the calming down of thought directed and sustained, entering on that inward calm,
that onepointedness of mind
apart from thought directed and sustained,
that is born of mental balance,
zestful and easeful,
which is the second trance,
may I abide therein', —
he must give strict attention
to this same intent concentration
on in-breathing and out-breathing.

If he should desire:

'By the fading out of zest
may I dwell [282] indifferent,
mindful and composed:
entering on the third trance, which the Ariyans describe thus: —
"He who is indifferent and mindful dwells happily"', —
he must give strict attention
to this same intent concentration
on in-breathing and out-breathing.

If he should desire:

'By the abandoning of ease,
by the abandoning of discomfort, by the ending of the happiness and unhappiness which I had before, having entered on that state which is neither pleasant nor painful, that utter purity of mindfulness reached by indifference, the fourth trance,
may I abide therein', —
he must give strict attention
to this same intent concentration
on in-breathing and out-breathing.

If he should desire:

'Passing utterly beyond all consciousness of object, by ending the consciousness of reaction, by disregarding consciousness of diversity, thinking
"infinite is space," may I attain and abide in the sphere of infinite space', —
he must give strict attention
to this same intent concentration
on in-breathing and out-breathing.

If he should desire:

'Passing utterly beyond the sphere of the infinity of space, reaching the sphere of infinite consciousness,
thinking
"infinite is consciousness,"
may I abide therein', —
he must give strict attention

to this same intent concentration
on in-breathing and out-breathing.

If he should desire:

'Passing utterly beyond the sphere of infinite consciousness,
thinking
"there is nothing at all," reaching the sphere of nothingness
may I abide therein', —
he must give strict attention
to this same intent concentration
on in-breathing and out-breathing.

If he should desire:

'Passing utterly beyond the sphere of nothingness, and reaching the sphere of neither consciousness nor unconsciousness, let me abide therein', —
he must give strict attention
to this same intent concentration
on in-breathing and out-breathing.

Lastly, if a monk should desire:

'Passing utterly beyond the sphere of neither consciousness nor unconsciousness,
reaching the ceasing of consciousness and sensation, let me so abide', —
he must give strict attention
to this same intent concentration
on in-breathing and out-breathing.

Now, monks, if intent concentration of this sort be cultivated and made much of,
when he feels a pleasant feeling
he understands:

'That is impermanent.'

He understands:

'I do not cling to it.'

He understands:

'It has no lure for me.'[17]

[283] If he feels a painful feeling he understands:

'That is impermanent.'

He understands:

'I do not cling to it.'

He understands:

'It has no lure for me.'

So also if he feels a feeling that is neutral he understands:

'That is impermanent.'

He understands:

'I do not cling to it.'

He understands:

'It has no lure for me.'

If he feels a pleasant feeling,
he feels it as one released from bondage to it.

If he feels a painful feeling,
he feels it as one released from bondage to it.

If he feels a neutral feeling, he it as one released from bondage to it.

If he has a feeling that his bodily endurance has reached its limit, he is aware that he so feels.

When he has a feeling that life has reached its limit, he is aware that he feels so.

He understands:

'When body breaks up,
after life is used up,
all my experiences in this world will lose their lure and grow cold.[18]

Just as, monks,
because of oil and because of a wick a lamp keeps burning;
but if oil and wick be used up the lamp would go out, because it is not fed, —
even so, monks,
if he has a feeling that his bodily endurance has reached its limit,
he is aware that he so feels.

When he has a feeling that life has reached its limit,
he is aware that he feels so.

He understands:

'When body breaks up,
after life is used up,

all my experiences in this world
will lose their lure and grow cold.'"

---

[15]Comy. 'In some other exercises (kammaṭṭhānesu) the body is tired and the eyesight afflicted.' He may here refer to the usual exercises of hatha-yoga, such as, unnatural postures, staring at a bright object or retaining the breath, etc.

[16]Geha-sita-sara-saṇkappā. With the refrain: If, etc., cf. M. No.3.

[17] Cf. K.S. iv, 143.

[18] Cf. S. ii, 83.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
54. Ānāpāna Saṃyutta
1. Eka-Dhamma Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

54. Kindred Sayings about

In-Breathing and Out-Breathing

1. The One Condition

Sutta 9

Vesālī or Asubha Suttaṃ

Vesālī

---

[283]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Vesālī, in Great Wood,
at the House with the peaked gable.

Now on that occasion
the Exalted One was talking to the monks in divers ways on the subject of the unlovely,[19] was speaking in praise of the unlovely, was speaking in praise of meditation on the unlovely.

After that the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks, I wish to dwell in solitude for the half-month.[20]

I am not to be visited by anyone save by the single one who brings my food."

"So be it, lord," replied the monks to the Exalted One.

[284] Thus no one visited the Exalted One save only the single one who brought his food.

So those monks, saying,

'The Exalted One has in divers ways spoken on the subject of the unlovely,
he has spoken in praise of the unlovely,
he has spoken in praise of meditation on the unlovely,'

spent their time given to meditation on the unlovely in all its varied applications.[21]

As to this body,
they worried about it,
felt shame and loathing for it,
and sought for a weapon to slay themselves.

Nay, as many as ten monks
did so in a single day;
even twenty,
thirty of them slew themselves in a single day.[22]

Now at the end of that half-month
the Exalted One,
on returning from his solitary life, said to the venerable Ānanda:

"How is it, Ānanda?

The order of monks seems diminished."

"As to that, lord,
the Exaited One spoke to the monks in divers ways on the subject of the unlovely, spoke in praise of the unlovely, spoke in praise of meditation on the unlovely.

Then the monks, saying,
'The Exalted One has in divers ways
spoken on the subject of the unlovely,
he has spoken in praise of the unlovely,
he has spoken in praise of meditation on the unlovely,'
spent their time given to meditation on the unlovely
in all its varied applications.

As to this body,
they worried about it,
felt shame and loathing for it,
and sought for a weapon to slay themselves.

Nay, as many as ten monks
did so in a single day;
even twenty,
thirty of them
slew themselves in a single day.

It were a good thing, lord, if the Exalted One would teach some other method,

so that the order of monks might be established in gnosis."[23]

"Very well then, Ānanda.

Summon the monks who dwell in the neighbourhood of Vesālī to the service-hall."

"Very good, lord," replied the venerable Ānanda
to the Exalted One,
and, after summoning all the monks who dwelt in the neighbourhood of Vesālī
to the service-hall,
he came to the Exalted One and said:

"Lord, the order of monks is assembled.

Now let the Exalted One do as he deems fit."

[285] Then the Exalted One went to the service-hall, and on arriving there
sat down on a seat made ready.

As he thus sat
the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks, this intent concentration
on in-breathing and out-breathing,
if cultivated and made much of,[24]
is something peaceful and choice, something perfect in itself,[25]
and a pleasant way of living too.

Moreover it allays evil,
unprofitable states
that have arisen[26]
and makes them vanish in a moment.[27]

Just as,monks,
in the last month of the hot season the dust and dirt fly up,[28]
and then out of due season a great rain-cloud lays them and makes them vanish in a moment, — even so intent concentration
on in-breathing and out-breathing,
if cultivated and made much of,
is something peaceful and choice,
something perfect in itself,
and a pleasant way of living too.

Moreover it allays evil,
unprofitable states
that have arisen,
and makes them vanish in a moment.

And how cultivated, monks,
how made much of,
is intent concentration
on in-breathing and out-breathing
if cultivated and made much of,
something peaceful and choice,
something perfect in itself,
and a pleasant way of living.

How does it allay evil,
unprofitable states
that have arisen
and make them vanish in a moment?

In this method a monk who having gotten himself off to the forest
or the foot of a tree
or a lonely place,
sits down cross-legged,
holding the body straight.
Setting mindfulness in front of him,
he breathes in mindfully
and mindfully breathes out.

As he draws in a long breath he knows:

'A long breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a long breath he knows:

'I breathe out a long breath.'

As he draws in a short breath he knows:

'A short breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a short breath he knows:

'I breathe out a short breath.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'I shall breathe in,
feeling it go through the whole body.

Feeling it go through the whole body
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe out.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe out.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Aware of mind I shall breathe in.

Aware of mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Gladdening my mind I shall breathe in.

Gladdening my mind I shall breathe out.

Composing my mind I shall breathe in.

Composing my mind I shall breathe out.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe in.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe in.

Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe out.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe in.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe out.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe out.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe out.'

Thus cultivated, monks,
thus made much of,
is intent concentration
on in-breathing and out-breathing
if cultivated and made much of,
something peaceful and choice,
something perfect in itself,
and a pleasant way of living.

Thus does it allay evil,
unprofitable states
that have arisen
and make them vanish in a moment".

---

[19] As at Vin. (Pārājika iii); cf. VinA. iii, 393, Asubhi-kathā. Comy. refers to VM. i, 241 ff. ('in this fathom-long body,' etc.).

[20] Cf. supra, text, 12.

[21] Anekākāra-vokāraṇ.

[22] Cf. the case of Vakkali at K.S. iii, 105.

[23] Aññāya saṇṭhaheyya. Comy.= arahatte patiṭṭhaheyya

[24] Comy. bhāvito = uppādito, vaḍḍhito; bahulīkato = punappunaṇ kato.

[25] Asecanako. Comy. nāssa secanan ti (adulteration, mixing),' and defines it as anāsittako (unsprinkled), abbokiṇṇo (uninterrupted), pāṭiyekko (single), āveṇiko (unique); and gives another interpretation, viz.: āsittako, ojavanto, sabhāven'eva madhuro ti ('the elixir that no infusion needs,' K.S. i, 274). This passage is quoted and explained at VM. i, 291; SnA. ii, 7. Cf. Thig. 55; Mil. Pañh., 405.

[26] Text uppann'uppanno, but Sinh. MSS. ,v.l. uppanne (as at Expos. i,90).

[27] Thānaso, causally, on the spot, at the moment. Comy. khaṇen'eva.

[28] Cf. supra, text, 50, where reading is uggataṇ.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
54. Ānāpāna Saṃyutta
1. Eka-Dhamma Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

54. Kindred Sayings about

In-Breathing and Out-Breathing

1. The One Condition

Sutta 10

Kimbila Suttaṃ

Kimbilā[29]

---

[286]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying at Kimbilā, in Bamboo Grove.

Now on that occasion
the Exalted One addressed the venerable Kimbilā,
saying:

"Tell me, Kimbilā,
how cultivated,
how made much of,
is the practice of intent concentration
on in-breathing and out-breathing
of great fruit,
of great profit?"

At these words the venerable Kimbilā was silent.

Then a second time
the Exalted One addressed the venerable Kimbilā,
saying:

"Tell me, Kimbilā,
how cultivated,
how made much of,
is the practice of intent concentration
on in-breathing and out-breathing
of great fruit,
of great profit?"

And a second time at these words the venerable Kimbilā was silent.

Then a third time
the Exalted One addressed the venerable Kimbilā,
saying:

"Tell me, Kimbilā,
how cultivated,
how made much of,
is the practice of intent concentration
on in-breathing and out-breathing
of great fruit,
of great profit?"

And a third time at these words the venerable Kimbilā was silent.

Thereupon the venerable Ānanda said this to the Exalted One:

"Now is the time for this, Exalted One!

Now is the time, O Happy One, for the Exalted One to develop the concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing.

Hearing the Exalted One's words the monks will bear them in mind."

"Very well then, Ānanda.

Do you listen.

Apply your mind
and I will speak."

"Yes, lord," replied the venerable Ānanda to the Exalted One, who said:

"How cultivated, Ānanda,
how made much of
is the intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing
of great fruit,
of glreat profit?

In this method, Ānanda, a monk
a monk who goes to a forest
or the foot of a tree
or a lonely place,
sits down cross-legged,
holding the body straight.
Setting mindfulness in front of him,
he breathes in mindfully
and mindfully breathes out.

As he draws in a long breath he knows:

'A long breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a long breath he knows:

'I breathe out a long breath.'

As he draws in a short breath he knows:

'A short breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a short breath he knows:

'I breathe out a short breath.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'I shall breathe in,
feeling it go through the whole body.

Feeling it go through the whole body
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe out.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe out.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Aware of mind I shall breathe in.

Aware of mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Gladdening my mind I shall breathe in.

Gladdening my mind I shall breathe out.

Composing my mind I shall breathe in.

Composing my mind I shall breathe out.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe in.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe in.

Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe out.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe in.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe out.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe out.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe out.'

Thus cultivated, Ānanda,
thus made much of
is the intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing
of great fruit,
of glreat profit.

Now, Ānanda, at such time as a monk,
while drawing in a long breath,
knows:

'A long breath I draw in';

or, breathing out a long breath,
knows:

'A long breath I breathe out';

or, when drawing in a short breath,
knows:

'A short breath I draw in';

or, when breathing out a short breath,
knows:

'A short breath I breathe out';

or, when he makes up his mind
(repeating):

'Feeling it go through the whole body
I shall [287] breathe in;
feeling it go through the whole body
I shall breathe out;
calming down[30] the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe in;
calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe out,' —

at such time, Ānanda,
in body contemplating body
(as transient)
a monk dwells ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

Now, Ānanda, I declare
that this in-breathing and out-breathing is a certain body.[31]

Wherefore, Ānanda,
a monk in body contemplating body
(as transient)
dwells ardent,

self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

■

Again, Ānanda,
at such time as a monk makes up his mind
(repeating):

'Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe in:
feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe out:
feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe in:
feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe out.

Aware of the mental factors
I shall breathe in:
aware of the mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe in:
calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe out," —
at such time,
in feelings contemplating feelings,
he dwells ardent,
self-possessed;
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.'

Now, Ānanda,
I declare that this in-breathing and out-breathing,
this close attention to it,
is a certain feeling.[32]

Wherefore, Ānanda, a monk,
in feelings contemplating feelings,
at such time dwells ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

■

Again, Ānanda,
at such time as a monk makes up his mind
(repeating):

'Aware of mind
I shall breathe in:
aware of mind
I shall breathe out.

Gladdening my mind
I shall breathe in:
gladdening my mind I shall breathe out.

Composing my mind
I shall breathe in:
composing my mind I shall breathe out.

Detaching my mind
I shall breathe in:
detaching my mind I shall breathe out,' —

at such time,
in mind [288] contemplating mind
(as transient),
a monk dwells ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

What is the cause of that?

I declare, Ānanda,
that the practice of intent concentration
on in-breathing and out-breathing is not a mindfulness that is relaxed or not composed.

Wherefore, Ānanda, I say
a monk dwells in mind contemplating mind,
ardent,
selfpossessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

■

Again, Ānanda,
at such time as a monk makes up his mind
(repeating):

'Contemplating impermanence
I shall breathe in:
contemplating impermanence
I shall breathe out.

Contemplating dispassion
I shall breathe in:
contemplating dispassion
I shall breathe out.

Contemplating cessation
I shall breathe in:
contemplating cessation
I shall breathe out.

Contemplating renunciation
I shall breathe in:
contemplating renunciation
I shall breathe out,' —

at such time,
in mind-states contemplating mind-states,
a 'monk dwells ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

Abandoning whatever dejection arises from coveting, seeing it[33] with the eye of insight,
he is completely disinterested.

Wherefore I say, Ānanda,
at such a time
that monk dwells in mind-states contemplating mind-states,
ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

Suppose, Ānanda, a heap of dust at the place where four high-roads meet, and from the eastern quarter comes a cart or chariot,
and that heap of dust
is made less.

Then from the western quarter
comes a cart or chariot,
and that heap of dust
is made less.

Then from the northern quarter
comes a cart or chariot,
and that heap of dust
is made less.

Then from the southern quarter
comes a cart or chariot,
and that heap of dust
is made still less, —

just so, Ānanda,
by dwelling in body contemplating body, evil, unprofitable conditions are made less

by dwelling in feelings contemplating feelings, evil, unprofitable conditions are made less

by dwelling in mind contemplating mind, evil, unprofitable conditions are made less

by dwelling in mind-states contemplating mind-states, evil, unprofitable conditions are made less."[34]'

---

[29] For the village, see S. iv, 181; for the monk, Brethren, 105, 125.

[30] Text misprints passambhanyaṇ as passam bhayaṇ here and through. out.

[31] Kāy'aññataraṇ. Comy. 'one of the earth- (extension) element ... air-(mobile)element bodies ... fed on food,' etc. As he contemplates breathing in its bodily process, the exercise is equivalent to a contemplation of body as an aggregate, impermanent, etc.

[32] Comy. 'it is sukha-vedana.'

[33] Text misprints divā for disvā (aādhukaṇ ajjhupekkhitā).

[34] Comy. 'like the high-road are the sense-spheres. The dust-heap is the impurities therein. The four objects of meditation used in the four stations of mindfulness are like the four carts coming from the four quarters.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
54. Ānāpāna Saṃyutta
2. Ānanda or Dutiya Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

54. Kindred Sayings about

In-Breathing and Out-Breathing

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 11

Icchānangala Suttaṃ

Icchānangala

---

[289]

On a certain, occasion the Exalted One was staying at Icchānangala,[35] in a jungle thicket of Icchānangala.

On that occasion the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks, I wish to live in solitude for three months.

Let no one visit me
save the single one who brings my food."

"Very well, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

Thus no one visited the Exalted One
save the single one who brought his food.

Now at the end of those three months
the Exalted One,
leaving his solitary dwelling,
came and addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks, if the wanderers who hold other views should thus question you:

'Friends, in what way of life does Gotama the recluse generally spend the rainy season?'

thus questioned,
thus should ye make reply
to those wanderers holding other views:

'Friends, the Exalted One generally spends his time during the rainy season in the intent concentration
on in-breathing and out-breathing.'

Now, monks, in this method
I mindfully breathe in
and mindfully breathe out.

When I draw in a long breath I know:

'A long breath I draw in.'

When I breathe out a long breath I know:

'I breathe out a long breath.'

When I draw in a short breath I know:

'A short breath I draw in.'

When I breathe out a short breath I know:

'I breathe out a short breath.'

Thus I make up my mind (repeating):

'I shall breathe in,
feeling it go through the whole body.

Feeling it go through the whole body
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe out.'

Thus I make up my mind (repeating):

'Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe out.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe out.'

I make up my mind (repeating):

'Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Aware of mind I shall breathe in.

Aware of mind I shall breathe out.'

I make up my mind (repeating):

'Gladdening my mind I shall breathe in.

Gladdening my mind I shall breathe out.

Composing my mind I shall breathe in.

Composing my mind I shall breathe out.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe in.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe out.'

I make up my mind (repeating):

'Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe in.

Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe out.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe in.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe out.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe out.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe out.'

Monks, he who would rightly use the words

"Ariyan way of life,
best of[36] ways,
the Tathāgata's way of life"

would rightly do so in calling by this name the intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing,
to wit:

'The Ariyan way of life,
the best of ways,
the Tathāgata's way of life.'

[290] As for those monks who are learners, who have not won their goal,[37]
who dwell aspiring for the unsurpassed security from bondage,
— for such the intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing,
if cultivated and made much of,
conduces to the destruction of the āsavas.

Moreover, monks, for those monks who are Arahants, in whom the āsavas are destroyed,
who have lived the life,

done the task,
lifted the burden,
won their highest good,
worn out the fetters of becoming,
who by perfect knowledge have become free,
— for such also the intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing,
if cultivated and made much of,
conduces both to pleasant living
and to[38] mindful composure even in this very life.

Monks, he who would rightly use the words

'Ariyan way,
best of ways,
the Tathāgata's way of life'

would rightly do so in calling by this name the intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing,
to wit:

'The Ariyan way of life,
the best way of life,
the Tathāgata's way of life.'"

---

[35] Cf. A. iii, 30, 341; AA. iv, 340; Ud. ii, 5; UdA. 115. A brahmin village of the Kosalans.

[36] Brahma-vihāra here to be distinguished from the Four Moods of supra, 98 n., for which cf. Gotama the Man, Mrs. Rhys Davids, p. 180.

[37] Appattamānasā. Cf. M. i, 4; S. ii, 229. Mānaso seems to mean 'one's aim or intention.'

[38] Here text has a misprint ceca for ca.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
54. Ānāpāna Saṃyutta
2. Ānanda or Dutiya Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

54. Kindred Sayings about

In-Breathing and Out-Breathing

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 12

Kaṇkheyya Suttaṃ

In Doubt

---

[290]

Once the venerable Lomasavangīsa[39] was living among the Sakyans at Kapilavatthu,
in Banyan Park.

Now Mahānāma[40] the Sakyan came to see the venerable Lomasavangīsa,
and on coming to him
saluted him
and sat down at one side.

So seated
Mahānāma the Sakyan said this to the venerable Lomasavangīsa:

"Sir, is a learner's way of life the same as that of a Tathāgata, or are the two different?"

"No indeed, friend Mahānāma, a learner's way of life is not that of a Tathāgata.

The two are different.

[291] Those monks, friend Mahānāma, who are learners,
who have not won their goal,
who dwell aspiring
for the unsurpassed security from bondage,
— such dwell having abandoned five hindrances.

What five?

The hindrances which are
sensual desire,
resentment,
sloth and torpor,
excitement and worry,
doubt and wavering.

Those monks, friend,
who are learners,
who have not won their goal,
who dwell aspiring
for the unsurpassed security from bondage,
— such have abandoned these hindrances.

But, friend Mahānāma, those monks who are Arahants,
in whom the āsavas are destroyed,
who have lived the life,
done the task,
lifted the burden,
won their highest good,
worn out the fetters of becoming,
who by perfect knowledge have become free,
— in such these five hindrances are not only abandoned, but cut down at the root,
made like a palm-tree stump,
made something that has ceased to be,
so as not to grow again in future time.

What are the five?

The hindrances which are
sensual desire,
resentment,
sloth and torpor,
excitement and flurry,
doubt and wavering,
are in them abandoned,
cut down at the root,
made like a palm-tree stump,
made something that has ceased to be,
so as not to grow again in future time.

In this way, friend Mahānāma, you are to understand
that the learner's way of life is one thing, the Tathāgata's way of life another thing.

Now on a certain occasion, friend Mahānāma, the Exalted One was staying at Icchānangala in a jungle thicket of Icchānangala.

On that occasion
the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

'Monks, I wish to live in solitude for three months.

Let no one visit me
save the single one who brings my food.'

'Very well, lord,' replied those monks
to the Exalted One.

Thus no one visited the Exalted One
save the single one who brought his food.

Now at the end of those three months
the Exalted One,
leaving his solitary dwelling,
came and addressed the monks, saying:

'Monks, if the wanderers who hold other views should thus question you:

"Friends, in what way of life does Gotama the recluse generally spend the rainy season?"

thus questioned,
thus should ye make reply
to those wanderers holding other views:

"Friends, the Exalted One
generally spends his time

during the rainy season in the intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing."

Now, monks, in this method
I mindfully breathe in
and mindfully breathe out.

When I draw in a long breath I know:

"A long breath I draw in."

When I breath out a long breath he knows:

'I breath out a long breath.'

When I draw in a short breath I know:

"A short breath I draw in."

When I breathe out a short breath I know:

"I breathe out a short breath."

Thus I make up my mind (repeating):

"I shall breathe in,
feeling it go through the whole body.

Feeling it go through the whole body
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe out."

Thus I make up my mind (repeating):

"Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe out.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe out."

I make up my mind (repeating):

"Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Aware of mind I shall breathe in.

Aware of mind I shall breathe out."

I make up my mind (repeating):

"Gladdening my mind I shall breathe in.

Gladdening my mind I shall breathe out.

Composing my mind I shall breathe in.

Composing my mind I shall breathe out.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe in.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe out."

I make up my mind (repeating):

"Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe in.

Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe out.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe in.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe out.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe out.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe out."

Monks, he who would rightly use the words

"Ariyan way of life,
best of ways,
the Tathāgata's way of life"

would rightly do so in calling by this name the intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing, to wit:

"The Ariyan way of life,
the best of ways,
the Tathāgata's way of life."

As for those monks who are learners,
who have not won their goal,
who dwell aspiring for tile unsurpassed security from bondage,
— for such the intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing,
if cultivated and made much of,
conduces to the destruction of the āsavas.

Moreover, monks, for those monks who are Arahants,
in whom the āsavas are destroyed,
who have lived the life,
done the task,
lifted the burden,
won their highest good,
worn out the fetters of becoming,
who by perfect knowledge have become free,
— for such also the intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing,
if cultivated and made much of,
conduces both to pleasant living
and to mindful composure even in this very life.

Monks, he who would rightly use the words

"Ariyan way,
best of ways,
the Tathāgata's way of life"

would rightly do so in calling by this name the intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing, to wit:

"The Ariyan way of life,
the best way of life,
the Tathāgata's way of life."'

So by this method, friend Mahānāma,
you are to understand
that the learner's way of life is one thing, that of the Tathāgata another thing."

[39] The name would mean 'hairy and skin-diseased,' but the spelling is doubtful. It occurs elsewhere only at M. iii, 197, at the same town, where text reads Lomasakangiyo. Our text has B. v.l. -kambhiyo.

[40] Again at text 371, 404, etc., M. i, 91, 354. He is called, in the list of great ones at A. i, 26, among lay-disciples paṇita-dāyaka (excellent supporter), and became a stream-winner merely on seeing the Master.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
54. Ānāpāna Saṃyutta
2. Ānanda or Dutiya Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

54. Kindred Sayings about

In-Breathing and Out-Breathing

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 13

Paṭhama Ānanda Suttaṃ

Ānanda (a)

---

[291]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Ānanda came to visit the Exalted One,
and on coming to him saluted him
and sat down at one side.

So seated the venerable Ānanda said this to the Exalted One:

"Pray, lord, is there any one state which, if cultivated and made much of,
brings four states to completion?

Do four states,
if cultivated and made much of,
complete seven states?

Do seven states,
if cultivated and made much of,
complete two states?"

■

"Yes, Ānanda.

There is one state
which does complete [292] four.

Four states complete seven,
and seven complete two.

What are they?.

Intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing, Ānanda,
is the one state
which, if cultivated and made much of,
brings the four arisings of mindfulness to completion.

The four arisings of mindfulness,
if cultivated and made much of,
bring the seven limbs of wisdom to completion.

The seven limbs of wisdom,
if cultivated and made much of,

complete knowledge and release.[41]

I

And how cultivated,
how made much of,
does intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing complete the four arisings of mindfulness?

In this method, Ānanda,
a monk who has gone to the forest
or the foot of a tree
or a lonely place,
sits down cross-legged,
holding the body straight.
Setting mindfulness in front of him,
he breathes in mindfully
and mindfully breathes out.

As he draws in a long breath he knows:

'A long breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a long breath he knows:

'I breathe out a long breath.'

As he draws in a short breath he knows:

'A short breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a short breath he knows:

'I breathe out a short breath.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'I shall breathe in,
feeling it go through the whole body.

Feeling it go through the whole body
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe out.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe out.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Aware of mind I shall breathe in.

Aware of mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Gladdening my mind I shall breathe in.

Gladdening my mind I shall breathe out.

Composing my mind I shall breathe in.

Composing my mind I shall breathe out.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe in.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe in.

Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe out.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe in.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe out.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe out.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe out.'

■

Now, Ānanda, at such time as a monk,
while drawing in a long breath,
knows:

'A long breath I draw in';

or, breathing out a long breath,
knows:

'A long breath I breathe out';

or, when drawing in a short breath,
knows:

'A short breath I draw in';

or, when breathing out a short breath,
knows:

'A short breath I breathe out';

or, when he makes up his mind
(repeating):

'Feeling it go through the whole body
I shall breathe in;
feeling it go through the whole body
I shall breathe out;
calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe in;
calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe out,' —

at such time, Ānanda,
in body contemplating body

(as transient)
a monk dwells ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

Now, Ānanda, I declare
that this in-breathing and out-breathing
is a certain body.

Wherefore, Ānanda,
a monk in body contemplating body
(as transient)
dwells ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

■

[48]Again, Ānanda,
at such time as a monk makes up his mind
(repeating):

'Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe in:
feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe out:
feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe in:
feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe out.

Aware of the mental factors
I shall breathe in:
aware of the mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe in:
calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe out," —
at such time,
in feelings contemplating feelings,
he dwells ardent,
self-possessed;
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.'

Now, Ānanda,
I declare that this in-breathing and out-breathing,
this close attention to it,
is a certain feeling.

Wherefore, Ānanda, a monk,
in feelings contemplating feelings,
at such time dwells ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

■

Again, Ānanda,
at such time as a monk makes up his mind
(repeating):

'Aware of mind
I shall breathe in:
aware of mind
I shall breathe out.

Gladdening my mind
I shall breathe in:
gladdening my mind I shall breathe out.

Composing my mind
I shall breathe in:
composing my mind I shall breathe out.

Detaching my mind
I shall breathe in:
detaching my mind I shall breathe out,' —

at such time,
in mind contemplating mind
(as transient),
a monk dwells ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

What is the cause of that?

I declare, Ānanda,
that the practice of intent concentration
on in-breathing and out-breathing
is not a mindfulness that is relaxed
or not composed.

Wherefore, Ānanda, I say
a monk dwells in mind contemplating mind,
ardent,

selfpossessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

■

Again, Ānanda,
at such time as a monk makes up his mind
(repeating):

'Contemplating impermanence
I shall breathe in:
contemplating impermanence
I shall breathe out.

Contemplating dispassion
I shall breathe in:
contemplating dispassion
I shall breathe out.

Contemplating cessation
I shall breathe in:
contemplating cessation
I shall breathe out.

Contemplating renunciation
I shall breathe in:
contemplating renunciation
I shall breathe out,' —

at such time,
in mind-states contemplating mind-states,
a 'monk dwells ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,

by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

Abandoning whatever dejection arises from coveting,
seeing it with the eye of insight,
he is completely disinterested.

Wherefore I say, Ānanda,
at such a time
that monk dwells in mind-states contemplating mind-states,
ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

Thus cultivated, Ānanda,
thus made much of,
intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing completes the four arisings of mindfulness.

II[42]

And how cultivated, Ānanda,
how made much of,
do the four arisings of mindfulness complete the seven limbs of wisdom?

■

Body

The Mindfulness Limb of Wisdom

At such time as a monk dwells,
in body contemplating body,
with mindfulness established,

his mindfulness is not relaxed;
at such time as his mindfulness,
being established,
is not relaxed,
the limb of wisaom which is mindfulness
is established in that monk.

Then it is, Ānanda,
that a monk is cultivating the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness.

Then it is that the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness by cultivation goes [293] to completion in a monk.

■

The Norm-Investigation Limb of Wisdom

He, thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,
he examines it,
he comes to close scrutiny of it.

At such time, Ānanda, as a monk,
thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,[43]
comes to close scrutiny of it, then it is that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
is undertaken by a monk;
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation.

Then it is, Ānanda,
that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Energy Limb of Wisdom

As he investigates that state by insight,
as he examines it,
as he comes to close scrutiny of it,
unwavering energy is established in him.

At such time, Ānanda,
as unwavering energy is established in a monk
who is investigating that state by insight,
examining it,
coming to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is energy
is established in that monk.

Then it is that he cultivates that limb of wisdom:
that limb of wisdom goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it;
and there arises in him
a zest that is not carnal[44]
for the energy which he has established.

■

The Zest Limb of Wisdom

At such time, Ānanda,
as zest that is not carnal
arises in a monk
whose energy is established,
the limb of wisdom which is zest
is established in him:
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is zest.

At such time
the limb of wisdom which is zest

goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it.

■

The Tranquillity Limb of Wisdom

In one who is zestful
the body is tranquillized,
the mind is tranquillized.

At such time, Ānanda,
as the body and mind of a monk who is zestfu1[45]
are tranquillized,
the limb of wisdom which is tranquillity
is established in him.

At such time a monk cultivates this limb of wisdom:
it goes to completion in a monk by cultivation.

■

The Concentration Limb of Wisdom

In him whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,
the mind is composed.[46]

[294] When, Ānanda,
in a monk whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,
the mind is composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is concentration
is established in him:
he thus cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it goes to completion in him.

■

The Equanimity Limb of Wisdom

He is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker[47]
of his mind thus composed.

Now, Ānanda, when a monk is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is equanimity
is established in him:
it is then that he cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it is then that this limb of wisdom
goes to completion in him
by cultivation of it.

■

Feeling

The Mindfulness Limb of Wisdom

At such time as a monk dwells,
in feeling contemplating feeling,
with mindfulness established,
his mindfulness is not relaxed;
at such time as his mindfulness,
being established,
is not relaxed,
the limb of wisaom which is mindfulness
is established in that monk.

Then it is, Ānanda,
that a monk is cultivating the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness.

Then it is that the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness
by cultivation goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Norm-Investigation Limb of Wisdom

He, thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,
he examines it,
he comes to close scrutiny of it.

At such time, Ānanda, as a monk,
thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,
comes to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
is undertaken by a monk;
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation.

Then it is, Ānanda,
that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Energy Limb of Wisdom

As he investigates that state by insight,
as he examines it,
as he comes to close scrutiny of it,
unwavering energy is established in him.

At such time, Ānanda,
as unwavering energy is established in a monk
who is investigating that state by insight,
examining it,
coming to close scrutiny of it,

then it is that the limb of wisdom which is energy
is established in that monk.

Then it is that he cultivates that limb of wisdom:
that limb of wisdom goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it;
and there arises in him
a zest that is not carnal
for the energy which he has established.

■

The Zest Limb of Wisdom

At such time, Ānanda,
as zest that is not carnal
arises in a monk
whose energy is established,
the limb of wisdom which is zest
is established in him:
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is zest.

At such time
the limb of wisdom which is zest
goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it.

■

The Tranquillity Limb of Wisdom

In one who is zestful
the body is tranquillized,
the mind is tranquillized.

At such time, Ānanda,
as the body and mind of a monk who is zestfu1
are tranquillized,
the limb of wisdom which is tranquillity
is established in him.

At such time a monk cultivates this limb of wisdom:
it goes to completion in a monk by cultivation.

■

The Concentration Limb of Wisdom

In him whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,
the mind is composed.

When, Ānanda,
in a monk whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,
the mind is composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is concentration
is established in him:
he thus cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it goes to completion in him.

■

The Equanimity Limb of Wisdom

He is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed.

Now, Ānanda, when a monk is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is equanimity
is established in him:

it is then that he cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it is then that this limb of wisdom
goes to completion in him
by cultivation of it.

■

Mind

The Mindfulness Limb of Wisdom

At such time as a monk dwells,
in mind contemplating mind,
with mindfulness established,
his mindfulness is not relaxed;
at such time as his mindfulness,
being established,
is not relaxed,
the limb of wisaom which is mindfulness
is established in that monk.

Then it is, Ānanda,
that a monk is cultivating the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness.

Then it is that the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness
by cultivation goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Norm-Investigation Limb of Wisdom

He, thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,
he examines it,
he comes to close scrutiny of it.

At such time, Ānanda, as a monk,
thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,
comes to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
is undertaken by a monk;
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation.

Then it is, Ānanda,
that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Energy Limb of Wisdom

As he investigates that state by insight,
as he examines it,
as he comes to close scrutiny of it,
unwavering energy is established in him.

At such time, Ānanda,
as unwavering energy is established in a monk
who is investigating that state by insight,
examining it,
coming to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is energy
is established in that monk.

Then it is that he cultivates that limb of wisdom:
that limb of wisdom goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it;
and there arises in him
a zest that is not carnal
for the energy which he has established.

■

The Zest Limb of Wisdom

At such time, Ānanda,
as zest that is not carnal
arises in a monk
whose energy is established,
the limb of wisdom which is zest
is established in him:
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is zest.

At such time
the limb of wisdom which is zest
goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it.

■

The Tranquillity Limb of Wisdom

In one who is zestful
the body is tranquillized,
the mind is tranquillized.

At such time, Ānanda,
as the body and mind of a monk who is zestfu1
are tranquillized,
the limb of wisdom which is tranquillity
is established in him.

At such time a monk cultivates this limb of wisdom:
it goes to completion in a monk by cultivation.

■

The Concentration Limb of Wisdom

In him whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,
the mind is composed.

When, Ānanda,
in a monk whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,
the mind is composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is concentration
is established in him:
he thus cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it goes to completion in him.

■

The Equanimity Limb of Wisdom

He is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed.

Now, Ānanda, when a monk is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is equanimity
is established in him:
it is then that he cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it is then that this limb of wisdom
goes to completion in him
by cultivation of it.

■

Mind-States

The Mindfulness Limb of Wisdom

At such time as a monk dwells,
in mind-states contemplating mind-states,
with mindfulness established,
his mindfulness is not relaxed;
at such time as his mindfulness,
being established,
is not relaxed,
the limb of wisaom which is mindfulness
is established in that monk.

Then it is, Ānanda,
that a monk is cultivating the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness.

Then it is that the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness
by cultivation goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Norm-Investigation Limb of Wisdom

He, thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,
he examines it,
he comes to close scrutiny of it.

At such time, Ānanda, as a monk,
thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,
comes to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
is undertaken by a monk;
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation.

Then it is, Ānanda,
that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Energy Limb of Wisdom

As he investigates that state by insight,
as he examines it,
as he comes to close scrutiny of it,
unwavering energy is established in him.

At such time, Ānanda,
as unwavering energy is established in a monk
who is investigating that state by insight,
examining it,
coming to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is energy
is established in that monk.

Then it is that he cultivates that limb of wisdom:
that limb of wisdom goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it;
and there arises in him
a zest that is not carnal
for the energy which he has established.

■

The Zest Limb of Wisdom

At such time, Ānanda,
as zest that is not carnal
arises in a monk
whose energy is established,
the limb of wisdom which is zest
is established in him:
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is zest.

At such time
the limb of wisdom which is zest
goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it.

■

The Tranquillity Limb of Wisdom

In one who is zestful
the body is tranquillized,
the mind is tranquillized.

At such time, Ānanda,
as the body and mind of a monk who is zestfu1
are tranquillized,
the limb of wisdom which is tranquillity
is established in him.

At such time a monk cultivates this limb of wisdom:
it goes to completion in a monk by cultivation.

■

The Concentration Limb of Wisdom

In him whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,
the mind is composed.

When, Ānanda,
in a monk whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,
the mind is composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is concentration
is established in him:

he thus cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it goes to completion in him.

■

The Equanimity Limb of Wisdom

He is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed.

Now, Ānanda, when a monk is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is equanimity
is established in him:
it is then that he cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it is then that this limb of wisdom
goes to completion in him
by cultivation of it.

■

Thus cultivated, Ānanda,
thus made much of,
the four arisings of mindfulness complete the seven limbs of wisdom.

III

Now, Ānanda, how cultivated,
how made much of,
do the seven limbs of wisdom
complete knowledge and release?

Herein, Ānanda, a monk cultivates the limb of wisdom
that is mindfulness,
which is based on seclusion,
on dispassion,

on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom
that is investigation of the Norm,
which is based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom
that is energy,
which is based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom
that is zest,
which is based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom
that is tranquillity,
which is based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom
that is concentration,
which is based on seclusion,
on dispassion,

on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom
that is equanimity,
which is based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

Thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the seven limbs of wisdom
complete knowledge and release."

---

[41] Cf. VM. i, 291; M. iii, 82.

[42] This section repeats matters at text, 68 ff.

[43] Comy. 'by way of impermanence,' etc.

[44] Nirāmisā pīti = nikkilesā p. (untainted). Comy. Cf. K.S. iv, 147 n., 160 (the zest of the first trance, which is refined in each succeeding stage of trance).

[45] Pītimanasa.

[46] Samādhi-gati, 'as if in ecstasy (appanā).' Comy.

[47] Ajjhupekkhitā ('inwardly neutral'). Cf. n. on text, 69. [Ed.: Note reads: S^{1-3} °pekkhitaṃ]

[48] Text does not add the contemplation on mind and mind-states, which should be [Ed.: have been] included here.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
54. Ānāpāna Saṃyutta
2. Ānanda or Dutiya Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

54. Kindred Sayings about

In-Breathing and Out-Breathing

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 14

Dutiya Ānanda Suttaṃ

Ānanda (b)

---

[294]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Ānanda came to visit the Exalted One,
and on coming to him saluted him
and sat down at one side.

So seated the Exalted One said this to Ānanda:

"Pray, Ānanda, is there any one state which, if cultivated and made much of,
brings four states to completion?

Do four states,
if cultivated and made much of,
complete seven states?

Do seven states,
if cultivated and made much of,
complete two states?"

■

"For us, lord,
things have the Exalted one as their root,
their guide,
their resort.

It were well for us
if the Exalted One would reveal the meaning of what he has just uttered.

Hearing it from him
the brethren will remember it."

There is one state
which does complete four.

Four states complete seven,
and seven complete two.

What are they?.

Intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing, Ānanda,
is the one state
which, if cultivated and made much of,
brings the four arisings of mindfulness to completion.

The four arisings of mindfulness,
if cultivated and made much of,
bring the seven limbs of wisdom to completion.

The seven limbs of wisdom,
if cultivated and made much of,
complete knowledge and release.

I

And how cultivated,
how made much of,
does intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing
complete the four arisings of mindfulness?

In this method, Ānanda,
a monk who has gone to the forest
or the foot of a tree
or a lonely place,
sits down cross-legged,
holding the body straight.
Setting mindfulness in front of him,
he breathes in mindfully
and mindfully breathes out.

As he draws in a long breath he knows:

'A long breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a long breath he knows:

'I breathe out a long breath.'

As he draws in a short breath he knows:

'A short breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a short breath he knows:

'I breathe out a short breath.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'I shall breathe in,
feeling it go through the whole body.

Feeling it go through the whole body
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe out.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe out.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Aware of mind I shall breathe in.

Aware of mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Gladdening my mind I shall breathe in.

Gladdening my mind I shall breathe out.

Composing my mind I shall breathe in.

Composing my mind I shall breathe out.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe in.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe in.

Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe out.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe in.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe out.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe out.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe out.'

■

Now, Ānanda, at such time as a monk,
while drawing in a long breath,
knows:

'A long breath I draw in';

or, breathing out a long breath,
knows:

'A long breath I breathe out';

or, when drawing in a short breath,
knows:

'A short breath I draw in';

or, when breathing out a short breath,
knows:

'A short breath I breathe out';

or, when he makes up his mind
(repeating):

'Feeling it go through the whole body
I shall breathe in;

feeling it go through the whole body
I shall breathe out;
calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe in;
calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe out,' —

at such time, Ānanda,
in body contemplating body
(as transient)
a monk dwells ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

Now, Ānanda, I declare
that this in-breathing and out-breathing
is a certain body.

Wherefore, Ānanda,
a monk in body contemplating body
(as transient)
dwells ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

■

Again, Ānanda,
at such time as a monk makes up his mind
(repeating):

'Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe in:

feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe out:
feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe in:
feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe out.

Aware of the mental factors
I shall breathe in:
aware of the mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe in:
calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe out," —
at such time,
in feelings contemplating feelings,
he dwells ardent,
self-possessed;
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.'

Now, Ānanda,
I declare that this in-breathing and out-breathing,
this close attention to it,
is a certain feeling.

Wherefore, Ānanda, a monk,
in feelings contemplating feelings,
at such time dwells ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

■

Again, Ānanda,
at such time as a monk makes up his mind
(repeating):

'Aware of mind
I shall breathe in:
aware of mind
I shall breathe out.

Gladdening my mind
I shall breathe in:
gladdening my mind I shall breathe out.

Composing my mind
I shall breathe in:
composing my mind I shall breathe out.

Detaching my mind
I shall breathe in:
detaching my mind I shall breathe out,' —

at such time,
in mind contemplating mind
(as transient),
a monk dwells ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

What is the cause of that?

I declare, Ānanda,
that the practice of intent concentration
on in-breathing and out-breathing

is not a mindfulness that is relaxed
or not composed.

Wherefore, Ānanda, I say
a monk dwells in mind contemplating mind,
ardent,
selfpossessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

■

Again, Ānanda,
at such time as a monk makes up his mind
(repeating):

'Contemplating impermanence
I shall breathe in:
contemplating impermanence
I shall breathe out.

Contemplating dispassion
I shall breathe in:
contemplating dispassion
I shall breathe out.

Contemplating cessation
I shall breathe in:
contemplating cessation
I shall breathe out.

Contemplating renunciation
I shall breathe in:
contemplating renunciation
I shall breathe out,' —

at such time,
in mind-states contemplating mind-states,
a 'monk dwells ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

Abandoning whatever dejection arises from coveting,
seeing it with the eye of insight,
he is completely disinterested.

Wherefore I say, Ānanda,
at such a time
that monk dwells in mind-states contemplating mind-states,
ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

Thus cultivated, Ānanda,
thus made much of,
intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing completes the four arisings of mindfulness.

II

And how cultivated, Ānanda,
how made much of,
do the four arisings of mindfulness complete the seven limbs of wisdom?

■

Body

The Mindfulness Limb of Wisdom

At such time as a monk dwells,
in body contemplating body,
with mindfulness established,
his mindfulness is not relaxed;
at such time as his mindfulness,
being established,
is not relaxed,
the limb of wisaom which is mindfulness
is established in that monk.

Then it is, Ānanda,
that a monk is cultivating the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness.

Then it is that the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness
by cultivation goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Norm-Investigation Limb of Wisdom

He, thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,
he examines it,
he comes to close scrutiny of it.

At such time, Ānanda, as a monk,
thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,
comes to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
is undertaken by a monk;
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation.

Then it is, Ānanda,
that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Energy Limb of Wisdom

As he investigates that state by insight,
as he examines it,
as he comes to close scrutiny of it,
unwavering energy is established in him.

At such time, Ānanda,
as unwavering energy is established in a monk
who is investigating that state by insight,
examining it,
coming to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is energy
is established in that monk.

Then it is that he cultivates that limb of wisdom:
that limb of wisdom goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it;
and there arises in him
a zest that is not carnal
for the energy which he has established.

■

The Zest Limb of Wisdom

At such time, Ānanda,
as zest that is not carnal
arises in a monk
whose energy is established,
the limb of wisdom which is zest

is established in him:
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is zest.

At such time
the limb of wisdom which is zest
goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it.

■

The Tranquillity Limb of Wisdom

In one who is zestful
the body is tranquillized,
the mind is tranquillized.

At such time, Ānanda,
as the body and mind of a monk who is zestfu1
are tranquillized,
the limb of wisdom which is tranquillity
is established in him.

At such time a monk cultivates this limb of wisdom:
it goes to completion in a monk by cultivation.

■

The Concentration Limb of Wisdom

In him whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,
the mind is composed.

When, Ānanda,
in a monk whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,

the mind is composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is concentration
is established in him:
he thus cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it goes to completion in him.

■

The Equanimity Limb of Wisdom

He is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed.

Now, Ānanda, when a monk is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is equanimity
is established in him:
it is then that he cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it is then that this limb of wisdom
goes to completion in him
by cultivation of it.

■

Feeling

The Mindfulness Limb of Wisdom

At such time as a monk dwells,
in feeling contemplating feeling,
with mindfulness established,
his mindfulness is not relaxed;
at such time as his mindfulness,
being established,
is not relaxed,
the limb of wisaom which is mindfulness
is established in that monk.

Then it is, Ānanda,
that a monk is cultivating the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness.

Then it is that the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness
by cultivation goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Norm-Investigation Limb of Wisdom

He, thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,
he examines it,
he comes to close scrutiny of it.

At such time, Ānanda, as a monk,
thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,
comes to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
is undertaken by a monk;
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation.

Then it is, Ānanda,
that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Energy Limb of Wisdom

As he investigates that state by insight,
as he examines it,
as he comes to close scrutiny of it,
unwavering energy is established in him.

At such time, Ānanda,
as unwavering energy is established in a monk
who is investigating that state by insight,
examining it,
coming to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is energy
is established in that monk.

Then it is that he cultivates that limb of wisdom:
that limb of wisdom goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it;
and there arises in him
a zest that is not carnal
for the energy which he has established.

■

The Zest Limb of Wisdom

At such time, Ānanda,
as zest that is not carnal
arises in a monk
whose energy is established,
the limb of wisdom which is zest
is established in him:
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is zest.

At such time
the limb of wisdom which is zest
goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it.

■

The Tranquillity Limb of Wisdom

In one who is zestful
the body is tranquillized,
the mind is tranquillized.

At such time, Ānanda,
as the body and mind of a monk who is zestfu1
are tranquillized,
the limb of wisdom which is tranquillity
is established in him.

At such time a monk cultivates this limb of wisdom:
it goes to completion in a monk by cultivation.

■

The Concentration Limb of Wisdom

In him whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,
the mind is composed.

When, Ānanda,
in a monk whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,
the mind is composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is concentration
is established in him:
he thus cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it goes to completion in him.

■

The Equanimity Limb of Wisdom

He is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed.

Now, Ānanda, when a monk is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is equanimity
is established in him:
it is then that he cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it is then that this limb of wisdom
goes to completion in him
by cultivation of it.

■

Mind

The Mindfulness Limb of Wisdom

At such time as a monk dwells,
in mind contemplating mind,
with mindfulness established,
his mindfulness is not relaxed;
at such time as his mindfulness,
being established,
is not relaxed,
the limb of wisaom which is mindfulness
is established in that monk.

Then it is, Ānanda,
that a monk is cultivating the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness.

Then it is that the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness
by cultivation goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Norm-Investigation Limb of Wisdom

He, thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,

he examines it,
he comes to close scrutiny of it.

At such time, Ānanda, as a monk,
thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,
comes to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
is undertaken by a monk;
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation.

Then it is, Ānanda,
that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Energy Limb of Wisdom

As he investigates that state by insight,
as he examines it,
as he comes to close scrutiny of it,
unwavering energy is established in him.

At such time, Ānanda,
as unwavering energy is established in a monk
who is investigating that state by insight,
examining it,
coming to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is energy
is established in that monk.

Then it is that he cultivates that limb of wisdom:
that limb of wisdom goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it;
and there arises in him

a zest that is not carnal
for the energy which he has established.

■

The Zest Limb of Wisdom

At such time, Ānanda,
as zest that is not carnal
arises in a monk
whose energy is established,
the limb of wisdom which is zest
is established in him:
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is zest.

At such time
the limb of wisdom which is zest
goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it.

■

The Tranquillity Limb of Wisdom

In one who is zestful
the body is tranquillized,
the mind is tranquillized.

At such time, Ānanda,
as the body and mind of a monk who is zestfu1
are tranquillized,
the limb of wisdom which is tranquillity
is established in him.

At such time a monk cultivates this limb of wisdom:
it goes to completion in a monk by cultivation.

■

The Concentration Limb of Wisdom

In him whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,
the mind is composed.

When, Ānanda,
in a monk whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,
the mind is composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is concentration
is established in him:
he thus cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it goes to completion in him.

■

The Equanimity Limb of Wisdom

He is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed.

Now, Ānanda, when a monk is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is equanimity
is established in him:
it is then that he cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it is then that this limb of wisdom
goes to completion in him
by cultivation of it.

■

Mind-States

The Mindfulness Limb of Wisdom

At such time as a monk dwells,
in mind-states contemplating mind-states,
with mindfulness established,
his mindfulness is not relaxed;
at such time as his mindfulness,
being established,
is not relaxed,
the limb of wisaom which is mindfulness
is established in that monk.

Then it is, Ānanda,
that a monk is cultivating the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness.

Then it is that the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness
by cultivation goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Norm-Investigation Limb of Wisdom

He, thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,
he examines it,
he comes to close scrutiny of it.

At such time, Ānanda, as a monk,
thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,
comes to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
is undertaken by a monk;
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation.

Then it is, Ānanda,
that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Energy Limb of Wisdom

As he investigates that state by insight,
as he examines it,
as he comes to close scrutiny of it,
unwavering energy is established in him.

At such time, Ānanda,
as unwavering energy is established in a monk
who is investigating that state by insight,
examining it,
coming to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is energy
is established in that monk.

Then it is that he cultivates that limb of wisdom:
that limb of wisdom goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it;
and there arises in him
a zest that is not carnal
for the energy which he has established.

■

The Zest Limb of Wisdom

At such time, Ānanda,
as zest that is not carnal
arises in a monk
whose energy is established,
the limb of wisdom which is zest

is established in him:
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is zest.

At such time
the limb of wisdom which is zest
goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it.

■

The Tranquillity Limb of Wisdom

In one who is zestful
the body is tranquillized,
the mind is tranquillized.

At such time, Ānanda,
as the body and mind of a monk who is zestfu1
are tranquillized,
the limb of wisdom which is tranquillity
is established in him.

At such time a monk cultivates this limb of wisdom:
it goes to completion in a monk by cultivation.

■

The Concentration Limb of Wisdom

In him whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,
the mind is composed.

When, Ānanda,
in a monk whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,

the mind is composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is concentration
is established in him:
he thus cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it goes to completion in him.

■

The Equanimity Limb of Wisdom

He is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed.

Now, Ānanda, when a monk is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is equanimity
is established in him:
it is then that he cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it is then that this limb of wisdom
goes to completion in him
by cultivation of it.

■

Thus cultivated, Ānanda,
thus made much of,
the four arisings of mindfulness complete the seven limbs of wisdom.

III

Now, Ānanda, how cultivated,
how made much of,
do the seven limbs of wisdom
complete knowledge and release?

Herein, Ānanda, a monk cultivates the limb of wisdom
that is mindfulness,
which is based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom
that is investigation of the Norm,
which is based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom
that is energy,
which is based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom
that is zest,
which is based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom
that is tranquillity,
which is based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom
that is concentration,
which is based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom
that is equanimity,
which is based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

Thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the seven limbs of wisdom
complete knowledge and release."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
54. Ānāpāna Saṃyutta
2. Ānanda or Dutiya Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

54. Kindred Sayings about

In-Breathing and Out-Breathing

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 15

Paṭhama Bhikkhū Suttaṃ

Monks (a)

---

[295]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a number of monks came to visit the Exalted One,
and on coming to him saluted him
and sat down at one side.

So seated those monks said this to the Exalted One:

"Pray, lord, is there any one state
which, if cultivated and made much of,
brings four states to completion?

Do four states,
if cultivated and made much of,
complete seven states?

Do seven states,
if cultivated and made much of,
complete two states?"

■

"Yes, monks.

There is one state
which does complete four.

Four states complete seven,
and seven complete two.

What are they?.

Intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing, monks,
is the one state
which, if cultivated and made much of,
brings the four arisings of mindfulness to completion.

The four arisings of mindfulness,
if cultivated and made much of,
bring the seven limbs of wisdom to completion.

The seven limbs of wisdom,
if cultivated and made much of,

complete knowledge and release.

I

And how cultivated,
how made much of,
does intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing
complete the four arisings of mindfulness?

In this method, monks,
a monk who has gone to the forest
or the foot of a tree
or a lonely place,
sits down cross-legged,
holding the body straight.
Setting mindfulness in front of him,
he breathes in mindfully
and mindfully breathes out.

As he draws in a long breath he knows:

'A long breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a long breath he knows:

'I breathe out a long breath.'

As he draws in a short breath he knows:

'A short breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a short breath he knows:

'I breathe out a short breath.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'I shall breathe in,
feeling it go through the whole body.

Feeling it go through the whole body
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe out.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe out.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Aware of mind I shall breathe in.

Aware of mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Gladdening my mind I shall breathe in.

Gladdening my mind I shall breathe out.

Composing my mind I shall breathe in.

Composing my mind I shall breathe out.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe in.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe in.

Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe out.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe in.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe out.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe out.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe out.'

■

Now, monks, at such time as a monk,
while drawing in a long breath,
knows:

'A long breath I draw in';

or, breathing out a long breath,
knows:

'A long breath I breathe out';

or, when drawing in a short breath,
knows:

'A short breath I draw in';

or, when breathing out a short breath,
knows:

'A short breath I breathe out';

or, when he makes up his mind
(repeating):

'Feeling it go through the whole body
I shall breathe in;
feeling it go through the whole body
I shall breathe out;
calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe in;
calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe out,' —

at such time, monks,
in body contemplating body

(as transient)
a monk dwells ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

Now, monks, I declare
that this in-breathing and out-breathing
is a certain body.

Wherefore, monks,
a monk in body contemplating body
(as transient)
dwells ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

■

Again, monks,
at such time as a monk makes up his mind
(repeating):

'Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe in:
feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe out:
feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe in:
feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe out.

Aware of the mental factors
I shall breathe in:

aware of the mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe in:
calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe out," —
at such time,
in feelings contemplating feelings,
he dwells ardent,
self-possessed;
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.'

Now, monks,
I declare that this in-breathing and out-breathing,
this close attention to it,
is a certain feeling.

Wherefore, monks, a monk,
in feelings contemplating feelings,
at such time dwells ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

■

Again, monks,
at such time as a monk makes up his mind
(repeating):

'Aware of mind
I shall breathe in:

aware of mind
I shall breathe out.

Gladdening my mind
I shall breathe in:
gladdening my mind I shall breathe out.

Composing my mind
I shall breathe in:
composing my mind I shall breathe out.

Detaching my mind
I shall breathe in:
detaching my mind I shall breathe out,' —

at such time,
in mind contemplating mind
(as transient),
a monk dwells ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

What is the cause of that?

I declare, monks,
that the practice of intent concentration
on in-breathing and out-breathing
is not a mindfulness that is relaxed
or not composed.

Wherefore, monks, I say
a monk dwells in mind contemplating mind,
ardent,
selfpossessed
and mindful,

by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

■

Again, monks,
at such time as a monk makes up his mind
(repeating):

'Contemplating impermanence
I shall breathe in:
contemplating impermanence
I shall breathe out.

Contemplating dispassion
I shall breathe in:
contemplating dispassion
I shall breathe out.

Contemplating cessation
I shall breathe in:
contemplating cessation
I shall breathe out.

Contemplating renunciation
I shall breathe in:
contemplating renunciation
I shall breathe out,' —

at such time,
in mind-states contemplating mind-states,
a 'monk dwells ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

Abandoning whatever dejection arises from coveting,
seeing it with the eye of insight,
he is completely disinterested.

Wherefore I say, monks,
at such a time
that monk dwells in mind-states contemplating mind-states,
ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

Thus cultivated, monks,
thus made much of,
intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing completes the four arisings of mindfulness.

II

And how cultivated, monks,
how made much of,
do the four arisings of mindfulness complete the seven limbs of wisdom?

■

Body

The Mindfulness Limb of Wisdom

At such time as a monk dwells,
in body contemplating body,
with mindfulness established,
his mindfulness is not relaxed;
at such time as his mindfulness,
being established,

is not relaxed,
the limb of wisaom which is mindfulness
is established in that monk.

Then it is, monks,
that a monk is cultivating the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness.

Then it is that the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness
by cultivation goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Norm-Investigation Limb of Wisdom

He, thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,
he examines it,
he comes to close scrutiny of it.

At such time, monks, as a monk,
thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,
comes to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
is undertaken by a monk;
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation.

Then it is, monks,
that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Energy Limb of Wisdom

As he investigates that state by insight,
as he examines it,
as he comes to close scrutiny of it,
unwavering energy is established in him.

At such time, monks,
as unwavering energy is established in a monk
who is investigating that state by insight,
examining it,
coming to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is energy
is established in that monk.

Then it is that he cultivates that limb of wisdom:
that limb of wisdom goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it;
and there arises in him
a zest that is not carnal
for the energy which he has established.

■

The Zest Limb of Wisdom

At such time, monks,
as zest that is not carnal
arises in a monk
whose energy is established,
the limb of wisdom which is zest
is established in him:
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is zest.

At such time
the limb of wisdom which is zest
goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it.

■

The Tranquillity Limb of Wisdom

In one who is zestful
the body is tranquillized,
the mind is tranquillized.

At such time, monks,
as the body and mind of a monk who is zestfu1
are tranquillized,
the limb of wisdom which is tranquillity
is established in him.

At such time a monk cultivates this limb of wisdom:
it goes to completion in a monk by cultivation.

■

The Concentration Limb of Wisdom

In him whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,
the mind is composed.

When, monks,
in a monk whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,
the mind is composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is concentration
is established in him:
he thus cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it goes to completion in him.

■

The Equanimity Limb of Wisdom

He is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed.

Now, monks, when a monk is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is equanimity
is established in him:
it is then that he cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it is then that this limb of wisdom
goes to completion in him
by cultivation of it.

■

Feeling

The Mindfulness Limb of Wisdom

At such time as a monk dwells,
in feeling contemplating feeling,
with mindfulness established,
his mindfulness is not relaxed;
at such time as his mindfulness,
being established,
is not relaxed,
the limb of wisaom which is mindfulness
is established in that monk.

Then it is, monks,
that a monk is cultivating the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness.

Then it is that the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness
by cultivation goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Norm-Investigation Limb of Wisdom

He, thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,
he examines it,
he comes to close scrutiny of it.

At such time, monks, as a monk,
thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,
comes to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
is undertaken by a monk;
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation.

Then it is, monks,
that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Energy Limb of Wisdom

As he investigates that state by insight,
as he examines it,
as he comes to close scrutiny of it,
unwavering energy is established in him.

At such time, monks,
as unwavering energy is established in a monk
who is investigating that state by insight,
examining it,
coming to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is energy
is established in that monk.

Then it is that he cultivates that limb of wisdom:
that limb of wisdom goes to completion in that monk

owing to cultivation of it;
and there arises in him
a zest that is not carnal
for the energy which he has established.

■

The Zest Limb of Wisdom

At such time, monks,
as zest that is not carnal
arises in a monk
whose energy is established,
the limb of wisdom which is zest
is established in him:
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is zest.

At such time
the limb of wisdom which is zest
goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it.

■

The Tranquillity Limb of Wisdom

In one who is zestful
the body is tranquillized,
the mind is tranquillized.

At such time, monks,
as the body and mind of a monk who is zestfu1
are tranquillized,
the limb of wisdom which is tranquillity
is established in him.

At such time a monk cultivates this limb of wisdom:
it goes to completion in a monk by cultivation.

■

The Concentration Limb of Wisdom

In him whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,
the mind is composed.

When, monks,
in a monk whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,
the mind is composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is concentration
is established in him:
he thus cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it goes to completion in him.

■

The Equanimity Limb of Wisdom

He is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed.

Now, monks, when a monk is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is equanimity
is established in him:
it is then that he cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it is then that this limb of wisdom
goes to completion in him
by cultivation of it.

■

Mind

The Mindfulness Limb of Wisdom

At such time as a monk dwells,
in mind contemplating mind,
with mindfulness established,
his mindfulness is not relaxed;
at such time as his mindfulness,
being established,
is not relaxed,
the limb of wisaom which is mindfulness
is established in that monk.

Then it is, monks,
that a monk is cultivating the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness.

Then it is that the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness
by cultivation goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Norm-Investigation Limb of Wisdom

He, thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,
he examines it,
he comes to close scrutiny of it.

At such time, monks, as a monk,
thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,
comes to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
is undertaken by a monk;
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation.

Then it is, monks,
that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Energy Limb of Wisdom

As he investigates that state by insight,
as he examines it,
as he comes to close scrutiny of it,
unwavering energy is established in him.

At such time, monks,
as unwavering energy is established in a monk
who is investigating that state by insight,
examining it,
coming to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is energy
is established in that monk.

Then it is that he cultivates that limb of wisdom:
that limb of wisdom goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it;
and there arises in him
a zest that is not carnal
for the energy which he has established.

■

The Zest Limb of Wisdom

At such time, monks,
as zest that is not carnal
arises in a monk
whose energy is established,
the limb of wisdom which is zest

is established in him:
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is zest.

At such time
the limb of wisdom which is zest
goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it.

■

The Tranquillity Limb of Wisdom

In one who is zestful
the body is tranquillized,
the mind is tranquillized.

At such time, monks,
as the body and mind of a monk who is zestfu1
are tranquillized,
the limb of wisdom which is tranquillity
is established in him.

At such time a monk cultivates this limb of wisdom:
it goes to completion in a monk by cultivation.

■

The Concentration Limb of Wisdom

In him whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,
the mind is composed.

When, monks,
in a monk whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,

the mind is composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is concentration
is established in him:
he thus cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it goes to completion in him.

■

The Equanimity Limb of Wisdom

He is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed.

Now, monks, when a monk is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is equanimity
is established in him:
it is then that he cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it is then that this limb of wisdom
goes to completion in him
by cultivation of it.

■

Mind-States

The Mindfulness Limb of Wisdom

At such time as a monk dwells,
in mind-states contemplating mind-states,
with mindfulness established,
his mindfulness is not relaxed;
at such time as his mindfulness,
being established,
is not relaxed,
the limb of wisaom which is mindfulness
is established in that monk.

Then it is, monks,
that a monk is cultivating the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness.

Then it is that the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness
by cultivation goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Norm-Investigation Limb of Wisdom

He, thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,
he examines it,
he comes to close scrutiny of it.

At such time, monks, as a monk,
thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,
comes to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
is undertaken by a monk;
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation.

Then it is, monks,
that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Energy Limb of Wisdom

As he investigates that state by insight,
as he examines it,
as he comes to close scrutiny of it,
unwavering energy is established in him.

At such time, monks,
as unwavering energy is established in a monk
who is investigating that state by insight,
examining it,
coming to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is energy
is established in that monk.

Then it is that he cultivates that limb of wisdom:
that limb of wisdom goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it;
and there arises in him
a zest that is not carnal
for the energy which he has established.

■

The Zest Limb of Wisdom

At such time, monks,
as zest that is not carnal
arises in a monk
whose energy is established,
the limb of wisdom which is zest
is established in him:
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is zest.

At such time
the limb of wisdom which is zest
goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it.

■

The Tranquillity Limb of Wisdom

In one who is zestful
the body is tranquillized,
the mind is tranquillized.

At such time, monks,
as the body and mind of a monk who is zestfu1
are tranquillized,
the limb of wisdom which is tranquillity
is established in him.

At such time a monk cultivates this limb of wisdom:
it goes to completion in a monk by cultivation.

■

The Concentration Limb of Wisdom

In him whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,
the mind is composed.

When, monks,
in a monk whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,
the mind is composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is concentration
is established in him:
he thus cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it goes to completion in him.

■

The Equanimity Limb of Wisdom

He is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed.

Now, monks, when a monk is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is equanimity
is established in him:
it is then that he cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it is then that this limb of wisdom
goes to completion in him
by cultivation of it.

■

Thus cultivated, monks,
thus made much of,
the four arisings of mindfulness complete the seven limbs of wisdom.

III

Now, monks, how cultivated,
how made much of,
do the seven limbs of wisdom
complete knowledge and release?

Herein, monks, a monk cultivates the limb of wisdom
that is mindfulness,
which is based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom
that is investigation of the Norm,
which is based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom
that is energy,
which is based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom
that is zest,
which is based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom
that is tranquillity,
which is based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom
that is concentration,
which is based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom
that is equanimity,
which is based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

Thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the seven limbs of wisdom
complete knowledge and release."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
54. Ānāpāna Saṃyutta
2. Ānanda or Dutiya Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

54. Kindred Sayings about

In-Breathing and Out-Breathing

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 16

Dutiya Bhikkhū Suttaṃ

Monks (b)

---

[295]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a number of monks came to visit the Exalted One,
and on coming to him saluted him
and sat down at one side.

So seated the Exalted One said this to them:

"Pray, monks, is there any one state which, if cultivated and made much of,
brings four states to completion?

Do four states,
if cultivated and made much of,
complete seven states?

Do seven states,
if cultivated and made much of,
complete two states?"

■

"For us, lord,
things have the Exalted one as their root,
their guide,
their resort.

It were well for us
if the Exalted One would reveal the meaning of what he has just uttered.

Hearing it from him
the brethren will remember it."

"There is one state
which does complete four.

Four states complete seven,
and seven complete two.

What are they?.

Intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing, monks,
is the one state
which, if cultivated and made much of,
brings the four arisings of mindfulness to completion.

The four arisings of mindfulness,
if cultivated and made much of,
bring the seven limbs of wisdom to completion.

The seven limbs of wisdom,
if cultivated and made much of,
complete knowledge and release.

I

And how cultivated,
how made much of,
does intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing
complete the four arisings of mindfulness?

In this method, monks,
a monk who has gone to the forest
or the foot of a tree
or a lonely place,
sits down cross-legged,
holding the body straight.
Setting mindfulness in front of him,
he breathes in mindfully
and mindfully breathes out.

As he draws in a long breath he knows:

'A long breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a long breath he knows:

'I breathe out a long breath.'

As he draws in a short breath he knows:

'A short breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a short breath he knows:

'I breathe out a short breath.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'I shall breathe in,
feeling it go through the whole body.

Feeling it go through the whole body
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe out.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe out.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Aware of mind I shall breathe in.

Aware of mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Gladdening my mind I shall breathe in.

Gladdening my mind I shall breathe out.

Composing my mind I shall breathe in.

Composing my mind I shall breathe out.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe in.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe in.

Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe out.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe in.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe out.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe out.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe out.'

■

Now, monks, at such time as a monk,
while drawing in a long breath,
knows:

'A long breath I draw in';

or, breathing out a long breath,
knows:

'A long breath I breathe out';

or, when drawing in a short breath,
knows:

'A short breath I draw in';

or, when breathing out a short breath,
knows:

'A short breath I breathe out';

or, when he makes up his mind
(repeating):

'Feeling it go through the whole body
I shall breathe in;

feeling it go through the whole body
I shall breathe out;
calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe in;
calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe out,' —

at such time, monks,
in body contemplating body
(as transient)
a monk dwells ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

Now, monks, I declare
that this in-breathing and out-breathing
is a certain body.

Wherefore, monks,
a monk in body contemplating body
(as transient)
dwells ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

■

Again, monks,
at such time as a monk makes up his mind
(repeating):

'Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe in:

feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe out:
feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe in:
feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe out.

Aware of the mental factors
I shall breathe in:
aware of the mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe in:
calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe out," —
at such time,
in feelings contemplating feelings,
he dwells ardent,
self-possessed;
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.'

Now, monks,
I declare that this in-breathing and out-breathing,
this close attention to it,
is a certain feeling.

Wherefore, monks, a monk,
in feelings contemplating feelings,
at such time dwells ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

■

Again, monks,
at such time as a monk makes up his mind
(repeating):

'Aware of mind
I shall breathe in:
aware of mind
I shall breathe out.

Gladdening my mind
I shall breathe in:
gladdening my mind I shall breathe out.

Composing my mind
I shall breathe in:
composing my mind I shall breathe out.

Detaching my mind
I shall breathe in:
detaching my mind I shall breathe out,' —

at such time,
in mind contemplating mind
(as transient),
a monk dwells ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

What is the cause of that?

I declare, monks,
that the practice of intent concentration
on in-breathing and out-breathing

is not a mindfulness that is relaxed
or not composed.

Wherefore, monks, I say
a monk dwells in mind contemplating mind,
ardent,
selfpossessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

■

Again, monks,
at such time as a monk makes up his mind
(repeating):

'Contemplating impermanence
I shall breathe in:
contemplating impermanence
I shall breathe out.

Contemplating dispassion
I shall breathe in:
contemplating dispassion
I shall breathe out.

Contemplating cessation
I shall breathe in:
contemplating cessation
I shall breathe out.

Contemplating renunciation
I shall breathe in:
contemplating renunciation
I shall breathe out,' —

at such time,
in mind-states contemplating mind-states,
a 'monk dwells ardent,
self-possessed
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

Abandoning whatever dejection arises from coveting,
seeing it with the eye of insight,
he is completely disinterested.

Wherefore I say, monks,
at such a time
that monk dwells in mind-states contemplating mind-states,
ardent,
self-possessed,
and mindful,
by restraining the dejection in the world
that arises from coveting.

Thus cultivated, monks,
thus made much of,
intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing completes the four arisings of mindfulness.

II

And how cultivated, monks,
how made much of,
do the four arisings of mindfulness complete the seven limbs of wisdom?

■

Body

The Mindfulness Limb of Wisdom

At such time as a monk dwells,
in body contemplating body,
with mindfulness established,
his mindfulness is not relaxed;
at such time as his mindfulness,
being established,
is not relaxed,
the limb of wisaom which is mindfulness
is established in that monk.

Then it is, monks,
that a monk is cultivating the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness.

Then it is that the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness
by cultivation goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Norm-Investigation Limb of Wisdom

He, thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,
he examines it,
he comes to close scrutiny of it.

At such time, monks, as a monk,
thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,
comes to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
is undertaken by a monk;
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation.

Then it is, monks,
that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Energy Limb of Wisdom

As he investigates that state by insight,
as he examines it,
as he comes to close scrutiny of it,
unwavering energy is established in him.

At such time, monks,
as unwavering energy is established in a monk
who is investigating that state by insight,
examining it,
coming to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is energy
is established in that monk.

Then it is that he cultivates that limb of wisdom:
that limb of wisdom goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it;
and there arises in him
a zest that is not carnal
for the energy which he has established.

■

The Zest Limb of Wisdom

At such time, monks,
as zest that is not carnal
arises in a monk
whose energy is established,
the limb of wisdom which is zest

is established in him:
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is zest.

At such time
the limb of wisdom which is zest
goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it.

■

The Tranquillity Limb of Wisdom

In one who is zestful
the body is tranquillized,
the mind is tranquillized.

At such time, monks,
as the body and mind of a monk who is zestfu1
are tranquillized,
the limb of wisdom which is tranquillity
is established in him.

At such time a monk cultivates this limb of wisdom:
it goes to completion in a monk by cultivation.

■

The Concentration Limb of Wisdom

In him whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,
the mind is composed.

When, monks,
in a monk whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,

the mind is composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is concentration
is established in him:
he thus cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it goes to completion in him.

■

The Equanimity Limb of Wisdom

He is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed.

Now, monks, when a monk is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is equanimity
is established in him:
it is then that he cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it is then that this limb of wisdom
goes to completion in him
by cultivation of it.

■

Feeling

The Mindfulness Limb of Wisdom

At such time as a monk dwells,
in feeling contemplating feeling,
with mindfulness established,
his mindfulness is not relaxed;
at such time as his mindfulness,
being established,
is not relaxed,
the limb of wisaom which is mindfulness
is established in that monk.

Then it is, monks,
that a monk is cultivating the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness.

Then it is that the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness
by cultivation goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Norm-Investigation Limb of Wisdom

He, thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,
he examines it,
he comes to close scrutiny of it.

At such time, monks, as a monk,
thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,
comes to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
is undertaken by a monk;
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation.

Then it is, monks,
that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Energy Limb of Wisdom

As he investigates that state by insight,
as he examines it,
as he comes to close scrutiny of it,
unwavering energy is established in him.

At such time, monks,
as unwavering energy is established in a monk
who is investigating that state by insight,
examining it,
coming to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is energy
is established in that monk.

Then it is that he cultivates that limb of wisdom:
that limb of wisdom goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it;
and there arises in him
a zest that is not carnal
for the energy which he has established.

■

The Zest Limb of Wisdom

At such time, monks,
as zest that is not carnal
arises in a monk
whose energy is established,
the limb of wisdom which is zest
is established in him:
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is zest.

At such time
the limb of wisdom which is zest
goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it.

■

The Tranquillity Limb of Wisdom

In one who is zestful
the body is tranquillized,
the mind is tranquillized.

At such time, monks,
as the body and mind of a monk who is zestfu1
are tranquillized,
the limb of wisdom which is tranquillity
is established in him.

At such time a monk cultivates this limb of wisdom:
it goes to completion in a monk by cultivation.

■

The Concentration Limb of Wisdom

In him whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,
the mind is composed.

When, monks,
in a monk whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,
the mind is composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is concentration
is established in him:
he thus cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it goes to completion in him.

■

The Equanimity Limb of Wisdom

He is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed.

Now, monks, when a monk is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is equanimity
is established in him:
it is then that he cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it is then that this limb of wisdom
goes to completion in him
by cultivation of it.

■

Mind

The Mindfulness Limb of Wisdom

At such time as a monk dwells,
in mind contemplating mind,
with mindfulness established,
his mindfulness is not relaxed;
at such time as his mindfulness,
being established,
is not relaxed,
the limb of wisaom which is mindfulness
is established in that monk.

Then it is, monks,
that a monk is cultivating the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness.

Then it is that the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness
by cultivation goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Norm-Investigation Limb of Wisdom

He, thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,

he examines it,
he comes to close scrutiny of it.

At such time, monks, as a monk,
thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,
comes to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
is undertaken by a monk;
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation.

Then it is, monks,
that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Energy Limb of Wisdom

As he investigates that state by insight,
as he examines it,
as he comes to close scrutiny of it,
unwavering energy is established in him.

At such time, monks,
as unwavering energy is established in a monk
who is investigating that state by insight,
examining it,
coming to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is energy
is established in that monk.

Then it is that he cultivates that limb of wisdom:
that limb of wisdom goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it;
and there arises in him

a zest that is not carnal
for the energy which he has established.

■

The Zest Limb of Wisdom

At such time, monks,
as zest that is not carnal
arises in a monk
whose energy is established,
the limb of wisdom which is zest
is established in him:
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is zest.

At such time
the limb of wisdom which is zest
goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it.

■

The Tranquillity Limb of Wisdom

In one who is zestful
the body is tranquillized,
the mind is tranquillized.

At such time, monks,
as the body and mind of a monk who is zestfu1
are tranquillized,
the limb of wisdom which is tranquillity
is established in him.

At such time a monk cultivates this limb of wisdom:
it goes to completion in a monk by cultivation.

■

The Concentration Limb of Wisdom

In him whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,
the mind is composed.

When, monks,
in a monk whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,
the mind is composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is concentration
is established in him:
he thus cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it goes to completion in him.

■

The Equanimity Limb of Wisdom

He is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed.

Now, monks, when a monk is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is equanimity
is established in him:
it is then that he cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it is then that this limb of wisdom
goes to completion in him
by cultivation of it.

■

Mind-States

The Mindfulness Limb of Wisdom

At such time as a monk dwells,
in mind-states contemplating mind-states,
with mindfulness established,
his mindfulness is not relaxed;
at such time as his mindfulness,
being established,
is not relaxed,
the limb of wisaom which is mindfulness
is established in that monk.

Then it is, monks,
that a monk is cultivating the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness.

Then it is that the limb of wisdom which is mindfulness
by cultivation goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Norm-Investigation Limb of Wisdom

He, thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,
he examines it,
he comes to close scrutiny of it.

At such time, monks, as a monk,
thus dwelling mindful,
investigates that state by insight,
comes to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
is undertaken by a monk;
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation.

Then it is, monks,
that the limb of wisdom which is Norm-investigation
goes to completion in a monk.

■

The Energy Limb of Wisdom

As he investigates that state by insight,
as he examines it,
as he comes to close scrutiny of it,
unwavering energy is established in him.

At such time, monks,
as unwavering energy is established in a monk
who is investigating that state by insight,
examining it,
coming to close scrutiny of it,
then it is that the limb of wisdom which is energy
is established in that monk.

Then it is that he cultivates that limb of wisdom:
that limb of wisdom goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it;
and there arises in him
a zest that is not carnal
for the energy which he has established.

■

The Zest Limb of Wisdom

At such time, monks,
as zest that is not carnal
arises in a monk
whose energy is established,
the limb of wisdom which is zest

is established in him:
then it is that a monk cultivates
the limb of wisdom which is zest.

At such time
the limb of wisdom which is zest
goes to completion in that monk
owing to cultivation of it.

■

The Tranquillity Limb of Wisdom

In one who is zestful
the body is tranquillized,
the mind is tranquillized.

At such time, monks,
as the body and mind of a monk who is zestfu1
are tranquillized,
the limb of wisdom which is tranquillity
is established in him.

At such time a monk cultivates this limb of wisdom:
it goes to completion in a monk by cultivation.

■

The Concentration Limb of Wisdom

In him whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,
the mind is composed.

When, monks,
in a monk whose body is tranquillized,
who is happy,

the mind is composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is concentration
is established in him:
he thus cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it goes to completion in him.

■

The Equanimity Limb of Wisdom

He is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed.

Now, monks, when a monk is a thoroughly disinterested onlooker
of his mind thus composed,
at such time the limb of wisdom which is equanimity
is established in him:
it is then that he cultivates this limb of wisdom,
it is then that this limb of wisdom
goes to completion in him
by cultivation of it.

■

Thus cultivated, monks,
thus made much of,
the four arisings of mindfulness complete the seven limbs of wisdom.

III

Now, monks, how cultivated,
how made much of,
do the seven limbs of wisdom
complete knowledge and release?

Herein, monks, a monk cultivates the limb of wisdom
that is mindfulness,
which is based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom
that is investigation of the Norm,
which is based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom
that is energy,
which is based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom
that is zest,
which is based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom
that is tranquillity,
which is based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom
that is concentration,
which is based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

He cultivates the limb of wisdom
that is equanimity,
which is based on seclusion,
on dispassion,
on cessation,
which ends in self-surrender.

Thus cultivated,
thus made much of,
the seven limbs of wisdom
complete knowledge and release."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
54. Ānāpāna Saṃyutta
2. Ānanda or Dutiya Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

54. Kindred Sayings about

In-Breathing and Out-Breathing

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 17

Saṃyojana Suttaṃ

Fetter

---

[295]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

"Monks, intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing
conduces to the abandoning of the fetters.

And how cultivated,
how made much of,
does intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing
conduces to the abandoning of the fetters?

In this method, monks,
a monk who has gone to the forest
or the foot of a tree
or a lonely place,
sits down cross-legged,
holding the body straight.
Setting mindfulness in front of him,
he breathes in mindfully
and mindfully breathes out.

As he draws in a long breath he knows:

'A long breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a long breath he knows:

'I breathe out a long breath.'

As he draws in a short breath he knows:

'A short breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a short breath he knows:

'I breathe out a short breath.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'I shall breathe in,
feeling it go through the whole body.

Feeling it go through the whole body
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe out.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe out.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Aware of mind I shall breathe in.

Aware of mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Gladdening my mind I shall breathe in.

Gladdening my mind I shall breathe out.

Composing my mind I shall breathe in.

Composing my mind I shall breathe out.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe in.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe in.

Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe out.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe in.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe out.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe out.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe out.'

This, monks, is how cultivated,
how made much of,
intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing
conduces to the abandoning of the fetters."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
54. Ānāpāna Saṃyutta
2. Ānanda or Dutiya Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

54. Kindred Sayings about

In-Breathing and Out-Breathing

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 18

Anusaya Suttaṃ

Tendency[49]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

"Monks, intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing
conduces to the utter destruction of tendency.

And how cultivated,
how made much of,
does intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing
conduces to the utter destruction of tendency?

In this method, monks,
a monk who has gone to the forest
or the foot of a tree
or a lonely place,
sits down cross-legged,
holding the body straight.
Setting mindfulness in front of him,
he breathes in mindfully
and mindfully breathes out.

As he draws in a long breath he knows:

'A long breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a long breath he knows:

'I breathe out a long breath.'

As he draws in a short breath he knows:

'A short breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a short breath he knows:

'I breathe out a short breath.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'I shall breathe in,
feeling it go through the whole body.

Feeling it go through the whole body
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe out.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe out.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Aware of mind I shall breathe in.

Aware of mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Gladdening my mind I shall breathe in.

Gladdening my mind I shall breathe out.

Composing my mind I shall breathe in.

Composing my mind I shall breathe out.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe in.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe in.

Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe out.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe in.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe out.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe out.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe out.'

This, monks, is how cultivated,
how made much of,
intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing
conduces to the utter destruction of tendency."

[49] Anusayo. Cf. text, p. 60. There are seven of these 'inclinations.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
54. Ānāpāna Saṃyutta
2. Ānanda or Dutiya Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

54. Kindred Sayings about

In-Breathing and Out-Breathing

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 19

Addhānam Sutta

The way[50]

---

[295]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

"Monks, intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing
conduces to thorough knowledge of the way.

And how cultivated,
how made much of,
does intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing
conduces to thorough knowledge of the way?

In this method, monks,
a monk who has gone to the forest
or the foot of a tree
or a lonely place,
sits down cross-legged,
holding the body straight.
Setting mindfulness in front of him,
he breathes in mindfully
and mindfully breathes out.

As he draws in a long breath he knows:

'A long breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a long breath he knows:

'I breathe out a long breath.'

As he draws in a short breath he knows:

'A short breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a short breath he knows:

'I breathe out a short breath.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'I shall breathe in,
feeling it go through the whole body.

Feeling it go through the whole body
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe out.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe out.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Aware of mind I shall breathe in.

Aware of mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Gladdening my mind I shall breathe in.

Gladdening my mind I shall breathe out.

Composing my mind I shall breathe in.

Composing my mind I shall breathe out.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe in.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe in.

Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe out.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe in.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe out.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe out.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe out.'

This, monks, is how cultivated,
how made much of,
intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing
conduces to thorough knowledge of the way."

[50] Addhāna. Cf. text, 28.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
54. Ānāpāna Saṃyutta
2. Ānanda or Dutiya Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

54. Kindred Sayings about

In-Breathing and Out-Breathing

2. [Untitled]

Sutta 20

Āsava-k-Khaya Suttaṃ

Destruction of the Āsavas

---

[295]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

"Monks, intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing
conduces to the destruction of the āsavas.

And how cultivated,
how made much of,
does intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing
conduces to the destruction of the āsavas?

In this method, monks,
a monk who has gone to the forest
or the foot of a tree
or a lonely place,
sits down cross-legged,
holding the body straight.
Setting mindfulness in front of him,
he breathes in mindfully
and mindfully breathes out.

As he draws in a long breath he knows:

'A long breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a long breath he knows:

'I breathe out a long breath.'

As he draws in a short breath he knows:

'A short breath I draw in.'

As he breathes out a short breath he knows:

'I breathe out a short breath.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'I shall breathe in,
feeling it go through the whole body.

Feeling it go through the whole body
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the bodily aggregate
I shall breathe out.'

Thus he makes up his mind (repeating):

'Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the thrill of zest
I shall breathe out.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe in.

Feeling the sense of ease
I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Aware of all mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe in.

Calming down the mental factors
I shall breathe out.

Aware of mind I shall breathe in.

Aware of mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Gladdening my mind I shall breathe in.

Gladdening my mind I shall breathe out.

Composing my mind I shall breathe in.

Composing my mind I shall breathe out.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe in.

Detaching my mind I shall breathe out.'

He makes up his mind (repeating):

'Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe in.

Contemplating impermanence I shall breathe out.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe in.

Contemplating dispassion I shall breathe out.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating cessation I shall breathe out.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe in.

Contemplating renunciation I shall breathe out.'

This, monks, is how cultivated,
how made much of,
intent concentration on in-breathing and out-breathing
conduces to the destruction of the āsavas."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
1. Veḷu-Dvāra Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

1. Veḷudvāra[1]

Sutta 1

Rāhā Suttaṃ

Rājah

---

[296]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, although a rājah, a roller of the wheel,[2] holding supreme lordship and dominion over four continents,
on the break-up of body is reborn after death in the Happy Lot,
in the Heaven World,
in the company of the Devas of the Thirty-Three;
although he spends his time there in Nandana Grove,[3] attended by a troop of nymphs, supplied and provided with,
surrounded by,
celestial pleasures of sense; although he is possessed of these four things,[4] - yet is he not released from Purgatory,
he is not released
from (birth in) the womb of an animal,
he is not released
from the realm of ghosts,
he is not released
from Hell,
the Way of Woe,
the Downfall.

Monks, although an Ariyan disciple lives on gathered scraps,[5] though he be clothed in rags,[6] yet is he possessed of four things; [297] moreover be is released from Purgatory,
be is released

from (birth in) the womb of an animal,
he is released
from the realm of ghosts,
he is released
from Hell,
the Way of Woe,
from the Downfall.

What are the four things?

Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple is possessed of unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

(He has faith that)

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,[7]
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'[8]

He is possessed of unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,

leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

He is possessed of unwavering faith in the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.[9]

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

Then he is possessed
of the virtues loved by the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.

Such are the four things he is possessed of.

Monks, there is the winning of four continents, and there is the winning of the four things.

But to win four continents is not worth a sixteenth part of the winning of the four things."

---

[1] The title of this chapter comes from § vii. It is the name of a brahmin village of the Kosalans.

[2] Universal Ruler. Cf. DA. i, 249. The Sutta is quoted at UdA. 108 ff.

[3] Cf. K.S. i, 9 n. The Grove in Sakka's Heaven, the lowest of the Devalokas, to which devas went when about to die,' there to dissolve like snow, or like a wind-blown lamp-flame, and to be reborn.'

[4] Reading sammannagāto with S_{1-3}; and UdA. Text reads asamannagāto evidently referring to the four dooms following; but the 'four things' are the four continents, as stated below.

[5] Piṇḍiyālopena. The name of Piṇḍola (the scrap-gatherer) was bestowed on one of the monks. Cf. text, 224.

[6] Nantahāni. Comy. 'a cloth of thirteen spans ("hands"), so called from being divided into ten parts (?).'

[7] Text as usual misprints -damma as -dhamma.

[8] Cf. K.S. iv, 187 nn. Comy. refers to VM. 1, 221.

[9] Those following the fourfold path to Arahantship in its twofold division.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
1. Veḷu-Dvāra Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

1. Veḷudvāra

Sutta 2

Ogadha or Saṭayhaṃ Suttaṃ

Steeped In[1]

---

[298]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, blessed with four things an Ariyan disciple is a stream-winner,
not doomed to the Downfall,
one assured,
one bound for enlightenment.

What four?

Herein, monks, an Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha, thus:

'He it is, the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
Exalted One.'

He is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Norm, thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves by the wise.'

He is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Order, thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,

walking dutifully is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples: namely, the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, —
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

He is blessed with the virtues dear to the Ariyans, virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.

Blessed with these four things, monks,
the Ariyan disciple is a stream-winner,
one not doomed to the Downfall,
one assured,
one bound for enlightenment.

Thus spake the Exalted One.

Having thus spoken, the Happy One, as teacher, said this:

Whoso have faith and virtue, loyalty
And insight of the Norm, — in time[2] they win[3]
The bliss in which the holy life is steeped.

---

[1] The bliss in which the holy life is steeped, i.e Nibbāna. For ogadha, cf. jagatogadha, S. i, 186 ('based on earth'): amatogadhaṃ ('plunging into the Deathless'). Comy. 'Ogadhitvā ṭhitaṃ, uparimaggattāya sampayuttaṃ sukhaṃ.' Text has, as alternative title to this Sutta, Saṭayhaṃ (as in the uddana), which I cannot translate. Is it for saṭṭhāyiṃ?

[2] Text misprints kālena as kāle na (paccanti).

[3] Paccanti of text should be paccenti = paṭienti; or paṭiyanti, which = pāpuṇanti, Comy.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
1. Veḷu-Dvāra Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

1. Veḷudvāra

Sutta 3

Dīghāvu Upāsaka Suttaṃ

Dīghāvu[1]

---

[298]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Rājagaha,
in Bamboo Grove,
at the Squirrels' Feeding-ground.

[299] Now on that occasion Dīghāvu the lay-disciple was sick
afflicted,
suffering from a sore disease.

Then Dīghāvu the lay-disciple called to his father Jotika the housefather,
saying:

"Come, housefather!

Do you go to the Exalted One,
and on coming to him,
with your head worship at the feet of the Exalted One,
and say in my name:

'Lord, Dīghāvu the lay-disciple
is sick,
afflicted,
suffering from a sore disease.

He worships with his head at the Exalted One's feet.'

Then say:

'It were a good thing, lord,
if the Exalted One would come to the house of Dīghāvu the lay-disciple,
out of compassion for him.'"

"Very good, my lad," said Jotika the housefather in reply to Dīghāvu the lay-disciple, and went to the Exalted One,
and on coming to him
saluted him
and sat down at one side.

So seated, Jotika the housefather said this to the Exalted One:

"Lord, Dīghāvu the lay-disciple
is sick,
afflicted,
suffering from a sore disease.

He worships with his head at the feet of the Exalted One and says thus:

'It were a good thing, lord,
if the Exalted One would come to the house
of Dīghāvu the lay-disciple,
out of compassion for him.'"

And the Exalted One consented by his silence.

Thereupon the Exalted One robed himself, and taking bowl and outer robe set off for the house of Dīghāvu the lay-disciple,
and on arriving there
sat down on a seat made ready.

Having sat down
the Exalted One said this to Dīghāvu the lay-disciple:[2]

"Well, Dīghāvu,
I hope you are bearing up,
I hope you are enduring.

Do your pains abate
and not increase?

Are there signs of their abating and not increasing?"

"No, lord!

I am not bearing up.

I am not enduring.

Strong pains come upon me.

They do not abate.

There is no sign of their abating
but of their increasing."

"Then, Dīghāvu,
thus must you train yourself:

'I will be blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

He it [300] is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.

I will be blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,

a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.

I will be blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.

Also I will be blessed
with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:

virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.'

That, Dīghāvu,
is how you must train yourself."

"As to these four limbs of stream-winning, lord, which have been taught by the Exalted One, all of those conditions are to be found in me, and I do live in accordance with them.

Lord, I am indeed blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

I am indeed blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,

leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

I am indeed blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

I am indeed blessed
with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind."

"Therefore, Dīghāvu, resting on these four limbs of stream-winning, you should further practise the six conditions
which are constituent parts of knowledge.[3]

Herein, Dīghāvu, do you dwell contemplating impermanence
in all the activities,[4] conscious of ill
in impermanence,
conscious of there being no self
in what is ill,
conscious of abandoning,
of dispassion,
of cessation.

That, Dīghāvu,
is how you must train yourself."

Lord, as to these same six conditions,
which are constituent parts of knowledge, all of them are to be found in me.

I do live
contemplating impermanence
in all the activities,
conscious of ill
in impermanence,
conscious of there being no self
in what is ill,
conscious of abandoning,
of dispassion,
of cessation.

Then, lord, I have this thought:

'I would not have the housefather Jotika here fall into dejection at my death.'"

"Don't you trouble about that, Dīghāvu, my lad!
(said his father).

Look you, Dīghāvu, my lad!

Attend closely to what the Exalted One is saying to you."

[301] So the Exalted One, having thus admonished Dīghāvu the lay-disciple, rose from his seat and went awray.

And not long after the Exalted One had gone Dīghāvu the lay-disciple made an end.

Thereupon a number of monks went to see the Exalted One,
and on coming to him
saluted him
and sat down at one side.

So seated
those monks said this to the Exalted One:

"Lord, that lay-disciple named Dīghāvu, who was admonished in brief by the Exalted One, has made an end.

What is his lot?

What is his destiny in the life to come?"[5]

"A sage, monks, was Dīghāvu the lay-disciple.

He lived according to the Norm.[6]

He did not harm me by disputings about the Norm.

Dīghāvu, the lay-disciple, monks,
by wearing out the five fetters of the lower sort, is reborn by spontaneous birth.[7]

His destiny is not to return from that world."

---

[1] Dīghāvu-ḍīghāvu (as a king's title at JA. v, 120). Cf. Āvuso and āyusmanta. There are several princes of this name in the Jātakas.

[2] For the stock greetings cf. S. iii, 120, etc., supra, p. 66.

[3] Cha vijjā-bhāgiye dhamme.

[4] Comy. sabbesu tebhūmaka-sañkhāresu.

[5] Kā gati, ko abhisamparāyo. Cf. D. ii, 91; S. iv, 59, 63 (of Purina the clansman); also of Suppabuddha the leper at Ud. v, 3.

[6] Dhammass'ānudhammaṇ paccapādi (fr. paṭipajjati)

[7] Opapātika (without material cause), i.e., in a body of the matter of the super-sphere in which he had 'become.' He is therefore anāgāmin Cf. K.S. iii, 166, iv, 250 n. and add this instance to those of (text) 177 n.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
1. Veḷu-Dvāra Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

1. Veḷudvāra

Sutta 4

Paṭhama Sāriputta Suttaṃ

Sāriputta (a)

---

[301]

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the venerable Sāriputta and the venerable Ānanda were staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Ānanda,
rising up from his solitude at eventide,
went to see the venerable Sāriputta,
on coming to him greeted him courteously,

and after the exchange of greetings and compliments
sat down at one side.

Seated at one side he said this:

"Tell me, friend Sāriputta, through winning possession[1] of what things are people of this world[2] proclaimed by the Exalted One
as stream-winners,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment?"

"Friend, it is because of winning four things that people of this world are proclaimed by the Exalted One
as stream-wmners,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment.

What are the four things?

[302] Herein, friend, an Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,

teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

He is blessed
with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.

These, friend, are the four things.

Owing to being blessed with these, people of this world
are proclaimed by the Exalted One
as stream-wmners,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment.

---

[1] Samannāgamana-hetu.

[2] Ayam pajā.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
1. Veḷu-Dvāra Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

1. Veḷudvāra

Sutta 5

Dutiya Sāriputta Suttaṃ

Sāriputta (b)

---

[302]

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One
was staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Sāriputta went to see the Exalted One,
and on coming to him
saluted him
and sat down at one side.

To the venerable Sāriputta so seated
the Exalted One said this.

"'A limb of stream-winning!

A limb of stream-winning!'

is the saying, Sāriputta.

Tell me, Sāriputta, of what sort is a limb of stream-winning?"

"Lord, association with the upright is a limb of stream-winning.

Hearing the good Norm
is a limb of stream-winning.

Applying the mind
is a limb of stream-wmmng.

Conforming to the Norm[1]
is a limb of stream-winning."

"Well said, Sāriputta!

Well said, Sāriputta!

Indeed association with the upright is a limb of stream-winning.

Hearing the good Norm
is a limb of stream-winning.

Applying the mind
is a limb of stream-wmmng.

Now again, Sāriputta, they say:

'The stream!

the stream!'

Of what sort is the stream, Sāriputta?"

"The stream, lord, is just this Ariyan eightfold way,
to wit:|| ||

Right view,
right intention,
right speech,
right action,
right living,
right effort,
right mindfulness,
right concentration."

"Well said, Sāriputta!

Well said, Sāriputta!

The stream is just this Ariyan eightfold way,
to wit:|| ||

Right view,
right intention,
right speech,
right action,
right living,
right effort,
right mindfulness,
right concentration."

Now again, Sāriputta,
they say:

'Stream-winner!

Stream-winner!'

Of what sort is a stream-winner, Sāriputta?"

Whosoever, lord, is blessed with this Ariyan eightfold way, - such an one of such a name,
of such and such a clan, is called 'Stream-winner.'"

---

[1] Dhammānudhamma-paṭipatti = pubba-bhāga-paṭipadaṇ. Comy.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
1. Veḷu-Dvāra Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

1. Veḷudvāra

Sutta 6

Thapatayo Suttaṃ

The Chamberlains[1]

---

[303]

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One
was staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now on that occasion
a number of monks were busied with making a robe for the Exalted One,
with this idea:

When the robe is finished,
in three months' time,
the Exalted One will go forth on his rounds.

Now at that time Isidatta and Purāṇa, the chamberlains, were staying at Sadhuka[2] on some business or other.

Then they heard the news:

"They say that a number of monks are busied with making a robe for the Exalted One with this idea:

'When the robe is finished,
in three months' time,
the Exalted One will go forth on his rounds."

So Isidatta and Purāṇa, the chamberlains, stationed a man on the high-road (thus instructing him):

"Now, good fellow,
as soon as you see that Exalted one,
that Arahant,
that perfectly Enlightened One coming along,
do you ecme and inform us."

So after standing there two or three days that man saw the Exalted One coming along, while yet some distance off, and he went to inform the chamberlains, Isidatta and Purāṇa,
saying:

"Here comes my lord the Exalted One,
that Arahant,

that perfectly Enlightened One!

Now's the time for you to do what you want!"

So Isidatta and Purāṇa, the chamberlains, went towards the Exalted One,
and on coming to him,
saluted him,
and followed behind the Exalted One step for step.

Then the Exalted One turned aside from the high-road and went to the foot of a certain tree and there sat down on a seat made ready.

And Isidatta and Purāṇa, the chamberlains, [304] saluting the Exalted One, also sat down
at one side.

As they thus sat
they said this to the Exalted One:

"Lord, when we heard of the Exalted One that he would go forth from Sāvatthī to go on his rounds among the Kosalans,
at that time
we were disappointed and depressed[3] at the thought:
The Exalted One will be far from us.

And when, lord, we learned that the Exalted One was starting out from Sāvatthī
to go on his rounds among the Kosalans,
again we were disappointed and depressed at the thought:
The Exalted One will be far from us.[4]

And when, lord, we learned that the Exalted One
was actually going his rounds among the Kosalans,
again we were disappointed and depressed at the thought:
The Exalted One will be far from us.

■

"And lord, when we heard of the Exalted One that he would go forth from Kosala to go on his rounds among the Malla,
at that time
we were disappointed and depressed at the thought:
The Exalted One will be far from us.

And when, lord, we learned that the Exalted One was starting out from Kosala
to go on his rounds among the Malla,
again we were disappointed and depressed at the thought:
The Exalted One will be far from us.

And when, lord, we learned that the Exalted One
was actually going his rounds among the Mallas,
again we were disappointed and depressed at the thought:
The Exalted One will be far from us.|| ||

■

"And lord, when we heard of the Exalted One that he would go forth from Malla to go on his rounds among the Vajī,
at that time
we were disappointed and depressed at the thought:
The Exalted One will be far from us.

And when, lord, we learned that the Exalted One was starting out from Malla
to go on his rounds among the Vajī,

again we were disappointed and depressed at the thought:
The Exalted One will be far from us.

And when, lord, we learned that the Exalted One
was actually going his rounds among the Vajī,
again we were disappointed and depressed at the thought:
The Exalted One will be far from us.|| ||

■

"And lord, when we heard of the Exalted One that he would go forth from Vajī
to go on his rounds among the Kāsi,
at that time
we were disappointed and depressed at the thought:
The Exalted One will be far from us.

And when, lord, we learned that the Exalted One
was starting out from Vajī
to go on his rounds among the Kāsi,
again we were disappointed and depressed at the thought:
The Exalted One will be far from us.

And when, lord, we learned that the Exalted One
was actually going his rounds among the Kāsi,
again we were disappointed and depressed at the thought:
The Exalted One will be far from us.|| ||

■

"And lord, when we heard of the Exalted One that he would go forth from Kāsi
to go on his rounds among the Magadhans,
at that time
we were disappointed and depressed at the thought:
The Exalted One will be far from us.

And when, lord, we learned that the Exalted One
was starting out from Kāsi
to go on his rounds among the Magadhans,
again we were disappointed and depressed at the thought:
The Exalted One will be far from us.

And when, lord, we learned that the Exalted One was actually going his rounds among the Magadhans, again we were disappointed and depressed[5] at the thought:
The Exalted One will be far from us.|| ||

§

[305] But, lord, when we heard of the Exalted One that he would go forth from Magadhans and go on his rounds among the Kāsi,
at that time,
we were delighted and elated at the thought:
The Exalted One will be quite near us.

And when, lord, we learned that the Exalted One was starting out from Magadhans
to go on his rounds among the Kāsi,
at that time,
we were delighted and elated at the thought:
The Exalted One will be quite near us.

And when, lord, we learned that the Exalted One
was actually going his rounds among the Kāsi,
at that time,
we were delighted and elated at the thought:
The Exalted One will be quite near us.

■

And, lord, when we heard of the Exalted One
that he would go forth from Kāsi and go on his rounds among the Vajī,
at that time,
we were delighted and elated at the thought:
The Exalted One will be quite near us.

And when, lord, we learned that the Exalted One
was starting out from Kāsi
to go on his rounds among the Vajī,
at that time,
we were delighted and elated at the thought:
The Exalted One will be quite near us.

And when, lord, we learned that the Exalted One
was actually going his rounds among the Vajī,
at that time,
we were delighted and elated at the thought:
The Exalted One will be quite near us.

■

And, lord, when we heard of the Exalted One
that he would go forth from Vajī and go on his rounds among the Mallas,
at that time,
we were delighted and elated at the thought:
The Exalted One will be quite near us.

And when, lord, we learned that the Exalted One
was starting out from Vajī to go on his rounds among the Mallas,
at that time,
we were delighted and elated at the thought:
The Exalted One will be quite near us.

And when, lord, we learned that the Exalted One
was actually going his rounds among the Mallas,
at that time,
we were delighted and elated at the thought:
The Exalted One will be quite near us.

■

And, lord, when we heard of the Exalted One that he would go forth from Mallas and go on his rounds among the Kosalans,
at that time,
we were delighted and elated at the thought:
The Exalted One will be quite near us.

And when, lord, we learned that the Exalted One was starting out from Mallas
to go on his rounds among the Kosalans,
at that time,
we were delighted and elated at the thought:
The Exalted One will be quite near us.

And when, lord, we learned that the Exalted One
was actually going his rounds among the Kosalans,
at that time,
we were delighted and elated at the thought:
The Exalted One will be quite near us.

■

Then, when we heard:
'The Exalted One is staying at Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park,' then, lord, boundless was our delight and boundless our elation

at the thought:
The Exalted One is near us!"

§

"Well then, chamberlains,
since living in houses is an oppression,
a dust-hole sort of life,[6] - whereas a wanderer's life is a life in the open air,
now is the time for you to show some energy."

"But here too, lord, we have an oppression still more oppressive, indeed it is most oppressive."

"What is that still greater oppression, chamberlains?"

"Here, lord, when the rajah Pasenadi of Kosala wants to go a-riding in the Park, we have to deck the riding-elephants and set thereon the favourite lovely wives of his majesty, one before
and one behind.

Now the fragrance of their bodies is so sweet.

It's just as if a casket of scent were opened, - these royal ladies are so sweetly scented.

Lord, the touch of those ladies is as soft to the hand

as[7] a tuft of cotton-wool, so delicately are they nurtured.

Well, lord, at such times we have to ward the elephant, and we have to ward the ladies and ward ourselves as well.

In spite of that, lord, we are not conscious of calling up any [306] evil thought about those ladies.

Now, lord, this is (what we mean by) another oppression
still more oppressive, nay, most oppressive."

"Well then, chamberlains,
since living in houses is an oppression,
a dust-hole sort of life, - whereas the wanderer's life is a life in the open air, -
now is the time for you to show some energy.

Now, chamberlains, the Ariyan disciple who is blessed with four things
is a stream-winner,
he is one not doomed to the Downfall,
one assured,
one who is bound for enlightenment.

What are the four things?

Herein, chamberlains, an Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,

the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

He is blessed
with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.

He lives at home
with heart freed from the taint of stinginess.

He is open-handed,
pure-handed,[8]
delighting in self-surrender, one to ask a favour of,[9]
delighting to share charitable gifts.

Blessed with these four things, chamberlains,
the Ariyan disciple is a stream-winner,
he is one not doomed to the Downfall,
one assured,
one who is bound for enlightenment.

■

Now, chamberlains, you are blessed with[10] unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

You are blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

You are blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

In your family, whatsoever gifts of charity[11] there be,
they are shared fully and impartially[12]
by the virtuous and good.

Now what think ye, chamberlains?

How many sorts of [307] men are there among the Kosalans who are like yourselves in this matter of sharing gifts of charity?"

"A gain for us, lord!

A thing well gotten by us, lord, that the Exalted One should come to know this of us!"

[1] Thapatayo, 'carpenters,' 'carnage-builders,' 'royal attendants.' In Skt. lit. often 'keepers of the women's apartments.' We may call them 'equerries.' It seems that they were in charge of the royal conveyances [see note infra]. At A. iii, 348, Isidatta is uncle of the woman disciple Migasālā. Her father was Purāṇa. According to Comy. here, Isidatta was a 'once returner,' while Purāṇa was a Stream-wmner.

[2] Their own property, according to Comy.

[3] Anattamanatā hoti.

[4] For the clans here mentioned see Rhys Davids, Buddhist India, and map.

[5] To show the loyalty to the Buddha of these two men, I quote and italicize the passage at M. ii, 123 (Lord Chalmers' trans.), where the rajah Pasenadi complains to the Buddha that he does not get such loyal service from them. 'Further, there are the carriage-builders, Isidatta and Purāṇa, whom I support, who make my carnages (mama bhattā, mama yānā), who owe to me their livelihood and the honours they enjoy. Withal, these men do not serve me as whole-heartedly as they do the Lord. Time was when, being out with my troops on active service, I, to test these two, took up my quarters in a cramped little house, where Isidatta and Puraiia, after spending the best part of the night in discussing the Doctrine, lay down to rest with their heads in the direction where they heard the Lord was, and only their feet towards me. It is wonderful and marvellous, thought I to myself, that these two men, who owe everythmg in the world to me, yet do not serve me as they serve the Lord. Surely, thought I, it is because these reverend men find in the Lord's teachings a high excellence not elsewhere discovered by them before.'

[6] Rajāpatho = rāga-dosa-moha-rajānaṇ patiho. Comy.

[7] Here text should read va for vā.

[8] Payata-pāṇī, infra, text, 392. Cf. Itiv. 101; UdA. 123; K.S. i, 294. Comy. visuddhi-hattha.

[9] Yāca-yogo, not 'given to begging' (as sometimes trans.), but as Comy. yācitabbaka-yutto.

[10] The text of this is obscure, viz: Tumhe ... samannāgatā hoti (?). To make sense with what follows it seems we should read: Tumhe, hi samannāgatā hotha', according to which I translate.

[11] Deyya-dhammaṇ includes all the requisites given by laymen to monks.

[12] Appaṭivibhattaṇ Comy. 'without saying, "this is for ourselves, that is for the monks."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
1. Veḷu-Dvāra Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

1. Veḷudvāra

Sutta 7

Veḷu-Dvāreyyā Suttaṃ

Those of Bamboo Gate[1]

---

[307]

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was going his rounds among the Kosalans, together with a great company of monks,
and had reached Bamboo Gate, a brahmin village of the Kosalans.

Now the folk of Bamboo Gate, both brahmins and housefathers, heard the report:

"It is rumoured that[2] master[3] Gotama, the recluse,
the Sakyan's son,
he who went forth from a Sakyan clan, is on his rounds among the Kosalans together with a great company of monks, and has reached Bamboo Gate.

Now there is a goodly rumour gone abroad of Gotama that Exalted One,
to this effect:

'He it is,
the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.

He makes known this world, together with the world of Devas, Maras
and Brahmas,
with its host of recluses and brahmins, both of devas and men,
having realized it with his own full knowledge.

He proclaims the Norm, which is goodly in its beginning, in its middle and its ending,

both in its spirit and its letter; he makes clear the holy life in all its fullness and purity.'

It were well indeed for us to have sight of such Arahants!"

■

So those brahmins and housefathers of Bamboo Gate went to see the Exalted One,
and on coming to him
some of them saluted the Exalted One
and sat down at one side:
some [308] conversed with the Exalted One, and,
after the exchange of greetings and courtesies, they also sat down at one side.

Some stretched out their clasped hands towards the Exalted One
and sat down at one side.

Some announced their names and families to the Exalted One
and sat down at one side:
while some others just sat down at one side without saying anything.

As they thus sat
the brahmins and housefathers said this to the Exalted One:

"Master Gotama, we are people of such desires, such wishes,
such intentions
as these:

'O may we live in a crowded[4] house encumbered with children!

May we enjoy the use of Benares sandalwood!

May we deck ourselves with garlands and unguents!

May we handle gold and silver!

When body breaks up,
after death
may we be reborn in the Happy Lot,
the Heaven World!'

Pray let master Gotama teach us, who have such desires,
such wishes
and such intentions, a doctrine by which we may live in a crowded house
encumbered with children, may enjoy the use of Benares sandalwood may deck ourselves with garlands and unguents may handle gold and silver and when body breaks up,
after death
may we be reborn in the Happy Lot,
the Heaven World."

■

"Then, housefathers, I will teach you a Norm-method which brings profit to oneself.

Do ye listen to it.

Pay close attention
and I will speak."

"Very well, master," replied the brahmins and housefathers

to the Exalted One.

Then the Exalted One said this:

"Now, housefathers, of what sort is the Norm-method which brings profit to self?[5]

In this matter, housefathers, the Ariyan disciple thus reflects:

'Here am I,
fond of my life,
not wanting to die,
fond of pleasure
and averse from pain.

Suppose someone should rob me of my life (fond of life as I am and not wanting to die,
fond of pleasure
and averse from pain),
it would not be a thing pleasing or delightful to me.

If I, in my turn,
should rob of his life
one fond of his life,
not wanting to die,
one fond of pleasure
and averse from pain,
it would not be a thing
pleasing or delightful to him.

For a state that is not pleasant or delightful to me [309] must be so to him also:

and a state that is not pleasing or delightful to me, - how could I inflict[6] that upon another?

As a result of such reflection he himself abstains from taking the life of creatures and he encourages others so to abstain, and speaks in praise of so abstaining.

Thus as regards bodily conduct
he is utterly pure.[7]

■

Then again, housefathers,
the Ariyan disciple thus reflects:

If someone should take with thievish intent
what I have not given him, it would not be a thing pleasing or delightful to me.

If I, in my turn,
should take from another with thievish intent
what he has not given me, it would not be a thing pleasing or delightful to him:
and a state that is not pleasant,
that is not delightful to me
must be so to him also.

What does not please me,
what does not delight me, -
how could I inflict that upon another?

As a result of this reflection, he himself abstains from taking what is not given,

and he encourages others so to abstain, he speaks in praise of so abstaining.

Thus as regards bodily conduct
he is utterly pure.

■

Again, housefathers, the Ariyan disciple thus reflects:

If someone should have intercourse with my wives,
it would not be a thing pleasing or delightful to me.

If I, in my turn,
should so behave with another's wives,
it would not be a thing pleasing or delightful to him:
and a state that is not pleasant,
that is not delightful to me
must be so to him also.

What does not please me,
what does not delight me, -
how could I inflict that upon another?

As a result of this reflection, he himself abstains from wrong practice in respect of sense desires, and he encourages others to do so, he speaks in praise of such abstinence.

Thus as regards personal conduct
he is utterly pure.

■

Again, housefathers,
the Ariyan disciple thus reflects:

If someone should spoil my fortune[8]
by lying speech,
it would not be a thing pleasant or delightful to me.

If I, in my turn,
should spoil another's fortune
by lying speech,
it would not be a thing pleasant or delightful to him:
and a state that [310] is not pleasant,
that is not delightful to me
must be so to him also.

What does not please me,
what does not delight me, -
how could I inflict that upon another?

As a result of this reflection he himself abstains from lying speech, he encourages another so to abstain, speaks in praise of abstaining therefrom.

Thus as regards conduct in speech
he is utterly pure.

■

Again, housefathers,
the Ariyan disciple thus reflects:

If someone should estrange me from my friends[9] by slander, it would not be a thing pleasant or delightful to me.

If I in my turn
should estrange him from his friends,
it would not be a thing pleasant or delightful to him:
and a state that is not pleasant,

that is not delightful to me
must be so to him also.

What does not please me,
what does not delight me, -
how could I inflict that upon another?

As a result of this reflection, he himself abstains from slander he encourages anoher so to abstain,
speaks in praise of abstaining therefrom.

Thus as regards conduct in speech
he is utterly pure.

■

Again, housefathers,
the Ariyan disciple thus reflects:

If someone should treat me with harsh speech it would not be a thing pleasant or delightful to me.

If I in my turn
should treat another with harsh speech, it would not be a thing pleasant or delightful to him:
and a state that is not pleasant,
that is not delightful to me
must be so to him also.

What does not please me,
what does not delight me, -
how could I inflict that upon another?

As a result of this reflection,
he himself abstains from harsh speech,

he encourages anoher so to abstain,
speaks in praise of abstaining therefrom.

Thus as regards conduct in speech
he is utterly pure.

■

Again, housefathers,
the Ariyan disciple thus reflects:

If someone should treat me with pointless,[10] frivolous talk,
it would not be a thing pleasant or delightful to me.

If I in my turn should so treat him, it would not be pleasant or delightful to him.

For a state that is unpleasant, not delightful to me
must be so to him also,
and a state that is not pleasant,
not delightful to me, -
how could I inflict that upon another?

As a result of this reflection,
he himself abstains from pointless, frivolous talk:
he encourages another to do so,
he speaks in praise of so doing.

Thus as regards conduct in speech
he is utterly pure.

■

[311] Then he is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddba, thus:

He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,

the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.

He is blessed
with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.'

Now, housefathers, since the Ariyan disciple is blessed with these seven good conditions and these four desirable points of vantage,[11] if he so desired, he could himself
declare with surety of himself:

'Cut off for me is Purgatory, cut off the Way of Woe and the Downfall!

Stream-winner am I,
not doomed to the Downfall,

assured am I,
bound for enlightenment!'"[12]

At these words
the brahmins and housefathers of Bamboo Gate exclaimed to the Exalted One:

"Excellent, master Gotama!

Excellent, master Gotama!

Just as if one should raise up what is fallen, or show forth what is hidden,
or point the way to him that wanders astray, or hold up a light in the darkness so that they who have eyes may behold objects, - even so in diners ways has the Norm been set forth by the worthy Gotama.

We go for refuge to the worthy Gotama,
to the Norm
and to the Order of monks.

Let the worthy Gotama accept us as lay-disciples from this day forth, so long as life may last,
who have taken refuge in him!"

---

[1] Lit. 'Bamboo-by-the-gate.' I find no other mention of this brahmin village. Comy. says: 'So called owing to the tradition of a bamboo-thicket at the entrance of the village.' This chapter is called Veḷu-dvāra-vagga. Comy. has nothing to say about the earlier part, which occurs at Ud. vii, 9 (I give some extracts from UdA. 377).

[2] Khalu (anussav'attke nipāto, a particle meaning ut aiunt).

[3] Bho, a term used by brahmins.

[4] Text has putta-sambādha-sayanaṇ (as at UdA. 331), which would mean, 'a bed crammed with children.' I read with S. i, 78 samayaṇ, 'a crowd or company.'

[5] Attūpanāyikaṇ.

[6] Sanyojeyyaṇ. Cf. D. ii, 355; lit. 'saddle with.'

[7] Koṭi-parisuddho (like koṭippatto).

[8] Atthaṇ bhañjeyya, as at S. iv, 347.

[9] Text mittehi bhindeyya; v.l. mitte bh. For these terms, cf. DA. i, 74-6.

[10] Text has sampabhāsena, which seems to occur here only. It does not appear in the usual lists of sorts of speech. Comy. says it is samanta-bhāsena. I take it to mean 'all round the question, off the point.'

[11] Ṭhānehi.

[12] See next Sutta.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
1. Veḷu-Dvāra Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

1. Veḷudvāra

Sutta 8

Paṭhama Giñjakā-Vasatha Suttaṃ

Brick Hall (a)

---

[311]

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying at Ñatika,[1]
in Brick Hall.

Now on that occasion the venerable Ānanda came to see the Exalted One
on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and compliments
sat down at one side.

Seated at one side he said to the Exalted One:

[312] "Lord, the monk named Sāḷha bas made an end.[2]

What is his lot?

What is his destiny in the life to come?

■

Lord, the nun named Nandā has made an end.

What is her lot?

What is her destiny in the life to come?

■

Lord, Sudatta, the lay-disciple has made an end.

What is his lot?

What is his destiny in the life to come?

■

Lord, Sujata,[3] the lay-woman disciple has made an end.

What is her lot?

What is her destiny in the life to come?"

■

"The monk Sāḷha, Ānanda,
who has made an end,
by destroying the āsavas,
in this very life,
by his own understanding
realized the heart's release,

the release by insight,
and attaining to it
dwelt therein.

Nandā the nun, Ānanda,
who has made an end,
by wearing out the five fetters of the lower sort,
has taken birth spontaneously (in the Pure Abodes),
there to pass away,
destined never to return thence.

Sudatta, the lay-disciple, Ānanda,
who has made an end,
by destroying three fetters[4]
and by weakening those of lust,
hatred
and delusion,
is a once-returner:
coming back to this world just once more he will make an end of ill.

Sujātā, the lay-woman disciple, Ānanda,
who has made an end,
by destroying three fetters,
is a stream-winner,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment.

Indeed, Ānanda,
it is no wonder
that a human being should make an end.

But if, when each one dies,
you come and ask me about the matter,

it is troublesome to the Tathāgata.

Wherefore, Ānanda, I wi11 teach you a Norm-teaching called 'The Mirror of the Norm,'[5] possessing which
the Ariyan disciple may,
if he please,
himself proclaim of himself
thus:

'Cut off for me is Purgatory,
cut off is rebirth in an animal womb,
cut off is the realm of ghosts,
the Woeful Way and the Downfall.

Stream-winner am I,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
one bound for enlightenment!'

[313] And of what sort, Ānanda,
is that Norm-teaching
called 'Mirror of the Norm,' possessed of which
the Ariyan disciple may,
if he please,
himself proclaim of himself
thus:

'Cut off for me is Purgatory,
cut off is rebirth in an animal womb,
cut off is the realm of ghosts,
the Woeful Way and the Downfall.

Stream-winner am I,
not doomed to the Downfall,

assured,
one bound for enlightenment!'?

Herein, Ānanda, the Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

He is blessed
with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.'

This, Ānanda, is that Norm-teaching called 'Mirror of the Norm,' possessed of which which
the Ariyan disciple may,
if he please,
himself proclaim of himself
thus:

'Cut off for me is Purgatory,
cut off is rebirth in an animal womb,
cut off is the realm of ghosts,
the Woeful Way and the Downfall.

Stream-winner am I,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
one bound for enlightenment!'"

---

[1] Cf. Dialog. ii, 97 n., where it is called Nādika (of the Nādikas); K.S. ii, 50 n., iv, 55. Text and Comy. read Ñātika ('the village of two kinsmen,' Cūlapāti and Mahñpīti). Brick Hall was what we should call a 'rest-house,' or 'dāk-bungalow.'

[2] For the same events and persons cf. D. ii, 91; Dialog. ii, 98. The other names of D. ii occur in the next Sutta. All three Suttas (viii-x) should here form one as in D., otherwise we must suppose Ānanda to have been very dense or importunate in troubling the Master on two further occasions with the same question. Cf. Gotama the Man, p. 167.

[3] Dialog. spells Sugatā.

[4] I.e, the first three.

[5] Dhammādāsaṇ. Comy. dhamma-mayaṇ ādāsaṇ.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
1. Veḷu-Dvāra Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

1. Veḷudvāra

Sutta 9

Dutiya Giñjakā-Vasatha Suttaṃ

Brick Hall (b)

---

[313]

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying at Ñatika,
in Brick Hall.

Now on that occasion the venerable Ānanda came to see the Exalted One
on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and compliments
sat down at one side.

Seated at one side he said to the Exalted One:

"Lord, the monk named Asoka bas made an end.

What is his lot?

What is his destiny in the life to come?

■

Lord, the nun named Asokī has made an end.

What is her lot?

What is her destiny in the life to come?"

■

"The monk Asoka, Ānanda,
who has made an end,
by destroying the āsavas,
in this very life,
by his own understanding
realized the heart's release,
the release by insight,
and attaining to it
dwelt therein.

Asokī the nun, Ānanda,
who has made an end,
by wearing out the five fetters of the lower sort,
has taken birth spontaneously
there to pass away,
destined never to return thence.

Indeed, Ānanda,
it is no wonder
that a human being should make an end.

But if, when each one dies,
you come and ask me about the matter,
it is troublesome to the Tathāgata.

Wherefore, Ānanda, I wi11 teach you a Norm-teaching called 'The Mirror of the Norm,'
possessing which
the Ariyan disciple may,
if he please,
himself proclaim of himself
thus:

'Cut off for me is Purgatory,
cut off is rebirth in an animal womb,
cut off is the realm of ghosts,
the Woeful Way and the Downfall.

Stream-winner am I,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
one bound for enlightenment!'

And of what sort, Ānanda,
is that Norm-teaching
called 'Mirror of the Norm,'
possessed of which
the Ariyan disciple may,
if he please,
himself proclaim of himself
thus:

'Cut off for me is Purgatory,
cut off is rebirth in an animal womb,
cut off is the realm of ghosts,
the Woeful Way and the Downfall.

Stream-winner am I,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
one bound for enlightenment!'?

Herein, Ānanda, the Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Order,

thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

He is blessed
with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.'

This, Ānanda, is that Norm-teaching called 'Mirror of the Norm,' possessed of which which
the Ariyan disciple may,
if he please,
himself proclaim of himself
thus:

'Cut off for me is Purgatory,
cut off is rebirth in an animal womb,
cut off is the realm of ghosts,
the Woeful Way and the Downfall.

Stream-winner am I,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
one bound for enlightenment!'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
1. Veḷu-Dvāra Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

1. Veḷudvāra

Sutta 10

Tatiya Giñjakā-Vasatha Suttaṃ

Brick Hall (c)

---

[313]

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying at Ñatika,
in Brick Hall.

Now on that occasion the venerable Ānanda came to see the Exalted One
on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and compliments
sat down at one side.

Seated at one side he said to the Exalted One:

Lord, the lay-disciples named Kakudha,[1]
has made an end at Ñātika.

Pray, lord, what is his lot?

What is his destiny in the life to come?

■

Lord, the lay-disciples named Kāḷinga,
has made an end at Ñātika.

Pray, lord, what is his lot?

What is his destiny in the life to come?

■

Lord, the lay-disciples named Nikata
has made an end at Ñātika.

Pray, lord, what is his lot?

What is his destiny in the life to come?

■

Lord, the lay-disciples named Kaṭissaha
has made an end at Ñātika.

Pray, lord, what is his lot?

What is his destiny in the life to come?

■

Lord, the lay-disciples named Tuṭṭha
has made an end at Ñātika.

Pray, lord, what is his lot?

What is his destiny in the life to come?

■

Lord, the lay-disciples named Santuṭṭha
has made an end at Ñātika.

Pray, lord, what is his lot?

What is his destiny in the life to come?

■

Lord, the lay-disciples named Bhadda
has made an end at Ñātika.

Pray, lord, what is his lot?

What is his destiny in the life to come?

■

Lord, the lay-disciples named Subhadda
has made an end at Ñātika.

Pray, lord, what is his lot?

What is his destiny in the life to come?

§

The lay-disciple Kakudha,
who has made an end, Ānanda, [314] by destroying the five fetters of the lower sort,
is reborn spontaneously (in the Pure Abodes),
there to pass away,
destined never to return thence.

■

The lay-disciple Kāḷinga,
who has made an end, Ānanda,
by destroying the five fetters of the lower sort,
is reborn spontaneously (in the Pure Abodes),
there to pass away,
destined never to return thence.

■

The lay-disciple Nikata,
who has made an end, Ānanda,
by destroying the five fetters of the lower sort,
is reborn spontaneously (in the Pure Abodes),
there to pass away,
destined never to return thence.

■

The lay-disciple Kaṭissaha,
who has made an end, Ānanda,
by destroying the five fetters of the lower sort,
is reborn spontaneously (in the Pure Abodes),
there to pass away,
destined never to return thence.

■

The lay-disciple Tuṭṭha,
who has made an end, Ānanda,
by destroying the five fetters of the lower sort,
is reborn spontaneously (in the Pure Abodes),
there to pass away,
destined never to return thence.

■

The lay-disciple Santuṭṭha,
who has made an end, Ānanda,
by destroying the five fetters of the lower sort,
is reborn spontaneously (in the Pure Abodes),
there to pass away,
destined never to return thence.

■

The lay-disciple Bhadda,
who has made an end, Ānanda,
by destroying the five fetters of the lower sort,
is reborn spontaneously (in the Pure Abodes),
there to pass away,
destined never to return thence.

■

The lay-disciple Subhadda,
who has made an end, Ānanda,
by destroying the five fetters of the lower sort,
is reborn spontaneously (in the Pure Abodes),
there to pass away,
destined never to return thence.

More than[2] fifty lay-disciples, Ānanda, who have made an end at Ñātika,
by destroying the five fetters of the lower sort,

is reborn spontaneously (in the Pure Abodes),
there to pass away,
destined never to return thence.

More than[2] ninety lay-disciples, Ānanda,
who have made an end at Ñātika,
by destroying three fetters,
and by weakening those of lust,
hatred
and delusion,
are once-returners.

Coming back to this world just once more
they will make an end of ill.

Five hundred and six[3] lay-disciples, Ānanda,
who have made an end at Ñātika,
by destroying three fetters,
are stream-winners,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment.

Indeed, Ānanda,
it is no wonder
that a human being should make an end.

But if, when each one dies,
you come and ask me about the matter,
it is troublesome to the Tathāgata.

Wherefore, Ānanda, I wi11 teach you a Norm-teaching called 'The Mirror of the Norm,'
possessing which
the Ariyan disciple may,
if he please,

himself proclaim of himself
thus:

'Cut off for me is Purgatory,
cut off is rebirth in an animal womb,
cut off is the realm of ghosts,
the Woeful Way and the Downfall.

Stream-winner am I,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
one bound for enlightenment!'

And of what sort, Ānanda,
is that Norm-teaching
called 'Mirror of the Norm,'
possessed of which
the Ariyan disciple may,
if he please,
himself proclaim of himself
thus:

'Cut off for me is Purgatory,
cut off is rebirth in an animal womb,
cut off is the realm of ghosts,
the Woeful Way and the Downfall.

Stream-winner am I,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
one bound for enlightenment!'?

Herein, Ānanda, the Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,

the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

He is blessed
with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.'

This, Ānanda, is that Norm-teaching called 'Mirror of the Norm,' possessed of which which
the Ariyan disciple may,
if he please,
himself proclaim of himself
thus:

'Cut off for me is Purgatory,
cut off is rebirth in an animal womb,
cut off is the realm of ghosts,
the Woeful Way and the Downfall.

Stream-winner am I,
not doomed to the Downfall,

assured,
one bound for enlightenment!'"

---

[1] So at D. ii. Our text has Kakkaṭo and v.l. Kakkuṭo.

[2] 'Paro-, sādhika-, = atireka (in excess).' Comy.

[3] Text cha atirekāni pañcasatāni. At D. ii. sātirekāni Comy. has cha hi adhikāni; S_3 chādhikāni. Evidently an unhealthy village, for Comy. says that 'owing to snake-wind-sickness (dysentery) 124,000 (?) had died at a single blow in that village, among whom were these disciples.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
2. Sahassaka or Rājakārama Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

2. Thousandfold or Royal Park

Sutta 11

Sahassa Suttaṃ

Thousand

---

[314]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī, in the Royal Park.[1]

Now a company of a thousand nuns came to see the Exalted [315] One
on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and compliments stood at one side.[2]

As they thus stood,
the Exalted One said this to those nuns:

"Nuns, an Ariyan disciple
who is blessed with four things
is a stream-winner,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment.

What are the four?

Herein, nuns, the Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,

to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

He is blessed
with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.

These, nuns, are the four things, blessed with which an Ariyan disciple

is a stream-winner,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment."

---

[1] Cf. JA. ii, 15. It was made by the Rājah Pasenadi and the story is told by Comy.

[2] It is noticeable that they do not sit down as the men do.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
2. Sahassaka or Rājakārama Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

2. Thousandfold or Royal Park

Sutta 12

Brāhmaṇā Suttaṃ

Brahmins

---

[315]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, the brahmins proclaim this practice which leads to prosperity:
they instruct their disciples in it thus:

'Come, good fellow!

Rise up betimes
and go facing east.

Don't avoid a hole,[1] a village pool
or cess-pit.

You should go to meet your death[2] wherever you may fall.

Thus, good fellow,
on the break up of body,
after death
you will be reborn in the Happy Lot,
in the Heaven World.'

■

But, monks, this practice of the brahmins is the way of fools, it is the way of infatuation.

It conduces not to revulsion,
to dispassion,
to cessation,
to calm,
to full comprehension,
to the wisdom,
it conduces not to Nibbāna.

■

Now, monks, I too proclaim, in the Ariyan discipline, a practice which leads to prosperity, but it is one which con- [316] duces to downright revulsion, dispassion,
cessation
to calm,
to full comprehension,
to the wisdom,
to Nibbāna.

And what sort of practice is that which so leads?

Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple has unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He has unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,

a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

He has unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

He has virtues dear to the Ariyans, virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.

This, monks, is the practice which leads to prosperity, one which conduces to downright revulsion, dispassion,
cessation
to calm,
to full comprehension,
to the wisdom,
to Nibbāna."

---

[1] Text has semhaṇ (spittle) for v.l. sombhaṇ, which evidently should be sobbhaṇ.

[2] Comy. takes this to mean men maraṇaṇ iccheyyāsi.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
2. Sahassaka or Rājakārama Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

2. Thousandfold or Royal Park

Sutta 13

Ānanda Suttaṃ

Ānanda

---

[316]

THUS have I heard:

Once the venerable Sāriputta and the venerable Ānanda
were staying near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Sāriputta,
rising from his solitude at eventide,
went to visit the venerable Ānanda,
and on coming to him
greeted him courteously,

and after the exchange of greetings and courtesies
sat down at one side.

As he thus sat
the venerable Sāriputta said to the venerable Ānanda:

"Friend Ānanda,
by abandoning what things, by winning possession of what things,
are people of this world
proclaimed by the Exalted One
as stream-winners,
as not doomed to the Downfall,
as assured,
as bound for enlightenment?"

"Friend, it is by abandoning four things, it is by winning possession of four things,
that people of this world
are proclaimed by the Exalted One
as stream-winners,
as not doomed to the Downfall,
as assured,
as bound for enlightenment.

What are the four things?

One has no such disloyalty to the Buddha as that possessed by the uneducated manyfolk
who, when body breaks up,
after death
are reborn in Hell,
in the Woeful Lot,
the Downfall,
in Purgatory:
but he has such unwavering loyalty to the Buddha

as is possessed by the educated Ariyan disciple,
who, when the body breaks up,
after death
is reborn in the Happy Lot,
in the Heaven World
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

■

One has no such disloyalty to the Norm
as that possessed by the uneducated manyfolk
who, when body breaks up,
after death
are reborn in Hell,
in the Woeful Lot,
the Downfall,
in Purgatory:
but he has such unwavering loyalty to the Norm
as is possessed by the educated Ariyan disciple,
who, when the body breaks up,
after death
is reborn in the Happy Lot,
in the Heaven World,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

■

One has no such disloyalty to the Order as that possessed by the uneducated manyfolk
who, when body breaks up,
after death
are reborn in Hell,
in the Woeful Lot,
the Downfall,
in Purgatory:
but he has such unwavering loyalty to the Order
as is possessed by the educated Ariyan disciple,
who, when the body breaks up,
after death
is reborn in the Happy Lot,
in the Heaven World,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

■

[317] He has no such immorality[1]
as that possessed by the uneducated many folk
who, when body breaks up,
after death
are reborn in Hell,
in the Woeful Lot,
the Downfall,
in Purgatory:
but he is blessed has virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind such as are possessed by the educated Ariyan disciple, who, when the body breaks up,
after death
is reborn in the Happy Lot,
in the Heaven World.

Friend, it is by abandoning these four things and by winning possession of these other four things that the people of this world are proclaimed by the Exalted One

as stream-winners,
as not doomed to the Downfall,
as assured,
as bound for enlightenment."

---

[1] Here text has wrongly dussīlena hoti (with v.l. dussīlyam na), but is right on text, 382.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
2. Sahassaka or Rājakārama Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

2. Thousandfold or Royal Park

Sutta 14

Paṭhama Duggati Suttaṃ

The Woeful Way (a)

---

[317]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, the Ariyan disciple
who is blessed with four things is one who has passed utterly beyond all fear of the Woeful Way.[1]

What are the four?

Herein the Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

■

He is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Norm
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

■

He is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Order
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

■

He is blessed has virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.

These, monks, are the four things
blessed with which the ariyan disciple is one who has passed utterly beyond all fear of the Woeful Way."

---

[1] Comy. = manussa-dobhaggaṇ paṭikhittaṇ.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
2. Sahassaka or Rājakārama Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

2. Thousandfold or Royal Park

Sutta 15

Dutiya Duggati Suttaṃ

The Woeful Way (b)

---

[317]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, the Ariyan disciple
who is blessed with four things
is one who has passed utterly beyond all fear of the Downfall.

What are the four?

Herein the Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

■

He is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Norm
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

■

He is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Order
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

■

He is blessed has virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.

These, monks, are the four things
blessed with which the ariyan disciple is one who has passed utterly beyond all fear of the Downfall."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
2. Sahassaka or Rājakārama Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

2. Thousandfold or Royal Park

Sutta 16

Paṭhama Mitten-ā-maccā Suttaṃ

Intimate Friends (a)

---

[317]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, those with whom you have sympathy, those who think you should be listened to,[ed1] whether friends
or intimates[1]
or kinsmen[2]
or blood-relations, -
all such should be advised about,
grounded in,
established in four limbs of stream-winning.

What four?

They should be advised about,
grounded in,
established in [318]
unwavering loyalty to the Buddha
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

■

They should be advised about, grounded in, established in unwavering loyalty to the Norm
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

■

They should be advised about, grounded in, established in unwavering loyalty to the Order
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

■

They should be advised about, grounded in, established in the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.

Monks, those with whom you have sympathy, those who think you should be listened to,
whether friends
or intimates
or kinsmen
or blood-relations, -
all such should be advised about,
grounded in,
established in these four limbs of stream-winning."

---

[1] Amaccā. Comy. 'those who take counsel or do business together.' At DA. 297, it =piyasahāyakā.

[2] Comy. ñāṭī-sassu, etc. (mother- and father-in-law).

[ed1] Woodward has: 'those who think you should listen to them'.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
2. Sahassaka or Rājakārama Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

2. Thousandfold or Royal Park

Sutta 17

Dutiya Mitten-ā-maccā Suttaṃ

Intimate Friends (b)

---

[318]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, those with whom you have sympathy,
those who think you should be listened to,
whether friends
or intimates
or kinsmen
or blood-relations, -
all such should be advised about,
grounded in,
established in four limbs of stream-winning.

What four?

They should be advised about,
grounded in,
established in unwavering loyalty to the Buddha
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

There may be change,[1] monks,
in the four great elements of earth,
water,

heat
and air,
but there can be no change in the Ariyan disciple
blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha;

by change I mean:[2] -
that such an one should be reborn in hell
or the womb of an animal or in the realm of ghosts is an utter impossibility.

■

They should be advised about,
grounded in,
established in unwavering loyalty to the Norm
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

There may be change, monks,
in the four great elements of earth,
water,
heat
and air,
but there can be no change

in the Ariyan disciple
blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Norm;

by change I mean: -
that such an one should be reborn in hell
or the womb of an animal
or in the realm of ghosts
is an utter impossibility.

■

They should be advised about,
grounded in,
established in unwavering loyalty to the Order
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

There may be change, monks,
in the four great elements of earth,
water,

heat
and air,
but there can be no change
in the Ariyan disciple
blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Order;

by change I mean: -
that such an one should be reborn in hell
or the womb of an animal
or in the realm of ghosts
is an utter impossibility.

■

They should be advised about, grounded in, established in the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.

There may be change, monks,
in the four great elements of earth,
water,
heat
and air,
but there can be no change
in the Ariyan disciple
established in the virtues dear to the Ariyans;

by change I mean: -
that such an one should be reborn in hell

or the womb of an animal
or in the realm of ghosts
is an utter impossibility.

■

So monks, those with whom you have sympathy, those who think you should be listened to,
whether friends
or intimates
or kinsmen
or blood-relations, -
all such should be advised about,
grounded in,
established in these four limbs of stream-winning."

---

[1] Aññatthattaṇ, of the elements, 'otherness' of condition or nature, as a result of change of consistency. Cf. K.S. iv. 39; cf. Ang. i, 152.

[2] 'Here,' says Comy., 'there can be no change of destiny (gati) in such.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
2. Sahassaka or Rājakārama Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

2. Thousandfold or Royal Park

Sutta 18

Paṭhama Deva-Cārika Suttaṃ

Visiting the Devas (a)

---

[318]

THUS have I heard:

Once the venerable Moggallāna the Great was staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Moggallāna the Great,
just as a strong man might stretch out his bent arm,
or draw in his outstretched [319] arm, - even so did he vanish from Jeta Grove and appear among the Devas of the Thirty-Three.

Then a number of the Devas of the Thirty-Three came to see the venerable Moggallāna the Great,
and on coming to him
saluted him
and stood at one side.[1]

As they thus stood
the venerable Moggallāna the Great said this to those Devas:

"It is a good thing, friends, to be blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

As a result of being blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha
some beings here,[2]
when body breaks up,
after death
are reborn in the Happy Lot,
in the Heaven World.

■

"It is a good thing, friends, to be blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Norm

thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

As a result of being blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Norm
some beings here,
when body breaks up,
after death
are reborn in the Happy Lot,
in the Heaven World.

■

"It is a good thing, friends, to be blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Order
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,

worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

As a result of being blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Order
some beings here,
when body breaks up,
after death
are reborn in the Happy Lot,
in the Heaven World.

■

"It is a good thing, friends, to be blessed
with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted,
which lead to concentration of the mind.

As a result of being blessed with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
some beings here,
when body breaks up,
after death
are reborn in the Happy Lot,
in the Heaven World."

§

"It is indeed a good thing, most worthy sir, - this winning of unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

True it is that as a result of being blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha
some beings here,
when body breaks up,
after death
are reborn in the Happy Lot,
in the Heaven World.

■

"It is indeed a good thing, most worthy sir, - this winning of unwavering loyalty to the Norm
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,

to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

True it is that as a result of being blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Norm
some beings here,
when body breaks up,
after death
are reborn in the Happy Lot,
in the Heaven World.

■

"It is indeed a good thing, most worthy sir, - this winning of unwavering loyalty to the Order
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

True it is that as a result of being blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Order
some beings here,

when body breaks up,
after death
are reborn in the Happy Lot,
in the Heaven World.

■

"It is indeed a good thing, most worthy sir, - this winning of virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted,
which lead to concentration of the mind.

True it is that as a result of being blessed with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
some beings here,
when body breaks up,
after death
are reborn in the Happy Lot,
in the Heaven World."

---

[1] Devas apparently do not sit down.

[2] Idha, apparently Moggallāna forgets that he is already in the next world; idha being generally used of 'this world.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
2. Sahassaka or Rājakārama Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

2. Thousandfold or Royal Park

Sutta 19

Dutiya Deva-Cārika Suttaṃ

Visiting the Devas (b)

---

[319]

THUS have I heard:

Once the venerable Moggallāna the Great was staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the venerable Moggallāna the Great,
just as a strong man might stretch out his bent arm,
or draw in his outstretched arm, -
even so did he vanish from Jeta Grove
and appear among the Devas of the Thirty-Three.

Then a number of the Devas of the Thirty-Three
came to see the venerable Moggallāna the Great,
and on coming to him
saluted him
and stood at one side.

As they thus stood
the venerable Moggallāna the Great said this to those Devas:

"It is a good thing, friends, to be blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

As a result of being blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha
some beings here,
when body breaks up,
after death
have been[ed1] reborn in the Happy Lot,
in the Heaven World.

■

"It is a good thing, friends, to be blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Norm

thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

As a result of being blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Norm
some beings here,
when body breaks up,
after death
have been reborn in the Happy Lot,
in the Heaven World.

■

"It is a good thing, friends, to be blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Order
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,

worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

As a result of being blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Order
some beings here,
when body breaks up,
after death
have been reborn in the Happy Lot,
in the Heaven World.

■

"It is a good thing, friends, to be blessed
with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted,
which lead to concentration of the mind.

As a result of being blessed with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
some beings here,
when body breaks up,
after death
have been reborn in the Happy Lot,
in the Heaven World."

§

"It is indeed a good thing, most worthy sir, - this winning of unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

True it is that as a result of being blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha
some beings here,
when body breaks up,
after death
have been reborn in the Happy Lot,
in the Heaven World.

■

"It is indeed a good thing, most worthy sir, - this winning of unwavering loyalty to the Norm
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,

to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

True it is that as a result of being blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Norm
some beings here,
when body breaks up,
after death
have been reborn in the Happy Lot,
in the Heaven World.

■

"It is indeed a good thing, most worthy sir, - this winning of unwavering loyalty to the Order
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

True it is that as a result of being blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Order
some beings here,

when body breaks up,
after death
have been reborn in the Happy Lot,
in the Heaven World.

■

"It is indeed a good thing, most worthy sir, -
this winning of virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted,
which lead to concentration of the mind.

True it is that as a result of being blessed with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
some beings here,
when body breaks up,
after death
have been reborn in the Happy Lot,
in the Heaven World."

---

ed1 Woodward does not note the change in case from the previous sutta.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
2. Sahassaka or Rājakārama Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

2. Thousandfold or Royal Park

Sutta 20

Tatiya Deva-Cārika Suttaṃ

Visiting the Devas (c)

---

[319]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the Exalted One,
just as a strong man might stretch out his bent arm,
or draw in his outstretched arm, -
even so did he vanish from Jeta Grove
and appear among the Devas of the Thirty-Three.

Then a number of the Devas of the Thirty-Three came to see the Exalted One,
and on coming to him
saluted him
and stood at one side.

As they thus stood
the Exalted One said this to those Devas:

"It is a good thing, friends, to be blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

As a result of being blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha
some beings here,
when body breaks up,
after death
are stream-winners,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment.

■

"It is a good thing, friends, to be blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Norm
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

As a result of being blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Norm
some beings here,
when body breaks up,
after death
are stream-winners,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment.

■

"It is a good thing, friends, to be blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Order
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

As a result of being blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Order
some beings here,
when body breaks up,
after death
are stream-winners,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment.

■

"It is a good thing, friends, to be blessed
with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted,
which lead to concentration of the mind.

As a result of being blessed with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
some beings here,
when body breaks up,
after death
are stream-winners,
not doomed to the Downfall,

assured,
bound for enlightenment."

§

"It is indeed a good thing, most worthy sir, - this winning of unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

True it is that as a result of being blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha
some beings here,
when body breaks up,
after death
are stream-winners,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment.

■

"It is indeed a good thing, most worthy sir, - this winning of unwavering loyalty to the Norm
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

True it is that as a result of being blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Norm
some beings here,
when body breaks up,
after death
are stream-winners,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment.

■

"It is indeed a good thing, most worthy sir, - this winning of unwavering loyalty to the Order
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,

the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

True it is that as a result of being blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Order
some beings here,
when body breaks up,
after death
are stream-winners,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment.

■

"It is indeed a good thing, most worthy sir, -
this winning of virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted,
which lead to concentration of the mind.

True it is that as a result of being blessed with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
some beings here,

when body breaks up,
after death
are stream-winners,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
3. Saraṇāni (or Sarakāni) Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

3. Sarakāni[1]

Sutta 21

Paṭhama Mahānāma Suttaṃ

Mahānāma (a)

---

[320]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying among the Sakyans near Kapilavatthu,
in the Banyan Park.

Now Mahānāma[2] the Sakyan came to see the Exalted One,
and on coming to him
saluted him
and sat down at one side.

As he thus sat
Mahānāma the Sakyan said this to the Exalted One:

"Lord, this town of Kapilavatthu is rich,
prosperous, populous,
crowded with men,[3]
a dense mass of folk.[4]

Now, lord, when I enter Kapilavatthu at eventide
after waiting upon the Exalted One or the worshipful monks,
I meet with elephants,
horses, chariots,
carts and men,
all swaying and rolling along.[5]

At such times, lord, my thoughts, which are fixed on the Exalted One,
on the Norm and the Order,
are simply bewildered.

Then it occurs to me:

'If I were at this very moment to make an end,
what would be my lot,
what would be my destiny
in the life to come?'"

"Have no fears, Mahānāma!

Have no fears, Mahānāma!

Blameless will be your death.

You will make a blameless end.

For he whose mind, Mahānāma, has for a long time been practiced in faith, in virtue,
in learning,
in giving up and insight,
— though this material body of his,
of the four elements compounded,
from parents sprung,
of a nature to be worn away,
pounded away,
broken and scattered,[6]
though this body be devoured by crows and vultures, devoured by [321] kites and dogs,
— yet his mind,
if longtime practiced in faith,
virtue,
learning,
giving up
and insight,
the mind soars aloft,
the mind wins the summit.[7]

Suppose, Mahānāma,
a man plunges a jar of butter or a jar of oil into a deep, deep pool of water,[8]
and breaks it,
and it becomes shards or fragments, and sinks down to the bottom;
but the butter or oil that is in it floats up and reaches the surface,
— just so, Mahānāma,
if the mind has long been practiced in faith virtue,
learning,

giving up
and insight,
— though this material body,
of the four elements compounded,
from parents sprung,
of a nature to be worn away,
pounded away,
broken and scattered,
though this body be devoured by crows and vultures,
devoured by kites and dogs,
— yet his mind,
if longtime practiced in faith,
virtue,
learning,
giving up
and insight,
the mind soars aloft,
the mind wins the summit.

Now your mind, Mahānāma, has long been practiced in faith,
virtue,
learning,
giving up
and insight.

Have no fear, Mahānāma!

Have no fear, Mahānāma!

Blameless will be your death.

You will make an end that is blameless."

---

[1] Or Saraṇāni (text), the name of a Sakayan, gives the title to this chapter and §4.

[2] For Mahānāma, cf. text, 327, 371, etc.

[3] For these phrases, cf. D. i, 211; S. ii, 106; Mil. Pañh., 130.

[4] Sambādha-byūhaṇ. Comy. anibbiddha-racchāyo sā paviṭṭha-maggen' eva nigacchati.

[5] Bhantena (fr. bhamati); text misprints in each case bhante na (as if it were 'lord, not').

[6] Cf. K.S. iv, 50 n.

[7] Uddhaṇgāmī, visesa-gāmī.

[8] Cf. the same simile at K.S. iv, 218.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
3. Saraṇāni (or Sarakāni) Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

3. Sarakāni

Sutta 22

Dutiya Mahānāma Suttaṃ

Mahānāma (b)

---

[321]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying among the Sakyans
near Kapilavatthu,
in the Banyan Park.

Now Mahānāma the Sakyan came to see the Exalted One,
and on coming to him saluted him
and sat down at one side.

As he thus sat
Mahānāma the Sakyan said this to the Exalted One:

"Lord, this town of Kapilavatthu is rich,
prosperous, populous,
crowded with men,
a dense mass of folk.

Now, lord, when I enter Kapilavatthu at eventide
after waiting upon the Exalted One
or the worshipful monks,
I meet with elephants,
horses, chariots,
carts and men,
all swaying and rolling along.

At such times, lord, my thoughts,
which are fixed on the Exalted One,
on the Norm and the Order,
are simply bewildered.

Then it occurs to me:

'If I were at this very moment to make an end,
what would be my lot,
what would be my destiny
in the life to come?'"

"Have no fears, Mahānāma!
Have no fears, Mahānāma!

Blameless will be your death.

You will make a blameless end.

For the Ariyan disciple, Mahānāma,
who is blessed with four things,
bends to Nibbāna,
slopes to Nibbāna,
tends to Nibbāna.

What are the four things?

Herein, Mahānāma,
the Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha, thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant, a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He is possessed
of unwavering loyalty to the Norm, thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

He is possessed
of unwavering faith in the Order, thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely, the four airs of men,

the eight sorts of men.
That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clsped hands,
— a field of merit unsurpassed for theworld.'

Then he is possessed
of the virtues loved by the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole, unspotted, untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.

For instance, Mahānāma, if a tree bends to the east,
slopes to the east,
tends to the east,
which way will it fall when its root is cut?"

"It will fall whither it bends, slopes and tends, lord."

"Just so, Mahānāma,
the Ariyan disciple who is blessed with four things bends to Nibbāna,
slopes to Nibbāna,
tends to Nibbāna."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
3. Saraṇāni (or Sarakāni) Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

3. Sarakāni

Sutta 23

Godhā or Tatiya Mahānāma Suttaṃ

Godhā or Mahānāma (c)

---

[322]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying among the Sakyans near Kapilavatthu, in the Banyan Park.

Now Mahānāma the Sakyan came to see Godha[1] the Sakyan, and on coming to him said this:

"Godha, so far as you know,
blessed with how many things

is a stream-winner (declared)
one not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment?"

"I know, Mahānāma,
that he is blessed with three things.

What are they?

Herein, Mahānāma, the Ariyan disciple has unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He has unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

He has unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

Blessed with these three things, Mahānāma, the stream-winner is (declared)
one not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment.

But as far as you know, Mahānāma,
blessed with how many things
is a stream-winner (declared)
one not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment?"

§

"For my part, Godha, I know[2]
that he is blessed with four things.

What are they?

Herein, Mahānāma, the Ariyan disciple has unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He has unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

He has unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

And he is blessed
with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.

These are the four things, Godha,
blessed with which
I know a stream-winner is
one not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment."|| ||

§

"Wait a bit, Mahānāma!

Wait a bit, Mahānāma!

The Exalted One will know about this,
whether one is blessed with these four things or not.

Let us go to see the Exalted One
and ask him about it."

So Mahānāma and Godha the Sakyans went to see the Exalted One
on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and compliments
sat down at one side.

Seated at one side then Mahānāma the Sakyan said this to the Exalted One:

"Just now, lord,[ed1] I came to see Godha the Sakyan, and on coming to him said this:

'Godha, so far as you know,
blessed with how many things
is a stream-winner (declared)
one not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment?

"I know, Mahānāma,
that he is blessed with three things.

What are they?

Herein, Mahānāma, the Ariyan disciple has unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He has unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

He has unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:

namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

Blessed with these three things, Mahānāma,
the stream-winner is (declared)
one not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment.

But as far as you know, Mahānāma,
blessed with how many things
is a stream-winner (declared)
one not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment?"

■

[Then I said:]

'For my part, Godha, I know that he is blessed with four things.

What are they?

Herein, Mahānāma, the Ariyan disciple has unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

"He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One."

He has unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

"Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise."

He has unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

"Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world."

And he is blessed
with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.

These are the four things, Godha,
blessed with which
I know a stream-winner is
one not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment.'|| ||

■

[Then Godha said:]

'Wait a bit, Mahānāma!

Wait a bit, Mahānāma!

The Exalted One will know about this,
whether one is blessed with these four things or not.

Let us go to see the Exalted One
and ask him about it.'

[So Godha and I came to see the Exalted One.]

[323] Now suppose, lord, some question of doctrine arises,[3] and on one side is the Exalted One and on the other side is the Order of monks,
I myself should be on the side of the Exalted One.

Let my lord the Exalted One accept this
(as proof of) my loyalty to him.[4]

Again suppose, lord, some question of doctrine arises, and on one side is the Exalted One,
and on the other side is the Order of monks, together with the Order of nuns, -
I myself should be on the Exalted One's side.

So again, lord, if on the one side were the Exalted one, on the other side the Order,
both of monks and nuns,
together with the male lay-followers, - I myself should side with the Exalted One or if again on the other side were the Order,

both of monks and nuns,
and the lay-followers,
both male and female

if added to these were the whole world,
with its Devas,
its Maras and its Brahmas,
its host of recluses and brahmins,

both of devas and mankind,- still, lord, I should side with the Exalted One.

Let my lord the Exalted One accept this
(as proof of) my loyalty to him."

(Then, said the Exalted One, turning to Godha):

What say you, Godha, in reply to Mahānāma
who holds such a view?"

"Lord, of Mahānāma,
who holds such a view,[5]
have naught to say save what is lovely and good."[6]

---

[1] The Godhan is not met with elsewhere, but a woman of this family (Sākiyāṇī-G.) appears at text, 396. Cf. Brethren, 315 n.

[2] Mahānāma, as stated at text, 327,

[3] Dhamma-samuppādo.

[4] Pasannaṇ.

[5] Text should read evamvadim ahaṇ.

[6] Aññatra kalyāṇā, aññatra kusalā. The phrase occurs at S. ii, 118. Comy. 'Ignorance is just a bad thing. It is not-relieved by what is lovely and good. But all the same he is not to blame.'

[ed1] Woodward abridges the repetition.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
3. Saraṇāni (or Sarakāni) Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

3. Sarakāni

Sutta 24

Paṭhama Sarakāni or Saraṇāni Suttaṃ

Sarakāni or Saraṇāni (a)

---

[323]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying among the Sakyans
near Kapilavatthu,
in the Banyan Park.

Now at that time Sarakāni the Sakyan,
who had made an end,
was proclaimed by the Exalted One a stream-winner,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
one bound for enlightenment.

Thereupon a number of Sakyans,
whenever they met [324] together in company,
were consumed with indignation,
and spoke angrily and scornfully[1] about him
thus:

"A strange thing indeed!

A wonder indeed!

Nowadays-anyone may become a stream-winner,[2] inasmuch as Sarakāni the Sakyan,
who bas died,
is proclaimed by the Exalted One a stream-winner,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
one bound for enlightenment.

Why! Sarakāni the Sakyan failed in the training and took to drink!"

Now Mahānāma the Sakyan went to see the Exalted One,
and on coming to him
saluted him
and sat down at one side.

As he thus sat
Mahānāma the Sakyan said this to the Exalted One:

"Here, lord, Sarakāni the Sakyan,
who has died,
was proclaimed by the Exalted One a stream-winner,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
one bound for enlightenment.

Thereupon a number of Sakyans, whenever they meet together in company,
were consumed with indignation,
and spoke angrily and scornfully about him
thus:

'A strange thing indeed!

A wonder indeed!

Nowadays-anyone may become a stream-winner,
inasmuch as Sarakāni the Sakyan,
who bas died,
is proclaimed by the Exalted One a stream-winner,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
one bound for enlightenment.

Why! Sarakāni the Sakyan failed in the training and took to drink!'"

§

"Mahānāma, a lay-disciple
who has for a long time taken refuge in the Buddha, taken refuge in the Norm taken refuge in the Order, -
how could such an one go to the Downfall?

He who would rightly apply the words
'A lay-disciple who has gone for refuge to the Buddha, who has gone for refuge to the Norm
who has gone for refuge to the Order'
might rightly apply them to Sarakāni the Sakyan.

Mahānāma, Sarakāni the Sakyan is one who
for a long time took refuge in the Buddha, took refuge in the Norm
took refuge in the Order.

How could such an one go to the Downfall?

§

Now herein, Mahānāma,
take the case of a man who is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,

inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

He is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

Moreover he is one who is joyous
and swift in wisdom,[3]
one who has won release.

Now by the destruction [325] of the āsavas,
in this very life,
by bis own understanding he bas realized the heart's release,
the release by insight,
and having attained it
dwells therein.

Such an one, Mahānāma,
is fully released from hell,
from rebirth in an animal's womb,
from the realm of ghosts,
he is fully released from the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
from the Downfall.

■

But suppose again in this connexion, Mahānāma, a certain one who is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,

to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

He is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

He is joyous and swift in wisdom, but he has not won release.

Yet by destroying the five fetters of the lower sort he is spontaneously born (in the Pure Abodes),
destined there to pass away, not to return hither from thence.

This one too, Mahānāma,
is fully released from hell,
from rebirth in an animal's womb,
from the realm of ghosts,
he is fully released from the Waste,

the Woeful Way,
from the Downfall.

■

Again in this connexion, Mahānāma, suppose one who is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

He is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

But he is not joyous and swift in wisdom,
he has not won release.

Yet by destroying three fetters and weakening lust,
hatred
and delusion
he is a Once-returner.

Once more he comes back to this world
and makes an end of ill.

He too, Mahānāmatoo, Mahānāma,
is fully released from hell,
from rebirth in an animal's womb,
from the realm of ghosts,
he is fully released from the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
from the Downfall.

■

Again, Mahānāma,
suppose a certain man
blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

He is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,

walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

But he is neither joyous and swift in wisdom,
nor has he won release:
but by destroying three fetters
he is a Stream-winner,
he is not doomed to the Downfall,
he is assured,
bound for enlightenment.

This man too, Mahānāma,
is fully released from hell,
from rebirth in an animal's womb,
from the realm of ghosts,
he is fully released from the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
from the Downfall.

■

Again, Mahānāma, suppose a certain one who is not even blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He is not even blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

He is not even blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

He is not joyous and swift in wisdom,
he has not won release.

But maybe he has these things, -
the controlling factor of faith,
the controlling factor of energy,
the controlling factor of mindfulness,
the controlling factor of concentration
the controlling factor of controlling faculty of insight:
and the things proclaimed by the Tathāgata are moderately [326] approved[4] by him by insight.

Even this man, Mahānāma
is fully released from hell,
from rebirth in an animal's womb,
from the realm of ghosts,
he is fully released from the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
from the Downfall.

■

Once more in this matter, Mahānāma, suppose a certain one who is not even blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,

a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He is not even blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

He is not even blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

He is not joyous and swift in wisdom,
he has not won release.

But maybe he has these things, -
the controlling factor of faith,
the controlling factor of energy,
the controlling factor of mindfulness,
the controlling factor of concentration
the controlling factor of controlling faculty of insight:
yet if he have merely faith, merely affection for the Tathāgata,[5] he is fully released from hell,
from rebirth in an animal's womb,
from the realm of ghosts,
he is fully released from the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
from the Downfall.

■

Why, Mahānāma,
if these great sal trees here[6] could know what is spoken well and what is spoken ill, I would proclaim even these great trees to be Stream-winners,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment.

Much more then[7] do I proclaim Sarakāni the Sakyan to be one.

Mahānāma, Sarakāni the Sakyan fulfilled the (threefold) training at his death."[8]

---

[1] Ujjhāyanti, khīyanti, vipācenti. Ujjhāyantī ti =avajjhāyanti, lāmakato cintenti; khīyantī ti = kathenti, pakāsenti ('point at'; not in Pali Dict. in this meaning). See examples in Childers and S. i, 232, on which I quote Comy. Vipācentī ti = tattha tattha kathenti, vitthārenti.

[2] Etiha dāni ko na bhavissati.

[3] For hāsupañña and javana-pañña, Cf. K.S. i, 88 n.; M. iii, 25; JA. iv, 136; infra, text, 412.

[4] Mattaso nijjhānaṇ khamanti. Cf. K.S. iii, 177 n., where Comy. says pamānaso olokanaṇ khamanti; but here says, pamānena ca ol. kh, Iminā dhammānusārī-maggattha-puggalaṃ dasseti. Mattaso, abl. of mattā.

[5] Cf. Majjhima i, 142.

[6] Here he pointed to four great sāl trees standing near.' Comy.

[7] Kimanga pana. Cf. S. iii, 268; MP. 27.

[8] Sikkhaṇ samādiyī = tīsu sikkhāsu paripūrakārī ahosi. Comy. (The three are adhisīla, adhicitta, adhipaññā, 'the higher morals, mind and wisdom'; Cf. K.S. iii, 69: A. i. 231 ff.)

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
3. Saraṇāni (or Sarakāni) Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

3. Sarakāni

Sutta 25

Dutiya Sarakāni or Saraṇāni Suttaṃ

Sarakāni or Saraṇāni (b)

---

[326]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying among the Sakyans near Kapilavatthu, in the Banyan Park.

Now at that time Sarakāni the Sakyan,
who had made an end,
was proclaimed by the Exalted One a stream-winner,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
one bound for enlightenment.

Thereupon a number of Sakyans,
whenever they met together in company,
were consumed with indignation,
and spoke angrily and scornfully about him
thus:

"A strange thing indeed!

A wonder indeed!

Nowadays-anyone may become a stream-winner,
inasmuch as Sarakāni the Sakyan,
who bas died,
is proclaimed by the Exalted One a stream-winner,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
one bound for enlightenment.

Why! Sarakāni the Sakyan was one who failed to complete the training!"

[327] Now Mahānāma the Sakyan went to see the Exalted One,
and on coming to him
saluted him
and sat down at one side.

As he thus sat
Mahānāma the Sakyan said this to the Exalted One:

"Here, lord, Sarakāni the Sakyan,
who has died,
was proclaimed by the Exalted One a stream-winner,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
one bound for enlightenment.

Thereupon a number of Sakyans, whenever they meet together in company, were consumed with indignation,

and spoke angrily and scornfully about him
thus:

'A strange thing indeed!

A wonder indeed!

Nowadays-anyone may become a stream-winner,
inasmuch as Sarakāni the Sakyan,
who bas died,
is proclaimed by the Exalted One a stream-winner,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
one bound for enlightenment.

Why! Sarakāni the Sakyan was one who failed to complete the training!'"

"Mahānāma, a lay-disciple
who has for a long time taken refuge in the Buddha, taken refuge in the Norm
taken refuge in the Order, -
how could such an one go to the Downfall?

He who would rightly apply the words
'A lay-disciple who has gone for refuge to the Buddha,
who has gone for refuge to the Norm
who has gone for refuge to the Order'
might rightly apply them to Sarakāni the Sakyan.

Mahānāma, Sarakāni the Sakyan is one who
for a long time took refuge in the Buddha,
took refuge in the Norm
took refuge in the Order.

How could such an one go to the Downfall?

§

Now herein, Mahānāma,
take the case of a certain one who has reached absolute loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He has reached absolute loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

He has reached absolute loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

Moreover he is one who is joyous
and swift in wisdom,
one who has won release.

Now by the destruction of the āsavas,
in this very life,
by his own understanding
he has realized the heart's release,
the release by insight,
and having attained it
dwells therein.

Such an one, Mahānāma,
is fully released from hell,
from rebirth in an animal's womb,
from the realm of ghosts,
he is fully released from the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
from the Downfall.

■

Again, Mahānāma,
a certain one has reached absolute loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He has reached absolute loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

He has reached absolute loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully

is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

Moreover he is one who is joyous
and swift in wisdom,
but he has not won release.[ed1]

By destroying the five fetters of the lower sort
he wins release midway[1].

He, Mahānāma,
is fully released from hell,
from rebirth in an animal's womb,
from the realm of ghosts,
he is fully released from the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
from the Downfall.

■

Again, Mahānāma,
a certain one has reached absolute loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,

perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He has reached absolute loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

He has reached absolute loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,

worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

Moreover he is one who is joyous
and swift in wisdom,
but he has not won release.

By destroying the five fetters of the lower sort he wins release by reduction of his time.

He, Mahānāma,
is fully released from hell,
from rebirth in an animal's womb,
from the realm of ghosts,
he is fully released from the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
from the Downfall.

■

Again, Mahānāma,
a certain one has reached absolute loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He has reached absolute loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

He has reached absolute loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

Moreover he is one who is joyous
and swift in wisdom,
but he has not won release.

By destroying the five fetters of the lower sort he wins release with little trouble.

He, Mahānāma,
is fully released from hell,
from rebirth in an animal's womb,
from the realm of ghosts,
he is fully released from the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
from the Downfall.

■

Again, Mahānāma,
a certain one has reached absolute loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He has reached absolute loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,

leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

He has reached absolute loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

Moreover he is one who is joyous
and swift in wisdom,
but he has not won release.

By destroying the five fetters of the lower sort he wins release with some trouble.

He, Mahānāma,
is fully released from hell,
from rebirth in an animal's womb,
from the realm of ghosts,
he is fully released from the Waste,

the Woeful Way,
from the Downfall.

■

Again, Mahānāma,
a certain one has reached absolute loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He has reached absolute loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

He has reached absolute loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

Moreover he is one who is joyous
and swift in wisdom,
but he has not won release.

By destroying the five fetters of the lower sort he he is one who goes up stream and goes to the Pure Abodes.

He, Mahānāma,
is fully released from hell,
from rebirth in an animal's womb,
from the realm of ghosts,
he is fully released from the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
from the Downfall.

■

Again Mahānāma, in this connexion, take the case of a certain one who has reached absolute loyalty to the Buddha,

thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

Who has reached absolute loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

Who has reached absolute loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,

the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

But he is not joyous and swift in wisdom,
he has not [328] won release.

Yet by destroying three fetters
and weakening lust,
hatred
and delusion
he is a Once-returner.

Once more he comes back to this world
and makes an end of ill.

He too, Mahānāmatoo, Mahānāma,
is fully released from hell,
from rebirth in an animal's womb,
from the realm of ghosts,
he is fully released from the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
from the Downfall.

■

Again Mahānāma, in this connexion, take the case of a certain one who has reached absolute loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

Who has reached absolute loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

Who has reached absolute loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

But he is neither joyous and swift in wisdom,
nor has he won release:
but by destroying three fetters
he is a Stream-winner,
he is not doomed to the Downfall,
he is assured,
bound for enlightenment.

This man too, Mahānāma,
is fully released from hell,
from rebirth in an animal's womb,
from the realm of ghosts,
he is fully released from the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
from the Downfall.

■

Here again, Mahānāma, take the case of one who has not reached absolute loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer

of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He has not reached absolute loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

He has not reached absolute loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

He is neither joyous and swift in wisdom,
nor has he won release.

But he is blessed with the controlling factor of faith,
the controlling factor of energy,
the controlling factor of mindfulness,
the controlling factor of concentration
the controlling factor of controlling faculty of insight.

Also the things proclaimed by the Tathāgata are moderately approved by him by insight.

Even this man, Mahānāma
is fully released from hell,
from rebirth in an animal's womb,
from the realm of ghosts,
he is fully released from the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
from the Downfall.

■

Once again, Mahānāma,
take the case of a certain one who has not reached absolute loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,

a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He has not reached absolute loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

He has not reached absolute loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

Nor is he joyous and swift in wisdom,
nor has he won release.

But he has just these conditions:
the controlling factor of faith,
the controlling factor of energy,
the controlling factor of mindfulness,
the controlling factor of concentration
the controlling factor of controlling faculty of insight:
moreover he has merely faith, merely affection for the Tathāgata.

He, also, Mahānāma is fully released from hell,
from rebirth in an animal's womb,
from the realm of ghosts,
he is fully released from the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
from the Downfall.

■

Suppose now, Mahānāma, a bad field,[2] a bad piece of land,
not yet stubbed,
and the seeds (to be sown) are broken, rotten,
spoiled[3] by wind and heat; incapable of sprouting,[4] badly planted,[5]
and the sky-god supplies no suitable rain.[6]

Would those seeds come to growth,
increase,
abundance?"

"Surely not, lord,"

"Just so, Mahānāma,
in this connexion,

when the Norm is wrongly preached, ill expounded,
leads to no profit,
does not conduce to tranquillity, and is not expounded by a Fully Enlightened One,
I declare it like unto a bad field.

The disciple who lives according to that Norm and walks in accordance therewith, who walks obedient thereto,
who practises its precepts, - such I declare to be like that bad seed.

But suppose, Mahānāma,
a good field,
a good piece of land, [329] well stubbed, and the seeds sown therein are unbroken, not rotten,
unspoiled by wind and heat, capable of sprouting,
happily planted,
and the sky-god supplies a constant rain, - would those seeds come to growth,
increase,
abundance?"

"Surely they would, lord."

"Well, just so, Mahānāma, here the Norm is rightly preached, well expounded,
it leads to profit,
it conduces to tranquillity, it is expounded by a Fully Enlightened One.

I declare it to be like unto a good field.

The disciple who lives according to this Norm, who walks in accordance therewith,
who walks obedient thereto,
who practises its precepts, - such I declare to be the good seed.

Much more then do I declare that Sarakanithe Sakyan is such an one.

Mahānāma, Sarakani the Sakyan at the time of his death was one who fulfilled the training to perfection."

---

[1] Text, 285, etc.

[2] Cf. the simile at S. iii, 54 (K.S. iii, 46).

[3] Text has -hatam for hatāni.

[4] I read sāradāni for text's sārāni, according to Sinh. MSS. [as at S. ii, loc. cit., where see note].

[5] Comy. 'ill and irregularly set and wrongly cultivated.'

[6] Sammādhāraṇ, not as in Dict., a 'heavy' shower.

[ed1] PTS Pali and the Woodward translation have this still in the positive which does not make sense. CSCD and Bhk. Bodhi have this correctly in the negative: na ca vimuttiyā 'has not attained liberation'.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
3. Saraṇāni (or Sarakāni) Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

3. Sarakāni

Sutta 26

Paṭhama Dussilya or Anāthapiṇḍika Suttaṃ

Immoral or Anāthapiṇḍika (a)

---

[329]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now at that time the housefather Anāthapiṇḍika was sick,
afflicted,
suffering from a sore disease.

Then the housefather Anāthapiṇḍika called to a certain man, saying:

"Come hither, good fellow!

Go you to the venerable Sāriputta,
and on coming to him
worship in my name
with your head at the feet of the venerable Sāriputta
and say:

'Sir, the housefather Anāthapiṇḍika is sick,
afflicted,
suffering from a sore disease.'

Then say:

'It were well, sir,
if the venerable Sāriputta would come to the house of the housefather Anāthapiṇḍika,
out of compassion for him.'"

"Very well, master,"
replied that man.

Then he went to see the venerable Sāriputta
on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and compliments sat down at one side.[ed1]

Seated at one side he said this to the venerable Sāriputta:

"Sir, the housefather Anāthapiṇḍika is sick,
afflicted,
suffering from a sore disease.

He says:

'It were well, sir,
if the venerable Sāriputta would come to the house of the housefather

Anāthapiṇḍika,
out of compassion for him.'"

And the venerable Sāriputta consented by silence.

So the venerable Sāriputta,
robing himself in the forenoon
and taking bowl and outer robe,
set off for the dwelling of the housefather Anāthapiṇḍika, with the venerable Ānanda following behind, and on reaching it
sat down on a seat made [330] ready.

Having sat down
he said this to the housefather Anāthapiṇḍika:

"Well, housefather!

Are you bearing up?

Are you enduring?

Do your pains abate
and not increase?

Is there any sign of their abating
and not increasing?"

"No. sir, I am not enduring.

I am not bearing up.

Strong pains come upon me.

They do not abate.

There is no sign of their abating
but of their increasing."

"Well, housefather!

You have no such disloyalty to the Buddha
as the uneducated many folk possess,
who on the break up of body,
after death are reborn in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
in Hell,
but you have unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

If you were to bethink you
of your unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
in a moment[1]
your pains would be allayed.

■

Housefather, you have no such disloyalty to the Norm
as the uneducated manyfolk possess,
who on the break up of body,
after death are reborn in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,

the Downfall,
in Hell,
but you have unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

If you were to bethink you
of your unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
in a moment
your pains would be allayed.

■

Housefather, you have no such disloyalty to the Order
as the uneducated manyfolk possess,
who on the break up of body,
after death are reborn in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
in Hell,
but you have unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:

namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

If you were to bethink you
of your unwavering loyalty to the Order,
in a moment
your pains would be allayed.

■

You, housefather, are not possessed of immorality such as the uneducated manyfolk possess,
who on the break up of body,
after death are reborn in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
in Hell,
but in you are the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.

If you were to bethink you
of those virtues which are in you,
in a moment
your pains would be allayed.

§

[331] You, housefather, have not wrong view
such as the uneducated manyfolk possess,
who on the break up of body,
after death are reborn in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
in Hell,
but you have right view.

If you were to bethink you
of your right view,
in a moment
your pains would be allayed.

■

You, housefather, have not wrong aim
such as the uneducated manyfolk possess,
who on the break up of body,
after death are reborn in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
in Hell,
but you have right aim.

If you were to bethink you
of your right aim,
in a moment
your pains would be allayed.

■

You, housefather, have not wrong speech
such as the uneducated manyfolk possess,
who on the break up of body,
after death are reborn in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
in Hell,
but you have right speech.

If you were to bethink you
of your right speech,
in a moment
your pains would be allayed.

■

You, housefather, have not wrong action
such as the uneducated manyfolk possess,
who on the break up of body,
after death are reborn in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
in Hell,
but you have right action.

If you were to bethink you
of your right action,
in a moment
your pains would be allayed.

■

You, housefather, have not wrong way of living
such as the uneducated manyfolk possess,
who on the break up of body,
after death are reborn in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
in Hell,
but you have right way of living.

If you were to bethink you
of your right way of living,
in a moment
your pains would be allayed.

■

You, housefather, have not wrong effort
such as the uneducated manyfolk possess,
who on the break up of body,
after death are reborn in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
in Hell,
but you have right effort.

If you were to bethink you
of your right effort,
in a moment
your pains would be allayed.

■

You, housefather, have not wrong mindfulness
such as the uneducated manyfolk possess,
who on the break up of body,

after death are reborn in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
in Hell,
but you have right mindfulness.

If you were to bethink you
of your right mindfulness,
in a moment
your pains would be allayed.

■

You, housefather, have not wrong concentration
such as the uneducated manyfolk possess,
who on the break up of body,
after death are reborn in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
in Hell,
but you have right concentration.

If you were to bethink you
of your right concentration,
in a moment
your pains would be allayed.

§

You, housefather, have not wrong knowledge
such as the uneducated manyfolk possess,
who on the break up of body,
after death are reborn in the Waste,

the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
in Hell,
but you have right knowledge.

If you were to bethink you
of your right knowledge,
in a moment
your pains would be allayed.

■

You, housefather, have not wrong release
such as the uneducated manyfolk possess,
who on the break up of body,
after death are reborn in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
in Hell,
but you have right release.

If you were to bethink you
of your right release,
in a moment
your pains would be allayed."

§

Thereat
in a moment
the pains of the housefather Anāthapiṇḍika were allayed.

So the housefather Anāthapiṇḍika served the venerable Sāriputta and Ānanda [with a meal]
from his own cooking-pot.

And when the venerable Sāriputta had eaten his fill and withdrawn his hand from his bowl, the housefather Anāthapiṇḍika went to him, took a low seat
and sat down at one side.

As he thus sat,
the venerable Sāriputta thanked the housefather Anāthapiṇḍika with these verses:[2]|| ||

"Whoso hath faith in the Tathāgata
Unwavering and fixed, whose life is good,
Praised by the Ariyans and dear to them;
Whoso is likewise loyal to the Order,
And looks straight forth - 'he is not poor' they say,
'Not lived in vain the life of such a man.'
Wherefore the wise should cultivate (these three)
Faith, virtue and clear-seeing of the Norm, Bearing the Buddha's message in his mind."

Now when the venerable Sāriputta had thanked the housefather Anāthapiṇḍika with these verses, he rose up from his seat and went away.

§

Then the venerable Ānanda went to see the Exalted One, [332]
and on coming to him saluted him
and sat down at one side.

So seated, the Exalted One said this to the venerable Ānanda:

"Why, Ānanda,
how is it that you come here at this hour?"[3]

"Lord,[ed2] the housefather Anāthapiṇḍika was sick,
afflicted,
suffering from a sore disease.

Then the housefather Anāthapiṇḍika called to a certain man, saying:

'Come hither, good fellow!

Go you to the venerable Sāriputta,
and on coming to him
worship in my name
with your head at the feet of the venerable Sāriputta
and say:

"Sir, the housefather Anāthapiṇḍika is sick,
afflicted,
suffering from a sore disease."

Then say:

"It were well, sir,
if the venerable Sāriputta would come to the house of the housefather Anāthapiṇḍika,
out of compassion for him."'

'Very well, master,'
replied that man.

Then he went to see the venerable Sāriputta
on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and compliments
sat down at one side.

Seated at one side he said this to the venerable Sāriputta:

'Sir, the housefather Anāthapiṇḍika is sick,
afflicted,
suffering from a sore disease.'

He says:

"It were well, sir,
if the venerable Sāriputta would come to the house of the housefather Anāthapiṇḍika,
out of compassion for him."'

And the venerable Sāriputta consented by silence.

So the venerable Sāriputta,
robing himself in the forenoon
and taking bowl and outer robe,
set off for the dwelling of the housefather Anāthapiṇḍika,
and I followed behind,
and on reaching it
sat down on a seat made ready.

Having sat down
he said this to the housefather Anāthapiṇḍika:

'Well, housefather!

Are you bearing up?

Are you enduring?

Do your pains abate
and not increase?

Is there any sign of their abating
and not increasing?'

'No. sir, I am not enduring.

I am not bearing up.

Strong pains come upon me.

They do not abate.

There is no sign of their abating
but of their increasing.'

'Well, housefather!

You have no such disloyalty to the Buddha
as the uneducated many folk possess,
who on the break up of body,
after death are reborn in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
in Hell,
but you have unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,

teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

If you were to bethink you
of your unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
in a moment
your pains would be allayed.

■

Housefather, you have no such disloyalty to the Norm
as the uneducated manyfolk possess,
who on the break up of body,
after death are reborn in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
in Hell,
but you have unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

If you were to bethink you
of your unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
in a moment
your pains would be allayed.

■

Housefather, you have no such disloyalty to the Order
as the uneducated manyfolk possess,
who on the break up of body,
after death are reborn in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
in Hell,
but you have unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

If you were to bethink you
of your unwavering loyalty to the Order,
in a moment
your pains would be allayed.

■

You, housefather, are not possessed of immorality such as the uneducated manyfolk possess,
who on the break up of body,

after death are reborn in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
in Hell,
but in you are the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.

If you were to bethink you
of those virtues which are in you,
in a moment
your pains would be allayed.

§

You, housefather, have not wrong view
such as the uneducated manyfolk possess,
who on the break up of body,
after death are reborn in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
in Hell,
but you have right view.

If you were to bethink you
of your right view,

in a moment
your pains would be allayed.

■

You, housefather, have not wrong aim
such as the uneducated manyfolk possess,
who on the break up of body,
after death are reborn in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
in Hell,
but you have right aim.

If you were to bethink you
of your right aim,
in a moment
your pains would be allayed.

■

You, housefather, have not wrong speech
such as the uneducated manyfolk possess,
who on the break up of body,
after death are reborn in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
in Hell,
but you have right speech.

If you were to bethink you
of your right speech,
in a moment
your pains would be allayed.

■

You, housefather, have not wrong action
such as the uneducated manyfolk possess,
who on the break up of body,
after death are reborn in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
in Hell,
but you have right action.

If you were to bethink you
of your right action,
in a moment
your pains would be allayed.

■

You, housefather, have not wrong way of living
such as the uneducated manyfolk possess,
who on the break up of body,
after death are reborn in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
in Hell,
but you have right way of living.

If you were to bethink you
of your right way of living,
in a moment
your pains would be allayed.

■

You, housefather, have not wrong effort
such as the uneducated manyfolk possess,
who on the break up of body,
after death are reborn in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,

the Downfall,
in Hell,
but you have right effort.

If you were to bethink you
of your right effort,
in a moment
your pains would be allayed.

■

You, housefather, have not wrong mindfulness
such as the uneducated manyfolk possess,
who on the break up of body,
after death are reborn in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
in Hell,
but you have right mindfulness.

If you were to bethink you
of your right mindfulness,
in a moment
your pains would be allayed.

■

You, housefather, have not wrong concentration
such as the uneducated manyfolk possess,
who on the break up of body,
after death are reborn in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
in Hell,
but you have right concentration.

If you were to bethink you
of your right concentration,
in a moment
your pains would be allayed.

§

You, housefather, have not wrong knowledge
such as the uneducated manyfolk possess,
who on the break up of body,
after death are reborn in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
in Hell,
but you have right knowledge.

If you were to bethink you
of your right knowledge,
in a moment
your pains would be allayed.

■

You, housefather, have not wrong release
such as the uneducated manyfolk possess,
who on the break up of body,
after death are reborn in the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall,
in Hell,
but you have right release.

If you were to bethink you
of your right release,
in a moment
your pains would be allayed.'

§

Thereat
in a moment
the pains of the housefather Anāthapiṇḍika were allayed."

"Sāriputta is a sage, Ānanda.

Sāriputta is of great wisdom, Ānanda, as indeed he must be who can divide up the four limbs of stream-winning in ten ways."[4]

---

[1] Ṭhānaso = khaṇen'eva. Comy.

[2] The verses occur at S. i, 232; A. ii, 57, iii, 54; infra, text, 405.

[3] Divādivassa. It would now be about midday. But visits were to be made in the afternoon. Cf. however Jāt. No. 151.

[4] Das'ākārehi Here the four limbs are supported by the ten points (the eightfold way, with knowledge and release).

---

ed1 That's what it says, but in other cases of this sort it is usually: "Say to him: 'So-and-so bows with his head at the feet of and say ~'". And this would be repeated by the messinger. Sometimes the messinger is to bow at the feet as here, and then he does so. Here either the messinger or the repeater is lax. In those days, depending on the person to whom the message was being delivered, it could mean the loss of one's head (or worse, exceedingly cruel tortures) to make a mistake like this.

ed2 The Pali, as Woodward notes, abridges by a summary which is unusual. I have expanded the story fully in the way it is normally done.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
3. Saraṇāni (or Sarakāni) Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

3. Sarakāni

Sutta 27

Dutiya Dussīlya or Anāthapiṇḍika Suttaṃ

Immoral or Anāthapiṇḍika (b) p.p. explains it all — p.p.

[1] Gihi-sāmīcikāni (sikkhāpadāni) = gihi-anucchavikāni. Comy.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
3. Saraṇāni (or Sarakāni) Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

3. Sarakāni

Sutta 28

Duvera or Tatiya Anāthapiṇḍika Suttaṃ

Guilty Dread or Anāthapiṇḍika (c)

---

[333]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the housefather Anāthapiṇḍika went to see the Exalted One,
and on coming to him
saluted him
and sat down at one side.

As he thus sat,
the Exalted One said this to the housefather Anāthapiṇḍika:

"Housefather, when the fivefold guilty dread[1]
is allayed in the Ariyan disciple
and he is possessed of the four limbs of stream-winning,
and has well seen and well penetrated
the Ariyan Method[2] by insight,
he, if he so desire,
may himself proclaim thus of himself:

'I am one who has cut off the doom of Hell,
of rebirth in an animal's womb,
in the Realm of Ghosts;
cut off is the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall;
a Stream-winner am I,
one not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment!'

Now, housefather, what is the fivefold guilty dread that is allayed in him?

It is that guilty dread, housefather, which he who kills begets -
in this very life,
as a result of his killing;

it is that guilty dread [334]
about the future life,
which be who kills begets;

that feeling of painful dejection felt by him,
that guilty dread,
is allayed in him who abstains from killing.

■

That same guilty dread, housefather, which he who steals begets -
in this very life,
as a result of his stealing;

it is that guilty dread
about the future life,
which be who steals begets;

that feeling of painful dejection felt by him,
that guilty dread,
is allayed in him who abstains from stealing.

■

That same guilty dread, housefather, which he who is of wrong practice in sensual lust begets -
in this very life,
as a result of his wrong practice in sensual lust;

it is that guilty dread
about the future life,
which be who is of wrong practice in sensual lust begets;

that feeling of painful dejection felt by him,
that guilty dread,
is allayed in him who abstains from wrong practice in sensual lust.

■

That same guilty dread, housefather, which he who speaks falsehood begets -
in this very life,
as a result of his false speech;

it is that guilty dread
about the future life,
which be who speaks falsehood begets;

that feeling of painful dejection felt by him,
that guilty dread,
is allayed in him who abstains from false speech.

■

That same guilty dread, housefather, which he who is addicted to the negligence caused by liquor and intoxicants begets -
in this very life,
as a result of his addiction to the negligence caused by liquor and intoxicants;

it is that guilty dread
about the future life,
which be who is addicted to the negligence caused by liquor and intoxicants begets;

that feeling of painful dejection felt by him,
that guilty dread,
is allayed in him who abstains from addiction to the negligence caused by liquor and intoxicants.

This, housefather, is the guilty dread that is allayed in him.

§

And with what four limbs of stream-winning is he blessed?

Herein, housefather, an Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

■

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

■

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

■

He is blessed
with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.'

These are the four limbs of stream-winning with which he is blessed.

§

And what, housefather, is the Ariyan Method which he has well seen
and well penetrated by insight?

Herein, housefather, the Ariyan disciple well and thoroughly attends to the arising-by-way-of-cause,
thus:

This being,
that is.

By the arising of this,
that arises.

This not being,
that is not.

By the ceasing of this,
that ceases.

Thus conditioned by ignorance, activities come to pass.[3]

Conditioned by the activities,
consciousness:
conditioned by consciousness,
name-and-shape:
conditioned by name-and-shape,
sense:
conditioned by sense,
contact:
conditioned by contact,

feeling:
conditioned by feeling,
craving:
conditioned by craving,
grasping:
conditioned by grasping,
becoming:
conditioned by becoming,
birth:
conditioned by birth,
old age and death,
grief,
lamentation,
suffering,
sorrow and despair
come to pass.

Such is the arising of this whole mass of ill.

But from the utter fading and ceasing of ignorance comes the ceasing of activities:
from ceasing of activities,
ceasing of consciousness:
from ceasing of consciousness,
ceasing of name- [335] and-shape:
from ceasing of name-and-shape,
ceasing of sense:
from ceasing of sense,
ceasing of contact:
from ceasing of contact,
ceasing of feeling:
from ceasing of feeling,
ceasing of craving:
from ceasing of craving,
ceasing of grasping:
from ceasing of grasping,

ceasing of becoming:
from ceasing of becoming,
ceasing of birth:
from ceasing of birth,
ceasing of old age and death,
grief,
lamentation,
suffering,
sorrow and despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this whole mass of ill.

This is the Ariyan Method which he has well seen and wrell penetrated.

Now, housefather, since in the Ariyan disciple this fivefold guilty dread is allayed, since he is blessed with these four limbs of stream-winning,
and has well seen
and well penetrated
this Ariyan Method,
he, if he so desire,
may himself proclaim of himself thus:

'I am one who has cut off the doom of Hell,
of rebirth in the womb of an animal,
in the Realm of Ghosts,
the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall.

Stream-winner am I,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment!'"

---

[1] Cf. S. ii, 68; iv, 343; [Ed.: but ?] Vibh. 378.

[2] Ñāya. Cf. Dialog. ii, 327 n.

[3] Cf. K.S. ii, 2 ff.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
3. Saraṇāni (or Sarakāni) Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

3. Sarakāni

Sutta 29

Bhaya or Bhikkhu Suttaṃ

Fear or The Monk

---

[335]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then a number of monks came to see the Exalted One,
and on coming to him
saluted him
and sat down at one side.

As they thus sat,
the Exalted One said this
to them:

"Monks, when the fivefold guilty dread is allayed in the Ariyan disciple
and he is possessed of the four limbs of stream-winning,
and has well seen and well penetrated
the Ariyan Method by insight,
he, if he so desire,
may himself proclaim thus of himself:

'I am one who has cut off the doom of Hell,
of rebirth in an animal's womb,
in the Realm of Ghosts;
cut off is the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall;
a Stream-winner am I,
one not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment!'

Now, housefather, what is the fivefold guilty dread
that is allayed in him?

It is that guilty dread, housefather,
which he who kills begets -
in this very life,
as a result of his killing;

it is that guilty dread
about the future life,
which be who kills begets;

that feeling of painful dejection felt by him,
that guilty dread,

is allayed in him who abstains from killing.

■

That same guilty dread, housefather,
which he who steals begets -
in this very life,
as a result of his stealing;

it is that guilty dread
about the future life,
which be who steals begets;

that feeling of painful dejection felt by him,
that guilty dread,
is allayed in him who abstains from stealing.

■

That same guilty dread, housefather,
which he who is of wrong practice in sensual lust begets -
in this very life,
as a result of his wrong practice in sensual lust;

it is that guilty dread
about the future life,
which be who is of wrong practice in sensual lust begets;

that feeling of painful dejection felt by him,
that guilty dread,
is allayed in him who abstains from wrong practice in sensual lust.

■

That same guilty dread, housefather,
which he who speaks falsehood begets -

in this very life,
as a result of his false speech;

it is that guilty dread
about the future life,
which be who speaks falsehood begets;

that feeling of painful dejection felt by him,
that guilty dread,
is allayed in him who abstains from false speech.

■

That same guilty dread, housefather,
which he who is addicted to the negligence caused by liquor and intoxicants begets -
in this very life,
as a result of his addiction to the negligence caused by liquor and intoxicants;

it is that guilty dread
about the future life,
which be who is addicted to the negligence caused by liquor and intoxicants begets;

that feeling of painful dejection felt by him,
that guilty dread,
is allayed in him who abstains from addiction to the negligence caused by liquor and intoxicants.

This, monks, is the guilty dread that is allayed in him.

§

And with what four limbs of stream-winning is he blessed?

Herein, monks, an Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

■

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

■

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Order,

thus:

Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

■

He is blessed
with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.'

These are the four limbs of stream-winning with which he is blessed.

§

And what, housefather, is the Ariyan Method
which he has well seen
and well penetrated by insight?

Herein, housefather, the Ariyan disciple
well and thoroughly attends
to the arising-by-way-of-cause,
thus:

This being,
that is.

By the arising of this,
that arises.

This not being,
that is not.

By the ceasing of this,
that ceases.

Thus conditioned by ignorance,
activities come to pass.

Conditioned by the activities,
consciousness:
conditioned by consciousness,
name-and-shape:
conditioned by name-and-shape,
sense:
conditioned by sense,
contact:
conditioned by contact,
feeling:
conditioned by feeling,

craving:
conditioned by craving,
grasping:
conditioned by grasping,
becoming:
conditioned by becoming,
birth:
conditioned by birth,
old age and death,
grief,
lamentation,
suffering,
sorrow and despair
come to pass.

Such is the arising of this whole mass of ill.

But from the utter fading and ceasing of ignorance comes the ceasing of activities:
from ceasing of activities,
ceasing of consciousness:
from ceasing of consciousness,
ceasing of name-and-shape:
from ceasing of name-and-shape,
ceasing of sense:
from ceasing of sense,
ceasing of contact:
from ceasing of contact,
ceasing of feeling:
from ceasing of feeling,
ceasing of craving:
from ceasing of craving,
ceasing of grasping:
from ceasing of grasping,
ceasing of becoming:
from ceasing of becoming,

ceasing of birth:
from ceasing of birth,
ceasing of old age and death,
grief,
lamentation,
suffering,
sorrow and despair cease.

Such is the ceasing of this whole mass of ill.

This is the Ariyan Method which he has well seen and wrell penetrated.

Now, housefather, since in the Ariyan disciple this fivefold guilty dread is allayed, since he is blessed with these four limbs of stream-winning,
and has well seen
and well penetrated
this Ariyan Method,
he, if he so desire,
may himself proclaim of himself thus:

'I am one who has cut off the doom of Hell,
of rebirth in the womb of an animal,
in the Realm of Ghosts,
the Waste,
the Woeful Way,
the Downfall.

Stream-winner am I,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment!'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
3. Saraṇāni (or Sarakāni) Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

3. Sarakāni

Sutta 30

Licchavi or Nandaka Suttaṃ

Lacchavī or Nandaka

---

[335]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Vesālī,
in Great Grove,
at the House of the Peaked Gable.

Then Nandaka, minister of the Licchavī,
came to see the Exalted One,
and on coming to him
saluted him
and sat down at one side.

As he thus sat,
the Exalted One said this to Nandaka:

"Nandaka, possessed of four things
the Ariyan disciple is a Stream-winner,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment.

What are the four?

Herein, Nandaka, an Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

■

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,

inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

■

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Order, [336] thus:

Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

■

He is blessed
with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,

praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.

Blessed with these four things the Ariyan disciple is also blessed with long life, both heavenly and human,
blessed with beauty,
blessed with happiness,
blessed with good name,
and blessed with sovereignty,
both heavenly and human.[1]

This, Nandaka, I know, not from hearsay of any recluse or brahmin, but I have ascertained it for myself, seen it for myself,
understood it for myself, and so do I tell it you."

Just then someone came up to Nandaka, the minister of the Licchavī, and said to him:

"It is time for your bath, my lord."

"Enough of that, good fellow!" said Nandaka.

"Enough of this outward washing!

This inner washing shall be enough for me,
to wit:
this loyalty to the Exalted One."

[1] Cf. Dhp. 109 (ayu, vaṇṇa, sukhaṇ, balaṇ). Here and at S. iv, 275, we should read ādhipateyya for adhi-.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
4. Puññ-ā-bhisanda Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

4. Flood of Merit

Sutta 31

Abhisanda Suttaṃ

Flood[1] (a)

---

[336]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four floods of merit,
floods of good things,
that bring happiness.

What are the four?

Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple has unwavering loyalty to the Buddha thus:

'He it is, the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpsassed charioteer of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

This is the first flood of merit,
of good things,
bringing happiness.

Again, monks, he has unwavering loyalty to the Norm, thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves by the wise.'

This is the second flood of merit,
of good things,

bringing happiness.

Again, monks, he has unwavering loyalty to the Order, thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

This is the third flood of merit,
of good things,
bringing happiness.

Lastly, monks, the Ariyan disciple possesses the virtues dear to the Ariyans, virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.

This is the fourth flood of merit,
of good things,

bringing happiness.

[337] These, monks, are the four floods of merit, floods of good things, that bring happiness."

---

[1] Abhisanda. Cf. A. ii, 54. [AN 4.51] Comy. puñña-nadiyo.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
4. Puññ-ā-bhisanda Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

4. Flood of Merit

Sutta 32

Dutiya Abhisanda Suttaṃ

Flood (b)

---

[337]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four floods of merit,
floods of good things,
that bring happiness.

What are the four?

Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple has unwavering loyalty to the Buddha thus:

'He it is, the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpsassed charioteer of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

This is the first flood of merit,
of good things,
bringing happiness.

Again, monks, he has unwavering loyalty to the Norm, thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves by the wise.'

This is the second flood of merit,
of good things,
bringing happiness.

Again, monks, he has unwavering loyalty to the Order, thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

This is the third flood of merit,
of good things,
bringing happiness.

Then again, monks, the Ariyan disciple lives at home with heart free from the taint of stinginess.[1]

He is open-handed,
pure-handed,
delighting in self-surrender,
one to ask a favour of,
delighting to share charitable gifts.

This is the fourth flood of merit,
of good things,
bringing happiness.

These, monks, are the four floods of merit,
floods of good things,
that bring happiness."

---

[1] Cf. text, 351

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
4. Puññ-ā-bhisanda Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

4. Flood of Merit

Sutta 33

Tatiya Abhisanda Suttaṃ

Flood (c)

---

[337]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four floods of merit,
floods of good things,
that bring happiness.

What are the four?

Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple has unwavering loyalty to the Buddha thus:

'He it is, the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpsassed charioteer of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

This is the first flood of merit,
of good things,
bringing happiness.

Again, monks, he has unwavering loyalty to the Norm, thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves by the wise.'

This is the second flood of merit,
of good things,
bringing happiness.

Again, monks, he has unwavering loyalty to the Order, thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

This is the third flood of merit,
of good things,
bringing happiness.

Then again he is a sage,
possessed of insight into the rise and fall of things,
insight which is Ariyan,
penetrating,
going on to the utter destruction of ill.[1]

This is the fourth flood of merit,
of good things,
bringing happiness.

These, monks, are the four floods of merit,
floods of good things,
that bring happiness."

[1] Cf. text, 197.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
4. Puññ-ā-bhisanda Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

4. Flood of Merit

Sutta 34

Paṭhama Devapada Suttaṃ

The Path to the Devas (a)

---

[337]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four deva-paths to the Devas,[1]
for the purification of impure beings, for the cleansing of foul beings.

What four?

Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple has unwavering loyalty to the Buddha thus:

'He it is, the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpsassed charioteer of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

This is the first deva-path to the Devas,
for the purification of impure beings,
for the cleansing of foul beings.

Again, monks, he has unwavering loyalty to the Norm, thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves by the wise.'

This is the second deva-path to the Devas,
for the purification of impure beings,
for the cleansing of foul beings.

Again, monks, he has unwavering loyalty to the Order, thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

This is the third deva-path to the Devas,
for the purification of impure beings,
for the cleansing of foul beings.

Then again, monks, the Ariyan disciple blessed
with [338] the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.

This is the fourth deva-path to the Devas,
for the purification of impure beings,
for the cleansing of foul beings.

These, monks, are the four deva-paths to the Devas,
for the purification of impure beings,
for the cleansing of foul beings."

---

[1] Devapadaṇ (explained in next Sutta), either 'path to heaven' or 'path trodden by heaven-farers.' Here Comy. devānaṇ ñāṇena, deve vā ñāṇena akkantapadāni, adding 'persons who have these four fruits are reborn as devatā.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
4. Puññ-ā-bhisanda Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

4. Flood of Merit

Sutta 35

Dutiya Devapada Suttaṃ

The Path to the Devas (b)

---

[338]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four deva-paths to the Devas,
for the purification of impure beings,
for the cleansing of foul beings.

What four?

Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple has unwavering loyalty to the Buddha thus:

'He it is, the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpsassed charioteer of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

This is the first deva-path to the Devas,
for the purification of impure beings,
for the cleansing of foul beings.

Again, monks, he has unwavering loyalty to the Norm, thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves by the wise.

This is the second deva-path to the Devas,
for the purification of impure beings,
for the cleansing of foul beings.'

Again, monks, he has unwavering loyalty to the Order, thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

This is the third deva-path to the Devas,
for the purification of impure beings,
for the cleansing of foul beings.

Then again, monks, the Ariyan disciple blessed
with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.

[He thus reflects:

"What then is this deva-path to the devas?"

He understands thus:

"I have heard that non-malevolence is at present the held by devas to be most excellent, and then abandoned by me is malevolence towards, weak or sturdy.

Surely I live the deva-path Dhamma.][ed1]

This is the fourth deva-path to the Devas,
for the purification of impure beings,
for the cleansing of foul beings.

These, monks, are the four deva-paths to the Devas,
for the purification of impure beings,
for the cleansing of foul beings."

[ed1] Woodward has omitted this paragraph. I have done a rough translation a hybrid Woodward/Olds/Bhk. Bodhi thing. Bhk. Bodhi has: "He reflects thus: 'What now is the divine track of the devas?' He understnds thus: 'I have heard that at present the devas hold non-oppression as supreme, and I do not oppress anyone, frail or firm. Surely I dwell possessing one of the divine tracks'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
4. Puññ-ā-bhisanda Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

4. Flood of Merit

Sutta 36

Sabhāgata Suttaṃ

Joined the Company[1ed1]

---

[338]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, the devas are glad to talk to one who is blessed with four things.

What four?

Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha
thus:

'He it is, the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpsassed charioteer of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

Now those devas[2] who,
being likewise blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha, have deceased here
and risen up there,
think thus:

'The Ariyan disciple is blessed with just the same unwavering loyalty to the Buddha as ourselves, who deceased there
and rose up here.'

So they say to him:

'Come hither[ed1] into the company of the devas.'

■

Again, monks, the Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Norm
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves by the wise.'

Now those devas who,
being likewise blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
have deceased here
and risen up there,
think thus:

'The Ariyan disciple is blessed with just the same unwavering loyalty to the Norm as ourselves, who deceased there
and rose up here.'

So they say to him:

'Come hither into the company of the devas.'

■

Again, monks, the Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Order
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,

walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

Those devas who,
being likewise blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
have deceased here
and risen up there,
think thus:

'The Ariyan disciple is blessed with just the same unwavering loyalty to the Order as ourselves, who deceased there
and rose up here.'

So they say to him:

'Come hither into the company of the devas.'

■

Then one is blessed with the virtues dear to the Ariyans, virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,

praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.'

Those devas who,
being likewise blessed the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
have deceased here
and risen up there,
think thus:

'The Ariyan disciple is blessed with just the same virtues dear to the Ariyans, as ourselves, who deceased there
and rose up here.'

So they say to him:

'Come hither into the company of the devas.'

"Monks, the devas are glad to talk to one who is blessed with these four things."

---

[1] Sabhāgataṇ (like parisa-gato, and explebo numerum of Virgil, Aen. vi, 545; and deva-nasgaraṇ or deva-puraṇ or sagga-padaṇ puresi).

[2] Devatā, here one who has died and gone to Devaloka.

[ed1] Bhk. Bodhi notes: Woodward understands sabhāgataṃ to be resolvable into sabhā + gataṃ, "joined the company," but it is actually the accusative singular of the abstract noun sabhāgatā, "similarity." He also notes regarding the concluding sentences: Be and Ee have ehi ti, presumably understood as an imperative, while Se has etīti, which seems hard to explain. I suggest reading the singular future ehiti and he constructs this sutta thus: "... When the noble disciple possesses four things, the devas are elated and speak of his similarity [to themselves]. ...'As the noble disciple possesses the same confirmed confidence in the Buddha ~ that we possessed when we passed away there and were reborn here, he will come into the presence of the devas.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
4. Puññ-ā-bhisanda Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

4. Flood of Merit

Sutta 37

Mahānāma Suttaṃ

Mahānāma

---

[338]

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Kapilavatthu, in Banyan Park.

Now Mahanama the Sakyan went to see the Exalted One
on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and compliments
sat down at one side.

Seated at one side
he said to the Exalted One:

"Pray, lord, how far is one a disciple?"

[339] "By going for refuge to the Buddha, Mahanama, to the Norm
and to the Order,
one is a disciple."

"But, lord, how far is a disciple virtuous?"

"From the time when a disciple abstains from killing,
abstains from stealing, abstains from wrong conduct in sensual lusts, abstains from falsehood abstains from addiction to the neglect caused by intoxicants, - thus far, Mahanama, a disciple is virtuous."

"But, lord, how far is a disciple a believer?"

"Herein, Mahanama, a disciple believes in the wisdom of the Tathāgata,
thus:

'He it is, the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpsassed charioteer of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

Thus far, Mahanama, a disciple is a believer."

"But, lord, how far is a disciple given to generosity?"

"Herein, Mahanama, a disciple dwells at home with a heart freed from the taint of stinginess.

He is open-handed,
pure-banded,
delighting in self-surrender,
one to ask a favour of,
one who rejoices in the dispensing of charitable gifts.

Thus far, Mahanama, a disciple is given to generosity."

"Pray, lord, how far is a disciple blessed with insight?"

"Herein, Mahanama, a disciple is a sage, blessed with insight into the rise and fall of things, insight which is Ariyan,
penetrating,
going on to the utter destruction of ill.

Thus far, Mahanama, a disciple is possessed of insight."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
4. Puññ-ā-bhisanda Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

4. Flood of Merit

Sutta 38

Vassa Suttaṃ

Raining

---

[339]

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Just as, monks, when on the mountain-top the sky-god rains down big drops, that water flows down and in its course

floods the mountam-gullies, clefts
and spurs,
and, flooding these,
fills up the little pools:
then the big pools, filling,
flood the great lakes:
the great lakes, filling,
flood the rivulets:
the rivulets, filling,
flood the great rivers:
the great rivers, being flooded, fill up the mighty ocean, - even so in the Ariyan disciple who has unwavering loyalty to the Buddha, the Norm
and the Order,
and has the virtues dear to the Ariyans, these conditions flow onwards and reach the further shore and lead to the destruction of the āsavas."[1]

---

[1] Comy. points out that here the order of words is deceptive. They conduce to the destruction of the āsavas on their way to Nibbāna (pāraṃ).

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
4. Puññ-ā-bhisanda Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

4. Flood of Merit

Sutta 39

Kāḷigodhā Suttaṃ

Kāḷi

---

[340]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Kapilavatthu, in Banyan Park.

Now the Exalted One, robing bimself in the forenoon
and taking bowl and outer robe, started off to the house of Kāḷigodhā,[1] the Sakyan lady, and on arriving
sat down on a seat made ready.

Then Kāḷigodhā, the Sakyan lady, came to the Exalted One and saluting him
sat down at one side.

As she thus sat
the Exalted One said this to her:

"Godhā, the Ariyan woman disciple
who is blessed with four things
is a Streamwinner,
one not doomed to the Downfall,
one assured,
one bound for enlightenment.

What are the four?

Herein, Godhā, the Ariyan woman disciple has unwavering loyalty to the Buddha, thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted one.'

Herein, Godhā, the Ariyan woman disciple has unwavering loyalty to the the Norm, thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,

inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves by the wise.'

Herein, Godhā, the Ariyan woman disciple has unwavering loyalty to the Order, thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted one's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, —
a field of merit unsrupassed for the world.'

She dwells at home
with heart free from the taint of stinginess.

She is open-handed,
pure-handed,
delighting in self-surrender,
one to ask a favour of,
one who delights
in dispensing charitable gifts.

Blessed with these four things, Godhā, the Ariyan woman disciple
is a Stream-winner."

"Lord, as to these four limbs of stream-winning declared by the Exalted One, all of them are to be seen in me, and I do live according to those things.

I do have unwavering loyalty to the Buddha, thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted one.'

I do have unwavering loyalty to the Norm, thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves by the wise.'

I do have unwavering loyalty to the Order, thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted one's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, —
a field of merit unsrupassed for the world.'

Moreover, whatsoever gifts of charity are to be made in the family,
they are shared fully and impartially
by the virtuous and good."

"That is a gain for you, Godhā!

It is a thing well gotten for you, Godhā!

You have declared the fruits of stream-winning, Godha!"

---

[1] For this family, cf. text, 371; Brethren, p. 315 n.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
4. Puññ-ā-bhisanda Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

4. Flood of Merit

Sutta 40

Nandiya Suttaṃ

Nandiya

---

[340]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Kapilavatthu, in Banyan Park.

Then Nandiya the Sakyan went to see the Exalted One,
on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and compliments
sat down at one side.

Seated at one side he said to the Exalted One: -

"Pray, lord, if an Ariyan disciple is in every way,
altogether,
[341] in every respect
and utterly,
without the four limbs of stream-winning,
can he in such case be called 'An Ariyan disciple who lives remiss?'"

"Of such an one, Nandiya, who
in every way,
altogether,
in every respect
and utterly,
without the four limbs of stream-winning,
I declare him to be one who stands without,
in the ranks of the manyfolk.

Moreover, Nandiya, I will tell you how the Ariyan disciple is one who lives remiss and one who lives in earnest.

Do you listen.

Apply your mind
and I will speak."

"I will, lord,"
replied Nandiya the Sakyan to the Exalted One.

§

The Exalted One said:

"And how, Nandiya, is the Ariyan disciple one who dwells remiss?

Herein, Nandiya, the Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He is content with that unwavering loyalty to the Buddha, but he makes no further effort,
either to get seclusion by day
or meditation by night.

As he thus dwells remiss
he has no delight.

Without delight in a thing
there is no zest.

Zest lacking,
there is no calm.

Without calm
one dwells in discomfort.

In him who dwells in discomfort
the mind is not tranquillized.

In the mind that is not tranquillized
the teachings do not show clear.[1]

Owing to the teachings being obscure to him he is reckoned one who dwells remiss.

■

Again, Nandiya, suppose the Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

He is content with that unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
but he makes no further effort,
either to get seclusion by day
or meditation by night.

As he thus dwells remiss
he has no delight.

Without delight in a thing
there is no zest.

Zest lacking,
there is no calm.

Without calm
one dwells in discomfort.

In him who dwells in discomfort
the mind is not tranquillized.

In the mind that is not tranquillized
the teachings do not show clear.

Owing to the teachings being obscure to him
he is reckoned one who dwells remiss.

■

Again, Nandiya, suppose the Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

He is content with that unwavering loyalty to the Order, but he makes no further effort,

either to get seclusion by day
or meditation by night.

As he thus dwells remiss
he has no delight.

Without delight in a thing
there is no zest.

Zest lacking,
there is no calm.

Without calm
one dwells in discomfort.

In him who dwells in discomfort
the mind is not tranquillized.

In the mind that is not tranquillized
the teachings do not show clear.

Owing to the teachings being obscure to him
he is reckoned one who dwells remiss.

■

Again, Nandiya, he is blessed
with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.

He is content with that virtues dear to the Ariyans,
but he makes no further effort,
either to get seclusion by day
or meditation by night.

As he thus dwells remiss
he has no delight.

Without delight in a thing
there is no zest.

Zest lacking,
there is no calm.

Without calm
one dwells in discomfort.

In him who dwells in discomfort
the mind is not tranquillized.

In the mind that is not tranquillized
the teachings do not show clear.

Owing to the teachings being obscure to him
he is reckoned one who dwells remiss.

§

[342] And bow, Nandiya, does the Ariyan disciple dwell in earnest?

Herein, Nandiya, the Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He is not content with that unwavering loyalty to the Buddha, he makes a further effort,
to get seclusion by day
and meditation by night.

As he thus dwells in earnest delight springs up.

In him that is delighted in a thing zest is born.

The body of the zestful man
is tranquillized.

One whose body is tranquil lives at ease.

In him who lives at ease,
the mind is concentrated.

To the concentrated mind,
the teachings show clear.

Owing to the teachings being clear
he is reckoned one who dwells in earnest.

■

Again, Nandiya, suppose the Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

He is not content with that unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
he makes a further effort,
to get seclusion by day
and meditation by night.

As he thus dwells in earnest
delight springs up.

In him that is delighted in a thing
zest is born.

The body of the zestful man
is tranquillized.

One whose body is tranquil
lives at ease.

In him who lives at ease,
the mind is concentrated.

To the concentrated mind,
the teachings show clear.

Owing to the teachings being clear
he is reckoned one who dwells in earnest.

■

Again, Nandiya, suppose the Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

He is not content with that unwavering loyalty to the Order,
he makes a further effort,
to get seclusion by day
and meditation by night.

As he thus dwells in earnest
delight springs up.

In him that is delighted in a thing
zest is born.

The body of the zestful man
is tranquillized.

One whose body is tranquil
lives at ease.

In him who lives at ease,
the mind is concentrated.

To the concentrated mind,
the teachings show clear.

Owing to the teachings being clear
he is reckoned one who dwells in earnest.

■

Again, Nandiya, he is blessed
with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.

He is not content with that virtues dear to the Ariyans,
he makes a further effort,
to get seclusion by day
and meditation by night.

As he thus dwells in earnest
delight springs up.

In him that is delighted in a thing
zest is born.

The body of the zestful man
is tranquillized.

One whose body is tranquil
lives at ease.

In him who lives at ease,
the mind is concentrated.

To the concentrated mind,
the teachings show clear.

Owing to the teachings being clear
he is reckoned one who dwells in earnest."

---

[1] Comy. 'by way of vipassana.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
5. Sagātha-Puññā-Bhisanda Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

5. Flood of Merit with Verses

Sutta 41

Paṭhama Abhisanda or Sayhaka or Asaṇkheyya Suttaṃ

Flood or Capacious[1] (a)

---

[342]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four floods of merit,
floods of good things,
that bring happiness.

What are the four?

Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

That is the first flood of merit.

■

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,

to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

That is the second flood of merit.

■

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

That is the third flood of merit.

■

He is blessed
with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,

untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.

That is the fourth flood of merit.

These are the four floods.

§

[343] Now it is no easy thing to reckon up the measure of merit that accrues to the Ariyan disciple
who is blessed with these four floods of merit, these four floods of good things,
that bring happiness.

One cannot say they are thus and thus in quantity.

Nay, they are only to be described in terms like
'incalculable,
boundless.'

Just as, monks, it is no easy thing to reckon the water in the mighty ocean thus:

'There are so many gallons of water,
so many hundred,
so many thousand,
so many hundreds of thousand gallons of water in it.'

Nay, one can only say of it:

'It is a mighty mass of water,
incalculable
and boundless.'

Just so, monks,
it is no easy thing to reckon up
the measure of merit
that accrues to the Ariyan disciple
who is blessed with these four floods of merit,
these four floods of good things,
that bring happiness.

One cannot say they are thus and thus.

Nay, they are only to be described in terms like
'incalculable,
boundless.'"

Thus spake the Exalted One.

"The mighty sea, unmeasured mighty lake,
The fearsome home of multitudes of pearls, -
'As rivers, serving countless hosts of men,
Flow widely forth and to that ocean come:
Just so on him that giveth food, drink, clothes,
Who bed and seat and coverlet provides,
Torrents of merit flood that mortal wise,
As rivers, bearing water, reach the Main."[2]

[1] Sayhaka (sub-title of this Sutta, but not in uddana) seems to mean capax. Sayha is gerund of sahati. See stanzas below and text, 391.

[2] Cf. K.S. iv, 267.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
5. Sagātha-Puññā-Bhisanda Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

5. Flood of Merit with Verses

Sutta 42

Dutiya Abhisanda or Sahyaka or Asaṇkheyya Suttaṃ

Flood or Capacious (b)

---

[343]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four floods of merit,
floods of good things,

that bring happiness.

What are the four?

Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

That is the first flood of merit.

■

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

That is the second flood of merit.

■

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

That is the third flood of merit.

■

He dwells at home
with a heart free from the taint of stinginess:
he is open-handed,
pure-handed,
delighting in selfsurrender,
one to ask a favour of,
one who delights in dispensing charitable gifts.

That is the fourth flood of merit flood of good things,
that bring happiness.

[344] Now it is no easy thing
to reckon up the measure of merit
that accrues to the Ariyan disciple
who is blessed with these four floods of merit,
these four floods of good things,
that bring happiness.

One cannot say they are thus and thus in quantity.

Nay, they are only to be described in terms like
'incalculable,
boundless.'

Just as, monks, where[1] these great rivers flow together, meet together,
to wit:
Ganges
Yamunā
Aciravatī
Sarabhū
Mahī,
it is no easy task
to reckon the quantity of water there,
thus:

'There are so many gallons of water,
so many hundred,
so many thousand,
so many hundreds of thousand gallons of water in it.'

Nay, one can only say of it:

'It is a mighty mass of water,
incalculable
and boundless.'

Just so, monks,
it is no easy thing to reckon up
the measure of merit
that accrues to the Ariyan disciple
who is blessed with these four floods of merit,
these four floods of good things,
that bring happiness.

One cannot say they are thus and thus.

Nay, they are only to be described in terms like
'incalculable,
boundless.'"

Thus spake the Exalted One.

"The mighty sea, unmeasured mighty lake,
The fearsome home of multitudes of pearls, -
'As rivers, serving countless hosts of men,
Flow widely forth and to that ocean come:
Just so on him that giveth food, drink, clothes,
Who bed and seat and coverlet provides,
Torrents of merit flood that mortal wise,
As rivers, bearing water, reach the Main."

---

[1] Comy. reads yatthavā with v.l. of text.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
5. Sagātha-Puññā-Bhisanda Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

5. Flood of Merit with Verses

Sutta 43

Tatiya Abhisanda or Sayhaka or Asaṇkheyya Suttaṃ

Flood or Capacious (c)

---

[344]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four floods of merit,
floods of good things,

that bring happiness.

What are the four?

Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

That is the first flood of merit.

■

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

That is the second flood of merit.

■

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

That is the third flood of merit.

■

Moreover he is a sage,
possessed of insight into the rise and fall of things,
insight which is Ariyan,
penetrating,
going on to the utter destruction of ill.

That is the fourth flood of merit.

These are the four floods.

Now it is no easy thing
to reckon up the measure of merit
that accrues to the Ariyan disciple
who is blessed with these four floods of merit,
these four floods of good things,
that bring happiness.

One cannot say they are thus and thus in quantity.

Nay, they are only to be described in terms like
'incalculable,
boundless.'

Thus spake the Exalted One.

Desiring merit, in the good set firm,
Who cultivates the way to reach the Deathless,
He, winning to the essence of the Norm,[1] Rejoicing in destruction of the taints,[2] Quakes not to think: The Lord of Death will come.

---

[1] Dhamnā-sārādhigamo. Comy. 'The Ariyan Norm is called sāra; dh. sār. is to reach the fruits of it.'

[2] Khaye rato = kilesa-kkhaye rato. Comy.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
5. Sagātha-Puññā-Bhisanda Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

5. Flood of Merit with Verses

Sutta 44

Paṭhama Mahā-d-Dhana or Aḍḍha Suttaṃ

Very Rich or Wealthy (a)

---

[345]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, the Ariyan disciple who is blessed with four things is called

'Rich, very rich,
of great possessions.[1ed1]

What four things?

Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

■

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

■

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

■

He is blessed
with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.

These are the four things
possessed of which the Ariyan disciple is called

'Rich, very rich,
of great possessions.'"

---

[1] Comy. "The Ariyan wealth (of saddhā, sīla, hiri, ottappa, suta, cāga, paññā).

[ed1] I follow the PTS text note 7 and Bhk. Bodhi here in eliminating 'of great fame' and inserting that in the next sutta as it is in some versions of the Pali. Otherwise the two suttas would be identical.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
5. Sagātha-Puññā-Bhisanda Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

5. Flood of Merit with Verses

Sutta 45

Dutiya Mahā-d-Dhana or Aḍḍha Suttaṃ

Very Rich or Wealthy (b)

---

[345]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, the Ariyan disciple who is blessed with four things is called 'Rich, very rich, of great possessions,

of great fame.[ed1]

What four things?

Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

■

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

■

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

■

He is blessed
with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.

These are the four things possessed of which the Ariyan disciple is called
'Rich, very rich,

of great possessions,
of great fame.'"

---

ed1 I follow Bhk. Bodhi here in placing 'of great fame' in this sutta and eliminating it from the previous sutta as it is in some versions of the Pali. Otherwise the two suttas would be identical.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
5. Sagātha-Puññā-Bhisanda Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

5. Flood of Merit with Verses

Sutta 46

Bhikkhū or Suddaka Suttaṃ

Monks, or Puritan[1]

---

[345]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Blessed with four things
the Ariyan disciple is a Stream-winner,
one not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment.

What four things?

Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

■

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,

to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

■

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

■

He is blessed
with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:

virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.

These are the four things
blessed with which
the Ariyan disciple is a Stream-winner,
one not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment."

---

[1] Text has Suddaka for ? suddhika.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
5. Sagātha-Puññā-Bhisanda Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

5. Flood of Merit with Verses

Sutta 47

Nandiya Suttaṃ

Nandiya

---

[345]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Kapilavatthu, in Banyan Park.

Then Nandiya the Sakyan went to see the Exalted One,
on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and compliments
sat down at one side.

Seated at one side the Exalted One said this to Nandiya the Sakyan:

"Nandiya the Ariyan disciple who is Blessed with four things
is a Stream-winner,
one not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment.

What four things?

Herein, Nandiya, the Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

■

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,

to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

■

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

■

He is blessed
with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:

virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.

These are the four things
blessed with which
the Ariyan disciple is a Stream-winner,
one not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
5. Sagātha-Puññā-Bhisanda Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

5. Flood of Merit with Verses

Sutta 48

Bhaddiya Suttaṃ

Bhaddiya

---

[345]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Kapilavatthu, in Banyan Park.

Then Bhaddiya the Sakyan went to see the Exalted One,
on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and compliments
sat down at one side.

Seated at one side the Exalted One said this to Bhaddiya the Sakyan:

"Bhaddiya the Ariyan disciple who is Blessed with four things
is a Stream-winner,
one not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment.

What four things?

Herein, Bhaddiya, the Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

■

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,

to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

■

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

■

He is blessed
with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:

virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.

These are the four things
blessed with which
the Ariyan disciple is a Stream-winner,
one not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
5. Sagātha-Puññā-Bhisanda Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

5. Flood of Merit with Verses

Sutta 49

Mahānāma Suttaṃ

Mahānāma

---

[345]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Kapilavatthu, in Banyan Park.

Then Mahānāma the Sakyan went to see the Exalted One,
on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and compliments
sat down at one side.

Seated at one side the Exalted One said this to Bhaddiya the Sakyan:

"Mahānāma the Ariyan disciple who is Blessed with four things
is a Stream-winner,
one not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment.

What four things?

Herein, Mahānāma, the Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

■

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,

to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

■

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

■

He is blessed
with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:

virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.

These are the four things
blessed with which
the Ariyan disciple is a Stream-winner,
one not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
5. Sagātha-Puññā-Bhisanda Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

5. Flood of Merit with Verses

Sutta 50

Aṇga Suttaṃ

Limb

---

[345]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four limbs of stream-winning.

What four?

Consorting with the good,
hearing the Good Norm,
thorough mindful attention and practice in accordance with the Norm.

These are the four limbs of stream-winning."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
6. Sappañña Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

6. Discreet[1]

Sutta 51

Sagāthaka Suttaṃ

With Verses

---

[346]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

Monks, blessed with four things
the Ariyan disciple is a Stream-winner,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
one bound for enlightenment.

What four?

Herein, monks, an Ariyan disciple is blessed with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

■

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,

to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

■

He is blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

■

He is blessed
with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:

virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.'

These are the four things
blessed with which,
the Ariyan disciple is a Stream-winner,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
one bound for enlightenment.

The Exalted One said this:|| ||

Whoso hath faith in the Tathāgata
Unwavering and fixed, whose life is good,
Praised by the Axiyans and dear to them;
Whoso is likewise loyal to the Order
And looks straight forth - 'He is not poor,' they say,
'Not lived in vain the life of such a man.'
Wherefore the wise should cultivate (these three)
Faith, virtue and clear-seeing of the Norm, Bearing the Buddha's message in his mind.[2]

---

[1] The title comes from § 4.

[2] As at text, 384.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
6. Sappañña Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

6. Discreet

Sutta 52

Vassa-Vuttha Suttaṃ

Spending the Rainy Season

---

[346]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

On that occasion a certain monk who had just spent the rainy season near Sāvatthī, had come to Kapilavatthu
on some business or other.

Now the Sakyans of Kapilavatthu heard it said that a certain monk who had spent the rainy season at Sāvatthī was come to Kapilavatthu.

Then the Sakyans of Kapilavatthu went to visit that monk,
and on coming to him
saluted him
and sat down at one side.

So seated
the Sakyans said this to that monk:

"Pray, sir, is the Exalted One well and strong?"

"He is, friends."

"Pray, sir, are Sāriputta and Moggallāna well and strong?"

"They are, friends."

"Pray, sir, is the Order of Monks well and strong?"

[347] "They are, friends."

"Sir, during this retreat of the rainy season, have you beard anything face to face with the Exalted One?

Have you learned anything from him?"

"Yes, friends. I have heard and learned this face to face with the Exalted One:

'Monks, few indeed are those monks, who, by destroying the āsavas, have of themselves
in this very life
by their own knowledge
realized the heart's release,
the release by insight,
and abide therein.

More numerous are those monks
who, by destroying the five fetters of the lower sort, are reborn spontaneously (in the higher worlds),
there to pass utterly away, destined not to return from that world.'

Moreover, friends, I heard this face to face with the Exalted One:

'Monks, few indeed are those monks
who, by destroying the five fetters of the lower sort,
are reborn spontaneously (in the higher worlds),
there to pass utterly away,
not destined to return from that world.

More numerous are those monks
who, by destroying three fetters
and wearing down lust,
hatred
and delusiön,
are Once-returners.

Coming back once more to this world
they will make an end of ill.'

Further, friends, I learned this face to face with the Exalted One:

'Monks, few are those monks who, by destroying three fetters
and wearing down lust,
hatred
and delusion,
are Once-returners,
who, coming back once more to this world, shall make an end of ill.

More numerous are those monks
who, by destroying three fetters,
are Stream-winners,
not doomed to the Downfall,
assured,
bound for enlightenment.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
6. Sappañña Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

6. Discreet

Sutta 53

Dhammadinna Suttaṃ

Dhammadinna

---

[347]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Benares, at Isipatana,
in the Deer Park.

Then Dhammadinna[1] the lay-disciple came with five hundred [348] lay-disciples to see the Exalted One,
and on coming to him saluted him
and sat down at one side.

As they thus sat,
Dhammadinna the lay-disciple
said this to the Exalted One:

"Let my lord the Exalted One admonish us!

Let my lord the Exalted One admonish us, that it may be for our profit and welfare
for many a long day."

"Then, Dhammadinna, thus must ye train yourselves:

'As to those discourses[2] uttered by the Tathāgata, deep,
deep in meaning,
transcendental[3]
and concerned with the Void,[4]
from time to time
we will spend our days learning them.'

That is how you must train yourselves, Dhammadinna."

"Lord, it is no easy thing for us, living as we do in crowded houses,[5]
encumbered with children,
enjoying the use of Benares sandal-wood, decking ourselves with garlands and unguents, handling gold and silver, - it is no easy thing for us
from time to time
to spend our days learning those discourses uttered by the Tathāgata, deep,
deep in meaning,

transcendental
and concerned with the Void.

Let my lord the Exalted One teach us some other teaching, to us who stand firm in the five precepts."

"Then, Dhammadinna,
ye must train yourselves in this way:

'We shall be blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

"He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One."

■

We shall be blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

"Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,

leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise."

■

We shall be blessed
with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

"Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world."

■

We shall be blessed
with the virtues dear to the Ariyans,
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:

virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.'

That is how you must train yourselves, Dhammadinna."

§

"Lord, as to these four limbs of stream-winning taught by the Exalted One, those conditions are seen to exist in us already.

We do live according to them.

Lord, we do possess
with unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
thus:

'He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One.'

Lord, we do possess
with unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

■

'Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise.'

■

Lord, we do possess
with unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

'Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully
is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world.'

■

Lord, we do possess
the virtues dear to the Ariyans, virtues unbroken,

whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind."[6] [349] "Well for you, Dhammadinna!

Well gotten by you, Dhammadinna!

You liave declared the fruits of stream-winning, Dhannnadinna!"

---

[1] Comy. He was one of the seven laymen who had followings of 500. The others were Visākhā the woman lay-disciple, Ugga the housefather, Citta the housefather, Haṭṭhaka Ālavaka, and Cūḷa-Anāthapiṇḍika and Anāthapiṇḍika the housefathers.

[2] Suttantā. Cf. S. ii, 267; K.S. ii, 179.

[3] Comy. 'Such as the Asankhata-saṇyutta,' etc. (S. iv, 360 ff.).

[4] Suñña-Nibbāna. Cf. VM. 513. Comy. refers to Khajjamta sutta, etc. (S. iii 81).

[5] Text, 353.

[6] Text, 343.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
6. Sappañña Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

6. Discreet

Sutta 54

Gilāyana Suttaṃ

Visiting the Sick

---

[349]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Kapilavatthu, in Banyan Park.

Now on that occasion
a number of monks were busied making robes for the Exalted One,
"for," said they,
"when the rains are over,
the Exalted One will go forth on his rounds."

Now Mahānāma the Sakyan heard it said:

"A number of monks are busied making robes for the Exalted One,
'for,' said they,
'when the rains are over,
the Exalted One will go forth on his rounds'" and he went to the Exalted One,
saluted him
and sat down at one side.

So seated
Mahanama the Sakyan said this to the Exalted One:

"I hear it said, lord,
that a number of monks are busied making robes for the Exalted One with the idea that,
when the rains are over,
the Exalted One will set forth on his rounds.

Now, lord, we have never heard[1] from the Exalted One's own lips how a discreet[2] lay-disciple who is sick,
afflicted,
suffering from a sore disease,
should be admonished by another discreet lay-disciple."

"A discreet lay-disciple, Mahānāma, who is sick,
afflicted,
suffering from a sore disease,
should be admonished by another discreet lay-disciple with the four comfortable assurances,
thus:

'Take comfort, dear sir,
in your unwavering loyalty to the Buddha,
saying:

"He it is the Exalted One,
Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One,
perfect in knowledge and practice,
a Happy One,
world-knower,
unsurpassed charioteer
of men to be tamed,
teacher of devas and mankind,
a Buddha,
an Exalted One."

Take comfort, dear sir, in your unwavering loyalty to the Norm,
thus:

"Well proclaimed by the Exalted One
is the Norm,
seen in this very life,
a thing not involving time,
inviting one to come and see,
leading onward,
to be known for themselves
by the wise."

Take comfort, dear sir, in your unwavering loyalty to the Order,
thus:

"Walking righteously is the Exalted One's Order,
walking uprightly,
walking in the right way,
walking dutifully

is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples:
namely,
the four pairs of men,
the eight sorts of men.

That is the Exalted One's Order of Disciples.

Worthy of honour are they,
worthy of reverence,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of salutations with clasped hands, -
a field of merit unsurpassed for the world."

Take comfort, dear sir, in your possession of the virtues dear to the Ariyans,[3]
virtues unbroken,
whole,
unspotted,
untarnished,
giving freedom,
praised by the wise:
virtues untainted (by craving or delusion),
which lead to concentration of the mind.'

A discreet lay-disciple, Mahānāma,
who is sick,
afflicted,
suffering from a sore disease,
should be [350] admonished by another discreet lay-disciple with these four comfortable assurances.

§

Then, supposing he has longing for his parents, he should thus be spoken to:

If he say:

'I have longing for my parents,'

the other should reply:

'But, my dear sir,
you are subject to death.

Whether you feel longing for your parents or not,
you will have to die.

'Twere just as well for you to abandon the longing you have for your parents.'

If he should say:

'That longing for my parents is now abandoned,'

the other should reply:

'Yet, my dear sir,
you still have longing for your children.

As you must die in any case,
'twere just as well for you to abandon that longing for your children.'

If he should say:

'That longing for my children
is now abandoned,'

the other should reply:

"Yet my dear sir,
you still have longing for the five human pleasures of sense.'

Then, if he say:

'That longing for the five human pleasures of sense
is now abandoned,'

the other should reply:

'My friend, the heavenly delights are more excellent
than the five human pleasures of sense.

'Twere well for you, worthy sir,
to remove your thoughts from them and fix them on the Four Deva Kings.'

Suppose the sick man say:

'My thoughts are removed from human pleasures of sense and fixed upon the Four Deva Kings.'

■

then let the other say:

'More excellent than the Four Deva Kings and more choice
are the Devas of Delight.

'Twere well for you, worthy sir,
to remove your thoughts from them and fix them on the Devas of Delight.'

Suppose the sick man say:

'My thoughts are removed from the Four Deva Kings and fixed upon the Devas of Delight.'

■

then let the other say:

'More excellent than the Devas of Delight
and more choice
are the Creative Devas.

'Twere well for you, worthy sir,
to remove your thoughts from them and fix them on the Creative Devas.'

Suppose the sick man say:

'My thoughts are removed from the Devas of Delight and fixed upon the Creative Devas.'

■

then let the other say:

'More excellent than the Creative Devas
and more choice
are the Devas who rejoice in the work of other Devas.

'Twere well for you, worthy sir,
to remove your thoughts from them and fix them on the Devas who rejoice in the work of other Devas.'

Suppose the sick man say:

'My thoughts are removed from the Creative Devas and fixed upon the Devas who rejoice in the work of other Devas.'

■

then let the other say:

'More excellent than the Devas who rejoice in the work of other Devas and more choice
is the Brahma World.

'Twere well for you, worthy sir,
to remove your thoughts from them and fix them on the Brahma World.'

Suppose the sick man say:

'My thoughts are removed from the Devas who rejoice in the work of other Devas and fixed upon the Brahma World.'

■

Then let the other say:

'My friend, even the Brahma World is impermanent, not lasting,
prisoned in a person.[4]

Well for you, friend, if [351] you raise your mind above the Brahma World and fix it on cessation from the person-pack.'

And if the sick man say be has done so, then, Mahānāma, I declare that there is no difference between the lay-disciple who thus avers and the monk whose heart is freed from the āsavas, that is, between the release of the one and the release of the other."[5]

---

[1] Text, na kho te etaṇ ... sutaṇ; but Comy. na kho pan'etaṇ = na kho amhehi eva.

[2] Sappañño = sotāpanno. Comy.

[3] Text has ariyakantāni sīlāni, etc., which I think should be ariya-kantehi sīlehi, etc.

[4] Sakkāya pariyāpannā (subject to individuality), as at S. iii, 85; K.S. iii, 71.

[5] Nānākaraṇaṇ yadidaṇ vimuttiyā vimuttin ti. Comy. 'in the matter of path-and-fruit penetration.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
6. Sappañña Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

6. Discreet

Sutta 55

Paṭhama Caturo Phalā Suttaṃ

Four Fruits (a)

---

[351]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, these four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of,

conduce to realizing the fruits of stream-winning.

What four?[1]

Following after the good,
hearing the Good Norm,
systematic attention to it
and living in accordance with the precepts of the Norm.

These four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of conduce to realizing the fruits of stream-winning."

---

[1] Comy. refers to Paṭisambhidā, ii, 189 ff. (quoted in full at SA. on S. i, 63 - K.S. i, 87). The qualities are all attributed to Sāriputta.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
6. Sappañña Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

6. Discreet

Sutta 56

Dutiya Caturo Phalā Suttaṃ

Four Fruits (b)

---

[351]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, these four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of,

conduce to realizing the fruits of once-returning.

What four?

Following after the good,
hearing the Good Norm,
systematic attention to it
and living in accordance with the precepts of the Norm.

These four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of conduce to realizing the fruits of once-returning."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
6. Sappañña Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

6. Discreet

Sutta 57

Tatiya Caturo Phalā Suttaṃ

Four Fruits (c)

---

[351]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, these four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of,

conduce to realizing the fruits of not-returning

What four?

Following after the good,
hearing the Good Norm,
systematic attention to it
and living in accordance with the precepts of the Norm.

These four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of conduce to realizing the fruits of not-returning."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
6. Sappañña Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

6. Discreet

Sutta 58

Catuttha Caturo Phalā Suttaṃ

Four Fruits (d)

---

[351]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, these four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of,

conduce to realizing the fruits of Arahantship.

What four?

Following after the good,
hearing the Good Norm,
systematic attention to it
and living in accordance with the precepts of the Norm.

These four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of conduce to realizing the fruits of Arahantship."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
6. Sappañña Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

6. Discreet

Sutta 59

Paṭhama Paññā-Paṭilābhāya Suttaṃ

Acquiring Insight

---

[351]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, these four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of,

conduce to acquiring insight.

What four?

Following after the good,
hearing the Good Norm,
systematic attention to it
and living in accordance with the precepts of the Norm.

These four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of conduce to acquiring insight."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
6. Sappañña Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

6. Discreet

Sutta 60

Paññā-vuddhiyā Suttaṃ

Growth of Insight

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, these four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of,

conduce to growth of insight.

What four?

Following after the good,
hearing the Good Norm,
systematic attention to it
and living in accordance with the precepts of the Norm.

These four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of
conduce to growth of insight.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
6. Sappañña Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

6. Discreet

Sutta 61

Paññā-Vepullata Suttaṃ

Increase of Insight

---

[351]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, these four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of,

conduce to increase of insight.

What four?

Following after the good,
hearing the Good Norm,
systematic attention to it
and living in accordance with the precepts of the Norm.

These four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of conduce to increase of insight."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
7. Mahā-Paññā Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

7. Great Insight

Sutta 62

Mahā-Paññā Suttaṃ

Comprehensive Insight

---

[351]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, these four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of,

conduce to comprehensive insight.

What four?

Following after the good,
hearing the Good Norm,
systematic attention to it
and living in accordance with the precepts of the Norm.

These four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of conduce to comprehensive insight."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
7. Mahā-Pañña Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

7. Great Insight

Sutta 63

Puthu-Paññā Suttaṃ

Manifold Insight

---

[351]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, these four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of,

conduce to manifold insight.

What four?

Following after the good,
hearing the Good Norm,
systematic attention to it
and living in accordance with the precepts of the Norm.

These four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of
conduce to manifold insight.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
7. Mahā-Pañña Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

7. Great Insight

Sutta 64

Vipula-Paññā Suttaṃ

Extensive Insight

---

[351]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, these four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of,

conduce to extensive insight.

What four?

Following after the good,
hearing the Good Norm,
systematic attention to it
and living in accordance with the precepts of the Norm.

These four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of conduce to extensive insight."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
7. Mahā-Paññā Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

7. Great Insight

Sutta 65

Gambhīra-Paññā Suttaṃ

Profound Insight

---

[351]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, these four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of,

conduce to profound insight.

What four?

Following after the good,
hearing the Good Norm,
systematic attention to it
and living in accordance with the precepts of the Norm.

These four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of conduce to profound insight."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
7. Mahā-Paññā Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

7. Great Insight

Sutta 66

Asamatta or Appamatta-Paññā Suttaṃ

Unbounded Insight

---

[351]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, these four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of,

conduce to unbounded[1] insight.

What four?

Following after the good,
hearing the Good Norm,
systematic attention to it
and living in accordance with the precepts of the Norm.

These four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of conduce to unbounded insight."

---

[1] Pṭs. has wrong reading assāmanta (?) for appamatta (Sinh. MSS. asamatta).

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
7. Mahā-Paññā Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

7. Great Insight

Sutta 67

Bhūri-Paññā Suttaṃ

Abundant Insight

---

[351]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, these four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of,

conduce to abundant insight.

What four?

Following after the good,
hearing the Good Norm,
systematic attention to it
and living in accordance with the precepts of the Norm.

These four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of conduce to abundant insight."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
7. Mahā-Paññā Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

7. Great Insight

Sutta 68

Paññā-Bahula Suttaṃ

Many-Sided Insight

---

[351]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, these four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of,

conduce to many-sided insight.

What four?

Following after the good,
hearing the Good Norm,
systematic attention to it
and living in accordance with the precepts of the Norm.

These four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of conduce to many-sided insight."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
7. Mahā-Paññā Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

7. Great Insight

Sutta 69

Sīgha-Paññā Suttaṃ

Swift Insight

---

[351]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, these four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of,

conduce to swift insight.

What four?

Following after the good,
hearing the Good Norm,
systematic attention to it
and living in accordance with the precepts of the Norm.

These four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of
conduce to swift insight."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
7. Mahā-Paññā Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

7. Great Insight

Sutta 70

Lahu-Paññā Suttaṃ

Buoyant Insight

---

[351]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, these four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of,

conduce to buoyant[1] insight.

What four?

Following after the good,
hearing the Good Norm,
systematic attention to it
and living in accordance with the precepts of the Norm.

These four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of conduce to buoyant insight."

---

[1] Lahu at Pṭs. Text has bahula-

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
7. Mahā-Paññā Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

7. Great Insight

Sutta 71

Hāsa or Hāsu-Paññā Suttaṃ

Joyous Insight

---

[351]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, these four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of,

conduce to joyous insight.

What four?

Following after the good,
hearing the Good Norm,
systematic attention to it
and living in accordance with the precepts of the Norm.

These four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of conduce to joyous insight."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
7. Mahā-Paññā Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

7. Great Insight

Sutta 72

Javana-Paññā Suttaṃ

Instant Insight

---

[351]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, these four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of,

conduce to instant insight.

What four?

Following after the good,
hearing the Good Norm,
systematic attention to it
and living in accordance with the precepts of the Norm.

These four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of conduce to instant insight."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
7. Mahā-Paññā Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

7. Great Insight

Sutta 73

Tikkha-Paññā Suttaṃ

Sharp Insight

---

[351]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, these four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of,

conduce to sharp insight.

What four?

Following after the good,
hearing the Good Norm,
systematic attention to it
and living in accordance with the precepts of the Norm.

These four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of
conduce to sharp insight."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
55. Sot'Āpatti Saṃyutta
7. Mahā-Paññā Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

55. Kindred Sayings on Streamwinning

7. Great Insight

Sutta 74

Nibbedhika-Paññā Suttaṃ

Fastidious Insight

---

[351]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, these four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of,

conduce to fastidious insight.

What four?

Following after the good,
hearing the Good Norm,
systematic attention to it
and living in accordance with the precepts of the Norm.

These four conditions,
if cultivated and made much of conduce to fastidious insight."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
1. Samādhi Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

1. Concentration

Sutta 1

Samādhi Suttaṃ

Concentration

---

[352]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, do ye practise concentration.

The monk who is concentrated knows a thing as it really is.

And what does he know as it really is?

In this connexion he knows as it really is,

'This is ill.'

'This is the arising of ill.'

'This is the ceasing of ill.'

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill.'

Do ye practise concentration, monks.

The monk who is concentrated knows a thing as it really is.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is ill.'

'This is the arising of ill.'

'This is the ceasing of ill.'

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
1. Samādhi Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

1. Concentration

Sutta 2

Paṭisallāṇa Suttaṃ

Meditation

---

[352]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, do ye apply yourselves to meditation.

The monk who is meditative knows a thing as it really is.

And what does he know as it really is?

In this connexion he knows as it really is,

'This is ill.'

'This is the arising of ill.'

'This is the ceasing of ill.'

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill.'

Monks, do ye apply yourselves to meditation.

The monk who is concentrated knows a thing as it really is.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is ill.'

'This is the arising of ill.'

'This is the ceasing of ill.'

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
1. Samādhi Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

1. Concentration

Sutta 3

Paṭhama Kulaputta Suttaṃ

Clansman (a)

---

[352]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, whatsoever clansmen have
in time past
rightly gone forth from the home
to the homeless life, -
all of them have done so
to get full comprehension of the four Ariyan truths,
as they really are.

Monks, whatsoever clansmen shall
in future time
rightly go forth from the home
to the homeless life, -
all of them will do so
to get full comprehension of the four Ariyan truths,
as they really are.

[353] Monks, whatsoever clansmen
do now
rightly go forth from the home
to the homeless life, -
all of them do so
to get full comprehension of the four Ariyan truths.

Of what four?

The Ariyan truth of ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice
that leads to the ceasing of ill.

"Monks, whatsoever clansmen have
in time past
rightly gone forth from the home
to the homeless life, -
all of them have done so

to get full comprehension of the four Ariyan truths,
as they really are.

Monks, whatsoever clansmen shall
in future time
rightly go forth from the home
to the homeless life, -
all of them will do so
to get full comprehension of the four Ariyan truths,
as they really are.

Monks, whatsoever clansmen
do now
rightly go forth from the home
to the homeless life, -
all of them do so
to get full comprehension of the four Ariyan truths.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is ill.'

'This is the arising of ill.'

'This is the ceasing of ill.'

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
1. Samādhi Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

1. Concentration

Sutta 4

Dutiya Kulaputta Suttaṃ

Clansman (b)

---

[353]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, whatsoever clansmen have
in time past
rightly gone forth from the home
to the homeless life,
who have fully comprehended what really is
all of them have fully comprehended,
as they really are,
the Four Ariyan truths.

Monks, whatsoever clansmen shall
in future time
rightly go forth from the home
to the homeless life,
who will fully comprehend what really is
all of them will do so
to get full comprehension of the four Ariyan truths,
as they really are.

Monks, whatsoever clansmen
do now
rightly go forth from the home
to the homeless life,
who fully comprehend what really is
all of them do so
to get full comprehension of the four Ariyan truths.

Of what four?

The Ariyan truth of ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice
that leads to the ceasing of ill.

"Monks, whatsoever clansmen have
in time past

rightly gone forth from the home
to the homeless life,
who have fully comprehended what really is
all of them have fully comprehended,
as they really are,
the Four Ariyan truths.

Monks, whatsoever clansmen shall
in future time
rightly go forth from the home
to the homeless life,
who will fully comprehend what really is
all of them will do so
to get full comprehension of the four Ariyan truths,
as they really are.

Monks, whatsoever clansmen
do now
rightly go forth from the home
to the homeless life,
who fully comprehend what really is
all of them do so
to get full comprehension of the four Ariyan truths.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is ill.'

'This is the arising of ill.'

'This is the ceasing of ill.'

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
1. Samādhi Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

1. Concentration

Sutta 5

Paṭhama Samaṇa-Brāhmaṇa Suttaṃ

Recluses and Brahmins (a)

---

[353]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, whatsoever recluses or brahmins
in time past
have gained the highest wisdom in its reality,
all of them have done so[1] by penetrating,
as they really are,
the four Ariyan truths.

Whatsoever recluses
in future time
will gain the highest wisdom in its reality,
all of them will do so by penetrating,
as they really are,
the four Ariyan truths.

Whatsoever recluses and brahmins
in the present time
do gain the highest wisdom in its reality,
all of them do so by penetrating,
as they really are,
the four Ariyan truths.

Of what four?

The Ariyan truth of ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice
that leads to the ceasing of ill.

"Monks, whatsoever recluses or brahmins
in time past
have gained the highest wisdom in its reality,
all of them have done so by penetrating,
as they really are,
the four Ariyan truths.

Whatsoever recluses
in future time
will gain the highest wisdom in its reality,
all of them will do so by penetrating,
as they really are,
the four Ariyan truths.

Whatsoever recluses and brahmins
in the present time
do gain the highest wisdom in its reality,
all of them do so by penetrating,
as they really are,
the four Ariyan truths.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is ill.'

'This is the arising of ill.'

'This is the ceasing of ill.'

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill.'"

---

[1] Text should read abhisambujjhiṇsu

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
1. Samādhi Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

1. Concentration

Sutta 6

Dutiya Samaṇa-Brāhmaṇa Suttaṃ

Recluses and Brahmins (b)

---

[353]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, whatsoever recluses or brahmins
in time past
have declared that they have in very truth
gained the highest wisdom,
all of them have declared
that they have penetrated
in very truth,
the four Ariyan truths.

Whatsoever recluses
in future time
will declare that they have in very truth
gained the highest wisdom,
all of them will declare
that they have penetrated
in very truth,
the four Ariyan truths.

Whatsoever recluses and brahmins
in the present time
do declare that they have in very truth
gained the highest wisdom,
all of them do declare
that they have penetrated
in very truth,
the four Ariyan truths.

Of what four?

The Ariyan truth of ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice
that leads to the ceasing of ill.

Monks, whatsoever recluses or brahmins
in time past
have declared that they have in very truth
gained the highest wisdom,
all of them have declared
that they have penetrated
in very truth,
the four Ariyan truths.

Whatsoever recluses
in future time
will declare that they have in very truth
gained the highest wisdom,
all of them will declare
that they have penetrated
in very truth,
the four Ariyan truths.

Whatsoever recluses and brahmins
in the present time
do declare that they have in very truth
gained the highest wisdom,
all of them do declare
that they have penetrated
in very truth,
the four Ariyan truths.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is ill.'

'This is the arising of ill.'

'This is the ceasing of ill.'

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
1. Samādhi Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

1. Concentration

Sutta 7

Vitakkā Suttaṃ

Thoughts

---

[354]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, think not evil, unprofitable thoughts,
such as:
thoughts of lust,
thoughts of hatred,
thoughts of delusion.[1]

Why do I say so?

Because, monks,
these thoughts are not concerned with profit,
they are not the rudiments of the holy life,
they conduce not to revulsion,
to dispassion,
to cessation,
to tranquillity,
to full understanding,
to the perfect wisdom,
they conduce not to Nibbāna.

When ye do think, monks, ye should think thus:

'This is ill.

This is the arising of ill.

This is the ceasing of ill.

This is the practice
that leads to the ceasing of ill.'

Why do I say this?

Because, monks,
these thoughts are concerned with profit,
they are rudiments of the holy life,

they conduce to revulsion,
to dispassion,
to cessation,
to tranquillity,
to full understanding,
to the perfect wisdom,
they conduce to Nibbāna.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is ill.'

'This is the arising of ill.'

'This is the ceasing of ill.'

'This is the practice
that leads to the ceasing of ill.'"

---

[1] Quoted at Mil. Panh., 379.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
1. Samādhi Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

1. Concentration

Sutta 8

Cintā Suttaṃ

Reasoning

---

[354]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, reason not ill, unprofitable reasonings,[1]
such as:

Eternal is the world or Not eternal is the world:

Finite is the world
or Infinite is the world:

Life is the same as body, or Life and body are different:

The Tathāgata exists after death or The Tathāgata exists not after death, or He both exists and exists not after death, or The Tathāgata neither exists nor not-exists after death.

Why do I say this?

Because, monks,
these thoughts are not concerned with profit,
they are not the rudiments of the holy life,
they conduce not to revulsion,
to dispassion,
to cessation,
to tranquillity,
to full understanding,
to the perfect wisdom,
they conduce not to Nibbāna.

§

When ye reason, monks, reason thus:

'This is ill.

This is the arising of ill.

This is the ceasing of ill.

This is the practice
that leads to the ceasing of ill.'

Why do I say this?

Because, monks,
these thoughts are concerned with profit,
they are rudiments of the holy life,
they conduce to revulsion,
to dispassion,
to cessation,
to tranquillity,
to full understanding,
to the perfect wisdom,
they conduce to Nibbāna.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is ill.'

'This is the arising of ill.'

'This is the ceasing of ill.'

'This is the practice
that leads to the ceasing of ill.'"

---

[1] Mā akusalaṇ cittaṇ cinteyyātha. In the previous section we have mā akus. vitakke vitakkeyyātha. The contrast seems to be between 'discursive thought' and 'directed thought.' Cf. text, 446; K.S. iv, 276.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
1. Samādhi Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

1. Concentration

Sutta 9

Viggāhikā-Kathā Suttaṃ

Wordy Warfare

---

[355]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, wage not wordy warfare,[1]
thus:

'You know not about this Norm-discipline.

I do know about this Norm-discipline.

How could you know about it?

You have fallen on wrong views.

I have come by right views.

You spoke last what should come first, and first what should come last.

I am speaking to the point, you are not.

What you have thought out so long[2] is quite upset.

Your view is confuted.

Go, explain yourself.

You are shown up.

Clear yourself if you can!'

Why do I say this?

Because, monks,
such talk is not concerned with profit,
they are not the rudiments of the holy life,
they conduce not to revulsion,
to dispassion,
to cessation,
to tranquillity,

to full understanding,
to the perfect wisdom,
they conduce not to Nibbāna.

§

When ye talk, monks, talk about:

'This is ill.

This is the arising of ill.

This is the ceasing of ill.

This is the practice
that leads to the ceasing of ill.'

Why do I say this?

Because, monks,
such talk is concerned with profit,
they are rudiments of the holy life,
they conduce to revulsion,
to dispassion,
to cessation,
to tranquillity,
to full understanding,
to the perfect wisdom,
they conduce to Nibbāna.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is ill.'

'This is the arising of ill.'

'This is the ceasing of ill.'

'This is the practice
that leads to the ceasing of ill.'"

---

[1] Cf. D. iii, 117; K.S. iii, 13 n.; DA. 1, 91.

[2] Reading (as at S. ii, 12) adhiciṇṇaṇ, text's v.l. for āciṇṇaṇ.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
1. Samādhi Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

1. Concentration

Sutta 10

Tiracchāna-Kathā Suttaṃ

Talk

---

[355]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, talk ye not childish[1] talk of divers kinds,
such as:

talk about rajahs,
robbers,
great ministers:
talk of armies,
panic and battle:[2] talk of food and drink and clothes, beds,
flowers,
garlands and perfumes:
talk of relatives,
vehicles,
villages,
suburbs,
towns and districts:
talk about women[3]
and champions:[4]
talk about streets[5]
and gossip at the well:
ghost- [356] stories, desultory talk and fabulous[6] talk about (the origin of) land and sea:
talk of being and not-being.

Wby do I say this?

Because, monks,
such talk is not concerned with profit,
they are not the rudiments of the holy life,
they conduce not to revulsion,
to dispassion,
to cessation,
to tranquillity,
to full understanding,

to the perfect wisdom,
they conduce not to Nibbāna.

§

When ye talk, monks, talk about:

'This is ill.

This is the arising of ill.

This is the ceasing of ill.

This is the practice
that leads to the ceasing of ill.'

Why do I say this?

Because, monks,
such talk is concerned with profit,
they are rudiments of the holy life,
they conduce to revulsion,
to dispassion,
to cessation,
to tranquillity,
to full understanding,
to the perfect wisdom,
they conduce to Nibbāna.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is ill.'

'This is the arising of ill.'

'This is the ceasing of ill.'

'This is the practice
that leads to the ceasing of ill.'"

---

[1] Cf. Dialog. iii, 33 n.; DA. i, 89 (repeated here by Comy.). Here tiracchānakathā ('animal talk') is paraphr. by Comy. as 'not conducive to the path to heaven or to release.'

[2] Text should read yuddhaka.

[3] Text adds purisa- [of B. MSS.]. See Dialog. n. ad loc

[4] Sūra-k. Our Comy. adds to DA. saying 'there is a reading sūra-k. {"about drunkards").'

[5] Not in the sense of 'street-gossip,' but as Comy. 'Talk of this or that street, as well or badly built, or inhabited by so and so.'

[6] Akkhāyika, 'fabulous narratives.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
2. Dhamma-Cakka-Pavattana Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

2. The Foundation of the Kingdom of the Norm[1]

Sutta 11

Dhamma-Cakka-p-Pavattana Suttaṃ Paṭhama Tathāgatena Vutta

Spoken by the Tathāgata (a)

[2] The five co-wanderers were Kondañña, Vappa, Bhaddiya, Mahānāma, and Assaji.

[3] Text has several misprints: kāmesu kāmesu khallika-, which should be kāmesu kāma-sukh. ... puthujjanīko ... and further on, anupagamma.

[4] Gammo = gāma-vasīnaṇ santako. Comy.

[5] Comy. 'of the four truths.'

[6] These last omitted by the Vinaya version.

[7] Here Burmese MSS. (v.l. of text) omit Ariya-. But we must omit ariya-saccaṇ; otherwise the text would mean 'the Ariyan truth about the arising of Ill is to be put away.' Craving has to be put away. The frame has obscured the picture here.

[8] Aññāta-Kondañña. 'Hereupon,' says the Vinaya account, 'Kondañña asked for ordination, and it was given in these words: "Come, monk! Well proclaimed is the Norm. Live the holy life for the utter destruction of Ill." This was full ordination (upasampadā) for that venerable one.' Then Vappa and Bhaddiya gained insight, and a little later Mahānāma and Assaji. Thus here were six in the Order.

Another version of this story is to be found at MN 26 and see also:
First Sutta Resources

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
2. Dhamma-Cakka-Pavattana Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

2. The Foundation of the Kingdom of the Norm

Sutta 12

Dutiya Tathāgatena Vutta Suttaṃ

Spoken by the Tathāgata (b)[1]

---

[360]

Monks, at the thought of this Ariyan truth of Ill, — there arose in me concerning things unlearnt before by Tathāgatas, vision,
insight,
understanding:
there arose in me wisdom,
there arose in me light.

Monks, at the thought:
This Ariyan truth about Ill
is to be understood,

— concerning things unlearnt before by Tathāgatas,
there arose in me vision,
insight,
understanding:
there arose in me wisdom,
there arose in me light.

Monks, at the thought:
This Ariyan truth about Ill
has been understood (by me), [361] — concerning things unlearnt before by Tathāgatas,
there arose in me vision,
insight,
understanding:
there arose in me wisdom,
there arose in me light.

Again, monks, at the thought of this Ariyan truth
about the arising of Ill,
— concerning things unlearnt before by Tathāgatas,
there arose in me vision,
insight,
understanding:
there arose in me wisdom,
there arose in me light.

At the thought:
This arising of Ill
is to be put away,
— concerning things unlearnt before by Tathāgatas,
there arose in me vision,
insight,
understanding:
there arose in me wisdom,
there arose in me light.

At the thought:
This arising of I11
has been put away,
— concerning things unlearnt before by Tathāgatas,
there arose in me vision,
insight,
understanding:
there arose in me wisdom,
there arose in me light.

Again, monks, at the thought
of this Ariyan truth
about the ceasing of Ill,
— concerning things unlearnt before by Tathāgatas,
there arose in me vision,
insight,
understanding:
there arose in me wisdom,
there arose in me light.

At the thought:
This ceasing of Ill
must be realized,
— concerning things unlearnt before by Tathāgatas,
there arose in me vision,
insight,
understanding:
there arose in me wisdom,
there arose in me light.

At the thought:
This Ariyan truth about the ceasing of Ill has been realized,
— concerning things unlearnt before by Tathāgatas,
there arose in me vision,
insight,

understanding:
there arose in me wisdom,
there arose in me light.

Again, monks, at the thought of this Ariyan truth
about the [359] practice
leading to the ceasing of Ill,
— concerning things unlearnt before by Tathāgatas,
there arose in me vision,
insight,
understanding:
there arose in me wisdom,
there arose in me light.

At the thought:
This Ariyan truth
about the practice
leading to the ceasing of Ill must be cultivated,
— concerning things unlearnt before by Tathāgatas,
there arose in me vision,
insight,
understanding:
there arose in me wisdom,
there arose in me light.

At the thought:
This Ariyan truth
about the practice
leading to the ceasing of Ill
has been cultivated,
— concerning things unlearnt before by Tathāgatas,
there arose in me vision,
insight,
understanding:

there arose in me wisdom,
there arose in me light."

---

[1] In this Sutta the only difference from the previous one is the inclusion of the word Tathāgatas [Ed.: Nidana and closing paragraphs are also missing from the PTS text.]

More
First Sutta Resources

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
2. Dhamma-Cakka-Pavattana Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

2. The Foundation of the Kingdom of the Norm

Sutta 13

Khandha Suttaṃ

Factors

---

[361]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth about Ill,
the Ariyan truth about the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth about about the ceasing of Ill, the Ariyan truth about the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

§

And what, monks, is the Ariyan truth about Ill?

Ill, it should be said,
is the fivefold factor of grasping:
the grasping of body,
the grasping of feeling,
the grasping of perception, the grasping of the activities, the grasping of consciousness.

This, monks, is called
'the Ariyan truth about Ill.'

■

And what, monks, is the Ariyan truth about the arising of Ill?

It is that craving
that leads back to rebirth,
along with the lure and the lust that linger longingly now here, now there:
namely,
the craving for sensual delight,

the craving to be born again,
the craving for existence to end.

This is the Ariyan truth about the arising of Ill.

■

And what, monks, is the Ariyan truth about the ceasing of Ill?

[362] Verily it is the utter passionless cessation of,
the giving up,
the forsaking,
the release from,
the absence of
longing for this craving.

This is the Ariyan truth about the ceasing of Ill.

■

And what, monks, is the Ariyan truth about the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill?

Verily it is this Ariyan eightfold way,
to wit:

Right view,
right aim,
right speech,
right action,
right living,
right effort,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

This is the Ariyan truth about the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

■

These, monks, are the four Ariyan truths.

Wherefore an effort must be made to realize:

This is Ill.

This is the arising of Ill.

This is the ceasing of Ill.

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
2. Dhamma-Cakka-Pavattana Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

2. The Foundation of the Kingdom of the Norm

Sutta 14

Āyatana Suttaṃ

Sphere of Sense

---

[362]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth about Ill,
the Ariyan truth about the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth about about the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth about the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

§

And what, monks, is the Ariyan truth about Ill?

Ill, it should be said,
is the six personal spheres of sense.

What six?

The sense-sphere of the eye, the sense-sphere of the ear, the sense-sphere of the nose, the sense-sphere of the tongue, the sense-sphere of the body, the sense-sphere of the mind.

This, monks, is called
'the Ariyan truth about Ill.'

■

And what, monks, is the Ariyan truth about the arising of Ill?

It is that craving
that leads back to rebirth,
along with the lure and the lust
that linger longingly now here,

now there:
namely,
the craving for sensual delight,
the craving to be born again,
the craving for existence to end.

This is the Ariyan truth about the arising of Ill.

■

And what, monks, is the Ariyan truth about the ceasing of Ill?

Verily it is the utter passionless cessation of,
the giving up,
the forsaking,
the release from,
the absence of
longing for this craving.

This is the Ariyan truth about the ceasing of Ill.

■

And what, monks, is the Ariyan truth about the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill?

Verily it is this Ariyan eightfold way,
to wit:

Right view,
right aim,
right speech,
right action,
right living,
right effort,
right mindfulness,
right concentration.

This is the Ariyan truth about the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

■

These, monks, are the four Ariyan truths.

Wherefore an effort must be made to realize:

This is Ill.

This is the arising of Ill.

This is the ceasing of Ill.

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
2. Dhamma-Cakka-Pavattana Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

2. The Foundation of the Kingdom of the Norm

Sutta 15

Paṭhama Dhārana Suttaṃ

Bearing in Mind (a)

---

[362]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, do ye bear in mind
the four Ariyan truths

taught by me?"

At these words a certain monk said:

"I, lord, do bear in mind the Ariyan truths
taught by the Exalted One."

[363] "And how, monk, do you bear in mind
the four Ariyan truths
taught by me?"

"Thus, lord:

I bear in mind that Ill is the first Ariyan truth
taught by the Exalted One.

I bear in mind that the arising of Ill is the second Ariyan truth
taught by the Exalted One.

I bear in mind that the ceasing of Ill is the third Ariyan truth taught by the Exalted One.

I bear in mind that
the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill
is the fourth Ariyan truth
taught by the Exalted One.

That, lord, is how I bear in mind
the Ariyan truths
taught by the Exalted One."

"Well done, monk!

Well done, monk!

You rightly bear in mind
the four Ariyan truths
taught by me.

Ill
was indeed taught by me as the first Ariyan truth.

The arising of Ill
was taught by me
as the the second Ariyan truth.

The ceasing of Ill
was taught by me
as the the third Ariyan truth.

The practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill
was the fourth Ariyan truth
taught by me.

Thus, monk, do you bear in mind
the four Ariyan truths
taught by me.

Wherefore, monk, an effort must be made to realize:

This is Ill.

This is the arising of Ill.

This is the ceasing of Ill.

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
2. Dhamma-Cakka-Pavattana Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

2. The Foundation of the Kingdom of the Norm

Sutta 16

Dutiya Dhāraṇa Suttaṃ

Bearing in Mind (b)

---

[363]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, do ye bear in mind
the four Ariyan truths

taught by me?"

At these words a certain monk said:

"I, lord, do bear in mind
the Ariyan truths
taught by the Exalted One."

And how, monk, do you bear in mind
the four Ariyan truths
taught by me?"

"Thus, lord:

I bear in mind that Ill is the first Ariyan truth
taught by the Exalted One.

Whatsoever recluse or brahmin should say:

'This 'Ill'
is not the first Ariyan truth taught by Gotama the recluse.

Rejecting this Ill
as the first Ariyan truth,
I will proclaim another Ill,'

he could not do so.

■

I bear in mind that
the arising of Ill is the second Ariyan truth
taught by the Exalted One.

Whatsoever recluse or brahmin should say:

'The arising of Ill
is not the second Ariyan truth
taught by Gotama the recluse.

Rejecting this arising of Ill
as the second Ariyan truth,
I will proclaim another arising of Ill,'

he could not do so.

■

I bear in mind that
the ceasing of Ill
is the third Ariyan truth
taught by the Exalted One.

Whatsoever recluse or brahmin should say:

'The ceasing of Ill
is not the third Ariyan truth
taught by Gotama the recluse.

Rejecting this ceasing of Ill
as the third Ariyan truth,
I will proclaim another ceasing of Ill,'

he could not do so.

■

I bear in mind that
the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill
is the fourth Ariyan truth
taught by the Exalted One.

Whatsoever recluse or brahmin should say:

'The practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill
is not the fourth Ariyan truth
taught by Gotama the recluse.

Rejecting this practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill
as the fourth Ariyan truth,
I will proclaim another practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill,'

he could not do so.

That, lord, is how I bear in mind
the Ariyan truths
taught by the Exalted One."

"Well done, monk!

Well done, monk!

You rightly bear in mind
the four Ariyan truths
taught by me.

Ill
was indeed taught by me
as the first Ariyan truth.

Whatsoever recluse or [364] brahmin should say:

'This 'Ill'
is not the first Ariyan truth
taught by Gotama the recluse.

Rejecting this Ill
as the first Ariyan truth,
I will proclaim another Ill,'

he could not do so.

■

The arising of Ill
was taught by me
as the the second Ariyan truth.

Whatsoever recluse or brahmin should say:

'The arising of Ill
is not the second Ariyan truth
taught by Gotama the recluse.

Rejecting this arising of Ill
as the second Ariyan truth,
I will proclaim another arising of Ill,'

he could not do so.

■

The ceasing of Ill
was taught by me
as the the third Ariyan truth.

Whatsoever recluse or brahmin should say:

'The ceasing of Ill
is not the third Ariyan truth
taught by Gotama the recluse.

Rejecting this ceasing of Ill
as the third Ariyan truth,
I will proclaim another ceasing of Ill,'

he could not do so.

■

The practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill
was the fourth Ariyan truth
taught by me.

Whatsoever recluse or brahmin should say:

'The practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill
is not the fourth Ariyan truth
taught by Gotama the recluse.

Rejecting this practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill
as the fourth Ariyan truth,
I will proclaim another practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill,'

he could not do so.

Thus, monk, do you bear in mind
the four Ariyan truths
taught by me.

Wherefore, monk, an effort must be made to realize:

This is Ill.

This is the arising of Ill.

This is the ceasing of Ill.

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill."

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
2. Dhamma-Cakka-Pavattana Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

2. The Foundation of the Kingdom of the Norm

Sutta 17

Avijjā Suttaṃ

Ignorance

---

[364]

THUS have I heard:

Now a certain monk came to see the Exalted One
on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and compliments
sat down at one side.

Seated at one side he said to the Exalted One: -

"'Ignorance! Ignorance,' is the saying, lord.

Pray, lord, what is ignorance, and how far is one the victim of ignorance?"

"Monk, being ignorant about Ill, its arising,
its ceasing
and about the practice that leads to its ceasing is called 'ignorance,' and one who is thus ignorant is a victim of ignorance.

Wherefore, monk, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill.'

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
2. Dhamma-Cakka-Pavattana Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

2. The Foundation of the Kingdom of the Norm

Sutta 18

Vijjā Suttaṃ

Knowledge

---

[364]

THUS have I heard:

Now a certain monk came to see the Exalted One
on coming to him greeted him courteously,
and after the exchange of greetings and compliments
sat down at one side.

Seated at one side he said to the Exalted One: -

"'Knowledge! Knowledge,' is the saying, lord.

Pray, lord, what is knowledge, and how far is one possessed of knowledge?"

"Monk, knowing about Ill,
its arising,
its ceasing
and about the practice that leads to its ceasing is called 'knowledge,' and he who has this knowledge is one possessed of knowledge.

Wherefore, monk, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill.'

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
2. Dhamma-Cakka-Pavattana Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

2. The Foundation of the Kingdom of the Norm

Sutta 19

Saṇkāsanā Suttaṃ

Illustration[1]

---

[364]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, the Ariyan truth of
This is Ill
has been pointed out by me.

Therein are numberless shades and variations of meaning.[2]

Numberless are the ways of illustrating this Ariyan truth of
This is Ill.

■

The Ariyan truth of
'This is the arising of Ill'
has been pointed out by me.

Therein are numberless shades
and variations of meaning.

Numberless are the ways
of illustrating this Ariyan truth of
'This is the arising of Ill.'

■

The Ariyan truth of
'This is the ceasing of Ill'
has been pointed out by me.

Therein are numberless shades
and variations of meaning.

Numberless are the ways
of illustrating this Ariyan truth of
'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

■

The Ariyan truth of
'This [365] is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill' bas been pointed out by me.

Therein are numberless shades
and variations of meaning.

Numberless are the ways
of illustrating this Ariyan truth of
'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill'

Wherefore, monk, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill.'

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

---

[1] Sankāsanā. Other synonyms are pakāsanā, vivaraṇā, vibhājan'uttānī-karaṇa, paññatti. UdA. 9; Netti 5, etc.

[2] Vaṇṇā byañjanā: 'like a cook's flavourings and sauces.' Comy.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
2. Dhamma-Cakka-Pavattana Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

2. The Foundation of the Kingdom of the Norm

Sutta 20

Tathā Suttaṃ

True[1]

---

[365]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Benares,
at Isipatana,
in the Deer Park.

2. Monks, these four things are true, not false,[2]
not alterable.[3]

What four?

3. The fact of Ill, monks, is true,
not false,
not changeable.

4. The fact of the arising of Ill, monks, is true,
not false,
not changeable.

5. The fact of the ceasing of Ill, monks, is true,
not false,
not changeable.

6. The fact of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill, monks,
is true,
not false,
not changeable.

7. These are the four things that are true,
not false,
not changeable.

Wherefore, monks, ye must make an effort to realize:

'This is Ill',
'this is the arising of Ill',
'this is the ceasing of Ill',
'this is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill'".

---

[1] The adj. tatha = saccaṇ. Cf. tatha-bhāvo, the eternally, constantly true. Cf. S. ii, 26; VM. ii, 494 ff.; MA. i, 49; quoted at Kathāvatthu, ii, 325; Pts. of Contr., 189.

[2] A-vi-tathaṇ

[3] An-aññathaṇ

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
3. Koṭigāma Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

3. Koṭigāma

Sutta 21

Paṭhama Vijjā Suttaṃ

Knowledge (a)

---

[365]

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying among the Vajjians at Koṭigāma.[1]

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, it is through not understanding,
not penetrating
four Ariyan truths
that we have run on,
wandered on,
this long long road,
both you and I.

§

What are the four?

Through not understanding,
not penetrating
the Ariyan truth of Ill
we have run on,
wandered on,
this long long road,
both you and I.

■

Through not understanding,
not penetrating
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill
we have run on,
wandered on,
this long long road,
both you and I.

■

Through not understanding,
not penetrating
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill
we have run on,
wandered on,
this long long road,
both you and I.

■

Through not understanding,
not penetrating
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill
we have run on,
wandered on,
this long long road,
both you and I.

§

But now, monks,
the Ariyan truth of Ill
is understood,
is penetrated.

But now, monks,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill
is understood,
is penetrated.

But now, monks,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill

is understood,
is penetrated.

But now, monks,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill
is understood,
is penetrated.

Uprooted is the craving [366] to exist, destroyed is the channel[2] to becoming, there is no more coming to be."

Thus spake the Exalted One.

Then as Teacher he added this:

"Who have not really seen the fourfold Ariyan truth
A long long road must wander on thro' many births.

Clean gone is that which leads to birth when these are seen;
Torn up the root of Ill. There is no more becoming.[3]

---

[1] Not found elsewhere except at Dīgha, ii, 90 and JA, ii, 232, 'a village of the Vajjians, on the Ganges.'

[2] Bhava-netti (lit. 'conduit').

[3] Cf. D. ii, 91; Vin. i, 231.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
3. Koṭigāma Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

3. Koṭigāma

Sutta 22

Dutiya Vijjā Suttaṃ

Knowledge (b)[1]

---

[366]

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying among the Vajjians at Koṭigāma.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"'Monks, whatsoever recluses or brahmins
understand not,
as it really is,
'This is Ill';
who understand not,
as it really is,
'this is the arising of Ill';
who understand not,
as it really is,
'this is the ceasing of Ill';
who understand not,
as it really is,
'this is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill', -
such are not reckoned as recluses among recluses
nor as brahmins
among brahmins,
nor have those worthies,
in this very life,
of themselves realized
by their own knowledge
the reality of recluseship
or of brahminhood.

But whatsoever recluses or brahmins have understood,
as it really is,
'This is Ill';
who have understood,
as it really is,
'this is the arising of Ill';
who have understood,
as it really is,
'this is the ceasing of Ill';
who have understood,
as it really is,

'this is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill', -
such are not reckoned as recluses among recluses
nor as brahmins
among brahmins,
nor have those worthies,
in this very life,
of themselves realized
by their own knowledge
the reality of recluseship
or of brahminhood."

Thus spake the Exalted One.

Having thus spoken
the Happy One added this as Teacher:

Who understand not Ill, and how Ill comes to be,
And how Ill ceases utterly without remains,
Nor know the Way that leads on to Ill's ending,
Such lack the heart's release, they lack release by insight.
Helpless to make an end, to birth and eld they go.

But understanding Ill and how Ill comes to be,
And where Ill ceases utterly without remains, Knowing the Way that leads on to Ill's ending, Blessed with the heart's release, blessed with release by insight,
They, able to end all, go not to birth and eld.

---

[1] This Sutta occurs at Itivutt. 105-6, [#103] and in a different setting at SnA. v, 725: cf. SnA. 504. Our Comy. passes it by.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
3. Koṭigāma Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

3. Koṭigāma

Sutta 23

Sammā Sambuddho Suttaṃ

Fully Enlightened

---

[367]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth about Ill,
the Ariyan truth about the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth about about the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth about the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Monks, by the fact of understanding,
as they really are,
these four Ariyan truths, a Tathāgata is called
'Arahant, a Fully Enlightened One.'

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill.'

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
3. Koṭigāma Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

3. Koṭigāma

Sutta 24

Arahanta Suttaṃ

Arahants

---

[367]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, whatsoever Arahants,
fully enlightened ones,
in past time
had full understanding (of things)
as they really are,
all of them had full understanding
of the four Ariyan truths
as they really are.

Whatsoever Arahants,
fully enlightened ones,
shall in future time
have full understandmg of things
as they really are,
all of them will have full understanding
of the four Ariyan truths as they reñlly are.

Whatsoever Arahants,
fully enlightened ones,
do now fully understand things
as they really are,
all of them have full understanding
of the four Ariyan truths
as they really are.

What are the four?

The Ariyan truth about Ill,
the Ariyan truth about the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth about about the ceasing of Ill, the Ariyan truth about the practice
that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Monks, whatsoever Arahants,
fully enlightened ones,

in past time
had full understanding (of things)
as they really are,
all of them had full understanding
of the four Ariyan truths
as they really are.

Whatsoever Arahants,
fully enlightened ones,
shall in future time
have full understandmg of things
as they really are,
all of them will have full understanding
of the four Ariyan truths
as they reñlly are.

Whatsoever Arahants,
fully enlightened ones,
do now fully understand things
as they really are,
all of them have full understanding
of the four Ariyan truths
as they really are.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill.'

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

'This is the practice
that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
3. Koṭigāma Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

3. Koṭigāma

Sutta 25

Āsava-k-Khayo Suttaṃ

Destruction of the Āsavas[1]

---

[367]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, in him who knows,
in him who sees,
do I declare the āsavas to be destroyed:
not in him who knows not,
who sees not.

And what, monks, is the destruction of the āsavas in him who knows,
who sees?

In him who knows, who sees:

'This is Ill',

there is destruction of the āsavas.

■

In him who knows, who sees:

'This is the arising of Ill',

there is destruction of the āsavas.

In him who knows, who sees:

'This is the ceasing of Ill',

there is destruction of the āsavas.

■

In him who knows, who sees:

'This the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill',

there is destruction of the āsavas.

[368] Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill.'

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

---

[1] Cf. S. ii, 29; Pts. of Ccntr., 116.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
3. Koṭigāma Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

3. Koṭigāma

Sutta 26

Mittā Suttaṃ

Friends[1]

---

[368]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, those for whom ye have fellow-feeling,
those who may deem you worth listening to,
your friends and colleagues,
your kinsmen and blood-relations, - they ought to be roused to,
admonished and established in,
the comprehension of the four Ariyan truths
as they really are.

What four?

The Ariyan truth about Ill,
the Ariyan truth about the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth about about the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth about the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

"Monks, those for whom ye have fellow-feeling,
those who may deem you worth listening to,
your friends and colleagues,
your kinsmen and blood-relations, -
they ought to be roused to,
admonished and established in,
the comprehension of the four Ariyan truths
as they really are.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill.'

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

[1] Text, 189.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
3. Koṭigāma Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

3. Koṭigāma

Sutta 27

Tathā Suttaṃ

True

---

[368]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth about Ill,
the Ariyan truth about the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth about about the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth about the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

"Now, monks, these four Ariyan truths are true,
not false,
not alterable.

That is why they are called Ariyan truths.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill.'

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
3. Koṭigāma Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

3. Koṭigāma

Sutta 28

Loka Suttaṃ

The World

---

[368]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth about Ill,
the Ariyan truth about the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth about about the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth about the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

In the world
with its Devas,
its Māras,
its Brahmās,
its host of recluses and brahmins,
of Devas and mankind,
the Tathāgata is an Ariyan.

Therefore are they called 'Ariyan truths.'[1].

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill.'

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

---

[1] Comy. 'They are called "truths of the Ariyans," not "Ariyan truths," but are penetrated by way of the Ariyan truth.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
3. Koṭigāma Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

3. Koṭigāma

Sutta 29

Pariññeyyaṃ or Abhiññeyya Suttaṃ

To Be Fully Understood or Comprehended

---

[368]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth about Ill,
the Ariyan truth about the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth about about the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth about the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Of these four Ariyan truths, one is to be fully understood, one is to be abandoned, one is to be realized,
one is to be cultivated.

§

Which Ariyan truth is to be fully understood?

[369] Ill, as an Ariyan truth, is to be fully understood.

The arising of Ill,
as an Ariyan truth,
is to be abandoned.

The ceasing of Ill,
as an Ariyan truth,
is to be realized.

The practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill,
as an Ariyan truth,
is to be cultivated.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill.'

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
3. Koṭigāma Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

3. Koṭigāma

Sutta 30

Gavampati Suttaṃ

Gavampati[1]

---

[369]

THUS have I heard:

On a certain occasion a number of monks were staying among the Cetīs[2] at Sahajātā.[3]

Now on that occasion a number of elder monks, after going their rounds and eating their meal, were sitting in the pavilion.

As they sat there in company their talk chanced to fall on this subject:

"Friends, he who sees Ill also sees the arising of Ill, he also sees the ceasing of Ill
and the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill."

At these words
the venerable Gavampati said this to the elder monks:

"Friends, I have heard this,
I have learned this from the very lips of the Exalted One:

"Monks, whoso seeth Ill sees also the arising of Ill,
he also sees the ceasing of Ill
and the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Whoso seeth the arising of Ill sees also Ill,
the ceasing of Ill
and the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Whoso seeth the ceasing of Ill
sees also Ill,
the arising of Ill
and the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Whoso seeth the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill, he also sees Ill,
the arising of Ill
and the ceasing of Ill.'"

[1] Lit. 'bull' (lord of cows). A son of a Benares merchant; ordained by the Master in the very early days. Cf. Vin. i, 19; Brethren, p. 42; Dialog. ii, 373; Pts. of Contr., 133.

[2] The Cetīs (cf. Buddhist India, 28, 29), probably of Nepal. Text reads Cetesu.

[3] Sinh. MSS. Sahajāniyaṇ (-nāyaṇ). Comy. Sahajātāyaṇ; text (B), Sahañcanike (?). Cf. Vin. ii, 300; A. iii, 355 (Sahajātiyaṇ).

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
4. Siṃsapā Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

4. Siṃsapā Grove

Sutta 31

Siṃsapā Suttaṃ

Siṃsapā[1]

---

[370]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying at Kosambī in Siṇsapā Grove.

Then the Exalted One,
gathering up a few siṃsapa leaves in his hand,
said to the monks:

"What think ye, monks?

Which are the more numerous,
just this mere handful of Siṇsapā leaves I have here, or those in the grove overhead?"

"Very few in number, lord, are the leaves in the handful gathered up by the Exalted One:
much more in number
are those in the grove overhead."

"Just so, monks,
much more in number
are those things I have found out, but not revealed;
very few are the things I have revealed.

And why, monks, have I not revealed them?

Because they are not concerned with profit, they are not rudiments of the holy life, they conduce not to revulsion,
to dispassion,
to cessation,
to tranquIllity,
to full comprehension,
to the perfect wisdom,
to Nibbāna.

That is why I have not revealed them.[2]

And what is it, monks, that I have revealed?

Just that

This is Ill.

This is the arising of Ill.

This is the ceasing of Ill.

This is the practice
that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

And why so?

Because, monks,
this is concerned with profit.

It is the rudiments of the holy life.

It does conduce to revulsion,
to dispassion,
to cessation,
to tranquIllity,
to full comprehension,
to the perfect wisdom.

It does conduce to Nibbāna.

Therefore have I revealed it.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is ill.'

'This is the arising of ill.'

'This is the ceasing of ill.'

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill.'"

---

[1] Of the tree Dalbergia Sisu or the Asoka tree. Cf. A. i, 136; D. ii, 316; M.P. 413.

[2] Cf. D. ii, 100.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
4. Siṃsapā Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

4. Siṃsapā Grove

Sutta 32

Khadira Suttaṃ

The Acacia Tree

---

[371]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, if anyone should say:

'Without penetrating,
as it really is,
the Ariyan truth of Ill,
without penetrating,
as it really is,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
without penetrating,
as it really is,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
without penetrating,
as it really is,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill,
I will make an utter end of Ill' it would be an impossibility for him to do so.

Just as, if anyone should say:

'I will make a leaf-basket[1] of acacia leaves or of Judas-tree leaves or of myrobalan leaves, and fetch water in it,
or use them for a fan,'[2] it would be impossible for him to do so.

'Even so for him to make an utter end of Ill
without[3] penetrating,
as it really is,
the Ariyan truth of Ill,
without penetrating,
as it really is,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
without penetrating,
as it really is,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
without penetrating,

as it really is,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill, would be an impossibility.

§

But, monks, if anyone should say:

'I will make an utter end of Ill by penetrating,
as it really is,
the Ariyan truth of Ill,
by penetrating,
as it really is,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
by penetrating,
as it really is,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
by penetrating,
as it really is,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill,' I will make an utter end of Ill'
it could be done.

Just as, if anyone should say:

'I will make a leaf-basket of lotus-leaves or pulasa[4] leaves or creeper leaves,
or make a fan of them,'
it could be done.

So also if one were to say:

'I will make an utter end of Ill by penetrating,
as it really is,
the Ariyan truth of Ill,
by penetrating,
as it really is,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
by penetrating,
as it really is,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
by penetrating,
as it really is,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill,' I will make an utter end of Ill'
it could be done

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is ill.'

'This is the arising of ill.'

'This is the ceasing of ill.'

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill.'"

---

[1] Puṭaṇ. Palm fronds of different sorts are used for baskets in the tropics, and a plantain-leaf is used to make a cup. The leaves here mentioned would be too small for such purposes.

[2] Tālapatta, the broad leaves of the palmyra or of the taliat are used for fans and writing on. Lit. 'I will fetch water or a palm-leaf.'

[3] Text should read anabhisamecca.

[4] Palāsa (used above as the name of a small leaf) cannot stand here. I read pulāsa (Cf. JA. iii, 478) with Sinh. MSS. It is a jungle tree with large leaves.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
4. Siṃsapā Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

4. Siṃsapā Grove

Sutta 33

Daṇḍa Suttaṃ

The Stick[1]

---

[371]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, just as a stick, when thrown up into the air, falls, now on its butt, now on its middle,
now on its tip,
even so beings,
hindered by ignorance,
fettered by craving,
run on,
wander on,
pass on from this world to the next and thence come back again to this world.

What is the cause of it?

[372] Through the fact of not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill

The Ariyan truth of the arising of ill.

The Ariyan truth of the ceasing of ill.

The Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is ill.'

'This is the arising of ill.'

'This is the ceasing of ill.'

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill.'"

[1] Cf. S. ii, 185.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
4. Siṃsapā Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

4. Siṃsapā Grove

Sutta 34

Ceḷa Suttaṃ

Turban[1]

---

[372]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, when one's turban or head is ablaze, what is to be done?"

"Lord, when one's turban or head is ablaze, for the extinguishing thereof one must put forth extra desire,
effort,
endeavour,
exertion,
impulse,[2] mindfulness
and attention."

"Well, monks, letting alone,[3] paying no heed to,
the blazing turban or head, for the comprehension,
as they really are,
of the four not penetrated Ariyan truths, one must put forth extra desire,
effort,
endeavour,
exertion,
impulse,
mindfulness
and attention.

What are the four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill

The Ariyan truth of the arising of ill.

The Ariyan truth of the ceasing of ill.

The Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is ill.'

'This is the arising of ill.'

'This is the ceasing of ill.'

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill.'"

---

[1] Cf. S. i, 108, iii, 143 n. (ref. at VM. ii, 645); A. ii, 93.

[2] Appaṭivāni ('unfettered actions').

[3] Ajjhupekkhitvā; this word curiously has two opposite meanings: to attend to and to neglect (look with complacency on). Hence some MSS. read anajjkh. (The simile is ref. to at PvA. 149, in a similar sense.) Cf. supra, text, 69 n.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
4. Siṃsapā Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

4. Siṃsapā Grove

Sutta 35

Satti-Sata Suttaṃ

A Hundred Years

---

[372]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose, monks, a man whose span of life is a hundred years.[1]

Then they say to that man who lives a hundred years:

'See here, good fellow!

At early dawn
they will torture you with a hundred spears, again at midday
and again at eventide.

Now look you, friend,
thus tortured day by day with three hundred spears, you will live on to a hundred, reach a hundred years of age.

At the end of a hundred years you shall comprehend four Ariyan truths hitherto not comprehended.'

Well, monks, a clansman who had any sense might well undertake it.[2]

Why?

Because, monks,
incalculable[3] is the beginning of this faring [373] on.

The earliest point is not revealed (of the pain)
of blows from spears, swords

and axes.

Even if this were to befall one, monks,
I would not deem the full comprehension of four Ariyan truths to be won with sorrow and woe, but with joy and gladness.

What are the four?[4]

The Ariyan truth of Ill

The Ariyan truth of the arising of ill.

The Ariyan truth of the ceasing of ill.

The Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is ill.'

'This is the arising of ill.'

'This is the ceasing of ill.'

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill.'"

---

[1] Text should read vassa-sata-jīvin tam enaṇ.

[2] Alaṇ upagantuṇ (the torture).

[3] Anamatagga ('un-thought of-beginning'). Cf. K.S. ii, cap. xv ff.

[4] Text misprints vadāmi, 1. 7, pharasu (1. 4), and at 1. 8 omits abhisamayaṇ.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
4. Siṃsapā Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

4. Siṃsapā Grove

Sutta 36

Pāṇā Suttaṃ

Living Creatures

"Suppose, monks, a man should cut up all the grass, sticks,
branches
and stalks in this Jambudīpa and gather them together in a heap; were to bind them together and make a stake thereof.

Then, having made a stake of them, suppose he spitted all the mighty creatures in the mighty ocean on mighty stakes;
likewise all the creatures of middle size on stakes of middle size; likewise all the creatures of minute size on stakes of minute size.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
4. Siṃsapā Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

4. Siṃsapā Grove

Sutta 37

Paṭhama Suriy'Upamā Suttaṃ

The Parable of the Sun (a)

---

[373]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, just as the dawn is the forerunner,
the harbinger,

of the arising of the sun, even so is right view the forerunner,
the harbinger,
of fully comprehending the four Ariyan truths.

[374] Of a monk who bas rigbt view
it may be expected
that he will understand:|| ||

'This is Ill',
as it really is;

that he will understand:

'This is the arising of Ill', as it really is;

that he will understand:

'This is the ceasing of Ill', as it really is;

that he will understand:

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill',
as it really is.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is ill.'

'This is the arising of ill.'

'This is the ceasing of ill.'

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
4. Siṃsapā Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

4. Siṃsapā Grove

Sutta 38

Dutiya Suriy'Upamā Suttaṃ

The Parable of the Sun (b)

---

[374]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"So long, monks, as moon and sun arise not in the world, so long is there no shining forth

of great light,
of great radiance.

Then is there gloom and darkness,
a murk of gloom and darkness, no telling whether it is night or day, no telling of months or half-months
and the seasons of the year.|| ||

But, monks, when moon and sun shine in the world, then is there a shining forth
of great light,
of great radiance.

Then is there no more gloom and darkness,
no more murk of gloom and darkness,
but one can tell whether it is night or day, one can tell the months and the half-months
and the seasons of the year.

Just so, monks, so long as a Tathāgata arises not in the world, even so long is there no shining forth of the light,
of great radiance.

Then is there gloom and darkness,
a murk of gloom and darkness, then is there no proclamation
of the four Ariyan truths, no teaching,
no setting forth,

no establishing,
opening up,
analyzing
or making of them plain.

But, monks, as soon as a Tathāgata arises in the world,
then is there a shining forth
of great light,
of great radiance.

Then is there no more gloom and darkness,
no more murk of gloom and darkness;
then is there proclamation
of the four Ariyan truths, then is there teaching, setting forth,
establishing,
opening up,
analyzing
and making of them plain.

Of what four Ariyan truths?

The Ariyan truth of Ill.

The Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill.

The Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill.

The Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is ill.'

'This is the arising of ill.'

'This is the ceasing of ill.'

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
4. Siṃsapā Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

4. Siṃsapā Grove

Sutta 39

Inda-Khīla Suttaṃ

Foundation Stone

---

[375]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, whatsoever recluses or brahmins understand not,
as it really is,

the meaning of:

'This is ill;'

understand not,
as it really is,
the meaning of:

'This is the arising of ill;'

understand not,
as it really is,
the meaning of:

'This is the ceasing of ill;'

understand not,
as it really is,
the meaning of:

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill;'

such maybe scan the face of[1] some recluse or brahmin
and conclude:

'Surely this worthy
is one who knowing knows and seeing sees!'

■

Just as, monks,
a tuft of cotton-wool
or a ball of thistledown,
lightly wafted on the wind,
is cast down on level ground, and the east wind whirls it west, and the west wind whirls it east, the north wind whirls it south and the south wind whirls it north.

What is the cause of that?

Monks, it is the lightness of the ball of thistledown.

■

Just so, monks,
whatsoever recluses or brahmins understand not,
as it really is,
the meaning of:

'This is ill;'|| ||

understand not,
as it really is,
the meaning of:

'This is the arising of ill;'

understand not,
as it really is,
the meaning of:

'This is the ceasing of ill;'

understand not,
as it really is,
the meaning of:

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill;'

such maybe scan the face of some recluse or brahmin and conclude:

'Surely this worthy
is one who knowing knows
and seeing sees!'

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing clearly
the four Ariyan truths.

§

But whatsoever recluses or brahmins do understand,
as it really is,
the meaning of:

'This is ill;'

do understand,
as it really is,
the meaning of:

'This is the arising of ill;'

do understand,
as it really is,
the meaning of:

'This is the ceasing of ill;'

do understand,
as it really is,

the meaning of:

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill;'

such scan not the face
of some recluse or brahmin
and conclude:

'Surely this worthy
is one who knowing knows
and seeing sees!'

■

Again, monks, just as an iron pillar or threshould of a door[2] or some deep-set pedestal is unshakable,
unquakable:
if there came from the eastern quarter a violent blast of wind and rain,
it could not shake it,
could not make it quake
and quake again;
if there came from the western quarter
a violent blast of wind and rain,
it could not shake it,
could not make it quake
and quake again;
if there came from the northern quarter
a violent blast of wind and rain,
it could not shake it,
could not make it quake
and quake again;
if there came from the southern quarter
a violent blast of wind and rain,

it could not shake it,
could not make it quake
and quake again.

Why not?

Because, monks, that threshould is deep set,
that pedestal is deep set.

■

Even so, monks, whatsoever recluses or brahmins do understand,
as it really is,
the meaning of:

'This is ill;'

do understand,
as it really is,
the meaning of:

'This is the arising of ill;'

do understand,
as it really is,
the meaning of:

'This is the ceasing of ill;'

do understand,
as it really is,
the meaning of:

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill;'

such need not to scan not the face of some recluse or brahmin
and [376] conclude:

'Surely this worthy
is one who knowing knows
and seeing sees!'

Why so?

Because of seeing clear
the four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill.

The Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill.

The Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill.

The Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is ill.'

'This is the arising of ill.'

'This is the ceasing of ill.'

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill.'"

---

[1] Mukhaṇ ullokenti = ajjhāsayaṇ (disposition). Comy.

[2] Cf. text, 270; Dhp. 18, 298; Sn. 229 (SnA. 185).

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
4. Siṃsapā Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

4. Siṃsapā Grove

Sutta 40

Vādina Suttaṃ

Dogmatists

---

[376]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, whatsoever monk understands,
as it really is,

the meaning of:

'This is ill;'

understands,
as it really is,
the meaning of:

'This is the arising of ill;'

understands,
as it really is,
the meaning of:

'This is the ceasing of ill;'

understands,
as it really is,
the meaning of:

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill;'

suppose from the east
there comes a recluse or brahmin
looking for dogma,
searching for dogma,
in hopes of refuting such dogma,
it would be impossible for such recluse or brahmin
to shake that monk in his belief, standing as he does on truth:[1]
it would be impossible to make him quake or waver;

suppose from the west
there comes a recluse or brahmin
looking for dogma,
searching for dogma,
in hopes of refuting such dogma,

it would be impossible for such recluse or brahmin
to shake that monk in his belief,
standing as he does on truth:
it would be impossible to make him quake or waver;

suppose from the north
there comes a recluse or brahmin
looking for dogma,
searching for dogma,
in hopes of refuting such dogma,
it would be impossible for such recluse or brahmin
to shake that monk in his belief,
standing as he does on truth:
it would be impossible to make him quake or waver;

suppose from the south
there comes a recluse or brahmin
looking for dogma,
searching for dogma,
in hopes of refuting such dogma,
it would be impossible for such recluse or brahmin
to shake that monk in his belief,
standing as he does on truth:
it would be impossible to make him quake or waver.

Suppose, monks, a stone column sixteen cubits long,
and eight cubits of it are sunk in the ground below the pedestal, while eight cubits
are above the pedestal.

Then from the east
there comes a blast of wind and rain, -

it could not shake it,
could not make it quake or waver;

or from the west
there comes a blast of wind and rain, -
it could not shake it,
could not make it quake or waver;

or from the north
there comes a blast of wind and rain, -
it could not shake it,
could not make it quake or waver;

or from the south
there comes a blast of wind and rain, -
it could not shake it,
could not make it quake or waver.

What is the cause of that?

Because monks, the pedestal is deep set,
the stone column,
is deep dug.

Just in the same way, monks, whatsoever monk understands,
as it really is,
the meaning of:

'This is ill;'

understands,
as it really is,
the meaning of:

'This is the arising of ill;'

understands,
as it really is,
the meaning of:

'This is the ceasing of ill;'

understands,
as it really is,
the meaning of:

'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill;'

suppose from the east
there comes a recluse or brahmin
looking for dogma,
searching for dogma,
in hopes of refuting such dogma,
it would be impossible for such recluse or brahmin
to shake that monk in his belief,
standing as he does on truth:
it would be impossible to make him quake or waver;

suppose from the west
there comes a recluse or brahmin
looking for dogma,
searching for dogma,
in hopes of refuting such dogma,
it would be impossible for such recluse or brahmin
to shake that monk in his belief,
standing as he does on truth:
it would be impossible to make him quake or waver;

suppose from the north
there comes a recluse or brahmin
looking for dogma,
searching for dogma,
in hopes of refuting such dogma,

it would be impossible for such recluse or brahmin
to shake that monk in his belief,
standing as he does on truth:
it would be impossible to make him quake or waver;

suppose from the south
there comes a recluse or brahmin
looking for dogma,
searching for dogma,
in hopes of refuting such dogma,
it would be impossible for such recluse or brahmin
to shake that monk in his belief,
standing as he does on truth:
it would be impossible to make him quake or waver.

Why so?

It is because he clearly sees four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill.

The Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill.

The Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill.

The Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

[1] Saha-dhammena = dhammmena. It might mean 'by fair means.'

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
5. Papāta Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

5. The Precipice

Sutta 41

Cintā Suttaṃ

Reasoning

---

[377]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Rājagaha,
in Bamboo Grove,
at the Squirrels' Feeding Ground.

Now on that occasion the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Once upon a time, monks,
a certain man left Rājagaha with this intention:

'I will speculate about the world';

and be came to Sumāgavā[1] Lotus Pond.

On reaching it he sat down on the bank of the lotus pond and fell to speculating about the world.[2]

Now, monks, that man saw an army with its four divisions (of elephants and horses, chariots and infantry) entering a lotus stalk.

On seeing it he thought:

'I must be mad!

I must be out of my mmd,[3]
for I have seen
what does not exist in the world!'

Well, monks, that man went into the town and told a great crowd of folk:

'Sirs, I must be mad!

I must be out of my mmd,
for I have seen
what does not exist in the world!'

'How's that, good fellow?

How are you mad?

How are you out of your mind?

What have you seen that's not in the world?'

'Why, sirs, it's like this:

I left Rājagaha with this intention:

"I will speculate about the world", and I came to Sumāgavā Lotus Pond.

When I got there
I sat down on the bank of the pond
and fell to speculating
about the world.

Then, sirs, I saw an army with its four divisions
entering a lotus stalk.[4]

That, sirs, is how I must be mad, must be out of my mind, for I saw what does not exist in the world.'

[378] 'Indeed, good fellow, you are mad,
you are out of your mind!

What you saw does not exist in the world!'

Now, monks, what that man saw was real,
not unreal.

Once upon a time, monks,
the hosts of the Devas and the Asuras were arrayed for battle, and in that battle

the Devas won the day,
the Asuras were defeated;
and the Asuras,
defeated and panic-stricken, entered Asura Town
by way of a lotus-stalk, in terror of the Devas.[5]

Wherefore, monks,
reason not about the world[6] thus:

'Eternal is the world' or 'Not eternal is the world'.

'Finite is the world' or 'Infinite is the world'.

'Life is the same as body' or 'Life and body are different'.

'The Tathāgata exists after death' or 'The Tathāgata exists not after death'; or
'He both exists and exists not after death'; or 'The Tathāgata neither exists nor not-exists after death.'

Why do I say this?

Because, monks, such reasonings are not concerned with profit, are not concerned with the rudiments of the holy life:
conduce not to revulsion,
to dispassion,
to cessation,
to tranquillity,
to comprehension,
to perfect wisdom,
conduces not to Nibbāna.

When ye reason, monks, reason thus:

'This is ill.

This is the arising of ill.

This is the ceasing of ill.

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill.'

Why do I say so?

Because, monks, such reasonings are concerned with profit, concerned with the rudiments of the holy life:
conduce to revulsion,
to dispassion,
to cessation,
to tranquillity,
to comprehension,
to the perfect wisdom
conduce to Nibbāna.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

---

[1] Text has Sumāgadhā, but Sinh. MSS. and Comy., which I follow, Sumāgavā (a tank near Rājagaha).

[2] Loka-cintā. Comy. 'Such as: Who made the moon and sun? Who made the earth, the ocean, beings, mountains, mangoes, coconuts, etc.?'

[3] Viceto = vikhitta-citta. Comy.

[4] Here the Asuras would seem to be fairies or nature-spints.

[5] Text bhāyamānā, but v.ll. and Comy. mohayamānā, expl. as devānaṃ cittaṃ mohattā.

[6] Text, 418.

References:

AN 4.77
SN 5.56.8

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
5. Papāta Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

5. The Precipice

Sutta 42

Papāta Suttaṃ

The Precipice

---

[378]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying near Rājagaha, on the hill Vulture's Peak.

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks, let us go to Splendid Spur[1] for the noonday rest."

"So be it, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

So the Exalted One with a number of monks came to [379] Splendid Spur.

Now a certain monk saw the great precipice and on seeing it said to the Exalted One:

"Lord, this is indeed a great precipice!

This is indeed a fearsome precipice, lord!

Pray, lord, is there anywhere a precipice greater and more frightful?"

"Yes, monk.

There is indeed a precipice greater
and more frightful.

§

And what is that?

Monks, whatsoever recluses or brahmins
understand not,
as it really is,
the meaning of
'This is Ill;'

understand not,
as it really is,
the meaning of
'This is the arising of Ill;'

understand not,
as it really is,
the meaning of
'This is the ceasing of Ill;'

understand not,
as it really is,
the meaning of
'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill;'

such delight in activities
delight in activities that lead to rebirth, delight in activities that lead to old age,
delight in activities that lead to death,
delight in activities that lead to sorrow,
grief,
woe,
lamentation
and despair.

Thus taking delight in activities
delight in activities that lead to rebirth,
delight in activities that lead to old age,
delight in activities that lead to death,
delight in activities that lead to sorrow,
grief,
woe,
lamentation
and despair,
they compose a compound[2] of activities that conduce to rebirth,
they compose a compound of activities that conduce to old age,
they compose a compound of activities that conduce to death, they compose a compound of activities that conduce to sorrow,
grief,
woe,

lamentation
and despair.

Thus composing a compound of activities
that conduce to rebirth,
composing a compound of activities that lead to old age, composing a compound of activities that lead to death, composing a compound of activities that lead to sorrow,
grief,
woe,
lamentation
and despair,
they fall down the precipice of rebirth, they fall down the precipice of old age, they fall down the precipice of death, they fall down the precipice of sorrow,
grief,
woe,
lamentation
and despair.

Such are not released from rebirth,
old age,
death,
sorrow,
grief,
woe,
lamentation
and despair.

They are not released from Ill,
I declare.

§

But, monks, those recluses or brahmins who do understand,
as it really is,
the meaning of
'This is Ill;'

who do understand,
as it really is,
the meaning of
'This is the arising of Ill;'

who do understand,
as it really is,
the meaning of
'This is the ceasing of Ill;'

who do understand,
as it really is,
the meaning of
'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill;'

such take not delight in activities that conduce to rebirth, take not delight in activities that conduce to old age,
take not delight in activities that conduce to death,
take not delight in activities that conduce to sorrow,
grief,
woe,
lamentation
and despair.

Not taking delight in activities that conduce to rebirth,
not taking delight in activities that conduce to old age, not taking delight in activities that conduce to death,
not taking delight in activities that conduce to sorrow,
grief,
woe,

lamentation
and despair
they compose not a compound of activities that conduce to rebirth they compose not a compound of activities that conduce to old age, they compose not a compound of activities that conduce to death, they compose not a compound of activities that conduce to sorrow,
grief,
woe,
lamentation
and despair.

Not composing a compound of activities that conduce to rebirth, not composing a compound of activities that conduce to old age, not composing a compound of activities that conduce to death,
not composing a compound of activities that conduce to sorrow,
grief,
woe,
lamentation
and despair,
they fall not down the precipice of rebirth, they fall not down the precipice of old age, they fall not down the precipice of death, they fall not down the precipice of sorrow,
grief,
woe,
lamentation
and despair.

They are utterly released from rebirth,
old age,
death,
sorrow,
grief,
woe,
lamentation
and despair.

They are released from Ill,
I declare.

§

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

---

[1] Paṭibhāna-kūto (? prati-bhā 'splendour'). Not mentioned elsewhere. Comy. 'a great mountain-like perforated rook.'

[2] Sankhāre abhisaṇkharonti. Cf. S. iii, 87; K.S. iii, 73.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
5. Papāta Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

5. The Precipice

Sutta 43

Pariḷāha Suttaṃ

Distress

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
5. Papāta Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

5. The Precipice

Sutta 44

Kūṭāgara Suttaṃ

The Peaked House

---

[380]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"If anyone, monks, should say:

'Without fully comprehending
as it really is,
the Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill
I will make an utter end of Ill,'
it would be impossible for him to do so.

Suppose, monks, one should say:

'Without building the lower part of a house,
I will fix the upper part,'
he could not do it.

Just so, monks, if one should say:

'Without fully comprehending
as it really is,
the Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill
I will make an utter end of Ill,' it would be impossible for him to do so.

§

But if one should say:

'By fully comprehending,
as it really is,
the Ariyan truth of Ill,

the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill
I will make an utter end of Ill,' it would be possible for him to do so.

Suppose, monks, someone should say:

'After building the lower part of a house
I will fix the upper part,'
he could do so.

Just so, if one should say:

'By fully comprehending,
as it really is,
the Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill
I will make an utter end of Ill,'
it would be possible for him to do so.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
5. Papāta Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

5. The Precipice

Sutta 45

Paṭhama Chiggaḷa Suttaṃ

The Keyhole[1]

---

[381]

Thus have I heard:

On a certain occasion the Exalted One was staying at Vesālī
in Great Grove,
at the Hall of the Peaked Gable.

Now the venerable Ānanda,
robing himself in the forenoon
and taking bowl and outer robe, went into Vesālī to beg.

Then the venerable Ānanda saw a number of Licchavi youths in the gymnasium,[2] making practice at archery,[3] shooting even at a distance through a very small keyhole, and splitting an arrow,[4]
shot after shot,
without ever a miss.

Now when the venerable Ānanda saw it he exclaimed to himself:

"Practised shots are these Licchavi youths!

Well practised shots indeed are these Licchavi youths, to be able to shoot like this even at a distance!"

So when the venerable Ānanda had gone his rounds in Vesālī, had returned and eaten his meal, he went to see the Exalted One,
and on coming to him
saluted him
and sat down at one side.

So seated
the venerable Ānanda said this to the Exalted One:

"Here, lord, robing myself in the forenoon
and taking bowl and outer robe
I set out for Vesālī on my begging rounds.

Then, lord, I saw a number of Licchavi youths in the gymnasium
making practice at archery, shooting even from a distance
through a very small keyhole,

and splitting an arrow,
shot after shot,
with never a miss.

And I said to myself, lord:

'Practised shots are these Licchavi youths!

Well practised shots indeed are these Licchavi youths, to be able even at a distance to splinter an arrow
through a very small keyhole,
shot after shot,
with never a miss!'"

"Now what think you, Ānanda?

Which is the harder,
which is the harder task to compass:

To shoot like that or [382] to pierce one strand of a hair, a hundred times divided,
with another strand?"[5]

"Why, lord, of course to split a hair,
a hundred times divided,
with another strand is the harder, much the harder task."

"Just so, Ānanda,
they who penetrate the meaning of:

'This is Ill',
'This is the arising of Ill',

'This is the ceasing of Ill',
'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill', pierce through something much harder to pierce.

Wherefore, Ānanda, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill.

This is the arising of Ill.

This is the ceasing of Ill.

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'

---

[1] Chiggaḷa. In next Sutta it has a different meaning.

[2] Santhāgāre. Comy. sippa-gaṇhana-sālāyaṇ.

[3] Upāsanaṇ karonte. For amazmg feats of archery see JA. v, 130 ff., referred to below.

[4] Asanaṇ atipātente = kaṇḍaṇ atikkamente: 'getting the better of a shaft' Comr. (who explams that the arrow following split the one before it).

[5] Comy. (referring to the feats of Jotipāla at JA. v, 130), if I under stand it aright, says: 'Splitting a hair into a hundred strands he takes (? strand) and binds an egg-plant (vātmgaṇa, misinterpreted at JA. trans. in the Cambridge Series) on its middle, and binds another strand to the tip of his arrow. Then standing at the distance of one usabha (? 140 cubits) he pierces, with the end tied on his arrow, that which is tied to the egg-plant.' Cf. Dhp*A*. i, 288.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
5. Papāta Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

5. The Precipice

Sutta 46

Andhakāra Suttaṃ

Gross Darkness

---

[382]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Monks, there is a darkness of interstellar space,[1] impenetrable gloom,
such a murk of darkness as cannot enjoy the splendour of this moon and sun, though they be of such mighty magic power and majesty."

At these words
a certain monk said to the Exalted One:

"Lord, that must be a mighty darkness, a mighty darkness indeed!

Pray, lord, is there any other darkness greater and more fearsome than that?"

"There is indeed, monk, another darkness,
greater and more fearsome."

"Pray, lord, what is that other darkness greater and more fearsome than that?"[ed1]

"Whatsoever recluses or brahmins
understand not,
as it really is,
the meaning of
'This is Ill;'

understand not,
as it really is,
the meaning of
'This is the arising of Ill;'

understand not,
as it really is,
the meaning of
'This is the ceasing of Ill;'

understand not,
as it really is,
the meaning of
'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill;'

such delight in activities
delight in activities that lead to rebirth,[2]
delight in activities that lead to old age,
delight in activities that lead to death,
delight in activities that lead to sorrow,
grief,
woe,
lamentation
and despair.

Thus taking delight in activities
delight in activities that lead to rebirth,
delight in activities that lead to old age,
delight in activities that lead to death,
delight in activities that lead to sorrow,
grief,
woe,
lamentation
and despair,
they compose a compound of activities that conduce to rebirth,
they compose a compound of activities that conduce to old age,
they compose a compound of activities that conduce to death,
they compose a compound of activities that conduce to sorrow,
grief,
woe,
lamentation
and despair.

Thus composing a compound of activities
that conduce to rebirth,
composing a compound of activities that lead to old age,

composing a compound of activities that lead to death,
composing a compound of activities that lead to sorrow,
grief,
woe,
lamentation
and despair,
they fall down into the darkness of rebirth, they fall down into the darkness of old age, they fall down into the darkness of death, they fall down into the darkness of sorrow,
grief,
woe,
lamentation
and despair.

Such are not released from rebirth,
old age,
death,
sorrow,
grief,
woe,
lamentation
and despair.

They are not released from Ill,
I declare.

§

[383] But, monks, those recluses or brahmins who do understand,
as it really is,
the meaning of
'This is Ill;'

who do understand,
as it really is,
the meaning of
'This is the arising of Ill;'

who do understand,
as it really is,
the meaning of
'This is the ceasing of Ill;'

who do understand,
as it really is,
the meaning of
'This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of ill;'

such take not delight in activities that conduce to rebirth,
take not delight in activities that conduce to old age,
take not delight in activities that conduce to death,
take not delight in activities that conduce to sorrow,
grief,
woe,
lamentation
and despair.

Not taking delight in activities that conduce to rebirth,
not taking delight in activities that conduce to old age,
not taking delight in activities that conduce to death,
not taking delight in activities that conduce to sorrow,
grief,
woe,
lamentation
and despair
they compose not a compound of activities that conduce to rebirth
they compose not a compound of activities that conduce to old age, they compose not a compound of activities that conduce to death, they compose not a compound of activities that conduce to sorrow,

grief,
woe,
lamentation
and despair.

Not composing a compound of activities that conduce to rebirth,
not composing a compound of activities that conduce to old age,
not composing a compound of activities that conduce to death,
not composing a compound of activities that conduce to sorrow,
grief,
woe,
lamentation
and despair,
they fall not down into the darkness of rebirth, they fall not down into the darkness of old age, they fall not down into the darkness of death, they fall not down into the darkness of sorrow,
grief,
woe,
lamentation
and despair.

They are utterly released from rebirth,
old age,
death,
sorrow,
grief,
woe,
lamentation
and despair.

They are released from Ill,
I declare.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

---

[1] Lokantarikā aghā.

[2] Text, 449.

[ed1] Woodward omits and puts the question into the mouth of the Buddha.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
5. Papāta Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

5. The Precipice

Sutta 47

Dutiya Chiggaḷa Suttaṃ

Yoke-hole (a)[1]

---

[383]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose, monks, a man should throw into the mighty ocean a yoke with a single hole, and there were a blind turtle to pop up to the surface once in every hundred years.

Now what think ye, monks?

Would that blind turtle push his neck through that yoke with one hole whenever he popped up to the surface, once at the end of every hundred years?"

"It might be so, lord,
now and again,
after the lapse of a long time."

"Well, monks, sooner I declare would that blind turtle push his neck
through that yoke with one hole, popping up to the surface once in a hundred years, than would a fool
who has gone to the Downfall become a man again.[2]

What is the reason for that?

Because, monks, here prevails no practice of the holy life, no righteous living,
no doing of good deeds, no working of merit,
but just cannibalism
and preying on weaker creatures.

Why so?

It is through not seeing
the four Ariyan truths,
to wit:

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
[384] the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

---

[1] Chiggaḷa. Cf. above and M. iii, 169; Expos. i, 80; Sisters, 173; Brethren, 30; Mil. Panh., 204.

[2] At M. iii, 169, he may become a man again, but only in a low caste, in miserable conditions. Apparently those who fail to reach the state of Stream-winning by the end of the kalpa are 'thrown down' and have to begin again an elementary condition when the next kalpa starts.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
5. Papāta Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

5. The Precipice

Sutta 48

Tatiya Chiggaḷa Suttaṃ

Yoke-hole (b)[1]

---

[384]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose, monks, this mighty earth were one mass of water, and a man were to throw down thereon a yoke with one hole.

Then comes a wind from the east and wafts it west,
and a wind from the west wafts it east:
a north wind wafts it south and a south wind wafts it north.

Then once at the end of a hundred years a blind turtle pops up to the surface.

Now what think ye, monks?

Would that blind turtle push his neck through that yoke with one hole whenever he popped up to the surface
at the end of a hundred years?"

"It is unlikely,[2] lord, that the blind turtle would do that."

"It is just as unlikely, monks, that one will get birth in human form, just as unhkely
that a Tathāgata should arise in the world, an Arahant,
a fully Enlightened One;
just as unlikely, monks, that the Norm and Discipline proclaimed by a Tathāgata should be shown in the world.

But now indeed, monks, this state of human birth is won,
and a Tathāgata has arisen in the world, and the Norm and Discipline proclaimed by the Tathāgata is shown in the world.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

---

[1] This Sutta introduces the passages (from M. iii) omitted in the previous one.

[2] A-dhiccaṇ. Comy. idaṇ adhicc'uppatikaṇ (viz. provided that the yoke did not rot away, or the sea dry up, or the turtle die), and suggests the meaning as yad'icchā-vasena ('at pleasure')!

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
5. Papāta Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

5. The Precipice

Sutta 49

Paṭhama Sineru Suttaṃ

Sineru (a)

---

[384]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose, monks, a man should lay down on Sineru, lord of mountains, seven grains of gravel

as large as beans.[1]

Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the more,
those seven grains of gravel
as large as beans laid there, or Sineru, lord of mountains?"

[385] "Why, lord, this is greater, this Sineru, lord of mountains.

Very small are the seven grains of gravel laid down as large as beans.

They cannot be reckoned,
cannot be compared with it:
they do not come to the merest fraction of a part when compared with Sineru, lord of mountains."

"Even so, monks, for the Ariyan disciple who is blessed with vision, for a person of understanding,
far greater is this Ill
which he has destroyed,
which he has used up,
and infinitely small
is that Ill which remains.

It cannot be reckoned,
cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction of a part of it, when set beside that Ill
which he has destroyed,

which he has used up, - that is, it is just a period of seven lives at most,[2]
for the man who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the arising of Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the ceasing of Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

---

[1] Cf. S. ii, 134-7; K.S. ii, 95 ff.

[2] Satta-k-khattuṇ paramatā. Cf. n. to K.S. ii, 95. Comy. 'a measure of seven existences (rebirths)'; i.e., such a man is a Stream-winner.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
5. Papāta Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

5. The Precipice

Sutta 50

Dutiya Sineru Suttaṃ

Sineru (b)

---

[385]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose, monks, Sineru, lord of mountains, should come to[1] extinction, should come to an end, all save seven grains of gravel
as large as beans.

Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the more,
that part of Sineru, lord of mountains, which has come to extinction,
come to an end,
or those seven grains of gravel
as large as beans?"

"Why, lord, that part of Sineru, lord of mountains, is the more.

Very small are seven grains of gravel
as large as beans.

They cannot be reckoned,
they cannot be compared with it:
they do not come to the merest fraction of a part when set beside all that part of Sineru which is extinguished, which has come to an end."

"Just so, monks, for the Ariyan disciple who is blessed with vision, for a person of understanding,
far greater is this Ill which he has destroyed,
which he has used up,
and infinitely small
is that Ill which remains.

It cannot be reckoned,
cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction of a part of it,
when set beside that Ill
which he has destroyed,
which he has used up, -
that is, it is just a period of seven lives at most,
for the man who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the arising of Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the ceasing of Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'

Wherefore, monk, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

---

[1] Cf. S. ii, 138. Text inserts yam here, omitted by Sinh. MSS., but required in next §.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
6. Abhisamaya Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

6. Comprehension

1

Sutta 51

Nakha-Sikha Suttaṃ

Tip of the Nail

---

[386]

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small[2]
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth,[3] -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Well, just so, monks,
for the Ariyan disciple who is blessed with vision,
for the person who has understanding,
far greater is this Ill which he has destroyed,
which he has used up,
and infinitely small
is that Ill which remains.

It cannot be reckoned,
cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside that Ill
which he has destroyed,
which he has used up, -
that is, it is just a period of seven lives at most

for the man who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the arising of Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the ceasing of Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'

Wherefore, monk, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

---

[1] All the similes of this chapter are nearly the same as those at S. ii, 133.

[2] Text should read appamattak'āyaṇ B.

[3] Text should read -pathaviṇ; and dukkhan ti [(p. 460, 1. 3).]

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
6. Abhisamaya Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

6. Comprehension

Sutta 52

Pokkharaṇī Suttaṃ

The Tank

---

[386]

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose, monks, there were a tank of fifty yojanas in length, fifty yojanas in width, fifty in depth,

full of water,
brimful,
so that a crow could drink therefrom;
and thence a man draws water on the tip of a blade of grass.

Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the more,
the water [387] drawn up on the tip of a blade of grass or the water that is in the tank?"

"This, lord, is the more,
the water in the tank.

Very little is the water drawn up on the tip of a blade of grass:
it cannot be reckoned,
cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the water in the tank, - that water drawn up on the tip of a blade of grass."

"Well, just so, monks,
for the Ariyan disciple who is blessed with vision,
for the person who has understanding,
far greater is this Ill which he has destroyed,
which he has used up,
and infinitely small
is that Ill which remains.

It cannot be reckoned,
cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside that Ill
which he has destroyed,
which he has used up, -
that is, it is just a period of seven lives at most
for the man who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the arising of Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the ceasing of Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'

Wherefore, monk, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
6. Abhisamaya Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

6. Comprehension

Sutta 53

Paṭhama Sambejja Suttaṃ

Confluence (a)

---

[387]

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose, monks, that where these great rivers,
to wit:

Ganges, Yamunā,
Aciravatī,
Sarabhū
and Mahī
flow together,
meet together,
a man draws two or three drops of water.

Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the more,
those two or three drops of water thus drawn up or the water at the confluence?"

"Why, lord, this is the more,
the water at the confluence.

Exceeding small are the two or three drops of water drawn up:
they cannot be reckoned,
they cannot be compared therewith.

They do not amount to the merest fraction of a part of the water at the confluence, - these two or three drops of water thus drawn up."

"Well, just so, monks,
for the Ariyan disciple who is blessed with vision,
for the person who has understanding,
far greater is this Ill which he has destroyed,
which he has used up,
and infinitely small
is that Ill which remains.

It cannot be reckoned,
cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside that Ill
which he has destroyed,
which he has used up, -
that is, it is just a period of seven lives at most
for the man who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the arising of Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the ceasing of Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'

Wherefore, monk, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
6. Abhisamaya Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

6. Comprehension

Sutta 54

Dutiya Sambejja Suttaṃ

Confluence (b)

---

[387]

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose, monks, that where these great rivers,
to wit:

Ganges, Yamunā,
Aciravatī,
Sarabhū
and Mahī
flow together,
meet together,
the water wastes away
and comes to an end, except two or three drops.

Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater:
the water at the confluence,
which has wasted away
and come to an end,
or those two or three drops that remain?"

"Why, lord, this water at the confluence, that has wasted away,
come to an end,
is the greater.

Exceeding small
are those two or three drops that remain:
they cannot be reckoned,
[388] they cannot be compared therewith.

They do not amount to the merest fraction
of a part of the water at the confluence, -
these two or three drops of water thus drawn up."

"Well, just so, monks,
for the Ariyan disciple who is blessed with vision,
for the person who has understanding,
far greater is this Ill which he has destroyed,

which he has used up,
and infinitely small
is that Ill which remains.

It cannot be reckoned,
cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside that Ill
which he has destroyed,
which he has used up, -
that is, it is just a period of seven lives at most
for the man who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the arising of Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the ceasing of Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'

Wherefore, monk, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
6. Abhisamaya Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

6. Comprehension

Sutta 55

Paṭhama Paṭhavī Suttaṃ

The Earth (a)

---

[388]

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose, monks, that a man lays together on the mighty earth

seven balls of clay
as big as kola-stones.[1]

Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater:
those balls of clay as big as kola-stones,
thus laid together,
or this mighty earth?"

"Why, lord, this mighty earth is the greater.

Exceeding small
are the balls of clay
as big as kola-stones:
they cannot be reckoned,
they cannot be compared therewith.|| ||

They do not amount to the merest fraction of a part of this mighty earth, - those balls of clay
as big as kola-stones."

"Well, just so, monks,
for the Ariyan disciple who is blessed with vision,
for the person who has understanding,
far greater is this Ill which he has destroyed,
which he has used up,
and infinitely small
is that Ill which remains.

It cannot be reckoned,
cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside that Ill

which he has destroyed,
which he has used up, -
that is, it is just a period of seven lives at most
for the man who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the arising of Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the ceasing of Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'

Wherefore, monk, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

---

[1] The fruit of the jujube tree.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
6. Abhisamaya Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

6. Comprehension

Sutta 56

Dutiya Paṭhavī Suttaṃ

The Earth (b)

---

[388]

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose, monks, the mighty earth should waste away,
come to an end,

all except just seven balls of clay
as big as kola-stones.

Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater:
that part of the mighty earth
which has wasted away,
come to an end,
or those seven balls of clay,
as big as kola-stones,
that remain?"

"Why, lord, greater is that part of the mighty earth
which has wasted away,
come to an end.

Exceeding small are the seven balls of clay
as big as kola-stones
that remain:
they cannot be reckoned,
cannot be compared therewith.

They do not amount to the merest fraction of a part of the mighty earth
that has wasted away,
come to an end, -
those seven balls of clay
as big as kola-stones."

"Well, just so, monks,
for the Ariyan disciple who is blessed with vision,
for the person who has understanding,
far greater is this Ill which he has destroyed,
which he has used up,
and infinitely small
is that Ill which remains.

It cannot be reckoned,
cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside that Ill
which he has destroyed,
which he has used up, -
that is, it is just a period of seven lives at most
for the man who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the arising of Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the ceasing of Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'

Wherefore, monk, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
6. Abhisamaya Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

6. Comprehension

Sutta 57

Paṭhama Samudda Suttaṃ

The Ocean (a)

---

[389]

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose, monks, the water in the mighty ocean[ed1] and thence a man draws away two or three drops of water.

Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the more:
that water of the mighty ocean
or those two or three drops of water?"

"Why, lord, greater is the water of the mighty ocean.

Exceeding small are those two or three drops of water:
they cannot be reckoned,
cannot be compared therewith.

They do not amount to the merest fraction of a part of the mighty ocean-
those two or three drops of water."

"Well, just so, monks,
for the Ariyan disciple who is blessed with vision,
for the person who has understanding,
far greater is this Ill which he has destroyed,
which he has used up,
and infinitely small
is that Ill which remains.

It cannot be reckoned,
cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside that Ill
which he has destroyed,
which he has used up, -
that is, it is just a period of seven lives at most

for the man who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the arising of Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the ceasing of Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

---

ed1 Woodward has here the translation for the next sutta which he repeats for the next sutta. I have reconstructed what he might have had here.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
6. Abhisamaya Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

6. Comprehension

Sutta 58

Dutiya Samudda Suttaṃ

The Ocean (b)

---

[389]

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose, monks, the water in the mighty ocean should waste away,

be used up,
all except two or three drops of water.

Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the more:
that water of the mighty ocean
which has wasted away,
been used up,
or those two or three drops of water
that remain?"

"Why, lord, greater is the water of the mighty ocean
which has wasted away,
come to an end.

Exceeding small are those two or three drops of water that remain:
they cannot be reckoned,
cannot be compared therewith.

They do not amount to the merest fraction
of a part of the mighty ocean
which has wasted away,
come to an end, -
those two or three drops of water
that remain."

"Well, just so, monks,
for the Ariyan disciple who is blessed with vision,
for the person who has understanding,
far greater is this Ill which he has destroyed,
which he has used up,
and infinitely small
is that Ill which remains.

It cannot be reckoned,
cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside that Ill
which he has destroyed,
which he has used up, -
that is, it is just a period of seven lives at most
for the man who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the arising of Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the ceasing of Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
6. Abhisamaya Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

6. Comprehension

Sutta 59

Paṭhama Pabbat'Upamā Suttaṃ

Simile of the Mountain (a)

---

[389]

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose, monks, a man should lay down together on Himalaya, lord of mountains,

seven grains of gravel
as large as mustard seeds.

Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater:
those seven grains of gravel
as large as mustard seeds, or this Himalaya, lord of mountains?"

"Why, lord, greater is this Himalaya, lord of mountains.

Exceeding small are the seven grains of gravel
as large as mustard seeds
thus laid together:
they cannot be reckoned,
cannot be compared therewith.

They do not amount to the merest fraction of a part of Himalaya, lord of mountains, those seven grains of gravel
as large as mustard seeds."

"Well, just so, monks,
for the Ariyan disciple who is blessed with vision,
for the person who has understanding,
far greater is this Ill which he has destroyed,
which he has used up,
and infinitely small
is that Ill which remains.

It cannot be reckoned,
cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside that Ill

which he has destroyed,
which he has used up, -
that is, it is just a period of seven lives at most
for the man who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the arising of Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the ceasing of Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
6. Abhisamaya Vagga

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

6. Comprehension

Sutta 60

Dutiya Pabbat'Upamā Suttaṃ

Simile of the Mountain (b)

---

[389]

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," replied those monks to the Exalted One.

The Exalted One said:

"Suppose, monks, that Himalaya, lord of mountains, should waste away,

come to an end,
except for seven grains of gravel
as large as mustard seeds.

[390] Now what tbink ye, monks?

Which is the greater:
that part of Himalaya, lord of mountains,
that has wasted away,
come to an end,
or those seven grains of gravel
as large as mustard seeds?"

Why, lord, this is the greater,
Himalaya, lord of mountains.

Exceeding small
are the seven grains of gravel
as large as mustard seeds.

They cannot be reckoned,
cannot be compared therewith:
they do not amount to the merest fraction of a part when laid beside that part of Himalaya that has wasted away,
come to an end, -
those seven grains of gravel
as large as mustard seeds."

"Well, just so, monks,
for the Ariyan disciple who is blessed with vision,
for the person who has understanding,
far greater is this Ill which he has destroyed,
which he has used up,
and infinitely small
is that Ill which remains.

It cannot be reckoned,
cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside that Ill
which he has destroyed,
which he has used up, -
that is, it is just a period of seven lives at most
for the man who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the arising of Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the ceasing of Ill'
who understands,
as it really is:
the meaning of:
'this is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.[1]

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

[1] Here the third simile of S. ii, 139 (of Sineru and beans) is omitted.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
7. Cakka Peyyāla

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

7. Cyclic-Repetition

Suttas 61-70

---

[390]

Sutta 61

Aññatra Suttaṃ

Other Than

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

[391] "Just so, monks,
few are those beings that are reborn among men:
more numerous are these beings that are reborn other than men.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 62

Paccanta Suttaṃ

Outlying

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up

on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings that are reborn in the middle districts:
more numerous are they
that are reborn in the outlying districts, among the unreasoning barbarians.[1]

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 63

Paññā Suttaṃ

Insight

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -

this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings that are blessed with the Ariyan eye of insight:
more numerous are these beings that are sunk in ignorance and bewilderment.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 64

Surā-Meraya Suttaṃ

Intoxicating Liquor

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings
that are abstainers from intoxicants, fermented[2] or distilled, producing indolence:

more numerous are they
who are non-abstainers therefrom.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

---

[392]

Sutta 65

Odakā Suttaṃ

Water Born

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are tbose beings
that are born on land:
more numerous are they
that are born in water.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 66

Matteyyā Suttaṃ

Reverent to Mothers

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up

on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings[3]
that reverence[4] their mothers:
more numerous are they
that reverence not their mothers.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 67

Petteyyā Suttaṃ

Reverent to Fathers

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:

it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings
that reverence their fathers:
more numerous are they
that reverence not their fathers.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 68

Sāmaññ a Suttaṃ

Reverent to Recluses[5]

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings
that reverence recluses:
more numerous are they
that reverence not recluses.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 69

Brahmañña Suttaṃ

Reverent to Brahmins[6]

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings
that reverence brahmins:
more numerous are they
that reverence not brahmins.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 70

Pacāyika Suttaṃ

Respect to Elders[7]

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust

on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings
that pay respect to the elders of the clan:
more numerous are they
that pay not respect to[8] the elders of the clan.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

---

[1] Aviññataresu milakkhesu (Skt. mleccha) in the sense of the Greek barbaroi. Cf. DA. i, 177; SnA. ii, 397 = S.A. on S. i, 188. 'Such as Damiḷā (Tamils), Kirātā, Yavanā (Milakkhā),' Dravidians of S. India, etc. Comy.

[2] Comy. surā = piṭṭha-surā (barley-ferment), odaniya-surā (rice-ferment), pūva-surā (sweetmeats ?), kiṇṇa-pakkhitta (yeast-mixture), sambhāra-saṇyuttā (a concoction of kañji), which are called 'the fivefold secretion (āsava) of flowers but does not mention any sort of toddy, though I think pūva (? jaggery) which is made from fermented kitul-palm juice, would include such.

[3] Text should read sattā.

[4] These terms (vi-ix) occur at Pv. ii, 7; PvA. 104.

[5] Sāmaññna = samana-pūjakā, def. at text, 25.

[6] Here in the derived meaning of bāhita-pāpa-pūjakā. Comy. 'a synonym for those who have attained perfection.'

[7] Text follows uddāna in wrongly printing Pacāyilca, which should read apacāyika.

[8] Text again wrong in reading jeṭṭhāpacāyino (taking it as negative of pacāyika) in the second instance. It should be jeṭṭhānapacāyino.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
8. Appakā-Viratam

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

8. Few Abstain[1]

Suttas 71-80

---

[393]

Sutta 71

Pāṇa Suttaṃ

Life

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings that abstain from taking the life of creatures:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 72

Adinna Suttaṃ

Not Given

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:

it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings that abstain from taking what is not given:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 73

Kāmesu Suttaṃ

Sensual Lust

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings that abstain from wrong practice in sensual lust:

more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 74

Musāvāda Suttaṃ

Falsehood

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks, few are those beings that abstain from falsehood:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,

the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 75

Pesuṇa Suttaṃ

Slander

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings
that abstain from slander:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 76

Pharusa Suttaṃ

Harsh Speech

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings
that abstain from harsh speech:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 77

Samphappalāpa Suttaṃ

Idle Chatter

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings

that abstain from idle chatter:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

---

[394]

Sutta 78

Bija Suttaṃ

Seed

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings
that abstain from spoiling[2] the different sorts of crops[3] and vegetation.[4]:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 79

Vikāle Suttaṃ

Unseasonable

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up

on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings
that abstain from eating at unseasonable hours[5]:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 80

Gandhavilepana Suttaṃ

Scents and Unguents

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:

it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings
that abstain from the use of flowers, scents,
unguents
as adornments and finery:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

---

[1] For this chapter see D. i, 5 ff. (Brahmajāla-sutta); Dialog. i, 5 (where the Buddha is represented as saying: 'These are the trifles of mere morality which the unconverted man, when praising the Tathāgata, would speak in praise of'). These are the practices deemed unfit for a monk.

[2] Cf. A. ii, 197; DA. 77, 81. Comy. bīja-gāma = mūla-, khandha-, agga-, phalu-, bīja-bījaṇ.

[3] Bhūta-gāma = nīla-tiṇa-rukkhādi (DA. reads alla-tiṇa).

[4] Samārambha, 'uprooting or cutting down.'

[5] I.e., after midday.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
9. Āmaka-Dhañña Peyyālaṃ

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

9. Uncooked-Grain Repetition[1]

Suttas 81-90

---

[394]

Sutta 81

Nacca Suttaṃ

Nautch

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings that abstain from going to see exhibitions[2] of nautch-dancing and singing:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 82

Sayaṇa Suttaṃ

Bed

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up

on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings that abstain from from high and broad beds:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 83

Rajata Suttaṃ

Silver

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings that abstain from accepting gold[3] and silver:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

---

[395]

Sutta 84

Dhañña Suttaṃ

Uncooked Grain

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks, few are those beings that abstain from accepting gifts of uncooked grain:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 85

Maṇsa Suttaṃ

Uncooked Flesh

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up

on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings
that abstain from accepting gifts of uncooked flesh:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 86

Kumāriya Suttaṃ

Girls

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:

it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings
that abstain from accepting women or girls:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 87

Dāsī Suttaṃ

Female and Male Slaves

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings
that abstain from accepting female and male slaves:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 88

Ajelaka Suttaṃ

Goats and Sheep

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings
that abstain from accepting goats and sheep:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 89

Kukkuṭasūkara Suttaṃ

Fowls and Swine

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings
that abstain from accepting fowls and swine:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 90

Hatthina Suttaṃ

Elephants

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up

on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings
that abstain from accepting elephants, cattle,
horses
and mares:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

---

[1] As at D. i, 5. this chapter is merely a continuation of the previous list from which Comy. does not separate it.

[2] Visūka-dassanā. Comy. (as at DA. i, 77) explains as patāni-bhūtā (? exhibited) and includes peacock-dancing.

[3] Jātarūpa is uncoined gold.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
10. Bahutarā Sattā

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

10. More Numerous

Suttas 91-101

---

[395]

Sutta 91

Khetta Suttaṃ

Fields

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings that abstain from accepting fields, whether cultivated or waste:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 92

Kayavikkaya Suttaṃ

Buying and Selling

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up

on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings that abstain from buying and selling:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 93

Dūteyya Suttaṃ

Errands

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings that abstain from sending messengers or going as such:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

---

[396]

Sutta 94

Tulākūṭa Suttaṃ

Giving False Measue

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks, few are those beings that abstain from cheating with scales, copper vessels or measures[1]:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 95

Ukkoṭana Suttaṃ

Perverting Justice

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up

on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings
that abstain from taking bribes to pervert justice, cheating and crooked ways[2]:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 96

Chedana Suttaṃ

Cutting

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:

it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings
that abstain that abstain from cutting:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 97

Vadha Suttaṃ

Flogging

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings
that abstain that abstain from flogging:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 98

Bandhana Suttaṃ

Binding

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings
that abstain that abstain from binding:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 99

Viparāmosa Suttaṃ

Highway Robbery

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings
that abstain that abstain from highway robbery:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 100

Ālopa Suttaṃ

Plundering

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up

on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings
that abstain that abstain from plundering:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 101

Sāhasākārā Suttaṃ

Violent Deeds

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few are those beings
that abstain that abstain from violent deeds:
more numerous are these beings who do not so abstain.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

---

[1] Tūla-, kaṇsa-, māna-kūṭā. Comy. takes kaṇsa-k. [as at DA.] as 'passing off bronze vessels as gold ones'; Dialog. i, 6, 'bronzes,' perhaps copper coins. I think the context requires the meaning to be 'pots for measuring,' e.g., liquor.

[2] Ukkotaṇa-vañcana,; nikati-sāci-yogā. Cf. PuggA. 240. The first is taken to mean 'taking bribes in giving a verdict about landownership, etc.' Text misprints sāvi-y.

Saṃyutta Nikāya
5. Mahā-Vagga
56. Sacca Saṃyutta
11. Gatiyo Pañcakā

5. The Great Chapter

56. Kindred Sayings about the Truths

11. The Five Destinies

Suttas 102-131

---

[396]

Sutta 102

Manussa-Cuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing as Humans (1)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

[397] It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it when laid beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing as human beings,
are reborn among human beings:
more numerous are these beings that,
deceasing as human beings,
are reborn in Purgatory.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 103

Manussacuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing as Humans (2)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing as human beings,
are reborn among human beings:
more numerous are these beings that,
deceasing as human beings,
are reborn in the womb of an animal.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 104

Manussacuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing as Humans (3)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing as human beings,
are reborn among human beings:
more numerous are these beings that,
deceasing as human beings,
that are reborn in the Realm of Ghosts.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 105

Manussacuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing as Humans (4)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing as human beings,
are reborn among the Devas:
more numerous are these beings that,
deceasing as human beings,
are reborn in purgatory.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 106

Manussacuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing as Humans (5)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing as human beings,
are reborn among the Devas:
more numerous are these beings that,

deceasing as human beings,
are reborn in the womb of an animal.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 107

Manussacuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing as Humans (6)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing as human beings,
are reborn among the Devas:
more numerous are these beings that,
deceasing as human beings,
are reborn in the Realm of Ghosts.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 108

Devacuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing as Devas (1)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing as Devas,
are reborn among the Devas:
more numerous are these beings that,
deceasing as Devas,
are reborn in Purgatory.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 109

Devacuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing as Devas (2)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing as Devas,
are reborn among the Devas:
more numerous are these beings that,
deceasing as Devas,
are reborn in the womb of an animal.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 110

Devacuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing as Devas (3)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing as Devas,
are reborn among the Devas:
more numerous are these beings that,
deceasing as Devas,
are reborn in the Realm of Ghosts.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 111

Devacuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing as Devas (4)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing as Devas,
are reborn among human beings:
more numerous are these beings that,
deceasing as Devas,
are reborn are reborn in Purgatory.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 112

Devacuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing as Devas (5)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing as Devas,
are reborn among human beings:
more numerous are these beings that,

deceasing as Devas,
are reborn are reborn in the womb of an animal.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 113

Devacuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing as Devas (6)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing as Devas,
are reborn among human beings:
more numerous are these beings that,
deceasing as Devas,
are reborn are reborn in the Realm of Ghosts.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 114

Nirayacuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing from Purgatory (1)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing from Purgatory,
are reborn among human beings:
more numerous are these beings that,
deceasing from Purgatory,
are reborn in Purgatory.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 115

Nirayacuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing from Purgatory (2)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing from Purgatory,
are reborn among human beings:
more numerous are these beings that,
deceasing from Purgatory,
are reborn in the womb of an animal.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 116

Nirayacuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing from Purgatory (3)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing from Purgatory,
are reborn among human beings:
more numerous are these beings that,
deceasing from Purgatory,
are reborn in the Realm of Ghosts.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

---

[398]

Sutta 117

Nirayacuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing from Purgatory (4)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing from Purgatory,
are reborn among Devas:
more numerous are these beings that,
deceasing from Purgatory,
are reborn in Purgatory.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 118

Nirayacuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing from Purgatory (5)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing from Purgatory,
are reborn among Devas:
more numerous are these beings that,

deceasing from Purgatory,
are reborn in the womb of an animal.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 119

Nirayacuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing from Purgatory (6)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing from Purgatory,
are reborn among Devas:
more numerous are these beings that,
deceasing from Purgatory,
are reborn in the Realm of Ghosts.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 120

Tiracchānacuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing as Animals (1)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing from life as animals,
are reborn among human beings:
more numerous are these beings that,
deceasing from as animals,
are reborn in Purgatory.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 121

Tiracchānacuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing as Animals (2)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing from life as animals,
are reborn among human beings:
more numerous are these beings that,
deceasing from as animals,
are reborn in the womb of an animal.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 122

Tiracchānacuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing as Animals (3)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing from life as animals,
are reborn among human beings:
more numerous are these beings that,
deceasing from as animals,
are reborn in the Realm of Ghosts.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 123

Tiracchānacuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing as Animals (4)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing from life as animals,
are reborn among Devas:
more numerous are these beings that,
deceasing from as animals,
are reborn in Purgatory.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 124

Tiracchānacuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing as Animals (5)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing from life as animals,
are reborn among Devas:
more numerous are these beings that,

deceasing from as animals,
are reborn in the womb of an animal.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 125

Tiracchānacuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing as Animals (6)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing from life as animals,
are reborn among Devas:
more numerous are these beings that,
deceasing from as animals,
are reborn in the Realm of Ghosts.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 126

Petticuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing from the Realm of Ghosts (1)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing from the Realm of ghosts,
are reborn among human beings:
more numerous are these beings that,
deceasing from the Realm of ghosts,
are reborn in Purgatory.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 127

Petticuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing from the Realm of Ghosts (2)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing from the Realm of ghosts,
are reborn among human beings:
more numerous are these beings that,
deceasing from the Realm of ghosts,
are reborn in the womb of an animal.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 128

Petticuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing from the Realm of Ghosts (3)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing from the Realm of ghosts,
are reborn among human beings:
more numerous are these beings that,
deceasing from the Realm of ghosts,
are reborn in the Realm of Ghosts.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 129

Petticuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing from the Realm of Ghosts (4)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing from the Realm of ghosts,
are reborn among Devas:
more numerous are these beings that,
deceasing from the Realm of ghosts,
are reborn in Purgatory.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 130

Petticuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing from the Realm of Ghosts (5)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing from the Realm of ghosts,
are reborn among Devas:
more numerous are these beings that,

deceasing from the Realm of ghosts,
are reborn in the womb of an animal.

What is the cause of that?

It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Sutta 131

Petticuti Suttaṃ

Deceasing from the Realm of Ghosts (6)

THUS have I heard:

Then the Exalted One,
taking up a little dust
on the tip of his finger-nail,
said to the monks:

"Now what think ye, monks?

Which is the greater,
this little dust I have taken up
on the tip of my finger-nail,
or this mighty earth?"

"Greater, lord, is this mighty earth.

Exceeding small
is this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's fingernail:
it cannot be reckoned,
it cannot be compared therewith.

It does not come to the merest fraction
of a part of it
when set beside the mighty earth, -
this little dust taken up
on the tip of the Exalted One's finger-nail."

"Just so, monks,
few indeed are those beings that,
deceasing from the Realm of ghosts,
are reborn among Devas:
more numerous are these beings that,
deceasing from the Realm of ghosts,
are reborn in the Realm of Ghosts.

What is the cause of that?

[399] It is through not seeing four Ariyan truths.

What four?

The Ariyan truth of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the arising of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the ceasing of Ill,
the Ariyan truth of the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.

Wherefore, monks, an effort must be made to realize:

'This is Ill'.

'This is the arising of Ill.'

'This is the ceasing of Ill.'

This is the practice that leads to the ceasing of Ill.'"

Here Ends Saṃyutta Nikāya
or
The Book of the Kindred Sayings